Headnote :- Inherent powers — FIR quashing / threshold allegations / defence dispute - Chandrabhan Singh Bhadoriya sought quashment under Section 528 BNSS of Crime No. 63/2025 alleging BNS Sections 74, 75, 76, 296 and 351(3). Neeharika Infrastructure (P) Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, was applied for the limited inquiry at the quashing stage: if the uncontroverted FIR allegations disclose a cognizable offence, police investigation ordinarily proceeds. At that stage, the High Court does not assess the truth or reliability of those allegations or the merits of a disputed defence. The complainant's allegations of unwanted physical contact, indecent proposal, tearing of clothes and threat were specific enough to resist quashing. The applicant's allegation of false implication over retirement money was left for proper evidentiary scrutiny.

Investigation — accused's representations / no control over police method - Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, were applied to reject the applicant's alternative request that police investigate according to his own complaints to senior officers. Their quoted discussion of Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, W.N. Chadha, Rajesh Gandhi, Sri Bhagwan Samardha and Narender G. Goel explains why an accused does not ordinarily choose an agency, control the method of investigation or demand a prior hearing, while retaining lawful later opportunities to challenge the prosecution. Exceptional constitutional directions for established mala fides are a separate matter.

Judicial monitoring — surveillance versus supervision - Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was applied to distinguish monitoring for fair and timely progress in rare compelling circumstances from directing how the investigation is conducted or what conclusions it reaches, which would prejudice an independent trial. The Section 528 application was dismissed; the FIR and investigation remained undisturbed, without a finding of guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Chandrabhan Singh Bhadoriya, a retired police Sub-Inspector, applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, to quash Crime No. 63/2025 at Police Station Gole Ka Mandir, Gwalior. The FIR alleged offences under Sections 74, 75, 76, 296 and 351(3) of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita, 2023. According to the allegations as recounted by the Court, on 13 February 2025 at about 10–11 p.m. he tried to hug and pull his daughter-in-law, made a proposal that she sleep with him once, tore her clothes, teased her and threatened her after she escaped. The applicant denied the incident and asserted that his daughter-in-law, son and her parents had demanded his retirement proceeds and lodged a false FIR when he refused. He said he had approached the Superintendent of Police, officer in charge of the police station and Inspector General requesting a fair investigation without success. After hearing his counsel, the High Court considered quashment and, when that relief was not granted, the alternative request to order police to consider his complaint and investigate accordingly. The allegations and the applicant's explanation remained unadjudicated.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure (P) Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, 2021:INSC:253 : (2021) 19 SCC 401, was quoted for the division of functions between the police and the court in investigating cognizable offences. It allows quashing where the FIR discloses no cognizable offence, but directs restraint where an offence is prima facie alleged and forbids a preliminary inquiry into the merits or reliability of accusations still under investigation. Its reference to R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal frames the established quashing parameters rather than a warrant to decide a disputed defence on affidavit. The present Court applied the rule to the alleged conduct with the daughter-in-law and refused to choose between the FIR and the retirement-benefits explanation. The Court also cited XYZ v. State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha for the same general proposition governing quashing at this stage.

Romila Thapar v. Union of India, 2018:INSC:912 : (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted and used for the accused's inability to select the agency or control the manner of investigation. In the reasoning quoted from that decision, Narmada Bai and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt state that limit; E. Sivakumar explains the absence of an ordinary right of the accused to be heard in a fair-investigation writ; Divine Retreat Centre distinguishes a lack of inherent power to choose an investigator midstream from appropriate Article 226 directions for demonstrated mala fides. The Constitution Bench in State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, is quoted there for the exceptional and cautious exercise of the power to transfer an investigation to CBI; bare allegations against police do not suffice. Romila Thapar also warns against testing disputed investigative evidence at that stage and identifies ordinary subsequent remedies.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, 2014:INSC:139 : (2014) 4 SCC 626, was quoted for the limited role of an accused or proposed accused during investigation. It drew on Union of India v. W.N. Chadha, 1993 Supp (4) SCC 260, to explain why prior notice and a say in the method of investigation are not ordinarily required; CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, (1996) 11 SCC 253, for agency choice and permissible further investigation; Sri Bhagwan Samardha v. State of A.P., (1999) 5 SCC 740, for the power under Section 173(8) CrPC without a routine hearing of the accused; and Narender G. Goel v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 65, for the later opportunity to contest evidence at trial. The High Court adopted the principle that the accused ordinarily has no right to control the investigation or to a prior hearing, without deciding a Section 173(8) motion in this case.

Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, 2013:INSC:839 : (2014) 2 SCC 532, was quoted for the distinction between court monitoring to ensure fair and timely progress and supervision that directs the investigators' methods and opinion. Such supervision jeopardises independent adjudication on the police report. The Court applied the distinction in refusing to supervise this pending investigation. The referenced rare monitoring power was not exercised.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS, 2023, supplied the High Court's inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR and alternatively seek an investigative direction. BNS Sections 74, 75, 76, 296 and 351(3) were the sections mentioned in the FIR. The Court assessed whether the allegations disclosed a cognizable offence for threshold purposes. The Supreme Court passages discussed the scheme of CrPC investigation and police report under Sections 173(2) and 173(8), the ordinary stages of complaint proceedings and issuance of process under Sections 202 and 204, and the distinction between investigation and trial. Those quotations explain accused participation and further-investigation principles; no separate CrPC motion was before the Court. Article 226 arose in the cited authorities as the constitutional source of exceptional directions on proven investigative mala fides, distinct from the Section 528 remedy invoked here.

4. Issues : (1) Whether the FIR's uncontroverted allegations about the applicant's conduct towards his daughter-in-law disclosed a cognizable offence requiring investigation so that Section 528 quashing should be refused despite his allegation of a false family financial motive. (2) Whether the applicant could obtain an order requiring police to consider his representations and carry out investigation in the manner he proposed. (3) Whether the High Court could supervise the pending investigation, and how that differs from exceptional judicial monitoring. The veracity of either side's factual account, sufficiency of evidence for trial, and ultimate criminal liability were not decided.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied Neeharika Infrastructure to confine its threshold inquiry to the allegations taken at face value. It found the complaint's account specific as to the attempted hug, sexual proposal, pulling and torn clothes. That was sufficient to disclose a cognizable offence at the investigation stage. The truth of the applicant's denial and his claim of retaliation over retirement proceeds required examination of evidence; the High Court could not resolve that conflict under Section 528 in place of investigation or trial. The order does not establish guilt.

When counsel sought a police direction as an alternative, the Court considered whether the accused had a right to interfere with the investigation. Romila Thapar and Dinubhai explained the restrictions on choosing the investigating agency, directing the method of investigation and claiming a prior hearing as a matter of course, even as they recognise proper later remedies and exceptional constitutional directions enforcing lawful process on an appropriate record. The applicant's representations did not entitle him to dictate the course of the police investigation or require a predetermined conclusion. Manohar Lal Sharma then explained why monitoring for fairness and progress differs from supervising an investigator's decisions and report; such supervision could undermine independent trial adjudication. The Court declined to supervise this investigation.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. It refused quashment of Crime No. 63/2025 and the alternative direction to police to investigate according to the applicant's requests. Investigation remained free to continue in law. No factual guilt determination, partial quashing, monitoring direction, costs or remand was ordered.

Headnote :- Quashing — Section 482 CrPC / disputed defence document / dowry-death allegation - The husband sought quashment of Crime No. 531/2023 under Sections 304-B and 498A IPC and Sessions Trial No. 13/2024, relying on his report to a Deputy Superintendent and a handwritten letter said to be from his deceased wife accusing her relatives. The Court declined to authenticate the letter or decide whether the relatives had poisoned her within the limited scope of proceedings under its inherent powers. It applied the stated threshold that proceedings may be quashed only if the uncontroverted allegations do not disclose an offence, without a roving inquiry into disputed prosecution and defence accounts. The order cites XYZ v. State of Gujarat, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha collectively for that threshold. The FIR and trial proceedings remained undisturbed; the letter's authenticity, the medical cause of death, the evidence of dowry demands and guilt remained matters for proof before the trial court.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Preeti Maurya died after receiving medical treatment in June 2023. According to the prosecution account summarised in the order, the witnesses' statements recorded during the Marg enquiry alleged that her husband Chandrakant Mourya ill-treated her for additional dowry and a car, placing her under continuing pressure. The death was described as resulting from cardio-respiratory failure. Crime No. 531/2023 at Police Station Bhind Dehat, District Bhind, was registered under Sections 304-B and 498A IPC, with Sessions Trial No. 13/2024 pending. Chandrakant applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash both the FIR and further proceedings.

The husband denied the allegations and alleged a contrary family conflict. He claimed that Preeti's maternal uncle, brother and mother demanded recovery of marriage expenses, pressured her to proceed against him, and assaulted her or forced her to leave when she declined. He relied on a handwritten report said to have been made by Preeti to the police against those relatives. He described an earlier hospital episode after abdominal and chest pain, discharge from Birla Hospital, Gwalior, on 14 May 2023, and their subsequent peaceful residence. According to him her brother took her to Hariom Nagar on 24 May for a forthcoming Bhandara, and he then had telephone conversations on 29 May about dental pain and on 10 June about vomiting and diarrhoea. On 11 June he was told she was being taken to hospital; when he reached Gwalior she was dead. He alleged her relatives had administered poison. He produced his representation to the Deputy Superintendent of Police, Bhind, and the alleged handwritten letter. These are his submissions and documents as recounted, not findings that the letter was authentic or that the relatives caused the death.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court cited a series of Supreme Court quashing decisions in one sentence to support the threshold that uncontroverted FIR allegations must fail to disclose an offence before proceedings of this kind can be quashed, and that inherent power does not authorise a roving merits inquiry. The cases named were XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021 (order dated 30 June 2021); Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682. The Court applied only the consolidated threshold rule to the husband's proposed defence documents.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to exercise the inherent power to quash the FIR and trial proceedings. The order parenthetically identifies Section 528 BNSS as its later counterpart, but conducts the application under Section 482 as filed. Sections 304-B and 498A IPC were the alleged dowry death and matrimonial cruelty offences. The alleged offences' ingredients and the death's medical cause remained matters for proof at trial.

4. Issues : (1) Could the High Court, while considering Section 482 quashing, accept the husband's alternate narrative of family demands and poisoning in place of the witness allegations of dowry pressure? (2) Could it decide from the presented copy whether the handwritten report was truly authored by Preeti or concocted? (3) Did the uncontroverted allegations in Crime No. 531/2023 permit the prosecution and Sessions Trial No. 13/2024 to proceed, without a roving factual inquiry at the threshold? The underlying cause of death, the authenticity of the writing, the strength of each witness and the husband's guilt were not decided.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court recognised that the applicant's representation to police and the purported handwritten statement formed his defence. Authentication of the writing and the competing poisoning allegation would require proof and testing before the trial court. In an application invoking its inherent powers, the Court could not decide those contested facts by conducting a preliminary trial. It applied the threshold quashing proposition drawn collectively from the cited Supreme Court decisions: if uncontroverted prosecution allegations disclose an offence, questions of factual accuracy and the credibility of the defence ordinarily await determination during investigation or trial. The Marg enquiry's recorded allegation of continued ill-treatment for a car and further dowry was therefore not displaced by the unproved defence documents at this stage. The Court refused to decide disputed facts under Section 482; it did not find that the letter was forged, that poisoning was impossible, or that all elements of Section 304-B were conclusively established. The Court recorded that counsel advanced no other argument.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. Crime No. 531/2023 and further proceedings in Sessions Trial No. 13/2024 were not quashed. The husband retained the opportunity to prove his defence and contest the prosecution at trial; the order granted no partial relief, remand, costs or direction resolving the medical cause of death.

Chandrakant Mourya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 5126/2024, 05/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty — delayed FIR / reconciliation explanation - Skoda Auto Volkswagen (India) Pvt. Ltd. v. State of U.P., (2021) 5 SCC 95, was applied to preclude an inquiry into disputed factual reliability in quashing proceedings under Section 482; Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, explained that a late FIR is not illegal, though promptness has investigative value and delay may need explanation; Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, likewise rejects delay alone as a quashing ground. The wife alleged she remained silent to save the marriage and continued to be excluded from the matrimonial home. That was a plausible explanation at the threshold, not a final credibility finding.

Section 498-A IPC — continuing mental cruelty after departure - Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was applied for the continuing mental trauma of being driven from the matrimonial home and fearing or being unable to return, even after physical acts there cease. The Court also referred to Amar Singh v. Vimla on enforced residence at the parental home. Allegations of infertility-related humiliation, physical and mental abuse, removal of jewellery and later exclusion supported a prima facie continuing-cruelty case; no guilt was determined.

Quashing — divorce petition / alleged counterblast - Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was applied: efforts to reconcile can explain a later criminal complaint, and the husband's divorce petition does not by itself end criminal proceedings or render the FIR a counterblast. The Court must test the FIR allegations, rather than importing disputed civil material to decide their truth. The applicants' chronology alone failed to justify quashing.

Precedent discipline — coordinate bench / per incuriam - The Court declined reliance on Abhishek Pandey @ Ramji Pandey v. State of M.P., Criminal Revision No. 521/2021, holding that its failure to consider the relevant Supreme Court rule in Pratibha made it per incuriam for this argument. The separate request to quash the prosecution of applicants 2 and 3 on account of a kidney transplant and donation also failed; the trial court may consider an application for exemption from attendance in light of their actual medical circumstances. The Section 482 application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Chandrakant Shrivastava and two other applicants sought Section 482 CrPC quashing of Crime No. 1018/2021 at Police Station Majholi, District Sidhi, the charge sheet, framed charges and RCT No. 594/2021 before JMFC Majholi. The complainant, respondent 2, alleged cruelty under Sections 498-A and 34 IPC. She married applicant 1 on 17 April 2008. Her FIR alleged physical and mental harassment because she did not conceive. After another family member Arti Shrivastava married and developed kidney failure, the applicants allegedly blamed the complainant as unlucky; the mother-in-law donated a kidney to Arti, but the alleged abuse continued. The complainant claimed her in-laws called her sterile despite a medical assessment that she could conceive, that the report was taken from her, and that a later test at District Hospital Shahdol did not support the mother-in-law's desired conclusion. She also alleged she had been required to write diary statements on visits to her parents that she was happy and not being harassed.

On 22 November 2019, as she prepared to attend her younger sister's wedding, the mother-in-law and sisters-in-law allegedly searched her bag, took jewellery and sent her with her brother. She alleged that her husband promised to fetch her 15 days after attending the wedding but did not; she was not informed about her younger brother-in-law's December 2020 wedding, and her name was not printed on the invitation. She said she delayed approaching police in hope of preserving the marriage and continued to be unable to return to the matrimonial house. The applicants argued the FIR was belated and retaliatory because the husband had filed a divorce petition under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act. They relied on a coordinate-bench decision in Abhishek Pandey. They also argued that prosecution of applicants 2 and 3 should be quashed because applicant 3 had suffered kidney failure and applicant 2 donated a kidney. These are alleged facts and submissions, not findings of guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Skoda Auto Volkswagen (India) Pvt. Ltd. v. State of U.P., (2021) 5 SCC 95, was used for the threshold limitation: a quashing court does not resolve disputed reliability or genuineness of FIR allegations, and delay alone does not terminate proceedings. Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, was explained as stating that no fixed legal time limit is prescribed for lodging an FIR; prompt reporting assists investigation and may reduce opportunity for fabrication, yet neither promptness guarantees truth nor every delay indicates falsehood. Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, reaffirmed that delay by itself is no ground to quash. The Court applied these authorities to the wife's expressed wish to preserve the marriage and continuing exclusion, treating her explanation as plausible at this stage.

Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted on physical or mental cruelty under Section 498-A. The Supreme Court explained that the psychological distress and trauma caused by abuse and expulsion may persist at the parental home even after physical cruelty at the matrimonial home ends.

The Court adopted that reasoning to treat continued forced separation resulting from the alleged cruelty as potentially continuing mental cruelty. Amar Singh v. Vimla, Criminal Revision No. 2376/2020 (High Court order dated 22 June 2021), was invoked for the related conclusion that compelling a married woman to live in her parental home can itself amount to cruelty. The present Court applied the principles to threshold allegations, not after a final evidentiary finding.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted at length. Its Supreme Court reasoning disapproved quashing a cruelty FIR merely because the wife reported after separation and after the husband's divorce petition; attempted reconciliation could explain delay, civil and criminal proceedings are separate, and the quashing court must test the complaint or FIR allegations rather than extraneous investigative or civil materials. Its quoted reference to Bhajan Lal is part of that context. The Bench used Pratibha to reject the applicants' counterblast inference. Abhishek Pandey @ Ramji Pandey v. State of M.P., Criminal Revision No. 521/2021 (coordinate-bench order dated 18 August 2021), was relied on by counsel but the Court held it per incuriam on this issue for not considering Pratibha and declined to follow it.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC supplied the High Court's inherent jurisdiction to quash the FIR, charge sheet and proceedings. Sections 498-A and 34 IPC were the alleged cruelty and common-intention offences; the Court assessed whether allegations against all applicants permitted prosecution at the prima facie stage, with focus on continuing mental cruelty and the alleged events. Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act governed the husband's divorce petition, whose filing was asserted as the alleged motive for the FIR; the Court did not decide matrimonial relief or treat the divorce action as ending the criminal matter. Counsel could not point out a ground or provision authorising quashing merely because of the applicants' medical ailments; the Court left consideration of a possible application for permanent exemption from personal appearance to the trial court in light of the transplant and donation.

4. Issues : (1) Did the time between alleged matrimonial conduct and FIR registration by itself make the Section 498-A complaint abusive or incapable of prosecution, in light of the wife's asserted hope of reconciliation and continuing inability to return home? (2) Can continued psychological suffering and forced separation on account of pleaded cruelty constitute continuing mental cruelty even if physical acts at the matrimonial house have ceased? (3) Did the husband's earlier divorce petition make the later FIR a retaliatory counterblast, and how should the coordinate-bench Abhishek Pandey ruling be treated against Pratibha? (4) Could applicants 2 and 3 obtain complete quashing simply because one underwent a kidney transplant and another donated a kidney, or was attendance relief a different trial-court question? The truth and proof of the alleged harassment remained for trial.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected the delay argument through Skoda Auto Volkswagen, Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid. It did not undertake a factual credibility inquiry on the Section 482 petition. The wife's stated effort to save her marital life plausibly explained the delay in reporting; the allegations that she was not permitted to return to the matrimonial home also indicated that the harm continued after her initial departure. Rupali Devi supplied the doctrine that mental trauma and distress can continue after a woman takes shelter with her parents, and Amar Singh supported treatment of compelled parental-home residence as cruelty. These authorities informed the Court's conclusion at the quashing stage that the alleged continuing cruelty did not end merely with the passage of time. That conclusion is an assessment of allegations, not a final finding that each applicant committed Section 498-A cruelty.

The fact that the divorce petition preceded the FIR did not establish malice as a matter of law. Pratibha explained why attempted reconciliation and a subsequent civil matrimonial proceeding do not convert the wife's later criminal complaint into a counterblast; the allegations themselves must be examined for a prima facie offence. The Court held the applicants' cited Abhishek Pandey coordinate-bench view per incuriam to the extent it overlooked that controlling Supreme Court authority, and rejected the counterblast submission. It also found specific pleaded cruelty against all applicants; infertility did not entitle family members to mistreat the wife. As to applicants 2 and 3, the Court found no legal ground authorising quashment merely because of kidney illness, transplantation or donation. It distinguished continuation of the prosecution from the practical question of attending court: if they seek permanent exemption from appearance, the trial court should consider their application in light of the actual transplant and donation circumstances. No exemption was granted automatically.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application and declined to quash Crime No. 1018/2021, the charge sheet, framed charges or RCT No. 594/2021. Applicants 2 and 3 were left free to apply for permanent exemption from attendance; if filed, the trial court was directed to consider the kidney transplant and donation facts. The High Court did not decide guilt, order exemption outright, award costs or alter charges.

Chandrakant Shrivastava and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 21528/2022, 13/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cheating — Section 420 IPC / under-stamped land registration / valuable right - The sale deed described the land as agricultural although it was alleged to have already been diverted, and lower stamp duty was paid. Mariam Fasihuddin v. State by Adugodi Police Station, Criminal Appeal No. 335/2024 (22 January 2024), was considered for property as a valuable ownership right or interest. The Court reasoned that dishonest false valuation or description to induce State registration, which enables transfer of ownership, could prima facie satisfy the requirements of deception and delivery under Section 420. This was a Section 482 threshold finding, not proof of the purchaser's knowledge or guilt.

Special statute — stamp penalty / general criminal law - State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, was applied because a special statute does not, by itself, bar prosecution under the general criminal law unless it excludes that law. Dhanraj N. Asawani v. Amarjeetsingh Moindersingh Bassi, Criminal Appeal No. 2093/2023 (25 July 2023), explained the distinction between a positive statutory duty to report and an express or necessarily implied exclusion of ordinary FIR registration and police investigation; its cooperative-society context was used by analogy, not treated as a Stamp Act holding. No Stamp Act bar was shown. The Collector of Stamps' assessment and deposit of penalty therefore did not automatically terminate a potentially separate cheating case.

Quashing — bona fide purchaser / disputed knowledge - The purchaser claimed agricultural revenue entries gave him a good-faith belief. Whether the seller told him of prior diversion, and whether the buyer intentionally misdeclared value, remained disputed trial facts. The High Court dismissed the application for quashing and directed the trial court not to be influenced by its factual observations.

Judicial precedent — reasons for coordinate-bench result - The applicant cited Smt. Sudha Gupta, MCRC No. 3468/2014, for absence of inducement in a stamp-duty case. Applying Central Board of Trustees v. Indore Composite Pvt. Ltd., (2018) 8 SCC 443, the Court observed that the prior decision gave no reason for its bare conclusion and undertook its own Section 420 analysis.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Chandramohan Dubey bought land bearing survey numbers 225/3, 171/2, 172, 170, 166 and 168/2 at Village Chanwarpatha, Tehsil Tendukheda, from Yogendra Singh, also named as an accused. The prosecution alleged the land had already been diverted from agricultural status but the sale deed portrayed it as agricultural to pay lower stamp duty. The Additional Collector, Narsinghpur, directed the Tehsildar on 20 December 2023 to lodge an FIR for State revenue loss and financial misappropriation. Crime No. 526/2023 at Police Station Suatala, Narsinghpur, alleged offences under Sections 420 and 34 IPC. Separately, the Collector of Stamps on 5 February 2024 in Case No. 1/B-103/48(B)/2023–24 determined a deficit and imposed a penalty, which the applicant said he paid. The buyer applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR. He contended that the Stamp Act supplied a complete route for duty recovery and a criminal cheating charge was unwarranted after payment. He also claimed good faith because revenue entries depicted the land as agricultural, and he relied on Mariam Fasihuddin and a coordinate-bench Sudha Gupta decision. The State opposed. The Court addressed the legal possibility of Section 420 on the alleged registration facts and left the disputed questions of knowledge and intention for trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mariam Fasihuddin v. State by Adugodi Police Station, Criminal Appeal No. 335/2024 (Supreme Court, 22 January 2024), was invoked by the applicant and used by the Court for the wide connotation of property under Section

420 IPC: a valuable right or interest subject to ownership and exchange, including the exclusive powers of possession, use and disposal. The High Court reasoned from that account of ownership and the Registration Act requirement for a transfer of property above ₹100 that State registration of a deed enables the transfer of a valuable interest. The conclusion concerning registration obtained by deception on insufficient stamp duty is the present Court's application of that principle; it is not a universal Supreme Court holding that every stamp-duty deficit amounts to cheating.

Smt. Sudha Gupta and Ors. v. State of M.P., MCRC No. 3468/2014, was the applicant's coordinate-bench authority. Its quoted paragraphs reproduced the text of Sections 120-B and 420 IPC and the cheating ingredients before stating without explanation that inducement was absent in that case. The Court asked counsel for the reasons supporting the conclusion; counsel conceded the prior order gave no reasons. Central Board of Trustees v. Indore Composite Pvt. Ltd., (2018) 8 SCC 443, was quoted for the duty of courts to give reasons on facts, issues, parties' arguments, relevant principles and each material finding, so the parties understand the result and appellate review is possible. Applying that principle, the Court did not automatically apply Sudha Gupta's unexplained factual result and instead considered whether registration could be a valuable property benefit.

State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, was considered for the absence of a bar to ordinary criminal law in the separate M.P. Cooperative Societies Act context. Dhanraj N. Asawani v. Amarjeetsingh Moindersingh Bassi, Criminal Appeal No. 2093/2023 (25 July 2023), was quoted extensively: a special cooperative statute's positive obligation on an auditor or Registrar to file an FIR does not, without express words or necessary implication, prevent another informant from invoking ordinary police powers. Dhanraj distinguished Jeewan Kumar Raut, where a different statute's cognizance scheme created an exclusion by necessary implication; it referred to Bhajan Lal's category concerning a statutory bar. The present Court applied by analogy the approach of examining whether the Stamp Act excluded the general criminal law after counsel identified no provision excluding IPC prosecution. It did not hold that all special enactments permit identical parallel proceedings regardless of text.

3. Statutes considered : Section 420 IPC required cheating with deception, dishonest inducement and delivery of property or effect on a valuable security or relevant signed instrument; Section 34 IPC appeared in the FIR. Section 482 CrPC supplied inherent quashing jurisdiction, limited here to allegations taken at face value. The Registration Act's requirement, as described in the order, for registration of transfers above ₹100 was used to explain the legal value of registration to ownership rights. The Stamp Act was invoked for duty assessment and penalty, but counsel identified no express prohibition on IPC application. Section 120-B IPC and provisions of the M.P. Cooperative Societies Act appeared within cited decisions for comparison, not as charges or governing special provisions in this FIR.

4. Issues : (1) Does knowingly misdescribing already diverted land as agricultural and understating its value to obtain sale-deed registration on lower stamp duty potentially satisfy the deception, dishonest inducement and property-delivery elements of Section 420 IPC? (2) Does the Stamp Collector's separate assessment and paid penalty bar investigation of an IPC offence, or must an exclusion of general criminal law be shown in the special statute? (3) Could the buyer's asserted reliance on revenue entries and claimed ignorance of diversion be accepted on a Section 482 petition without testing what the seller conveyed or what the buyer knew? (4) What weight could be given to the coordinate-bench Sudha Gupta conclusion of no inducement where the cited paragraphs gave no reasons? The actual buyer's mens rea, transaction value and guilt were not tried.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first identified Section 420's elements and considered the coordinate-bench reliance. It observed that Sudha Gupta had not explained why inducement was absent after reciting the statutory text. Applying Indore Composite's principle that judicial orders must give reasons, it declined to treat that unreasoned conclusion as determinative. It then drew on Mariam Fasihuddin's conception of property and registration's role in transferring a valuable ownership interest. On the prosecution allegation, falsely declaring value or agricultural status to induce authorities to register a deed at insufficient duty could amount to prima facie cheating. The characterisation of State registration as delivery of property is the High Court's legal conclusion at the quashing stage; the Court expressly limited factual aspects to the Section 482 stage.

The buyer's claimed reliance on agricultural revenue entries could not resolve whether he knew that the land had already been diverted or what information the seller had given him. The Court treated these as trial defences. The existence of a stamp-duty assessment and paid penalty did not resolve the issue of prosecution under the IPC. Rameshwar and Dhanraj illustrated that a positive duty or recovery process under a special statute does not alone exclude general criminal law; no express or necessarily implied Stamp Act bar was shown. The Court described the penalty as prima facie evidence of evasion, not a criminal conviction. Taking the uncontroverted allegations at face value, it found a prima facie Section 420 case and refused quashing. It specifically directed the trial court to decide on its own evidence, without prejudice from its preliminary factual remarks.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. Crime No. 526/2023 under Sections 420 and 34 IPC was not quashed. The trial court was directed to decide strictly in accordance with evidence at trial, uninfluenced by the High Court's factual observations. The order imposed no additional penalty or costs and made no final determination of the buyer's knowledge, dishonest intent, precise valuation or guilt.

Chandramohan Dubey v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 6066/2024, 02/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Criminal appeal — charge discrepancy / clerical error - Trial charges and conviction findings identified Suresh and Rajesh as the persons charged and convicted directly under Section 302, and Hukum as charged and convicted under Section 302/149. The sentencing paragraph's use of Hukum for Suresh was an isolated typing error. Subran and Nanak Chand on conviction without a substantive charge were distinguished.

Evidence — prompt FIR / Section 157 CrPC - The marg intimation and FIR recorded the same time of receipt of information, which was not necessarily the time when each document was written. Injured persons were medically examined immediately after the timely report. State of U.P. v. Gokaran was applied: failure to prove compliance with the forwarding formalities did not, on this record, establish that the FIR was ante-timed; Bhajan Singh, Arjun Marik and Meharaj Singh were distinguished. Brijpal Singh and Lallu Manjhi did not require examination of every eyewitness where several injured eyewitnesses corroborated one another; Baldev Singh, Shingara Singh, Pancho, Ghurey Lal and Ghudan were distinguished where ocular, medical and ballistic evidence that did not exclude their weapons supported the findings against the shooters.

Murder / attempt / hurt - Suresh and Rajesh fired successive 12-bore shots at Govind's chest and head, damaging vital organs; their convictions under Section 302 were upheld. Pellet wounds to Raghuveer, Vijay and Uttam were not proved fatal or grave and the acts of the particular shooters did not establish the alleged intention to kill those victims, so the convictions under Section 307/149 were reduced to Section 324/149. Pashora Singh and Parsuram Pandey were used for the injury/intention assessment; the case does not hold that a grave injury is invariably necessary for Section 307.

Unlawful assembly / constructive liability - The shared object proved was to cause hurt, not to murder Govind. The murder by two members was not imputed to all under Section 149. Four appellants, including Chandu, were acquitted because participation and common object were not proved beyond doubt. The remaining members' convictions for hurt and rioting were adjusted according to the weapons used and the injuries proved. Section 506 was set aside on the particular alleged post-assault words. In the absence of a State appeal, the Court did not enhance Hariom's conviction or increase the hurt counts. The short custodial sentences of the other participants were reduced to the periods already undergone; direct murder convictions of the two shooters remained.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Three connected appeals challenged the III Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track), Guna's 8 February 2007 judgment in ST No. 19/2006. On 31 October 2005 an argument over purchase and use of a transformer between Ram Singh and complainant Bhupendra Singh Raghuvanshi was followed by an armed group arriving at a village gathering. Suresh Singh shot Govind Singh in the chest; Rajesh Singh shot him again as he tried to rise. Multiple others fired guns or used farsa, ballam or sticks against members of the gathering. Govind died, several witnesses suffered pellet wounds and others simple injuries. The FIR and marg were lodged at Bajrang-garh, and victims promptly sent for examination. The trial court convicted the many appellants on murder, attempted murder, unlawful-assembly, hurt, rioting and intimidation counts. Pancham Singh's appeal abated upon his death. The Supreme Court's 3 January 2014 CRLMP order allowed Suresh to seek urgent final hearing; it did not decide the appeal merits.

2. Precedents — Considered : Subran alias Subramanian v. State of Kerala, 1993 SCC (Cri) 583, and Nanak Chand v. State of Punjab, AIR 1955 SC 274, were invoked against a direct Section 302 conviction without a direct charge. The Court distinguished them because Hukum's name in the sentencing paragraph was a typing mistake; the charge and conviction findings concerned Suresh and Rajesh. Brijpal Singh v. State of M.P., 2004 SCC (Cri) 90, on missing independent witnesses was distinguished since several injured eyewitnesses testified and one unexamined companion was not identified as an eyewitness. Lallu Manjhi v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2003 SC 854, on a single interested eyewitness was distinguished from the multiple injured witnesses here. The judgment invokes a general principle that witness quality, not mere number, matters.

Bhajan Singh alias Harbhajan Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2011 SC 2552, on inordinate unexplained Section 157 delay, and Arjun Marik v. State of Bihar, 1994 SCC (Cri) 1551, and L/NK Meharaj Singh v. State of U.P., 1995 Cri LJ 457, on ante-timed FIR concerns were distinguished: the two documents recorded the same time of receipt of information, and medical examination and investigation followed promptly. State of U.P. v. Gokaran, AIR 1985 SC 131, was applied for treating immediate investigative action as evidence against ante-timing even though separate Section 157 compliance was not proved.

Baldev Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 2003 SC 2098, was repeatedly invoked on ocular-medical contradictions but distinguished for Govind because post-mortem and eyewitnesses corroborated the shots; it also informed the Court's separate assessment of non-fatal injuries. Pancho v. State of Haryana, (2011) 10 SCC 165, Ghurey Lal v. State of U.P., (2009) 1 SCC (Cri) 60, and State of M.P. v. Ghudan, AIR 2004 SC 797, were pressed on ballistic-ocular inconsistency; the Court distinguished them because the expert's opinion on pellet compatibility did not exclude the two shooters' weapons. Shingara Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2004 SC 124, on materially changed eyewitness accounts was distinguished because no material change in accounts about Govind was shown. Pashora Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1993 SC 1256, and Parsuram Pandey v. State of Bihar, AIR 2004 SC 5068, were considered with Baldev Singh when reducing particular Section 307 allegations to Section 324 on the basis of the proved injury and the individual assailant's intention.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302 and 302/149 (direct murder and constructive liability), 307/149 (attempted murder), 324/149 and 323/149 (hurt by dangerous weapon and simple hurt), 147 and 148 (rioting and armed rioting), 34 and 149 (common intention and common object), 506 (criminal intimidation), and 39 (voluntariness) were central. CrPC Section 157 concerned dispatch of FIR to Magistrate; Section 161 prior statements were compared to testimony. The Court also noted Section 25 Arms Act only to explain that recovery may bear on a separate firearm charge but not necessarily identify a shooter here. The appeal record, absence of State appeal, charges and trial sentencing paragraphs limited the possible adverse alteration. The three connected appeals were disposed of by one judgment.

4. Issues : Whether a wrong name in a sentencing paragraph reflected conviction without charge; whether the FIR was ante-timed and whether the injured eyewitnesses' accounts, medical evidence and ballistic evidence that did not exclude their weapons proved the individual shooters' roles; whether three injured victims' wounds and actors' intent sustained attempted murder; whether all accused shared a common object to murder or only to cause hurt; whether alleged exhortation or mere presence proved four participants' liability; what hurt, rioting, intimidation and sentencing orders could survive without a State appeal.

5. Ratio / Findings : The trial charge and conviction identified Suresh and Rajesh under Section 302 and Hukum under Section 302/149. Marg and FIR recorded the time information was received, not the duration of drafting. The complainant travelled about 25 km with the injured and reported within roughly one hour forty minutes. Medical work started immediately. The Court rejected speculation that the FIR was ante-timed and a blanket adverse inference from the non-examination of witnesses. Injured eyewitnesses consistently attributed the two fatal shots, supported by 25 pellet wounds and vital-organ damage. The ballistics expert's statement that pellets could have come from a third gun did not say they could not have come from the two shooters' 12-bore weapons. Their successive shots aimed at the chest and head established an intention to murder, despite the absence of proved prior enmity.

In contrast, the MLCs for Raghuveer, Vijay and Uttam and other materials did not prove fatal or grave injuries; a suspected lung condition was not confirmed by surgery or specialist proof. The Court assessed each victim, shooter, weapon and location and held that the proved shootings constituted simple hurt by dangerous weapons rather than attempted murder, on the basis of its finding on intention. Other blows were differentiated: a ballam/farsa could produce a simple laceration depending on use, but the asserted blows by Chandu and Banti were unsupported by injury records. The accounts of Onkar and Anant's alleged exhortation varied and no stone injury was proved. Mere presence did not establish their common object. The group members with proved assaults shared an object to cause hurt, but not Govind's murder, which remained Suresh and Rajesh's direct offence. The Court also found the alleged future-threat words insufficient for Section 506 in this particular context.

The State filed no appeal to seek a more serious individual conviction for Hariom's injury to Shivram or a larger number of Section 323/149 counts. The remaining participants' rioting distinction followed weapons: sticks for Ram and Dalup supported Section 147, while deadly weapons supported Section 148 for the others. Although the reasoning discusses six simple-hurt victims, the operative conviction is three Section 323/149 counts; the appellate disposition remains confined to those counts.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court acquitted Onkar Singh, Anant Singh, Chandu alias Chandrabhan and Banti alias Hindu Singh of all charges. All appellants were acquitted of the charge under Section 506. Ram, Dalup, Hariom, Vishnu, Lallu, Radheshyam, Neta, Setu, Bhure and Hukum were acquitted of 302/149 and three 307/149 counts, then convicted on three 324/149 and three 323/149 counts; Ram and Dalup's Section 148 became Section 147, with Section 148 maintained for other proved armed participants. Those short custodial terms were reduced to the periods already served, with the fines and default provisions preserved. Suresh and Rajesh retained direct Section 302 and other surviving convictions; their convictions on three counts under Section 307/149 were reduced to convictions on three counts under Section 324/149 with six months' RI and ₹100 fine per count.

Chandu and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 172/2007 & 176/2007 & 177/2007, 25/11/2016, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri N.K. Gupta & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Criminal appeal — separate trial record - Under A.T. Mydeen, evidence recorded in Bhaggo Bai's separate trial could not be used in the present appellants' appeals, or vice versa; her simultaneously heard appeal was decided separately. Hemant's appeal abated on his death.

Witnesses — related, inimical and injured - Narayan and Ashok were sons of deceased Gangaram, and Asha was Narayan's wife and an injured witness at their home. Rupinder Singh Sandhu, Shamim, Rizan and Mohd. Rojali Ali were applied: relationship alone does not make testimony interested or incredible, though enmity demands scrutiny. Sushil and Matibar Singh supported assessing enmity as both motive and risk of false implication. Mahesh, Nagarjit Ahir and Sadhu Saran Singh supported reliance on credible witnesses despite the absence of an independent villager's testimony. Suresh Yadav, Dharmendrasinh, Dal Singh and Bhagwan Jagannath Markad guided assessment of non-intervention and minor variations.

Ocular and medical evidence / FSL - Gangaram's two incised head wounds matched sword blows. Amar's lacerations and skull fracture did not rule out a sword used bluntly or blows by rod and lathi; Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy, Bhajan Singh, Ramanand Yadav and Shamsher Singh were applied to require more than a reconcilable difference before rejecting direct evidence. An FSL assertion of human blood on weapons was not used because the report was unexhibited and the appellants were not asked about it under Section 313 CrPC.

Unlawful assembly — Section 149 - The coordinated armed group attacked Gangaram after a prior dispute and then Amar when he intervened. Krishnappa, Daya Kishan and Vinubhai Ranchhodbhai Patel were applied: membership, common object and likely offences may be inferred from collective action without proving a separate injury by every member. Two Section 302/149 counts, Section 324/149 for Asha and Section 148 were upheld. Both appeals were dismissed, and the life sentences were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Division Bench heard Cr.A. 873/2011 by Chhaviram, Sodam alias Kunjbihari and Chunge alias Ramgopal and Cr.A. 977/2011 by Thakurdas and Janki alias Ramdas, challenging the 7 September 2011 conviction in ST 87/2010. A quarrel over fetching water from a municipal tanker on 14 September 2009 followed an earlier platform dispute. Narayan reported the quarrel. At about 7:45 a.m. next day, armed accused came to Gangaram's home; Hemant and Thakurdas struck Gangaram's head with swords. Amar Singh intervened and was struck by Sodam and Janki, with other members participating. Chhaviram's chopper blow at Asha's arm broke her bangles and caused abrasions. Gangaram was declared dead on arrival at hospital; Amar died on 21 September after treatment. The trial court imposed Section 148, two Section 302/149 and Section 324/149 convictions, including two life sentences, with concurrent terms. Of ten accused, two juveniles were dealt with by JJB; Bhaggo Bai and Tillu had absconded. Bhaggo Bai was later separately tried and appealed. Hemant died during appeal and his appeal abated.

2. Precedents — Considered : A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Cr.A. 1306/2021 (31 October 2021), was applied to keep the evidence recorded in separate trials of co-accused apart, even when their appeals were heard simultaneously. Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, and Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, were quoted for the need to assess the reliability of related witnesses rather than mechanically disbelieve them. Rizan reproduced Dalip Singh and Masalti; these embedded citations were not independently applied to a different issue. Sushil v. State of U.P., 1995 Supp (1) SCC 363, and Matibar Singh v. State of U.P., (2015) 16 SCC 168, were applied to the dual evidentiary effect of enmity. Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, Nagarjit Ahir v. State of Bihar, (2005) 10 SCC 369, and Sadhu Saran Singh v. State of U.P., (2016) 4 SCC 357, supported the conclusion that absence of independent witnesses alone did not defeat a credible prosecution account. Suresh Yadav alias Guddu v. State of Chhattisgarh, Cr.A. 1349/2013 (25 February 2022), was used to reject the inference that an eyewitness's account must be disbelieved because the witness did not intervene in a violent assault. Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy v. State of A.P., (2014) 12 SCC 457, Bhajan Singh v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 421, Ramanand Yadav v. Prabhu Nath Jha, (2003) 12 SCC 606, and Shamsher Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 7 SCC 536, were used to assess reconcilable differences between the weapon described and the medical description of the wound; the court did not claim ocular proof always overrides medical impossibility. Dharmendrasinh v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 4 SCC 679, State of M.P. v. Dal Singh, (2013) 14 SCC 159, and Bhagwan Jagannath Markad v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 10 SCC 537, supported separating immaterial variations from core contradictions. Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2012) 11 SCC 237, Daya Kishan v. State of Haryana, (2010) 5 SCC 81, and Vinubhai Ranchhodbhai Patel v. Rajivbhai Dudabhai Patel, (2018) 7 SCC 743, were quoted and applied for Section 149 membership, common object and knowledge. Hallu, Niranjan Prasad, Bhola Singh, Bhimappa Jinnappa Naganur and Kuldip Yadav were listed in defence submissions; Ramchander, Vijendra Singh and Rohtas in the State's submissions.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 374 supplied appellate jurisdiction; Section 313 mattered because the accused were not confronted with incriminating FSL material. IPC Sections 141 and 142 defined unlawful assembly and membership; Sections 146, 148 and 149 governed rioting, deadly weapons and constructive liability. Sections 302/149, 324/149 and 148 were the operative convictions. The FIR and charges mentioned Sections 147, 307 and Arms Act Section 25(1-B) read with Section 4, but the appeal's operative confirmation did not separately adjudicate an Arms Act sentence. Evidence Act Sections 145 and 155 appeared within the Bhagwan Jagannath Markad quotation on contradiction and credibility, not as a separate ruling.

4. Issues : Could evidence from Bhaggo Bai's separate trial be used in these appeals? Did kinship, prior enmity, the absence of independent villagers' testimony, failure to intervene, Asha's delayed examination or variations make the three eyewitnesses unreliable? Did Amar's lacerations refute testimony of a sword blow? Could an unexhibited FSL result omitted from Section 313 examination be used? Did collective armed conduct prove common object to commit two murders under Section 149, and were trial convictions and life sentences sustainable?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first kept the separate trial records apart. Post-mortems established homicidal deaths: Gangaram had two incised head wounds with fractured skull and exposed brain matter; Amar had multiple injuries, skull fracture and hemorrhage, with head injury sufficient to cause death. Narayan, Asha and Ashok were natural witnesses to the attack in front of their home. Kinship was not itself a credibility defect. The previous platform and water disputes could motivate the attack as well as false accusation; the Court scrutinised their accounts against the FIR, the injuries and the surrounding facts. No villager came forward with information about the incident, and an injured family witness was not discredited solely for lack of an independent witness. Asha's examination at 17:20 was explained by attending to Gangaram and severely injured Amar. Her abrasions could have resulted from the chopper striking and breaking her bangles. Nor was a son's non-intervention during a ferocious assault a decisive reason to reject his account. Minor variations did not destroy the consistent core.

The incised wounds on Gangaram corresponded with sword blows. Amar's lacerated wounds did not make a sword blow impossible, since its blunt side or a blunt edge could have struck, and rod/lathi assaults were also alleged. Medical evidence did not completely exclude direct testimony. The FSL report of blood on seized weapons was unexhibited and not put to the accused under Section 313; the Court did not rely on it. For common object, the group came armed after a dispute, forcibly took Gangaram a short distance, attacked his head, continued to attack Amar as he intervened, and injured Asha. The absence of dragging marks did not refute forcible movement. Proof that each member caused a separate injury was not required once membership and the common object or knowledge of the likely offence were established. Continued participation after the first assault supported the inference of a common object to kill both victims. The Court held the evidence sufficient beyond reasonable doubt without relying on the inadmissible FSL assertion.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed the Section 148, two Section 302/149 and Section 324/149 convictions and sentences. Life imprisonment was the minimum for Section 302 and not reduced. Janki and Thakurdas, already imprisoned, were to serve the remaining terms. Chhaviram, Sodam and Chunge, on bail, had bonds cancelled and were ordered to surrender by 30 May 2022, with enforcement in default. A free copy was directed to the appellants and trial record returned. This judgment did not decide Bhaggo Bai's separate appeal, though it was heard concurrently.

Chaviram and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Hemant and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 873/2011 & 977/2011, 13/05/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Evidence — FIR as dying declaration - Daghich Singh dictated an FIR reporting his gunshot wounds at 20:00 and died from those wounds. The medical record at 20:35 did not show unconsciousness; the scribe proved dictation, readback and thumb impression. Munnu Raja and Dharam Pal were applied to admit the FIR under Section 32(1) Evidence Act. Expectation of death was unnecessary under Najjam Faraghi. The recorder need not repeat the exact words in oral testimony if the recorded declaration and its conditions are proved; the Bombay Full Bench decision in Ramesh Kamble was followed. Jaishre Anant Khandekar guided scrutiny of fitness and truth.

Forensic / discovery - Two spent cartridges and the recovered 12-bore gun were received sealed; missing specimen seal impressions on seizure memos were not decisive on the proved record. Yakub Abdul Razak Memon's open-place discovery analysis was applied to a gun hidden in an accessible shed. FSL linked both cartridges to the one recovered gun. Gurcharan Singh was used to reject a rigid inference about the victim's posture based on the tractor seat's backrest. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan supported retaining the credible core while rejecting an unsupported second-shooter attribution.

Unlawful assembly - The FIR named the six co-appellants but gave them no weapon or act. The witnesses' later accounts of hiding, weapons and directions changed materially and were not corroborated by the spot map or reliable evidence of seizure. Bhudeo Mandal, Kuldip Yadav, Shaji, Krishnappa, Debashis Daw, Sudhir Samanta and Killu were considered to require proof of membership and common object before Section 149 liability, even though no personal overt act is necessary once those elements are proved. Six appellants were acquitted of Section 302/149, 324/149 and 148. The gunman remained convicted directly under Sections 302 and 324, with concurrent terms of life imprisonment and one year; his liability under Sections 148 and 149 was set aside.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Five connected appeals challenged a 3 September 2003 sessions judgment in ST 36/2000 convicting all appellants under Sections 148, 302/149 and 324/149. On 28 October 1999, Daghich Singh was sowing masoor from a tractor with Jagdish and Jandel. Two shotgun discharges wounded Daghich and Jagdish. Daghich dictated FIR Ex. P.28 at 20:00 after travel via an outpost, and died after referral for treatment. The post-mortem found hip region firearm wounds, damaged intestines and hemorrhagic shock; Jagdish had simple pellet wounds. The FIR named a shooter described at the outset as Chandrabhan Gadariya, Shibbu Jatav as another shooter and seven more men. Shibbu was absconding and charge-sheeted under Section 299 CrPC; this appeal did not determine his case. Devlal's separate appeal abated after his death. The six present co-appellants were Chhuna, Bablu, Harnam Singh, Madho Singh, Indrapal Singh and Mukundi.

2. Precedents — Considered : Munnu Raja v. State of M.P., (1976) 3 SCC 104, and Dharam Pal v. State of U.P., (2008) 17 SCC 337, were applied to admit a deceased injured informant's FIR about the fatal transaction under Section 32(1), subject to proof of capacity and reliability. Gurcharan Singh v. State of Punjab, 1994 Supp (1) SCC 515, was applied on a victim's possible movement on a tractor and limits of a doctor's posture opinion. Sitaram v. State of M.P., (2010) 3 MPWN SN 9, was invoked to require the FIR recorder to repeat the declaration verbatim; the court rejected that proposition in relation to this FIR and cited the Bombay Full Bench decision in Ramesh alias Gyanoba Kamble, 2011 Cri LJ 4964, on proof of a recorded statement without oral recitation of every word. The Full Bench's long extract includes P.V. Radhakrishna, Sukanti Moharna, Khushal Rao, Laxmi, Laxman and other Supreme Court decisions on Section 32; they were quoted as part of that court's review.

Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1, was applied to recovery from a concealed position in a place accessible to others, quoting State of H.P. v. Jeet Singh on hidden knowledge and ordinary visibility. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749, was applied to separate reliable evidence from false attribution instead of applying falsus in uno as a mandatory rule. Najjam Faraghi v. State of W.B., (1998) 2 SCC 45, was applied to the express Section 32 proposition that expected imminent death is unnecessary. Jaishre Anant Khandekar v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 11 SCC 647, was cited for careful dying-declaration scrutiny; its quotation contains the Paniben/Shakuntala principles and their embedded authorities. Bhudeo Mandal v. State of Bihar, (1981) 2 SCC 755, Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, Shaji v. State of Kerala, (2011) 5 SCC 423, Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2012) 11 SCC 237, Debashis Daw v. State of W.B., (2010) 9 SCC 111, Sudhir Samanta v. State of W.B., (1998) 1 SCC 581, and State of M.P. v. Killu, (2020) 16 SCC 735, were individually quoted for the distinction that no overt act is needed once membership of an unlawful assembly and its common object are proved, but bare presence or vague general allegations do not establish those requirements under Section 149. The Killu quotation embeds Ramlal Devappa Rathod and others.

3. Statutes considered : Evidence Act Section 32(1) rendered the deceased's cause-of-death statement relevant, even without an expectation of death. Section 27 governed recovery based on disclosure of the concealed gun. IPC Sections 141, 148 and 149 required an unlawful assembly of at least five, armed rioting and proved membership/common object; Sections 302 and 324 covered direct murder and simple gunshot hurt. Initial charges included Section 307 and Arms Act Sections 25/27 but final relief did not separately sustain those charges. CrPC Section 299 was mentioned for the absconder Shibbu; Section 313 appears within a quoted Supreme Court case, not as a separate issue in this appeal.

4. Issues : Was Daghich conscious and capable of dictating the FIR after being shot, despite thumb impression and time spent in transit? Could the FIR become a dying declaration and could the scribe prove it without oral verbatim repetition? Did the victim's posture on the tractor, the wound findings, the sealing of the exhibits or recovery from an accessible shed undermine the identification of the gunman? Could the court accept the first-shooter account while rejecting the second gunman allegation in light of two cartridges matched to one gun? Were the six villagers' membership of the unlawful assembly and common object to commit murder proved beyond reasonable doubt, or was their presence innocent and the witnesses' later account unreliable? What direct convictions remained if Section 149 failed?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FIR scribe testified that Daghich dictated the report, heard it read back and thumb-marked it. The MLC for the examination at 20:35 did not mention unconsciousness; no question on incapacity was asked of the examining doctor. Being helped to walk with hip wounds, or using a thumb mark though educated, did not show inability to speak. The FIR, concerned with his fatal injuries, became a dying declaration by operation of Section 32. The scribe proved the existing FIR, rather than a statement formally recorded as a dying declaration, and did not have to repeat its complete text. The short FIR did not have to describe every change in the tractor driver's posture. The seizing officer, supporting witnesses, armorer and FSL receipt showed sealed cartridges and gun despite absence of specimen seal impression on the memos. The gun was hidden within an open shed; access by others did not eliminate the disclosed hidden-location knowledge. FSL tied both fired cartridges to it. The Court accepted the core against the gunman, treated the claim that Shibbu fired one shot as possible false implication, and found murder of Daghich and simple hurt to Jagdish.

As for the six villagers, the deceased's FIR merely named them, with no weapon or act. Later accounts of armed men hiding in bushes conflicted with prior police statements that they had approached from the village and with the spot map, which showed no bushes on the firing side. Several prosecution seizure witnesses did not support the prosecution or contradicted themselves; in one instance a witness volunteered that the prosecutor instructed him which weapon to name. The court did not find reliable proof of group membership, common object or weapons. Although a participant need not personally injure a victim where Section 149 otherwise applies, proof of participation with a shared object could not be inferred solely from village presence. With those six acquitted, the convicted shooter could not alone form the requisite assembly of five on this record.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court acquitted Chhuna, Bablu, Harnam Singh, Madho Singh, Indrapal Singh and Mukundi of Sections 302/149, 324/149 and 148. Bail bonds of those at liberty were cancelled as no longer required; Indrapal, then in jail, was ordered released unless held in another case. The gunman named Chandramohan in the operative order was acquitted of Section 148 and constructive counts, but convicted directly under Sections 302 and 324. He received life imprisonment and ₹10,000 fine with one year default RI for murder, plus one year RI for hurt, concurrently, and was ordered to surrender. Four appeals by the six acquitted appellants were allowed; Chandramohan's appeal was dismissed with the modifications. A free copy was directed to the appellants, and a copy with the trial record was to be sent immediately to the trial court for necessary information.

Headnote :- Juvenile justice / heinous offence / Section 15 preliminary assessment - For a child aged sixteen or above alleged to have committed a heinous offence, the Board assesses mental and physical capacity, understanding of consequences and the circumstances; the exercise is not a trial or a finding of guilt. The High Court applied the statutory criteria in revision without deciding the substantive sexual-offence charge.

Preliminary assessment / alleged planned conduct / scope of revision - The allegations that a victim below twelve was taken into the applicant's shop, that clothing was removed and that a condom was used were treated as prima facie grounds for inferring capacity, awareness of consequences and steps to avoid forensic detection. The Board's opinion that the child be tried as an adult, affirmed on appeal, was not shown to be perverse, baseless or jurisdictionally erroneous.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecution alleged that on 04.08.2018 the victim, a child below twelve, went with a companion to the applicant child's shop in Datia. A family member reported that the applicant had committed an unnatural sexual act on the victim and released him when he screamed. Information passed through the victim's family to the complainant, leading to registration of Crime No. 100/2018 at Police Station Kotwali, Datia, initially under Sections 377 and 450 IPC. The investigation included a spot map and witness statements. The final report, as described by the High Court, referred to Sections 377 and 342 IPC and Section 5(n)(6) of the POCSO Act; the Court did not adjudicate the precise charge formulation in this revision. The applicant was above sixteen. The Juvenile Justice Board, Datia, on 18.08.2021 made a Section 15 preliminary assessment and opined that the child should be tried as an adult. Criminal Appeal No. 45/2021 before the Children's Court/Special Judge (POCSO Act), Datia was dismissed. In the revision under Section 102, the applicant argued that the victim had no injury supporting the allegation, that the Board had not properly assessed his mental and physical capacity, and that the assessment had exceeded the three-month period.

2. Statutes considered : Section 15 of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015 provides for a Board's preliminary assessment when a child who has completed sixteen years is alleged to have committed a heinous offence. Subsection (1) directs attention to mental and physical capacity, ability to understand consequences and the circumstances; its explanation distinguishes assessment from trial and its proviso permits assistance from experienced psychologists, psycho-social workers or other experts. Subsection (2), reproduced in the judgment, addresses Board disposal and the applicable period by reference to Section 14. Section 2(33) supplies the definition of "heinous offences"; Section 18(3) is referred to within the reproduced Section 15 text. The revision was brought under Section 102 of the Act. IPC Sections 377, 450 and 342 and the POCSO provision are part of the case background as stated by the Court, not offences whose ingredients or guilt were decided here.

3. Issues : (i) Whether the Board's Section 15 opinion, upheld by the Children's Court, had a rational basis for finding the child's mental and physical capacity and understanding of the alleged offence's consequences, or was so cursory or perverse that interference in revision was warranted. (ii) Whether the applicant's arguments about absent bodily injury and a delayed assessment undermined that order.

4. Ratio / Findings : The High Court set out Section 15 and emphasised that a preliminary assessment concerns capacity and understanding in the alleged circumstances, rather than a trial of guilt. Referring to the prosecution version, it reasoned that use of a condom was a precaution capable of indicating physical and mental capacity and an awareness that forensic material might implicate the actor. It also relied on the alleged sequence at the shop, including taking the victim inside and removing clothing, to view the conduct as deliberate rather than sudden or provoked. These are the Court's prima facie inferences from allegations for Section 15 purposes; they do not establish that the sexual act occurred or prove the charged offences. In the Court's view, those circumstances furnished a basis for the Board's conclusion and did not permit a finding that the assessment was perverse or lacked a basis. Counsel identified no jurisdictional error. The Court reproduced and applied the statutory text of Section 15.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision, leaving undisturbed the Board's preliminary-assessment opinion that the applicant should be tried as an adult and the appellate order affirming it. The order does not convict the applicant, finally determine the sexual-offence allegations, or grant any separate direction on the assessment-period objection.

Headnote :- Writ petition — transfer of NDPS investigation / necessary parties - A traders' association asked for FIR No. 288/2021 under Sections 8/20 NDPS Act to be transferred to the Narcotics Control Bureau, a SIT or a court-monitored probe, citing alleged ganja delivery through an e-commerce platform. It impleaded neither Amazon, against which it made accusations, nor the FIR accused. Swapna Mohanty and State of Assam were applied for the necessary-party test; Church of Christ was applied for the opportunity to cure non-joinder; and Indu Bhushan Dwivedi was applied for the rule against a prejudicial finding about a person who had not been heard. The petitioner was alerted but did not avail the opportunity to add them.

Third-party request / accused hearing - The Court left open the possibility of a stranger seeking relief in a criminal matter in some circumstances. On this record a third party could not change the investigation's agency without hearing those accused in that investigation. Their position differed from the limited participation available before process is issued on an original complaint; the court illustrated that an accused may become a necessary party when a complaint's dismissal is challenged in revision. The writ was dismissed for non-joinder, without deciding platform culpability, investigating officer expertise or whether NCB or SIT transfer was warranted.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Confederation of All India Traders filed W.P. 27516/2021 under Article 226 for transfer of Crime No. 288/2021 at Police Station Gohad Chauraha, Bhind, under Sections 8/20 NDPS Act to the Narcotics Control Bureau, or for a special investigation team or court-monitored investigation. Counsel alleged about 21.734 kg ganja worth ₹2,10,000 had been delivered through Amazon and referred to a similar Visakhapatnam case, whose number the order itself marks as partly illegible. The petition alleged local police lacked cyber expertise or reach, but made no personal accusation against the investigating officer. Amazon and the persons named as accused in the FIR had not been included among the respondents. The State challenged the petitioner's standing and opposed transfer. The court asked counsel about non-joinder; counsel offered to add the missing persons only if directed. The order contains no determination on the evidence that Amazon committed or knew of any offence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Swapna Mohanty v. State of Odisha, (2018) 17 SCC 621, and State of Assam v. Union of India, (2010) 10 SCC 408, were quoted and applied: a necessary party is one without whom effective adjudication or an order is impossible, while a proper party aids complete final resolution. Both refer to Udit Narain Singh Malpaharia; it is an embedded foundational reference. Church of Christ Charitable Trust v. Ponniamman Educational Trust, (2012) 8 SCC 706, was considered for the requirement that an objection to non-joinder be raised in time to permit cure, and the potential consequence where a litigant persists after notice. Its civil plaint context was used for the opportunity principle, not as an NDPS-specific transfer rule. Indu Bhushan Dwivedi v. State of Jharkhand, (2010) 11 SCC 278, was applied to avoid a prejudicial finding against Amazon without a reasonable opportunity to be heard. The court's illustration concerning an accused after dismissal of a complaint in limine was its own procedural analogy.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 supplied writ jurisdiction; NDPS Act Sections 8/20 were the FIR offences, not adjudicated merits. The order referred generally to complaint pre-process procedure and criminal revision. The procedural rule applied was necessary-party joinder and audi alteram partem in a writ affecting non-parties.

4. Issues : Could the court accept allegations against an unimpleaded e-commerce platform and order an independent investigation? Were the accused in the ongoing FIR necessary respondents to a stranger's writ seeking a change of investigating agency? Was the opportunity to cure the defect sufficient where the petitioner declined to decide for itself whom to implead? The merits of Amazon's alleged involvement, the investigator's expertise, territorial limits and grounds for agency transfer were not determined.

5. Ratio / Findings : The petition made allegations that, if accepted, would prejudice Amazon, so it was a necessary party for the requested adjudication. The Court notified counsel of the omission and the opportunity to add it, but counsel deferred the choice to the Court. The Court explained that it decides whether an absent person is necessary; the petitioner decides whom to implead to seek relief. The accused named in the FIR were also necessary parties where a third party who was not aggrieved asked the Court to alter their ongoing criminal investigation. Although a stranger may sometimes have standing in a criminal matter and a person named as an accused in a complaint has limited participation before process is issued, that did not allow a third party to change the investigation's course without hearing the existing accused. The Court found both omissions uncured. These findings are procedural and case-specific. They neither impose a universal veto over all police investigation nor establish an accused's participation right in every investigatory step.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition for non-joinder of necessary parties. No direction was issued for an NCB transfer, a SIT or court monitoring. No adverse finding on Amazon's guilt, NDPS allegations, police expertise or the merits of FIR No. 288/2021 was made. The order describes the Visakhapatnam crime number as partly illegible.

Confederation of All India Traders v. State of Madhya Pradesh, W.P. no. 27516/2021, 20/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Civil and criminal process — land sale / pending title appeal - A power-of-attorney sale in 2012 was followed by a disputed 2018 sale during a title suit and a 2021 conveyance to the complainant. The 2022 dismissal of the seller's suit remained unstayed while its first appeal proceeded; filing an appeal did not suspend the decree. Alleged nondisclosure of the suit and prior transaction supported a cheating FIR. Jagmohan Singh and P. Swaroopa Rani were applied to permit criminal proceedings alongside a civil dispute where the allegations independently disclosed an offence. Pratibha, Vishnu Dutt Sharma and Kamaladevi Agarwal were used to reject quashing merely because a civil proceeding was pending; Prem Raj and M.S. Sheriff explained context-specific sequencing rather than a rigid priority rule.

Civil judgment / criminal proof - Kishan Singh and Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam, with Iqbal Singh Marwah discussed through the quotations, distinguished an operative unstayed decree from conclusive criminal proof. The two processes use different standards; Evidence Act Sections 40–43 may make an earlier judgment relevant in a limited way. The High Court's account of the transaction at the quashing stage did not finally determine guilt.

BNSS Section 528 / Section 175(3) - The Magistrate declined to direct registration of an FIR and fixed the case for recording the complainant's statements. The revision court ordered an FIR, which became Crime No. 53/2025 under Sections 420 and 120-B IPC. The High Court upheld that direction and dismissed two connected inherent-powers applications. No final finding on the disputed power of attorney, precise title, dishonesty or conspiracy was made.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Balaji Developers complained that a disputed land parcel was resold after an earlier transfer. A company through director Mukesh Agrawal executed a 24 February 2012 power of attorney in favour of Dalveer Singh Kanshana, though authority for Khasra 142/1 was disputed. Dalveer sold Khasra 191 and 142/1 on 22 March 2012 to Shruti Developers and Constructions. A later Board of Revenue mutation ruling and 2015 writ status quo order concerned the land. The company sued to annul the 2012 deed; while that suit was pending, it sold to Rakhi Upadhyaya and Ganesh Sharma on 24 August 2018, with Girraj Agrawal and Dalveer as attesting witnesses. The 2018 deed allegedly stated no civil suit or interim order was pending. Those buyers sold to Balaji in October 2021. The company's cancellation suit was dismissed on 16 December 2022; FA 180/2023 was pending and a 16 May 2024 order prohibited further third-party rights, but did not stay the decree. Balaji's complaint alleged payment of ₹40 lakh and deceptive concealment. The JMFC rejected the request under Section 175(3) BNSS for an FIR and fixed the case for recording the complainant's statements; revision 473/2024 reversed that on 19 February 2025. Police then registered Crime 53/2025 under Sections 420 and 120-B IPC. Dalveer and Mukesh/Girraj separately sought quashing under Section 528 BNSS, and their applications were disposed of by a common order.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jagmohan Singh v. Vimlesh Kumar, SLP(Crl) 9339/2021 (5 May 2022), was applied for the proposition that a civil suit over an alleged forged instrument does not preclude a criminal complaint alleging fabrication. P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, (2008) 5 SCC 765, was quoted on parallel civil and criminal proceedings and case-specific stay choices; its passage refers to M.S. Sheriff, Iqbal Singh Marwah and another authority. Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, was quoted on differing civil and criminal proof standards and limited relevance of prior judgments under Evidence Act Sections 41–43. Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State, (2009) 5 SCC 528, was quoted at length for K.G. Premshanker's distinction between the relevance and conclusiveness of an earlier judgment and the rejection of the broad rule in Karam Chand that civil decisions bind the criminal court.

Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon, SLP(Crl) 9778/2018 (2 April 2024), was quoted for the Constitution Bench Iqbal Singh Marwah/M.S. Sheriff approach: differing proof standards and no hard-and-fast sequencing, with possible limited exceptions. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was applied against quashing a prima facie FIR because of collateral civil litigation and beyond-FIR defence material. Vishnu Dutt Sharma v. Daya

Sapra, (2009) 13 SCC 729, and Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of W.B., (2002) 1 SCC 555, likewise supported parallel proceedings and cautioned against thwarting a criminal case merely because civil proceedings were pending. Kamaladevi quotes Trisuns Chemical and Rajesh Bajaj about a commercial transaction containing cheating; those were embedded authorities. Bhajan Lal appears within Pratibha and Kamaladevi as a quashing framework, not as a fresh independent holding that every title dispute is criminal.

3. Statutes considered : BNSS Section 175(3) governed the complaint's request that police register and investigate; Section 528 provided the High Court's inherent review jurisdiction. The complaint listed BNS Sections 314, 316, 318, 320, 323, 335, 336 and 340 with Sections 45 and 61, while the police FIR actually recorded IPC Sections 420 and 120-B. Evidence Act Sections 40–43 were discussed through cited cases on relevance of prior judgments. The pending civil appeal and unstayed decree were procedural facts, not a res judicata determination binding criminal guilt.

4. Issues : Did pending FA 180/2023 suspend the trial decree or block the criminal complaint about subsequent sales? Did alleged conveyance despite prior sale and knowledge of a pending suit disclose a crime notwithstanding civil title litigation? Were findings in a civil case automatically binding on the criminal court? Was the revisional direction to register FIR vulnerable to Section 528 quashing solely due to the connected civil appeal? The court did not try the disputed authority under the power of attorney, witness culpability, final title or conspiracy.

5. Ratio / Findings : The civil suit's dismissal had not been stayed. A first appeal is a continuation of the suit but does not automatically suspend the decree. Against that background, the 2018 resale by the former seller while its suit was pending, alleged contrary assertion that no suit or interim order existed, and attestation by persons with transaction knowledge supplied a prima facie basis for investigation. The High Court described the resale as fraudulent in its reasoning at the quashing stage, but criminal evidence had not been tested at trial. Civil and criminal proceedings may proceed simultaneously because their standards of proof and the questions they address differ; earlier civil findings do not simply control the criminal court, although an earlier judgment may be relevant under Evidence Act provisions. It rejected a rule requiring the FIR to await the appeal and sustained the revision court's registration direction. The 2024 no-new-rights order was distinct from a stay of the 2022 decree. The court did not decide whether the alleged 2012 authority alteration actually occurred or whether each attesting witness had criminal intent.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the VI Additional Sessions Judge's 19 February 2025 revision order directing police registration and dismissed both connected applications. Crime 53/2025 under IPC Sections 420 and 120-B remained. No conviction, final finding on title, or direction staying the first appeal was entered.

Dalveer Singh Kanshana v. Balaji Developer and Others; Mukesh Kumar Agrawal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 8856/2025 & 9360/2025, 15/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Quashing — investigation / disputed defence - A cousin brother-in-law sought Section 482 CrPC quashing of Crime No. 293/2017 under Sections 498A, 323 and 34 IPC, saying he lived 30 km away, did not visit the matrimonial household and was falsely implicated because he was financially comfortable. The FIR specifically alleged harassment after the husband's death, followed by beating and expulsion on 29 May 2017. Satvinder Kaur, Padal Venkota Rama Reddy, Rajiv Thapar, R. Kalyani and Tilly Gifford were considered: courts assess whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence and interfere sparingly with a pending investigation; disputed defence claims normally await evidence. Lalita Kumari was invoked by the State for registration of a cognizable FIR.

Matrimonial cruelty — extended family / specificity - The Court recognized concern about omnibus implication of a husband's relatives but declined a categorical bar. Specific allegations against this cousin, coupled with alleged joint assault and eviction, sufficed for investigation. A residence only 30 km away did not conclusively rule out involvement; "separate living" was assessed in relation to capacity to interfere, not merely a distinct address. The High Court dismissed quashing and directed the trial court to decide solely on evidence, without influence from preliminary observations. It made no final guilt finding.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant married Indrajeet Singh Jatav on 1 June 2013. He died in a rail accident on 30 October 2016. She reported that the applicant, a cousin brother-in-law, together with her parents-in-law harassed her physically and mentally after his death, beat her and expelled her and her children on 29 May 2017. Bhind Dehat police registered Crime 293/2017 under IPC Sections 498A, 323 and 34; investigation remained pending. The applicant sought Section 482 quashing, arguing he was not a real brother-in-law, lived separately about 30 km away, had no visiting contact and was targeted for his finances. The State emphasized specific allegations and cited Lalita Kumari; complainant's counsel added that anticipatory bail had been rejected, but that was a submission rather than the ratio for refusing quashing.

2. Precedents — Considered : Satvinder Kaur v. State (NCT of Delhi), (1999) 8 SCC 728, was quoted for ordinarily permitting investigation where an FIR, on its face, discloses a cognizable offence and for refraining from determining the correctness of the accusations under Section 482. Its territorial jurisdiction discussion concerned its own facts, not an issue in this case. Padal Venkota Rama Reddy v. Koveuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2011) 12 SCC 437, was quoted extensively on the three purposes of inherent jurisdiction, its sparing exercise, the avoidance of a premature assessment of whether the prosecution version was probable or the witnesses credible, and the illustrative quashing principles in R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal. It reproduces many authorities such as L. Muniswamy, Saroj Kumar Sahoo, Madhavrao, and P.P. Sharma. Rajiv Thapar v. Madan Lal Kapoor, (2013) 3 SCC 330, set out the exceptional four-step approach to indubitable defence material; the Court treated the applicant's claimed lack of visits and separate residence as disputed defence facts. R. Kalyani v. Janak C. Mehta, (2009) 1 SCC 516, was quoted on face-value offence disclosure and limited examination of defence material. Tilly Gifford v. Michael Floyd Eshwar, (2018) 11 SCC 205, was quoted to caution against resolving disputed facts and foreclosing investigation absent clear grounds. The State invoked Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, for the police duty to register a cognizable FIR; the court's own analysis rested on Section 482 threshold and specific accusations rather than a separate Lalita Kumari issue determination.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 supplied inherent power to quash an FIR/investigation. IPC Sections 498A, 323 and 34 were the registered offences: alleged cruelty by a husband's relative, hurt and common intention. The pending investigation was distinguished from a trial verdict.

4. Issues : Could a pending FIR be quashed based on the applicant's status as a cousin brother-in-law rather than a real brother-in-law, separate residence, claimed absence of visits and suspected false implication? Were the allegations concerning conduct after the husband's death sufficiently specific to justify investigation against him, rather than merely a list of relatives? Could the court assess contested proximity and credibility before evidence was collected? The applicant's actual role and the prosecution's ultimate ability to prove the charged offences remained open.

5. Ratio / Findings : At the Section 482 threshold the court accepted the FIR's specific allegation that the applicant jointly harassed, beat and expelled the complainant and her children after the husband's death. It acknowledged that extended family can be falsely drawn into matrimonial criminal cases and vague omnibus allegations should not alone force trial, but the described assault and eviction identified actual conduct and a date. Living at a different address 30 km away did not make involvement impossible; the claimed lack of visits and effective separation were contested defence facts. In this setting, the court assessed separate living by the person's ability to interfere in everyday family affairs, rather than merely by residence in another nearby house. The absence of a general bar to prosecution of a cousin did not settle guilt. The court declined to halt the cognizable investigation or weigh the truth of competing accounts. It did not decide the merits of the previously rejected anticipatory bail application or use that rejection as proof of guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application; the FIR and investigation in Crime 293/2017 continued. The trial court was expressly requested to decide on evidence produced at trial, without prejudice from factual observations in the quashing order.

Dalveer Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 8230/2017, 09/05/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cheating — agreement to sell / intention at inception - The complainant paid ₹14 lakh under a ₹22 lakh land-sale agreement, with ₹8 lakh due when the deed was executed. The FIR alleged the sellers subsequently refused and "now" had a dishonest intention. It did not allege fraudulent inducement when the agreement was made. Applying Vijay Kumar Ghai v. State of W.B. and Radheshyam v. State of Rajasthan, the Court held a mere breach and a later change of intention did not prima facie establish an offence under Section 420 IPC. The extensive Vijay Kumar Ghai passage on forum shopping and multiple complaints was reproduced but no such finding was made in this case.

Quashing — civil remedy / criminal pressure - On the allegations accepted as stated, Section 482 CrPC relief was warranted because the dispute was over performance of the sale agreement and lacked facts showing cheating at the inception of the agreement. Crime No. 115/2023 under Sections 420 and 34 IPC and consequential proceedings were quashed. The complainant was left free to file a civil suit for specific performance if advised. The Court did not order the sale deed executed, decide the civil claim or rule that commercial disputes can never disclose cheating.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants agreed to sell land to respondent No. 2. The complainant asserted payment of ₹14 lakh out of a total ₹22 lakh, with the remaining ₹8 lakh payable when the sale deed was executed. The sellers did not execute it, and the complainant said it later appeared they no longer intended to do so. Inderganj police registered Crime 115/2023 under IPC Sections 420 and 34. The applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR and consequences, asserting that the pleaded dispute was a contract breach. The complainant argued the sellers' present refusal showed dishonesty. The High Court determined whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclosed an offence and left respondent No. 2 free to pursue civil redress.

2. Precedents — Considered : Vijay Kumar Ghai v. State of West Bengal was quoted at length. Its material application here was to distinguish a subsequent breach of contract from dishonest inducement at the inception of the agreement, by reference to Hridaya Ranjan Prasad Verma, and to caution against using criminal process for a purely civil claim. The quotation also surveys forum shopping, multiple complaints, second FIRs, suppression, Bhajan Lal, R.P. Kapur, Indian Oil, G. Sagar Suri and other decisions. The present Court did not find two FIRs, choice of competing fora or deliberate suppression by these parties; those quoted discussions are not independent holdings on this record. Radheshyam v. State of Rajasthan, Criminal Appeal 3020/2024 (22 July 2024), was directly applied for breach of contract not automatically calling for criminal action and for rejecting criminal pressure to enforce land-sale specific performance. Neither case was treated as making a genuine initial fraud immune simply because a civil claim might also exist.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 420 required cheating, including initial dishonest inducement, and Section 34 was included in the FIR. CrPC Section 482 supplied inherent quashing power. The suggested suit for specific performance was a civil remedy. The decision was at the facial FIR stage, not an acquittal after trial.

4. Issues : Did the allegations that ₹14 lakh was paid under a land-sale agreement and the sellers later refused to execute the deed disclose dishonest intention at the inception of the bargain and a Section 420 offence? Could criminal law be used to secure the deed when the allegations, taken as true, stated only breach and later unwillingness? If quashed, what civil relief remained possible? The court did not decide whether the buyer was ready and willing to perform or whether a civil decree should issue.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court identified intention at the inception of the agreement as critical to distinguishing cheating from breach of contract. The complaint's chronology asserted a valid agreement, advance payment, balance at registration, and a later refusal or later change of intention. It did not aver an original plan to deceive. Even assuming the entire FIR true, the basic Section 420 ingredient was absent. The criminal process could not be used as a coercive route to obtain specific performance. This decision assesses the allegations at face value; it resolves the allegations in this FIR and does not determine whether other commercial transactions may disclose a criminal offence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application and quashed Crime 115/2023 at Inderganj under Sections 420 and 34 IPC, together with consequential proceedings. Respondent No. 2 was expressly free to pursue a civil specific-performance suit if so advised. No damages, refund, sale-deed execution or costs were awarded.

Headnote :- Murder appeal — child witness / forensic corroboration - The couple's ten-year-old son testified that his father poured kerosene on Saroj after she refused money and pushed her toward an electric heater. He was cross-examined, denied tutoring and was supported by kerosene detected in her scalp hair and extensive burns. A doctor's claim that she reported an accidental cooking fire was rejected in light of that evidence and a contrary account of her ability to speak; no formal dying declaration had been recorded. Her parents did not witness the act and were used only for her strained relationship and the child's later account.

Section 106 Evidence Act - The husband admitted presence at the incident and offered an explanation that she had been accidentally burnt while cooking on a heater. State of Rajasthan v. Kashi Ram and Tulshiram Sahadu Suryawanshi were applied: failure to explain facts about the incident that were especially within his knowledge could add to a prosecution case already founded on proof; it does not transfer the prosecution's burden.

Section 302 / Exception 4 - Suraj Jagannath Jadhav was applied to conscious kerosene burning and the limited significance of a later alleged rescue effort. Nandlal required, for Exception 4, that the accused had taken no undue advantage and had not acted cruelly, in addition to the requirement of suddenness. The unarmed wife's kerosene burning after a money argument was cruel and imminently dangerous, so the proposed Section 304 Part I reduction failed. The murder conviction and life sentence were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dashrath appealed the Gwalior Sessions Judge's 29 October 2010 conviction under Section 302 IPC for burning his wife Saroj. The judgment's sentencing discussion records life imprisonment, and its opening records a ₹500 fine with one month's RI in default. They had been married about 13–14 years. The prosecution said that after he demanded money for liquor and Saroj refused while cooking on an electric heater, he poured kerosene on her and pushed her head toward it. Their ten-year-old son Mukesh was at home and gave the direct account. Saroj suffered very extensive burns and died during hospital treatment. Her father Lalaram and mother Rajabeti described marital strain and what Mukesh later told them, but did not see the incident. The doctor who treated Saroj testified for both sides and claimed she said the fire was accidental while cooking on a stove, although he had not recorded a formal dying declaration. The prosecution FSL detected kerosene in her scalp hair.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Rajasthan v. Kashi Ram, (2006) 12 SCC 254, was applied for Section 106 Evidence Act: a person with special knowledge of circumstances of death must give a probable explanation, but the prosecution keeps the criminal proof burden. Tulshiram Sahadu Suryawanshi v. State of Maharashtra, (2012) 10 SCC 373, was applied for an inference under Sections 106 and 114 only after the prosecution established foundational facts. Its quotation embeds Mir Mohammad Omar and Shambhu Nath Mehra. Suraj Jagannath Jadhav v. State of Maharashtra, (2020) 2 SCC 693, was quoted at length and applied to the specific argument that an unplanned act of setting the victim on fire with kerosene, followed by an attempt to extinguish the fire, reduces the offence from murder. Its discussion of Santosh, Bhagwan and Kalu Ram distinguishes an extreme inebriation fact pattern and explains why subsequent rescue does not necessarily mitigate conscious burning. Nandlal v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 5 SCC 224, was applied for the cumulative Exception 4 requirements. Its quoted Sridhar Bhuyan passage explains mutual fight, heat of passion, absence of undue advantage and cruelty; Pappu and Surain Singh appear within the quote, not as new fact-specific holdings of the present court. The court rejected automatic Section 304 treatment simply because the precipitating money dispute was sudden.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 302 governed murder, Section 300 Fourthly the imminently dangerous act, and Exception 4 to Section 300 the claimed sudden-fight mitigation toward Section 304 Part I. Evidence Act Section 106 concerned special knowledge, with Section 114 presumptive reasoning in cited Tulshiram. CrPC Section 313 was relevant to the husband's admission of presence and accidental-burning defence; Section 374 supplied appellate review, Section 174 the initial death inquiry. No statutory provision created an automatic presumption of guilt from marriage or household residence.

4. Issues : Was the child eyewitness reliable despite alleged tutoring and a doctor's claim of an accidental-burn statement? What did kerosene in scalp hair and all-over burn distribution prove against an electric heater accident? Could the husband's presence in the house and his explanation under Section 313 provide an additional link under Section 106 without reversing the burden of proof? Did a sudden dispute and alleged fire-extinguishing conduct satisfy Exception 4 and warrant Section 304 Part I instead of Section 302?

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor who conducted the post-mortem found fatal, extensive ante-mortem burns but left the question of accident, homicide or suicide to be determined from the surrounding evidence. Mukesh was a natural witness who consistently described his father pouring kerosene and forcing Saroj close to the heater; he denied tutoring and was tested in cross-examination. The FSL finding of kerosene in the scalp hair was consistent with kerosene having been poured from above and inconsistent with burns caused by an electric coil heater alone. The doctor's account of an accidental statement, not formally recorded as a dying declaration, conflicted with a police officer's report that the injured could not speak and with the independent physical finding. The Court accepted the child and rejected the accident defence. Dashrath's admitted presence and special access to the incident called for a probable explanation once the prosecution's foundational proof was present; the inadequate heater explanation added to, but did not replace, that proof.

After she refused to give him money, he poured fuel on his unarmed wife and pushed her towards the heater, setting her on fire. This was a consciously lethal or imminently dangerous act. A claim that he later tried to put out the fire, even if assumed, did not negate the intention/knowledge shown by the initial act. The event's lack of planning did not satisfy Exception 4, since the appellant took undue advantage and acted cruelly. No mutual sudden fight with the victim was proved. The prosecution established guilt beyond reasonable doubt on the court's overall assessment, without relying on an automatic spouse presumption.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal, affirmed the Section 302 conviction and life sentence as the statutory minimum, and ordered the already-imprisoned appellant to serve the remainder. The judgment was to be provided free of cost and trial record returned.

Dashrath v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 970/2010, 10/03/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Satish Kumar Sharma, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Investigation — delay / outcome report - The petitioner complained that the investigation into an FIR dated 21 October 2023 under Sections 341, 363 and 392 IPC remained incomplete and sought arrests, a charge sheet and a status report. Section 173(1) CrPC and Section 193 BNSS were cited for the duty to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. The Court directed the investigator to finish as early as possible and take the steps the evidence and law require, leaving open whether a charge sheet or a closure report should be filed. No fixed deadline was imposed, and no finding of criminal guilt was made.

Arrest and judicial supervision - D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari was applied: courts should not dictate arrest, seizures, or a charge sheet in every investigation. The quoted M.C. Abraham principle explains the investigating officer's discretion and the effect of arrest on personal liberty. The petitioner's arrest and predetermined charge-sheet requests were refused. A grievance could be submitted to the Superintendent of Police, Panna, for consideration according to law. The petition was disposed of.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dashrath Singh Lodhi filed W.P. 32273/2024 under Article 226, stating that no arrests had been made and the investigation into an FIR dated 21 October 2023 under IPC Sections 341, 363 and 392 had not been completed. He asked the High Court to direct the police to proceed with the investigation and file a charge sheet, call for a status report, and arrest Tarandeep Singh, Shashikant Patel and eight to ten others described as absconding. The order also refers to a grievance that may be submitted to the Superintendent of Police, Panna.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively and applied. The Supreme Court disapproved an order instructing police to record statements, arrest, seize property and file a charge sheet, because the investigator may lawfully decide those steps differently and can end with a closure report. Its quotation of M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explains Section 41 arrest discretion, caution owing to liberty and reputation, and no mechanical arrest simply because a cognizable offence is reported. The quoted decision also invokes Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala on hearing those prejudiced by coercive judicial orders. The High Court used the decision for limits on supervisory investigation directions.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 provided the writ remedy. IPC Sections 341, 363 and 392 were the registered FIR offences, not adjudicated on the merits. CrPC Section 173(1), alongside BNSS Section 193 as stated by the Court, requires expeditious completion without unnecessary delay and a report after investigation. CrPC Section 41 appeared in the quoted M.C. Abraham passage on arrest discretion, while Section 482 appeared in the Supreme Court's original case but was not this writ's direct jurisdictional basis.

4. Issues : Could the High Court order named suspects arrested and compel a charge sheet before the investigation was complete? Did prolonged pendency warrant an instruction to finish and report without unnecessary delay? What complaint channel remained for further delay? The court did not decide whether offences would be proved or whether the named persons were actually absconding.

5. Ratio / Findings : Arrest, seizure and the final prosecution decision lie with the police under law and depend on evidence; a court should not direct automatic arrest and filing of a charge sheet merely because an FIR has been registered. The requested commands would amount to supervising the investigation's manner and outcome. Separately, the statutory duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay did not permit indefinite inaction. The investigator must reach a conclusion on offence disclosure and file whichever lawful final report is justified. The Court directed prompt completion and necessary steps under law without prescribing the result, a concrete timetable, or a required arrest. No criminal liability inference was made from the petitioner's allegation of delay.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the writ with a direction to conclude the investigation as early as possible and act as required by law. The request to order arrests or require a charge sheet irrespective of the investigation's outcome was declined. The petitioner could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Panna, with a grievance, to be considered according to law.

Headnote :- Regular bail — witness influence / forensic evidence - Deepak sought Section 439 bail in a prosecution for IPC Sections 376-D, 366 and 506 after the prosecutrix turned hostile. The High Court relied on a prior co-accused order recording that the defence side had obtained her vakalatnama and contemplated a no-objection affidavit through a lawyer chosen by the accused side; it treated that circumstance as a serious witness-pressure concern. A forensic report also found human sperm on the slide and swab. Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi was applied for the limited principle that hostile testimony does not make scientific proof legally irrelevant. Bail was refused. The Court's consideration of the disputed conduct and the forensic finding did not amount to a final determination of criminal guilt or identification. The extensive Javed Ansari quotation inside the earlier order concerned another case and was not adopted as a factual finding about this prosecutrix.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deepak was arrested on 8 July 2021 in Crime 341/2021, Police Station Pichhore, Shivpuri, on allegations under IPC Sections 376-D, 366 and 506. In his first Section 439 CrPC application he argued that the prosecutrix had turned hostile. The High Court had addressed this circumstance in a 10 August 2021 order on co-accused Ramhet's application, MCRC 39388/2021. That earlier order recorded a changed assertion about Deepak's alleged engagement or proposed marriage to the prosecutrix and that counsel on the accused side held her vakalatnama, with a proposed no-objection affidavit. It inferred an effort to influence her; the co-accused then sought withdrawal of his bail request. In the current case the Court applied that concern to Deepak and also noted that human sperm had been found in the slide and swab of the prosecutrix. The FSL finding was considered as a bail factor, without a final determination of identity or guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 523, was applied for the possibility of conviction on reliable scientific evidence even if the prosecutrix is hostile; the present court used it at bail stage, not as a declaration of guilt. The 10 August 2021 Deepak-related co-accused order was incorporated at length to explain the witness-influence concern. Its lengthy quotation of Javed Ansari v. State of U.P., Allahabad High Court Criminal Miscellaneous Bail Application 27194/2021, described a different alleged forged-vakalatnama incident and professional-ethics response. The Allahabad incident and directions appeared as an illustration within the quoted order, rather than as facts or operative relief in Deepak's matter.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 439 governed regular bail. IPC Sections 376-D, 366 and 506 were the offences alleged. The judgment evaluated apparent witness influence and forensic evidence as bail factors. The earlier order discussed professional conduct and counsel authority by reference to a different case, without deciding a separate disciplinary proceeding here.

4. Issues : Did the prosecutrix's hostile testimony require bail where the accused side was linked to obtaining her vakalatnama and a proposed no-objection affidavit? Could the FSL finding remain potentially probative despite hostile testimony, and what role did it play at the bail stage?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the vakalatnama episode documented in the co-accused order as a concrete risk of influencing the prosecution witness, materially weakening reliance on her hostility as a bail ground. The FSL finding of human sperm meant the case did not depend only on her current testimony; Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi establishes that proper scientific proof may support a conviction notwithstanding hostility. At the bail stage, this supported refusal of bail; it was not a judicial conclusion that the forensic result identified Deepak or that the charged offences were proved. The quoted Allahabad dispute did not constitute a separate finding of fact about these parties.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the first application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC.

Deepak v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 55512/2021, 11/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cheque dishonour — corrected complaint - A statutory demand notice identified ₹3 lakh due for advertising, though the ensuing complaint mistakenly pleaded a personal loan. Before the complainant's cross-examination, the pleading could be amended to reflect the notice; its rejection was a material error even though charge had already been framed.

Sole proprietorship / payee - Naresh signed as proprietor of Prapti Collection. Raghu Lakshminarayanan was applied: the proprietary business is not a separate company, and Section 141 did not require its separate notice or arraignment. Deepak Advertisers was the cheque payee and filed through its proprietor; Shankar Finance supported the written complaint in the payee's trade name under Section 142.

Debt presumption / dishonour - The admitted signature triggered the presumption under Section 139. Bir Singh rejected a difference in handwriting or ink alone as a defence, while Shree Daneshwari Traders and its Kumar Exports quotation confirmed that the presumption remained rebuttable by probable facts and circumstances. The theft account, which lacked a credible date or supporting evidence, was rejected; advertising photos were admitted and bills produced. Section 146's official-mark presumption did not make a seal the only way to prove the signed bank memo; the bank witness did not disown it, and insufficient funds was a recorded reason for dishonour. The High Court reversed acquittal, convicted under Section 138, imposed one year RI and ₹5 lakh compensation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deepak Advertisers, a sole proprietary business of Deepak Jethwani, appealed the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate, Gwalior's 13 October 2017 acquittal of Naresh Jethwani in Criminal Case 14094/2010. The ₹3 lakh cheque, dated 10 March 2010, was signed by Naresh as proprietor of Prapti Collection and returned on 29 June 2010. The 5 July 2010 statutory notice, received 7 July, said the debt arose from advertising Naresh's shop, but the complaint filed 9 August 2010 mistakenly alleged a personal loan for domestic needs. The complainant's drafting counsel accepted responsibility for the error. The correction application of 15 February 2012 was refused on 8 October 2012. The trial court also allowed copies of advertising bills as secondary evidence subject to final admissibility and genuineness assessment.

Deepak and two witnesses testified; Naresh and an ICICI employee testified for the defence. Photographs showed the shop advertisements and Naresh acknowledged his shop and phone number in them. He asserted that signed cheques had been stolen but gave no reliable theft-report chronology.

2. Precedents — Considered : Raghu Lakshminarayanan v. Fine Tubes, (2007) 5 SCC 103, was applied to distinguish the proprietor from a company or partnership and reject a Section 141 separate-entity objection; its Ashok Transport Agency quotation supplied the trade-name distinction. Shankar Finance & Investments v. State of A.P., (2008) 8 SCC 536, was applied to the written Section 142 complaint by the payee proprietary concern through its proprietor. Bir Singh v. Mukesh Kumar, (2019) 4 SCC 197, was applied to the admitted signature and different-handwriting point; it addresses voluntarily handed-over blank cheques in its quoted rule, while theft was separately rejected on this record for want of credible support. Shree Daneshwari Traders v. Sanjay Jain, (2019) 16 SCC 83, was applied on the Section 139 burden. Kumar Exports v. Sharma Carpets is quoted extensively within Shree Daneshwari on probability-based rebuttal and bare denial.

3. Statutes considered : The Negotiable Instruments Act provisions considered were Sections 138 (dishonour offence and punishment), 139 (rebuttable debt/liability presumption), 141 (company liability, inapplicable to the sole proprietary concern), 142(a) (written payee or holder complaint), 143 (sentence-hearing statement in this order) and 146 (official-mark bank memo presumption). The quoted Bir Singh analysis also mentions Sections 20 and 87. CrPC Section 372 supplied the appeal; Section 313 governed the accused's examination. The order reproduces more of Section 142, including limitation and jurisdiction.

4. Issues : Could a complaint's mistaken loan account be amended when the statutory notice had stated the advertising debt? Must the drawer's sole proprietary concern separately receive notice or be arraigned, and could the payee's proprietary trade name bring the written complaint? Did a signed cheque, an alleged theft and different ink, advertising evidence and the Section 139 presumption establish enforceable liability? Could an officer-signed return memo without a bank seal prove insufficient-funds dishonour under Section 146? If so, should the acquittal be reversed and what relief was ordered?

5. Ratio / Findings : The notice contemporaneously described the advertising debt, and the amendment application preceded the complainant's cross-examination; the earlier refusal was set aside and the correction allowed. A sole proprietorship is its proprietor's business name, so Naresh was the proper accused as drawer without separately naming or notifying Prapti Collection; conversely, Deepak Advertisers was the named payee and could complain through Deepak Jethwani. The signature was undisputed. The suggested missing-cheque story lacked a credible date or police record, while the shop-advertisement photographs were admitted, bills were produced, and no objection to the advertisement had been made. The court treated the signed cheque and transaction evidence as establishing debt under the rebuttable Section 139 framework, and different ink did not itself displace it. The trial permission for copies of bills had been subject to final admissibility and genuineness; the appellate Court relied on the photographs, bills and other circumstances to find a legally enforceable debt. The ICICI officer-signed memo was not disowned by the defence bank employee; Section 146's marked-slip presumption was not the sole mode of proving dishonour. Insufficient funds was supported despite an additional signature-related remark. The court found the offence proved beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal appeal, set aside the 13 October 2017 acquittal and convicted Naresh under Section 138. It imposed one year rigorous imprisonment and directed ₹5 lakh compensation to Deepak Advertisers within one month, with a stated jail term of three months in default, and surrender by 31 December 2020. It cited Section 143 as its reason for no separate sentence hearing because the jail term was not over one year.

Deepak Advertisers v. Naresh Jethwani, Cr.A. no. 5504/2020, 07/12/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cheque dishonour / Section 482 - Deepak Gupta challenged the order declaring co-accused Ashutosh Sharma absconding in the Section 138 prosecution of A.S. Tractors and its partners. He relied on a private partnership deed to deny responsibility for Ashutosh's misconduct and feared that the entire civil liability might fall on him if he were tried alone. Applying State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, the Court declined to assess the deed under its inherent jurisdiction; Deepak had to prove it at trial. He did not deny being a partner and had also signed the cheque. He identified no legal provision under which he was aggrieved by the declaration against Ashutosh. The trial could proceed without waiting for the absconder. The Court affirmed the declaration, vacated the 2019 interim order and directed the magistrate to conclude the 2017 complaint trial within six months of receiving the certified order. It did not decide guilt or finally allocate liability between the partners.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vimlesh Goyal brought Regular Criminal Trial 1691/2017 under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act against A.S. Tractors and its partners, Deepak Gupta and Ashutosh Sharma. Deepak appeared, but Ashutosh did not. By order of 12 February 2019, the JMFC, Gwalior, declared Ashutosh absconding. Deepak applied under Section 482 CrPC, alleging that the prescribed procedure had not been followed. He feared that proceeding without Ashutosh might saddle him with the entire civil liability. He also relied on a private partnership deed which, he said, excluded his responsibility for Ashutosh's misconduct. The firm was an accused, Deepak did not deny being a partner, and he had signed the disputed cheque. The deed remained to be proved before the trial court, and the complaint remained for trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, was applied to reject reliance on the unproved private partnership deed at this Section 482 stage. The Court held that the deed was not a public document of which it could take judicial notice; Deepak could prove it before the trial court. This ruling concerned the deed relied on here and did not resolve the admissibility of every defence document in every procedural setting.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 governed the application challenging the order declaring the co-accused absconding. Negotiable Instruments Act Section 138 governed the underlying dishonour complaint, and Section 141 concerned Deepak's arraignment as a partner in respect of the firm's cheque. The Court addressed the absconder declaration and continuation of the trial against the accused who had appeared. It did not finally decide civil recovery or allocate civil liability.

4. Issues : Could Deepak rely on an unproved partnership deed in Section 482 proceedings to disclaim responsibility for the firm cheque? Was he legally aggrieved by a co-accused's absconder declaration, and must the Section 138 trial be stayed until that co-accused appeared? Did the fact that Deepak also signed the cheque matter to the premature liability argument?

5. Ratio / Findings : The private partnership deed had to be proved before the trial court. Under Section 482, the High Court would not take judicial notice of it to determine Deepak's disputed liability. He identified no provision under which he could seek to set aside the declaration that Ashutosh was absconding. The trial could proceed against the accused who had appeared without waiting indefinitely for the absconder. Deepak did not dispute being a partner, and the cheque also bore his signature. His arraignment therefore did not rest solely on attributing another partner's conduct to him. These findings concerned continuation of the proceedings; they neither convicted him nor established that every signatory partner was liable regardless of the trial evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court found no jurisdictional error and affirmed the JMFC's order of 12 February 2019. It disposed of the Section 482 application and vacated the interim order of 16 September 2019. It directed the magistrate to proceed immediately and conclude the complaint trial, pending since 2017, within six months of receiving the certified order. The Office was directed to send a copy immediately to the trial court for information and compliance. Proof of the partnership deed and the merits of the Section 138 complaint remained for trial.

Deepak Gupta v. Vimlesh Goyal, M.Cr.C. no. 38461/2019, 11/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (178) Prev Next

Headnote :- Domestic Violence Act Section 12 — report / later divorce - Deepak Pandey sought interference under Section 482 with orders allowing Aneeta Tiwari's 2021 application under Section 12 to continue. Applying Prabha Tyagi v. Kamlesh Devi, the Court held that a Magistrate must consider a domestic incident report received from a Protection Officer or service provider. The Magistrate need not, however, call for a report before acting on an aggrieved person's direct application. Deepak obtained an ex parte divorce decree on 15 June 2022, after the complaint and notice. The later decree did not defeat the pending application. The Court expressly left open whether an application first filed after divorce would be maintainable. It did not decide the domestic violence allegations or entitlement to final relief under the DV Act. The application invoking inherent jurisdiction was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Aneeta Tiwari applied under Section 12 of the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, 2005. On 22 January 2021, the JMFC, Sirmour, issued notice to her husband, Deepak Pandey, without first calling for a domestic incident report (DIR). Deepak's separate proceeding under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act resulted in an ex parte divorce decree on 15 June 2022 on the ground of cruelty pleaded by him. He sought dismissal of the pending DV Act proceeding, but the magistrate rejected his application on 27 January 2023. The Additional Sessions Judge rejected Criminal Revision 11/2023 on 2 November 2023. Deepak then sought intervention under Section 482 CrPC. The order does not establish whether the ex parte decree was challenged and does not resolve the wife's substantive DV Act allegations.

2. Precedents — Considered : Prabha Tyagi v. Kamlesh Devi, (2022) 8 SCC 90, was extensively quoted and applied on the proviso to Section 12(1). A Magistrate must consider a DIR received from a Protection Officer or service provider. An aggrieved woman applying personally or through counsel need not first obtain a DIR to enable the Magistrate to act. The quoted passage in Prabha Tyagi reviews Nayanakumar, Abhiram Gogoi, Mohd. Basit, Rahul Soorma, A. Vidya Sagar, Ravi Kumar Bajpai, Shambhu Prasad Singh, Rakesh Choudhary, Vijay and Suraj Sharma.

3. Statutes considered : DV Act Section 12(1) and its proviso govern an aggrieved person's application and consideration of a DIR received by the Magistrate. The quoted passage from Prabha Tyagi refers to the definitions in Section 2, appointment and duties under Sections 8–10, and the service provider. CrPC Section 482 governed the application for interference. Hindu Marriage Act Section 13 was the basis of the separate divorce decree; the decree did not automatically bar a previously instituted DV Act proceeding.

4. Issues : Was a DIR from the Protection Officer essential before the magistrate issued notice on the wife's Section 12 application? Did an ex parte divorce decree made during that pending proceeding require its dismissal? What temporal question about a complaint newly filed after divorce was actually before the court?

5. Ratio / Findings : Under Prabha Tyagi, a DIR is not a mandatory precondition to an aggrieved person's direct application under Section 12. The Magistrate must consider a report when one is received, but its absence does not prevent the Magistrate from acting. Aneeta's complaint preceded the ex parte divorce decree, so the later decree did not render the pending application unmaintainable. The Court did not determine whether the decree had been challenged or decide who was cruel. It expressly declined to answer whether Section 12 could first be invoked after divorce because that question did not arise on these facts.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court found no ground to interfere with continuation of the DV Act proceeding and dismissed the application. The wife's application remained for adjudication by the magistrate. This order granted no final protection, residence or monetary relief.

Headnote :- POCSO Act — proof of child status — Rule 12(3) hierarchy - For the 2014 incident, the proved school admission register recorded the prosecutrix's birth date as 30.03.2001. Under the 2007 Rules, applied to child victims through Jarnail, that record took priority over medical age estimation. The ossification estimate of 16–18 years and the claim to an automatic two-year margin did not displace it. The prosecutrix was a minor, so the alleged consent was immaterial. The decision did not establish a universal rule for a materially impeached school record (¶¶17–23).

Kidnapping and procuration — minor's departure — enticement - Applying Anversinh's distinction of S. Varadarajan, the Court rejected the argument that travel without protest established a wholly voluntary departure from guardianship. The specific allegation in the FIR that the appellant had induced the prosecutrix supported enticement. The convictions under Sections 363 and 366-A IPC rested on that finding, rather than on travel alone (¶¶24–28).

POCSO Act — Section 42 — overlapping IPC punishment - The trial court imposed ten years under both IPC Section 376(1) and POCSO Section 4. Applying the requirement to select the punishment greater in degree, the High Court retained the IPC term and imposed no separate Section 4 sentence. This reflected its assessment of the law applicable to the 2014 offence. It noted the 2019 amendment without applying it retrospectively. The other IPC terms remained concurrent.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Court finally heard the appeal under Section 374(2) CrPC against the Additional Sessions Judge, Karera's judgment of 30.10.2014 in Special Sessions Trial No. 59/2014. The appellant had initially sought suspension under Section 389 after about seven years in custody on a ten-year sentence. Counsel accepted the Court's invitation to argue the appeal finally, so the interim suspension request received no separate decision on its merits. The prosecution alleged that the prosecutrix went missing on 13.04.2014, that the appellant had enticed her away and that he raped her. Crime No. 131/2014 was registered at Dinara. The investigation included witness statements, medical and ossification examinations, and FSL material. The trial court acquitted co-accused Mukesh but convicted Deepak under IPC Sections 363, 366-A and 376(1), and POCSO Section 4. It imposed rigorous imprisonment for three, five and ten years respectively under the IPC provisions, and another ten years under POCSO Section 4, with fines and default terms. All custodial terms were concurrent. The appellant disputed the prosecutrix's minority, claimed consent and voluntary travel, and challenged the overlapping punishment.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jarnail v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, was materially applied to extend Rule 12's ordered scheme for proving age under the Juvenile Justice Rules, 2007 from children in conflict with law to child victims. The reproduced passage gives priority to a matriculation or equivalent certificate, then to the birth entry in the school first attended, and then to a municipal or panchayat birth certificate. Medical opinion follows only if those records are absent. The Court relied on the school admission register instead of the ossification estimate (¶¶19–21). Anversinh @ Kriansinh Fatesinh Zala v. State of Gujarat, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 1919/2010, order dated 13.01.2021, was materially applied on kidnapping and enticement (¶¶25–27). Its quoted passage distinguished S. Varadarajan. A minor's voluntary departure avoids a kidnapping charge only where she has the knowledge and capacity to understand her action, leaves voluntarily, and receives no assistance or inducement from the accused. Here, the High Court found a specific allegation of enticement in the father's FIR and rejected the voluntary-departure argument. The Court also stated that reliable and trustworthy testimony of the prosecutrix requires no additional corroboration (¶22).

3. Statutes considered : Section 374(2) CrPC governed the appeal; Section 389 was invoked for an interim application but was overtaken by the final hearing. The incident occurred in 2014, so the Court applied Rule 12(3) of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Rules, 2007, framed under the 2000 Act, to determine the victim's age. IPC Sections 363 and 366-A addressed taking/enticement of a minor and procuration; Section 376(1) and POCSO Section 4 addressed the sexual-offence conviction. Under Section 42 POCSO, where overlapping POCSO and IPC offences are proved, the Court selected the punishment it considered greater in degree and imposed no separate POCSO term. The 2019 POCSO amendment was mentioned for changed Section 4 punishment but not used to sentence the 2014 conduct.

4. Issues : Did the school admission entry or the ossification estimate govern the victim's age under the 2007 Rules, including the defence's claimed two-year margin? Did her travel with the appellant without raising an alarm defeat the prosecution case on sexual assault or kidnapping, given the allegation of enticement? Were separate custodial sentences for the overlapping IPC rape and POCSO sexual-assault offences permissible under Section 42? The appeal did not require deciding a new Section 389 suspension test once it was heard finally, nor the acquitted co-accused's liability.

5. Ratio / Findings : The headmaster in charge proved the school admission register recording 30.03.2001 as the prosecutrix's birth date. She acknowledged that she had not personally admitted the prosecutrix and did not know the basis of the entry. The Court nonetheless applied Jarnail's statutory hierarchy and gave the school record priority over medical estimation. The ossification estimate of 16–18 years could not displace that record, and a two-year margin did not automatically operate in the accused's favour. Even counsel's alternative calculation based on school years yielded a minor. Her minority made the alleged consent immaterial. The Court also relied on her specific account of rape and the FSL finding of human sperm. It held that rape was proved beyond reasonable doubt and that credible testimony did not require additional corroboration. On kidnapping, it applied Anversinh's distinction between a minor's wholly voluntary departure and departure induced by the accused. The father's FIR alleged previous contact and enticement. The Court found that the appellant had induced the departure and affirmed the convictions under Sections 363 and 366-A. These findings concerned Deepak; Mukesh's acquittal remained undisturbed. Finally, Section 42 precluded a separate POCSO Section 4 sentence alongside the IPC Section 376(1) sentence. On its assessment of the 2014 penalty framework, the Court considered the IPC punishment greater in degree. It imposed no separate POCSO sentence while affirming guilt under that Act.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the conviction judgment of 30.10.2014. It affirmed the ten-year rigorous-imprisonment term under IPC Section 376(1), the three-year term under Section 363 and the five-year term under Section 366-A, together with their fines and default stipulations. The terms were directed to run concurrently. Although guilt under POCSO Section 4 was affirmed, no separate sentence was imposed for that offence in view of Section 42. Deepak remained in jail, and a free copy of the judgment was directed to be furnished to him. The final appeal hearing superseded the Section 389 application; suspension was not separately granted.

Headnote :- Regular bail / parity / antecedents - Deepak Rajawat's second application under Section 439 concerned 141 litres of liquor allegedly seized jointly from him and his uncle, Bhola, in a prosecution under MP Excise Act Section 34(2). Deepak's first application had been rejected. A coordinate Bench later granted Bhola bail under the summer vacation exception to the usual listing rule. The High Court declined to grant Deepak bail automatically on parity: he had five additional pending excise cases, and Bhola's bail order did not mention the earlier rejection. Virupakshappa Gouda, Sudha Singh and Manoj Kumar Khokhar required consideration of antecedents, repetition risk and reasons for exercising discretion, without deciding guilt. The Court issued notice to Bhola and directed registration of a separate cancellation case. It did not recall Bhola's bail in this order. Deepak's second application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deepak Rajawat was arrested on 8 April 2022 in Crime 111/2022, Police Station Hazeera, Gwalior, for an alleged offence under MP Excise Act Section 34(2). The prosecution alleged that 141 litres of liquor worth ₹1,24,285 had been seized jointly from him and his uncle and co-accused, Bhola alias Hemraj Sikarwar. Deepak's first Section 439 CrPC bail application had been dismissed on 11 May 2022 in MCRC 23501/2022. A coordinate Bench granted Bhola bail on 30 May 2022 in MCRC 26405/2022 during summer vacation, when the rule for placing connected applications before the same Bench was suspended. The co-accused's bail order did not mention the rejection of Deepak's first application. Deepak sought parity in a second application.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virupakshappa Gouda v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 5 SCC 406, was quoted and applied for a bail assessment based on gravity, prima facie evidence, the risk of tampering and the likelihood of repetition, rather than arbitrary discretion; Chaman Lal, Prasanta Kumar Sarkar, CBI v. V. Vijay Sai Reddy and Neeru Yadav occur within its quotation. Preet Pal Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2020) 8 SCC 645, was quoted to distinguish pretrial bail from post-conviction Section 389 sentence suspension; that distinction provided context, since Deepak's application was for pretrial bail. Sudha Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2021) 4 SCC 781, was applied for consideration of antecedents and risks to society and witnesses; Ash Mohammad and Prasanta Kumar Sarkar appear in the quoted extract. Manoj Kumar Khokhar v. State of Rajasthan, (2022) 3 SCC 501, was quoted extensively and applied for reasoned consideration of antecedents and an apparently defective grant of bail to a co-accused. Its many embedded cases, including Neeru Yadav, Ramesh Bhavan Rathod, Brijmani Devi and Myakala Dharmarajam, were part of the Supreme Court discussion. The present order initiated proceedings for recall or cancellation of Bhola's bail but did not decide them.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 439 governed the successive pretrial bail request. The Manoj Kumar Khokhar quotation refers to Section 439(2) cancellation and the distinction between subsequent misuse and an original perverse grant; Section 389 appears in Preet Pal Singh's quotation, but Deepak sought no sentence suspension. MP Excise Act Section 34(2) was the alleged offence; IPC Section 307 figured only in the co-accused's antecedent history. Pending cases and preventive proceedings were risk material, not convictions in this prosecution.

4. Issues : Did Bhola's later bail order, passed during an exceptional coordinate-Bench listing, justify Deepak's second application on parity despite the earlier rejection? How should pending criminal antecedents and repetition risk be weighed? Did the apparent omission of Bhola's substantial diary history warrant immediate cancellation or a notice and separate adjudication?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court declined to grant bail mechanically on parity. Deepak's first application had been rejected, Bhola's bail order did not mention that rejection, and their individual histories required consideration. Deepak's pending excise cases were relevant to the risk of repetition, together with the alleged joint seizure; they were not proof of guilt. The Court found no basis to grant him bail. As to Bhola, it inferred that material facts had been omitted when bail was sought before the coordinate Bench, but gave him an opportunity to respond. Its order left his bail for separate adjudication: notice was issued and registration of a separate case was directed. No final cancellation decision was made.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Deepak's second application for regular bail. It directed that show-cause notice be served on Bhola through the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, asking why his bail order of 30 May should not be recalled. A separate cancellation case was to be registered and listed on 4 July 2022.

Headnote :- Criminal medical negligence — expert screening - A registered dentist faced prosecution under IPC Sections 336 and 338 after an injection for jaw pain was followed by severe symptoms in the complainant's hand, referral, suggested amputation and later surgery. Applying Jacob Mathew, the High Court distinguished civil negligence from gross criminal negligence, adopted the standard of an ordinarily competent practitioner and emphasised safeguards against unsupported prosecutions of doctors. Kusum Sharma, Martin F. D'Souza, Malay Kumar Ganguly and S.K. Jhunjhunwala were quoted on the required standard of professional care, including passages on consumer liability and Section 304-A. The complainant had obtained no independent expert or committee opinion supporting this prosecution. The FIR and the JMFC proceedings were quashed. The complainant remained free to obtain an expert report and file a fresh complaint if the report supported negligence. The Court did not decide medical causation, civil liability or the merits of any later complaint.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deepak Shukla was a dentist registered with the MP State Dentist Council since 19 October 2013 and ran Shukla Dental Clinic at Baikunthpur. The complainant attended on 7 January 2015 with severe lower jaw pain. She alleged that he prescribed and administered an injection bought from the market, after which she suffered marked pain. She returned, received another injection and was referred to another doctor. The next day, she noticed disfiguration of a finger. She was referred from Rewa for further care and, at Bombay Hospital, Indore, a CT scan reportedly led to a suggestion that her hand be amputated. She later underwent an operation on 21 January that improved circulation. She claimed substantial expenditure and continuing treatment. A charge sheet followed in Crime 74/2015, leading to JMFC case 74/2017 under IPC Sections 336 and 338. The dentist sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC because no competent medical opinion had been obtained.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jacob Mathew v. State of Punjab, (2005) 6 SCC 1, was quoted and applied on the standard of an ordinarily competent professional, gross criminal negligence, the distinction from civil error, the limited role of res ipsa loquitur, and the requirement of a credible independent expert opinion before a private complaint or police proceedings against a doctor. Its statement that arrest is not routine was quoted but no arrest issue was decided here. Kusum Sharma v. Batra Hospital, (2010) 3 SCC 480, was quoted on professional care, genuine treatment alternatives and the high threshold for criminal liability in this prosecution under Sections 336 and 338. Martin F. D'Souza v. Mohd. Ishfaq, (2009) 3 SCC 1, was quoted on Bolam and the requirement of a competent opinion from the relevant specialty before notice; the present judgment turned on the absence of expert support. Malay Kumar Ganguly v. Dr. Sukumar Mukherjee, (2009) 9 SCC 221, explained the different thresholds for criminal and civil negligence by reference to Section 304-A. The present case concerned alleged nonfatal harm under Sections 336/338. S.K. Jhunjhunwala v. Dhanwanti Kaur, (2019) 2 SCC 282, was quoted on reasonable competence and unsuccessful outcomes, including its embedded Jacob Mathew and Bolam passages. Bolam, V.P. Shantha and other cases appear within those Supreme Court quotations reproduced by the High Court.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 336 and 338 were the charged offences in the FIR and JMFC prosecution. CrPC Section 482 conferred the High Court's quashing power. IPC Section 304-A appears in the quoted Supreme Court analyses of death-causing medical negligence; no death or Section 304-A charge was pleaded here. Dentist registration and professional status provided context, not a statutory exemption. The order did not adjudicate a civil/consumer compensation claim.

4. Issues : Could a criminal prosecution of a registered dentist for the alleged injury proceed from treatment chronology and an adverse outcome without a competent independent professional opinion? What degree of departure from ordinary professional skill constitutes criminal rather than possible civil negligence? If the expert safeguard was absent, should the existing FIR and charge-sheet case be quashed outright, and could a supported complaint later be filed?

5. Ratio / Findings : An adverse outcome does not, by itself, establish gross negligence by a doctor. Under Jacob Mathew, criminal negligence requires a much greater departure from professional standards than an ordinary lack of care or a reasonable clinical choice that fails. Conduct is judged by the skill of an ordinarily competent professional and the knowledge available at the time. The Supreme Court safeguard requires a credible opinion from a competent doctor to support a private complaint, or an appropriate independent medical opinion during investigation. Admittedly, the complainant had not sought review by an expert committee. The High Court therefore held that the present criminal allegations lacked the required support and that the prosecution was unwarranted. It did not hold that the injection was medically sound, rule out causation or bar a lawful later claim. The treatment chronology and suggested amputation remained allegations; the Court made no medical finding on their merits.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application and quashed Crime 74/2015 and the further proceedings in RCT 74/2017 before the JMFC, Sirmour, District Rewa. The complainant was expressly left at liberty, if advised, to approach an expert committee. If the committee found negligence, she could file a fresh complaint in accordance with law, accompanied by its report. No compensation was awarded in this order.

Headnote :- Regular bail / forensic delay - Deepak Tomar had spent nearly a year in custody in a rape, POCSO and SC/ST Act case. Although the prosecutrix had turned hostile, the High Court applied Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi to emphasise that scientific evidence could still establish the case. Repeated requests for a DNA result failed because RFSL Sagar lacked consumables and a standard kit. The Court directed the DGP to restore testing capacity. The State's failure to provide the report could not justify keeping this accused in custody. COVID-19 prison-decongestion directions added context. Bail was ordered on a ₹1 lakh bond and like surety, with health and conduct conditions and without a finding on guilt. The Court stated that DNA testing was compulsory under Section 53-A CrPC.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deepak Tomar was arrested on 6 October 2020 in Crime 337/2020, Police Station Hazira, Gwalior, for IPC Sections 363 and 376, POCSO Sections 3/4, and SC/ST Act Sections 3(1)(w)(ii) and 3(2)(v). In his first application under Section 439 CrPC, he relied on the prosecutrix turning hostile. The Court sought the DNA report on 26 August; it was still unavailable on 14 September 2021. On 27 September, the matter was converted to a miscellaneous criminal case. By 4 October, the State still could not furnish the report. RFSL Sagar said consumables and a standard kit were unavailable. The Division Bench ruling in Pramod v State of MP prompted that conversion from an appeal; that ruling was decided on 22 April 2021 in Criminal Appeal No. 5189/2020. Deepak had already spent almost a year in custody. The order contains neither a DNA result nor a trial outcome.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal 913/2016, decided 28 September 2018, was applied for the principle that a prosecutrix turning hostile does not preclude conviction on scientific or forensic evidence; it did not decide this accused's guilt, as the report was absent. In Re: Contagion of COVID-19 Virus in Prisons, Supreme Court suo motu W.P.(C) 1/2020, orders of 23 March and 7 April 2020, was quoted on State high-powered committees identifying categories for prison decongestion and on safe transit or shelter for released prisoners. The present order treated pandemic conditions as an additional reason for release without finding Deepak fell within a specified committee category. Aparna Bhat v. State of MP, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, was invoked to direct that the complainant be informed of the grant of bail; no substantive guilt issue was resolved under it. The MP Division Bench Pramod ruling was procedural context only.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 439 and 437 governed bail and its ordinary conditions. Section 53-A was invoked in the order for medical examination and DNA evidence of a rape accused. The Court stated that DNA testing was compulsory under Section 53-A and directed uninterrupted provision of laboratory consumables and the standard kit. IPC Sections 363/376, POCSO Sections 3/4 and SC/ST Act Sections 3(1)(w)(ii), 3(2)(v) were alleged offences, not decided ingredients. Article 21 and COVID-19 prison directions concerned liberty and safe release, not adjudication of guilt.

4. Issues : Could the hostile prosecutrix's testimony be treated as dispositive before potentially important DNA evidence returned? Who bore responsibility for a laboratory supply shortage that stalled the report? Could the accused remain in pretrial custody because the State failed to produce scientific material after repeated adjournment, taking account of pandemic prison conditions? What directions and limits accompanied release?

5. Ratio / Findings : Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi established that forensic evidence could remain important even after a witness turned hostile. The State was responsible for keeping RFSL supplied so that DNA testing remained available. The shortage of consumables was an impediment attributable to the prosecution, rather than delay caused by the accused. The Court distinguished the potential value of that evidence from the question of continued custody. Since the prosecution could not furnish the report and Deepak remained detained, he could not be left in jail while it failed to comply. The Court directed DGP intervention and granted bail without deciding whether DNA evidence would eventually connect him to the offences. The quoted COVID-19 directions and the second-wave conditions provided additional reasons for release. The Court stated that DNA testing was compulsory under Section 53-A and held that the prosecution's failure to furnish the report could not justify continued custody.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for regular bail without commenting on the merits. Deepak was to furnish a personal bond of ₹1,00,000 and one surety in the same amount to the satisfaction of the trial court, CJM or remand magistrate, whichever was available. He had to give an undertaking to follow all general or specific instructions issued from time to time by the Central Government, State Government or local administration to combat the pandemic. Before release, the jail authorities had to arrange examination by a competent doctor and testing if the doctor considered it necessary. If he was not suspected of infection or tested negative, the local administration had to arrange his journey home under the Supreme Court's directions. If positive, he was to be sent immediately to the appropriate hospital for treatment under medical norms. He was required to comply strictly with the pandemic instructions. A breach would automatically make the order ineffective, and the local administration or police had to take him into custody immediately and return him to the same jail. He also had to supply a copy of the bail order to the police station having jurisdiction over his residence. The other conditions under Sections 437 and 439 CrPC remained applicable. The order was to remain in force until the trial concluded, but would automatically lose effect upon bail jump or breach of any condition. The complainant was to be informed of the grant of bail. The DGP was directed to intervene immediately and ensure uninterrupted supplies of consumables and the standard kit to RFSL, Sagar, so that DNA testing could be completed as early as possible. A copy of the order was to be sent to the DGP for information and compliance.

Deepak Tomar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 49075/2021, 04/10/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Connected ransom appeals — identification / recovery / electronic identity - Two abductees were lured from Tamil Nadu on the pretext of groundnut trading, detained by an armed group in the Gwalior area, and released after their family paid ransom. The Court assessed the evidence against each of the four appellants separately. Recognition of Rama Bai, without proof of a defined role or common object, did not establish guilt. Karunanidhi's Polytechnic TIP was not shown to include other persons and followed his exposure to the accused at the Crime Branch. His second TIP, after repeated exposure, was also unreliable. Sinthil's independent jail TIP reliably identified Ramvilas and Kamal, but no role or incriminating property was proved against Ramvilas. Deependra's alleged ₹40,000 recovery was not proved because the officer who brought him and the cash was not examined, and the place of recovery and the seizure chain were not established. Kamal's admission that he made the ransom call, the IO-supported recovery recorded as ₹34,40,500 with Chennai bank slips and signed notes, and Sinthil's identification sustained his conviction. Release on Supurdgi without objection permitted reliance on investigation-stage currency identification in the particular circumstances, despite nonproduction in court. The gold articles, however, were not substantively identified. Collection of the ATM card and PIN, together with bank records, supported Section 66C liability despite the missing CCTV. Deependra, Ramvilas and Ramabai were acquitted; Kamal's life sentence remained subject to the lawful remission policy.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A single Division Bench judgment disposed of four appeals against the conviction dated 30 June 2014 by the Special Judge, Gwalior, in SST 20/2011: Deependra (CRA 742), Ramvilas (767), Ramabai (768) and Kamal Kishore alias Doctor/Master/K.K. (962). Each had received life RI under IPC Section 364A read with MPDVPK Act Section 13, and three years under IPC Section 419 and IT Act Section 66C, with the recorded fines and default terms. Trader R.L. Sinthil Kumar and his employee Karunanidhi travelled from Tamil Nadu in January 2011 after Vijay Tomar offered groundnuts at Gwalior. They were taken to a hilly area, detained by an armed gang, threatened and deprived of valuables and ATM credentials. Ransom was demanded from the family. The prosecution account described an initial demand of ₹2 crore, a call demanding ₹1 crore, a negotiated ransom of ₹32 lakh and the family arranging ₹35 lakh. Karunanidhi met the family members who had brought the ransom cash to Jhansi; the abductees were later released. The police investigated identification, seizures, bank transactions, ransom calls and the roles of individual accused. The trial court acquitted seven others; one accused died during trial, and the four appellants were convicted. The appeals challenged identification and recoveries, rather than the occurrence of the abduction itself.

2. Precedents — Considered : P. Sasikumar v. State, Supreme Court CRA 1473/2024, and Sheo Shankar Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 3 SCC 654, were applied to distinguish substantive identification in court from corroborative TIP evidence. Sheo Shankar Singh quotes Malkhansingh and Pramod Mandal in its discussion of identification evidence. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2014) 12 SCC 133, State of Rajasthan v. Daud Khan, (2016) 2 SCC 607, Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, Suraj Pal v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 SCC 64, and Rabindra Kumar Pal/Dara Singh v. Republic of India, (2011) 2 SCC 490, were quoted on the purpose of TIP and the weight to be given to identification as a matter of prudence. They did not categorically exclude all dock identification. Gireesan Nair v. State of Kerala, (2023) 1 SCC 180, was applied to the witness's exposure before TIP and the repeated parade.

Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1, Govindaraju v. State, (2012) 4 SCC 722, Rohitash Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2013) 14 SCC 434, Mukesh Singh v. State (Narcotic Branch), (2020) 10 SCC 120, Tahir v. State (Delhi), (1996) 3 SCC 338, Girja Prasad v. State of MP, (2007) 7 SCC 625, Praveen Kumar v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 12 SCC 199, and Karamjit Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.) were cited on accepting credible police testimony after careful scrutiny, despite the lack of independent panch support. The Bench applied that principle to Kamal's recovery. It did not cure the separate gap in proof of the first seizure alleged against Deependra.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 364A and MPDVPK Act Section 13 governed kidnapping for ransom, IPC Section 419 concerned impersonation, and Information Technology Act Section 66C concerned dishonest use of another person's password or unique identification. Evidence Act Section 9 concerned identification. Discovery under Section 27 was invoked for Kamal's disclosure but was absent in Deependra's case. CrPC Sections 162 and 313 arose in the identification discussion and Kamal's admission, respectively. CrPC Section 374(2) governed the appeals, and Section 428 concerned the custodial set-off certificate. The order's application of Section 66C concerned use of an ATM card and PIN despite a missing CCTV floppy.

4. Issues : Could recognition alone sustain Rama Bai's conviction without proof of a role or shared object? Which of the abductees' TIP and dock identifications remained reliable after prior exposure, failure to establish other persons in the parade and repeated parades? Did reliable identification alone suffice against Ramvilas? Was the alleged ₹40,000 recovery proved to be from Deependra's possession when ASI Chauhan was not examined and the arrest-to-seizure chain was missing? Could the IO prove Kamal's much larger recovery of disclosed and marked ransom money despite hostile panch evidence and nonproduction of the cash after unopposed Supurdgi? What weight should be given to the unproduced gold articles, Kamal's Section 313 admission to the ransom call and the ATM PIN and withdrawal evidence despite the missing CCTV? How should the four appeals be disposed of, including Kamal's life sentence and remission position?

5. Ratio / Findings : Rama Bai was identified, but no criminal act, recovery, membership or common object was attributed to her. Her presence in the forest and the unreliable allegation that she supplied food could not sustain guilt. Karunanidhi admitted seeing the accused at the Crime Branch before the first Polytechnic parade on 21 January. Its memorandum did not record other persons being included, and the Tehsildar could neither identify them nor explain where they came from. The Court found that no meaningful mixed parade had been held. Karunanidhi's repeated identification on 23 February followed two prior exposures and was also rejected. Sinthil had left Gwalior after his release and returned for the jail parade; he was not shown to have seen the accused beforehand, but he could not identify Deependra. Ramvilas still had no defined role, incriminating recovery or call data against him, so identification alone did not prove guilt. Deependra's alleged ₹40,000 recovery lacked independent attestation and a proved chain linking it to his possession. ASI Chauhan brought Deependra and the cash to the station without a contemporaneous seizure, was not examined, and the IO's papers did not show that the cash had been found on Deependra. No disclosure led to the recovery, and the old phone was not linked to the crime. Later identification of the notes could not establish a seizure that had never been reliably attributed to him. Kamal's separate disclosure led to ₹32,90,000 buried at a relative's home, and ₹1,15,500 was seized at arrest. The IO's account withstood cross-examination despite a hostile panch. Chennai bank slips, signatures placed on some notes before the journey and recognition by the carrier and abductee linked the cash to the ransom. The notes had been returned on Supurdgi without objection and were not produced in court. In those particular circumstances, the Court accepted their identification during investigation. It found no substantive identification of the gold ring and chain in court, but held that jewellery belonging to the abductees had been recovered from Kamal, who claimed no ownership. Kamal admitted making the ransom call in his Section 313 statement and claimed coercion. The Court rejected that explanation in light of the traced cash. Sinthil's card and PIN, the bank manager's evidence and the withdrawals established the Section 66C attribution despite the lost CCTV floppy; they did not prove that Kamal personally made each withdrawal.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed the criminal appeals of Deependra, Ramvilas and Ramabai, set aside all their convictions and discharged their bail and surety bonds. It dismissed Kamal's criminal appeal, affirming life RI under IPC Section 364A with MPDVPK Section 13 and three-year RI under IPC Section 419 and IT Act Section 66C. The Bench observed that Kamal had served more than fifteen actual years, but did not know whether the State had already released him under its remission policy. It expressly stated that life imprisonment without remission had not been imposed. If he had already been released under the policy, no further action was required; otherwise, he was to serve the remaining sentence, subject to State consideration for premature release. The Court did not itself grant remission or determine a later event affecting custody.

Headnote :- Warrant execution, fair trial and successive bail — A prosecution witness's repeated nonappearance delayed the murder trial of an accused in custody. In his reply, the SSP stated that sending an arrest warrant to the person concerned on WhatsApp was not a procedure for executing it under Section 71 CrPC. He had issued notices to the SHO and constable concerned. The High Court directed the SHO to submit a written response to the trial court and the SSP to report on the action taken. It also directed the witness's disciplinary authority to examine his repeated nonappearance and take necessary action. The Court held that the resulting delay in the trial of an accused in custody violated Article 21. The witness had since been arrested and produced. As the fifth bail application rested solely on delay, and the earlier applications had been dismissed on merits, the Court declined to take a different view and dismissed the application. The directions required examination and reporting; the Court did not impose a final departmental penalty.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deepu Kaurav was arrested on 04.07.2019 in connection with Crime 225/2019 at Police Station Hazira, Gwalior, for offences under IPC Sections 302 and 34. A prosecution witness, Dr H.L. Manjhi, had repeatedly failed to attend despite summons and warrants, delaying the recording of evidence while Kaurav remained in jail. On 09.09.2022, the trial court had called for the SHO's explanation. In response to the High Court's order dated 02.11.2022, the SSP stated that the SHO and Constable Kamlesh Chaurasiya should have executed the arrest warrant under CrPC Section 71 instead of sending it on WhatsApp. He had issued them show-cause notices allowing three days to respond. The SHO had not filed the written response sought from him. The High Court rejected as clearly false the claim that he had responded orally to the trial court, since its subsequent order sheets recorded no such response. The witness was arrested and produced on the hearing date. The trial was listed for recording evidence on 29.11.2022. This fifth application under Section 439 rested solely on delay; the fourth application had been dismissed on merits on 24.02.2022.

2. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 71 was referred to in the SSP's reply concerning execution of the arrest warrant. CrPC Section 439 governed the fifth bail application. The Court relied on Article 21 of the Constitution in addressing the delay caused by a prosecution witness's repeated nonappearance while the accused remained in custody. IPC Sections 302 and 34 concerned the underlying prosecution; this order decided the bail application. The Court also referred to Section 29 of the Police Regulations in connection with the earlier direction requiring the SHO's explanation.

3. Issues : Did sending an arrest warrant to the person concerned on WhatsApp satisfy the trial court's directions? What directions were warranted by the SHO's failure to respond and the witness's repeated nonappearance? After the witness's arrest and production, did the delay still justify bail despite the earlier dismissals on merits?

4. Ratio / Findings : In his reply, the SSP accepted that the arrest warrant should have been executed under Section 71 and that sending it on WhatsApp did not follow the required procedure. The Court required a written response from the SHO and a further report from the SSP. It rejected as clearly false the claim that the SHO had made oral submissions to the trial court, because the subsequent order sheets recorded none. The Court held that the witness's repeated absence, which delayed the trial while the accused remained in jail, violated Article 21. It directed his disciplinary authority to examine the matter and take necessary action. Once the witness had been arrested and produced, the Court found no apprehension of further delay. Since delay was the sole ground of the present bail application, the Court declined to take a view different from its earlier dismissals on merits. It neither adjudicated a disciplinary charge nor determined guilt in the murder case. Its directions rested on the procedural record and its stated concern for a fair trial. The Court addressed the execution of the arrest warrant in this case.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the fifth application for regular bail. The SHO was directed to file his written response in the trial court by 18.11.2022. The trial court was to pass a specific order in the light of its earlier direction and the SSP's reply; a copy of that reply was to be sent to it for information and compliance. The SSP, Amit Sanghi, was directed to submit an immediate report to the High Court's Principal Registrar, latest by 16.11.2022, on the action or decision taken on the show-cause notices issued to the officers. The witness's disciplinary authority was directed to examine the matter and take necessary action for his failure to respond to the trial court's summons and warrants. No further direction for producing the witness was required after his arrest. A copy of the order was to be supplied to the Public Prosecutor for communication to the SSP, Gwalior, for information and compliance.

Headnote :- FIR registration and alternative criminal remedy — The petitioner sought directions under Article 226 requiring police action on his complaint against Kanha and a disciplinary inquiry under the SC/ST Act. The High Court distinguished the police duty described in Lalita Kumari from a complainant's entitlement to a writ of mandamus. Relying on Divine Retreat Centre and the binding MP Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria, it held that the ordinary remedy for police inaction was a complaint before the competent criminal court. The available remedies under CrPC Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 remained relevant, subject to the recognised grounds for exceptional writ intervention. The writ petition was dismissed with liberty to file a criminal complaint. The Court did not determine whether the alleged offence was made out.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deewan Singh alleged that the police had not registered an FIR on his complaint against Kanha. In Writ Petition 24288/2021, he sought action on the complaint and registration of an FIR. He also sought compliance with Sections 18A and 4 of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, and a disciplinary inquiry under those provisions. The Court considered whether a petition under Article 226 seeking registration of an FIR was maintainable.

2. Precedents — Considered : The State relied on Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, for the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence. The High Court adopted the distinction drawn in Shweta Bhadauria: that duty did not, by itself, entitle a complainant to mandamus without pursuing alternative remedies. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted on exceptional intervention under Article 226 where mala fide investigation involved a clear abuse of power and noncompliance with the statutory investigative procedure, and on the ordinary complaint remedy under Sections 190/200 when the police took no action. The quoted guidance also stated that, even in such exceptional cases, the High Court could insist on observance of the statutory process but could not dictate how the police should investigate. Its reproduced passages from Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre and AIIMS Employees' Union explained the Magistrate's powers over a complaint. Sakiri Vasu and Aleque Padamsee were cited by the State without a separate application to the facts. The MP Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria, WA 247/2016, was quoted on the alternative CrPC remedies and the limited exceptions drawn from Whirlpool. Whirlpool formed part of that quotation; the Court did not separately apply it as a holding on these facts.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 conferred writ jurisdiction. CrPC Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 provided remedies before the police authorities and the Magistrate, including the complaint procedure. Sections 18A and 4 of the SC/ST Act formed the basis of the relief sought, but the Court did not adjudicate their ingredients. Chapter XII and Chapter XV CrPC appeared in the quoted Supreme Court guidance. Section 203 was referred to in the reproduced explanation of the Magistrate's power to dismiss a complaint.

4. Issues : Could the petitioner obtain a writ directing the police to register an FIR without first using the available criminal complaint and magisterial procedures? Did the mandatory registration principle in Lalita Kumari, by itself, determine his entitlement to that remedy?

5. Ratio / Findings : The statutory duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence does not, by itself, entitle a complainant to mandamus under Article 226 when effective CrPC remedies are available. Divine Retreat Centre distinguished ordinary police inaction from rare cases of mala fide investigation in which a clear abuse of power and noncompliance with the statutory investigative procedure justified writ intervention. The Division Bench's stated exceptions to the alternative-remedy rule remained applicable. Even where intervention was warranted, the High Court could require observance of the statutory process but could not direct how the investigation should be conducted. The Court held that this petitioner had an efficacious alternative remedy of filing a criminal complaint before the competent court. It decided the question of forum and remedy, without determining whether Kanha had committed an offence or whether the officers had breached the SC/ST Act.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition under Article 226, expressly leaving the petitioner at liberty to file a criminal complaint before the court of competent jurisdiction. It did not direct registration of an FIR, a disciplinary inquiry or a police investigation.

Deewan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 24288/2021, 27/07/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (186) Prev Next

Headnote :- NDPS recovery proof — The appellant challenged a three-year sentence for possessing 4.5 kg of ganja. The police had recorded a seizure and sent samples for analysis, and the FSL report identified the substance as ganja. However, the allegedly seized contraband was never produced as a material object before the trial court. Its absence was not explained by destruction authorised by the court. The investigating officer admitted the nonproduction, and a panch witness did not support the prosecution. Applying Jitendra v. State of MP and Ashok alias Dangra Jaiswal v. State of MP, the High Court held that the oral accounts and panchnamas did not prove recovery from the appellant or connect the FSL sample with that alleged seizure. It set aside the conviction and acquitted him, leaving the separate objections to compliance with the statutory search safeguards undecided.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : According to the prosecution, an informer's tip led the police to Deewanpuri, who was carrying a bag near Char Sahar Naka on 31.10.2001. The police claimed to have seized 4.5 kg of ganja, drawn two 50-g samples, sealed and deposited them in the malkhana, and obtained an FSL report. The Special Judge convicted him under the NDPS Act and sentenced him to three years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹10,000 fine, with imprisonment in default of payment. In the appeal, he challenged the independent evidence of seizure, the police testimony, compliance with Sections 41, 42, 50 and 57, and the chemical analysis. Although nonproduction had not been expressly raised in the appeal memorandum, the High Court examined the trial record and found that the seized ganja and sealed documents had never been produced or identified in court. The investigating officer, PW8, admitted the nonproduction, for which there was no explanation based on lawful destruction. One panch witness did not support the prosecution, and the other was not examined.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jitendra and Another v. State of M.P., (2004) 10 SCC 562, was quoted and applied on the prosecution's heavy burden of proving recovery under the NDPS Act where the seized material was not produced, the panch witnesses did not support the case, and the police evidence did not establish that the samples came from drugs seized from the accused. In Jitendra, the investigating officer had also not been examined; in the present case, PW8 had testified. Ashok alias Dangra Jaiswal v. State of MP, (2011) 5 SCC 123, was quoted on the cumulative doubts arising from unexplained sample custody and nonproduction of the seized substance as a material exhibit. The particular custody delays recorded in that case were not attributed to Deewanpuri.

3. Statutes considered : The judgment described the conviction under NDPS Sections 8/20(1)(b)(B), as printed in it. Objections under Sections 41, 42, 50 and 57 were raised but remained undecided because recovery itself had not been proved. CrPC Section 374 governed the appeal. The FSL report and police seizure record were items of evidence; they did not replace proof of the identity of the seized substance and its connection with the sample tested.

4. Issues : Could the NDPS conviction stand when the alleged contraband had never been produced or identified as a material object at trial, and there was no explanation or proof of authorised destruction, despite the police testimony, panchnamas and a positive FSL report? If recovery was not proved, was it necessary to decide the separate objections concerning search safeguards and witness credibility?

5. Ratio / Findings : Production of the seized material as a trial exhibit would have provided the best evidence connecting the alleged recovery with the accused and the substance sampled. The material was never produced, and PW8 admitted that failure. Without an explanation for its absence, the prosecution had not proved beyond reasonable doubt that 4.5 kg of ganja had been seized from Deewanpuri or connected the positive FSL report with that alleged seizure. On this record, oral descriptions and panchnamas did not discharge the prosecution's burden. The Court therefore left the other objections to compliance with the NDPS Act undecided. It did not hold that police personnel were inherently unreliable.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal. It set aside the Special Judge's judgment and sentence dated 03.05.2003 and acquitted Deewanpuri of the stated NDPS charge. As he was on bail, his personal and surety bonds stood discharged.

Headnote :- FIR and inherent jurisdiction — After complaining to the Economic Offences Wing about alleged corruption by revenue and treasury officials, the applicant sought a direction under Section 482 CrPC for registration of an FIR. Relying on Divine Retreat Centre's explanation of the Magistrate's complaint procedure and the MP Division Bench's alternative-remedy rule in Shweta Bhadauria, the High Court declined the request and left him at liberty to file a complaint before the competent court. The quoted authorities also discussed exceptional writ intervention in cases of mala fide investigation. The present application was dismissed because the criminal complaint remedy was available. The Court identified the relief sought as registration of an FIR and decided the application on that basis.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deshraj Singh Tomar alleged that he had complained to the Economic Offences Wing about corruption by an SDO, Tahsildar, Naib Nazir, a sub-treasury clerk and a Patwari, but no action had followed. He filed MCRC 62422/2021 under Section 482 CrPC. The Court identified his request as registration of an FIR. No counsel appeared for the applicant at the hearing, and the Court heard State counsel.

2. Precedents — Considered : Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted on the ordinary complaint remedy under Sections 190/200 and rare intervention under Article 226 in cases of mala fide investigation involving a clear abuse of power and noncompliance with the statutory investigative procedure. The quoted guidance stated that, even then, the High Court could insist on observance of the statutory process but could not dictate how the police should investigate. Its reproduced passages from Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre and AIIMS Employees' Union explained the Magistrate's procedure on a complaint. The MP Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria, WA 247/2016, was quoted on the alternative remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 and the exceptions drawn from Whirlpool. Its distinction concerning Lalita Kumari appeared in the same quotation. Sakiri Vasu and Aleque Padamsee were cited by the State without a separate application to the facts. The Bench did not independently find that a Whirlpool exception applied.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant invoked the High Court's inherent jurisdiction under CrPC Section 482. Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 provided remedies before the police superiors and the Magistrate. Section 203 and Chapter XII/Chapter XV appeared in the quoted Supreme Court reasoning. The reference to Article 226 concerned exceptional writ relief discussed in that authority; the present proceeding was an application under Section 482. The Court did not determine the ingredients of any particular corruption offence.

4. Issues : Should the High Court exercise its power under Section 482 to direct registration of an FIR when the police or Economic Offences Wing have not acted on a corruption complaint and the applicant can file a criminal complaint before the competent court?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that the criminal complaint procedure provided an efficacious alternative remedy and declined to direct registration of an FIR in this application under Section 482. Although the quoted authority discussed exceptional intervention under Article 226 in cases of clear mala fide abuse, the Court made no finding that such an exception applied here. It did not determine the truth of the corruption allegations.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482, leaving the applicant at liberty to file a criminal complaint before the court of competent jurisdiction. It did not direct registration of an FIR or an investigation.

Deshraj Singh Tomar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 62422/2021, 06/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Kidnapping for ransom — Three villagers were abducted in a forest, but their accounts materially differed on the ransom demand, phone call and death threat. The alleged call was unsupported by call records, an identified recipient, family testimony or a contemporaneous report. Applying Sk. Ahmed v. State of Telangana, the Division Bench held that abduction had to be accompanied by the further statutory element of a threat of death or hurt, conduct creating a reasonable apprehension of either, or the causing of hurt or death in connection with a demand for ransom. That additional element was not proved beyond reasonable doubt. The Bench therefore set aside the conviction and life sentence under Section 364A and convicted the appellants under Section 365 IPC read with Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act. As the appellants had served 11 years 8 months, their sentence was reduced to the period already undergone, with immediate release unless they were wanted in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 18.05.2010, Ashok, Munesh and Malkhan/Malkhe were abducted at gunpoint while grazing cattle in a forest. Paramsukh reported the incident. The prosecution alleged a ₹15 lakh ransom call and a threat; the victims escaped the next day. The appellants, Deva and Fouja, were sentenced to life imprisonment under IPC Section 364A and MPDVPK Act Sections 11/13, with a ₹5,000 fine and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Co-accused Ghanshyam was acquitted, and no appeal was filed against his acquittal. In their appeal, Deva and Fouja did not contest the abduction but challenged their conviction for kidnapping for ransom. They had remained in custody continuously since November 2010, for about 11 years 8 months.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sk. Ahmed v. State of Telangana, (2021) 9 SCC 59, was quoted and applied on the cumulative requirements of Section 364A. Kidnapping, abduction or detention following abduction must be accompanied by at least one of the further statutory conditions concerning a threat, conduct creating a reasonable apprehension of death or hurt, or the causing of hurt or death to compel an act or payment of ransom. The Bench examined whether the witnesses proved those additional ingredients; it did not treat abduction alone as sufficient.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 364A was the basis of the original conviction and life sentence for kidnapping for ransom. Section 365 concerned abduction with intent to confine a person secretly and wrongfully and carried a maximum sentence of seven years. The Court substituted that conviction on the uncontested facts of abduction. Sections 11/13 of the MPDVPK Act continued to apply to the substituted conviction and the assessment of sentence. The Court stated that Section 11 carried a maximum sentence of ten years and Section 13 a minimum sentence of three years. It held that the appellants' custody exceeded the maximum terms under consideration. CrPC Section 374 governed the appeal.

4. Issues : Did proof of abduction establish the additional threat and ransom requirements of Section 364A despite the contradictory accounts of the victims? If those ingredients were not proved, what conviction and sentence should remain after more than 11 years in custody?

5. Ratio / Findings : Paramsukh did not describe any threat of death or hurt linked to a demand for ransom. Ashok spoke of a ₹15 lakh ransom call but did not identify its recipient or allege a threat. The prosecution neither examined a family member who had received the call nor collected the CDR, and the other abductees did not confirm that a call had been made. Munesh described a demand for money without a threat or beating. Malkhan described a demand of ₹5 lakh from each person and a death threat, which his companions did not confirm, although they had remained together. The Bench held that these material variations left the further ingredients of Section 364A unproved. As the abduction was not contested, it convicted the appellants under Section 365. It did not find that any ransom had actually been paid.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the appeal. It set aside the conviction under Section 364A and the life sentence, convicted the appellants under Section 365 IPC read with MPDVPK Act Sections 11/13, and sentenced them to the period already undergone. It directed their immediate release unless they were required in another offence. Subject to those modifications, the trial court's judgment and sentence were affirmed. A copy of the judgment was to be provided immediately to the appellants free of cost. The trial record was to be returned with a copy of the judgment for information and compliance.

Deva and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 201/2012, 07/07/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Quashing, alibi and alleged retaliation — The applicant relied on workplace biometric attendance and an earlier CM Helpline complaint to seek quashing of an FIR alleging assault and related IPC offences. The High Court held that the private attendance record required proof by evidence and could not be accepted on judicial notice as an established alibi. It could not conduct a mini-trial under Section 482. Relying on Vijay Pal and S.K. Sattar, it distinguished the accused's burden to prove an alibi by positive evidence from the prosecution's continuing burden to prove its case. Neeharika Infrastructure and Renu Kumari, including the quoted Bhajan Lal principles, explained the limits on quashing disputed allegations or proceedings said to arise from enmity. The application was dismissed without a final finding on the applicant's presence or the complainant's alleged mala fides.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : FIR Crime 26/2024, registered at Kailaras, Morena, alleged offences under IPC Sections 427, 323, 294, 506 and 34. Devendra Dhakad sought quashing under Section 482, claiming that workplace biometric attendance showed that he was elsewhere when the offence occurred. He also alleged that the complainant had lodged the FIR in retaliation for his earlier CM Helpline complaint. The State and the private respondent opposed the application. The Court considered both grounds within the limits of its jurisdiction under Section 482.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, was quoted and applied on the limits of interference with a cognizable investigation. The Court could examine whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclosed an offence, but could not prematurely decide their credibility. Further Supreme Court authorities were cited for the prohibition on a roving inquiry or mini-trial into FIR allegations under Section 482. Vijay Pal v. State (NCT Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, reproduced Binay Kumar Singh on alibi: the prosecution must first establish the accused's presence and participation; raising an alibi does not reduce that burden. The accused must then establish the alibi by strict positive proof excluding his presence, while retaining the benefit of reasonable doubt arising from the defence evidence. S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, likewise required positive proof of alibi and affirmed that its failure does not relieve the prosecution of proving guilt beyond reasonable doubt. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted extensively, including the R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal categories, on limited intervention under Section 482. Alleged informant mala fides alone could not justify quashing where an offence was disclosed.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 governed the application to quash the FIR. Evidence Act Section 11 appeared in the quoted alibi authority: a fact inconsistent with the fact in issue, such as the accused being elsewhere, is relevant. IPC Sections 427, 323, 294, 506 and 34 were the offences alleged in the FIR; the Court did not try those allegations on evidence.

4. Issues : Could disputed private biometric attendance and an allegation that the FIR was retaliatory establish an alibi or mala fides sufficient to quash an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence without a trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The workplace attendance record was a private document, not a public document of which the Court could take judicial notice. The applicant had to prove it by leading evidence before the trial court. Section 482 did not permit the Court to compare disputed accounts through a roving inquiry or mini-trial. The quoted alibi principles preserved the prosecution's independent burden of proof; the defence had to be tested on evidence. When the complaint disclosed a cognizable offence, the informant's alleged mala fides became secondary. Enmity could furnish a motive either to implicate a person falsely or to commit the offence, so enmity alone did not justify quashing. The Court made no final finding on guilt, the applicant's presence or the complainant's motive.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482, finding no ground for interference. The criminal proceedings continued, leaving the applicant to prove the attendance record by evidence before the trial court.

Devendra Dhakad v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 6976/2024, 14/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Dowry allegations, alibi and limitation — The husband and his relatives sought quashing of a case under Section 498-A and the Dowry Prohibition Act. A relative's training at Hyderabad in March 2020 did not answer allegations of earlier beatings, and the husband's bank duty on the date fixed for reconciliation did not refute the alleged harassment. The complaint alleged a demand for a car and ₹5 lakh and was made within three years of the May 2019 marriage. The absence of a separate date for each incident did not make those allegations vague at this stage. Applying Taramani Parakh, the Court also held that the allegations against another applicant prima facie warranted prosecution. It dismissed the Section 482 application without deciding the disputed defences or guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Devendra Kumar Sadh and two others sought quashing of Crime 117/2020, registered at Mahila Thana, Gwalior, and the charge sheet under IPC Sections 498-A, 294, 506 and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Section 4. The complainant alleged that, after her marriage to applicant 1 on 29.05.2019, the applicants demanded a car and ₹5 lakh, physically and mentally harassed her, and turned her out of the matrimonial home. Applicant 3 claimed to have been undergoing training at Hyderabad throughout March 2020. Applicant 1, a bank employee, relied on being on duty on 11.03.2020 and disputed receipt of the reconciliation notice. Applicant 2 advanced no separate argument.

2. Precedents — Considered : Taramani Parakh v. State of MP, (2015) 11 SCC 260, was expressly applied in holding that the allegations against applicant 2 prima facie warranted prosecution. The order also stated the burden of proving an alibi and the limits of face-value review under Section 482. It did not decide whether the alleged demands had occurred.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 governed the application for quashing. The Court relied on the three-year limitation under Section 468 in rejecting the objection that the allegations were vague because individual incidents were undated. IPC Sections 498-A, 294, 506 and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Section 4 were the charged provisions. Witness statements under Section 161 CrPC supported the State's account.

4. Issues : Did the asserted training and bank-duty alibis negate the pleaded cruelty at the threshold? Were the allegations of a demand for a car and money too vague without separate dates for each incident, although the complaint was made within the limitation period relied on by the Court?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FIR did not allege that the trainee had beaten the complainant in March 2020; it indicated that she had already been turned out before then. His absence during training therefore did not refute the alleged earlier beatings. The husband's bank duty on the reconciliation date did not answer the harassment allegations. The burden of proving an alibi lay heavily on the accused and required cogent and reliable evidence; disputed defences could not be tried on an application for quashing. The marriage date, specified demands and beating allegations disclosed a prima facie offence within the Court's stated Section 468 period. The absence of a date for each incident did not justify quashing. The allegations against applicant 2 prima facie warranted prosecution, leaving the merits of that applicant's role for trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application to quash the FIR and charge sheet. It did not convict the applicants or decide the dispute over receipt of the reconciliation notice.

Devendra Kumar Sadh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 47776/2020, 10/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Consent and Section 482 — The complainant and the applicant had been in a relationship for about eight years. She alleged that, after unsuccessful attempts to marry and her decision to end the relationship unless they married, he tied her to a bed and forced intercourse on 14 July 2018. The High Court held that consent to earlier relations did not establish consent to a later act. The specific allegation of force disclosed a prima facie case for prosecution. It considered the Supreme Court authorities on false promises of marriage in light of that separate allegation of force. The alleged omission in the statement under Section 164, compared with the statement under Section 161, was a matter for trial; the Court did not assign statutory priority to either account in this quashing application. The FIR and charge sheet were not quashed, and the trial court was asked to decide independently on the evidence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicant sought quashing of FIR Crime 125/2018, registered at Sirol, Gwalior, and the subsequent proceedings alleging rape and other IPC offences. The complainant stated that their eight-year live-in relationship and his family's acceptance of her led her to expect marriage. The proposed marriage did not take place, including after an application at Arya Samaj for which he did not supply his identity proof. She alleged that, after she decided they must either marry or end the relationship, he assaulted her, tied her hands and legs to a bed and forced intercourse on 14.07.2018. She also alleged confinement, pregnancy and a threat of an acid attack. The applicant relied on their earlier voluntary relations, alleged financial exploitation and his own earlier private complaint. In a separate MTP writ, the complainant was permitted to terminate the pregnancy, with a direction to preserve a foetal DNA sample. The charge sheet had been filed in 2018, but the stage of the trial was not known.

2. Precedents — Considered : Deepak Gulati v. State of Haryana and Pramod Suryabhan Pawar v. State of Maharashtra were discussed on the distinction between a genuine promise and one known to be false when made, and the resulting misconception of fact. The applicant also cited Sonu alias Subhash Kumar, Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar, Uday and two MP decisions. The Court's decisive consideration was the separate allegation of a nonconsensual act involving force. Its discussion of the promise-of-marriage authorities did not amount to a finding that all the earlier intercourse had occurred without consent.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 376 was the central prosecution allegation. Sections 294, 406/506 and 417 appeared in the order's differing descriptions of the offences. CrPC Section 482 governed quashing. Sections 161 and 164 concerned the two forms of witness statement; neither was given automatic evidentiary priority in this review. The MTP order formed part of the context and did not determine criminal guilt.

4. Issues : Did an eight-year consensual relationship negate a specific allegation of force in a later act? Could the High Court prefer an asserted omission in the Section 164 statement to the Section 161 account and quash the proceedings after the charge sheet had been filed?

5. Ratio / Findings : Consent was required for each act of intercourse. On the face of the FIR, the act on 14.07.2018 was alleged to have occurred after the complainant withdrew her willingness to continue the relationship and was tied to a bed; earlier intimacy did not defeat that prima facie case. The Court also considered the applicant's purchase of a Mangalsutra and his failure to provide the identity proof needed for the proposed marriage, despite creating an impression that he intended to marry her. It took account of the MTP permission granted on her allegation of rape in finding prima facie material for prosecution. Under Section 482, it could not compare the statements for reliability or decide the asserted omission; the applicant could raise it when the complainant was examined at trial. Filing a charge sheet did not by itself bar an application under Section 482, but these allegations justified continued prosecution. The applicant's earlier complaint was at most a disputed defence, and its outcome was not known.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application to quash the FIR and charge sheet. It expressly asked the trial court not to be influenced or prejudiced by the preliminary observations and to decide the case strictly on the evidence brought on record. It entered no conviction or final finding on consent.

Devendra Kumar Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 52360/2018, 16/03/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Quashing of matrimonial cruelty proceedings — A husband and four relatives challenged a dowry cruelty FIR and charge sheet, relying on overseas travel, monthly maintenance and delay in reporting. The High Court distinguished merely naming relatives from alleging specific conduct. Even if the brother-in-law and sister-in-law were abroad on the alleged eviction date, the FIR attributed later pressure for ₹10 lakh and a vehicle to periods when they were in India. There were also specific allegations against the husband and parents-in-law. The Court applied the Supreme Court's caution against omnibus accusations to the roles actually alleged and declined to conduct a mini-trial on the defence materials. Delay alone did not justify quashing when the prosecution was not barred by limitation. The petition was dismissed without a finding of guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Devendra Sharma, the complainant's husband, joined his parents, younger brother and sister in challenging Crime 107/2020 and the charge sheet dated 19.06.2020 under IPC Sections 498-A, 506, 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Section 4. The wife alleged demands for a car and ₹10 lakh after the marriage, inadequate food, assault and eviction on 12.08.2018. She alleged a renewed demand on 16.08.2018 and specific demands by the sister and brother during January–February 2019. Reconciliation attempts in 2020 were unsuccessful. The siblings relied on their travel to Dubai and Saudi Arabia, covering the eviction date, while the husband claimed to have transferred ₹10,000 every month.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kansraj, Monju Roy, Chandralekha, Arnesh Kumar, Preeti Gupta and Neelu Chopra were quoted on the need for caution before prosecuting relatives without allegations of specific roles. The Court examined the conduct attributed to each applicant. It relied on Taramani Parakh when considering the prima facie allegations against the parents-in-law. S. Khushboo, Amit Kapoor, Ajay Kumar Das, M.N. Ojha and CBI v. Arvind Khanna were quoted on cautious exercise of the quashing power and review of allegations at face value, with further authorities appearing in those quotations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui recognised that, in an appropriate case, a public document or a defence document whose veracity the complainant did not dispute could be considered. The Bench nevertheless found no basis to decide the contested defence here. M. Srikanth was quoted on quashing where the allegations did not disclose an offence.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 governed quashing. IPC Sections 498-A, 506 and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Section 4 were the charged provisions. The Court considered delay in light of the admitted absence of a statutory time bar; it did not undertake a fresh calculation of limitation. It considered the matrimonial setting when explaining why a wife might delay reporting in the hope that her married life would improve.

4. Issues : Were the relatives implicated only by vague, omnibus allegations, or did the FIR attribute specific acts to periods when they could have committed them? Could the disputed travel and maintenance records, or delay in reporting, justify quashing before trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The specific allegations of later demands against the two siblings were not answered by their absence on the eviction date. The husband and parents-in-law also faced allegations of particular conduct, rather than being named merely because of their relationship. The husband's assertion of maintenance payments did not establish that the cruelty allegations were false. Under Section 482, the Court could not resolve competing factual accounts or decide the merits of that defence. Counsel conceded that the prosecution was not barred by limitation, so delay alone did not justify quashing. The Court also observed that a wife might postpone legal action in the hope of improvement in her married life. It found a triable prima facie case, without holding that the allegations had been proved.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition to quash the FIR and charge sheet against all five applicants, leaving the prosecution to proceed to trial.

Devendra Sharma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 34507/2020, 24/09/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cruelty and Section 482 — The husband sought quashing of a charge sheet under Section 498-A and the Dowry Prohibition Act. He contrasted the FIR's demand for a Bullet motorcycle and ₹50,000 with a four-wheeler demand in a withdrawn divorce petition and the absence of accusations in an earlier mutual-consent divorce application. The High Court held that these differences did not displace the specific allegations of drunken assault, abuse and pressure to give up employment or leave the matrimonial home. It stated that cruelty which might lead a woman to suicide or endanger her bodily safety could prima facie attract Section 498-A even without a dowry demand. Spouses seeking divorce by consent could choose not to make accusations against each other. Applying the Supreme Court's limits on premature assessment of evidence, the Court dismissed the application without deciding disputed trial facts.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant married Devendra Singh on 19.04.2022 and worked as a computer operator at a hospital. She alleged that, after two or three weeks, he demanded a Bullet motorcycle and ₹50,000, assaulted her while intoxicated and abused her. He would not allow her to go to work and, when she insisted, told her to leave the matrimonial home and live with her parents. Crime 38/2024 at Rahatgarh, Sagar, resulted in a charge sheet under IPC Section 498-A and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4. The husband relied on a petition under Section 13B for divorce by mutual consent, filed in July 2022 and dismissed as premature. He also relied on a later petition under Section 13, withdrawn in November 2023, which referred to a demand for a four-wheeler. He contended that the differences showed that he had been falsely implicated.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and State of MP v. Kunwar Singh were quoted on the limited inquiry under Section 482 and the prohibition on deciding disputed credibility before trial. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui was quoted on the exception permitting consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or a defence document whose veracity the complainant did not dispute. The Bench found no indisputable defence that disposed of the allegations in this FIR.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 498-A and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4 were the prosecution provisions. CrPC Section 482 governed quashing. Hindu Marriage Act Sections 13B and 13 concerned the civil divorce pleadings relied on by the defence; their merits were not decided in this proceeding.

4. Issues : Did the omission or variation of a dowry demand in the divorce pleadings negate the cruelty alleged in the FIR and justify quashing the charge sheet? Was a dowry demand indispensable to the pleaded limb of Section 498-A?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FIR contained specific allegations of physical and mental cruelty by the husband. At this stage, those allegations were sufficient even though the vehicle demand was described differently in the divorce pleading. An application for divorce by mutual consent could reflect the spouses' decision not to accuse each other, so its silence did not establish that the FIR was false. The Court stated that cruelty which might lead a woman to suicide or endanger her bodily safety could prima facie constitute an offence under Section 498-A even without a dowry demand. This was a threshold assessment, not a finding that the applicant had committed the alleged acts. The Court could not conduct a mini-trial to resolve the disputed civil and criminal accounts.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. The FIR and charge-sheet proceedings remained for trial. The Court did not decide the merits of the divorce petition or the applicant's guilt.

Headnote :- Road deaths, causation and sentence — The applicant challenged concurrent convictions under IPC Sections 279, 338 and 304-A after a motorcycle collision killed two people and injured another. Although the victims' motorcycle carried three adults and a child, the spot map and the injured rider's evidence placed it on its proper side of the road and showed the applicant approaching from the wrong side. The High Court rejected the contention that overloading excused the collision. It held that the concurrent findings were supported by the record and were not perverse. Applying the Supreme Court's guidance on proportionate and deterrent sentences for road deaths, it declined to reduce the one-year term under Section 304-A to the roughly two months already served and affirmed that sentence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 03.10.2013, the applicant's motorcycle collided near Ganjbasoda with a motorcycle carrying Chandrashekhar, Priti, Mahendra and a minor child. Chandrashekhar and Priti died, while Mahendra suffered facial and jaw injuries requiring fixation. The CJM sentenced the applicant to six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹500 each under IPC Sections 279 and 338, and one year's rigorous imprisonment with a fine of ₹1,000 under Section 304-A. Each default term was ten days' rigorous imprisonment. The Sessions Court affirmed the convictions and sentences. In revision, the applicant claimed that the other motorcycle was overloaded and had slipped, denied any collision with his motorcycle, and alternatively sought reduction to the period served since September 2021. Two witnesses who reached the spot after the accident offered little support. The injured rider and another witness described the collision, although the latter expressed uncertainty about identifying the applicant in the dock after the lapse of time. The applicant testified in his own defence and admitted that he was at the scene.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Punjab v. Saurabh Bakshi, (2015) 5 SCC 182, was quoted at length on avoiding misplaced sympathy in sentencing for road deaths under Section 304-A. The Supreme Court reduced the sentence in that case to six months; the present applicant's one-year sentence was affirmed. State of MP v. Surendra Singh, (2015) 1 SCC 222, was applied on punishment proportionate to the gravity of the offence and its impact on victims and society. Its quoted reasoning also referred to State of M.P. v. Bablu. State of Karnataka v. Sharanappa Basanagouda Aregoudar, (2002) 3 SCC 738, was relied on for caution in revisional interference and against unduly light sentences for road deaths.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 279, 338 and 304-A were the offences of conviction. CrPC Sections 397 and 401 governed the revision, and Section 315 permitted the applicant to testify at trial. MV Act Sections 3/181 and 5/180 appeared in the charge-sheet and charge history; the operative convictions considered in revision were the three IPC counts. The Court expressly declined to read the bed-head tickets because they had not been exhibited.

4. Issues : Did the overloaded motorcycle and the applicant's denial make the concurrent findings of rash driving perverse in light of the spot map and witness evidence? Was the one-year term under Section 304-A disproportionate after about two months in custody?

5. Ratio / Findings : The spot map placed the collision on the victims' extreme left side of the road and supported the evidence that the applicant had approached from the wrong side. The presence of excess riders did not excuse his wrong-side collision with their motorcycle. The concurrent findings of negligent causation were supported by the evidence and were not perverse. Two deaths and a serious injury made reduction to a token period already served inappropriate. The Court relied on the spot map and witness testimony to establish the wrong-side collision; the medical evidence established the fatal and grievous injuries.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the revision. It affirmed the convictions and the terms of six months' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of ₹500 each under Sections 279/338, and one year's rigorous imprisonment with a fine of ₹1,000 under Section 304-A. Each default term remained ten days' rigorous imprisonment. The applicant, who was already in jail, was to serve the balance of the sentence. The Registry was directed to return the lower courts' record with a copy of the judgment for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Forest confiscation and interim custody of a vehicle — A tractor and trolley were confiscated after forest patrol officers reported illegal excavation and loading of sand. The applicant described his request as release on supurdginama pending the criminal trial, but the petition challenged completed confiscation proceedings upheld in appeal and revision. Applying Kallo Bai and Mustafa, the High Court held that confiscation and criminal prosecution were separate proceedings. It rejected the claim of lack of the owner's knowledge on its finding that his son was at the site with the vehicle. No perversity was shown in the three concurrent findings of fact, and the confiscation order itself had not been filed before the High Court. Relief under Section 482 was refused without deciding the pending criminal trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Forest officials on night patrol on 17.10.2020 reported illegal excavation of sand and its loading into tractor-trolley MH-27-BV-8996. They seized the vehicle and initiated Forest Crime/POR 949/30. The competent forest officer ordered confiscation on 28.11.2020. The administrative appeal was dismissed on 31.03.2021, and the Sessions revision was dismissed on 10.12.2022. Devidas sought relief under Section 482, describing the request as release on supurdginama during a pending criminal case, although the challenged orders concerned confiscation.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of MP v. Kallo Bai, (2017) 14 SCC 502, was quoted and applied on confiscation as an independent quasi-judicial proceeding. Under the statute considered there, the person concerned had to establish absence of knowledge or connivance on his part or, where applicable, on the part of his servant or agent, and that all reasonable and necessary precautions had been taken against use of the vehicle or other articles to commit a forest offence. Mustafa v. State of UP, (2021) 16 SCC 474, was quoted on confiscation independent of prosecution under the statute considered in that case. Its reproduced passages from Yogendra Kumar Jaiswal, Uday Singh and G.V. Sudhakar Rao explained the different purposes of confiscation and criminal prosecution.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 was the source of the inherent jurisdiction invoked. The challenged proceedings concerned forest confiscation under State law, separately from the criminal prosecution. The Kallo Bai quotation discussed Section 15 and Sections 15-A/15-B of the MP Van Upaj (Vyapar Viniyam) Adhiniyam. Mustafa concerned confiscation under another enactment.

4. Issues : Did the pending criminal trial prevent confiscation or require interim release of the vehicle? Could Section 482 be used to overturn concurrent administrative and revisional findings on the disputed claim that sand was transported without the owner's knowledge?

5. Ratio / Findings : Confiscation and prosecution were independent proceedings serving different purposes; the criminal case did not have to conclude before confiscation. Despite counsel's description of an interim-custody request, the petition challenged completed confiscation proceedings. The confiscation order had not been placed before the High Court, and no perversity was shown in the concurrent findings. On its finding that the applicant's son had been at the site with the tractor and trolley, the Court rejected the claim that the vehicle was used without the owner's knowledge. It did not convict the owner of a forest offence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. The confiscation remained in force, and no interim release was directed.

Devidas v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 6917/2024, 20/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cooperative society and criminal process — A bank employee challenged the Registrar's direction to initiate criminal action after earlier disputes and interim litigation under the MP Cooperative Societies Act. The High Court held that a proposed suspect was not entitled to a hearing merely because a criminal complaint was to be initiated. Civil recovery under Section 64 did not exclude the ordinary criminal law in the absence of an express or implied bar. No statutory requirement that a complainant hold a specified rank was shown. Supreme Court authorities on an informant's locus and H.N. Rishbud's requirement of a miscarriage of justice answered the alleged procedural defect. The writ petition was dismissed without deciding financial guilt or service liability.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In December 2019, the Deputy Registrar asked a cooperative bank to pursue service action, criminal registration, dispute proceedings for recovery under Section 64 and attachment under Section 68 against Devmani Tiwari. Earlier writ petitions and an appeal resulted in interim directions. By order dated 19.01.2021, the Registrar allowed the appeal on the question of competence but directed the Deputy Registrar to ask the society to take departmental and criminal action. Tiwari challenged the criminal-action direction under Article 226. He relied on the absence of a prior hearing, the asserted lack of authority of the proposed complainant and the available cooperative remedy for recovery of loss.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted at length on an accused's inability to choose or control the investigation. Its references to Narmada Bai, E. Sivakumar and Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights formed part of that limited discussion of a suspect's right to a hearing. SBI v. Rajesh Agarwal, (2023) 6 SCC 1, was cited for the absence of a natural-justice hearing before criminal reporting, as distinct from the bank fraud-classification issue in that case. Vinubhai Haribhai Malaviya was quoted on the limits of the no-hearing authorities: an accused has no right to participate in the investigation until process is issued, provided a fair investigation is strictly ensured. Those authorities addressed questions different from the one before the Supreme Court in that case. State of MP v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, and Dhanraj N. Asawani, Criminal Appeal 2093/2023, supported the absence of a cooperative-statute bar. Dhanraj's comparisons with MCOCA, TADA and organ-transplant legislation concerned exclusions under those statutes, rather than the cooperative proceeding in the present case. Naser Bin Abu Bakr Yafai and H.N. Rishbud explained that a defect in investigation does not invalidate a completed trial before a competent court unless that defect is shown to have caused a miscarriage of justice. That rule distinguishes an investigative defect from a breach of mandatory provisions governing the court's competence or procedure. Vishwa Mitter and A.R. Antulay supported the general right to set the criminal law in motion, subject to express statutory exceptions. Mukesh Singh's discussion of an informant who also investigates was quoted in that context: the two roles do not automatically disqualify the officer, while bias or its real likelihood depends on the facts.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was the basis of the writ petition. CrPC Sections 4 and 154 governed the general criminal procedure and reporting of an FIR; Sections 190 and 195–198 were relevant to statutory exceptions. Sections 64 and 68 of the MP Cooperative Societies Act concerned civil dispute or recovery proceedings and attachment. The petitioner showed neither an express exclusion of the IPC/CrPC process nor a restriction requiring the person reporting an FIR to hold a specified rank. Section 81(5B), discussed in the quoted Dhanraj decision, concerned another State's cooperative law; it is not attributed to the MP Act.

4. Issues : Was a proposed suspect entitled to a hearing before the Registrar directed criminal action? Did the recovery remedy under Section 64, or the asserted restriction on the rank of the reporting authority, prevent registration of an FIR or necessarily invalidate a later trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : There is no ordinary right to a hearing before a cognizable offence is reported. Cooperative recovery proceedings address civil loss, while criminal prosecution determines guilt; no exclusion of the criminal process was shown. In the absence of a statutory exception, any person may generally set the criminal law in motion. A defect in investigation does not automatically invalidate a later trial before a competent court: the defect must be shown to have caused a miscarriage of justice. The Court did not decide whether a prosecution would prove its allegations or whether a particular investigative defect had already occurred.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition challenging the Registrar's direction for criminal action. No bar on filing an FIR, mandatory prior hearing or injunction against investigation was granted.

Devmani Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 3348/2021, 30/11/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Retaliatory FIR, corruption witness and public-law relief — A hostel superintendent withdrew ₹50,000 in maintenance funds for an SPE Lokayukt trap against a superior who demanded a bribe. The marked notes were seized from the recipient and were later placed in the trial court's custody. Years later, despite acknowledging the trap, the department demanded repayment and an FIR under IPC Section 409 was lodged against the superintendent. The High Court held that the FIR's allegations, even if accepted in full, disclosed no misappropriation. In the connected writ petitions, it quashed the FIR and the repayment order, directed prompt recording of the complainant's evidence in the corruption case and ordered his protection against pressure. It imposed personal costs of ₹25,000 on the official in each petition and directed the Chief Secretary to examine his conduct. It did not decide the guilt of the accused in the trap case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dharam Das Bhalekar, a hostel superintendent, alleged that his superior Anand Mishra demanded ₹50,000 from funds sanctioned for hostel repairs and suggested preparing forged bills. Bhalekar complained to SPE Lokayukt, withdrew the money on 22.05.2013 and immediately handed it to investigators, who marked it for a trap. A subordinate, Prakashraj Palewar, received the notes and was caught. A PC Act charge-sheet against Mishra and Palewar was filed only in July 2021. The notes remained with the investigators and were later placed before the Special Judge. In 2023, the current Assistant Commissioner demanded that Bhalekar redeposit ₹50,000 or face departmental action. He then lodged Crime 174/2023 under IPC Section 409 despite acknowledging the trap and the custody of the money. The judgment expressly noted that the corruption trial was numbered 2/2021 in some source papers and 3/2021 in others. The connected writ petitions separately challenged the FIR and the recovery order.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reviewed the limits on quashing proceedings at a preliminary stage in Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, XYZ, S. Martin, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy, M. Srikanth, M.N. Ojha, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh. Bhajan Lal and further authorities were discussed in the quoted decisions. The Court applied the exception where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence. It compared the FIR's own account of the trap and custody of the notes, without deciding disputed questions of witness credibility.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 409 was the offence alleged in the FIR; the Court found no misappropriation constituting criminal breach of trust on the accepted account of the money's use and custody. PC Act Sections 7, 13(1)(d), 13(1)(a) read with 13(2) were charges against the superior and recipient in a separate pending case, not convictions in these proceedings. Articles 226 and 227 and CrPC Section 482 provided the writ, supervisory and inherent powers. The Court did not decide an application for return of the notes held as case property by the trial court.

4. Issues : Could a government employee who immediately handed over the money for a successful official trap be accused of criminal breach of trust when the FIR admitted that use of the money? Was a demand to repay it valid while the notes remained case property? Could the Court direct prompt recording of his evidence, protect him against pressure and impose personal accountability for official harassment?

5. Ratio / Findings : The prosecution's own account traced the notes from the bank withdrawal to the Lokayukt trap and then to court custody, without personal use by Bhalekar. Even the uncontroverted allegations in the FIR therefore disclosed no offence under Section 409 or any other provision against him. Requiring the complainant to make a second payment for money used in the official trap was arbitrary and, in the Court's assessment, a retaliatory attempt linked to his testimony. The prolonged investigation and the failure to record his evidence justified supervisory directions. These observations did not determine the bribery charges against Mishra/Palewar.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed both writ petitions. In the first, it quashed FIR Crime 174/2023 and directed respondent 4 to deposit personal costs of ₹25,000 in the Registry within two months. The petitioner was entitled to withdraw the costs, which were not reimbursable by the State. On default, the Registrar General was to initiate both recovery and contempt proceedings. The Special Judge was directed to fix the case immediately and record the petitioner's evidence without further delay; SPE Lokayukt was to protect him against pressure. In the other petition, the Court quashed the recovery order dated 02.05.2023 and directed the Assistant Commissioner to deposit another ₹25,000 in personal costs in the Registry within two months. Those costs were payable to the petitioner on his withdrawal application and were not reimbursable by the State. On default, the Registrar General was to initiate recovery proceedings and register a contempt case. The Chief Secretary was directed to examine the Assistant Commissioner's conduct and take necessary action for harassing the petitioner, decide the matter within two months and submit a report in the Registry within three months.

Headnote :- Injured witnesses and fatal field attack — A family dispute over a calf entering crops led to violence in a field. Four injured eyewitnesses, including a child, identified Babulal as the person who attacked Kalyan with an axe and Dharmendra as the person who attacked Shishupal with an axe. Both victims died and others were injured. The Division Bench accepted the witnesses' substantially consistent accounts despite minor discrepancies, their relationship to the parties and the sudden verbal scuffle. It found support in the medical evidence of fatal head and neck injuries and the recoveries. Applying State of UP v. Naresh, it gave due weight to the injured witnesses' testimony while recognising that major contradictions could justify its rejection. It affirmed the appellants' life sentences under Section 302 and seven-year sentences under Section 307, finding proof in the prosecution evidence rather than treating the alleged falsity of the defence as proof of guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 16.02.2009, a quarrel over a calf damaging crops led to violence among relatives irrigating adjoining land. The FIR named Babulal and his son Dharmendra. The prosecution alleged that Babulal inflicted fatal axe blows on Kalyan's neck and head, while Dharmendra inflicted fatal axe blows on Shishupal's head and shoulder. It also alleged attacks on Megh, Gyan, Kesri and Santo Bai. Two bloodstained axes were later recovered following the appellants' disclosures. The Sessions Court convicted both appellants under IPC Sections 302 and 307. It imposed life imprisonment with a fine of ₹1,000 for the former offence and seven years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of ₹2,500 for the latter, with default stipulations. The appellate record contained variations about the timing and the roles of two other persons added as accused during investigation. The appeal concerned the two convicted appellants.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of UP v. Naresh, (2011) 4 SCC 324, was quoted for the special weight attached to an injured witness's testimony: it should be relied on unless major contradictions or discrepancies provide grounds for its rejection. The quotation referred to Jarnail Singh, Balraje and Abdul Sayeed. Tika v. State of UP, AIR 1974 SC 155, supported the principle that the prosecution must prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt irrespective of weakness in the defence.

3. Statutes considered : The convictions under IPC Sections 302 and 307 were affirmed. Section 34 appeared in the FIR and charge-sheet history, while the judgment attributed individual blows to the appellants. CrPC Section 374 governed the appeal. Evidence Act Section 27 concerned the disclosures leading to recovery of the axes; the Court relied principally on eyewitness testimony and medical evidence.

4. Issues : Did the witnesses' relationship to the parties, the sudden scuffle, inconsistencies in their descriptions of weapons and some nonfatal injuries, or gaps in the seizure details create reasonable doubt about the appellants' acts and intention? Did the medical findings concerning the two deaths support the injured witnesses' central account?

5. Ratio / Findings : Megh, child witness Gyan, Kesri and Santo Bai gave substantially consistent accounts identifying the two appellants and the victims of the fatal attacks. Their own injuries supported their presence. The postmortem evidence disclosed fatal head and neck trauma, and the Court found the prosecution case proved. The doctors described several nonfatal injuries as caused by blunt objects, although witnesses had described axe attacks; the postmortem doctor also stated in cross-examination that Shishupal's injuries were caused by a hard and blunt object. The Court nevertheless found the injured witnesses' evidence supported by the medical reports and held the prosecution case proved beyond reasonable doubt. It rejected the suggestion that the appellants lacked murderous intent despite the sudden heated exchange, having regard to their acts. Falsity of the defence alone could not establish guilt; the Bench based its finding on the prosecution evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal. It upheld life imprisonment under Section 302 with a fine of ₹1,000 and seven years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 307 with a fine of ₹2,500, together with the trial court's default stipulations. The appellants, who were in jail, were directed to serve the remainder of their sentences.

Headnote :- Section 156(3) investigation, complaint and closure report — The Magistrate directed registration of an FIR and awaited the police report, but later dismissed the complaint solely because the FIR had been registered. The High Court held that the later order impermissibly reviewed the earlier direction. An order for registration of an FIR neither requires the police to file a charge-sheet nor ends a pending complaint. If the police file a closure report, the informant must have an opportunity to be heard and may pursue a protest petition and evidence in support of the complaint. The Magistrate retains the lawful options for dealing with the report and complaint. The dismissal was set aside, with a direction to proceed according to law on receipt of the final report.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dipti Kushwah filed a complaint alleging cheating and forgery. On 02.05.2016, the JMFC directed registration of an FIR under Section 156(3) CrPC and awaited a chargesheet or closure report. Crime 258/2016 was registered. On 24.10.2016, while the final report was still awaited, the Magistrate first adjourned the matter and signed the order-sheet, but later added an order dismissing the complaint because the FIR had been registered. The State submitted that investigation remained pending and that the police had formed a preliminary view that the evidence was insufficient.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bhagwant Singh v. Commissioner of Police, (1985) 2 SCC 537, was cited for notice and an opportunity of hearing to the informant before proceedings are dropped on an adverse police report. B. Chandrika v. Santhosh, (2014) 13 SCC 699, recognised that a protest petition may be dealt with even after acceptance of the final report, provided it satisfies the requirements of a complaint before cognizance is taken. Madhao v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 5 SCC 615, explained the Magistrate's options on receiving the report following a direction under Section 156(3). Gopal Vijay Verma, Kishore Kumar Gyanchandani, Devarapalli Lakshminarayana Reddy and Tula Ram were discussed in the quoted authorities.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 156(3), 173, 190, 200, 202 and 362 concerned the investigation, police report, cognizance, complaint procedure and bar on review. The complaint alleged offences under IPC Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471; the order also listed Section 31.

4. Issues : Could the Magistrate review the earlier order awaiting a police report? Did registration of the FIR alone end the pending complaint and the complainant's opportunity to proceed after a possible closure report?

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying Section 362, the Court held that the Magistrate could not review the earlier direction awaiting the police report. The provision bars alteration or review of a signed judgment or final order disposing of a case, except for clerical or arithmetical correction and subject to exceptions under the Code or other law. A direction under Section 156(3) requires registration of an FIR but does not require a charge-sheet. If a closure report is filed, the informant must be heard. The Magistrate may act on the police report, direct further investigation by the police or, where the complaint statements or a protest petition satisfying the requirements of a complaint justify it, take cognizance. Premature dismissal of the complaint removed those options. The High Court did not decide whether the police would file a closure report or a charge-sheet.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application and set aside the later portion of the JMFC's order dated 24.10.2016 dismissing the complaint. The Magistrate was directed to proceed according to law after receiving the police final report.

Headnote :- Land demarcation and SC/ST assault FIR — The applicant relied on boundary proceedings and alleged that the FIR was retaliatory. The demarcation papers did not establish a right to forcibly dispossess the complainant, and the removal proceedings under Section 250 MPLR remained pending. Even a landowner alleging encroachment must obtain possession in accordance with law. The FIR alleged lathi injuries, caste abuse and threats and disclosed cognizable offences requiring investigation. The application to quash the FIR under the Court's inherent powers was dismissed. The decision concerned the continuation of investigation; it did not determine guilt or finally decide every statutory ingredient.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Following a boundary dispute and demarcation initiated by the applicant, the complainant alleged that, on 04.01.2025, Divicharan Lodhi abused him by caste, struck his head and waist with a lathi and threatened him. Others intervened. The applicant relied on a demarcation panchnama and his pending application under Section 250 of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code, contending that Crime 7/2025 was a counterblast. The demarcation file contained no notice to the complainant or details of how the measurement was carried out. A page also lacked witness signatures.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, was relied on for the limits on quashing an investigation into cognizable offences. The Court also cited XYZ v. State of Gujarat, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata

Rama Reddy, M.N. Ojha and Renu Kumari. R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal appeared in the passage quoted from Neeharika.

3. Statutes considered : The application invoked BNSS Section 528. The FIR referred to BNS Sections 296 and 351(2), with "1015(2)" also stated in the order, and SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(v-a). M.P. Land Revenue Code Sections 129(4), 250 and 250(8) concerned the land proceedings and lawful recovery of possession.

4. Issues : Did the demarcation and pending land proceedings establish that the FIR was a malicious counterblast or permit the applicant to take possession by force? Could the Court end the ongoing investigation despite allegations of assault, caste insult and threats?

5. Ratio / Findings : The demarcation papers did not conclusively establish the applicant's claim, and no eviction order under Section 250 had been shown. Even if encroachment were assumed, the applicant had no right to remove the complainant by force. If an eviction order were passed but not complied with, Section 250(8) provided a remedy before the competent authority. The FIR alleged injury and caste abuse and disclosed cognizable offences. In those circumstances, allegations about the informant's motive did not justify deciding disputed facts prematurely or preventing the collection of evidence. The ruling concerned whether investigation should continue; it did not determine guilt or finally decide every ingredient to be proved at trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under BNSS Section 528, allowing the FIR investigation to continue.

Headnote :- Dying declaration in burn-death murder appeal — Archana's dying declaration identified her husband, Durgesh, and two relatives as the persons who poured kerosene on her and set her on fire. It also described demands for dowry. The official who recorded the declaration proved her thumb impression, and the doctor certified her fitness. The Court rejected the sedation objection in view of the medication timing. The fact that she had suffered ninety-five percent burns did not, by itself, establish that she could not speak. Finding the declaration voluntary and trustworthy, the Division Bench affirmed the conviction under IPC Section 302/34 and the sentence of life imprisonment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Archana married Durgesh in May 2004. She suffered burns at the matrimonial home in November 2005, was admitted to hospital on 24 November and died on 28 November with 95% burns. In her dying declaration, Ex.P/10, she stated that, while she was watching television at about 10 p.m., Durgesh, her aunt-in-law Hemlata and sister-in-law Shikha poured kerosene on her and set her on fire. She also described earlier demands for a computer and a vehicle and stated that her husband had treated her badly from the outset. The trial Court convicted Durgesh under Section 302/34 IPC and sentenced him to life imprisonment with a fine of Rs 1,000 and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. The two named co-accused were absconding.

2. Precedents — Considered : The judgment surveyed Supreme Court decisions on the reliability of dying declarations, the declarant's fitness, voluntariness, tutoring and the need for corroboration. Those principles required assessment of the evidence in the particular case; they did not establish that every person with burn injuries could speak. The judgment also referred to Modi's medical jurisprudence on the severity of burns.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302/34, 307 and 498-A were considered; the latter two were the initial FIR offences. The appeal was under CrPC Section 374(2). The judgment applied Evidence Act Section 32(1) principles governing dying declarations.

4. Issues : Was Ex.P/10 reliable despite the extensive burns, pain medication and absence of an eyewitness? Could the declaration sustain the conviction and sentence for murder?

5. Ratio / Findings : The recording official proved the contents of the declaration and Archana's thumb impression, and the doctor certified her fitness. The declaration was recorded at about 4:15 p.m. on 25.11.2005. No medication had been given after about 8:30 a.m., when the official was requested to record the declaration. The Court therefore rejected the sedation objection. It found the specific attribution of responsibility voluntary and trustworthy and held that a reliable dying declaration could be the sole basis of conviction. The extent of the burns did not, by itself, determine whether Archana was conscious and able to make the statement. The postmortem confirmed that the burns were fatal, and the Court found the defence account unreliable on the evidence. Ex.P/10 set out the persons she identified as responsible and how she said the burns had occurred.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the conviction, life imprisonment and fine, including three months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. The appellant was to be informed of the result through the Jail Superintendent.

Headnote :- FIR mandamus and alternative remedies — Alleging police inaction, the petitioner sought a direction under Article 226 compelling registration of an FIR. The Supreme Court authorities require ordinary grievances of this kind to be pursued through CrPC Section 154(3), an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3), or a complaint under Sections 190/200. The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench recognised exceptions to the rule requiring use of an alternative remedy. Intervention under the writ jurisdiction remained available in rare cases on the requisite facts. The petition was dismissed with liberty to approach the Magistrate under CrPC Section 200 or BNSS Section 223.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Faiza Khan sought a writ of mandamus directing the police to register an FIR against the named respondents. She alleged police inaction and relied on an earlier High Court direction. The State submitted that she could pursue a complaint before the Magistrate. The Court considered whether the petition seeking a direction to register an FIR was maintainable.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, directed complainants to the Magistrate's process when the police failed to register information disclosing a cognizable offence. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognised intervention in rare cases of mala fide exercise of investigative power and clear abuse, while limiting the Court to requiring observance of the statutory process rather than directing how the investigation should be conducted. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, explained recourse to the Superintendent of Police and the Magistrate. If prima facie satisfied, the Magistrate could direct registration or proper investigation and monitor it. Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., WA 247/2016, recognised the four Whirlpool exceptions to the ordinary rule requiring an alternative remedy to be used and distinguished Lalita Kumari. Other authorities appeared within the quoted passages rather than being independently applied to the present facts.

3. Statutes considered : The petition invoked Constitution Article 226. The judgment considered the remedies under CrPC Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 and granted liberty to approach the Magistrate under BNSS Section 223.

4. Issues : Should the High Court direct registration of an FIR on an ordinary allegation of police inaction when remedies before the superior police officer and the Magistrate are available?

5. Ratio / Findings : Information disclosing a cognizable offence gives rise to the police's statutory duty to register an FIR. An aggrieved informant ordinarily approaches the superior police officer under Section 154(3). If the grievance remains unredressed, the informant may invoke the Magistrate's Section 156(3) jurisdiction or pursue a complaint before the Magistrate. The exceptions recognised by the Madhya Pradesh Division Bench show that the alternative-remedy rule is not an absolute bar to writ jurisdiction. The Court found no ground in this petition to bypass the available Magistrate remedy. Its decision did not determine the merits of the allegations against the proposed accused.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition with liberty to approach the concerned Magistrate under CrPC Section 200 or BNSS Section 223.

Headnote :- VYAPAM admission conspiracy, cognizance and quashing — Eight connected applications sought quashing of the CBI proceedings concerning Chirayu Medical College's 2011 State-quota MBBS admissions. The representative applicant had not been allotted a seat through counselling. She claimed admission against a vacant seat on the last day, although she had already paid the fees and prepared the admission papers. These circumstances supported a prima facie suspicion of an admission arrangement with the college. The earlier quashing of proceedings against Dr Ajay Goenka rested on the absence of material linking him individually to the alleged acts and did not govern the candidates' cases. The Court dismissed all eight applications and left the trial court free to decide the merits.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The CBI investigated the alleged blocking of MPPMT-2011 MBBS seats at Chirayu Medical College. The records showed 47 State-quota admissions on the 30 September deadline, including 39 candidates who, according to the investigation, had either not participated in counselling or had not been allotted a college. The representative applicant scored 113/200, prepared the admission documents in August and paid Rs 3,85,000 by a cheque dated 26 August, although the college receipt was dated 25 August. Her admission was later shown as being against a vacancy on 30 September. She maintained that the seat had been advertised only after it fell vacant and relied on the earlier quashing of proceedings against a co-accused doctor. Seven connected applications were decided on identical facts.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Dr Ajay Goenka v. CBI, MCRC 39055/2021 (Madhya Pradesh High Court, 21.02.2024), the proceedings against the doctor were quashed because there was no material connecting him individually to the alleged conspiracy or the specific acts attributed to him. That decision did not hold that the entire admissions scheme was lawful. The Supreme Court's VYAPAM transfer order dated 09.07.2015 in WP(C) 372/2015 formed the background to the CBI investigation; it did not supply the rule for deciding the merits of these applications.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 482 and 173(8) concerned the quashing application and further investigation. The alleged offences were under IPC Section 120B read with Sections 201, 204, 408, 419, 420, 468, 471 and 477A; Section 13(2) read with Section 13(1)(d) of the Prevention of Corruption Act 1988; and Section 4/3-D(1)(2) of the M.P. Recognised Examinations Act 1937, as printed. The admission framework was the 2007 M.P. private professional institutions Act and Rules 6, 8, 9, 10, 11 and 12 of the 2011 admission Rules.

4. Issues : Did the claim of admission against a vacant seat and the earlier quashing of proceedings against a co-accused doctor justify quashing cognizance and prosecution, or did the advance fee payment and counselling records support grave suspicion?

5. Ratio / Findings : The 2011 rules required admission through merit and counselling; a college notice inviting applications for vacant seats did not by itself answer those requirements. Payment of fees and completion of admission papers before the claimed admission against a vacant seat on the last day, despite the absence of an allotment, supported an inference of an understanding with the college. A conspiracy may be inferred from the parties' conduct at this preliminary stage. Dr Goenka's case turned on the absence of material about his own role, whereas the records concerning these applicants were different. At the stage of taking cognizance or framing charges, grave suspicion is sufficient; the Court is not required to conduct a roving examination of the evidence. The Court expressly directed that its decision must not influence the trial court's findings on the merits.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application and the seven listed companion applications. The prosecution and the order taking cognizance remained in place, with the merits reserved for trial.

Headnote :- Section 125 maintenance, earning capacity and multiple remedies — The wife's qualifications and past employment as a teacher did not establish that she had sufficient current income to maintain herself, particularly while caring for a young child. The delay in lodging a complaint, other relatives' domestic circumstances and her pursuit of separate remedies concerning domestic violence, cruelty and stridhan did not justify denying maintenance. The husband did not substantiate his claim of low wages by examining his employer. The maintenance payments to his parents, agreed to in compromise proceedings in which he had not disclosed his income, did not establish his means. Applying Rajnesh v Neha, the Court awarded the wife Rs 5,000 per month and enhanced the minor daughter's maintenance to Rs 3,000 per month, both payable from the date of the application.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Farjana married Rashid in March 2011, and they had a daughter. She alleged demands for dowry, physical and mental harassment, deprivation of food and expulsion from the matrimonial home in July 2013. He maintained that she had left voluntarily, held an MA degree and earned from teaching. He claimed a monthly income of Rs 3,500–4,000 and stated that he had to maintain his parents. The Family Court rejected her claim under Section 125 on the ground that she had previously taught and could work. It disbelieved her allegations because of the delay in complaining, and drew an adverse inference from her other legal proceedings and her refusal to live in a separate room in the same family house. It awarded the daughter Rs 2,000 per month. The wife and daughter sought revision.

2. Precedents — Considered : Shailja v. Khobbanna, (2018) 12 SCC 199, distinguished the capacity to earn from actual earnings. Sunita Kachwaha v. Anil Kachwaha, (2014) 16 SCC 715, explained the requirement that the wife be unable to maintain herself and that some earnings do not by themselves defeat her claim. Rajnesh v. Neha, (2021) 2 SCC 324, laid down the factors for determining the amount of maintenance, adjustment of awards under different statutes and payment from the date of the application. Shamima Farooqui v. Shahid Khan, (2015) 5 SCC 705, held that an able-bodied husband could not avoid maintenance merely by pleading a meagre salary. The Court reproduced other authorities as part of the guidelines quoted from Rajnesh.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 125, 397 and 401; Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act Sections 12 and 20; IPC Sections 406 and 498-A. Section 23 of the Hindu Adoptions and Maintenance Act and the DV Act provisions concerning residence appeared in the guidelines quoted from Rajnesh; they were not the basis of direct claims in the present revision.

4. Issues : Did the wife's qualifications and past employment bar maintenance despite her childcare responsibilities and the absence of proof of sufficient current earnings? Did the delay in lodging a complaint and her pursuit of other legally permissible remedies justify treating her separate residence as unreasonable and denying maintenance? What amounts of maintenance, date of commencement and adjustment for alleged overlapping awards were warranted?

5. Ratio / Findings : The capacity to earn does not by itself establish that the wife has sufficient actual income to maintain herself. If the mother of a young child leaves employment because she finds it difficult to combine work with childcare, her resignation cannot be treated as mala fide merely on the allegation that she seeks maintenance. Other family members' domestic circumstances did not disprove her account of harassment. A woman may delay a criminal complaint in an effort to preserve her marriage, and such patience cannot be held against her. Pursuing separate statutory remedies does not disqualify a wife from maintenance. Maintenance awarded under different statutes may be adjusted, but the husband did not produce the alleged DV order. He did not substantiate his salary claim by examining his employer. The orders for maintenance of his parents were passed on compromise without disclosure of his income. The reasonable needs of the wife and child, the husband's means and the cost of daily necessities justified the revised amounts.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the revision, awarded the wife Rs 5,000 per month and enhanced the daughter's maintenance from Rs 2,000 to Rs 3,000 per month. Both amounts were payable from the date of the application, 21.03.2014.

Headnote :- Attempt to murder, unappealed acquittal and sentence — The prosecution case involved sword blows to the victims' heads and the throwing of a country-made bomb. The trial court acquitted the appellants under IPC Section 307 because it considered that the injuries were not dangerous to life. The High Court held that the decisive factors were the requisite intention or knowledge and an overt act, rather than the infliction of a life-threatening injury. The medical and forensic evidence did not support the trial court's reasoning. The State had not appealed against the acquittal, and no notice had been issued to the appellants. The Court considered it inappropriate to issue notice after 21 years and left the acquittal undisturbed. It nevertheless refused to reduce the sentences to the period already undergone and affirmed the convictions for the lesser offences and the sentences imposed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In February 2003, Alok Tiwari and Rakesh Rajak were assaulted following a dispute over a tractor carrying crushed stone. The prosecution alleged that Gabbar and Shiraj struck their heads with swords, Manoj inflicted lathi blows, Babloo threw a country-made bomb, and the appellants damaged motorcycles by pelting stones. The trial court acquitted the appellants under Section 307 but convicted them under IPC Sections 324, 323 and 427 and Explosive Substances Act Section 3, as applicable, and imposed concurrent terms of imprisonment and fines. On appeal, the appellants did not challenge their convictions. They sought reduction of their sentences to the period already undergone on the ground that 21 years had elapsed.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of M.P. v. Harjeet Singh, (2019) 20 SCC 524, Kanha, (2019) 3 SCC 605, and Saleem, (2005) 5 SCC 554, explain that Section 307 turns on the requisite intention or knowledge and an act done in furtherance of it; an injury capable of causing death is not essential. R. Prakash, Jage Ram, Mohan and Balram Bama Patil, referred to within the quoted authorities, elaborate the same standard.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 374; IPC Sections 307, 324, 324/34, 323 and 427. The charge-sheet also referred to IPC Sections 341, 294 and 325. Explosive Substances Act Section 3 was considered, while Arms Act Sections 25/27 appeared in the account of the charge-sheet.

4. Issues : Was the trial court's acquittal under Section 307 legally sound in light of the sword blows to the head and the use of an explosive device? Could the appellate court disturb that acquittal when the State had not appealed and no notice had been issued to the appellants? Did the passage of time justify reducing the sentences imposed?

5. Ratio / Findings : Section 307 requires the requisite intention or knowledge and an overt act. The severity and location of the injuries may assist in determining intention, but a life-threatening injury or an injury to a vital part is not essential. The injured witnesses' evidence and the medical findings, including head injuries, a fractured nasal bone and an MRI finding of a brain haematoma, were considered alongside the FSL evidence of explosive residues and bomb fragments. The trial court's reasons for acquittal were unsound. However, the State had not appealed, no notice had been issued to the appellants, and the Court considered it inappropriate to issue notice after 21 years. The acquittal therefore remained undisturbed. The prosecution proved the remaining offences beyond reasonable doubt. Given the gravity of the assault and the injuries, the passage of time did not justify reducing the sentences.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions and sentences for the remaining IPC and Explosive Substances Act offences. The appellants' bail bonds and surety bonds were cancelled. They were directed to surrender immediately before the trial court, no later than 15.02.2024. If they failed to surrender, the trial court was to issue warrants of arrest for them to undergo the remaining jail sentence.

Headnote :- Single-shot murder, private defence, wrong charge and conspiracy — Firing a pistol at the deceased's chest merely because he objected to abuse amounted to intentional murder, although only one shot was fired. The deceased was unarmed, posed no threat and had not engaged in a fight with the shooter. The conviction and life sentence under Section 302 were affirmed. The conviction under the uncharged Section 504 could not be sustained on a charge under Section 294, since the offences had distinct ingredients. The complainant's revision against the acquittal of three accused also failed: mere presence and unsupported allegations did not establish an agreement to kill.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 29.09.2001, Gyan Singh and others were sitting near a village temple discussing agricultural matters. Gabbar Singh arrived with Mantram and abused Gyan Singh. When Gyan Singh objected, Gabbar Singh fired a country-made pistol at his chest from close range. The bullet penetrated his heart and lung, causing his death. The trial court convicted Gabbar Singh under IPC Sections 302 and 504 and sentenced him to life imprisonment with a fine of Rs 1,000 and seven days' rigorous imprisonment, respectively, with both sentences to run concurrently. It acquitted Mantram, Sanjay and Bheekam of the conspiracy charge under Section 302/120-B. Gabbar Singh appealed, while the complainant sought revision of the acquittals.

2. Precedents — Considered : Arjun v. State of Maharashtra, (2012) 5 SCC 530, explained the need for reasonable apprehension of injury and proportionate exercise of private defence. Mohd. Rafique v. State of West Bengal, Joginder Singh v. State of Punjab, State of M.P. v. Shivshankar and Bhagwan Munjaji Pawade addressed the principles governing murder, a single gunshot and the exception for a sudden fight. Chanakya Dhibar v. State of W.B., (2004) 12 SCC 398, guided the cautious review of acquittal.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 299, 300 (including Exception 4), 302, 294, 504, 120-B and 99; Evidence Act Section 27, concerning recovery; CrPC Section 161, concerning police statements.

4. Issues : Did the single gunshot amount to murder despite the plea that there was no intention to kill, or was the act protected by private defence or Exception 4? Could a conviction under Section 504 stand when the charge was under Section 294? Did the evidence establish a conspiracy by the three acquitted accused and justify interference with their acquittals?

5. Ratio / Findings : The eyewitnesses established that the shooter fired at the deceased's chest from close range without provocation, and the medical evidence showed fatal injuries to the heart and lung. The shooter was the aggressor. The deceased's verbal objection to abuse presented no imminent threat, and there was no sudden fight involving an exchange of blows. A single gunshot may amount to murder, depending on the weapon used, the part of the body targeted and the circumstances. Section 294 concerns obscenity causing annoyance, whereas Section 504 concerns intentional insult provoking the person abused. Since the offences had distinct ingredients, conviction under the latter provision, for which no charge had been framed, was illegal in this case. Material omissions in the evidence and mere presence at the scene did not establish an agreement by the co-accused to commit murder. Their acquittals were therefore a tenable view of the evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the appeal and set aside only the conviction and sentence under Section 504. The conviction and sentence under Section 302, including life imprisonment and the fine, were affirmed. The complainant's revision was dismissed, and the bail bonds and surety bonds of the acquitted accused were discharged.

Headnote :- Successive bail and material suppression — The appellant, accused of repeated rape and SC/ST offences, had relied on a joint notarized marriage affidavit in his first bail appeal. The affidavit was material to the prosecutrix's alleged belief that she was lawfully married to him and to the earlier refusal of bail under IPC Section 375 fourthly. It was withheld in the second appeal, which was withdrawn after the Court noticed the omission. The same counsel again filed the present appeal without the affidavit. The third bail appeal was dismissed because no change in circumstances was shown beyond the period of custody. The Court cautioned counsel against withholding material facts.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Gagan Ojha was arrested on 15.12.2020 for alleged kidnapping, confinement, repeated rape and SC/ST offences. In rejecting his first bail appeal, the Court considered a joint notarized marriage affidavit said to have led the prosecutrix to believe that she was lawfully married to him. The affidavit was omitted from the second appeal, which was withdrawn after the Court raised the omission. The same counsel filed the third appeal without the affidavit and relied on the period of custody as a change in circumstances. State counsel reported that the complainant had been informed of the appeal under Section 15-A.

2. Precedents — Considered : The appellant's earlier CRA 249/2021 and the withdrawn CRA 1505/2021 formed the procedural background. Mukesh v. State of M.P., MCRC 44184/2020, was cited concerning the authority of a notary. Gajendra Singh Marmit v. State of M.P., MCRC 14999/2021, involved similar concerns about a marriage affidavit and professional conduct. That order was affirmed in SLP(Cri) 3901/2021 on 01.06.2021.

3. Statutes considered : SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act Sections 14-A(2), 15-A, 3(2)(v) and 3(2)(va); IPC Sections 366, 344, 376(2)(n) and 375 fourthly. The Special Marriage Act was referred to in the submission that a notary had no authority to solemnize a marriage.

4. Issues : Did the period of custody constitute a change in circumstances after the first appeal had been rejected on merits? Could bail be granted in a successive appeal in which the affidavit, material to the prosecutrix's alleged consent and belief in a lawful marriage, had again been withheld?

5. Ratio / Findings : At the bail stage, the Court treated the affidavit as material to its earlier refusal of bail under Section 375 fourthly, on the view that it had led the prosecutrix to believe that she was lawfully married to the appellant. The State submitted that a notarized affidavit did not itself create a valid marriage. Repeated withholding of the affidavit in successive appeals was serious. Counsel, as an officer of the Court, was expected to disclose material facts and the relevant history of the earlier bail appeals. No change in circumstances was established after the first rejection on merits; the period of custody alone did not justify bail on this record.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the third appeal for bail and advised counsel against suppressing material facts or misleading the Court.

Headnote :- Quashing, counter FIR and pressured compromise — The complainant alleged that the applicants and other co-accused waylaid the motorcycle on which she was travelling with her husband, that a co-accused outraged her modesty and that a quarrel followed with her husband. The applicants relied on an earlier cross-FIR and sought issuance of notices in the hope of reaching a settlement. A compromise must be voluntary; negotiations conducted by putting pressure on the complainant do not meet that requirement. The earlier FIR did not by itself justify quashing the later FIR. Taken at face value, the later allegations disclosed cognizable offences. The application under Section 482 was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 18.03.2020, the complainant reported that the applicants and other co-accused had stopped the motorcycle on which she was travelling with her husband. She alleged that a co-accused outraged her modesty and that a quarrel then followed. FIR 132/2020 alleged offences under IPC Sections 354, 341, 323 and 506/34. The applicants relied on FIR 131/2020, lodged by a co-accused's wife against the complainant's party, and alleged that the later FIR was retaliatory. They requested issuance of notices on the ground that a compromise might follow.

2. Precedents — Considered : S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, reproduced Bhajan Lal's categories concerning allegations taken at face value and proceedings instituted with a malicious motive. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, explained the limited scrutiny permissible at the quashing stage. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, cautioned against deciding disputed defence facts under Section 482. The further Supreme Court authorities cited addressed the same limits. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognised the limited exception permitting consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or a document whose authenticity is not disputed by the complainant.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 482 and 320; IPC Sections 354, 341, 323, 506 and 34.

4. Issues : Did the possibility of a future compromise justify issuing notices to facilitate negotiations with the complainant? Did the earlier cross-FIR establish that the later FIR was a malicious counterblast or otherwise justify quashing it?

5. Ratio / Findings : Compounding requires a voluntary compromise. The Court did not accept the request for notices merely to enable negotiations aimed at obtaining a compromise by putting pressure on the complainant. The sequence of cross-cases did not by itself justify quashing. Taken at face value, the allegations of waylaying, outraging modesty and a subsequent quarrel disclosed cognizable offences. The applicants' competing account required evidence and could not be accepted as a conclusive defence in proceedings under Section 482.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application for quashing the FIR. The investigation and proceedings could continue, with the allegations remaining subject to proof.

Gajendra Singh Sakhwar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 32958/2020, 01/10/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Parallel inquiry under Section 36 and FIR quashing — While an FIR was under investigation, a separate report by the SDO(P), who was not the investigating officer, concluded that the complaint was false. The High Court relied on its earlier decisions and the Supreme Court's ruling that neither Section 36 nor the State circulars authorised an independent inquiry running parallel to the regular investigation. The separate report therefore had no legal force. Since the FIR's allegations disclosed cognizable offences, the Court refused to quash it under Section 482.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Garunadwaj Ojha and others sought quashing of FIR 284/2022 registered at Panwar, Rewa. They relied on a report dated 30.01.2023 submitted by the SDO(P), Sirmour, to the Superintendent of Police. The report stated that the complaint was false. Counsel conceded that the SDO(P) was not the investigating officer in that FIR. The Court considered the report as a separate inquiry alongside the pending regular investigation.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mahendra Kumar Vaidya v. State of M.P., WP 23876/2022 (03.11.2022), held that a senior officer could not conduct a separate inquiry alongside the regular investigation. It followed Deepak @ Preetam Verma v. State of M.P., MCRC 12592/2018. The Supreme Court dismissed the challenge to the latter order on 18.01.2022 in Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P., SLP(Cri) 1345/2019, holding that neither Section 36 nor the circulars authorised an independent parallel inquiry. The High Court reproduced the relevant passages from Mahendra and applied that rule.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 36 and 482. Section 173(1) appeared in the order in Mahendra quoted by the Court.

4. Issues : Could a superior police officer conduct an independent inquiry under Section 36 at the same time as the designated officer investigated the FIR? Could a report from that separate inquiry, concluding that the complaint was false, require quashing when the FIR's allegations, taken at face value, disclosed cognizable offences?

5. Ratio / Findings : A superior police officer's general powers do not authorise a separate inquiry running parallel to the regular investigation. The SDO(P)'s report therefore had no legal sanctity. It could not govern the regular investigation or establish that the FIR was false. Taken at face value, the FIR's allegations disclosed cognizable offences. The disputed truth of those allegations could not be determined under Section 482 by relying on the unauthorised parallel-inquiry report.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The FIR was not quashed, and the regular investigation was left undisturbed.

Headnote :- Trial transfer, judicial questioning and bias — The accused in a murder trial sought transfer, alleging that the judge questioned defence witnesses extensively, continued their examination beyond court hours and decided applications on the day they were filed. Evidence Act Section 165 permits a judge to question witnesses to discover or obtain proper proof of relevant facts, subject to its statutory safeguards. Such participation does not by itself establish bias. The Court did not accept the alleged caste remark and held that rejection of applications was not a ground for transfer. With the trial at the stage of final arguments, the refusal to transfer was affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants were facing trial under Section 302/34 IPC in a sessions case of 2017. At the stage of final arguments, they sought transfer under CrPC Section 408. They alleged that the trial court decided applications on the day they were filed, questioned defence witnesses extensively, continued their examination beyond court hours and remarked that the applicants had killed a Brahman. The Sessions Judge rejected the transfer application. The applicants challenged that refusal under Section 482.

2. Precedents — Considered : Varsha Garg v. State of M.P. (2022), Zahira Habibullah Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158, Munnu Sharma v. State (NCT Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1, Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271, and Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110, supported the participatory role of a criminal court under Evidence Act Section 165 and CrPC Section 311. The court is expected to participate in the examination of evidence rather than remain a silent spectator.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 408, 482 and 311; Evidence Act Section 165; IPC Section 302/34, under which the applicants were being tried.

4. Issues : Did the judge's questioning of defence witnesses or prompt disposal of applications establish bias and justify transfer? Did the alleged remark and adverse orders provide a reasonable basis for apprehending an unfair trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : Section 165 permits judicial questioning to discover or obtain proper proof of relevant facts. The judgment must rest on relevant facts that are duly proved, and the statutory safeguards concerning privilege, improper questions and primary documentary evidence remain applicable. A criminal judge has a participatory role; questioning defence witnesses does not by itself establish disqualifying partiality. The Court did not accept the alleged caste remark. Same-day disposal of applications and examination beyond court hours were among the applicants' allegations. The Court held that rejection of applications was not a ground for transferring the case. Transfer was unwarranted when the trial had already reached final arguments.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482, leaving the Sessions Judge's refusal to transfer the trial undisturbed.

Geeta Bai and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 6626/2023, 16/02/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Defence evidence, official records and witness recall — An alleged alteration of the incident time in the death intimation made the electricity outage records potentially relevant to the murder trial. The trial judge should have summoned the engineer with the original records. The age of the case and an incomplete account attributing delay to defence adjournments did not justify refusing material evidence. The separate request to cancel the recorded evidence of five defence witnesses and recall them because the judge had questioned them was rejected in light of Evidence Act Section 165. The application was partly allowed, with a direction to conclude the trial promptly.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In the same murder trial of 2017, the applicants challenged the refusal to summon an electricity-board engineer with the original outage record and the refusal to cancel the earlier evidence of five defence witnesses and recall them. They alleged that the incident time in the death intimation had been overwritten. A utility certificate recorded load shedding between 7:00 and 7:45 p.m., whereas the prosecution placed the incident at 8:45 p.m. The trial court relied on the age of the case, defence adjournments, the production of a photocopy and the difference between the two periods. They also complained that the judge had questioned the defence witnesses into the evening.

2. Precedents — Considered : In the connected Geeta Bai v. State of M.P., MCRC 6626/2023 (16.02.2023), the Court had rejected the allegation of bias based on judicial questioning under Section 165. That order relied on Varsha Garg, Zahira Habibullah Sheikh, Munnu Sharma, Mohanlal Shamji Soni and Rajendra Prasad. The relevant authorities were reproduced here through the earlier order. The present application also required a decision on the materiality of the original outage record.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 482 and 311; Evidence Act Section 165.

4. Issues : Were the outage certificate and original record sufficiently relevant to require examination of the utility witness despite the age of the trial? Did judicial questioning or examination beyond court hours justify cancelling the earlier defence evidence and recalling all the defence witnesses?

5. Ratio / Findings : The trial court had to determine the disputed incident time before deciding whether a power outage coincided with it. The original official record was material to a just decision, and the engineer should have been summoned with it. Delay could not be attributed solely to the defence without examining the adjournments occasioned by the prosecution. Section 165 permits active judicial questioning, and the same grievance had already been rejected. The request to cancel the examination and cross-examination of all five defence witnesses and the documents exhibited through them, and to recall the witnesses, was misconceived.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the application. The order refusing to summon the utility engineer with the original record was set aside, while the order rejecting wholesale recall of the defence witnesses was affirmed. The trial court was directed to proceed in accordance with law and conclude the trial within two months from the date of the order.

Geeta Bai and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 9702/2023, 20/03/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Arms licence suspension and risk to public safety — The petitioner challenged suspension of her renewed arms licence on the ground that the alleged violent conduct was her husband's and earlier cases against him had ended in acquittal. The authorities relied on his continuing conduct, violent resistance to enforcement and possible access to the gun kept in their shared home. Acquittals based on hostile witnesses did not remove the risk disclosed by that material. The Court upheld the reasoned assessment under Section 17 because these circumstances supported the apprehended threat to public peace and safety.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Geeta Gurjar held a renewed arms licence, identified in the judgment as No. 235/09 mm. The Superintendent of Police recommended cancellation, citing several cases against her husband, Kamlesh Gurjar, his illegal sand excavation, violent resistance to police and forest authorities, and the danger of his gaining access to her gun. The District Magistrate suspended the licence and directed her to deposit the firearm immediately at Police Station Saraichhola, with coercive action permitted to secure its deposit if she failed to comply. The Commissioner dismissed her appeal. She claimed that she had no criminal record, neither she nor her husband had misused the firearm, and no show-cause notice had been issued. She also argued that her husband's activities could not be attributed to her. They lived in the same home.

2. Precedents — Considered : Abdul Saleem v. State of M.P., 2019 (3) MPLJ 332, set out the Section 17 criteria: reasoned subjective satisfaction concerning public peace and safety; assessment of the material in each case, including proof of use, misuse or a threat involving the weapon in pending or disposed cases; supervision by higher authorities; and an opportunity of hearing before revocation. The Court applied those criteria to the record and examined the risk disclosed by the husband's conduct and access to the firearm.

3. Statutes considered : Arms Act Section 17(1)–(10), particularly Section 17(3)(b), concerning public peace and safety, and Section 17(5), requiring recorded reasons. Arms Rules Rule 5(2) appeared in the cited precedent. The IPC cases were against the petitioner's husband.

4. Issues : Could the licence be suspended on the basis of a supported risk that the petitioner's husband, who lived with her and was alleged to have engaged in violent conduct, could gain access to her firearm, despite her claimed clean record and his acquittals based on hostile witnesses? Did the administrative orders give adequate reasons for that assessment?

5. Ratio / Findings : Section 17 permits suspension on a reasoned assessment of a threat to public peace or safety. Although renewal might have overlooked earlier cases, the husband's continuing conduct after renewal and violent resistance to enforcement provided further material. His acquittals resulted from witnesses turning hostile; they did not establish that the allegations were false. As the couple lived together and the firearm was kept in the same house, the possibility of his gaining access to it could not be excluded. These specific circumstances supported the authorities' assessment of the risk. The Court would not act as an appellate authority to reweigh that cogently reasoned assessment.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition in limine, upholding the suspension of the arms licence and the Commissioner's dismissal of the appeal.

Geeta Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 18720/2019, 13/09/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (214) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder — Section 300 thirdly — fatal single gunshot - The postmortem disclosed a gunshot wound in the temporal region, with surrounding tattooing, skull fracture and brain injury sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course. Applying Virsa Singh and the authorities on a single fatal injury, the Court distinguished the intention to inflict the particular injury from its objective sufficiency to cause death. The daughter's eyewitness account, supported by the immediate aftermath and medical evidence, sustained the conviction under Section 302. A single shot did not, by itself, justify reducing the offence to Section 304 (¶¶9–33, 71–85).

Child witness — competence and reliability — tutoring - The trial court questioned the six-year-old daughter to test her ability to give evidence. She identified her father as the shooter and pointed to the site of the head injury. After considering the allegation of tutoring and the minor omissions in her evidence, the Court accepted her statement that she was describing what she had seen. The evidence of the scene immediately after the shooting and the medical findings supported her account. Corroboration is a matter of prudence, rather than an absolute statutory requirement for accepting the evidence of a competent and reliable child witness (¶¶46–73, 82).

Alibi — Evidence Act Sections 11 and 103 — prosecution burden - The Court weighed the factory certificate and B-shift register against the child's direct account and the relatives' evidence that the accused was at the house and left after the shot. It rejected the alibi. The principle quoted from Binay Kumar Singh was that failure to establish an alibi does not, by itself, prove presence at the scene; the prosecution must prove presence by positive evidence. In applying the evidence here, the Court also placed on the appellant the burden of showing that another person in the house had committed the offence, and treated his unsuccessful attempt to establish an alibi as supporting the prosecution case (¶¶37–45, 78, 82–83).

Evidence — Section 8 conduct and related witnesses - The accused's departure from the scene and later absence from duty were relevant conduct supporting the direct and medical evidence. The Court also drew an adverse inference from his remaining away after his wife's murder, reasoning that he would ordinarily have stayed at home to care for their child. It assessed the deceased's brother and his companions for consistency and did not reject their evidence merely because of kinship (¶¶35–45, 74–83).

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ghanshyam appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the Third Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior's judgment dated 12.01.2006 in Sessions Trial No. 296/2003. He had been convicted under Section 302 IPC of murdering his wife, Vidyabai, and sentenced to life imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 5,000. His mother, Shantibai, had already been acquitted by a separate judgment dated 30.11.2004; this appeal concerned Ghanshyam alone. The prosecution alleged that he wanted Vidyabai to encash her fixed deposit and Indira Vikas Patra to fund a used minibus, which led to a dispute. Her brother, Chandrabhan (PW/10), and his companions came to the matrimonial home after a call about a quarrel. They saw the fighting and left when Ghanshyam refused to let Vidyabai accompany them. Almost immediately, they heard a shot. On returning, they found her bloodstained body and her crying daughter, Sonali @ Guddi (PW/9), and saw Ghanshyam escaping. The child, approximately six years old, identified her father as the shooter. The doctor (PW/15) recorded a firearm entry wound in the temporal region with surrounding tattooing, an exit wound, skull damage and other contusions. He attributed death to shock and haemorrhage from the head injury. Ghanshyam challenged the child's competence, alleged tutoring, disputed the credibility of the related witnesses and relied on the non-production of the financial documents. He claimed an alibi on the strength of factory shift records and three defence witnesses, and argued that no gun had been seized.

2. Precedents — Considered : Murder and injury: Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, supplied the four-part inquiry under Section 300 Thirdly: the presence and nature of the bodily injury, the intention to inflict the injury found, and its objective sufficiency to cause death in the ordinary course, with the burden on the prosecution throughout (¶13). Arun Nivalaji More was quoted on the distinction between Section 299, the clauses and exceptions of Section 300, and the consequences under Section 304 (¶14). Anda explained sufficiency to cause death in the ordinary course (¶24). Mahesh Balmiki, Pulicherla Nagaraju, Sangapagu Anjaiah, State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao explained that a single fatal injury must be assessed in light of the weapon, the part of the body struck, the force used and the surrounding circumstances. A single injury does not automatically reduce the offence to Section 304. Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh were discussed within the quoted extract (¶¶25, 27–30). The Court quoted Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak on the requirements of Exception 4 and then applied the collected homicide principles to the firearm wound and the testimony it accepted, affirming the murder conviction (¶26; ¶¶31–33, 82–84). Child testimony: Rameshwar, Panchhi, Bhagwan Singh, Ratansingh Dalsukhbhai Nayak and Golla Yelugu Govindu were considered with Section 118 on competence, susceptibility to tutoring, careful scrutiny and corroboration as a matter of prudence. The discussion also included the Privy Council decision in Mohamed Sugal Esa and other illustrative authorities (¶¶51–69). Sidhartha Vashist addressed lawful judicial questioning under Section 165. Sakshi concerned protective procedures and cross-examination in child sexual-abuse cases. Those passages formed part of the wider discussion of child testimony; the Court's application here concerned Sonali's competence and reliability (¶¶49–50, 64). Alibi: Binay Kumar Singh was quoted for the principle that a failed alibi does not prove presence. Lakhan Singh was quoted on raising the defence at the earliest opportunity. The Court rejected this alibi by reference to the child's account and the appellant's conduct (¶¶38–44). Related testimony: Jayabalan, Seeman and Jodhan required careful scrutiny, rather than rejection merely because a witness was related or was the sole witness. The injured-witness authorities discussed within the quotation from Jodhan concerned the witnesses in that authority; the present application concerned the related witnesses' credibility (¶¶75–77). The Court applied the child-witness and related-witness principles to the evidence in this appeal.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 299, 300, particularly clause Thirdly and the discussed Exception 4, 302 and the alternatives under Section 304 governed the classification of the homicide. Evidence Act Section 118 governed the child's competence to testify. Section 165 was reproduced in the discussion of judicial questioning. Sections 11 and 103 concerned the alibi and the burden of proving it; Section 8 Illustration (i) made subsequent flight relevant. Omissions from the child's statement under Section 161 CrPC were raised in cross-examination. The appellant advanced his alibi in his examination under Section 313 CrPC, and Section 374 CrPC provided for the appeal. The Court placed on the appellant the burden of establishing the alibi and, on the circumstances it accepted, of showing that another person in the house had committed the offence. It also quoted Binay Kumar Singh on the prosecution's obligation to prove presence by positive evidence despite the failure of an alibi.

4. Issues : Was Vidyabai's death homicidal, and did the offence amount to murder under Section 300, or did the single shot and the surrounding circumstances justify a lesser offence? Was the six-year-old eyewitness competent and reliable despite the alleged tutoring and omissions, and was her account corroborated? Could the related witnesses' account of the immediate aftermath be relied on? Did the factory B-shift certificate and register establish an alibi in the face of the prosecution evidence? What weight should be given to the accused's departure, absence from duty, alleged motive and the non-recovery of the firearm? The appeal concerned Ghanshyam's conviction; his mother's prior acquittal was outside its scope.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor found a firearm entry wound just above the left ear, with tattooing, an exit wound on the opposite side of the face, skull fracture and protruding brain matter. He stated that the injury was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course. The Court found the death homicidal. Applying the distinction between the intention to inflict the particular injury and its objective sufficiency to cause death, together with the authorities on a single fatal injury, it upheld the conviction for murder under Section 302. The objection that there was no intention to cause death did not answer the inquiry under clause Thirdly. The trial judge had tested Sonali's capacity to give evidence. She described her father shooting her mother and pointed to the temporal region. The High Court examined the allegation that maternal relatives and counsel had tutored her, her cross-examination and the minor omissions in her account. It found her evidence natural and reliable, supported by the immediate aftermath and the postmortem. A competent and reliable child's evidence may sustain a conviction after careful scrutiny. Corroboration is ordinarily sought as a matter of caution, rather than an absolute rule; here it was present. Brijesh, Rajkumar and Raju confirmed Chandrabhan's account of the quarrel before the shot and Ghanshyam's escape afterwards. Their accounts remained materially intact, and Chandrabhan's relationship as the deceased's brother did not justify rejecting his evidence. The Court accepted the dispute over the FDR and Indira Vikas Patra as the motive on the oral evidence. The defence had pointed out that the instruments were not produced. The Court's finding of guilt also rested on the direct and medical evidence. Under Section 8, departure from the scene and subsequent absence were relevant conduct. The Court reasoned that Ghanshyam's remaining away, rather than staying at home to care for the child after his wife's murder, pointed to his guilt. It considered the factory certificate (Ex-D/10), register (Ex-D/9) and the defence witnesses' claim that he was on B-shift duty, but accepted the child's account and the witnesses' evidence of his presence at the house and escape. It noted his absence from duty from the following day. While quoting Binay Kumar Singh that a failed alibi does not itself prove presence, the Court placed on Ghanshyam the burden of showing that someone else in the house committed the offence and treated his unsuccessful alibi as further support for the prosecution case. It rejected the objection based on non-recovery of the firearm because he had absconded and the investigation had proceeded in his absence, leaving no opportunity for its seizure. The findings in this appeal concerned Ghanshyam alone; Shantibai's acquittal remained undisturbed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and confirmed Ghanshyam's conviction under Section 302 IPC and the sentence of life imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 5,000 imposed on 12.01.2006. As he was in jail, the result was to be communicated through the Jail Superintendent. The trial court record was to be returned immediately with a copy of the judgment.

Headnote :- Murder by an unlawful assembly — Eleven armed assailants jointly attacked two men and injured family members who came to their rescue. The fatal head wounds caused by sharp-edged weapons were sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. Under Section 300 Thirdly, the relevant intention is the intention to inflict the injury actually caused. The assailants' concerted conduct and weapons established a common object under Section 149 to cause the fatal and other injuries, despite differences in the weapons each carried. The credible evidence of injured relatives did not require independent corroboration merely because they were related to the deceased. The convictions under Sections 148, 302/149 and 323/149 were affirmed. The appeal of the appellant who had died abated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecution alleged that, at an agricultural field in Datia on 11 September 2006, eleven armed men assaulted Sahab Singh and then attacked the relatives who came to rescue him. Sahab Singh and Ramswaroop died the following day, and other relatives were injured. The trial judgment of 2011 convicted the appellants under IPC Sections 148, 302/149 for both murders and 323/149 for injuries to three persons. The two appeals challenged identification, the attribution of fatal injuries to particular weapons, reliance on related witnesses and the finding of a common object.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, supplied the test under Section 300 Thirdly, distinguishing the intention to inflict the particular injury from its sufficiency to cause death. Anda, Mahesh Balmiki, Pulicherla Nagaraju, Sangapagu Anjaiah, State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao addressed the nature of the injury, the weapon used and the distinction between murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak explained Exception 4. Dani Singh and Mahadev Sharma addressed liability under Section 149, while Kuldip Yadav required a clear finding that the assembly's common object was unlawful. Guru Dutt Pathak, Asharam Tiwari and Gangadhar Behera addressed the evidence of injured or related witnesses and the effect of the absence of independent corroboration. The appellants cited Jugut Ram. The Court considered the reproduced authorities in deciding the homicide classification, common object and reliability of the witnesses.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 141, 148 and 149 concerned the unlawful assembly and liability for its common object. Sections 299, 300, particularly clause Thirdly and the discussed Exception 4, and 302 concerned the homicide. Sections 323 and 294 were also considered. CrPC Section 374(2) provided for the appeals, and Section 174 concerned the inquest proceedings.

4. Issues : Were the deaths homicidal, and did the offences amount to murder? Did the appellants share an unlawful common object to inflict the fatal and non-fatal injuries despite their different weapons and the disputes about individual acts? Could the injured relatives' evidence sustain the convictions without independent witnesses?

5. Ratio / Findings : The postmortem evidence established head injuries caused by sharp-edged weapons that were sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. The Court applied the Section 300 Thirdly framework to the injuries and the proved assault and upheld the murder convictions. Eleven armed persons attacked Sahab Singh together and then attacked those who came to his rescue. Their concerted conduct established the common object required by Section 149. Liability did not depend on proving which appellant had inflicted each fatal blow. The injured eyewitnesses were credible, and medical evidence supported their accounts. Their relationship to the deceased and the absence of independent witnesses did not discredit that evidence. The defence evidence did not raise a reasonable doubt about the prosecution case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed the convictions and sentences: two years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 148; rigorous life imprisonment with a fine of Rs. 2,000 under Section 302/149 for the murders; and six months' rigorous imprisonment under Section 323/149 on each of the three counts. All sentences were to run concurrently. The affirmed trial direction required all appellants to pay Rs 10,000 as compensation to the legal representatives of each deceased. Prakash's appeal stood abated because he had died. The appellants already in jail were to serve the remainder of their sentences. The bail and surety bonds of those on bail were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender before the trial court to serve the remaining sentences. Copies of the judgment were to be sent to the jail authorities and, with the record, to the trial court for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Arms Act possession and recovery from an open place — A country-made pistol and live cartridge were recovered from a drain near Ghasiram's house. Public access does not, by itself, invalidate a discovery at the accused's instance where the object is concealed and its location is known exclusively to him. Here, the pistol was dry, and there was no evidence that it had been buried or otherwise hidden. The drain appeared to be dry and accessible to everyone. The recovery did not establish the accused's conscious or exclusive possession on this evidence. His conviction under Section 25(1)(1b)(a) was set aside and he was acquitted.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Following a shooting complaint in 2004, the police seized a 12-bore country-made pistol and a live cartridge from a drain near Ghasiram's house on the basis of his memorandum. The trial court acquitted him of attempted murder and use of the firearm under the Arms Act, but convicted him under Section 25(1)(1b)(a). It sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. He appealed on the ground that the drain was accessible to everyone and the recovery did not establish his possession.

2. Precedents — Considered : Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1, discussed State of H.P. v. Jeet Singh, (1999) 4 SCC 370, and Bharat Fakira Dhiwar, (2002) 1 SCC 622. An object concealed at a public or openly accessible place may still be validly discovered where its hidden location is specially known to the accused. The reproduced passages also discussed conscious possession through Sanjay Dutt v. State and Durga Prasad Gupta. The High Court distinguished the recoveries of concealed objects in those authorities from the recovery in this case.

3. Statutes considered : Arms Act Sections 25(1)(1b)(a) and 27(1); Evidence Act Section 27; IPC Section 307/34, of which the accused had been acquitted; and CrPC Section 374. The discussion of TADA possession principles formed part of the reproduced Supreme Court passage; the present prosecution concerned the IPC and Arms Act charges.

4. Issues : Did recovery of a pistol from a drain near the accused's house prove his conscious or exclusive possession, or show that the weapon had been concealed at a place known specially to him?

5. Ratio / Findings : The material distinction was whether the weapon had been concealed and its location was specially known to the accused, rather than whether the recovery site was accessible to the public. The seizure record did not show that the pistol had been buried or otherwise hidden. Its dry condition indicated that the drain was dry: if water had concealed the pistol, it would have been wet when recovered. On the evidence, the weapon was openly accessible to everyone, and there was no proof that the accused alone knew its location or controlled it. The prosecution had not established the possession necessary for conviction beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal, set aside the conviction and sentence under Section 25(1)(1b)(a) and acquitted the accused. His bail and surety bonds were discharged. A copy of the judgment and the trial court record were to be returned for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Control of investigation — The accused sought directions for a fair and impartial investigation into an assault FIR which they alleged was a counterblast. They relied on an Additional Commissioner's letter directing an enquiry into an allegedly false medical certificate. The Additional Commissioner had no authority under the CrPC to direct the FIR investigation and was not a senior police officer; his direction to the Superintendent of Police was without jurisdiction and a nullity. The Court held that the accused could not choose the investigating agency or dictate the manner of investigation. It also stated that an accused had no right to seek a free, fair and impartial investigation, and refused to supervise the investigation. The Section 482 application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants were accused in Crime No. 209/2021 under IPC Sections 323, 504 and 325. They alleged that the FIR was a counterblast and that the complainant had obtained a false medical certificate. After their representations, the Additional Commissioner wrote to the Collector and the Superintendent of Police on 13.09.2021, directing an enquiry and an immediate report to his office. The applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to seek a direction for a fair and impartial investigation.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was applied for the principle that an accused cannot choose the investigating agency or require an investigation in a particular manner. The reproduced discussion referred to Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar, Divine Retreat Centre and Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights. That discussion also recognised constitutional directions where the High Court was convinced that investigative power had been exercised mala fide and the sparing exercise of the power to order a CBI investigation in exceptional circumstances. Prabal Dogra followed the same rule on the accused's lack of control over investigation. Relying on Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, AIR 2014 SC 666, the High Court refused to supervise the investigation in this case.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 and the statutory scheme governing investigation; IPC Sections 323, 325 and 504. Constitution Article 226 was discussed in the reproduced Supreme Court passage concerning constitutional directions where the High Court was convinced that investigative power had been exercised mala fide.

4. Issues : Could the Additional Commissioner direct the police to enquire into the complaint concerning an ongoing FIR investigation? Could the accused obtain directions requiring investigation in a particular manner or supervision by the Court?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Additional Commissioner had no power under the CrPC to interfere with the investigation and was not a senior police officer. His direction to the Superintendent of Police was therefore without jurisdiction and a nullity. The accused could neither select the investigating agency nor control the manner of investigation. The Court also expressly stated that accused persons had no right to seek a free, fair and impartial investigation. Relying on Manohar Lal Sharma, it declined to supervise the investigation and held that the directions sought by the applicants could not be granted.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482.

Headnote :- Section 125 CrPC — The Court upheld the rejection of the wife's maintenance claim because she had concealed material information about her outsourced employment. It relied on the electricity department's correspondence, her refusal to consent to disclosure and her categorical denial of employment. The minor daughter's independent entitlement required separate consideration. Monthly maintenance of Rs 1,000 was inadequate for her education, diet and ordinary needs and was enhanced to Rs 3,000. Following Rajnesh v. Neha, both the original award and the enhancement were made payable from the date of the application. The revision was disposed of with that modification.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The wife and minor daughter applied under Section 125 CrPC on 4 September 2019, alleging dowry harassment and inability to maintain themselves. The Family Court rejected the wife's claim and awarded the daughter Rs 1,000 per month from the date of its order. In revision, they challenged the rejection of the wife's claim and sought enhancement of the daughter's maintenance. The husband alleged that the wife was working in the electricity department and relied on correspondence obtained in response to his RTI requests. The department's reply dated 13.08.2021 recorded that she had refused consent to sharing her personal information, citing a threat to her life.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rajnesh v. Neha, (2021) 2 SCC 324, was applied to the minor's food, residence, medical and educational expenses, including reasonable coaching costs, and to the date from which maintenance was payable. The quoted guidelines ordinarily placed educational expenses on the father, while permitting proportionate sharing where the wife worked and earned sufficiently. Shamima Farooqui v. Shahid Khan appeared within the passage reproduced from Rajnesh as part of the discussion of maintenance obligations; the wife's claim here was decided on her non-disclosure of employment.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 125, 397 and 401. The Right to Information correspondence was considered as evidence concerning the wife's employment; the revision concerned maintenance under the CrPC.

4. Issues : Did the alleged concealment of employment income justify upholding the rejection of the wife's maintenance claim? Was the daughter's monthly maintenance adequate, and from what date should it be payable?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court inferred from the electricity department's reply that the wife was working as an outsourced employee. Her refusal to consent to disclosure, citing a threat to her life, together with her categorical denials of employment, led it to find material suppression and a lack of candour. It therefore upheld the rejection of her claim. The daughter, whom the Court treated as about nine years old at the time of decision, needed school expenses, books, diet and ordinary living expenses. Maintenance of Rs 1,000 per month was inadequate for those needs. It was enhanced to Rs 3,000, payable from the date of the application in accordance with Rajnesh. The Court did not determine the amount of the wife's actual salary.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court upheld the rejection of the wife's claim and enhanced the daughter's maintenance to Rs 3,000 per month. Both the original award and the enhancement were payable from 4 September 2019, the date of the application. The revision was disposed of accordingly.

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence and forensic chronology — In the case of a schoolgirl's death by strangulation, the alleged last-seen witnesses did not support the prosecution. The water vessel, or lota, allegedly bearing the accused's fingerprint was recorded as seized and sealed before the expert claimed to have lifted prints from it in an unsealed condition. Its connection to the victim was not proved. Semen evidence without DNA identification, doubtful knife recovery and an isolated A-group bloodstain on the accused's T-shirt did not establish that he was the killer or prove attempted rape. The circumstances did not form a complete chain excluding innocence. The convictions for murder, attempted rape and the Arms Act offence were set aside.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A girl was found strangled and partly undressed after going to answer the call of nature with a water vessel. The trial court convicted Girraj of murder, attempted rape and an Arms Act offence. The appeal examined seven alleged circumstances: her disappearance; discovery of her body and homicidal death; the alleged last sighting; identification of the lota and the fingerprint on it; semen evidence; attempted rape; and bloodstains. It also examined the alleged knife recovery. The accused was arrested about 21 days after the death.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, Pudhu Raja, Ram Singh v. Sonia and Inspector of Police v. John David required proof of every incriminating circumstance and a complete chain pointing only to guilt and excluding a reasonable possibility of innocence. Additional authorities appeared within the reproduced discussion from John David; the High Court applied the complete-chain standard to the circumstances in this case. Surya Baksh Singh permitted the Court to examine the record with the Public Prosecutor's assistance when neither the retained defence counsel nor the appointed amicus curiae appeared.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302 and 376 read with Section 511; Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(b); and CrPC Section 374.

4. Issues : Did each alleged circumstance connect the accused to the homicide or attempted sexual assault beyond reasonable doubt? Did the circumstances, considered together, form a complete chain excluding a reasonable possibility of innocence?

5. Ratio / Findings : Death by strangulation was proved, but the alleged last-seen witnesses did not support the prosecution. The prosecution also failed to identify the seized lota as the vessel the girl had taken with her. The records showed its seizure and sealing at 10:15 a.m. The expert said that he arrived at noon, found it unsealed and lifted the prints at about 12:05 p.m. That chronology undermined the claimed fingerprint recovery. No DNA examination linked the semen to the accused. The doctor's suggestion of an attempt to rape was unsupported by reasons or a corresponding opinion in the postmortem report, and the semen evidence did not itself establish the accused's involvement. The A-group blood on his T-shirt might have been the victim's, but his own blood group had not been established. That isolated circumstance did not prove guilt. The knife recovery was also doubtful: the seizure witness described being shown the knife at the police station, without saying that the accused had produced it, and the other seizure witness was not examined. Given the investigating officer's discrepancies, the Court would not accept his account without corroboration in this case. The prosecution had not proved the recovery beyond reasonable doubt. Suspicion could not supply the missing links in the chain.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal, set aside all convictions and sentences and acquitted the accused. He was to be released immediately unless required in another case, and supplied a copy of the judgment immediately, free of cost. The trial court record was to be returned immediately with a copy of the judgment for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Coordinated firearm attack — An armed associate shot the guard outside a jewellery shop, while Girraj entered and fired at the owner, who ducked and suffered superficial pellet injuries. The coordinated acts established the common intention underlying liability for the guard's murder, as well as Girraj's separate attempt to kill the owner. Consistent eyewitness accounts, the prompt FIR and medical evidence sustained the prosecution case despite minor discrepancies, the witnesses' relationship or employment, the absence of independent testimony and the failure to recover the guard's gun. The convictions under Sections 302/34, 307 and 450 were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 12 January 2007, Girraj and Ravi approached Sanjay Mangal's jewellery shop. Ravi fatally shot the guard, Brijendra, outside. Girraj entered and fired at Sanjay, who ducked; the shot struck a showcase and caused superficial injuries to him. A pistol, ammunition and glass fragments were seized from the scene, but a later memorandum by Girraj led to no recovery at his instance. The trial court imposed life imprisonment under Section 302/34 and five years' rigorous imprisonment each under Sections 307 and 450, with a fine of Rs. 1,000 on each count and default stipulations. The defence alleged that Brijendra had fired at Sanjay and that another guard, Chandan Singh, had shot Brijendra to protect Sanjay. It relied on Chandan's non-examination and the failure to seize Brijendra's gun, and challenged the related witnesses and the discrepancies in their accounts.

2. Precedents — Considered : Karulal v. State of M.P. was applied for the principle that truthful evidence from related witnesses may support a conviction. Mallikarjun v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, distinguished material contradictions from trivial omissions and discrepancies. The discussion of Bakhshish Singh, Sunil Kumar Sambhudaya Gupta and Raj Kumar Singh appeared within that reproduced passage and supported the same approach to credibility.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302/34, 307 and 450. Arms Act Sections 25 and 27 appeared in the registered crime. A memorandum was recorded under Evidence Act Section 27, but no recovery was made at the appellant's instance.

4. Issues : Was Girraj liable for the guard's death caused by his accomplice and for the attempted killing of the owner and trespass into the shop? Did the defects or omissions in the investigation undermine the direct evidence?

5. Ratio / Findings : The joint armed arrival and successive, coordinated shots established the common intention. The Court found that Ravi's shot at the guard cleared the way for Girraj to enter the shop and fire at the owner. The injured complainant's evidence was supported by the employee and the nephew, the prompt FIR, the articles seized at the scene, the medical proof of the guard's gunshot death and the complainant's superficial wounds. Their accounts remained firm on the material events despite minor discrepancies. The defence witness admitted that he had not seen who fired the shots, so he did not establish the alternative account that another guard had shot Brijendra. The Court noted that Chandan Singh and Chokhelal were the same person and that his statement had been recorded during investigation; he was not examined at trial. In the face of the credible direct evidence, the absence of independent witnesses and the failure to seize Brijendra's gun did not create a reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions and sentences. The appellant, who was in jail, was directed to serve the remainder of his jail sentence.

Girraj Ghuraiya v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 269/2009, 04/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cancellation of bail — After his release on bail in a POCSO-linked case, the respondent allegedly threatened the complainant to secure a compromise, while a co-accused fired warning shots. A police officer reported that enquiries into the respondent's earlier counter-complaints had found them false. The prior examination of some witnesses did not remove the risk of pressure on the remaining witness or pressure to obtain a compromise relevant to quashing or sentence. The specific misuse of liberty affecting a proper trial warranted cancellation under Section 439(2), as distinct from cancellation for perceived indiscipline. Bail was recalled and surrender ordered.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The respondent was granted bail on 21 July 2022 in proceedings involving IPC and POCSO charges arising from allegations that a minor had committed suicide after being pressured to marry him and threatened with disclosure of recorded conversations and photographs. A subsequent FIR alleged that he and another accused went to the complainant's house on 5 August, demanded a compromise and threatened to kill the complainant and his family if they refused; the co-accused fired two shots in the air. The respondent relied on earlier complaints alleging a threat of false implication. The Court called for the police registers, and an officer reported that enquiries had found those complaints false. Some prosecution witnesses had testified before bail was granted. Mahendra had initially been given up by the prosecution, but its later application under Section 311 was allowed; he remained unexamined.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bhuri Bai v. State of M.P. required caution in cancelling bail and a connection with the requirements of a proper trial. It was distinguished because the present application specifically alleged misuse of liberty. Gian Singh v. State of Punjab and Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab informed the Court's assessment of pressure to compromise, given its possible relevance to quashing proceedings even where the offences were not compoundable. Mandata Singh concerned misuse of liberty after release. Jayaben v. Tejas Kanubhai Zala distinguished cancellation for misuse or breach of conditions from cancellation because bail had originally been granted by ignoring material facts.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 439(2) and 311; IPC Sections 195-A, 305, 354-D, 294, 336, 506 and 34, as referred to in the underlying and subsequent allegations; POCSO Sections 11 and 12.

4. Issues : Could pressure to compromise after release warrant cancellation of bail when several witnesses had already testified and the offences were not compoundable? Was the record sufficiently specific to establish misuse of liberty?

5. Ratio / Findings : The earlier testimony did not end the risk of pressure: a witness remained to be examined, and a compromise could still be relevant to quashing proceedings or determining sentence.

The specific allegations of threats and gunshots in the new FIR, considered with the police officer's verification that the counter-complaints were false, established misuse of liberty and a risk to a proper trial. The Court also noted that no compact disc or pen drive containing the alleged viral video had been filed. The respondent admitted that a video had gone viral but denied using objectionable words against the complainant's family.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for cancellation of bail and recalled the bail granted on 21 July 2022. The respondent was directed to surrender before the Trial Court within one month.

Girraj Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 46863/2022, 18/11/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Medical care and trial management in custody — In a fifth bail appeal under the SC/ST Act, the accused pressed his requests for treatment and jail transfer without arguing the merits of bail. Existing Supreme Court orders required custody in Central Jail, Bhopal and follow-up at AIIMS, Bhopal. The High Court directed treatment and police escorts and prohibited transfer to another jail, even temporarily, until the trial concluded. It directed video facilities for cross-examination, confined personal transport to exceptional circumstances at the appellant's security expense, and required execution of witness process in the prolonged trial. It took account of the Supreme Court's caution against orders disturbing trial calendars. The appeal was dismissed with directions.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appellant faced charges of murder, rioting and offences under the SC/ST Act and had unsuccessfully sought bail several times. Supreme Court medical orders required him to be lodged in Central Jail, Bhopal for follow-up at AIIMS, Bhopal. Appearing in person, he sought adequate care and transfer to another jail rather than arguing for bail. The trial had been pending for more than four and a half years. The records disclosed disputes over transfers, his insistence on personally cross-examining witnesses and their attendance.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Supreme Court's orders in the appellant's SLP (Crl.) Nos. 1406/2021 and 6326/2024 governed his custody and treatment. High Court Bar Association, Allahabad v. State of U.P. (29 February 2024) cautioned constitutional courts against routine expedition directions that disturbed the trial judge's calendar. The Court took that caution into account, but noted that the Presiding Officer had also noticed the trial's prolonged pendency. The earlier Girraj Yadav appeal of 25 January 2021 was referred to for the dispute over his criminal history, rather than as a determination of guilt in the present trial.

3. Statutes considered : SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act Section 14A and Sections 3(2)(v), 3(2)(iv), 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s); IPC Sections 147, 148, 149, 294, 302, 307 and 436.

4. Issues : How should the existing Supreme Court directions on medical care and custody be implemented while preserving cross-examination and progressing the delayed trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Supreme Court's directions requiring Central Jail custody and AIIMS follow-up precluded transfer to another jail, even temporarily, until conclusion of the trial. The State had a duty to provide appropriate medical treatment in custody. The Jail Superintendent was to ensure treatment as advised by the doctors, and the Police Commissioner was to provide adequate escorts whenever the appellant needed to attend AIIMS, Bhopal. The Supreme Court's direction also required hospitalization if recommended by the AIIMS doctors. Proper video connectivity would enable the appellant to cross-examine witnesses himself. Personal transport to the Trial Court was permitted only in exceptional circumstances, with the appellant bearing the security expenses. The Superintendent of Police, Ashok Nagar, was directed personally to ensure execution of witness summons and warrants and the witnesses' attendance without further delay. The Court did not endorse the prosecution's allegations that the appellant created a nuisance in jail, but directed him to maintain discipline. Separately, it recorded misconduct towards the Trial Judge and applications that had delayed framing of charges. It observed that the accused appeared to have impeded the trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the bail appeal with directions to the jail authorities, Police Commissioner and district Superintendent of Police concerning medical treatment, escorts, video facilities, discipline, exceptional personal attendance at the appellant's security expense, and execution of witness process.

Headnote :- Homicide classification — Gopal and Amar Singh assaulted Jagdish with lathis and dragged him. He died from an injury to the front of his skull. Eyewitness evidence and oral dying declarations identified the assailants. The Court considered the incident sudden and unpremeditated, arising from the deceased's earlier nuisance. Taking that setting and the single fatal head injury into account, it held that the offence was not murder. The repeated blows and dragging nevertheless warranted conviction for culpable homicide with intention under Section 304 Part I. Gopal's conviction was altered from Section 302 and his sentence reduced to the approximately 12 years already served. Amar Singh's appeal had abated on his death.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 1 August 2009, Gopal and Amar Singh assaulted Jagdish with lathis near a village house and then dragged him to a field. His brother, Kaushal, witnessed the assault. Before his death, Jagdish named the assailants to family members; Vidhya and Bhavana testified to his oral dying declarations. The postmortem disclosed a fatal injury to the front of the skull and other abrasions and contusions. Both accused were convicted under Section 302/34 and sentenced to life imprisonment with a fine. Amar Singh later died and his appeal abated. Gopal sought conversion of the conviction and a sentence limited to the period already undergone; his counsel did not challenge the finding that the accused had assaulted Jagdish.

2. Precedents — Considered : Stalin v. State, through its discussion of Pulicherla Nagaraju, Singapagu Anjaiah and State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiya Lal, required intention to be assessed from the circumstances, including the weapon, the part of the body struck, the force used and the manner of the assault. A single blow did not by itself rule out murder. Nankaunoo v. State of U.P. distinguished intention from motive and from knowledge of likely consequences, and explained the separate requirements of an intended injury and its sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Surain Singh v. State of Punjab explained that Exception 4 required an unpremeditated sudden fight in the heat of passion, without undue advantage or cruel or unusual conduct, involving the person killed. These authorities informed the Court's assessment of the proved circumstances rather than a categorical single-blow rule.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 299, 300 including Exception 4, 302/34 and 304 Part I; CrPC Section 374.

4. Issues : Did the fatal assault amount to murder under Section 302/34 or culpable homicide under Section 304 Part I/II, and what sentence should follow?

5. Ratio / Findings : The eyewitness account, oral dying declarations and postmortem findings proved the assault and homicidal death. The Court considered the reason for the quarrel, its suddenness and the absence of premeditation, the single fatal blow to the front of the skull, the other injuries, and the repeated blows and dragging. On these facts, it held that the offence was not murder. At least five blows had nevertheless been inflicted and Jagdish had been dragged, warranting conviction under Section 304 Part I on the basis of intention. Gopal had spent approximately 12 years in actual custody, apart from a brief temporary release after which he surrendered. The period already undergone was considered sufficient.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the appeal, altered Gopal's conviction under Section 302/34 to Section 304 Part I and sentenced him to the period already undergone, with a fine of Rs 500 and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. He was directed to be released immediately unless required in another case. A copy of the judgment was to be supplied to him immediately, free of cost, and the trial record returned with a copy for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Prevention of Corruption Act — A presenting officer demanded Rs 1 lakh to secure the closure of a departmental inquiry and was caught in a trap with Rs 25,000. An office witness identified the sanctioning authority's signature and produced the relevant file. No defect showing lack of application of mind, prejudice or failure of justice under Section 19(3) was established. The officer's lack of power to close the inquiry did not defeat the demand made by inducing a belief that he could procure official favour. The proved demand and acceptance, recovery of the tainted money and Section 20 presumption sustained the convictions under Sections 7 and 13 and the concurrent sentences.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Gopal, a tourism department officer presenting its case in the inquiry against Praveen Dubey, allegedly demanded Rs 1 lakh for himself and the inquiry officer, T.R. Tank, to have the proceedings dropped. After verification of the complaint, a Lokayukt trap led to recovery of Rs 25,000 from Gopal. The trial court convicted him under Section 7 and Section 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2), while acquitting the other officer. The State did not challenge that acquittal. Gopal appealed on the grounds that the prosecution sanction was defective and that a presenting officer had no power to close the inquiry.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of M.P. v. Bhooraji addressed actual failure of justice arising from procedural irregularity. Mohd. Iqbal Ahmed, State of Maharashtra v. Mahesh G. Jain and State of Rajasthan v. Tarachand required proof that the sanctioning authority had considered the facts supporting prosecution; that could appear from the sanction itself or other evidence. Nanjappa distinguished the appellate restriction on interference without failure of justice from the Special Judge's power to act for want of a valid sanction. Chaturdas Bhagwandas Patel and Ram Sarup Gupta established that a public servant's actual ability to provide the promised official favour was unnecessary where gratification was obtained through that representation. The Rajasthan High Court's State of Rajasthan v. Mohd. Habib and the Punjab and Haryana High Court's Pargat Singh v. State of Punjab supported that principle, which concerned represented official conduct rather than acts wholly in a private capacity.

3. Statutes considered : Prevention of Corruption Act Sections 7, 12, 13(1)(d), 13(2), 19(1), 19(3), 19(4) and 20; CrPC Sections 374 and 465; IPC Section 120-B against the acquitted co-accused.

4. Issues : Was the sanction proved, and did any defect occasion a failure of justice warranting appellate interference? Did the presenting officer's lack of authority to end the inquiry negate the proved demand and acceptance?

5. Ratio / Findings : The office witness identified the sanctioning authority's signature and produced the original file. He was not questioned about its contents, and no lapse demonstrating lack of application of mind or actual prejudice was identified. Section 19(3) did not permit reversal on a merely asserted irregularity without failure of justice. As the officer presenting the department's case, Gopal could induce the complainant to believe that he could secure closure of the inquiry. His lack of formal power to do so was immaterial to the demand for that official favour. The unchallenged demand, recovery of the tainted cash and Section 20 presumption established demand and acceptance and proved the corruption offences beyond reasonable doubt. The Court found no reason to interfere with the sentences.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions and concurrent sentences: one year's rigorous imprisonment under Section 7, with a fine of Rs 1,000 and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default, and four years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2), with a fine of Rs 1,000 and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Gopal's bail bonds were cancelled. He was directed to surrender before the Trial Court by 30 August 2024 to serve the remaining sentence; on failure to surrender, the Trial Court could issue an arrest warrant. The judgment and trial record were to be sent to that court for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act, Section 138 — The cheque, bank memo and statutory notice correctly stated cheque number 628895; only the complaint mistakenly stated 628892. The error was a formal defect that could be corrected without prejudice to the accused, despite the absence of an express CrPC provision permitting amendment. The precedent concerning an incorrect cheque number in the statutory notice was distinguishable because that notice formed the foundation of the complaint. The orders allowing and affirming the correction were upheld, and the Section 482 application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A cheque for Rs 1.5 lakh was dishonoured for insufficient funds. The cheque, bank return memo and statutory notice stated number 628895, but the Section 138 complaint mistakenly stated 628892. The Magistrate allowed the complainant's application, filed under Order VI Rule 17 CPC, to correct the number. The Sessions Court dismissed the accused's revision. The accused then challenged those orders under Section 482 CrPC.

2. Precedents — Considered : S.R. Sukumar v. S. Sunaad Raghuram, (2015) 9 SCC 609, permitted a formal amendment to cure a simple defect in a criminal complaint where no prejudice would result, despite the absence of an enabling CrPC provision. Lekhraj Singh Kushwah v. Brahmanand Tiwari was distinguished because the statutory notice in that case mentioned the wrong cheque number. N. Harihara Krishnan v. J. Thomas, (2018) 13 SCC 663, explained the inapplicability to Section 138 proceedings of the general concept that cognizance is taken of the offence rather than the offender. The Court emphasised the statutory notice as the foundation for maintaining the cheque complaint.

3. Statutes considered : Negotiable Instruments Act Section 138 and its statutory demand notice; CrPC Section 482; Order VI Rule 17 CPC was the provision invoked in the correction application, with curability tested under criminal-procedure precedent.

4. Issues : Could an incorrect cheque number appearing only in the criminal complaint be corrected when the statutory notice correctly identified the cheque, without affecting the maintainability of the Section 138 prosecution?

5. Ratio / Findings : The cheque filed with the complaint, the bank return memo and the statutory notice consistently stated number 628895. The error appeared only in the complaint and was a simple defect curable by formal amendment. The accused had received notice of the correct cheque, and correction neither changed the transaction nor prejudiced his defence. A wrong cheque number in the statutory notice would stand differently, because it would undermine the foundation for maintaining the complaint. On the present facts, the courts below committed no jurisdictional error in allowing the correction.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application and upheld the orders allowing the correction.

Gorelal Malviya v. Vimlesh Shukla, M.Cr.C. no. 36824/2021, 10/08/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Injury appeals and acquittal review — The accused and their counsel admitted the injured man's fracture report at trial, and the accused signed both the order sheet and the medical exhibit. They could not withdraw that admission on appeal after the prosecution had forgone examination of the doctors on that basis. Four fractures and multiple wounds justified seven years' imprisonment under Section 326/34. The additional lesser-offence charges and an incorrect name confined to the charge-framing order caused no prejudice. Variations in the accounts of the intended farsi blow and the co-accused's role supported the trial court's possible view acquitting the accused of attempted murder and acquitting that co-accused entirely. All three appeals were dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In a field dispute in 2016, Govind and Munna were accused of attacking Purushottam with a farsi and luhangi. Bhanu, the injured man's brother, lodged the report. The medical records showed multiple wounds and fractures. The trial court convicted Govind and Munna of hurt offences, including Section 326/34, but sentenced them only under that provision, to seven years' rigorous imprisonment. It acquitted them under Sections 294 and 307/34 and acquitted Kadam of all charges. Govind and Munna appealed their convictions and sentences, while Purushottam challenged the acquittals.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mallappa v. State of Karnataka, (2024) 3 SCC 544, and its discussion of Selvaraj and Sanjeev governed review of an acquittal where the trial court had taken a plausible view. A different view of the evidence alone did not justify reversal; illegality or perversity was required. Sambhaji Hindurao Deshmukh reinforced the principle that an acquittal should stand where two views were reasonably possible. The other Supreme Court authorities reproduced in those discussions supported the same standard of appellate restraint.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 294, 307/34, 326/34, 325/34, 324/34 and 323/34; CrPC Section 428 on custody credit.

4. Issues : Could the accused withdraw their admission of the X-ray and fracture report, which they had endorsed in court? Did the additional lesser charges or the incorrect name in the order sheet cause prejudice? Was the seven-year sentence excessive? Were the acquittals under Sections 294 and 307/34, and Kadam's acquittal of all charges, perverse?

5. Ratio / Findings : The accused were present with counsel when the medical documents were admitted and signed both the trial order and the endorsement accepting the medical exhibit. Withdrawal of the admission on appeal would deprive the prosecution of the opportunity to prove those documents through the doctors. Four fractures and multiple wounds justified the seven-year sentence. The additional lesser charges were unnecessary because conviction for a lesser offence was possible under the attempt-to-murder charge, though the converse was not true. They caused no prejudice. The incorrect name appeared only in the charge-framing order; the actual charges named the accused correctly. For attempted murder, intention and knowledge were material, rather than the nature of the injury alone. The injured man and the reporter differed on whether the farsi was aimed at the head or neck and how it struck the hand. Those variations permitted the trial court's view acquitting the accused of attempted murder. Kadam's alleged weapon and role were materially inconsistent, and another witness could not identify him. Section 294 was not proved because the words allegedly used and the resulting annoyance were not established. None of the acquittals was perverse.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Govind's and Munna's appeals against conviction and the appeal against acquittal filed by Purushottam. Govind's and Munna's bail bonds were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender before the Trial Court on or before 17 June 2026 to serve the remaining sentence. The judgment and trial record were to be sent to that court for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Murder appeal — The FIR was lodged within 25 minutes of the group assault, dispatched to the Magistrate that day and received the following day. The police-station disturbance explained the circumstances of receipt. Neither that timing nor the absence of an FIR number from forms containing no field for it established ante-timing. The postmortem timing and blunt-force abrasion were consistent with the eyewitness accounts. Motive, the prompt report and medical corroboration sustained the two appellants' convictions under Section 302/34 and life sentences. The separately tried co-accused's appeal required a separate judgment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The purchase of land had caused hostility between Mohan Singh's family and Govind Das's group. On 18 January 2009, Mohan was attacked near the field. Govind Das allegedly carried a lathi and Gudda a baka; Balram carried a sword and Ramjilal a katar. Mohan's father reported the assault within 25 minutes. Mohan died after being referred to hospital. The trial court convicted Govind Das and Gudda under Section 302/34. Balram and Ramjilal, who had absconded, were tried separately years later. Govind Das's reported death could not be verified, and his appeal was therefore heard on the merits.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pala Singh v. State of Punjab, (1972) 2 SCC 640, and Mahmood v. State of U.P., (2007) 14 SCC 16, explained that delay in forwarding a promptly recorded FIR did not by itself discredit the prosecution. The circumstances of dispatch, the reliability of the prosecution case and prejudice had to be considered. Jafel Biswas v. State of W.B. likewise addressed the duty to forward the report and the effect of delay on the facts of the case. Those principles were applied to the same-day dispatch and the disturbance at the police station.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302/34 and 294; CrPC Sections 157, 159, 175 and 374; Arms Act Section 25-B.

4. Issues : Was the FIR ante-timed because its copy reached the Magistrate the following day and its number was absent from other documents? Did the onset of rigor mortis or the nature of the alleged lathi injury conflict with the eyewitness accounts? Did the investigation lapses or variations in testimony undermine guilt under Section 302/34? Could the evidence recorded in this trial be read for or against co-accused who had been tried separately?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FIR was lodged promptly and dispatched that day. The disturbance at the police station explained why receipt the following day did not establish an improper delay, and the relevant forms had no field for an FIR number. The Court found the interval between the incident and postmortem consistent with the medical estimate of time since death. That estimate had not been challenged, and the onset of rigor mortis depended on weather conditions. The neck abrasion was compatible with a hard, blunt object; the doctor's opinion on that point was also unchallenged. Although the first investigating officer had omitted steps and was suspended, the prompt initial account, motive, eyewitness evidence and injury pattern proved the coordinated assault. The evidence in this trial could not be read for or against the separately tried co-accused, whose appeal had to be decided by a separate judgment on its own record.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions under Section 302/34 and the life sentences, with a fine of Rs 500 and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Govind Das's bail bonds were cancelled and he was directed to surrender immediately before the Trial Court to serve the remaining sentence. Gudda, who was in jail, was to serve the remainder of his sentence and receive a copy of the judgment immediately, free of cost. The trial record was to be returned with a copy for information and compliance. The separately tried co-accused's appeal was to be decided separately.

Headnote :- POCSO and rape appeal — The school admission register, proved by the headmistress who had admitted the prosecutrix years before the incident, recorded her date of birth as 1 August 1998. The Court accepted that record despite uncertainty about the source of the entry and approximate family estimates. She was below 18 on 22 April 2014, so alleged consent was immaterial. The IPC and POCSO convictions were sustained. Section 71 IPC, however, precluded a separate ten-year sentence under Section 376(2)(i),(n) for the act also punished under POCSO. The ten-year minimum term of rigorous imprisonment under POCSO was maintained.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In April 2014, the prosecutrix left a tomato market with Govind Saini on a promise of marriage. She described two sexual assaults at his house before she returned to her parents. The Special Court convicted him of kidnapping, inducement, aggravated rape, criminal intimidation and aggravated penetrative sexual assault. It imposed concurrent sentences, including separate ten-year terms of rigorous imprisonment under the IPC and POCSO Act. He challenged the finding that she was a minor, relied on consent and sought a sentence limited to the period already undergone.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, applied the juvenile-justice age-determination hierarchy to a child victim: the first available document in the prescribed order governed. A matriculation or equivalent certificate took priority, followed in its absence by the first-school birth record and then a birth certificate from a corporation, municipal authority or panchayat. Medical opinion was available only if those documentary sources were absent. State of Chhattisgarh v. Lekhram recognised the evidentiary value of a school register considered with oral evidence. Murugan v. State of T.N. explained the value of records made before a dispute arose, while preserving scrutiny of their authenticity, source and need for corroboration. Mukarrab v. State of U.P. cautioned that radiological age estimation was a useful guide subject to error, rather than conclusive proof. The Court evaluated the register and testimony in that context and rejected the unsupported suggestion that the prosecutrix was an adult.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 71, 363, 366, 376(2)(i),(n) and 506 Part II; POCSO Act Sections 4 and 6; CrPC Section 374; Juvenile Justice age principles discussed through Jarnail Singh. The charged SC/ST Act provisions ended in acquittal at trial.

4. Issues : Was the prosecutrix below 18 despite the headmistress's inability to recall the source of the recorded birth date? Could alleged consent defeat the sexual-offence charges? Could separate concurrent ten-year punishments be imposed under both the IPC and POCSO Act, or the minimum term reduced to the period already served?

5. Ratio / Findings : The headmistress who admitted the prosecutrix proved the Class I register made in her own handwriting in 2006. Its entry of 1 August 1998 had not been shown to have been fabricated for the allegation made in 2014; the family's recollections of age were approximate. The prosecutrix was about 15 years and eight months old when the incident occurred, so consent was legally immaterial. The Court therefore found it unnecessary to determine whether she had consented. The prosecution proved the sexual offences and the other offences of conviction. Under Section 71 IPC, no separate sentence was required under Section 376(2)(i),(n) for the act also punished under POCSO. The applicable minimum under Section 6 was ten years' rigorous imprisonment. The Court had no discretion to reduce it to the more than five years already served.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and sustained the convictions and the minimum substantive term, while holding that no separate sentence was required under Section 376(2)(i),(n) IPC in view of Section 71. The ten-year term under Section 6 POCSO remained. The appellant, who was in jail, was directed to serve the remainder of his sentence.

Case Sr. no. (229) Prev Next

Headnote :- Dying declarations and murder — The fact that Bharti had 95–100% burns did not by itself establish that she was unable to speak. The doctor assessed her fitness and could record her dying declaration without waiting for a Magistrate. Her oral statements to her siblings, admission history, written medical declaration and police-recorded Dehati Nalishi consistently identified her husband as the person who poured kerosene and set her alight. The stove-accident history had not come from her, and the husband's limited arm burns did not establish his claim of an accidental fire and rescue. The Court held that deliberately burning her alive was cruel and did not warrant reduction to Section 304. The murder conviction and life sentence were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Bharti, who was six months pregnant, suffered extensive burns at home after a quarrel with her husband, Govind Singh, over an earlier complaint she had lodged. She survived for several days. She told her siblings, gave the history recorded at hospital admission, and made a written declaration to a doctor and a Dehati Nalishi to the police, identifying her husband as the person who had poured kerosene and ignited her. She died on 31 October 2009. The husband claimed that a stove accident had caused the fire and relied on his own 8–10% burns to the arms as evidence of an attempted rescue. The trial court convicted him under Section 302 and imposed life imprisonment.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ramesh v. State of Haryana and Purshottam Chopra addressed a declarant's capacity despite extensive burns; percentage alone was not decisive. Abdul Majid Abdul Rahman v. State of Gujarat, (1976) 4 SCC 351, and Laxman v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 6 SCC 710, supported reliance on a doctor-recorded declaration without a mandatory Magistrate, subject to fitness and reliability. Munnu Raja and Dharam Pal recognised that a police-recorded statement about the maker's cause of death could be admitted as a dying declaration. Jagbir Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2019) 8 SCC 779, explained that a trustworthy declaration could alone support conviction, with careful scrutiny of voluntariness, freedom from tutoring or imagination, consistency and compatibility with the proved facts. Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, informed the distinction between murder and culpable homicide under Sections 302/304 by reference to the circumstances of the assault, including undue advantage and cruel or unusual conduct.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302 and 304; Evidence Act Section 32(1); CrPC Section 374.

4. Issues : Did the extensive burns prevent a conscious declaration, and was recording by a Magistrate essential? Were the oral, medical and police accounts reliable despite the stove-accident explanation? Did the quarrel justify treating the fatal burning as culpable homicide short of murder?

5. Ratio / Findings : The extent of burns did not mechanically determine mental capacity. The doctor examined Bharti and certified her fitness; cross-examination did not establish sedation or an inability to make the declaration. A treating doctor need not await an Executive Magistrate when the patient's condition is deteriorating. Bharti's accounts were consistent. The doctor relied on for the stove-accident history admitted that he had not spoken to her, and no damaged stove was recovered. The kerosene container, injuries and surrounding circumstances corroborated the declarations. The husband's limited burns and account of rescue were unpersuasive; the Court inferred that he had been burnt while setting her on fire. A trustworthy dying declaration could itself support conviction. The Court held that deliberately setting Bharti alight was cruel and excluded the requested reduction to Section 304.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the Section 302 conviction, life imprisonment and fine of Rs 1,000, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. The appellant, who was in jail, was directed to serve the remaining sentence. He was to receive a copy of the judgment immediately, free of cost, and the trial record was to be returned with a copy for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Quashing, alibi and mala fides — The applicants sought quashing of a Sheopur FIR and the ensuing RCT proceedings for assault, intimidation and an illegal demand. They relied on a CCTV alibi and alleged hostility arising from a separate family dispute. The High Court held that the footage and competing account required assessment of evidence, while the FIR, taken at face value, alleged beating and an illegal demand. Applying the Supreme Court decisions on alibi and inherent powers, it held that alleged malice on the informant's part was secondary where those allegations disclosed an offence. Enmity could provide a motive either for false implication or for committing an offence. The application under Section 482 CrPC (Section 528 BNSS) was dismissed without deciding guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dharmendra Jadon and the other applicants sought quashing of Crime 363/2022, Police Station Vijaypur, Sheopur, and RCT 345/2024 under IPC Sections 323, 294, 506, 34 and 327. They alleged hostility on the part of complainant Shiv Shankar Jadoun's family in connection with a separate FIR against Dharmendra's son, Vivek, involving a woman identified as X. They also claimed that footage from an outdoor camera at their Sabalgarh home showed that they were elsewhere at the relevant time. The State opposed quashing. The account of the separate sexual-offence dispute was the applicants' submission, not a factual finding by the Court.

2. Precedents — Considered : Vijay Pal v. State (NCT of Delhi), S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar were quoted on the evidentiary burden of an alibi. Once the prosecution established the accused's presence, the alibi required positive evidence excluding that presence with absolute certainty; a mere preponderance of probabilities was insufficient. The prosecution nevertheless retained the burden of independently proving its case beyond reasonable doubt, and evidence raising a reasonable doubt about presence could benefit the accused. The Court listed numerous Supreme Court decisions on quashing, including XYZ v. State of Gujarat, S. Martin, Amit Kapoor and S. Khushboo, on examining allegations at face value without a roving factual inquiry. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar was quoted at length; that passage discussed the R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal categories and the secondary role of the informant's mala fides. These principles appeared in cited authorities and nested quotations. The present Court applied the limited quashing test to the FIR before it.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482, identified in the order alongside BNSS Section 528, supplied the inherent jurisdiction invoked. IPC Sections 323, 294, 506, 34 and 327 formed the challenged case. Evidence Act Section 11 appeared in the quoted Supreme Court explanation of alibi; it was not the basis of an independent ruling on CCTV admissibility.

4. Issues : Could the claimed CCTV alibi or alleged family animosity justify quashing the FIR and ensuing proceedings at the threshold? Did the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence?

5. Ratio / Findings : The plea of alibi required cogent evidence, rather than proof merely on a preponderance of probabilities. The High Court would not determine the disputed CCTV facts or conduct a mini trial under Section 482. The allegations, taken at face value, were that the applicants had beaten the complainant and raised an illegal demand. As those allegations disclosed an offence, the informant's alleged mala fides were secondary. Hostility could provide a motive for false implication or for committing an offence, so that disputed question of fact did not justify quashing. The prosecution still had to prove its case independently before the trial court.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The FIR and RCT proceedings were not quashed. The Court made no finding of guilt or final determination of credibility.

Headnote :- Separate trial and co-accused acquittal — An absconding student sought quashing of an FIR for impersonation and forgery after Prabhudayal, the alleged substitute examinee, was acquitted because his identity as the substitute had not been proved. The Court held that evidence recorded in a co-accused's separate trial, held in the student's absence, could not be used either for or against the student. It distinguished a Supreme Court decision concerning discharge from an acquittal based on trial evidence. The allegation that another person had answered the Political Science paper on the applicant's behalf still disclosed an offence. The application under Section 482 was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecution alleged that, on 23.06.2015, another person was answering Dharmendra Lodhi's Political Science examination paper at Government College, Karera, and that Prabhudayal had appeared on his behalf on two earlier dates. A charge sheet was filed while Lodhi was absconding, and he had not surrendered. The trial court acquitted Prabhudayal because his identity as the substitute examinee had not been proved. Relying on that acquittal, Lodhi sought quashing of Crime 429/2015, Karera.

2. Precedents — Considered : A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs was applied for the principle that evidence recorded in a co-accused's separate trial could not be used for or against the absent accused. CBI v. Akhilesh Singh was distinguished: the co-accused in that case had been discharged, whereas Prabhudayal had been acquitted after evidence was recorded. Karan Singh v. State of M.P. was quoted for the principle that each accused's separate case must be decided on the evidence recorded in that case. The other authorities appeared within the Karan Singh quotation and were not independently applied by the present Court.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 governed the application for quashing. The FIR alleged offences under IPC Sections 419, 420, 467, 468 and 471. The separate charge sheet against Prabhudayal also cited Sections 3 and 4 of the M.P. Manyata Prapt Pariksha Adhiniyam, 1937.

4. Issues : Did the alleged substitute examinee's acquittal in a separate trial automatically exonerate the absent applicant? Did the allegation of impersonation, taken at face value, justify continuing the applicant's prosecution?

5. Ratio / Findings : The co-accused was acquitted because the prosecution had failed to prove that he was the person who had answered the examination paper. That finding did not establish that no one had done so on Lodhi's behalf. The evidence recorded in that trial could not be used either for or against Lodhi, who had not participated in it. The Court distinguished discharge on the allegations from an acquittal based on evidence; Akhilesh Singh therefore did not govern this case. Lodhi did not claim that he himself had answered the paper. The allegation that another person had answered on his behalf prima facie disclosed a cognizable offence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 seeking quashing of FIR Crime 429/2015. The applicant's guilt remained to be determined at trial.

Dharmendra Lodhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 59472/2021, 10/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Habeas corpus, grounds of arrest and NDPS notice — The petitioner challenged his brother's arrest in a case involving 86.850 kg of ganja because a separate written statement of the grounds of arrest had not been supplied. On this record, the Division Bench held that the written notice under Section 50 NDPS Act, the signed seizure records and the information given to the brother made the reasons for arrest known, and dismissed the writ petition. It reaffirmed the Supreme Court safeguards requiring written grounds of arrest, criticised police failure to follow a February 2026 circular, and directed the DGP to issue a warning and submit a compliance report. The Bench found substantial compliance on these facts while also declaring written communication of arrest grounds mandatory and directing police compliance with that requirement.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dharmendra Lodhi filed a habeas corpus petition under Article 226 concerning his brother's arrest in Crime 111/2026, Basai, Datia, under NDPS Sections 8/20. The police seized 86.850 kg of ganja from a vehicle. On 05.06.2026, the trial court rejected a similar objection to the arrest, relying on the written Section 50 search notice and written information given to the petitioner brother, and finding substantial compliance with BNSS Section 47. The accused had also signed the seizure memoranda. The High Court examined the MP Police Headquarters circular dated 13.02.2026 on communicating written grounds of arrest and reproduced it in the order.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pankaj Bansal v. Union of India was quoted on meaningful written communication of arrest grounds under acknowledgement; its PMLA reasoning was distinct from the factual decision in this NDPS case. Mihir Rajesh Shah v. State of Maharashtra was quoted on the Article 22 and BNSS safeguards. The reproduced police circular, drawing on that decision, required written grounds in a language understood by the arrestee. Where written communication at or immediately after arrest was impracticable, the grounds were to be conveyed orally and then supplied in writing within a reasonable time, in any event at least two hours before production for remand; noncompliance would render arrest and subsequent remand illegal and entitle the person to release. The petitioner cited Anil Kumar Mishra v. State of M.P. (07.01.2026), in which another arrest had been declared illegal. Vihaan Kumar v. State of Haryana was named in the final direction to the DGP. Other authorities, including Suhas Chakma, appeared within the lengthy Supreme Court quotations as context and were not separately applied to this arrest.

3. Statutes considered : Constitution Articles 21, 22(1) and 226; BNSS Sections 47 and 48; NDPS Act Sections 8, 20 and 50. The quoted Supreme Court passages also addressed CrPC Sections 50, 50-A and 167 and their BNSS counterparts, and PMLA Sections 19 and 45. The State's submission referred to Article 23; the reasoning and the cited arrest safeguard concerned Article 22.

4. Issues : Was the arrest illegal because no separate written grounds had been supplied, despite the search notice and seizure documents? What administrative measures were appropriate to secure compliance?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench reaffirmed that written communication of the grounds of arrest was mandatory, so that the reasons were clear and their communication could be verified. On the facts before it, however, the Court held that the arrestee knew why he had been arrested: the written NDPS notice explained the proposed search for contraband, contraband was seized from the vehicle, he signed the seizure memoranda, and his brother received information. It treated this as substantial compliance and refused habeas corpus relief. The Bench also expressed serious concern that officers had not followed Pankaj Bansal or their own circular. It directed a warning that violation of the named Supreme Court rulings would be presumed to be a deliberate failure intended to enable an offender to challenge the legality of his arrest. The officer would be suspended and a departmental enquiry instituted for imposing a major penalty. The petition was dismissed on the stated finding that the written Section 50 notice amounted to substantial compliance in this case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition in limine. The DGP was directed to issue the warning within one month and submit a compliance report with guidelines to the Principal Registrar by 18.08.2026. The Court stated that failure to comply could lead to contempt proceedings against the DGP.

Headnote :- Domestic Violence Act complaint and earlier FIR — A husband and three relatives sought termination of a Section 12 DVA proceeding under Article 227, arguing that the earlier FIR had named only the husband and the later complaint added allegations against the relatives. The High Court held that an FIR need not contain every fact. The earlier FIR itself referred to the father-in-law's demand for return of gold. The Court declined to determine the truth of the differing allegations by conducting a mini trial. It treated ordinary Section 12 DVA proceedings as noncriminal and distinguished proceedings under Section 31. The petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The respondent married petitioner 1 in 2009. Her FIR dated 23.09.2021, under IPC Sections 498-A, 323 and 294, alleged dowry taunts, control over her earnings and an assault by her husband in May 2021. It named only the husband, but also referred to the father-in-law's demand for return of gold given at the marriage. Her application under Section 12 DVA, filed on 04.01.2022, alleged dowry harassment by the husband, parents-in-law and brother-in-law, and that the relatives had instigated the husband to demand more dowry. The petitioners argued that the allegations added against the relatives were an afterthought. They also referred to a proceeding under Section 125 CrPC in which maintenance had been refused to the wife, who was earning, and monthly maintenance of ₹27,000 had been granted to a child. That proceeding formed part of the background; its merits were not adjudicated in this petition.

2. Precedents — Considered : The petitioners relied on the coordinate-bench decision in Ankit Gehlot v. Anjali to contend that a challenge to DVA proceedings under Section 482 was not maintainable, and therefore invoked Article 227. Neeharika Infrastructure v. State of Maharashtra, XYZ v. State of Gujarat, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh and other Supreme Court decisions were cited on the limited inquiry at the quashing stage and the prohibition on deciding disputed reliability. The quoted passage from Mohd. Akram Siddiqui recognised that, in an appropriate case, a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant did not dispute could be considered. The factual holdings of those authorities were not treated as findings of fact in this DVA dispute.

3. Statutes considered : Constitution Article 227 was invoked as the source of supervisory jurisdiction. The Court discussed Sections 12 and 31 of the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act, distinguishing the noncriminal proceeding under Section 12 from proceedings under Section 31. CrPC Sections 482 and 125 and IPC Sections 498-A, 323 and 294 arose in the petitioners' legal arguments and the background proceedings.

4. Issues : Did the absence of allegations against the relatives in the earlier FIR establish that the later Section 12 DVA application was false and require its termination under the supervisory jurisdiction? Could the High Court compare the two accounts to determine credibility at this stage?

5. Ratio / Findings : An FIR need not contain every fact. This FIR also referred to the father-in-law seeking return of the gold. The petitioners' counsel could not explain how the earlier FIR could be used to discredit the later complaint without giving the respondent an opportunity to explain the omissions. Comparing the disputed accounts to determine their truth, omissions and reliability would require a roving inquiry or mini trial. The Court therefore found no ground to terminate the Section 12 proceeding. It did not decide the merits of the underlying domestic-abuse allegations.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition under Article 227. The DVA proceeding continued.

Headnote :- Sale-deed impersonation and conspiracy — Two witnesses to eight purported sales of Sitaram's land, measuring about 70 bigha, challenged their convictions for conspiracy to cheat and commit forgery. The evidence established that Dimna, who had since died, had posed as the owner. Dharmendra arranged the drafts, introduced him to the purchaser and signed in another Patwari's name; Ramjilal identified him as the owner. Expert comparison supported the direct witness and documentary evidence. The Court distinguished the rule concerning persons who had not made a false document because these appellants had knowingly facilitated the transactions. Their convictions and sentences of five and seven years' rigorous imprisonment were affirmed, and the request for leniency was rejected.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Eight deeds dated 09.08.2008 purported to transfer about 70 bigha of Sitaram's land in Shivpuri to Vikas. Dimna Jatav, who had since died, had posed as Sitaram. Dharmendra, a former Patwari, and Ramjilal witnessed the deeds; Dharmendra was alleged to have signed as Rajesh. The owner denied selling the land or affixing a thumbprint. He had not witnessed execution of the deeds and could not say who had signed them. Purchaser Vikas stated that Dharmendra had introduced the impostor and that both appellants had shown him the land. Draftsman Premsingh stated that Dharmendra had brought the typed deeds, while document experts compared the signatures and thumbprints. The 2018 Sessions judgment convicted both appellants under IPC Sections 420/120-B, 467/120-B and 471/120-B. Each was sentenced to five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 1,000 under Section 420/120-B, and seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 1,000 under Section 467/120-B, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default on each count. No separate sentence was imposed under Section 471/120-B.

2. Precedents — Considered : Dharmendra relied on Padum Kumar v. State of U.P. to challenge a conviction based solely on a questioned signature. The Bench found substantial additional evidence in the testimony of the draftsman and purchaser. Both appellants relied on Sheila Sebastian v. R. Jawaharaj concerning persons who had not made a forged document. The Court distinguished that decision because the appellants had knowingly identified the impostor and witnessed the false deeds. It relied on the purchaser's and draftsman's evidence, together with the appellants' participation as deed witnesses, to reject those submissions and affirm the conspiracy convictions.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 420, 467, 471 and 120-B, and Section 34 in the original FIR. The judgment addressed the registration documents, handwriting opinions and appellate review of sentence. Registration-office witness Indra Kumar Shukla referred to Section 86 of the Act as his asserted basis for acting in good faith.

4. Issues : Was there reliable evidence, apart from the handwriting report, that the appellants had knowingly participated in the forged sale transactions? Could they avoid liability on the ground that they had witnessed, rather than made, the deeds? Was a reduction of sentence justified?

5. Ratio / Findings : Sitaram's denial, Dimna's photograph and thumbprint, Vikas's account of the introduction and identification, Premsingh's evidence that Dharmendra had brought the deeds, and the expert comparison together established the sale by an impostor and the appellants' involvement. Dharmendra's false signature as a witness and his coordination of the transactions established his central role. Ramjilal had knowingly identified Dimna as the owner. The Court treated these acts as active participation in the charged conspiracy and distinguished the position of a person uninvolved in making a forged document. Ramjilal's age of about 65 at the time of arrest and the claimed absence of personal benefit did not justify leniency in view of the serious attempt to deprive the owner of his holding.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed the convictions and original sentences. Dharmendra was to serve the remaining term. Ramjilal's bail bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve the remaining sentence. No separate sentence under Section 471/120-B was added. Copies of the judgment were to be supplied immediately to the appellants free of cost, and the trial record was to be returned with a copy for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Dowry cruelty and differentiated quashing — After the complainant's two children died and she was unable to conceive again, she alleged harassment, a demand for ₹50,000 and expulsion from the matrimonial home in July 2019. The Court quashed the FIR and proceedings against six extended relatives because neither the FIR nor the witness statements attributed a specific role to them. The prosecution continued against the husband and mother-in-law because the allegations identified their harassment and exclusion of the complainant. The Court treated the continuing mental effects at her parental home as cruelty and rejected the objection based on the delay of about two years. Its conclusions concerned prima facie sufficiency, not guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant married Dhirendra in 2015. Both their children died, and she was later unable to conceive again. She alleged that her husband and in-laws then harassed her, demanded ₹50,000 and turned her out on 17.07.2019. Crime 1446/2021, Kolgawan, Satna, was registered on 23.11.2021 under IPC Sections 498-A/34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4. The husband, mother-in-law and six other relatives applied for quashing. The FIR recounted these central events and named the extended relatives collectively, without attributing individual incidents to them. The statements recorded under CrPC Section 161 repeated the same allegations.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, Monju Roy v. State of W.B. and Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan supported caution against implicating distant relatives through general allegations. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P. explained how mental cruelty could continue after a woman was driven to her parental home. The Bench also cited its decision in Amar Singh v. Vimla and applied Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P. to the allegations against the mother-in-law. Taramani Parakh required triable allegations of harassment forcing a wife to leave the matrimonial home to be tested at trial, rather than rejected on an assessment of competing versions at the quashing stage. Meera v. State was cited on the mother-in-law's duty to protect another woman. The cases mentioned within the Taramani quotation remained part of that context, rather than separate adjudications in this case.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 482, 161 and 468; IPC Sections 498-A and 34; Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4. The Court discussed mental and physical cruelty under Section 498-A, including wilful conduct likely to drive a woman to suicide or to cause grave injury or danger to her life, limb or mental or physical health.

4. Issues : Against which applicants were the alleged roles sufficiently specific to require trial? Did the exclusion from the matrimonial home and the delay in lodging the FIR bar a cruelty prosecution against the husband and mother-in-law?

5. Ratio / Findings : Applicants 3–8 were named collectively, but neither the FIR nor the Section 161 statements of the complainant and her family identified an incident involving any of them individually. The Court therefore quashed their cases. In contrast, the allegations against the husband and mother-in-law connected the taunts about the loss of the children and inability to conceive with the ₹50,000 demand and expulsion. Compelling a wife to remain at her parental home after exclusion for non-fulfilment of a dowry demand could continue to cause mental cruelty. The Court applied the three-year period under Section 468 and held that the interval between 17.07.2019 and 23.11.2021 did not justify quashing. It also regarded the hope of restoring the marriage as a plausible explanation for waiting. These findings concerned prima facie sufficiency, not proof at trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application of Vinay, Shikha alias Sarika, Durga, Vijay, Kanchan and Ashok Vishwakarma, applicants 3–8. The FIR and criminal proceedings were quashed as against them, and they were discharged. The application of the husband, Dhirendra, and mother-in-law, Kusum, applicants 1–2, was dismissed; their prosecution continued.

Dhirendra Vishwakarma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 9592/2022, 12/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Dowry FIR after divorce filing — A husband and five relatives sought quashing of the wife's FIR alleging cruelty and dowry demands, describing it as vague and retaliatory. The FIR alleged a demand for ₹5 lakh and a car, as well as abuse. The husband's own Pune complaint named the mother-in-law's sister as a witness to an incident involving the family. This undermined her claim, at the prima facie stage, that she had no involvement in their family affairs. The Court held that the wife's efforts to preserve the marriage, followed by the husband's divorce petition, did not by themselves establish that her FIR was a counterblast. It dismissed the Section 482 application without deciding the truth of the competing allegations.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The wife married D.R. Tiwari in 2015 and alleged that her father gave ₹11 lakh and household articles. She later alleged demands for an additional ₹5 lakh and a Honda car, physical and mental cruelty, and abuse. Crime 1318/2022, Kotwali Morena, was registered under IPC Sections 498-A, 323, 294, 506 and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4. The applicants were the husband, his elder brother, his mother and father, his mother's sister and her husband. A previous quashing petition was dismissed by a separate order because it had been filed without the applicants' authority. They relied on the divorce proceedings and their criminal complaint against the wife's family.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi was quoted and applied. It explained that efforts at reconciliation could account for the delay in lodging an FIR and that a divorce petition did not justify quashing an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence. Civil and criminal proceedings were independent and had to be decided on their own merits. The Bench also cited XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh and other Supreme Court authorities on examining the allegations at face value under Section 482.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482, also identified in the judgment as BNSS Section 528, governed quashing. The alleged offences were under IPC Sections 498-A, 323, 294, 506 and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4. The parallel divorce petition was under Hindu Marriage Act Section 13.

4. Issues : Did the allegedly vague accusations against the relatives, the earlier divorce petition or the countercomplaints establish that the FIR was a malicious counterblast warranting quashing?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FIR alleged a specific demand for additional cash and a car, together with continuing cruelty. The husband's own Pune complaint cited the mother-in-law's sister as a witness to an incident there. This undermined her categorical claim that she had no involvement in the family's affairs. The Court also considered two FIRs lodged by her own daughter-in-law against applicants 5 and 6; one alleged that applicant 3 was present. It found prima facie that the two sisters interfered in each other's family affairs and treated their daughters-in-law with cruelty. The husband's divorce petition and the time spent seeking reconciliation did not invalidate the criminal allegations. The civil and criminal cases had to be decided independently on their own merits. The Court stated that quashing was available only where the uncontroverted allegations did not disclose an offence. It found the allegations sufficient to prosecute the applicants and declined to decide their truth through a roving enquiry under Section 482.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The FIR and the consequential proceedings were not quashed.

Headnote :- Section 133 public nuisance — A temple institution challenged orders directing removal of its gate from a lane leading from the main road. Earlier civil proceedings, culminating in a High Court second appeal, had established that the lane was public. Spot inspection confirmed the obstruction, and the institution neither claimed a later title nor identified a different lane. The Court rejected its procedural challenge under Sections 137, 138 and 254 CrPC and affirmed the SDM's order and the revisional order. Noting that the nuisance application had been filed in 1995, it directed the municipality to remove the obstruction within 15 days.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : An application made in 1995 alleged that the applicant had installed a gate across a lane leading to a temple in Guna. A civil judgment in 1965, the first appeal in 1968 and the High Court's decision on the second appeal in 1983 had established that the lane was public. Several SDM orders and revisions followed. A revisional order directed inspection and removal of any obstruction. After an inspection in November 2019, the SDM directed the CMO to remove the gate in January 2020. The Sessions Court dismissed the revision in March 2020. The applicant sought interference under Section 482.

2. Precedents — Considered : The earlier civil decrees and the High Court's decision in Second Appeal 310/1968 were treated as conclusive on the public character of the lane. The Court cited Garment Craft v. Prakash Chand Goel on restraint in exercising supervisory jurisdiction. That decision distinguished correction of grave dereliction of duty, flagrant abuse or violations of fundamental principles of law or justice from reassessing evidence or substituting a different factual conclusion. Its discussion of Article 227 provided context for the restraint exercised here; it did not convert the Section 482 application into an Article 227 case.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 133, 137, 138, 254 and 482. The applicant relied on the procedure under Sections 137–138 and the requirement to take evidence as in a summons case under Section 254. The Court explained that Section 482 preserved the inherent power to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of the process of a court or otherwise secure the ends of justice.

4. Issues : Could the applicant reopen the finding that the lane was public? Did the alleged procedural deficiencies invalidate the removal order? Did blocking the established public way constitute a public nuisance?

5. Ratio / Findings : The public character of the lane had been settled by the earlier civil litigation. The applicant neither identified a different lane nor claimed to have acquired title later by lease or sale. Inspections, including one conducted in the presence of the contesting party, confirmed the gate.

Obstructing this established public lane amounted to a public nuisance. The Court found no jurisdictional error warranting relief under Section 482. It stated that, where the lower court's findings were correct, it could decline to set aside the proceedings for a procedural lapse. In this case, the established public character of the lane, the absence of any claim to a different lane or subsequently acquired title, and the admitted gate supported the removal order.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application without costs and affirmed the SDM's order and the revisional order. It directed the CMO, Guna, to remove the obstruction immediately and no later than 15 days from the date of its order.

Headnote :- Panchayat fund recovery and criminal FIR — Panchayat secretaries challenged the Additional Collector's direction to lodge an FIR concerning the withdrawal of toilet-construction funds, relying on a stay of an earlier recovery order. The Court distinguished civil recovery liability from investigation into an independent allegation of embezzlement constituting a cognizable offence. In the lead petitioner's case, ₹18,76,800 had been withdrawn for 408 toilets, but 137 remained unbuilt despite reminders. The Panchayat Act did not bar investigation under the IPC and CrPC; where a complaint disclosed a cognizable offence, the police were obliged to register an FIR. The suspect had no right to a hearing before registration. Both writ petitions were dismissed. The Court did not determine criminal guilt or finally decide recovery liability in these proceedings.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Two writ petitions challenged the Additional Collector (Development), Anuppur's direction dated 26.04.2023 to lodge an FIR concerning alleged misuse of toilet-construction funds. In the lead petitioner Dileep Sharma's Gram Panchayat Gulidand, ₹18,76,800 had been withdrawn for 408 toilets. After repeated reminders, 271 toilets had been constructed, while 137 allegedly remained unbuilt. A ₹9 lakh recovery order passed in 2018 had been stayed in WP 7038/2018. That writ petition was allowed by a separate order on the day these petitions were decided.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, State (NCT of Delhi) v. Sanjay, Sayyad Hassan Sayyad Subhan and Dhanraj N. Asawani were quoted on the independence of criminal proceedings from special statutory or civil proceedings in the absence of a statutory bar. Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P. was cited for the duty to register an FIR when the information disclosed a cognizable offence. The decisions concerning other statutes supported that distinction; they did not determine the guilt of any Panchayat official in this case.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution; Sections 89/92 of the M.P. Panchayat Raj Evam Gram Swaraj Adhiniyam; the CrPC provisions governing investigation; and the IPC provisions concerning cognizable offences.

4. Issues : Did the stay or outcome of Panchayat recovery proceedings bar a direction to register an FIR for alleged misappropriation? Was the suspect entitled to a hearing before registration of the FIR? Could the complainant's lack of standing bar registration?

5. Ratio / Findings : The allegation concerned withdrawal of funds without constructing all the sanctioned toilets, rather than mere failure to pay the amount under a recovery order. Panchayat recovery proceedings and criminal investigation were independent; the State Act did not exclude the operation of the IPC and CrPC. As the allegations disclosed a cognizable offence, the police were obliged to register an FIR, and the direction to lodge it warranted no interference. The suspect had no right to a hearing before registration of the FIR. A complainant's standing is generally immaterial in criminal proceedings, except where the statute creating the offence prescribes eligibility to complain.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both writ petitions, leaving the direction to lodge an FIR undisturbed. It did not determine whether the petitioners were guilty of embezzlement.

Dileep Sharma v. State of M.P. and Others; Rakesh Kumar Kacher and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, W.P. no. 10626/2023 & 11539/2023, 02/09/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Successive bail and witness-service delay — The sixth application for regular bail in a case involving serious allegations of rape and attempt to murder was allowed after the Court compared the trial orders with the SSP's explanation and found that the police had failed to execute process for prosecution witnesses. The accused had been in custody since March 2021. The Court held that an undertrial could not be left in jail because the prosecution failed to produce its witnesses. It granted bail on a personal bond of ₹1 lakh with one surety in the like amount and directed that a copy of the order be sent to the DGP. Bail was granted because of the intervening trial delay; the order did not adjudicate guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dilip was arrested on 24.03.2021 in Crime 81/2021, registered at Police Station Girwai, Gwalior, for offences under IPC Sections 376-D and 307/34. His fifth bail application was dismissed on 26.08.2022. The sixth application was based mainly on delay in the trial. After examining the trial orders, the High Court called for an explanation from the SSP about the failure to serve process on prosecution witnesses. The trial court's report contradicted the SSP's account. It reported that summons had been issued, and the High Court found the SSP's explanation incorrect.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P. was cited for the direction to inform the complainant that bail had been granted. The finding on trial delay and the police's failure to serve process arose from the record of this case; the cited decision was not treated as requiring the grant of bail.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 439 and IPC Sections 376-D, 307 and 34. The Court directed furnishing of a bail bond and intimation of the grant of bail to the complainant.

4. Issues : Did the trial delay caused by the failure to execute process for prosecution witnesses justify regular bail despite the earlier unsuccessful applications?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found that summons had been issued but the police had failed to serve process on the witnesses diligently. It described the SSP's contrary explanation as false. An undertrial could not be left in jail at the mercy of such police inaction. The failure of the prosecution agency to produce its witnesses and the resulting trial delay justified allowing the successive bail application. This change in the progress of the trial warranted bail without an adjudication of guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the sixth application for regular bail and directed the applicant's release on furnishing a personal bond of ₹1 lakh with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the Trial Court/Committal Court, for appearance on the dates fixed by the concerned Court. The order was to remain effective until the end of the trial, but would become ineffective in the event of bail jump. Intimation of the grant of bail was to be sent to the complainant, and a copy of the order to the Director General of Police, State of Madhya Pradesh, for information.

Headnote :- Illegal colony FIR and pre-registration hearing — A purchaser denied developing the land after the Guna Collector directed registration of an FIR against him and others. The Court held that Rule 3 of the 1998 Coloniser Rules required registration where a person intended, within a municipal area, to develop land into plots for transfer to persons intending construction; actual development was not a prerequisite. Reports described plot markings and a gravel road. The purchaser supplied no material supporting his assertion of agricultural use, and the disputed facts could not be decided in the writ proceedings. He had no right to a hearing before registration of the FIR or to require investigation in a particular manner. The writ petition was dismissed without an adjudication of criminal guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : By order dated 05.11.2024, the Guna Collector directed the Municipal CMO to lodge an FIR against Dilmeet Singh Bal and 23 others for alleged illegal colonisation. FIR 1066/2024 was registered pursuant to that direction. Bal stated that he had merely purchased agricultural land and was cultivating it. An SDO (Revenue) inquiry report and a Patwari report described a larger parcel divided into plots by markings and a gravel road. Bal produced neither photographs showing cultivation nor documents establishing his registration as a farmer or sales of agricultural produce in the Krishi Upaj Mandi. He sought quashing of both the Collector's direction and the FIR under Article 226.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat were quoted on the absence of an accused's right to a hearing before registration of an offence or to participate in the investigation as a matter of course. The quoted discussion preserved specified statutory exceptions and the remedies available at the appropriate stages. Authorities on the choice of investigating agency and further investigation were considered through those quotations, rather than as separate holdings on this petitioner's conduct. The Court also referred to Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior and State of M.P. for the principle that the accused has no say in the manner of investigation. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary distinguished monitoring in rare and compelling circumstances, to secure a free and fair investigation, from directing or supervising its mode or manner. The Court reiterated that distinction through Sant Kumar Patel.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution and Rule 3 of the M.P. Nagar Palika (Registration of Coloniser, Terms and Conditions) Rules, 1998. Rule 3 requires registration where a person intends, within a municipal area, to establish a colony by dividing land into plots for transfer to persons intending construction. The Collector's direction led to FIR 1066/2024.

4. Issues : Was actual development of a colony necessary before coloniser registration became mandatory? Was Bal entitled to a hearing before the direction to register an FIR? Could the writ court determine the disputed facts concerning cultivation and development?

5. Ratio / Findings : Within a municipal area, Rule 3 requires registration where a person intends to develop land into plots for transfer to persons intending construction; actual development of a colony is not a prerequisite. The reports described plot markings and a gravel road. Bal's unsupported assertion that he was cultivating the land did not justify resolving those disputed facts in his favour in writ proceedings. He had no right to a hearing before registration of the FIR or to demand investigation in a particular manner. Any person could set the criminal law in motion; the Collector did not err in directing the CMO to lodge the FIR. Registration of an FIR did not establish criminal guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition. Neither the Collector's direction nor the FIR was quashed.

Dilmeet Singh Bal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 40972/2024, 21/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- SC/ST Act forum and temporal amendment — A police officer sought quashing of a private complaint filed in 2012, alleging caste-based abuse and assault at a police station, on the ground that only the Special Court could take cognizance. Under the legal position applicable when the complaint was filed and process was issued in 2012, the Magistrate could entertain the complaint and commit the case to the Special Court under Section 14. The later 2016 amendment empowered an Exclusive or designated Special Court to take cognizance directly; it did not invalidate the CJM's earlier summons. The officer was directed to appear, and the CJM was directed to commit the case. The complaint's merits were not decided.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Chhotelal filed a private complaint on 30.01.2012, alleging that police personnel, including Dinesh Singh Baish, had assaulted him, abused him by his caste name and threatened him following a protest over a road accident. The complaint alleged offences under IPC Sections 166, 323, 294 and 506 Part II and SC/ST Act Sections 3(1)(x) and 3(2)(vii). The CJM issued summons on 05.07.2012. The application also stated that an arrest warrant had been issued on 19.07.2017. Baish challenged the Magistrate's jurisdiction and apparently had not appeared before the CJM.

2. Precedents — Considered : Gangula Ashok v. State of A.P., M.A. Kuttappan v. E. Krishnan Nayanar and Rattiram v. State of M.P. were applied to the position before the amendment: a Special Court, being a Court of Session, could take cognizance after committal by a competent Magistrate and could not entertain a complaint directly. The petitioner relied on Moly v. State of Kerala and Dhiraj Kumar v. State of Jharkhand. Moly v. State of Kerala was also discussed through Rattiram. The Court distinguished the earlier legal position from amended Section 14.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 and the provisions governing committal; Section 14 of the SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act before and after Amendment Act 1 of 2016. The Court described the changed legal position as applicable after 01.01.2016. The alleged offences included Sections 3(1)(x) and 3(2)(vii) of the Act. The merits of the complaint were not decided.

4. Issues : Was the CJM incompetent to entertain the private SC/ST complaint and issue summons in 2012 because the trial would take place before the Special Court? Did the later 2016 amendment permitting direct cognizance alter the legality of that earlier process?

5. Ratio / Findings : Under the law applicable in July 2012, the Special Court could take cognizance only after committal, so the Magistrate was the proper court to entertain the complaint initially. Amended Section 14 later authorised the Special Court to take cognizance directly, but the complaint and summons preceded that amendment. The Court observed that Baish had apparently not appeared before the CJM. Without his appearance, the CJM could not commit the case and had committed no illegality in entertaining the complaint and issuing summons. No arguments had been advanced on the merits of the complaint.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the quashing application with directions. Baish was directed to appear before the CJM, Bhind, on 23.04.2021, and the CJM was directed to commit the case to the Special Judge, Bhind, for trial.

Headnote :- Seized vehicle interim custody — The registered owner, who was also an accused in robbery cases, sought interim custody of an Eeco van allegedly used in the offences after it had been released on bond in another case. Applying Sunderbhai's general guidelines on seized property, the Court considered the alleged use of the van in multiple offences and doubts about the owner's stated Shivpuri address, given its UP registration and purchase in Jhansi. It permitted interim custody subject to strict requirements for proof and explanation, ₹10 lakh cash surety, and undertakings concerning the van's identity, continued possession and production at trial. The allegations of guilt were not adjudicated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Eeco van UP93-BK-7541 was allegedly used by masked assailants who robbed a soyabean truck's cleaner and driver in February 2021. The van was seized in Crime 96/2021 at Police Station Pichhore, involving IPC Sections 395 and 397 and MPDVPK Act Sections 11/13. The applicant was its registered owner and an accused. The same van was said to have been used in Crime 90/2021 and to have been released on supurdaginama in that case. The Sessions Court refused release in the present case. The applicant gave a Shivpuri address, but the van was registered in UP and had been sold and financed in Jhansi.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sunderbhai Ambalal Desai v. State of Gujarat provided the general guidelines governing release of seized property. The High Court applied those guidelines subject to conditions suited to the circumstances; it did not treat alleged use of the van in an offence as requiring either refusal of custody or unconditional release.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 451 and 482; IPC Sections 395 and 397; MPDVPK Act Sections 11 and 13.

4. Issues : Could the van be released on interim custody despite its relevance as evidence of alleged use in multiple robberies? What safeguards were necessary to ensure its continued availability?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court permitted interim custody subject to stringent conditions. It required proof of identity and permanent address, together with an explanation for purchasing the van in Jhansi despite the applicant's stated residence in Shivpuri. As no copy of the invoice had been filed, it required ₹10 lakh cash surety. The applicant had to undertake not to use the van for further offences, alter or dispose of it, or part with its possession; he also had to accept its identity and produce it for trial. These interim-custody directions did not establish the criminal allegations.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the application by permitting conditional interim custody. The applicant was required to file identity proof showing his permanent address, explain why he had purchased the van in Jhansi despite claiming residence in Shivpuri, and deposit ₹10 lakh as cash surety before the Trial Court. He had to undertake that the van would not be used in any further offence and, if such use was found, to surrender it immediately. He also had to undertake not to commit another offence; if he was found to have committed a further offence, the cash surety would stand automatically forfeited. He was required to undertake not to dispute the van's identity and not to change its nature, colour or ownership until final disposal of the criminal case. He could not part with possession in any form, including by lease, rent, gift or temporary use. He had to undertake to produce the van whenever directed, particularly when witnesses' evidence was recorded.

Headnote :- Investigation delay versus directions to arrest — An informant sought a free and fair investigation into a murder case and the arrest of the suspects. The High Court held that it could not use Section 482 to supervise the manner of police investigation by directing arrest or the filing of a charge sheet, particularly when the affected persons had not been joined as parties. Section 173(1) CrPC nevertheless required completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay. The Court directed early completion in accordance with law and left the applicant at liberty to approach the SP. It did not prescribe the outcome of the investigation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dinesh Yadav complained that, after registration of Crime 1333/2021 at Police Station Kotwali, Morena, for an offence under IPC Section 302, the police had taken no adequate further steps and the suspects had not been arrested. He sought a direction under Section 482 for a fair investigation. The persons whose arrest he sought had not been joined as respondents.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari was quoted extensively on the police's discretion concerning arrest, seizure and filing a charge sheet, and the limits on directions affecting accused persons who had not been heard. Its quoted discussion of M.C. Abraham emphasised that arrest should not follow an FIR mechanically and that the power, affecting liberty and reputation, must be exercised cautiously. Divine Retreat Centre was quoted on the need to hear persons affected by judicial directions with serious consequences. The High Court applied those limits while separately enforcing the statutory duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 482, 41 and 173(1); IPC Section 302 was the offence alleged in the FIR. The quoted authority confined inherent power to giving effect to orders under the Code, preventing abuse of the process of a court or securing the ends of justice. The duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay remained enforceable.

4. Issues : Could the Court direct the arrest of suspects or prescribe the manner of investigation? Was the duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay enforceable?

5. Ratio / Findings : The police must form their own opinion during the investigation; every FIR does not necessarily result in arrest or the filing of a charge sheet. The High Court could not use Section 482 to supervise the investigation by prescribing particular steps, especially when the affected suspects had not been heard. Section 173(1), however, required completion without unnecessary delay. The Investigating Officer was therefore directed to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law, without any predetermined investigative outcome.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the petition by directing the Investigating Officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law. It declined to direct arrest. The applicant remained at liberty to submit any grievance to the SP, Morena; any such application was to be considered in accordance with law.

Dinesh Yadav v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 3609/2022, 31/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Quashing after charge sheet, hurt and noncognizable offences — A resident challenged a company employee's FIR arising from a protest at a weighing-machine construction site. After the charge sheet was filed, the Court considered the statements recorded under Section 161 and found prima facie allegations of obscene abuse, assault by fists and threats. Bodily pain may constitute hurt under the IPC even if the MLC records no visible injury. In the alternative, the Court explained under CrPC Section 2(d) how a police report disclosing only noncognizable offences is treated as a complaint. Unsupported allegations concerning blasting and compensation did not establish mala fides. The writ petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : During construction of a weighing machine at Adani Enterprises' site on 04–05.01.2022, supervisor Mohar Singh alleged that Dipendra Shah and another person demanded that work stop, abused and scuffled with the workers, and threatened to kill them if work resumed. FIR 08/2022 at Langhadol led to a charge sheet. Shah claimed that he was protesting against blasting near his house and the lack of rehabilitation. He challenged the cognizability of the offences, the allegations of obscenity under Section 294 and hurt under Section 323, and the informant's motive. He also sought a stay of separate proceedings under Section 5(a)/(b) of the M.P. Rajya Suraksha Adhiniyam; the Court's reasons for dismissal focused on the FIR.

2. Precedents — Considered : Subhash Kumar, Motiram Padu Joshi, Satpal and Jarnail Singh were cited for the principle that an FIR need not contain every detail. Satvinder Kaur and Renu Kumari supported the limits on quashing where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence. Debendra Nath Padhi was quoted on the consideration of defence material at the stage of framing charges. Ushaben v. Kishorbhai Chunilal Talpada supported the explanation to Section 2(d), although it concerned different substantive offences. Shah relied on Mohd. Wajid and Bhajan Lal, but his plea of mala fides was not established on this record.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution; CrPC Sections 2(d), 161 and 482; IPC Sections 294, 319 (definition of hurt) and 323. Section 5(a)/(b) of the M.P. Rajya Suraksha Adhiniyam was invoked in the petitioner's separate prayer for a stay of proceedings initiated against him under that Act.

4. Issues : Did the charge sheet and statements prima facie support the allegations of cognizable obscenity and hurt despite the FIR's omission of the exact words and the absence of external injury? Would a police report disclosing only noncognizable offences be void? Could the asserted environmental protest establish that the prosecution was malicious?

5. Ratio / Findings : Once investigation was complete, the Court could consider the statements collected by the police. Those statements described abuse in the name of the complainant's mother and sister and assault by fists. Whether the words caused annoyance to others could be clarified during examination and cross-examination at trial. Bodily pain constitutes hurt under Section 319 even without visible injury, and ocular evidence cannot be discarded merely because the MLC records no injury. The allegation of damage from blasting 200 metres away was an unsubstantiated, disputed defence unsupported by unimpeachable material. In the alternative, under the explanation to Section 2(d), a police report disclosing only noncognizable offences after investigation is treated as a complaint, and the police officer making the report is treated as the complainant.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. The FIR and charge sheet were not quashed; no finding of guilt was returned.

Dipendra Shah v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 21586/2023, 16/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Transfer of criminal trial — The applicant sought transfer of the trial, alleging that the trial judge had wrongly applied parity in granting bail to three co-accused. The Sessions Judge rejected the application under Section 408 CrPC without giving reasons for the conclusion. Judicial orders must contain reasons, but an adverse bail order alone does not give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias. An allegedly erroneous grant of bail must be challenged before a superior court; subsequent misuse of liberty may be raised before the court that granted bail. The applicant had not challenged the bail orders by seeking cancellation. The revision was dismissed, and the refusal to transfer the trial was affirmed on different grounds.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Sessions Trial 92/2021 at Gohad, the presiding judge granted bail to Ramjilal, Prashant and Sushant Kaurav on parity with two persons whom the High Court had previously granted bail. The applicant contended that the three were not similarly situated and sought transfer under Section 408 CrPC. In his comments, the trial judge explained why he had applied parity and stated that he had no objection to transfer. The Sessions Judge, Bhind, rejected the request, referring to the absence of documentary proof and describing the allegations as baseless. The applicant challenged that order in revision under Sections 397 and 401.

2. Precedents — Considered : Tutul Kumari Sen v. State of Jharkhand, (2009) 13 SCC 495, was relied on for the principle that judicial orders must give reasons; its quoted passage discusses State of Orissa v. Dhaniram Luhar and State of Rajasthan v. Sohan Lal. Abdul Basit v. Mohd. Abdul Kadir Chaudhary, (2014) 10 SCC 745, held that Section 362 bars the court that granted bail from reviewing that concluded order merely by entertaining a cancellation request. Anupam Ghos v. Faiz Mohammad, Transfer Petitions (C) 2331–2334/2021 (2 September 2022), disapproved transfer based merely on adverse judicial orders. Usmangani Adambhai Vahora v. State of Gujarat, (2016) 3 SCC 370, required a reasonable apprehension rather than speculative allegations. The quoted passage refers to Gurcharan Das Chadha, Abdul Nazar Madani, Amarinder Singh, Lalu Prasad and Nahar Singh Yadav as supporting authorities. The applicant relied on Sikandar Singh Narvariya v. State of M.P. (4 October 2021) and the Supreme Court's order in Axay Kumar Dwivedi v. State of M.P. (26 November 2021) on bail parity; the High Court did not decide whether parity had been correctly applied.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 397 and 401 (revision), 408 (transfer by the Sessions Judge), 439(2) (cancellation of bail) and 362 (bar on review of a concluded judgment or order). The judgment also reproduces the Supreme Court's discussion of Sections 406 and 407 on transfer jurisdiction and Article 21 on a fair trial.

4. Issues : Should the Sessions Judge's inadequately reasoned order be interfered with? Did the grant of bail to co-accused on an allegedly erroneous application of parity give rise to a reasonable apprehension of bias warranting transfer of the trial? Before which court should an allegedly erroneous grant of bail be challenged?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Sessions Judge should have given reasons for rejecting the transfer application. Reasons demonstrate application of mind and enable review. However, the applicant had not challenged the co-accused's bail orders, so the High Court could not determine whether the trial court had failed to consider relevant material when granting bail. Subsequent misuse of liberty may justify an application for cancellation before the same court. An allegedly erroneous initial grant must be challenged before a superior court; the court that granted bail cannot use cancellation as a means of reviewing its concluded order. Dissatisfaction with an adverse judicial order does not, by itself, justify transfer. The apprehension of bias must be reasonable in the circumstances. The trial judge's statement that he had no objection to transfer did not establish bias. The High Court did not decide that the underlying grants of bail were proper.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the revision and affirmed, on different grounds, the Sessions Judge's order dated 5 August 2022 refusing transfer.

Jagdish Singh Kaurav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.R. no. 3364/2022, 19/09/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (246) Prev Next

Headnote :- POCSO, rape and age proof — The school admission register, proved through a school witness, recorded the prosecutrix's date of birth as 5 January 1997. She was therefore 16 years and nine months old at the time of the incident in October 2013. Although neither an admission form nor a birth certificate accompanied the register, the school record, made before the incident, had evidentiary value under Section 35 of the Evidence Act. The order of priority for age documents under Rule 12 of the 2007 JJ Rules also applied to a child victim. Her alleged consent was immaterial. The ten-year sentence of rigorous imprisonment under POCSO Section 4 and the convictions for rape and intimidation were affirmed. In considering sentence, the Court stated that ten years was the minimum for the charged offence under IPC Section 376(2)(i).

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecutrix stated that Jagdish caught hold of her, gagged her and raped her when she went to relieve herself on 17 October 2013. On seeing her parents return, he fled, pushed her mother and threatened death if the incident was reported. The family delayed reporting out of fear until her father spoke to a spiritual adviser. The trial court convicted the appellant under IPC Section 506 Part II and POCSO Section 4. It also recorded a conviction under IPC Section 376(1), without imposing a separate sentence for that offence. The defence contended that the prosecutrix was an adult and had consented, and questioned the source of the date of birth entered in the school register.

2. Precedents — Considered : The judgment reproduces a Supreme Court passage applying Rule 12 of the Juvenile Justice Rules to the determination of a victim's age and explaining the priority of age documents. State of Chhattisgarh v. Lekhram, (2006) 5 SCC 736, explains the admissibility and corroborative value of school register entries under Section 35. Murugan v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2011) 6 SCC 111, examines the probative value of birth records made before litigation and the sources of their entries; Umesh Chandra, Radha Krishna Singh, Madan Mohan Singh and other decisions are referred to in the quoted passage. Mukarrab v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2017) 2 SCC 210, treats radiological age estimates as useful but inconclusive; Anoop Singh and Babloo Pasi are referred to in that quotation.

3. Statutes considered : POCSO Act Sections 3 and 4; IPC Sections 376(1), 376(2)(i) (the provision charged) and 506 Part II; Evidence Act Section 35; Rule 12 of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Rules, 2007; Section 68(1) of the Juvenile Justice Act, 2000; CrPC Section 374.

4. Issues : Was the prosecutrix under 18 on the date of the incident despite the absence of the admission form and the underlying birth certificate? Was her alleged consent material? Did the convictions and the ten-year sentence warrant appellate interference?

5. Ratio / Findings : School witness Santosh Sharma produced the admission register, which recorded the prosecutrix's date of birth as 5 January 1997, although he had initially stated it orally as 8 July 1997. The Court examined the register and found that she was 16 years and nine months old on 17 October 2013. A school register maintained in the discharge of official duty is admissible under Section 35, and this entry predated the offence. The documentary priorities in Rule 12 guided the determination of the victim's age; medical assessment is not conclusive. Her consent was therefore immaterial, and the Court did not consider it necessary to examine the factual allegation of consent at length. The accounts of the prosecutrix and her parents supported the intimidation conviction. The Court declined to reduce the ten-year custodial sentence to the period already undergone, referring to the minimum sentence for the charged offence under IPC Section 376(2)(i).

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the judgment and sentence dated 28 December 2015. This included ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,000, with two months' simple imprisonment in default, under Section 4 of the POCSO Act; three years' rigorous imprisonment under IPC Section 506 Part II; and the conviction under IPC Section 376(1), without a separate sentence. The appellant remained in jail.

Headnote :- Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a) — Police recovered a pistol and two live cartridges from Jagdish, who had no licence. The seizure officer's additional roles as complainant and investigator did not, by themselves, invalidate the proceedings in the absence of demonstrated bias or a miscarriage of justice. The fact that independent seizure witnesses turned hostile did not require rejection of reliable police testimony. The defence had not put its objection about continuity of the seal to the armourer. The sanction order recorded that the District Magistrate had examined the seized arms. The concurrent conviction and the minimum sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment were affirmed. The revision was dismissed, and the bail bonds were cancelled.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Acting on information received on 27 January 2010, Sub-Inspector K.N. Sharma and his team searched Jagdish at Chikali bus stand and recovered a pistol and two live cartridges. No licence was produced. An armourer examined the firearm, and the District Magistrate sanctioned prosecution. The trial court convicted Jagdish under Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a) and sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 500. The conviction and sentence were affirmed in the first appeal. In revision, Jagdish contended that Sharma had acted as both complainant and investigator, that the independent seizure witnesses had not supported the prosecution, that the identity of the firearm sent to the armourer had not been proved, and that the sanction was invalid.

2. Precedents — Considered : Raju Dubey v. State of M.P., 1998 (1) JLJ 236, and Megha Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1995 SC 2339, were cited on the objection to the same officer acting as complainant and investigator. State v. V. Jayapaul, AIR 2004 SC 2684, treated Megha Singh as turning on its facts rather than laying down a categorical disqualification. Anil alias Bhura v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 533/2017 (19 July 2017), required bias to be shown. H.N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi, AIR 1955 SC 196, and Union of India v. Prakash P. Hinduja, AIR 2003 SC 2612, explained that a defect in investigation does not, by itself, deprive the trial court of jurisdiction; interference with a completed trial requires a miscarriage of justice. Prabhu v. Emperor and Lumbhardar Zutshi v. The King are referred to in the quoted passage from Hinduja.

3. Statutes considered : Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27, the latter having been charged but not forming part of the conviction affirmed in the disposition; the prosecution-sanction requirement under the Arms Act; CrPC Sections 397, 401, 161 and 190, with Sections 193 and 195–199 discussed in the quoted authorities; Section 5-A of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1947, and IPC Sections 161, 165 and 165-A, referred to only by analogy in the precedents.

4. Issues : Did the same officer's roles as complainant and investigator vitiate the investigation and conviction? Did the hostile independent witnesses and the alleged gap in proof of sealing after the armourer's examination undermine proof of seizure? Was the sanction invalid on the ground that the District Magistrate had not seen the firearm? Did the sentence warrant reduction?

5. Ratio / Findings : No actual bias was shown merely because Sharma had acted as both complainant and investigator. Even an illegality in investigation does not automatically nullify cognizance or a completed trial without a resulting miscarriage of justice. Nothing else in his seizure testimony was shown to make it untrustworthy. A police witness must be assessed like any other witness, and reliable police evidence is not rejected merely because independent witnesses have turned hostile. The armourer had not been asked in cross-examination whether he had returned the firearm sealed; that criticism could not be accepted without giving him an opportunity to explain. Sanction Ex. P/4 recorded that the District Magistrate had viewed the seized arms. The witness had merely proved the Magistrate's sanction, and no question had been put to him suggesting that the Magistrate had not seen the arms. No perversity was shown in the concurrent findings of fact. The Court treated one year's rigorous imprisonment as the applicable statutory minimum.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the revision and affirmed the conviction, the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment and the fine of Rs 500 with default imprisonment. The applicant's bail and surety bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately to undergo the remaining sentence.

Headnote :- Murder by unlawful assembly — A threat arising from a land dispute was followed by an assault on Lakhan by six appellants armed with sharp-edged and blunt weapons. Fatal brain injuries established that the death was homicidal. His nephew and a nearby dhaba owner saw the assault at close range, with the tractor lights on; his son and other witnesses saw the assailants flee in the light of the car's headlights. Relationship or employment did not, by itself, discredit witnesses whose presence was natural. The original allegation that a tractor had run over the victim was unsupported by medical evidence or testimony at trial. That embellishment did not require rejection of reliable evidence of the weapon assault. The attempt to obtain medical treatment explained the timing of the FIR. The convictions under IPC Sections 302/149 and 148 and the life sentences were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 7 December 2008, Rajesh Yadav threatened Lakhan Singh Raghuvanshi over possession of a field and the crops sown on it. Later, Lakhan and his nephew Mahavir went to inspect the field. The six appellants, Jagram, Vir Singh, Rajesh, Neeraj, Ranjit and Manoj, waylaid Lakhan and assaulted him with lathi, sabbal and farsa. Mahesh, the owner of a nearby dhaba, telephoned Lakhan's son Deependra. The family took Lakhan first to Badarwas and then to Shivpuri Hospital, where he was declared dead. The FIR was lodged at 00:40 on 8 December in Shivpuri and was transferred to Badarwas. The trial court imposed life imprisonment under IPC Section 302/149 and three months' imprisonment under Section 148. The appeal challenged the source of light, the evidence of related witnesses, the timing of the FIR and the seizure of the motorcycle, as well as the unsupported allegation that a tractor had run over Lakhan.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ramesh v. State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, concerned identification by rural witnesses in poor evening light. Bhagwan Jagannath Markad v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 10 SCC 537, addressed material contradictions and the assessment of reliable portions of evidence. State of U.P. v. Kishanpal, (2008) 16 SCC 73, and Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, explained the distinction between related and interested witnesses and the relevance of their natural presence. Dharamveer v. State of U.P., (2010) 4 SCC 469, concerned eyewitnesses who had remained unharmed. Sadhu Saran Singh v. State of U.P., (2016) 4 SCC 357, addressed the non-examination of other independent witnesses. Sohrab v. State of M.P., (1972) 3 SCC 751, and Bhajan Singh v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 421, concerned separating exaggeration from the credible substance of the evidence. State of Rajasthan v. Kalki, Hari Obula Reddy, Kartik Malhar and Rana Partap are referred to within the quoted Supreme Court passages.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302/149 and 148; Sections 147 and 341, referred to in the charge sheet; and the alternative charge under Section 302. CrPC Sections 374 and 161 were also considered. Evidence Act Sections 145 and 155 appear in the quoted precedent on contradictions.

4. Issues : Were the appellants reliably identified in darkness? Did kinship, employment, the absence of injuries to an eyewitness and the non-examination of customers undermine the eyewitness accounts? Did the circumstances of the rescue and the later recovery support the allegation of fabrication? Did the unsupported tractor-overrun allegation undermine the evidence of homicide?

5. Ratio / Findings : The post-mortem showed multiple deep incised wounds to the skull and brain injuries causing coma. The fatal injuries could not have been caused by a fall. Mahavir and Mahesh saw the assault from nearby, with the tractor lights on, while the approaching witnesses saw the appellants flee in the car's headlights. Neither Mahavir nor Mahesh could identify the weapon used by each appellant, and Mahesh could not attribute particular injuries to individual assailants. Kinship and employment explained the witnesses' presence and called for careful scrutiny rather than automatic rejection. The dhaba owner independently supported the account of the assault. Mahavir's lack of injuries did not disprove his presence. The urgency of obtaining treatment for a gravely injured person explained why the relatives passed the police stations and reported the matter at Shivpuri. The allegation in the FIR and Section 161 statements that a tractor had run over Lakhan was neither repeated in court nor supported by the medical evidence. The Court discarded that allegation but accepted the consistently proved assault with weapons. The later recovery of the motorcycle was not decisive. The credible evidence of the appellants' collective armed assault established guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the sentences of life imprisonment with a fine of Rs 2,000 under IPC Section 302/149 and three months' rigorous imprisonment under Section 148. No default imprisonment was imposed for the fine. Manoj's bail bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to undergo the remaining sentence. The other appellants remained in custody to serve their remaining sentences.

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC, matrimonial cruelty — The wife alleged that her husband demanded Rs 6 lakh and a car, that her parents-in-law assaulted and mistreated her, and that she was forcibly given pills and confined in a room before being hospitalised. A defence CD, said to show her relationship with another man, could not be relied on to quash the proceedings. The police had checked that the transcript corresponded with the recording, but had verified neither her voice nor the recording's authenticity; the check was conducted in her absence. The specific allegations against the husband and parents-in-law raised issues for trial. The younger brother-in-law faced only general allegations of telephone abuse and threats, without any specific instance or personal act being alleged. The FIR and proceedings were quashed only against him; the other applicants' petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Following her marriage in May 2020, the wife alleged demands for Rs 6 lakh and a car, pressure from her husband to divorce him, abuse and assault by his parents, threats, and an attempt by her husband to strangulate her. She stated that her mother-in-law forcibly administered pills on 19 February 2021. Her husband and mother-in-law then locked her in a room, where she vomited. Her father-in-law later took her to hospital. She also alleged that her younger brother-in-law, Rajdeep, abused and threatened her by telephone. The four family members sought quashing of FIR 92/2021. The husband produced a CD of an alleged conversation between the wife and another man; the police verified that the transcript matched the CD.

2. Precedents — Considered : On the limited scope of quashing and the treatment of disputed defence material, the Court referred to XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal 709/2021. It also cited Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha on the same limits. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, concerned allegations of cruelty by parents-in-law that required trial. Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207; Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693; and Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan were cited on the need for specific material against relatives. Bhajan Lal and other authorities are referred to within the quoted passages.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 482 and 161; IPC Sections 498-A and 34; Dowry Prohibition Act Section 4. The discussion of the explanation to Section 498-A addressed danger to life, limb or health and harassment to secure an unlawful demand for property.

4. Issues : Could the CD and the transcript check conducted in the wife's absence defeat her allegations at the quashing stage? Did the specific allegations against the husband and parents-in-law disclose an offence requiring trial? Were the undated allegations of telephone abuse sufficient to proceed against the younger brother-in-law?

5. Ratio / Findings : Section 482 permits quashing where the uncontroverted allegations do not disclose an offence, but does not permit a roving examination of a disputed defence. The police report checked only whether the words in the transcript matched the CD. It did not verify the complainant's voice or establish that the recording had not been altered, and the check took place in the husband's presence without the wife. The CD was therefore not accepted as a basis for quashing, although liberty was granted to prove it at trial. The husband faced direct allegations of dowry demands and violence. The parents-in-law were accused of specific acts during his absence and in connection with the pills and confinement. Those allegations raised questions for trial. The allegations of telephone abuse and threats against Rajdeep gave no dates or specific incidents and alleged no personal act of cruelty. In those circumstances, proceeding against him was an abuse of process. No final finding of guilt was made against the other three applicants.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition of the husband, Jaideep, and his parents, Ramshanker and Urmila; their prosecution was to continue. The FIR and criminal proceedings were quashed only against the younger brother-in-law, Rajdeep.

Jaideep Raghuwanshi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 26385/2021, 03/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Speedy trial and prosecutorial accountability — In his tenth NDPS bail application, an accused arrested in 2018 showed that police witnesses continued to remain absent despite service and a June 2020 order awarding Rs 20,000 for earlier delay. The High Court found a continuing violation of his fundamental right to a speedy trial. It directed payment of Rs 50,000 compensation within fifteen days, recovery from the salary of the Superintendent of Police, Bhind, departmental inquiries and compliance reports. It also directed a day-to-day trial to be completed within three months. The application was disposed of without an express direction to release the applicant on bail. The trial history separately identified adjournments caused by COVID-related restrictions.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Jaipal was arrested on 5 January 2018 in an NDPS case in which 520 g of opium was allegedly recovered from him and 21.57 kg of ganja from a co-accused travelling in the same car. His ninth bail application was withdrawn. In June 2020, the High Court had ordered payment of Rs 20,000 compensation for the non-appearance of police witnesses, with liberty to recover the amount from the salaries of two inspectors. The tenth application under Section 439 relied on trial order sheets showing dates affected by pandemic restrictions and the eventual examination of two police witnesses. Sub-Inspector Vinod Chhawai and other witnesses, however, had failed to appear despite service, and one bailable warrant had not been returned. The Court noted that the order sheet dated 24 August 2021 had not been produced.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jaipal Singh v. State of M.P., MCRC 10547/2020 (25 June 2020), was the earlier order in the same prosecution awarding Rs 20,000 for violation of the right to a speedy trial. The Court expressly revisited that order.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 439; NDPS Act Sections 8 and 20; the fundamental right to a speedy trial. The operative directions addressed service of summons and bailable warrants, recovery from salary and departmental inquiries.

4. Issues : Did the delay following the 2020 compensation order establish a continuing denial of the right to a speedy trial? How should the attendance of police witnesses and accountability for defaults be secured? What relief should be granted on the renewed bail application?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished pandemic-related adjournments from the unjustified absence of police witnesses who had been served and the failure to return process. The prosecution's duty does not end with filing the charge sheet; it must ensure the regular attendance of witnesses. The State was continuing to violate the applicant's fundamental right to a speedy trial, and the earlier compensation order had not changed its conduct. The Superintendent of Police had failed to ensure the attendance of police witnesses. The Court directed personal monitoring, inquiries and further compensation, together with a firm trial schedule. The application was disposed of with these directions, without an operative order releasing the applicant on bail. The Court also sought a compliance report on whether the earlier Rs 20,000 had been paid, recovered from salary and recorded in the service books.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the tenth regular bail application with directions. The State was to pay Rs 50,000 within fifteen days, with recovery from the salary of the Superintendent of Police, Bhind. Departmental inquiries against Sub-Inspector Vinod and the defaulting process server were to be initiated within the same period. The Superintendent of Police was also to report within two weeks whether the earlier Rs 20,000 had been paid, recovered and recorded in the service books. The Inspector General of Police, Chambal Range, was to submit a compliance report by 4 October 2021, file an affidavit about salary recovery and place copies of the disciplinary charge sheets on record. The trial was to proceed from day to day and conclude within three months of receipt of a certified or soft copy of the order. The Superintendent of Police was personally responsible for securing witness attendance; any request for exemption had to be supported by his affidavit giving reasons.

Jaipal Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 42352/2021, 14/09/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Article 21 speedy trial and NDPS bail — In his eighth application under Section 439, the applicant showed that police inspectors had repeatedly failed to attend despite summons and warrants, and that process had often not been returned. He remained in custody without progress in the trial. The State cannot secure bail for an accused through the dereliction of its own witnesses, but it cannot disregard his constitutional right to a speedy trial. In view of the allegations and the suspension of normal court functioning during COVID-19, the High Court dismissed the bail application. It nevertheless awarded Rs 20,000 compensation, payable by the State within thirty days and recoverable from the salaries of two inspectors, and directed that copies of the order be placed in their service books.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Jaipal had been in custody since 5 January 2018 for offences under NDPS Sections 8/20. His earlier bail application on the ground of delay had been rejected because he had not produced the trial order sheets. With his eighth application, he produced order sheets from March 2019 to February 2020. They recorded repeated non-return of summons, bailable warrants and arrest warrants issued for Inspectors Rekhapal and Ram Naresh Yadav, as well as their failure to attend even after service. The preliminary inquiry report submitted to the Superintendent of Police found their explanations unsatisfactory, and each inspector was fined Rs 5,000. They appeared before the trial court on 20 March 2020 only after the case had been adjourned. Normal court functioning was subsequently affected by COVID-19. The Court examined the earlier delay attributable to the police independently of that suspension.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hussainara Khatoon v. Home Secretary, State of Bihar, (1980) 1 SCC 98; Sheela Barse v. Union of India, (1986) 3 SCC 632; Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee (Representing Undertrial Prisoners) v. Union of India, (1994) 6 SCC 731; and Kartar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 3 SCC 569, were considered on the right to a speedy trial under Article 21 and remedies for delay. Rudul Shah v. State of Bihar, AIR 1983 SC 1086; Bhim Singh v. State of J&K, AIR 1986 SC 494; and D.K. Basu v. State of W.B., AIR 1997 SC 610, were considered on public-law compensation and State accountability. Sebastian M. Hongray, Saheli, Nilabati Behera and Nambi Narayan were also cited. The foreign decisions appear within the quotation from Hussainara Khatoon.

3. Statutes considered : Article 21 of the Constitution; Article 14, noted in the quotation from Supreme Court Legal Aid Committee; CrPC Sections 439 and 309; and NDPS Act Sections 8 and 20. The Police Headquarters circular dated 30 March 2019, requiring daily monitoring of process service by a gazetted officer, was also considered.

4. Issues : Did the repeated failure of police witnesses to attend violate the undertrial's right to a speedy trial? Did the prosecution's own default justify bail? Could compensation and officer accountability be ordered despite dismissal of the bail application?

5. Ratio / Findings : The police witnesses repeatedly failed to attend and did not seek exemption on reasonable grounds. Process was not reliably served or returned, and both the witnesses and the supervising officer disregarded the requirements of the trial. The right to a speedy trial is integral to Article 21. Bona fide delay beyond the prosecution's control may justify consideration of bail, but the State cannot create delay through the indifference of its officers and thereby become an instrument for securing bail. The violation of the applicant's fundamental right nevertheless warranted monetary compensation. The State cannot claim sovereign immunity for a violation of fundamental rights and may recover the compensation from the responsible officers.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the eighth application for regular bail in view of the allegations and the suspension of normal court functioning during COVID-19. It expected the prosecution to produce the remaining witnesses without default once normal functioning resumed. The State was directed to credit Rs 20,000 to the applicant's bank account within thirty days and recover that amount from the salaries of the two inspectors. The Superintendent of Police was to ensure payment. Copies of the order were to be sent to the senior authorities and placed in the inspectors' service books.

Jaipal Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 10547/2020, 25/06/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Patwari bribery trap — An applicant for mutation alleged that the Patwari demanded Rs 900 for three sale deeds. The Patwari admitted receiving the tainted notes but claimed that the money was repayment of a Rs 1,100 loan. The complainant denied executing the photocopied acknowledgment. The original document was not produced, the attesting witnesses were not examined, and a copy was given to an investigator only a year after the trap. The Court found demand and acceptance proved and applied the presumption under Section 20 of the Prevention of Corruption Act. It affirmed the convictions under Sections 7 and 13(1)(d)/13(2). The lapse of thirty-four years and the appellant's advanced age did not justify a sentence below the one-year minimum which the Court held applicable under Section 13(2) in 1990.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In 1990, Mardan Singh sought mutation of 5.2 acres purchased under three sale deeds. The Tahsildar directed that the applications be handed to Patwari Jaishanker, who allegedly demanded Rs 300 for each deed. For the Lokayukt trap, currency notes totalling Rs 900 were treated with powder and their serial numbers recorded. On 15 June 1990, Jaishanker received the notes and placed them under a register. His finger wash turned pink. In 1999, the trial court imposed concurrent sentences of one year's rigorous imprisonment and fines of Rs 1,000 under Sections 7 and 13(1)(d)/13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. On appeal, he claimed that the money was repayment of a Rs 1,100 loan to the complainant. He also sought leniency on the ground that he was over 76 years old and 34 years had elapsed.

2. Precedents — Considered : B.G. Goswami v. Delhi Administration, (1974) 3 SCC 85, was cited in support of reducing the sentence because of the passage of time. The High Court distinguished the statutory provisions considered in that case. It held that one year was the minimum sentence under Section 13(2) as applicable in 1990 and that it could not impose a shorter sentence.

3. Statutes considered : Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Sections 7, 13(1)(d) and 13(2), as applicable on 15 June 1990; the presumption under Section 20; and CrPC Section 374(2). The passage quoted from B.G. Goswami discusses IPC Section 161 and Section 5 of the earlier Prevention of Corruption Act; those provisions were not the charges in this appeal.

4. Issues : Was the tainted money repayment of a loan rather than a bribe demanded by the appellant? Did the photocopied acknowledgment and the vendor's testimony rebut the statutory presumption? Did the appellant's age and the extraordinary delay in the appeal justify a sentence below the statutory minimum?

5. Ratio / Findings : The complainant denied the loan, his signatures and execution of the document. Although execution was denied, the photocopy had been marked as an exhibit. Neither the original document nor the attesting witnesses were produced. Vendor Bhagwatsharan supported the loan explanation in cross-examination but had not mentioned it in his police statement. His evidence nevertheless confirmed that the mutation applications reached the appellant. The claim that the acknowledgment had been supplied to the investigator immediately after the trap was rejected: that investigator took over the investigation only a year later. The appellant admitted receiving the money but failed to establish his loan-repayment defence. The Court found demand and acceptance proved and applied the presumption under Section 20. The trap evidence included treated notes, their recovery and a pink finger wash. The Court declined to apply Goswami to reduce the sentence below what it held to be the one-year minimum under Section 13(2) as applicable in 1990.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed both convictions, the concurrent sentences of one year's rigorous imprisonment and the fines of Rs 1,000 each. The affirmed sentences also carried three months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment of each fine. The appellant's bail bonds were cancelled. He was directed to surrender by 30 August 2024, failing which the trial court was free to issue a warrant of arrest.

Jaishanker Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1241/1999, 06/08/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Holi procession dispute, common object — An armed group returned after an objection to indecent songs. Members of the lathi group assaulted Sarro bai. Gautam separately fired the fatal shot at Jeetu, while Jandel, Dilip and Vijay fired at Moti Khan. The allegation that all the accused had exhorted Gautam to kill was a material improvement. The initial common object of teaching a lesson did not establish that the lathi group shared the later object of killing or attempting to kill after the assembly dispersed to different places. The murder, attempt-to-murder and rioting convictions of the three surviving members of that group were set aside; their hurt and endangerment convictions were retained. The firearm group's conduct supported its murder and attempt-to-murder convictions. Defects in the spot map and the absence of a ballistic link did not displace credible eyewitness evidence. The appeals were partly allowed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : During Holi on 21 March 2011, Jeetu objected to indecent songs outside his family home. About half an hour later, a group returned with five guns and four lathis, hurled abuses and pelted stones. Hakim son of Nathu dragged Jeetu's mother, Sarro bai, and Hakim son of Dilip and Laxman beat her. Gautam shot Jeetu in the head from near Ram Janaki Temple. Jandel, Dilip, Vijay and Devi Singh allegedly fired at Jeetu's father, Moti Khan, from the Ganesh Temple side, but missed him. The trial court sentenced Gautam and six other surviving appellants to life imprisonment for murder, along with sentences for attempt to murder, hurt, rioting and endangerment; Jandel was also convicted under the Arms Act. Devi Singh and Laxman died during the appeal, and their appeals abated.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bhajan Singh v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 421, and CBI v. Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC 1, were considered on the relationship between eyewitness and medical evidence. Manjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2019) 8 SCC 529, and Sukhan Raut v. State of Bihar, (2001) 10 SCC 284, were considered on common object under Section 149 and the need for caution before imposing collective liability. Sikandar Singh, Masalti and Subal Ghorai are discussed within the passage quoted from Manjit Singh. Bhagwan Singh v. State of M.P., (2002) 4 SCC 85, and State of M.P. v. Mansingh, (2003) 10 SCC 414, were considered in rejecting the challenge based on the omission of an eyewitness's name from the FIR. In Ref (Suo Moto) v. Manoj, CRRFC 8/2019 (23 July 2021), concerned investigation alongside the duty to maintain law and order. Kundula Bala Subrahmanyam v. State of A.P., (1993) 2 SCC 684, and Amrik Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1994) 1 SCC 563, were considered on absconding as corroborative but not conclusive evidence. Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188; Gulab v. State of U.P., Criminal Appeal 81/2021; and Krishna Gope v. State of Bihar, (2003) 10 SCC 45, were considered on non-recovery or mismatch of weapons where reliable direct evidence was available. Further authorities appear within the lengthy Supreme Court quotations.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 141, 142, 148, 149, 302, 307, 323 and 336; Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27 in relation to Jandel; and CrPC Section 313. The charge-sheet also referred to IPC Sections 147, 324 and 201 and Arms Act Section 30, but no final conviction was recorded under those provisions.

4. Issues : Did all the members share a continuing common object to kill Jeetu and attempt to murder Moti Khan across the three locations? Was the eyewitness account of the firearm attacks reliable despite the changed account of exhortation, the deficient spot map and inconclusive firearm matching? How should the convictions be allocated between the lathi and firearm groups?

5. Ratio / Findings : Sarro bai's injuries were consistent with lathi blows even though one scalp wound appeared incised. The allegation that all the accused had exhorted Gautam to kill was absent from the earliest report and prior statements and was rejected as an improvement. The initial common object was to confront or teach a lesson. The lathi group's acts ended with the assault on Sarro bai at a different location. On these facts, arriving with the gunmen did not establish that the lathi group shared, or knew of, the later object of killing Jeetu and attempting to kill Moti Khan. The specific allegation that Kalu struck Sarro bai was not considered reliable, although his participation in abusing and pelting stones was established. Gautam's fatal shot from close range was proved. His unexplained absconding was relevant alongside the other evidence, and the deliberately cut firing pin indicated a guilty mind. The other gunmen fired at Moti Khan after Jeetu had been killed; their conduct supported the finding of a common lethal object at that stage. The crowd had impeded precise preparation of the spot map. Failure to connect the recovered weapons, or non-recovery of the actual weapon, did not displace reliable eyewitness testimony. Ballu Singh's evidence was not rendered unreliable merely because his name was absent from the FIR: there was no requirement to name every witness, and he had seen the incident from his nearby house. Jandel's separate convictions under Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27 were retained.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court acquitted Hakim son of Nathu, Hakim son of Dilip and Kalu under IPC Sections 302/149, 307/149 and 148, while retaining their convictions under Sections 323 and 336. They had served those sentences, and their bail bonds were discharged. Gautam, Jandel, Vijay and Dilip were acquitted under Section 323/149. Gautam's convictions under Sections 302, 307/149, 148 and 336 were retained. Jandel's, Dilip's and Vijay's convictions under Sections 302/149, 307, 148 and 336 were retained, as were Jandel's convictions under Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27. The sentences for the retained convictions were maintained and were to run concurrently. Compensation of Rs 25,000 to Jeetu's family and Rs 2,000 to Sarro bai, payable out of the fines, was preserved. The bail bonds of Jandel, Dilip and Vijay were cancelled, and they were directed to undergo the remaining sentences. Gautam, already in custody, was also to undergo his remaining sentence. The appeals were allowed in part.

Headnote :- POCSO sexual assault and witness proof — The school register established the prosecutrix's date of birth as 11 September 2001 and that she was a minor on 5 May 2016. She testified that Jaswant caught her hand with sexual intent and insisted that she accompany him. Her alarm brought her mother and others to the spot, and the FIR was promptly lodged. Independent evidence from neighbours was not essential when her account was reliable, and her mother's relationship to her was not a ground for rejecting that evidence. Allegations of stalking, demands for photographs and a mobile number, and threats had not appeared in the earlier statements. The Court nevertheless found that the central allegation of catching her hand remained intact. It affirmed the convictions and sentence under IPC Sections 354, 354-A and 354-D(i) and POCSO Sections 7/8 and 11/12.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 5 May 2016, a girl standing at the entrance to her home alleged that Jaswant caught her hand with improper intent and told her to accompany him. She shouted, and he fled when her mother and neighbours arrived. The trial court convicted him under IPC Sections 354-D(i), 354 and 354-A and POCSO Sections 7/8 and 11(i), 11(iv)/12. It imposed three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 3,000 under Section 8, and two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 2,000 for each of the offences under IPC Sections 354-A and 354-D(i). No separate sentence was imposed under Section 354. During the appeal, he failed to attend before the Registry after being released on bail. An experienced amicus curiae was appointed and argued the appeal. The defence contended that the prosecutrix's evidence lacked independent corroboration.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court assessed witness credibility and proof of age from the trial record.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 354, 354-A and 354-D(i); POCSO Act Sections 7, 8, 11(i), 11(iv) and 12; Evidence Act Section 35; CrPC Sections 161, 164 and 374(2).

4. Issues : Did the school record establish that the prosecutrix was a child? Could her evidence sustain the conviction without independent evidence from neighbours? Did the omissions concerning stalking and threats in the earlier statements make the principal incident unreliable? Did the sentence call for interference?

5. Ratio / Findings : School witness Vandana Sharma proved the admission register and the Headmaster's certificate recording the prosecutrix's date of birth as 11 September 2001. Her evidence was not materially shaken. The official entry was relevant under Section 35 and established that the prosecutrix was a minor on 5 May 2016. Her direct account that the appellant caught her hand with sexual intent remained intact. Her mother's immediate arrival and the prompt FIR supported that account; their relationship alone did not justify rejecting the mother's evidence. The prosecutrix admitted that stalking was not mentioned in the FIR or her statements under Sections 161 and 164. Demands for photographs and a mobile number, and the threat to her brother, were absent from the FIR and the Section 164 statement. The Court held that these omissions did not undermine the consistent allegation of catching her hand and affirmed all the convictions, including those for stalking and sexual harassment. It declined to interfere with the sentence, referring to the increasing number of similar offences and the security of girls in society.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions and sentences dated 30 January 2017. The appellant's bail bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to undergo the sentence.

Headnote :- Police inaction / FIR / alternative remedy - The Court applied Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171: the police must register information disclosing a cognizable offence, but an informant complaining of their failure should follow the Magistrate complaint procedure under CrPC Sections 190/200. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, explains that intervention under Article 226 for mala fide investigation and clear abuse of process is exceptional; even then, the High Court cannot direct how the police are to investigate. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, were followed on recourse under Sections 154(3) and 156(3), including the Magistrate's power to monitor proper investigation. The application under BNSS Section 528, in which the applicant alleged that no FIR had been registered, was dismissed as not maintainable. Liberty was granted to approach the Magistrate under CrPC Section 200 / BNSS Section 223. The merits of the alleged offence were not determined.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Jaswinder Singh applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, which the order identified as corresponding to Section 482 CrPC. The prayer sought a direction to complete the investigation within two months. His counsel, however, submitted that the police had not registered an FIR despite his complaint. The State opposed the application and relied on the remedy of a complaint before the Magistrate. The High Court considered the proper procedure when the police fail to register information about a cognizable offence; it did not decide the merits of the complaint.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from the informant's remedy if that duty is not performed. An aggrieved person may complain to the Magistrate under CrPC Sections 190/200. The High Court applied that distinction in declining a direct order to the police to register the offence. The quoted passage discusses All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh, Minu Kumari and Ramesh Kumari. It distinguishes the question of police duty in Ramesh Kumari from the procedure available to an aggrieved informant.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognises exceptional directions under Article 226 where mala fide investigation and clear abuse of the powers under Chapter XII are shown. Even then, the High Court cannot direct how the police are to investigate, although it may insist on compliance with the prescribed process. For ordinary police inaction, the decision points to the Magistrate procedure. The High Court quoted these limits in dismissing the application, without making a finding of exceptional abuse.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explains that an aggrieved person should first make a written application to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3). If the FIR is still not registered, or a registered case is not properly investigated, recourse lies to the Magistrate under Section 156(3), who may also monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reiterates the Section 156(3) remedy in place of routine High Court writ petitions. If prima facie satisfied, the Magistrate may direct registration or proper investigation and monitor it, but cannot investigate personally. The High Court relied on these decisions in requiring use of the alternative remedy. The Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016 (20 December 2016), holds that mandamus may be denied where statutory remedies have not been used, subject to the recognised exceptions referred to in Whirlpool Corporation. It distinguishes Lalita Kumari's ruling on the duty to register an FIR from entitlement to a writ. The Court adopted that principle on maintainability.

3. Statutes considered : BNSS Section 528 (inherent power) and Section 223 (Magistrate complaint route, as stated by the Court); CrPC Sections 482, 154, 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 (the judgment quotes older-code precedents); Constitution Article 226 (exceptional writ intervention); Chapter XII and Chapter XV of CrPC in quoted Supreme Court passages. The quoted authorities use CrPC provisions, and the Court's express liberty refers to Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS.

4. Issues : Could an application invoking inherent powers to direct completion of an investigation be maintained when the applicant also asserted that no FIR had been registered, or should he use the available Magistrate procedures? The Court did not determine whether the underlying complaint disclosed a cognizable offence or whether an investigation had actually begun.

5. Ratio / Findings : The duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence rests on the police. Their failure to perform that duty does not ordinarily permit an informant to bypass statutory recourse to the Magistrate. The authorities provide for a complaint before the Magistrate and for the Magistrate to secure registration and proper investigation where prima facie satisfied. The Magistrate may monitor the investigation but cannot investigate personally. Article 226 intervention remains available in a clear exceptional case of mala fide investigation and abuse of process. The present order made no finding of such exceptional abuse; it held the Section 528 application not maintainable because the alternative remedy was available. The merits of the complaint were not determined.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application as not maintainable, with liberty to approach the concerned Magistrate under CrPC Section 200 / BNSS Section 223. It did not issue the requested direction to complete the investigation within two months.

Jaswinder Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 1724/2025, 20/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Marriage) Act, 2019 / Section 2(c) / written talaq - In proceedings under Section 482 CrPC, the Court considered a registered-post notice treated as talaq-e-ahsan. It stated that the divorce would become final after three menstrual cycles unless the wife returned during iddah. Reading that condition in light of the 2019 Act's protective purpose, the Court held that this particular notice was in the nature of instantaneous talaq: the husband had already expressed an intention to grant an irrevocable divorce and had put pressure on the wife to return. Its label and deferred operation did not take the applicant's case outside the statutory prohibition. Counsel had relied on Saheer v. State of Kerala, Crl.MC 3632/2023 (13 November 2023), concerning a recognised form of divorce. The Court examined the notice's actual terms and the separate allegation of a later oral triple pronouncement.

Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Marriage) Act / subsequent oral talaq - Before the notice became operative, the husband allegedly pronounced talaq three times at the wife's parental home. On the FIR allegations, that separately disclosed an offence under Sections 3 and 4. The Court therefore refused to quash the proceedings without finally determining the facts.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Javed Naseem and the respondent wife married on 21 April 2017. In her FIR dated 23 December 2023, she alleged that he had sent self-signed talaknamas on 9 October 2022 and 29 January 2023, and that the divorce was prompted by an unmet dowry demand and the birth of a daughter. She further alleged that he visited her parental home on 25 February 2023 and pronounced triple talaq in the presence of family members, witnesses and a neighbour. The FIR also referred to a July 2023 fatwa and named the mother-in-law, sister-in-law and attesting witnesses. Javed alone applied under CrPC Section 482 to quash FIR Crime 338/2023 and the consequential proceedings. The defence said that the notice sent by registered post on 30 January 2023 was a recognised, revocable talaq-e-ahsan, which would become operative only after three menstrual cycles. The Court examined its actual text and the allegation of a subsequent oral pronouncement.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicant's counsel relied on Saheer v. State of Kerala, Crl.MC 3632/2023 (13 November 2023), to contend that a recognised form of talaq falls outside the criminal prohibition and may justify quashing. The deciding Court examined the statutory definition, the words of this notice and the separate allegation of a triple pronouncement.

3. Statutes considered : Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Marriage) Act, 2019, Section 2(c), defining talaq as talaq-e-biddat or a similar form having instantaneous and irrevocable effect; Section 3, declaring a Muslim husband's pronouncement of such talaq to his wife, by spoken, written, electronic or other means, void and illegal; and Section 4, prescribing imprisonment up to three years and fine. CrPC Section 482 governed the quashing application. The Court referred to the Act's purpose of protecting married Muslim women. The individual liability of the other persons named in the FIR was not determined.

4. Issues : Did the registered-post notice's conditional revocability and delayed operation take it outside Section 2(c), as counsel contended? Did the alleged oral triple talaq before that period expired nevertheless disclose an offence? Should the FIR be quashed at this preliminary stage? The truth of the allegations and the culpability of the other persons were not tried.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished immediately operative talaq-e-biddat from talaq-e-ahsan, which it described as revocable during iddah and operative after three menstrual cycles. Paragraph 18 of the notice stated that the divorce would become absolute unless the wife returned within that period. The Court reasoned that the husband had already expressed an intention to grant an irrevocable divorce and had made its avoidance conditional on her return, thereby putting pressure on her. It held that this particular notice fell within Section 2(c), despite its stated form and deferred operation. Independently, the wife alleged that the husband came to her parental home and pronounced talaq three times on 25 February 2023, before the written notice became operative. On the FIR allegations, that disclosed an offence involving prohibited talaq-e-biddat. The Court was deciding whether to quash the proceedings and made no final finding of guilt. Its conclusion concerned this conditional notice and the subsequent oral pronouncement alleged in this case. It held that the notice's condition did not take the applicant's case outside Section 2(c).

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The FIR and consequential proceedings were not quashed. It made no final determination of guilt or of the individual liability of the other accused persons.

Javed Naseem v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 8056/2024, 20/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Seized arms / production and identity - In State of Rajasthan v. Sahi Ram, (2019) 10 SCC 649, the Supreme Court explained that nonproduction of NDPS contraband was not the sole ground for acquittal in Vijay Jain, Jitendra, Ashok or Vijay Pandey. Failures to prove seizure or to link the seized material with the tested sample were also relevant. Applying that distinction in this Arms Act prosecution, the High Court rejected the contention that nonproduction automatically required acquittal. It also noted that the officer had identified the pistol and cartridges as trial exhibits.

Investigation / informant as investigating officer - In Mukesh Singh v. State (Narcotic Branch of Delhi), 2020:INSC:524, the Supreme Court confined earlier contrary observations to their facts and overruled the automatic-disqualification rule in Mohan Lal. Whether the informant's role as investigating officer caused bias or prejudice depends on the facts of each case. Applying that principle, the High Court held that the officer's dual role did not by itself vitiate the investigation.

Arms Act Section 25(1B)(a) / sanction and revision - The firearm was produced before the Collector in a sealed condition for sanction. Nonproduction of the Malkhana register did not show that the concurrent findings of recovery were perverse. The conviction and one-year sentence were upheld, and the revision was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Acting on information received on 15 September 2018, Head Constable Rakesh Shivhare and his party went to the Haddi Mill area, Guna. A person who fled on seeing the police was apprehended. A 0.32 bore country-made pistol and two live cartridges were allegedly seized from him without a licence. After ballistic examination and sanction by the Collector, the Magistrate convicted him under Arms Act Section 25(1B)(a) and sentenced him to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 500, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. His first appeal was dismissed. In revision, he contended that the informant had himself investigated the case, the Malkhana register had not been produced, and the seized articles had not been produced.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Rajasthan v. Sahi Ram, (2019) 10 SCC 649, was applied to determine the consequence of failing to produce seized material in court. It explained that Vijay Jain v. State of M.P., (2013) 14 SCC 527, involved both nonproduction of the contraband and failure to establish its seizure. In Jitendra v. State of M.P., (2004) 10 SCC 562, the panch witnesses had turned hostile and cogent proof of seizure was lacking. In Ashok v. State of M.P., (2011) 5 SCC 123, there was also no explanation of where the substance had been kept or evidence connecting the forensic report with the seized substance. Vijay Pandey v. State of U.P., (2019) 18 SCC 215, involved failure to link the seized sample with the tested sample. Sahi Ram thus held that nonproduction alone was not a ground for automatic acquittal. The High Court applied that principle and also found that the firearm said to be missing had in fact been identified as an exhibit. Noor Aga was referred to within the passage from Vijay Jain concerning samples under Section 52A of the NDPS Act; that sample procedure was not applied as a separate Arms Act requirement.

In Mukesh Singh v. State (Narcotic Branch of Delhi), 2020:INSC:524, the Supreme Court answered a reference by holding that the informant and investigator being the same person does not by itself establish bias. Bias or prejudice must be assessed on the facts of each case. It confined Bhagwan Singh, Megha Singh and Rajangam to their facts and expressly overruled the categorical contrary rule in Mohan Lal. The High Court applied Mukesh Singh to the officer's dual role; no further instance of bias was shown. The defence relied on Mohan Singh v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 5191/2018 (23 October 2024), concerning Malkhana records. The High Court addressed that objection by considering the evidence that the firearm had been produced in a sealed condition and the concurrent findings of recovery.

3. Statutes considered : The conviction was under Arms Act Section 25(1B)(a). The offences were initially registered under Sections 25 and 27, and sanction was obtained before prosecution. CrPC Sections 397 and 401 governed the revision. The Court relied on Supreme Court decisions concerning proof under the NDPS Act, but did not apply the sample procedure under NDPS Act Section 52A as a legal requirement in this Arms Act prosecution.

4. Issues : Did the alleged nonproduction of the seized pistol or failure to produce the Malkhana register necessarily defeat proof of seizure? Did the complainant's role as investigating officer automatically vitiate the trial? Were the concurrent factual findings concerning seizure and sanction perverse so as to warrant interference in revision?

5. Ratio / Findings : Sahi Ram establishes that nonproduction alone does not require acquittal: the earlier acquittals also rested on evidentiary defects, particularly failure to prove seizure or to link the tested material with what was seized. In any event, Shivhare identified the pistol and two cartridges at trial as A1 and A2. Under Mukesh Singh, bias cannot be presumed solely because the informant also investigated the case; no instance of case-specific unfairness was shown. Arms clerk Anoop Kumar Srivastava stated that the weapon had been produced before the Collector in a sealed condition. The Collector opened it and considered the case diary before granting sanction. Failure to produce the Malkhana register did not establish that the weapon's identity or the sanction was unreliable. Both the trial court and the first appellate court found the seizure proved, and no perversity in those concurrent findings was shown. The High Court therefore declined to interfere in revision and did not reassess the evidence afresh.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the revision in limine and recalled the applicant's bail bonds. It directed him to surrender immediately before the trial court, on or before 28 March 2025, to undergo the remaining sentence. If he failed to surrender, the trial court was to issue a warrant of arrest.

Jawar Pardi v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 5777/2024, 18/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Dowry cruelty / civil and criminal proceedings - Applying Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, the Court held that a husband's divorce petition or delay in the wife's report does not by itself justify quashing an FIR that prima facie discloses matrimonial offences. That review cannot rest on inferences of improper motive drawn from extraneous circumstances. Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State, (2009) 5 SCC 528, and Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon (2 April 2024) were followed on the independence of civil and criminal proceedings and their different standards of proof. Previous judgments may be relevant under Evidence Act Sections 40–43, but their findings do not automatically bind the other forum. The pending maintenance and property proceedings therefore did not negate the specific allegations under Section 498-A IPC and the Dowry Prohibition Act.

Section 482 CrPC / Section 528 BNSS / FIR-stage review - Applying the Supreme Court decisions cited on the limits of quashing jurisdiction, the Court held that it could not conduct a roving inquiry into the merits. The uncontroverted FIR allegations of demand and harassment disclosed offences, and the applicants' defence that the FIR was a counterblast could not be adjudicated at that stage. The petition was dismissed without a finding of guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The wife married Jayant in June 2018. She alleged that her father had given Rs 50 lakh in cash and jewellery worth Rs 20 lakh, but the husband and father-in-law demanded more money, assaulted her and subjected her to mental harassment. She alleged that they left her alone for months and that, under their pressure, her father provided a car, which the husband sold. She returned to her parental home when the assaults continued. FIR Crime 537/2024 alleged offences under IPC Section 498-A and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4. Jayant and his father sought quashing under CrPC Section 482 / BNSS Section 528. They contended that the FIR was a counterblast to the divorce petition filed in July 2019, the wife's pending application for maintenance under CrPC Section 125, and her civil suit for declaration of title, injunction and partition. The Court examined whether the FIR prima facie disclosed offences, without deciding whether the allegations were proved.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, held that delay in the wife's complaint and the husband's earlier divorce petition did not by themselves justify quashing. Attempts at settlement may explain delay, and civil and criminal proceedings are independent.

The High Court applied the requirement to assess the FIR allegations at face value and rejected the applicants' contention that the complaint should be quashed as a counterblast.

Kishan Singh (deceased) through LRs v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, explained that civil cases are decided on a preponderance of probabilities, whereas criminal guilt requires proof beyond reasonable doubt. Findings in one proceeding do not automatically bind the other, although Evidence Act Sections 41–43 may make particular earlier judgments relevant. The High Court applied that principle to the pending property suit. Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), (2009) 5 SCC 528, discussed K.G. Premshanker and the limited relevance of previous judgments under Sections 40–43, rejecting a general rule that civil findings bind criminal courts. The passage from Iqbal Singh Marwah reproduced within that discussion identifies the different standards of proof. The quoted M.S. Sheriff passage explains the precedence ordinarily given to criminal proceedings and the public interest in prompt prosecution, subject to exceptions depending on the facts; it does not prescribe a categorical stay. Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon, SLP (Cr.) 9778/2018 (2 April 2024), reaffirmed, through Iqbal Singh Marwah and M.S. Sheriff, that neither forum's findings automatically bind the other. The High Court applied their common principle without finally determining the effect of any civil finding in the still-pending suits.

The Court collectively cited XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha on the settled limits of quashing jurisdiction. Relying on those decisions, it stated that proceedings could be quashed only if the uncontroverted allegations did not disclose an offence. It could not conduct a roving inquiry into whether the FIR allegations were true.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 498-A concerned the alleged matrimonial cruelty and harassment; Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4 were the other reported offences. CrPC Section 482 / BNSS Section 528 governed the request for quashing, and CrPC Section 125 concerned the separate maintenance proceeding. Evidence Act Sections 40–43 governed the limited relevance of previous judgments discussed in the Supreme Court passages relied upon. Hindu Marriage Act Section 13 and CrPC Section 300 appeared within those quoted authorities, rather than as claims independently decided in this case.

4. Issues : Could an FIR containing specific allegations of dowry demand and cruelty be treated as mala fide solely because it followed divorce, maintenance and civil property proceedings? Did those proceedings or their findings control the criminal process? Could the disputed motive for the FIR and the truth of its allegations be decided in a petition under Section 482 / 528 during investigation?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found specific FIR allegations of unlawful demand and physical and mental harassment against both applicants sufficient to warrant investigation. Under Pratibha, review of the FIR's prima facie content could not be replaced by inferences drawn from the timing of the divorce petition or extraneous litigation history. Civil property and maintenance proceedings could continue alongside the criminal process. Kishan Singh, Syed Askari and Prem Raj establish that the different standards of proof preclude automatic binding effect between the forums, subject to the statutory relevance of particular previous judgments. No civil finding that could defeat this FIR was identified. The Court could examine whether the uncontroverted allegations disclosed an offence, but could not weigh the applicants' contention that the FIR was a counterblast through a roving inquiry into its truth. It decided only whether the proceedings should be quashed, without determining the truth of the allegations, the charge or guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application, leaving the investigation under IPC Section 498-A and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4 undisturbed.

Headnote :- Murder / Section 300 thirdly - Applying Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, the Court held that the prosecution must prove the presence and nature of the bodily injury, the intention to inflict that particular injury, and its objective sufficiency to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. A further subjective intention to kill is unnecessary. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra (Criminal Appeals 1078–1079/2005) distinguished the intention and knowledge alternatives under Section 299. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, and Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, require consideration of the weapon, the vital part struck, the force used and the circumstances; a single blow does not mechanically justify reducing the offence. The Court held that the firearm wounds through the abdomen and skull, the fatal brain injury and the eyewitness evidence of firing established murder.

Common intention / Section 34 IPC - Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra (2012), Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., AIR 2012 SC 3539, and Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753, were considered on the need for concert and participation. The coordinated armed interception and firing supported affirmance of Jhabbu's conviction under Section 302 and Kamal and Babloo's convictions under Section 302/34.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 28 August 2008, around noon near a hotel in Bhind, an armed group allegedly stopped Imam Khan. The prosecution attributed the attack to earlier enmity arising from the killing of an accused's brother. It alleged that Gambheer fired at Imam Khan's waist and Jhabbu then shot him in the head, causing his death. The deceased's sons and another witness described a coordinated attack. The trial court convicted Jhabbu under IPC Section 302 and Arms Act Sections 25/27, and Kamal and Babloo under IPC Section 302/34. It imposed life imprisonment for each murder conviction and three years' rigorous imprisonment under the Arms Act. Each sentence carried a fine of Rs 500, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. In appeal, the accused contended that the eyewitnesses lived in Itawa, that the jail visitors' register did not record Imam's alleged meeting with his son Shahjad, and that contradictions, prior enmity and absence of motive supported their plea of false implication. The prosecution relied on the direct testimony, medical evidence and recovery of Jhabbu's firearm.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, supplied the four-part Thirdly test. The prosecution must objectively establish the injury and its nature, prove the intention to inflict that particular injury rather than an accidental or different injury, and establish objectively that the injury was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. The High Court applied that test to two firearm tracks, including a destructive skull wound. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079/2005, distinguished the intention and knowledge alternatives in Section 299, the murder clauses in Section 300 and its exceptions. The Court used that distinction to frame the inquiry into murder and culpable homicide not amounting to murder. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, similarly explains objective sufficiency, for which the weapon and the part of the body struck may be relevant. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejects an automatic rule that a single blow excludes murder. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, gives a nonexhaustive list of circumstances relevant to intention, including the weapon, the vital part struck, the force used, prior enmity and a sudden quarrel. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, treats a forceful blow to the head, a vital part, as evidence of intention. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, bring together the principles governing a single blow and the circumstances of the injury. The Court discussed those principles at length, but this case involved more than one firearm injury rather than a borderline single-blow case. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, explains the cumulative requirements of Exception 4: absence of premeditation, a sudden mutual fight in the heat of passion, no undue advantage or conduct that is cruel or unusual, and a fight with the person killed. The Court quoted those requirements and ultimately classified the shooting as murder under Section 300 Thirdly.

For Section 34, Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra (2012), Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., AIR 2012 SC 3539, and Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753, were cited on concert and participation. Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 1083, permits an inference of a shared plan even where it develops at the scene. Hem Raj, Dashrathlal, Rajagopalswamy Konar and Sheikh Nabab caution against imposing collective liability on mere accompaniment or participation that has not been proved. The Court ultimately relied on eyewitness evidence that the group stopped the deceased and fired at him.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 299, 300, particularly Thirdly and the quoted Exception 4, 302, 304 Parts I and II, 34 and 304-A were discussed in explaining the law of homicide. Arms Act Sections 25 and 27 concerned Jhabbu's conviction, and CrPC Section 374 governed the appeal. Section 34 provides for constructive liability when several persons commit a criminal act in furtherance of their common intention; it does not create a separate substantive homicide offence.

4. Issues : Did the firearm death amount to murder under Section 300 Thirdly or to a lesser offence? Did the eyewitness account, medical evidence and recovery identify the attackers despite the alleged contradictions and the objection based on the jail visitors' register? Did Kamal and Babloo share a common intention sufficient to support conviction under Section 302/34? Should the firearm-possession conviction be upheld?

5. Ratio / Findings : The postmortem disclosed firearm entrance and exit wounds through the abdomen and head, missing skull bone and exposed brain matter. The doctor described the death as homicidal, caused by a firearm injury to a vital organ. Applying the subjective and objective elements explained in Virsa Singh, the Court held that the injuries were intentionally inflicted and sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature, bringing the case within Section 300 Thirdly. A separate intention to cause death was unnecessary. The deceased's sons, Ajeem and Chanda, and witness Baseem supported the account of the attack, which was not materially altered in cross-examination. The Court preferred that account to the defence witness's evidence and held that the place from which the eyewitnesses had come was irrelevant. It accepted the police evidence of recovery of a .315-bore firearm and a round from Jhabbu, although the arrest and seizure witnesses did not corroborate the prosecution. The coordinated stopping and firing in the setting of prior enmity supported the convictions, including liability under Section 34.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions and sentences. It cancelled Kamal and Babloo's bail bonds, which had followed suspension of their sentences, and directed them to surrender immediately before the trial court. Jhabbu was reported to have been released on parole from prison; the trial court was directed to secure his custody to serve the remaining sentence.

Jhabbu and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 263/2010, 24/11/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — quashing FIR and charge-sheet — FIR omission of names — later Section 161 attribution — alleged mala fides. Applying Neeharika Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, the Court held that police must ordinarily be permitted to investigate cognizable allegations. An FIR need not contain every detail, and quashing is exceptional. The Court examines whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence, without deciding their reliability. The applicants were not named in Crime 60/2023, but later statements attributed fist blows and an iron-rod blow to them. Whether the omission was a material contradiction required evidence and could not be decided under Section 482. Applying Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, the Court held that alleged mala fides of the informant do not by themselves justify quashing where cognizable allegations are disclosed. It also rejected as misconceived the contention that the FIR was intended to ruin applicant 1's teacher appointment: the FIR dated 23 April 2023 preceded his appointment on 12 August 2023. Quashing was refused.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants sought quashing of FIR Crime 60/2023, registered at Bhaguapura, Datia, under IPC Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34, and of the charge-sheet. Their names were absent from the initial FIR. Statements recorded under Section 161 on 21 May 2023 alleged that they had beaten Arvind Jatav with their fists and that applicant 2 had struck his head with an iron rod. The applicants contended that their later naming was an improvement and that the FIR had been maliciously lodged to jeopardise applicant 1's employment as a primary teacher. They also alleged that FIR Crime 62/2023, accusing them of pressuring the complainant to compromise and firing in the air, was false. Applicant 1 was appointed on 12 August 2023. His appointment was kept in abeyance on 27 October 2023 pending the criminal case, and his joining was rejected on 20 February 2024. The challenged FIR had been lodged on 23 April 2023.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, was quoted and applied. It explains the police duty to investigate cognizable allegations, the restraint against stopping criminal proceedings at the outset, and the principle that an FIR need not contain every detail. Review under Section 482 cannot test the genuineness or reliability of allegations as though the Court were trying the charge. Its recognised exception permits intervention where the allegations disclose no offence, consistently with R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, and State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, referred to within the quoted framework. The Court applied that framework in leaving the disputed explanation for the omitted names to the evidence of the complainant and witnesses. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was separately quoted and applied: once cognizable allegations are made, the informant's alleged mala fides are of secondary importance. The reproduced discussion sets out the R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal categories and cautions against weighing reliability or probabilities. The Court collectively cited XYZ v. State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha for the threshold that the uncontroverted allegations must fail to disclose an offence before proceedings are quashed.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 governs inherent quashing power and Section 161 the later witness statements; IPC Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 are the FIR offences. The judgment refers to a charge-sheet and refuses to quash both the FIR and charge-sheet.

4. Issues : Did the omission of the applicants' names from the FIR justify quashing despite later statements assigning specific acts of assault to them? Did the alleged malicious attempt to damage a teacher appointment justify intervention? Should the FIR and charge-sheet be quashed in proceedings under Section 482?

5. Ratio / Findings : Following Neeharika, the Court examined whether the uncontroverted allegations disclosed an offence, taking them at face value without assessing their merits. The later statements assigned active roles to the applicants. The complainant's explanation and the witnesses' evidence were needed to determine why the names had been omitted from the FIR and whether that omission was material. The Court declined to treat it as proof of false implication in proceedings under its inherent jurisdiction. Applying Renu Kumari, it held that alleged mala fides do not by themselves defeat an accusation disclosing a cognizable offence. It also rejected the particular claim that the FIR was intended to cause loss of employment as misconceived because the FIR preceded the teacher appointment by nearly four months. The order did not determine the truth of the accusations or the merits of Crime 62/2023.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application, finding no ground to quash the FIR or charge-sheet.

Jitendra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 41475/2024, 05/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- NDPS Act Sections 8/20 and 50 — ganja bags in accused persons' hands — police witnesses — revisional restraint. Separate bags containing 700 g and 400 g were recovered from the applicants' hands; the recovery did not involve a body search. Although the independent witnesses turned hostile, that did not by itself justify rejecting the police testimony. The seized exhibits, seizure memos and FSL description supported the finding that the substance was ganja. Applying Bir Singh v. Mukesh Kumar, (2019) 4 SCC 197, the Court held that revision does not permit reappraisal of concurrent factual findings in the absence of perversity or jurisdictional error. The possibility of another view is insufficient. No perversity was shown. The convictions under Section 8/20 and one-year rigorous-imprisonment sentences were affirmed. The defence disputed combining the separate quantities as 1.1 kg; the Court considered the individual recoveries of 700 g and 400 g and declined to interfere with the sentences.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : These connected revisions challenged the JMFC's convictions under NDPS Sections 8/20 and their affirmance in appeal. Acting on information recorded on 4 September 2014, police approached Ramu Chidar and Jitendra Batham, served notices under Section 50 and recovered polythene bags carried in their hands. The seizure attributed 700 grams of ganja to Ramu and 400 grams to Jitendra, with separate samples. Each was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 10,000, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. They disputed the seizure because the independent witnesses had turned hostile and objected to combining the separate quantities as 1.1 kg. The State relied on the concurrent findings.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bir Singh v. Mukesh Kumar, (2019) 4 SCC 197, was quoted and applied on the limits of revisional interference with concurrent factual findings in the absence of perversity or jurisdictional error. The quoted passage refers to Southern Sales & Services v. Sauermilch Design and Handels GmbH, (2008) 14 SCC 457, on jurisdictional error. The Court found no such defect. It considered the evidence concerning the hand-carried bags, the seizure and the police witnesses within those revisional limits.

3. Statutes considered : NDPS Act Sections 8/20 concerned possession and conviction, and Section 50 concerned the notices recorded in the account of the search, which the Court distinguished from a body search because the bags were carried in the applicants' hands. CrPC Sections 397 and 401 governed the revisions. The passage quoted from Bir Singh mentions Section 482, whereas these revisions were decided under Sections 397/401.

4. Issues : Was seizure proved despite the hostile independent witnesses and the differing wet and dry descriptions? Did recovery from bags carried in the applicants' hands amount to a personal search? Were the concurrent findings perverse? Did the sentences or the alleged aggregation of quantities warrant interference in revision?

5. Ratio / Findings : The contraband was carried in bags held in the applicants' hands; its recovery did not involve a body search. When opened in court, the exhibits contained dry, blackish plant matter. The seizure memos described wet ganja, while the FSL described greenish-brown seeds, leaves and flowering tops. Reading those descriptions together, the Court found that the seized substance was ganja. The fact that the independent witnesses turned hostile did not by itself discredit the police witnesses. Applying the revisional rule in Bir Singh, the Court found no perversity in the concurrent findings. On sentence, it referred separately to the recovery of 700 grams from Ramu Chidar and 400 grams from Jitendra Batham and held that the one-year rigorous-imprisonment sentences and fines did not warrant interference. It accordingly left the one-year prison terms and fines undisturbed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both revisions in limine and affirmed the convictions and sentences. The applicants, who were already in jail, were directed to serve their remaining terms.

Jitendra Batham v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Ramu Chidar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 1222/2022 & 1236/2022, 13/07/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- CrPC Section 311 — additional witnesses after final arguments — alleged filling of prosecution lacuna — fair trial. A court may summon or recall a witness at any stage and must do so if the evidence appears essential to a just decision. Varsha Garg v. State of M.P. (2022), Zahira Habibullah H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158, Munnu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1, Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271, and Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110, were cited on the court's participatory role alongside Evidence Act Section 165. The accused failed to identify the prosecution lacuna allegedly being filled. The order summoning four prosecution witnesses at that late stage was upheld, and the Section 482 application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sessions Trial 72/2018 concerned the death of the applicant's wife and offences under IPC Sections 304-B, 498-A and 176. After final arguments had been heard and the matter listed for judgment, the prosecution sought to examine four further witnesses. The trial court allowed the request under CrPC Section 311 on 23 February 2023. Challenging that order under Section 482, the applicant argued that the witnesses had not been included in the trial programme and that their examination was intended to cure a defect he had identified in final arguments. His account also referred to earlier unsuccessful efforts to secure a doctor's attendance. The impugned order summoned police officers Sunil Nema, Ramswaroop Verma and Sitaram Yadav, and Phool Singh Parte.

2. Precedents — Considered : Varsha Garg v. State of M.P. (judgment dated 8 August 2022), Zahira Habibullah H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158, Munnu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1, Mohanlal Shamji Soni v. Union of India, 1991 Supp (1) SCC 271, and Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110, were collectively relied upon for the principle that a criminal trial court cannot remain a passive spectator. It may exercise its powers under Section 311 and Evidence Act Section 165 to secure evidence essential to a just decision. Applying Section 311 and the authorities on the court's participatory role, the High Court held that the applicant had not identified the alleged prosecution lacuna and that summoning the witnesses involved no jurisdictional error.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 311 permits summoning or recalling material witnesses at any stage and requires the court to act where the evidence appears essential to a just decision. Section 482 governed the challenge, and Evidence Act Section 165 concerned the court's power to question witnesses. IPC Sections 304-B, 498-A and 176 were the underlying charges, which were not decided in this application.

4. Issues : Could the trial court summon four prosecution witnesses after final arguments had been heard and the case fixed for judgment? Did the allegation that the prosecution was repairing a lacuna require that order to be quashed?

5. Ratio / Findings : The trial court must consider whether additional evidence is essential to a just decision and cannot remain a silent spectator. It cannot act as prosecutor, but a bare allegation that the prosecution seeks to fill a gap is insufficient. The applicant did not identify the lacuna supposedly being repaired. The trial court therefore acted within its jurisdiction in allowing the Section 311 request, and no error warranted intervention under Section 482. The High Court did not determine what the witnesses would eventually say or decide the underlying dowry-death charges.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application and upheld the order summoning the four witnesses.

Jitendra Dhare Ghatle v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 14429/2023, 12/04/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (263) Prev Next

Headnote :- Successive bail / CrPC Section 439 — POCSO and IPC rape, kidnapping — disputed minor age. The sixth bail application followed a refusal on merits. That refusal had proceeded on Independent Thought v. Union of India, (2017) 10 SCC 800: Exception 2 to IPC Section 375 does not exempt intercourse with a wife below 18 from Section 376. The school record gave the prosecutrix's date of birth as 8 May 2001, placing her below 18 on 30 November 2018; final determination of age remained for trial. Applying Anversinh v. State of Gujarat, (2021) 3 SCC 12, the Court held that, on the prosecution allegation, a minor leaving home on the accused's enticement could still attract IPC Sections 363/366. The State described K. Dhandapani as relief granted on the particular family circumstances. The Court did not treat it as displacing Independent Thought and found no ground to take a different view on bail. The application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This was the applicant's sixth application under Section 439, following rejection of his fifth application on merits on 13 May 2022. He had been arrested on 29 April 2021 in Crime 348/2018 for offences under IPC Sections 363, 366-A and 376 and POCSO Sections 3/4. The defence disputed the prosecutrix's age and the basis of the school entry under Evidence Act Section 35 and the 1973 Madhya Pradesh school-register rules. It also sought a sympathetic view on the basis of customs permitting minor marriage. The State relied on the school-record birth date of 8 May 2001 and the date of departure, 30 November 2018, to place her age at about 17 years and 6 months. Her brother's later testimony giving an approximate age was also discussed. The school entry's final evidentiary value was not decided in the bail proceeding.

2. Precedents — Considered : Independent Thought v. Union of India, (2017) 10 SCC 800, had supplied the binding basis for the earlier refusal, which the Court maintained. As read down, the marital exception in IPC Section 375 did not exempt intercourse with a wife below 18. Anversinh alias Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v. State of Gujarat, (2021) 3 SCC 12, was applied to the allegation that a minor induced to leave home could still be the subject of kidnapping charges despite leaving with the accused. K. Dhandapani v. State (Criminal Appeal 796/2022) was raised in the State's submissions. The State described that decision as relief concerning family life, apparently granted under Article 142 without consideration of Independent Thought. The High Court did not itself apply it or grant similar relief. It recorded, but did not accept, the applicant's proposed criticism of Independent Thought.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 439; IPC Sections 363, 366-A, 376 and Section 375 Exception 2; POCSO Sections 3/4; Evidence Act Section 35 and Madhya Pradesh Date of Birth (Entries in the School Register) Rules, 1973 as contested age proof. Article 142 was raised in the State's description of K. Dhandapani, not exercised by this Court.

4. Issues : Did the disputed age and asserted marriage customs justify bail after the earlier refusal on merits? How did Independent Thought and Anversinh bear on the provisional allegations? Should the evidentiary value of the school entry be finally determined at this stage?

5. Ratio / Findings : Final determination of age was left to the trial court. For the bail decision, the school record placed the prosecutrix below 18 when she left home, and the earlier basis under Independent Thought remained. On the prosecution allegation that the accused had enticed a minor to leave, Anversinh supported the kidnapping aspect. The Court found no reason to take a different view on the sixth application. It did not decide the actual validity of any marriage, the final age or guilt, or whether K. Dhandapani created a general exception.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the sixth application for regular bail.

Jitendra Kushwah v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 32002/2022, 14/07/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Criminal-side writ / Article 226 — quashing a charge-sheeted FIR — extortion allegations — asserted police mala fides and alibi. Taken at face value, the allegations of a demand for ₹50 lakh, abuse and death threats disclosed cognizable offences. The petitioner's claims that he was at the nearby SP office and that corrupt police officers had conspired against him could not be adjudicated in quashing proceedings. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was applied: alleged mala fides of the informant are of secondary importance where the allegations disclose an offence. Chaman Lal Goyal, P.P. Sharma and the related Supreme Court authorities require an official accused of personal mala fides to be impleaded and given an opportunity to answer. The petitioner had not impleaded the former SP or the MLA. H.N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi, AIR 1955 SC 196, explains that an investigative defect does not affect the Court's competence to take cognizance or conduct a trial; the result of the trial is not vitiated unless a miscarriage of justice is shown. The writ petition was dismissed without deciding the petitioner's guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The petitioner sought quashing under Article 226 of the FIR in Crime 365/2019, Police Station Omti, Jabalpur, registered under IPC Sections 294, 506 and 384. The FIR alleged that, after a memorial ceremony on 30 August 2019, he entered Sindhi Dharmashala's office, abused an office bearer and demanded ₹50 lakh, threatening to have the premises locked if the amount was not paid. It also alleged threats to kill the office bearer and spread false videos. The police completed the investigation and filed a charge-sheet. The petitioner alleged that the former SP and other officers had threatened him because of his complaints against them and the society. He claimed that he was at the SP office when the incident occurred and alleged that a local MLA was behind the action. He had not impleaded the former SP or the MLA in their personal capacity.

2. Precedents — Considered : On the scope of quashing proceedings, the Court reproduced a series of Supreme Court decisions, including Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, XYZ v. State of Gujarat, S. Martin, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy, M. Srikanth, M.N. Ojha, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh. It relied on these decisions to hold that disputed defence facts, appreciation of evidence and a meticulous enquiry are outside the scope of quashing proceedings where the uncontroverted allegations disclose an offence. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was specifically applied to hold that alleged mala fides of the informant are of secondary importance where the allegations disclose a cognizable offence. State of Punjab v. Chaman Lal Goyal, (1995) 2 SCC 570; State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222; Federation of Railway Officers Association v. Union of India, AIR 2003 SC 1344; J.N. Banavalikar v. MCD, AIR 1996 SC 326; and All India State Bank Officers' Federation v. Union of India, (1997) 9 SCC 151, require the person accused of mala fides to be impleaded so that the allegations can be answered. Indian Railway Construction Co. v. Ajay Kumar, (2003) 4 SCC 579, explains the heavy burden of proving bad faith. The Court applied these principles because the former SP and the MLA had not been impleaded. Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, was applied to the duty to register an FIR where the allegations disclose a cognizable offence. H.N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi, AIR 1955 SC 196, was quoted at length to explain that illegality in investigation does not automatically invalidate cognizance or trial, and that the trial's result is not vitiated unless a miscarriage of justice is shown. The High Court's order in Prashant Kumar Nimgani was relied on for the principle that a plea of alibi must be proved at trial.

3. Statutes considered : Articles 226/227 of the Constitution were considered in relation to the High Court's power to quash proceedings. CrPC Section 482 was discussed as the parallel jurisdiction to quash proceedings, and Section 190 was considered within the framework of cognizance quoted from H.N. Rishbud. The FIR invoked IPC Sections 294, 506 and 384. The Court did not determine whether each offence was ultimately proved.

4. Issues : Whether the FIR and charge-sheet should be quashed on the petitioner's allegations of police bias and ulterior motive, and his claim that he was elsewhere at the time of the incident; whether allegations of personal mala fides could be examined without impleading the persons concerned; and what effect the alleged investigative defects had after the charge-sheet was filed.

5. Ratio / Findings : Taken at face value, the allegations of unauthorised entry, abuse, a demand for ₹50 lakh and death threats disclosed a cognizable offence. The petitioner had not explained how those allegations failed to disclose an offence. Their truth and his plea of alibi were matters for trial evidence. The Court stated that the accused must prove an alibi at trial by cogent evidence; the authority it reproduced required proof beyond reasonable doubt. The SP office was said to be only 2–3 km from the place of the incident, so attendance there did not exclude his presence at the spot. The allegations of mala fides involved disputed facts, and the former SP and the MLA had not been impleaded to give them an opportunity to answer. The charge-sheet had already been filed, and the proceedings were now before the trial court. As explained in H.N. Rishbud, illegality in investigation does not itself invalidate cognizance or trial; the trial's result is not vitiated unless a miscarriage of justice is shown. The Court did not decide whether the officers had acted corruptly or whether the petitioner was guilty.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition and declined to quash the FIR or otherwise interfere.

Headnote :- Investigation control / Section 482 CrPC — accused request to preserve CCTV footage and call records. The applicants in a gang-rape FIR claimed that they were absent from the scene and sought a direction requiring the police to obtain and preserve specified private records. Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was applied: an accused has no right to choose the investigating agency or dictate the manner of investigation. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was applied to distinguish exceptional court monitoring to ensure a fair and timely investigation from supervision that directs how the police investigate. The trial court must remain independent in assessing the evidence. Divine Retreat Centre, quoted through Romila Thapar, recognises the High Court's power to issue directions under Article 226 where it is satisfied that the investigating officer exercised the power of investigation mala fide. The Section 482 application was dismissed, leaving the applicants free to raise their alibi at trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants sought directions under Section 482 CrPC to preserve private CCTV footage and call records for the relevant time and place in Crime 419/2020, Police Station Mehgaon, Bhind, registered under IPC Section 376-D. They contended that those records would establish that they were absent from the scene. The Court considered the requested direction concerning the investigation; it did not decide the merits of the FIR or whether the recordings were available.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was directly applied to hold that the accused cannot choose the investigating agency or dictate the manner of investigation. The discussion quoted from that decision relies on Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar and Divine Retreat Centre. Divine Retreat Centre recognises the High Court's power under Article 226 to issue directions where it is satisfied that the investigating officer exercised the power of investigation mala fide. The deciding Court applied the rule that an accused cannot seek a direction requiring investigation in a particular manner. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was directly applied to distinguish monitoring in exceptional cases to ensure fairness and timely progress from supervision that directs the collection of evidence and may influence the trial court. The Court also quoted its order in Prabal Dogra, which relies on Manohar Lal Sharma and Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, when explaining the police duties of registration and investigation and the limits of judicial interference.

3. Statutes considered : The application was made under CrPC Section 482. Section 173(2) was referred to in the quotation from Manohar Lal Sharma concerning the police report. The underlying FIR was registered under IPC Section 376-D. Article 226 was mentioned in the exception recognised by the Supreme Court; it was not the provision under which the applicants sought relief.

4. Issues : Whether accused persons could obtain a direction requiring the police to preserve and examine specified CCTV footage and call records to establish their alibi, on the ground of securing a fair investigation or monitoring the investigation.

5. Ratio / Findings : Investigation is within the domain of the police. The accused may put forward their defence at trial, but cannot use Section 482 to require investigation from a particular angle. Even where an investigation is monitored in exceptional circumstances, the Court ensures fairness and timely completion without supervising particular steps in collecting evidence. The Article 226 exception recognised in Divine Retreat Centre, as quoted through Romila Thapar, concerns cases in which the High Court is satisfied that the investigating officer exercised the power of investigation mala fide. The Court did not determine whether the applicants were present at the scene or whether the CCTV footage or call details existed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application and issued no direction to preserve CCTV footage or call records.

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / Section 528 BNSS — FIR for BNS Sections 115(2), 296 and 3(5) — plot-dispute assault — hotel CCTV alibi and fair-investigation request. Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was applied to hold that a suspect cannot choose the investigating agency or dictate the course of investigation. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, distinguishes exceptional court monitoring from supervision of particular investigative steps. Vijay Pal, S.K. Sattar and Binay Kumar Singh were applied to hold that a disputed alibi must be proved at trial. The prosecution retains the burden of proving the accused's presence and participation. Once that burden is discharged, the accused must strictly prove the asserted absence so as to exclude presence at the scene, while remaining entitled to the benefit of any reasonable doubt arising from the defence evidence. The hotel CCTV footage and the companion's whereabouts could not be assessed in the exercise of inherent powers. Taken at face value, the allegations of abuse and physical assault disclosed an offence. The requests for quashing and directions controlling the investigation were refused.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The FIR in Crime 650/2024, Police Station Maharajpura, Gwalior, alleged that on 18 October 2024 the complainant objected to construction on his disputed plot. Four persons, including the applicant, allegedly abused him and assaulted him and two relatives who intervened, using fists and a stick. The applicant sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC/528 BNSS and a fair investigation. He claimed that he was in a hotel about 20 km away, that CCTV footage supported his presence there, and that another named person was elsewhere. He also alleged that the authorities had ignored his representations.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was applied to hold that an accused cannot choose the investigating agency or prescribe the manner of investigation. The passage quoted from that decision includes Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar, Divine Retreat Centre, Narender G. Goel and other decisions concerning the accused's participation in, and control over, investigation. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, was separately quoted for the rule that an accused has no right to dictate the manner of investigation or to be heard as a matter of course at that stage. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was separately applied: court monitoring may ensure fairness and progress, but supervision cannot direct how the evidence is collected. The High Court's order in Prabal Dogra followed the same principle. Vijay Pal v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, were quoted on alibi as a factual defence. The prosecution must first discharge its burden of proving the accused's presence and participation; the accused must then establish the alibi by cogent evidence excluding presence at the scene. The accused is nevertheless entitled to the benefit of reasonable doubt arising from the defence evidence, and failure to establish an alibi does not relieve the prosecution of independently proving its case beyond reasonable doubt. The Court also cited the authorities from XYZ v. State of Gujarat through M.N. Ojha for the principle that quashing is warranted where the uncontroverted allegations do not disclose an offence, and that disputed defence claims cannot be adjudicated in these proceedings.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 482 and BNSS Section 528 concern the inherent jurisdiction invoked. The FIR alleged offences under BNS Sections 115(2), 296 and 3(5). Evidence Act Section 11 was discussed in the quoted alibi authorities, without deciding admissibility at trial. The civil dispute over the plot provided the factual context; title was not adjudicated.

4. Issues : Whether the accused could obtain a direction requiring the police to verify hotel CCTV footage and a co-accused's whereabouts; and whether the asserted alibi or the pending civil dispute over the plot justified quashing the FIR at the threshold.

5. Ratio / Findings : The accused could not dictate the police's investigative choices. The High Court would neither turn monitoring into supervision nor decide the disputed hotel alibi in an application under Section 482/528. The alibi authorities preserve the prosecution's burden of proving presence and participation, and require the defence to be tested at trial. Strict proof of an alibi is required once the prosecution discharges that burden, but the accused remains entitled to the benefit of reasonable doubt arising from the defence evidence. Failure to establish an alibi does not itself establish the prosecution case, which must be proved independently beyond reasonable doubt. The claimed absence was not treated as established at this stage. Taking the allegations of abuse and assault at face value, the Court found no ground for quashing or other interference. It did not decide title to the plot, the authenticity of the CCTV footage or guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application, declining to quash the FIR or direct investigation from a particular angle.

Jitendra Singh Narwariya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 54772/2024, 20/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a) — .32-bore pistol and live cartridge without licence — police seizure testimony — probation. Although one independent witness turned hostile, the consistent recovery evidence of the police officers, the armourer's report that the mechanism was working and proof of sanction supported the conviction. The Court found no reason to disbelieve the recovery evidence of Deepak Singh Tomar and Amod Tiwari. The applicant had served 130 days of the one-year sentence. Following Rakesh alias Nanga v. State of M.P. (2019), the High Court extended the benefit of Section 3 of the Probation of Offenders Act. It maintained the conviction and modified the sentence to release after due admonition. The Court warned the applicant against future offences and directed that, if he was found involved in any other offence in future, the benefit would stand withdrawn without further reference to the Court and he would undergo the remaining jail sentence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The revision under CrPC Sections 397/401 challenged the concurrent conviction under Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a) and the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs 500 and default imprisonment. According to the police, Jitendra alias Jitu tried to flee at Do-Khamba Bypass on 27 February 2017 and was found carrying a .32-bore pistol and a live cartridge without a licence. A panch witness turned hostile. The officers described the seizure, the armourer found the weapon to be working when examined, and prosecution sanction was produced. The defence principally sought the benefit of the Probation of Offenders Act, relying on Rakesh alias Nanga. The applicant had spent 110 days in custody during trial and 20 days after the appeal.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court quoted and followed its decision i*n Rakesh alias Nanga v. State of M.P.*, CRR 3782/2019. In that case, the benefit of Section 3 was extended in view of the substantial period already served and the absence of prior conduct sufficient to justify further confinement. The Court followed that approach after considering the present applicant's 130 days in custody. It decided the conviction on the evidence of the witnesses, the armourer's report and proof of sanction.

3. Statutes considered : The conviction was under Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a); the case was initially registered under Sections 25/27. Section 3 of the Probation of Offenders Act was applied to release the applicant after admonition. The revision was under CrPC Sections 397/401. Mahendra Singh Chauhan proved the District Magistrate's prosecution sanction, exhibited as Ex. P8.

4. Issues : Whether the seizure and the firearm's working condition were proved despite a hostile independent witness and its subsequent non-working condition; and whether the conviction should be maintained while modifying the one-year custodial sentence by extending the benefit of Section 3.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the recovery evidence of Deepak Singh Tomar and Amod Tiwari, noting that the applicant had shown no reason to disbelieve them. The prosecution case could not be rejected merely because one independent witness had turned hostile. The armourer had found the pistol to be working. In cross-examination, Amod Tiwari acknowledged that it was no longer working, but stated that it had been working when seized and identified the weapon produced in court as the same pistol. The conviction was affirmed. Considering the 130 days already served and the approach in Rakesh alias Nanga, the Court extended the benefit of Section 3 and modified the sentence to release after due admonition. It further directed that, if the applicant was found involved in any other offence in future, the benefit would stand withdrawn without reference to the Court and he would undergo the remaining jail sentence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the revision to the extent of modifying the sentence. It affirmed the conviction and directed release after due admonition. The order further directed that, if the applicant was found involved in any other offence in future, the benefit would stand withdrawn without reference to the Court and he would undergo the remaining jail sentence.

Headnote :- IPC Sections 107 and 306 — suicide abetment — dying declaration — sentencing. The treating doctor recorded the conscious burn victim's statement that, after a quarrel over money, her husband told her to die and handed her kerosene and matches, which she used to set herself on fire. Lallubhai Devchand Shah, Laxman, Dal Singh, Kaliya and P.V. Radhakrishna were considered in assessing reliability. Mental fitness and voluntariness are essential; ninety percent burns or recording without a Magistrate do not, by themselves, make a dying declaration unacceptable. The Court found the declaration reliable. Applying the principles of instigation and intentional aid discussed in Babloo with reference to Swamy Prahlad Das, Chitresh Kumar Chopra, Praveen Pradhan and Sanju, it held that the words and physical assistance together amounted to more than an angry exhortation. The conviction under Section 306 was affirmed. Considering the approximately four years and eight months already served and the absence of a statutory minimum sentence, the Court reduced rigorous imprisonment from seven to five years and increased the fine to ₹5,000.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Jogendra's wife Sangita set herself on fire on 20 August 2013 after a domestic quarrel over money and died on the way to Gwalior after being referred there for treatment. The treating doctor recorded her statement that her husband had assaulted her and, when she threatened to die, gave her kerosene and matches and told her to die. She then set herself on fire. She had about 90 percent burns. Some witnesses turned hostile, while family witnesses described quarrels. The defence stated that Jogendra had also suffered burns while trying to rescue her. The trial court convicted him under IPC Section 306 and imposed seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,000. He challenged the dying declaration and the finding of abetment, and sought a reduced sentence in view of the custody already undergone.

2. Precedents — Considered : Lallubhai Devchand Shah v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1972 SC 1776, requires the person recording a dying declaration to be satisfied that the declarant is conscious and understands the statement being made. Laxman v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 6 SCC 710, was quoted on careful scrutiny of reliability, mental fitness and voluntariness, and the absence of an inflexible requirement of medical certification. State of M.P. v. Dal Singh, Kaliya v. State of M.P. and P.V. Radhakrishna v. State of Karnataka were considered on severe burns and the circumstances in which a dying declaration may be accepted. The percentage of burns is not conclusive; the medical evidence and surrounding circumstances must be examined. A declaration found truthful and voluntary may sustain conviction without corroboration. The Court applied these principles to Dr Sharma's evidence. The High Court's decision in Babloo alias Devanand v. State of M.P. was quoted and applied by analogy: providing fuel along with an exhortation to die may establish intentional assistance beyond the bare words "go and die". The quoted decision explains Swamy Prahlad Das's limitation concerning words spoken in the heat of the moment and refers to Chitresh Kumar Chopra, (2009) 16 SCC 605; Praveen Pradhan, (2012) 9 SCC 734; and Sanju alias Sanjay Singh Sengar, (2002) 5 SCC 371, on instigation, mens rea and the forms of abetment under Section 107. Those Supreme Court passages explain the distinction drawn in Babloo; in the present appeal, the Court considered both the words and the material assistance.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 107, concerning instigation or intentional aid, and 306, concerning abetment of suicide, were considered. The appeal was under CrPC Section 374. The Court examined the evidentiary reliability of the dying declaration. The absence of a minimum term under Section 306 was relevant to the exercise of sentencing discretion.

4. Issues : Whether the dying declaration recorded by Dr Sharma was voluntary and made in a fit state of mind despite the burns and the unavailability of an Executive Magistrate; whether the words and the supply of kerosene and matches established intentional abetment beyond reasonable doubt; and whether seven years' imprisonment remained proportionate in view of the long period already spent in custody.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor stated that Sangita was conscious, oriented and not under the influence of medication, and that the police were absent when the declaration was recorded. The Court accepted the dying declaration despite her ninety percent burns and the hostility of some witnesses. Although there was evidence that Jogendra had also suffered burns, he had produced no document establishing the grievous burn injuries he claimed. The Court held that, by handing over kerosene and matches and telling her to die, he had facilitated and provoked the suicide; his conduct was more than an expression of anger. The conviction was affirmed. Considering the approximately four years and eight months actually served and the absence of a statutory minimum sentence, the Court reduced the term to five years and increased the fine to ₹5,000.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the appeal on sentence. It affirmed the conviction under Section 306, reduced rigorous imprisonment from seven to five years and increased the fine from ₹2,000 to ₹5,000, with six months' simple imprisonment in default. The appellant was to be released after completing the sentence, if not required in any other case.

Case Sr. no. (269) Prev Next

Headnote :- BNS Sections 316(3), 3(5) — goods not delivered — carrier's asserted contractual disclaimer and disputed truck ownership — Article 226 quashing and transfer request. The petitioners admitted booking two consignments, but claimed that others owned the trucks and that the bilty placed responsibility for loss on the drivers and owners. Section 2(a) of the Carriage by Road Act 2007 includes a goods booking company, agent or broker within the definition of a common carrier, while Sections 10–12 address loss and criminal acts. The Court observed that a person booking a consignment was also equally responsible; booking the goods did not, by itself, absolve the petitioners. De facto ownership and common intention remained matters for investigation. Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki were applied to reject an accused's claim to choose the investigating agency. Manohar Lal Sharma, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was applied against judicial supervision of the investigation. The allegation of bias did not justify transfer. The writ petition was dismissed without finally determining criminal guilt or civil carrier liability.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The FIR in Crime 770/2024, Police Station Bargawan, Singrauli, alleged that goods carried in two trucks, worth ₹10,00,000 and ₹14,17,919 respectively, had not reached their destination. It accused the petitioners of criminal breach of trust under BNS Section 316(3), read with Section 3(5). Petitioner 1 was alleged to own the trucks, and petitioner 2 to be his representative. They denied registered ownership but admitted arranging the consignments. Relying on a bilty clause placing the risk on the owners and drivers, they sought quashing of the FIR and transfer of the investigation on the allegation of police bias.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted and applied to hold that an accused cannot choose the investigating agency or dictate the manner of investigation. Its discussion of Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar and Divine Retreat Centre was reproduced as part of the quotation. Those authorities explain the principle and the exception permitting judicial directions where the investigating officer has exercised the power mala fide. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat was separately quoted at length on investigation, further investigation and the accused's limited participation, in support of refusing the requested transfer. The High Court's decision in Prabal Dogra reiterates the same principle. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was applied to the distinction between monitoring for fair progress and directing the police's investigative choices. The Court also quoted Sections 2(a) and 10 –12 of the Carriage by Road Act and considered the petitioners' admitted booking of the consignments.

3. Statutes considered : The petition was under Article 226 of the Constitution. The FIR invoked BNS Sections 316(3) and 3(5). Sections 2(a) and 10 –12 of the Carriage by Road Act 2007 were quoted concerning the definition and liability of a common carrier. CrPC Section 173(8) appeared in the quoted investigation authorities; the present petition was not an application for further investigation under that provision.

4. Issues : Whether a booking agent's denial of truck ownership and reliance on a contractual disclaimer required quashing of the criminal FIR concerning the undelivered goods; and whether the allegation of police bias entitled the accused to transfer or supervision of the investigation.

5. Ratio / Findings : Registration of the trucks in other persons' names did not resolve whether the petitioners were de facto owners or otherwise involved. Booking goods can bring a company within the statutory definition of a common carrier. Referring to the carrier-liability provisions, the Court observed that a person who booked the consignment was also equally responsible. The bilty disclaimer and the claim of nonownership did not establish an absence of criminal involvement before investigation. Whether the petitioners shared a common intention with the drivers remained unresolved. The Court rejected the allegation of bias: failure to act according to the petitioners' wishes did not establish bias, and the respondents concerned appeared to be discharging their duties honestly. It refused to permit the accused to choose the investigating agency or dictate the manner of investigation. These conclusions were reached while refusing interference at the investigation stage.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. The FIR was not quashed, and no direction transferring or supervising the investigation was issued.

Junaid Siddiqui and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 32013/2024, 23/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Article 226 — land dispute and quashing two FIRs — asserted malicious dispossession. The petitioners relied on a claimed one-seventh inherited share, a civil decree and pending proceedings to assert possession. Their application for a temporary injunction in another suit had, however, been rejected. The High Court declined to determine possession at the initial stage of investigation. Applying Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, it held that, where an FIR discloses a cognizable offence, alleged mala fides of the informant alone do not justify quashing.

Disputed defence facts must be established at trial. The writ petition, including the request for ₹1 lakh compensation, was dismissed in limine. The petitioners remained free to establish their defence at trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The petitioners sought quashing of two FIRs and compensation of ₹1 lakh, alleging that the FIRs had been lodged to dispossess them of ancestral land at Veerpur, Gwalior. They relied on a claimed one-seventh share and a decree recognising a right of preemption. They challenged a 1999 sale deed and a later decree for specific performance, contending that they had not been parties to the latter proceedings. An appeal against that decree and their application for impleadment were pending. Counsel conceded that their application for a temporary injunction in their own civil suit had been rejected and that a miscellaneous appeal against that rejection remained pending.

2. Precedents — Considered : Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted extensively and directly applied. It requires the power to quash proceedings to be exercised sparingly, an assessment of whether the allegations taken at face value disclose a cognizable offence, and recognition that alleged mala fides of the informant are of secondary importance. The quotation reproduces the categories in R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal and refers to other Supreme Court decisions on the limits of quashing. The Court declined to determine the petitioners' defence at the initial stage of investigation.

3. Statutes considered : The writ petition was under Article 226 of the Constitution. CrPC Section 482 was discussed in the quotation from Renu Kumari. The civil proceedings included a pending application for impleadment under Order I Rule 10 CPC and the rejected application for a temporary injunction.

4. Issues : Whether the petitioners' civil claims to ownership and possession established that the FIRs had been maliciously lodged, so as to require quashing of both FIRs and an award of compensation at the initial stage of investigation.

5. Ratio / Findings : In view of the rejection of the application for a temporary injunction, the High Court could not treat the petitioners' claimed possession as established. At the initial stage of investigation, it would not decide the disputed civil and criminal defences. Under Renu Kumari, where the allegations disclose a cognizable offence, alleged mala fides alone do not justify quashing. The Court did not determine ownership or actual possession of the land, and left the petitioners free to establish their defence at trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition in limine. Neither quashing of the FIRs nor compensation was granted.

Kadam Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 25331/2021, 14/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Notaries Act Sections 8 and 13 — notarisation of allegedly forged will after death — complaint bar and charge-sheet. A will dated 19 November 2014 purported to have been signed by a testator who had died on 18 November, and the thumb impressions did not match on comparison. The Court held that the notary's duty under Section 8 to verify the executant's identity provided a prima facie basis for the proceedings. It distinguished Hiralal Jain v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1972 SC 2598, concerning an advocate's reliance on instructions. On Section 13, the Court relied on CrPC Section 2(d), Ushaben v. Kishorbhai, (2012) 6 SCC 353, and the principle that cognizance is taken of an offence, to reject the challenge to the charge-sheet involving cognizable forgery offences. Alternatively, relying on H.N. Rishbud, AIR 1955 SC 196, and Union of India v. Nathamuni, (2014) 16 SCC 285, it held that an investigative defect does not by itself invalidate the proceedings in the absence of a miscarriage of justice. It assumed, for this alternative ground, that the investigating officer lacked competence to investigate and file the charge-sheet, and held that this ground alone did not require quashing. The revision was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant stated that Janak Singh claimed her deceased husband Rambharosi's land on the basis of a will prepared on 19 November 2014, one day after Rambharosi's death. The will bore his photograph and a disputed thumb impression. The police registered allegations under IPC Sections 420, 423, 466, 467, 471 and 120-B, found that the applicant, notary Kailash Narayan, had notarised the will, and filed a charge-sheet. Invoking Section 13 of the Notaries Act, he contended that a police report could not replace a written complaint by an officer authorised by the Government. He also denied a personal duty to verify the apparent executant's identity when another person had identified him.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ushaben v. Kishorbhai Chunilal Talpada, (2012) 6 SCC 353, was applied by analogy to cognizance of a case involving both non-cognizable and cognizable offences, and to the explanation to CrPC Section 2(d), which deems a police report disclosing a non-cognizable offence to be a complaint. The Court applied that reasoning to the mixed forgery charge-sheet. H.N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi, AIR 1955 SC 196, and Union of India v. Nathamuni, (2014) 16 SCC 285, were relied on in the alternative. They explain that an investigative defect does not automatically invalidate cognizance or the trial's result in the absence of a miscarriage of justice. The quotation from H.N. Rishbud distinguishes rules governing the Court's competence from irregularities in investigation. Hiralal Jain v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1972 SC 2598, was distinguished: an advocate filing a vakalatnama on instructions is differently placed from a notary with a specific statutory duty of authentication. The defence cited the Madras High Court's order in V. Ramakrishnan. The Court considered that its reasoning had not addressed the definition of a complaint, and also noted its rejection of a notary's reliance on identification by another person.

3. Statutes considered : Section 13 of the Notaries Act imposes the requirement of an authorised officer's written complaint and limits cognizance, while Section 8 concerns the notary's authentication functions. The Court considered CrPC Section 2(d) and its explanation concerning a police report disclosing a non-cognizable offence. Section 190 appeared in the quoted reasoning on cognizance. The charge-sheet concerned IPC Sections 420, 423, 466, 467, 471 and 120-B. Section 13(2) also specifies the class of Magistrate competent to try an offence punishable under the Notaries Act.

4. Issues : Whether Section 13 barred proceedings against a notary included in a police charge-sheet concerning a will purportedly executed after the testator's death; whether an alleged defect in investigation or the complaint required quashing; and whether notarisation without personally verifying the executant's identity disclosed prima facie material for criminal proceedings.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court stated that cognizance is taken once of an offence, rather than separately against each accused, and that the police may investigate and file a charge-sheet in a case involving cognizable and non-cognizable offences. It treated the police report as a complaint under Section 2(d). Section 13 requires a written complaint by an officer authorised by the Government; the Court rejected the Section 13 quashing challenge through its reasoning under Section 2(d) and, alternatively, on the assumption that the investigating officer lacked competence. On that alternative ground, an officer's lack of competence alone did not invalidate the proceedings without demonstrated prejudice or miscarriage of justice. On the merits, the purported execution of the will after death, the photograph and the mismatched thumb impressions, considered with the notary's duty to verify the signatory's identity, justified proceeding to trial. The Court did not make a final finding of guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the revision/application and declined to quash the charge-sheet.

Headnote :- IPC Sections 302/34 — burn murder — sole dying declaration and common intention. In her dying declaration to a Naib-Tahsildar, Rajkumari stated that Kalla poured kerosene on her and set her on fire, and that Kaliya had her burnt. The doctor certified her fitness before and after recording. Despite her 98 percent burns, the declaration was coherent; neither police nor relatives were present, and the medical and FSL evidence supported the use of kerosene. Applying Purshottam Chopra, Madan and Mukesh, the Court held that a voluntary and reliable dying declaration may alone sustain a conviction. Extensive burns require scrutiny of the evidence of fitness and do not automatically exclude the declaration. The specific accusation against Kaliya and her conduct distinguished her from the two acquitted relatives and established common intention under Section 34. Kalla's conviction under Section 302 and Kaliya's conviction under Section 302/34, with their life sentences, were affirmed. The appeal was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajkumari died from extensive burns in June 2009. A Naib-Tahsildar recorded her dying declaration after medical checks confirmed her fitness. She alleged that Kalla poured kerosene on her and set her on fire, while Kaliya had her burnt. The trial court convicted Kalla of murder and Kaliya under IPC Sections 302/34, sentencing each to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with 3 months' rigorous imprisonment in default. It acquitted Nandu and Sheela, and their acquittal was not challenged. In appeal, Kalla and Kaliya relied on the family witnesses having turned hostile, Rajkumari's 98 percent burns, the possibility of tutoring, and parity with the acquitted co-accused.

2. Precedents — Considered : Purshottam Chopra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2020) 11 SCC 489, was quoted for a structured enquiry into voluntariness, capacity, coherence, consistency and the circumstances in which a dying declaration may sustain conviction without corroboration. Madan v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 13 SCC 464, emphasises the risks of relying on a declaration that cannot be tested by cross-examination, while permitting sole reliance on a trustworthy declaration made in a fit state of mind without tutoring or prompting. Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, likewise permits sole reliance on a truthful declaration, while requiring scrutiny of mental fitness and material discrepancies. The Court applied these standards to the evidence of the doctor and the recorder, Rajkumari's ability to speak, the absence of her parents during recording, and the medical and FSL evidence of kerosene. The other decisions referred to within the quotations from Purshottam Chopra supplied the dying-declaration principles reproduced there. The Court inferred common intention from Kaliya's presence, the specific accusation against her and her conduct during the burning.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302 and 34; appeal under CrPC Section 374. The Court assessed the dying declaration and the forensic evidence concerning the burns. The percentage of burns did not, by itself, determine whether the declaration was reliable.

4. Issues : Whether Rajkumari could make a reliable dying declaration despite her 98 percent burns and whether it could be relied on when family witnesses had turned hostile; whether Kaliya's role was sufficiently distinct from that of the two acquitted relatives to establish common intention under Section 34; and whether the sentence of life imprisonment required modification.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor certified Rajkumari's fitness before and after the dying declaration was recorded. The Naib-Tahsildar's evidence showed that she was oriented and that no police personnel were present during recording. The Court considered the depth of the burns, the normal condition of the internal organs, her ability to speak and the traces of kerosene, and found the declaration truthful and supported by the evidence. It found that Kalla had poured kerosene on her and set her on fire. The declaration specifically accused Kaliya of having her burnt. She was present when Kalla brought kerosene and carried out the attack, and she made no attempt to stop him or extinguish the fire. The Court assessed these circumstances together and found that she shared his common intention under Section 34; its finding did not rest on inaction alone. The two acquitted relatives faced only a general allegation that they had taken part in a discussion. The Court held that life imprisonment was the minimum sentence for murder and declined to interfere with it.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions and sentences of life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000 each, with 3 months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Kaliya's bail bonds were cancelled, and she was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve the remaining sentence. Kalla was directed to serve the remainder of his sentence.

Headnote :- Forged power of attorney and land sale — noncompoundable offences — appeal merits and sentence. Applying Nagpal Traders v. Davinder Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 431, the Court held that an appellate court must examine the conviction on merits even when it is not challenged and a compromise is submitted. Fingerprint evidence, the absence of proof of payment of consideration and the short interval between the power of attorney and the sale deed sustained the convictions for forgery, use of the forged document and conspiracy under the IPC. The Registrar verified that the settlement was voluntary, but CrPC Section 320 did not permit compounding the offences under IPC Sections 467, 468, 471 and 120-B. Applying the principle of proportionality in Shyam Narain, (2013) 7 SCC 77, and Raj Bala, (2016) 1 SCC 463, the Court affirmed the five-year sentences of Rajendra, Dharamvir and Veero. Kallo's lesser role as purchaser, her age and the period already spent in custody justified reducing her sentence to the period undergone, subject to payment of a fine of ₹1 lakh within one month. The original sentence would revive if she failed to pay within that period. The appeal was disposed of accordingly.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vimla Devi alleged that her relatives forged her thumb impression on a power of attorney and that Rajendra used it to sell her inherited half share in the land to Kallo. Dharamvir and Veero signed both the power of attorney and the sale deed as witnesses. The trial court imposed five-year terms of rigorous imprisonment and fines for the respective offences under IPC Sections 467, 468, 471 and 120-B. During the appeal, the parties submitted a voluntary compromise. The Registrar reported that the offences were not compoundable. Counsel for the appellants did not challenge the convictions and sought reduction of the sentences to the periods already undergone, submitting that the three men had spent just over three years in custody and Kallo about two years and two months. The State opposed leniency.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nagpal Traders v. Davinder Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 431, was applied to require examination of the conviction on merits despite counsel's concession. Its discussion of Jeetu formed part of that principle. Shyam Narain v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 7 SCC 77, and Raj Bala v. State of Haryana, (2016) 1 SCC 463, were quoted on the seriousness of the offence, the social purpose of punishment, its impact on the victim, proportionality and the rational exercise of sentencing discretion. Jameel, Shailesh Jasvantbhai, Babulal, Gopal Singh and the other authorities referred to within those quotations supplied the sentencing principles reproduced there. The Court applied proportionality differently to the three appellants who were instrumental in the forgery and to the older purchaser.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 374, governing the appeal, and 320, governing compounding; IPC Sections 467, 468, 471 and 120-B, according to the charges and convictions of the respective appellants. The civil decree invalidating the power of attorney and the sale was considered alongside the criminal evidence; it did not replace that evidence.

4. Issues : Whether the fingerprint evidence, the complainant's testimony and the evidence concerning the transactions sustained the convictions notwithstanding counsel's concession and the compromise; and whether the verified settlement and the periods already spent in custody justified reducing the five-year sentences of all the appellants.

5. Ratio / Findings : Fingerprint expert Om Prakash Batham established that the thumb impression on the disputed power of attorney was not Vimla Devi's. The civil court had also found the document forged. There was no evidence that the stated consideration of ₹1,94,000 had been paid. Rajendra prepared the false power of attorney and used it to execute the sale deed; Dharamvir and Veero signed both documents as witnesses. Kallo appeared at registration as the purchaser and participated in the conspiracy, but no role in preparing the power of attorney was proved against her. Following Nagpal Traders, the Court examined the convictions on merits. The voluntary settlement did not extinguish guilt because the offences were not compoundable. The Court declined to reduce the sentences of the three appellants who had played the more active roles, while granting Kallo an individual reduction subject to payment of the enhanced fine within the prescribed period. Failure to pay on time would revive her original sentence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal in respect of Rajendra, Dharamvir and Veero and affirmed their five-year terms of rigorous imprisonment and fines, with the custodial terms to run concurrently. Kallo's appeal was partly allowed: her sentence under Section 120-B was reduced to the period already undergone, subject to payment of a fine of ₹1 lakh within one month of the judgment. If she failed to pay within that period, the original five-year term of rigorous imprisonment, the fine of ₹2,000 and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default would automatically revive, and the trial court would be required to issue a warrant for her arrest to serve the remaining sentence.

Kallo and Others v. Vimla Devi and Others, Cr.A. no. 5064/2018, 20/07/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- IPC Sections 302/34 — armed ambush and fatal chest shot — related eyewitnesses, missing weapon link, alibi. Applying the principles in Mahavir Singh, Raju, Kishanpal, Sudhakar and Sarwan Singh, the Court carefully scrutinised the evidence of the deceased's cousins, Shailendra and Vipin. Their account was supported by the prompt FIR, medical evidence and recovered cartridges, notwithstanding the enmity between the parties. Applying Nankaunoo v. State of U.P., (2016) 3 SCC 317, the Court held that failure to recover or connect a weapon with the offence does not displace otherwise reliable eyewitness evidence corroborated by medical evidence. Coordinated firing established common intention, while the separate acquittals under Section 307/34 and the Arms Act remained final because the State had not appealed. Applying Vijay Pal, S.K. Sattar and Binay Kumar Singh, the Court rejected the alibis based on Kallu's clinic attendance recorded at the end of the day and Girish's unreliable shop and telephone evidence. The prosecution's ultimate burden of proof remained unchanged. Anil's conviction for murder and the three companions' convictions under Section 302/34, with their life sentences, were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 12 March 2013, at about 2:45 p.m. near Birkhadi, Anil fired a close-range pistol shot into Avdhesh's chest during an alleged armed ambush. Shailendra and Vipin escaped while Kallu alias Madhusudan, Ram Baran and Girish also fired. There was earlier enmity between the parties. The FIR was lodged at 3:15 p.m.; the postmortem findings and cartridges recovered from the scene supported the account of the shooting. The trial court sentenced Anil under IPC Section 302 and the others under Section 302/34 to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000 each, with one year's simple imprisonment in default. The latter three were acquitted under Section 307/34 and Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a)/27, and the State did not appeal against those acquittals. The defence challenged the reliability of the cousin witnesses and the connection between the seized weapons and the offence, and relied on Kallu's clinic alibi and Girish's shop alibi.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., Raju v. State of T.N., State of U.P. v. Kishanpal, Sudhakar v. State and Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab were quoted on the distinction between related and interested witnesses and the assessment of credibility. Relationship requires careful scrutiny but does not automatically disqualify a witness. The Court applied that approach to the cross-examination, the prompt FIR, and the medical and scene evidence. Nankaunoo v. State of U.P., (2016) 3 SCC 317, was applied for the principle that nonrecovery of a weapon, or failure to connect it with the offence, does not destroy reliable oral evidence corroborated by medical evidence. This did not reopen the unappealed acquittals on separate charges. Vijay Pal v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, were applied on alibi. The prosecution must first establish the accused's presence; the accused then bears a strict burden of proving absence. The prosecution's burden remains, and failure of alibi does not by itself prove guilt. If the defence evidence raises a reasonable doubt about the accused's presence, the accused is entitled to its benefit. The Court examined the defence witnesses and the attendance register before rejecting the alibis.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302/34 governed the convictions; the acquittals under Section 307/34 and Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27 were not appealed. The appeals were under CrPC Section 374. Evidence Act Section 11 was discussed within the quoted authorities on alibi.

4. Issues : Whether the related witnesses, despite their enmity with the accused, reliably identified the shooter and his armed companions; whether failure to prove that the seized guns were used in the offence defeated the convictions for murder and common intention; whether clinic attendance or shop testimony established alibi; and what effect the final acquittals on the other counts had on the appeals.

5. Ratio / Findings : The prompt report and the medical evidence of a chest gunshot injury supported the eyewitness account of Shailendra and Vipin. Dharmendra corroborated their journey together to a limited extent. The .32 and .315 bore cartridges found at the scene supported the account of multiple shots and coordinated participation. Enmity alone did not discredit the witnesses, and, applying Nankaunoo, failure to establish that the seized arms were the weapons used did not negate their reliable evidence. The Court left the unappealed acquittals under Section 307/34 and the Arms Act undisturbed. Kallu's attendance was entered in the clinic register after 8:30 p.m., without recording the time of his arrival. Girish's telephone and shop evidence was hearsay or lacked reliable support concerning the relevant time. Neither alibi displaced the prosecution evidence accepted by the Court. Anil shot Avdhesh, and the ambush and firing established that the others shared his common intention.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed Anil's conviction under Section 302 and the convictions of Kallu, Ram Baran and Girish under Section 302/34, with life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000 each, with one year's simple imprisonment in default. The bail bonds of Kallu, Ram Baran and Girish were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender immediately before the trial court, on or before 27 August 2026, to serve the remaining sentence. Anil, who was in jail, was directed to serve the remainder of his sentence.

Headnote :- IPC Section 302 and Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a) — sole related eyewitness and final co-accused acquittal. Arati's presence at the roadside shooting of her husband was corroborated by the information immediately conveyed through a passer-by, the police finding her at the scene, and the FIR lodged within about 50 minutes. The postmortem findings and the FSL comparison linking the recovered bullet with Kallu's working, unlicensed pistol supported her account. Applying Raju, Jalpat Rai, Namdeo and the related Supreme Court authorities, the Court emphasised credibility and the quality of evidence under Evidence Act Section 134; relationship alone did not make a witness interested. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan, Yogendra and Raja did not require rejection of the entire testimony merely because the conspiracy allegation against Mira had failed. Bhagwan Jagannath Markad guided the assessment of whether omissions were material. Babir and Ruli Ram required careful scrutiny of enmity as both a motive for the offence and a possible reason for false implication. The convictions for murder and the Arms Act offence were affirmed, and the concurrent sentences of life imprisonment and one year were left undisturbed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 25 September 2005, Arati was accompanying her husband Sunil as he pushed their motorcycle home after it had broken down. Three men approached them. According to Arati, Kallu fired the first shot into Sunil's chest and another man also fired, killing him. She reported land-related enmity with Mira Bhatele, who was charged with conspiracy but acquitted; the State did not appeal against that acquittal. Kallu was convicted under IPC Section 302 and Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a), and sentenced respectively to life imprisonment with a fine of ₹1,000 and one year's rigorous imprisonment with a fine of ₹500, with default imprisonment. The custodial sentences were concurrent. In appeal, he challenged Arati's account as the sole related eyewitness, relied on alleged omissions and land enmity, and questioned the absence of independent road witnesses and the rejected conspiracy allegation.

2. Precedents — Considered : Raju v. State of T.N., Jalpat Rai v. State of Haryana, Rohtash Kumar v. State of Haryana, State of Rajasthan v. Chandgi Ram, Nagappan v. State, Mohd. Ishaque v. State of W.B. and Namdeo v. State of Maharashtra were quoted on related and interested witnesses and the principle in Evidence Act Section 134. A sole witness may prove guilt if her evidence, after careful scrutiny, is natural and credible; there is no universal requirement of an independent witness. The Court applied these principles to Arati's prompt account and its corroboration. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749; Yogendra v. State of Rajasthan, (2013) 12 SCC 399; and Raja v. State of Haryana, (2015) 11 SCC 43, supported separating reliable testimony from the unproved conspiracy evidence concerning the co-accused. The maxim falsus in uno is not a mandatory rule of evidence in India. Where truth and falsehood are so inseparably intertwined that separation would require reconstruction of a new prosecution case, the evidence must be discarded as a whole. Bhagwan Jagannath Markad v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 10 SCC 537, guided the distinction between peripheral omissions and contradictions affecting the core account. Babir v. Vazir, (2014) 12 SCC 670, and Ruli Ram v. State of Haryana, (2002) 7 SCC 691, were applied to assess enmity as both a motive for the offence and a possible cause of false implication. The further authorities referred to within these Supreme Court passages supported the evidentiary principles reproduced there.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302, 34 and 120-B formed part of the charge and alleged conspiracy history. Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27 were referred to in relation to the charges, with conviction under Section 25(1-B)(a). CrPC Sections 374 and 293 concerned the appeal and the FSL report respectively. Evidence Act Section 134 prescribed no fixed number of witnesses.

4. Issues : Whether Arati's evidence as the sole eyewitness and the deceased's wife established that Kallu fired the shot despite land enmity and the absence of independent passer-by testimony; what effect Mira's final acquittal on the conspiracy allegation and the discrepancies in the evidence had on the prosecution case; and whether the forensic and recovery evidence proved possession of an unlicensed firearm.

5. Ratio / Findings : Arati's presence was supported by the passer-by's information to the police, the police finding her at the scene, and the FIR lodged within about 50 minutes. The evidence of death by gunshot and the bullet comparison supported her account. The seized country-made pistol was in working condition, and Kallu produced no licence for it. Arati had not claimed firsthand knowledge of Mira's alleged planning, so Mira's acquittal did not undermine the distinct evidence of the roadside shooting. Ordinary omissions did not affect the core account, and the Court assessed the enmity in light of the prompt report and scientific evidence. It found Kallu guilty beyond reasonable doubt of murder and possession of the unlicensed pistol, without reopening Mira's acquittal.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the sentence of life imprisonment with a fine of ₹1,000 under IPC Section 302 and one year's rigorous imprisonment with a fine of ₹500 under Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a), with default imprisonment. The custodial sentences remained concurrent.

Headnote :- MP Excise Act Sections 34(2), 49(A), 61(2) — police report delay — Section 439 bail and administrative accountability. Following the seizure of 72.2 bulk litres of liquor, a charge-sheet prepared on 27 December 2021 remained unfiled while permission under the Act's six-month provision was sought belatedly. The investigating officer conceded that the pandemic restrictions did not prohibit investigation and that an absconding co-accused did not prevent filing a report against the arrested persons. The new SHO disclosed that reports in 49 completed cases also remained unfiled. The Court rejected the explanation that the file had been forgotten and granted bail to the applicants, who had been in custody since 23 August 2022, despite their earlier failure to appear while on interim bail. It required a report from the DGP and conditional action if he considered the lapses serious. Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P. (2021) was cited for intimation of bail to the complainant. The order determined neither guilt nor the pending permission request.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants faced offences under MP Excise Act Sections 34(2) and 49(A) following an alleged seizure of 72.2 bulk litres of liquor. Interim bail granted during the pandemic in July 2021 was extended, but they stopped appearing in February 2022 and surrendered on 23 August 2022. Their regular bail application revealed that a police report prepared on 27 December 2021 had not been filed as a charge-sheet. The former investigating officer relied on COVID restrictions, an absconding co-accused and the ADPO's advice that permission was required under MP Excise Act Section 61(2) after six months. The current SHO reported that charge-sheets in 49 completed Section 34 cases also remained unfiled and that belated requests for permission had been sent to the higher authorities.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 329/2021, was cited for sending intimation of the grant of bail to the complainant. In deciding bail and directing the DGP to submit a report, the Court considered the officers' responses, the unfiled charge-sheet and the negligence it found.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 439 governed bail. Section 144 was relied on as a pandemic restriction, although it did not halt investigation. MP Excise Act Sections 34(2) and 49(A) concerned the alleged offences, and Section 61(2) was cited as requiring permission after six months. The Court did not finally decide the pending request to the competent authority for permission.

4. Issues : Whether the applicants should remain in jail while a completed police report had not been filed; whether the pandemic, an absconding co-accused or a forgotten file justified the delay; and how the 49 similarly stalled Excise Act cases should be addressed.

5. Ratio / Findings : The investigating officer conceded that investigations continued during the relevant pandemic period and that a charge-sheet against arrested accused persons could be filed without waiting for an absconding co-accused. He did not promptly seek permission after receiving the ADPO's advice. In light of monthly reviews of pending cases and the pattern of 49 unfiled reports, the Court rejected his explanation that he had forgotten the file as misleading. It did not itself impose punishment. The DGP was to consider whether the lapses of the investigating officer or the Superintendent of Police were serious and, if he decided to act, take action within one month; he was also required to submit a report. As the charge-sheet remained unfiled and the applicants were in custody, further refusal of bail would serve no useful purpose on these facts. The Court expressly granted bail on the basis of the negligence it attributed to the investigating officer and the SHO.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC. Each applicant was to furnish a personal bond of ₹1,00,000 with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the trial or committal court and appear on the dates fixed by that court. Bail would remain effective until the end of trial but would become ineffective on a bail jump. Intimation of the grant of bail was to be sent to the complainant. The DGP was directed to submit his report to the Principal Registrar by 14 November 2022 and, if he decided that the lapses warranted action, to take that action within one month.

Headnote :- Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act 2015 Sections 2(14), 41, 42 — registration of hostel housing vulnerable children — later trafficking/conversion allegations. An inspection found children in an unregistered institution. A list identified 30 children who had been left by their parents or whose parents had remarried. The applicant supplied no documents establishing parental consent for all the children and could not extend a coordinate bench order concerning some parents to every rescued child. The material supported investigation of the Section 42 offence for nonregistration of an institution housing children in need of care and protection, although none of the children was in conflict with law. Applying Neeharika Infrastructure, (2021) 19 SCC 401, the Court declined to stop investigation of the added allegations under IPC Section 370 and MP Freedom of Religion Act Sections 3/5. It did not find those allegations proved and stated that the police could not file a charge-sheet for them without supporting material. Quashing was refused.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : An inspection of the Adivasi Sahayata Samiti girls' and boys' hostel and old-age home at Jobat, Alirajpur, found minor girls and boys, including orphaned children or children without support. The institution was not registered under Section 41 of the Juvenile Justice Act 2015. The police registered an offence under Section 42 and later added IPC Section 370 and MP Freedom of Religion Act 2021 Sections 3/5. The applicant argued that the children were neither in conflict with law nor in need of care and protection. She asserted parental consent without producing documents, challenged the later offences, and relied on an order passed on a petition by the parents of some rescued children.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, was quoted and applied because the investigation was pending. The police investigate cognizable allegations; quashing is exceptional, and the Court cannot prematurely assess the reliability of those allegations. The recognised exceptions in R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal formed part of the quoted framework. The coordinate bench order in Digvijay Singh, passed on a writ petition by parents of some rescued children, was distinguished because it did not establish the circumstances of every rescued child. Prakash P. Hinduja, P. Chidambaram and Skoda Auto Volkswagen were referred to within the quotation explaining the respective limits of investigation and quashing.

3. Statutes considered : Juvenile Justice Act 2015 Sections 2(13), defining a child in conflict with law; 2(14), defining a child in need of care and protection; 41, requiring registration; and 42, prescribing the penalty. IPC Section 370 and MP Freedom of Religion Act 2021 Sections 3/5 concerned the later allegations. The application was under CrPC Section 482.

4. Issues : Whether housing children in need of care and protection in an unregistered hostel supported the offence under Section 42; whether assertions of parental consent or the limited earlier order required quashing; and whether investigation of the added trafficking and conversion allegations should be stopped before it was completed.

5. Ratio / Findings : None of the children was alleged to be in conflict with law. On the material before it, the Court found that the institution housed children in need of care and protection and therefore required registration under Section 41. The government lists distinguished 37 children returned to their parents from 30 children who had been left by their parents or whose parents had remarried. The applicant produced no documents establishing the position of all the minors, so registration of the Section 42 offence was not baseless. The earlier order on the parents' petition could not be extended beyond its limited scope. As to the added offences, the Court permitted lawful investigation and expressly stated that the police could not file a charge-sheet without material supporting those allegations. It did not find trafficking or conversion proved or finally determine each child's status.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 and declined to interfere with the continuing investigation of the FIR.

Kalpana Daniel v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 47928/2023, 10/09/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence / complete chain - Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509 require each incriminating circumstance to be firmly proved and the whole chain to exclude a reasonable innocent explanation. The Court applied that test to two deaths caused by homicidal head injuries, the appellant's return alone soon after the encounter, blood found at the scene and on his clothing, and his lack of injury; an alleged confession introduced as an improvement in testimony was excluded from the chain.

Last seen / temporal proximity - Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, Mahavir Singh, Jagroop Singh and Ajitsingh Harnamsingh Gujral, (2011) 14 SCC 401, were considered in relation to the short time gap, the possibility that another person had intervened, and the need for other supporting evidence. The witnesses placed the appellant with the deceased in the afternoon; he returned alone about 5 p.m., and the bodies were located soon after. The Court treated this evidence as one link corroborated by other circumstances, rather than as a presumption sufficient on its own.

Serology / incriminating bloodstains - FSL report Ex P15 recorded group B human blood both on a stone seized at the scene and on the appellant's pant. Other items contained human blood whose group was not similarly identified. Applying Barku Bhavrao Bhaskar v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 14 SCC 745, Gilbert Pereira v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 12 SCC 281, Alagupandi v. State of T.N., (2012) 10 SCC 451, and Ramesh v. State of Rajasthan, (2011) 3 SCC 685, the Court considered the proved seizure, absence of injury and unexplained stains together with the other links in the chain. It inferred that at least one victim had group B blood.

Extra-judicial confession / material omission - Narayan Singh's claim of a confession first surfaced in testimony and was absent from his police statement. The Court treated it as unreliable and did not use it to supply a missing link.

Murder / Section 304 Part I - Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, setting out Dhirendra Kumar's contextual factors, was applied to repeated forceful stone blows crushing the faces and skulls of two victims. The absence of proved previous enmity did not establish that the incident was a sudden fight in which the appellant had not acted cruelly. Both Section 302 convictions and concurrent life terms were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 10 May 2010, Kallu alias Kalyan Singh, Mukesh and appellant Kalu went for labour work around Raghogarh with others. Prem Narayan (PW2) met them; the group consumed liquor near Rangbawadi pond. Kallu went briefly to buy fish, and Prem Narayan later left the appellant near Nahar Singh's platform, expecting him to rejoin Kallu. The Court relied on Prem Narayan and others as witnesses who placed the men together during the relevant period; they were not eyewitnesses to the assault. Around 5 p.m. Kalu returned alone to Hari Singh's house with bloodstained clothes. He said the two men had beaten him and gone towards Raghogarh, yet Hari Singh, Prem Narayan and Mulibai observed no injury on him. Their search found both men dead near the pond, with severe face and head wounds; Hari Singh reported the matter at about 7:30 p.m. The autopsy of Kallu disclosed fractures of parietal, frontal and nasal bones and lacerated brain; Mukesh also had facial and skull fractures, ruptured membrane and contused or lacerated brain. The doctor classified each death as homicidal, while saying prompt treatment might have saved them and noting no alcohol in the stomachs. Stones and earth were seized from the spot; the appellant's pant and full-sleeved shirt were seized under memorandum Ex P9 and seizure Ex P10. The trial court convicted Kalu on two IPC Section 302 counts, each carrying life imprisonment and ₹500 fine with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default; the sentences were to run concurrently. In the appeal under Section 374, counsel disputed the last-seen link and the inference from stained clothing; alternatively he sought conversion to Section 304 Part I on the grounds that the incident had occurred suddenly and without premeditation and that there was no prior hostility.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, set out the five conditions: the circumstances must be proved and conclusive, be consistent only with guilt, exclude reasonable alternatives and form a complete chain leaving no ground for innocence. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, warned that even grave suspicion cannot replace reliable and clinching proof. Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, required each link to withstand scrutiny, because the failure of an important link breaks the chain. Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, repeated this caution and reproduced State of U.P. v. Ram Balak, C. Chenga Reddy and Padala Veera Reddy on firmly established cumulative circumstances; those authorities appeared within the quoted exposition and were not separately applied to the facts of the present case. The Bench applied the complete-chain standard to the evidence actually proved after excluding the unreliable alleged confession.

Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, required the interval between the accused and deceased being last seen together and the death to be short enough to rule out the intervention of another person, discussing Bodhraj, Rambraksh and Anjan Kumar Sarma within the passage. Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, explained that the prosecution retains the initial burden, while the accused's special knowledge under Section 106 and an unexplained death after the accused and deceased were last seen together may be considered along with the surrounding circumstances; last-seen alone is not conclusive, and Ajitsingh Harnamsingh Gujral v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 14 SCC 401, likewise addressed the small gap and realistic possibility of intervention. The Bench used their shared test for Prem Narayan's sighting, the appellant's return around 5 p.m. and the discovery of the bodies soon afterwards, with the blood evidence supplying further corroboration.

Barku Bhavrao Bhaskar v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 14 SCC 745, found unexplained matching blood on an accused's recovered clothing probative where physical examination showed no injury. Gilbert Pereira v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 12 SCC 281, considered the known blood groups, proximity to the deceased and an unpersuasive explanation that the blood had been transferred innocently. Alagupandi v. State of T.N., (2012) 10 SCC 451, treated group-matched blood on a shirt as significant in conjunction with the deceased's known group and an inadequate Section 313 answer. Ramesh v. State of Rajasthan, (2011) 3 SCC 685, weighed even ungrouped human blood on clothing and grouped blood on a recovered weapon alongside the accused's failure to explain the bloodstains. The Bench applied the principles concerning the evidentiary significance of bloodstains. In the present case, however, the victim's blood group was inferred from the stone found at the scene, rather than separately established through a sample from the victim.

Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, quoted Dhirendra Kumar v. State of Uttarakhand's factors separating Section 302 from Section 304: circumstances, weapon carried or picked up, targeted vital parts, degree of force, participation in sudden fight, enmity, provocation, heat of passion, undue advantage and cruelty. The Bench applied the factors concerning the injuries and the force used to both deaths and found no basis to substitute a conviction under Section 304 for the murder convictions. Narayan Singh's extra-judicial-confession testimony was rejected because it was missing from his prior police statement. The Court declined to rely on that asserted confession.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 302 and 304 Part I of the IPC governed the conviction and proposed alternative offence. Section 374 of the CrPC provided for the appeal; Section 313 arose in the discussion of an accused's explanation in the quoted authorities on serological evidence. Evidence Act Section 106 appeared in Ashok's special-knowledge discussion, subject to the prosecution first proving the primary facts. The judgment did not make an independent shift of the burden under Section 106 the ground of conviction. The FSL report Ex P15 and seizure memos formed part of the evidence.

4. Issues : (i) Were Kallu and Mukesh victims of homicide, and did the prosecution prove beyond reasonable doubt that the appellant was responsible through a complete circumstantial chain despite no eyewitness to the blows? (ii) Was the last-seen interval sufficiently close, when one deceased had temporarily gone to buy fish and the men had been drinking, to reduce the possibility of an intervening actor? (iii) Did the seizure evidence and the finding of group B blood on a stone from the scene and on the appellant's pant, coupled with the absence of bodily injury, support an incriminating inference, and could the claimed extra-judicial confession be used? (iv) Did the absence of prior enmity and assertion of a sudden encounter justify Section 304 Part I instead of two Section 302 convictions?

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr B.L. Kushwaha's findings on the two distinct bodies established homicide by severe blunt-force injuries to vital head and facial structures. Prem Narayan's account put Kalu with the group near the pond and left him close to the place where the bodies were found; although Kallu had temporarily gone to buy fish, the Court found the witnesses' material last-seen evidence reliable and the interval before Kalu's solitary return and discovery sufficiently short. Hari Singh, Prem Narayan, Mulibai and Resham Bai described his bloodstained return and explanation that the two had beaten him, but no injury was noticed even after his shirt was removed. Narayan Singh's account of the alleged confession could not strengthen the evidence relied on by the trial court. The confession was not mentioned in Ex D2, so the Bench rejected that part of his testimony. The seizure of the two stones was proved by witnesses to the seizure at the scene and by the investigating officer. The seizure of the pant and shirt was also proved, despite one witness's initial denial, following which he was declared hostile. FSL report Ex P15 recorded blood on earth, stones and clothing, human blood on the first stone, earth, pant and shirt, and group B human blood on the first stone and pant. The Bench inferred that at least one victim had group B blood, treated the bloodstains on the pant as unexplained because the accused had no injuries, and considered those stains together with the close last-seen interval. This is the Court's evidentiary inference from the matching group B findings and the absence of injury on the appellant. It held the prosecution had established the chain without the alleged confession. Separately, the Court considered the absence of prior dispute but applied the full set of factors stated in Lavghanbhai: multiple heavy stone blows had crushed both faces, fractured skulls and injured the brains. The repeated use of such force and the cruelty of the assault did not support the inference of a sudden fight that would reduce the offence from murder, or justify conversion to Section 304 Part I. Both murder findings were affirmed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. The trial judgment of 28 January 2011 and both Section 302 convictions, concurrent life sentences, ₹500 fine on each count and default term of one month's rigorous imprisonment on each count were affirmed. The appellant, who was in jail, was to serve the remaining sentence, receive a free copy of the judgment, and the trial record was to be returned with a copy for compliance.

Headnote :- Identification / test parade and dock evidence - Sheo Shankar Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 3 SCC 654, Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2014) 12 SCC 133, State of Rajasthan v. Daud Khan, (2016) 2 SCC 607, Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, Suraj Pal v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 SCC 64, and Dara Singh v. Republic of India, (2011) 2 SCC 490 were considered. A test identification parade (TIP) assists the investigation and provides a check on reliability as a matter of prudence. Identification in court is substantive evidence; identification in the dock for the first time of a person previously unknown to the witness requires careful corroboration. The Court held that the failure to conduct a TIP was not fatal on the evidence in this case because the abductee had named the miscreants in his police statement after prolonged captivity. It reached this conclusion despite their faces being covered at the time of the initial abduction, inconsistencies about his familiarity with them, and imperfect identification in the dock.

Witness sufficiency / missing informant and enmity - Karan, who reportedly gave the names of the abductors to relatives searching for Gopal, was not examined. Vadivelu Thevar v. State of Madras, AIR 1957 SC 614, Kunju v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2008 SC 1381, Bipin Kumar Mondal v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2010 SC 3638, Mahesh v. State of M.P., (2011) 9 SCC 626, Prithipal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 1 SCC 10, and Kishan Chand v. State of Haryana, JT 2013 (1) SC 222, were invoked for the principle that the quality of reliable evidence matters, rather than the number of witnesses. The Court scrutinised the evidence of related witnesses, bearing in mind that electoral hostility could provide a motive either for the offence or for false implication, and accepted the evidence of the abductee, his family and the recovery. It carefully assessed the evidence of the related and inimical witnesses and found it credible.

Ransom abduction / participation and payment - Gopal's account of armed seizure and month-long forest captivity, a demand of ₹5 lakh, Prakash's evidence that ₹2 lakh was paid to Narayan Mirdha, and the police recovery of Gopal supported the convictions under Sections 364A and 365 of the IPC, read with Section 120B and Section 13 of the MPDVPK Act where charged. Receipt of money by one captor did not exonerate participants proved to be involved. The Court rejected the appellants' objections and held that the prosecution proved the abduction and ransom case beyond reasonable doubt. The five appeals were dismissed with separate surrender and custody directions for the appellants.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The consolidated judgment disposed of five appeals under Section 374 against two judgments of the Special Judge at Gwalior in Special Sessions Trial 70/2004. Gopal went to sleep at a tube-well after dinner on 15 February 2004 and was missing the next morning. His uncle Laxman reported the disappearance on 16 February after those searching for Gopal found a shoe, lathi, disturbed crops and a key at the site. A missing report was followed by Crime 42/2004 under IPC Section 364A on 5 March. The prosecution alleged armed abduction by a group that took Gopal via Jatrawi to Lokanpur forest, kept him captive for roughly a month, demanded ₹5 lakh and received ₹2 lakh through Narayan Singh Mirdha. Gopal named participants in his police account; Prakash, his brother, said he and Haridwari paid Narayan Mirdha. Police recovered Gopal from captivity on 12 March 2004 under Ex P1, handed him to Prakash under Ex P2 and arrested several suspects; the investigating officer described weapons and later arrests. Gopal said the initial abductors covered their faces, that he knew or learned names through their conversation and extended captivity, and that he was beaten; his familiarity with the accused by face and his identification of them in the dock were contested.

The 8 August 2011 judgment convicted Pancham Singh, Kalyan alias Kallu Gurjar, Narayan Kushwah, Narayan Mirdha and Punjab Singh under Sections 364A and 365. Gariba alias Hanumant and Tunda alias Rajesh were convicted under Sections 364A and 365 read with Section 120B, together with the applicable count under the MP Dacoity and Vyapaharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam. Udal Singh had absconded at the first trial and was separately convicted on 28 June 2012 under Sections 364A and 365 read with the special Act. The sentences included life imprisonment under Section 364A and five years' rigorous imprisonment on the other count, with a ₹300 fine and a default stipulation. The sentences were to run concurrently. The appellants challenged the proof of demand and payment of ransom and of a threat or apprehension under Section 364A. They also raised objections concerning the reliability of the claimed familiarity, the absence of a test identification parade, omissions from police statements, non-examination of Karan, who first supplied names to those searching for Gopal, election enmity, and the lack of independent witnesses. The three defence witnesses asserted innocence or alibi, as did the accused in their statements under Section 313; the court noted the trial court had disbelieved the defence evidence because of contradictions.

2. Precedents — Considered : The appellants relied on Sonu Kumar v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 2009 SC 810, and Mohar Singh v. State of M.P., ILR (2011) MP 1355, on identification. The Bench did not accept that those submissions required acquittal. In its discussion of identification, the Bench referred to Sheo Shankar Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 3 SCC 654, which distinguished identification in court as substantive evidence from a prior parade as a test of its reliability. Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, addressed the investigative character of the test and the scope for relying on reliable identification in court supported by the circumstances. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2014) 12 SCC 133, explained the danger of first-time dock identification of strangers, depending on opportunity for prior observation, and why failure to hold a parade does not automatically invalidate other trustworthy evidence. State of Rajasthan v. Daud Khan, (2016) 2 SCC 607, examined identification and the absence of a parade in the context of witnesses who knew the accused and corroborating facts. Suraj Pal v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 SCC 64, described the parade as testing the witness's memory and guarding against mistaken first identification. Dara Singh v. Republic of India, (2011) 2 SCC 490, with Manu Sharma and Dana Yadav quoted within its passage, warned that uncorroborated first-time dock identification of previously unknown persons is inherently weak; a prior parade is a prudential check rather than a mandatory legal condition. Applying these principles, the Court held that a TIP was unnecessary because Gopal had named the miscreants in his police statement, and that failure of dock identification did not by itself defeat the prosecution case.

On the failure to examine Karan, the Court cited Vadivelu Thevar v. State of Madras, AIR 1957 SC 614; Kunju alias Balachandran v. State of Tamil Nadu, AIR 2008 SC 1381; Bipin Kumar Mondal v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2010 SC 3638; Mahesh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2011) 9 SCC 626; Prithipal Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 1 SCC 10; and Kishan Chand v. State of Haryana, JT 2013 (1) SC 222. The Court relied on these authorities collectively to assess the credibility and quality of the evidence, rather than the number of witnesses. The Court also considered relatedness and enmity as factors requiring careful appraisal, rather than categorical disqualification.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 364A (ransom abduction) and Section 365 (kidnapping/abduction with intent secretly and wrongfully to confine) were the substantive conviction provisions; Section 120B applied to the convictions of Gariba and Tunda for conspiracy. Section 13 of the M.P. Dacoity and Vyapaharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam, 1981, appeared with relevant charges and sentences. Section 374 of the CrPC provided appellate jurisdiction. Section 161 concerned the prior police statements from which omissions were alleged, and Section 313 concerned the accused's explanations. The identification authorities concern Evidence Act Section 9 and the evidentiary function of a parade. The Bench held that the evidence proved the abduction and ransom demand and payment, and affirmed the respective convictions.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the abductee's account of the individual captors could support the convictions despite face covering at the initial encounter, disputed prior acquaintance, inconsistent dock identification and the absence of a police TIP. (ii) Whether the ransom demand and ₹2 lakh payment to one participant, with alleged omissions about payment and no asserted threat to cause death or hurt, sufficed on the proved facts for Section 364A and allied convictions. (iii) Whether election hostility, familial witnesses, defence versions and non-examination of Karan created a reasonable doubt about identity or participation. (iv) Whether the distinct direct and conspiracy convictions and sentences in the two trials required appellate interference.

5. Ratio / Findings : Gopal's account placed armed persons at the tube-well, described movement through the mustard field and continued forest captivity, and named those whom he had observed during roughly a month of captivity. The judgment records his testimony about initial masking and prior acquaintance. The Court held that the absence of a formal TIP was not fatal because Gopal had named the miscreants in his police statement; it also stated that failure to identify an accused in the dock did not by itself defeat the prosecution case. This evidentiary finding depended on the facts of the case and did not create a general presumption in favour of every identification in the dock. On ransom, Prakash testified to the ₹5 lakh demand and ₹2 lakh paid to Narayan Mirdha, and Gopal's account was regarded as corroborated despite the suggested improvement. Once the court accepted their participation in the abduction and ransom scheme, it refused to exonerate others merely because they had not personally received the money. The Bench rejected the appellants' objections and concluded that the prosecution had proved the charged abduction and ransom offences beyond reasonable doubt. Electoral enmity could motivate the offence or false implication, so the court examined the related testimony with additional care. Karan's absence did not deprive the other evidence of its value; the Court found that evidence cogent. The contradictions in the evidence of the three defence witnesses did not establish an alternative account. It upheld the respective direct, conspiracy and special-Act convictions in the two judgments while preserving the distinct bases of conviction of the accused.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed all five appeals and affirmed the Special Judge's judgments of 8 August 2011 and 28 June 2012. Kalyan in his criminal appeal, and Pancham, Gariba and Tunda in theirs, were on bail. Their bonds were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender to serve the remainder of their sentences. In his criminal appeal, Narayan Kushwah, who was in jail but on parole, was directed to surrender. In their respective criminal appeals, Punjab Singh, Narayan Mirdha and Udal Singh were to remain in jail and serve the balance of their sentences. The judgment directed immediate transmission to jail authorities and return of the trial record with a copy.

Kalyan and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 828/2011 & 885/2011 & 898/2011 & 100/2012 & 666/2012, 09/05/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (280) Prev Next

Headnote :- Culpable homicide / murder under Section 300 thirdly - Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, requires proof that the accused intended to inflict the particular bodily injury. Whether that injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death is a separate, objective question. The Court surveyed Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra (criminal appeals 1078–1079/2005), Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, on intention, the injury and weapon, and the possible application of the exceptions to Section 300. It applied clause Thirdly to the deliberate gunfire that damaged Sanjay's lung and caused his homicidal death. Its classification of the offence rested on the proved wounds and the coordinated attack.

Common intention / distinct accused roles - Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra, 2012 (9) SCALE 345, Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., AIR 2012 SC 3539, Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753, and Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 1083, were considered on inferring shared intention from concerted acts, including where that intention forms at the scene. Dashrathlal v. State of Gujarat, 1979 Cri LJ 1078, Rajagopalswamy Konar v. State of T.N., 1994 Cri LJ 2195, Sheikh Nabab v. State of Maharashtra, 1993 Cri LJ 43, and Hem Raj v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1990 SC 2252, caution against imposing liability under Section 34 merely because an accused accompanied another, or where participation was not proved. The Court accepted the eyewitness account of the armed group's arrival and firing, which placed Madho, carrying a luhangi, with the group. It affirmed his conviction under IPC Section 302/34, separately from Gulab's and Kamal's direct convictions under Section 302.

Related and inimical witnesses / motive - Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, discussing Darya Singh and Raghubir Singh, requires careful scrutiny of whether related witnesses were actually present and of material infirmities in their evidence. Credibility does not depend on a fixed number of independent witnesses. The brothers' presence while repairing an electric line, the prompt and specific FIR, the post-mortem findings, the scene evidence and the supporting witnesses sustained their account despite earlier family enmity and the non-examination of Radhelal. Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, was applied for the limited principle that failure to prove motive does not defeat otherwise trustworthy direct evidence.

Appeal / distinct convictions - The Court affirmed Madho's conviction under Section 302/34 and Gulab's and Kamal's direct convictions under Section 302, each read with MPDVPK Act Section 13. In all three appeals, it upheld the sentences of life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000 on each appellant. The appellants who were on bail were directed to surrender.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The connected appeals arose from Special Sessions Trial 71/2007. Judgment was delivered against Madho Singh Rawat and Gulab Singh on 7 April 2010, and against Kamal Singh Rawat on 21 June 2013. Village Kurra, Datia, had been declared a dacoity-affected area by a notification under the MPDVPK Act. On 28 June 2007 at about 2:30 p.m., Sanjay alias Baba and his brothers Dashrath (PW1) and Ashok (PW2) were repairing an electric line in or beside a field. The prosecution alleged that Mohan Singh, Gulab, Kamal and Madho arrived together, armed with firearms and a luhangi, against the background of an earlier family dispute concerning a murder. Mohan allegedly shot Sanjay in the back, Gulab shot him in the right hand, and Kamal shot him in the back. Mohan later died in a police encounter. Panjab and Radhelal arrived on hearing the cries raised by Dashrath and Ashok and saw the men flee. Dashrath reported the matter at 3:20 p.m. at a police station about nine kilometres away. Inquest, site and seizure documents were prepared, and a bullet, cork, pellets, clothes and earth were examined. The autopsy established gunshot injuries and damage to the lung. In their answers under Section 313, the three appellants denied guilt and alleged false implication by relatives who were inimical to them. They examined no defence witness. Madho was convicted under IPC Section 302/34 read with MPDVPK Act Section 13, and Gulab and Kamal under Section 302 directly, read with Section 13. Each was sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000, with a default stipulation. Their appeals challenged the witnesses' presence, omissions in their evidence, the non-examination of Radhelal, their allegedly unnatural failure to intervene, the consistency of the medical and ocular evidence, and the inference of shared intention.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, supplied the four-step test under Section 300 Thirdly: proof of the existence and nature of the bodily injury, the intention to inflict that particular injury, and the objective sufficiency of that injury to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. The burden remains on the prosecution throughout; it need not additionally prove a subjective intention to cause death. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra (criminal appeals 1078–1079/2005, as cited) explained the inquiry under Section 299, followed by Section 300 and its exceptions. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, emphasised that the intended injury must be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, assessed with reference to the weapon and the part of the body injured. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejected a categorical rule for cases involving a single blow and required consideration of the circumstances, whether a vital part was targeted, and the manner of attack. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, identified the cumulative conditions for sudden-fight Exception 4, including a mutual fight, absence of premeditation, and absence of undue advantage or cruelty. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, listed non-exhaustive factors bearing on intention, such as whether the weapon was carried, the part targeted, the force used, prior hostility and provocation. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred intention from a forceful blow to the head, a vital part of the body. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, likewise rejected an automatic reduction of the offence merely because a single blow was inflicted, and reproduced other authorities on Exception 4. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, formed part of the same discussion of mens rea. The Court applied the inquiry into injury and intention to the multiple gunshots and fatal lung damage.

For Section 34, Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra, 2012 (9) SCALE 345, Shyamal Ghosh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2012 SC 3539, Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753, and Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 1083, were discussed on shared intention, prior concert that may develop at the scene, and participation in a joint act. Hem Raj v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1990 SC 2252, illustrates the acquittal of accused whose participation was disbelieved. Dashrathlal v. State of Gujarat, 1979 Cri LJ 1078, states that merely accompanying an accused does not suffice. Rajagopalswamy Konar v. State of Tamil Nadu, 1994 Cri LJ 2195, and Sheikh Nabab v. State of Maharashtra, 1993 Cri LJ 43, show that substantially different acts or unproved participation cannot automatically establish liability for murder on the basis of common intention. The Bench accepted the eyewitness account placing Madho with the armed group and affirmed his conviction under Section 302/34.

Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, states that failure to prove motive loses significance when trustworthy direct evidence establishes the act. Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, reproduced Darya Singh v. State of Punjab on the need for especially careful scrutiny of an inimical relative's presence at the scene and the infirmities in that witness's evidence. It also reproduced Raghubir Singh v. State of U.P. on examining the material witnesses needed to unfold the prosecution case, without unnecessary multiplication of witnesses. The Bench scrutinised the brothers' account and relied on the prompt report and its consistency with the medical and scene evidence in accepting it despite prior hostility.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 299 and 300, particularly clause Thirdly and the discussion of sudden-fight Exception 4, governed the classification of homicide. Sections 302 and 34 governed the distinct direct convictions and the conviction based on common intention. MP Dacoity and Vyapaharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam, 1981, Sections 3 (notified area), 11 and 13 appeared in the context of the investigation and convictions. Arms Act Sections 25 and 27 appeared in the charge-sheet background, rather than as separate convictions under review. CrPC Sections 174 (inquest), 161 (prior statements) and 313 (answers of the accused) provided the procedural context.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the gunshot wounds established homicidal death and satisfied the requirements of an intentional injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death under Section 300 Thirdly, rather than a lesser form of culpable homicide. (ii) Whether the coordinated arrival and the different acts proved that Madho shared the shooters' intention under Section 34, without imposing guilt merely for kinship or presence. (iii) Whether Dashrath and Ashok were credible despite family hostility, alleged omissions and their failure to intervene; and whether the prompt FIR, medical evidence and witnesses who saw the armed group flee supported their account despite Radhelal's non-examination. (iv) Whether the separate convictions under Section 13 of the special Act and the individual sentences required interference.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor found multiple gunshot wounds and fatal lung damage. The recovered articles and site documents supported the alleged place and manner of the occurrence. Applying the subjective and objective requirements in Virsa Singh, the Court found that the firearm injuries to vital parts were intentionally inflicted and were sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The killing therefore amounted to murder under Section 300 Thirdly. The shooters' own acts of firing supported their direct liability. The accepted eyewitness account placed Madho, carrying a luhangi, with the armed group at the field. After discussing Section 34 and assessing the prosecution evidence, the Court affirmed Madho's conviction under Section 302/34 and Gulab's and Kamal's convictions under Section 302. Dashrath and Ashok had a natural reason to be present: they were repairing the electric line. Panjab and Kalyan described hearing gunshots or seeing the armed men flee. The witnesses' prior enmity with the assailants required careful scrutiny, particularly because Sanjay and his father had faced a case concerning the assailants' uncle. Nevertheless, the detailed FIR was lodged about 50 minutes after the incident at a police station nine kilometres away. It named the assailants and was consistent with the post-mortem findings of gunshot injuries and the scene evidence. The Bench found no material conflict between the medical and ocular evidence, and nothing in cross-examination that undermined the essential account. Radhelal's non-examination did not require the prosecution to examine more witnesses when those examined were credible. The Court upheld each appellant's conviction on proof beyond reasonable doubt. Neither the non-examination of a witness nor the animosity automatically established false implication.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed all three appeals. It affirmed the judgment dated 7 April 2010 against Madho (Section 302/34) and Gulab (Section 302), and the judgment dated 21 June 2013 against Kamal (Section 302), each read with MPDVPK Act Section 13 and imposing life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000, with a default stipulation. The appellants who were on bail were directed to surrender immediately to serve the remainder of their sentences. They were to be informed of the judgment through the jail authorities, and copies of the judgment, with the trial record, were to be sent to the Special Judge.

Headnote :- Complaint / sufficient ground for process - Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, (2010) 7 SCC 578, distinguishes a prima facie case under CrPC Sections 203–204 from proof sufficient for conviction. Every witness named in the complaint need not be examined before process is issued, provided a prima facie case is made out. The Magistrate wrongly required a conclusive civil finding of forgery and evidence from the authority that issued the certificate before proceeding on the allegation concerning the 2012 death certificate. The civil court had questioned the unexplained delay in obtaining that certificate. The revisional court could set aside the dismissal under Section 203, but the Magistrate had to determine independently which offences were made out, without being bound by the direction specifying IPC Sections 120B, 471 and 417.

Civil judgment / criminal relevance - Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, discussing Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), (2009) 5 SCC 528, and K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87, explains the different standards of proof in civil and criminal proceedings and the limited relevance of earlier judgments under Evidence Act Sections 40 –43. Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon (SLP (Cr.) 9778/2018, decided 02.04.2024) reaffirmed those distinct standards. The suspicion surrounding the 2012 certificate was relevant at the prima facie stage; it was not a final judicial finding that the applicants had forged it. Their separate 2021 certificate was outside the complaint and was disregarded.

Concurrent proceedings / no automatic civil bar - M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, ordinarily gives criminal proceedings precedence, while leaving room for the circumstances of the case and the likelihood of embarrassment; it lays down no rigid rule. M. Krishnan v. Vijay Singh, AIR 2001 SC 3014, Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of W.B., AIR 2001 SC 3846, Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, and P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, (2008) 5 SCC 765, were applied to permit independent consideration of the criminal complaint despite the pending second civil appeal. The Court did not determine guilt or conclusively decide the certificate's authenticity.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Maniram owned the disputed land. His widow Kamla Bai and the other heirs sued for a declaration that the sale deed dated 20 December 1988 was void, asserting that he had died on 2 April 1987. The purchasers maintained that he had executed the deed and died on 16 November 1989. The heirs relied on a death certificate issued on 3 September 2012. In its judgment dated 14 December 2017, the civil court declined to rely on it because the registration and issue of the certificate about 25 years after the asserted death remained unexplained. The civil suit and first appeal were dismissed. A second appeal was pending and, according to the High Court, had not yet been admitted. The purchasers also filed a complaint alleging that the heirs had produced a forged 2012 certificate to defeat the sale deed. After recording the preliminary statements, the JMFC dismissed the complaint under CrPC Section 203 because the civil court had not expressly found forgery and the complainants had not examined a competent person from the authority that issued the certificate. The Sessions Court allowed the revision, set aside that dismissal and directed cognizance under IPC Sections 120B, 471 and 417. The heirs invoked CrPC Section 482, arguing that the revisional court could order further inquiry under Section 398 but could not dictate findings on guilt or authenticity, or direct cognizance of specified offences. A separate certificate issued on 28 July 2021 was annexed to the High Court application. It was neither the document used in the civil suit nor the subject of the complaint.

2. Precedents — Considered : Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, (2010) 7 SCC 578, construed "sufficient ground" in CrPC Sections 203, 204 and 209 as a prima facie basis for proceeding, rather than proof sufficient for conviction. Its quoted discussion of Chandra Deo Singh, Kewal Krishan and Mohinder Singh explains that the complaint inquiry is not a full trial and that every named witness need not be examined, provided a prima facie case is made out. The Court applied that standard in rejecting the JMFC's requirement of definitive proof of forgery and evidence from the certificate-issuing authority before process could issue.

Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, discussed Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, on proof by preponderance in civil proceedings, the prosecution's burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt in criminal proceedings, and the absence of a general rule making the findings in one proceeding binding in the other. Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), (2009) 5 SCC 528, and K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87, addressed the limited relevance of earlier judgments under Evidence Act Sections 40–43. The discussion in Kishan Singh rejected reliance on Karam Chand for a general rule that civil findings take precedence. Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon (SLP (Cr.) 9778/2018, decided 02.04.2024) reaffirmed the distinct standards and the limited relevance of earlier findings in their context. Applying these authorities, the Bench treated the civil court's suspicion as relevant at the prima facie stage of cognizance, without holding that forgery was proved or that the civil findings bound the criminal court.

M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, ordinarily gave criminal proceedings precedence to avoid delay in criminal justice, but expressly rejected a hard-and-fast rule. Special circumstances and the likelihood of embarrassment could affect whether proceedings should be stayed. M. Krishnan v. Vijay Singh, AIR 2001 SC 3014, held that a civil suit concerning allegedly forged documents does not, by itself, justify quashing criminal proceedings; the criminal allegations must be proved independently. Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of W.B., AIR 2001 SC 3846, likewise required criminal proceedings to follow the CrPC despite the civil action. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, cautioned against quashing criminal proceedings on extraneous considerations arising from civil proceedings. P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, (2008) 5 SCC 765, permitted simultaneous proceedings and left the question of a stay to the facts of each case. The Court followed these authorities in allowing the criminal complaint to proceed while the second appeal remained pending. The applicants relied on Rajaram Gupta, Rewaram and Bahadur Singh to support the limits on revisional power. The Court accepted that the Magistrate's independent assessment had to be preserved.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 203 governed dismissal of the complaint. Sections 200, 202 and 204 provided the framework for preliminary inquiry and issue of process discussed in Shivjee Singh. Section 398 empowered the revisional court to direct further inquiry into a dismissed complaint, while leaving the decision on cognizance to the Magistrate. Section 482 provided the basis for invoking inherent jurisdiction. IPC Sections 120B, 471 and 417 were the offences specified in the Sessions Court's direction; that direction was not a finding of guilt. Evidence Act Sections 40–43 governed the limited relevance of earlier judgments. The direction concerned cognizance of the offences disclosed by the available material.

4. Issues : (i) Could the Magistrate dismiss the complaint at the prima facie stage because the civil judgment had not expressly found the 2012 certificate to be forged and the issuing authority had not yet testified? (ii) What relevance did the civil court's refusal to rely on that document have without binding the criminal court or prejudging guilt? (iii) Did dismissal of the civil suit and first appeal, together with the pending second appeal, prevent independent criminal proceedings? (iv) Could the revisional court set aside the dismissal under Section 203 and direct process for specified IPC offences, or did the Magistrate have to determine independently which offences were made out? The separate 2021 certificate was outside the complaint and did not provide a basis for deciding the authenticity of the certificate in issue.

5. Ratio / Findings : The civil court had refused to rely on the death certificate obtained in 2012 for the asserted death in 1987 because the heirs had not explained the delay in obtaining it. The High Court treated the suspicion recorded by the civil court as relevant material for deciding whether there was sufficient ground to take cognizance. It maintained the distinction between the relevance of that material and a binding civil finding or proof of forgery. The absence of a witness from the certificate-issuing authority at the preliminary inquiry did not justify demanding proof sufficient for conviction. The pending second civil appeal did not automatically bar the complaint, which had to be decided on its own evidence and standard of proof. Annexure P7, the separate 2021 certificate, was excluded from consideration because it had not been filed in the civil suit and was not the subject of the criminal complaint. The High Court upheld the reversal of the dismissal under Section 203, but held that the JMFC should not be directed to take cognizance only under Sections 120B, 471 and 417. The JMFC had to decide independently which offences were made out and could take cognizance of another offence disclosed by the material. The Court did not find the applicants guilty or conclusively decide the certificate's authenticity.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the challenge with a modification: the Magistrate was to take cognizance of the offences actually made out, on an independent assessment and without being influenced by the revisional court's specification of IPC offences. The Magistrate could also take cognizance of another offence if the material supported it. The complaint was not quashed. The Court ordered no automatic stay on account of the civil proceedings and made no finding of criminal guilt.

Kamla Bai and others v. Kailash Singh Raghuvanshi and others, M.Cr.C. no. 13070/2024, 07/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- False affidavit / Section 340 complaint - General Clauses Act Section 3(3), Oaths Act Sections 3–4 and IPC Sections 191–193 explain the solemn nature of an affidavit and the possible offence of giving false evidence. Dalip Singh v. State of U.P., (2010) 2 SCC 114, Baban Singh v. Jagdish Singh, AIR 1967 SC 68, Dhananjay Sharma v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 SCC 757, and Rita Markandey v. Surjit Singh Arora, (1996) 6 SCC 14, emphasise the seriousness of knowingly submitting false material to a court. The Court did not hold that every inaccuracy, even after correction, necessarily required prosecution.

Deliberate material falsehood / expediency - Aarish Asgar Qureshi v. Fareed Ahmed Qureshi, (2019) 18 SCC 172, requires a statement to be deliberately and consciously made and found false on comparison with unimpeachable evidence. Muthu Karuppan v. Parithi Ilamvazhuthi, (2011) 5 SCC 496, requires a reasonable prima facie foundation for deliberate falsehood on a matter of substance and a finding, on the facts of the case, that inquiry is expedient in the interests of justice; mere suspicion is insufficient. Applying those limits to the corrected affidavit in the disputed-will suit, the Court held that whether Raksha Devi received family pension or old-age pension did not affect the availability of her admitted signatures in the ID and passbook for comparison under Evidence Act Section 45. The affidavit had been sworn carelessly, but the error did not change the order allowing comparison. The Court therefore declined a complaint under Section 340 and dismissed the Section 482 application.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sukhdevlal and his sibling filed a civil suit claiming a half share in joint agricultural land at Morar, Gwalior. They alleged that their relatives, Kamla Sharma and others, had obtained mutation on the strength of a forged will dated 12 February 1991, purportedly executed by their deceased mother, Raksha Devi. Their assertions about title, possession, the mutation appeal and threats were civil pleadings, not findings in this criminal application. In the suit, they applied under Evidence Act Section 45 for comparison of the disputed signature/thumb impression on the will with Raksha Devi's admitted specimens on her ID and original passbook. Their supporting affidavit initially stated that their father had been a government employee and that their mother had received family pension after his death. The civil court allowed comparison on 27 November 2013. They later filed a correcting affidavit, stating that the assertions about their father's government employment and their mother's family pension had been made by mistake; their mother had received old-age pension. The ID and bank documents containing her admitted specimens were still available. The applicants sought a complaint under CrPC Section 340 read with Section 195 for false evidence, also pointing to the timing of the father's death and the documents dated 1999. The Civil Judge refused the request on 7 January 2016 on the ground that the affidavit had been manipulated outside court. The Additional Sessions Judge dismissed Criminal Appeal 65/2016 on 30 June 2016. In the Section 482 application, the applicants sought prosecution, distinguishing the filing of a false affidavit in court from fabrication of a document before it entered court custody. The respondents admitted that the pension description was inaccurate, but maintained that it was a mistake which did not affect the comparison request.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court cited Dalip Singh v. State of U.P., (2010) 2 SCC 114, on litigants seeking judicial relief through falsehood or suppression. It provided a caution against such conduct, rather than a rule requiring prosecution in every case. Baban Singh v. Jagdish Singh, AIR 1967 SC 68, treated a knowingly false affidavit tendered in evidence as potentially falling within IPC Sections 191–192, where it was intended to induce an erroneous judicial conclusion on a material point, rather than merely a false declaration under Section 199. Dhananjay Sharma v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 SCC 757, and Rita Markandey v. Surjit Singh Arora, (1996) 6 SCC 14, concerned deliberately false sworn declarations interfering with the administration of justice. The discussion of Chandra Shashi v. Anil Kumar Verma, (1995) 1 SCC 421, required deceit or knowledge that the statement submitted was forged or fabricated. The Bench acknowledged the seriousness of intentionally false affidavits, then examined the material effect of this particular statement.

Aarish Asgar Qureshi v. Fareed Ahmed Qureshi, (2019) 18 SCC 172, required deliberate and conscious falsity established by comparison with unimpeachable evidence. Muthu Karuppan v. Parithi Ilamvazhuthi, (2011) 5 SCC 496, required a reasonable prima facie case of deliberate falsehood on a matter of substance and a finding that inquiry was expedient in the interests of justice, on grounds beyond surmise or suspicion. It recognised exceptional proceedings where a deliberately false statement was made to obtain a beneficial judicial order. Applying those tests to the comparison order, the Court found that the incorrect description of the pension had changed neither the availability of genuine documents for comparison nor the basis of the order. The applicants relied on Iqbal Singh Marwah to distinguish forgery before production from a false affidavit filed in court. They also cited State of H.P. v. Suresh Kumar Verma and the local decision in Mohammad Ibrahim in support of prosecution.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 195(1)(b) and 340 govern the court's consideration of an inquiry and a written complaint concerning an offence in or relating to its proceedings. Section 482 was invoked to challenge the refusal to make a complaint. IPC Sections 24–25 and 191–193 were reproduced in relation to dishonest or fraudulent intent and false evidence; Section 199 appeared in the discussion of Baban Singh. General Clauses Act Section 3(3) and Oaths Act Sections 3–4 explain or regulate affidavits and sworn declarations. Evidence Act Section 45 governed the underlying request for expert comparison, rather than a finding of criminal guilt. Contempt of Courts Act Section 2(c) appeared in the precedents on false affidavits; no contempt proceeding was instituted in this case.

4. Issues : (i) Did the affidavit's incorrect description of old-age pension as “family pension” constitute a deliberate and material falsehood warranting a complaint under Section 340 despite its later correction? (ii) Did that description influence the order permitting expert comparison of the disputed will with the admitted specimens on the ID and passbook, so that prosecution was expedient in the interests of justice? (iii) Was refusal to make a court complaint erroneous because the lower courts referred to manipulation outside court, although the applicants complained of a false affidavit filed in court? The High Court decided the application on materiality and expediency.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court emphasised that an affidavit is a solemn declaration and that a knowingly false affidavit must be taken seriously; it did not condone casual verification. Under Section 340, the Court must form an opinion that inquiry is expedient in the interests of justice. Aarish Asgar Qureshi requires deliberate and conscious falsity established by comparison with unimpeachable evidence. Muthu Karuppan requires a reasonable prima facie foundation for deliberate falsehood on a matter of substance, on grounds beyond mere suspicion, together with an assessment of expediency. Whether the false statement secured a favourable order that would otherwise have been unavailable was one criterion identified by the Court. The respondents' description of “family pension” was incorrect, as their correcting affidavit acknowledged. The Section 45 application, however, sought admitted signatures/thumb impressions for comparison with the disputed will. Raksha Devi's ID and passbook supplied those specimens whether she received family pension or old-age pension. An accurate initial description of old-age pension would therefore have produced the same result on the comparison application. The error did not secure a favourable order that was otherwise unavailable. Although the Court expressly criticised the carelessly sworn affidavit, it held that proceedings under Section 340 were not expedient. It did not decide the will's genuineness or find the affiants guilty of perjury or contempt.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The Civil Judge's refusal to make a complaint under Section 340, as upheld in the criminal appeal, remained in force. No inquiry into perjury or contempt was ordered.

Kamla Sharma and others v. Sukhdevlal and others, M.Cr.C. no. 8770/2016, 18/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- CrPC Section 311 — summoning a material witness after closure of prosecution evidence. In a murder and kidnapping trial based on circumstantial evidence, Veer Kumar, the prosecution's cited last-seen witness, turned hostile. After the accused's statement under Section 313, the complainant sought to call Jaiveer as another last-seen witness. Jaiveer had neither been listed as a witness nor examined during investigation, and Vimlesh, through whom his information was said to have emerged, had not mentioned him in statements under Sections 161 or 164. Applying Raj Deo Sharma (II), Fatehsinh Mohansinh Chauhan, Iddar and Rajaram Prasad Yadav, the High Court recognised the power under Section 311 to obtain material evidence and the duty to summon a witness whose evidence is essential to a just decision. In the circumstances, however, that provision could not be used to change the prosecution case by introducing an uninvestigated witness in place of its cited witness merely to overcome that witness's failure to support the prosecution. The summons order was set aside.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vikram disappeared after going to school and was later found dead in a well. Kamlesh faced charges under IPC Sections 302, 363 and 364A and the MP dacoity area law. The prosecution case rested on circumstantial evidence. Veer Kumar, its cited last-seen witness, did not support the prosecution. After prosecution evidence had closed and Kamlesh's statement under CrPC Section 313 had been recorded, the complainant applied to call Jaiveer as a new witness. The complainant relied on Vimlesh's trial testimony that Jaiveer had seen Vikram with Kamlesh. The trial court allowed the request for summons because Vimlesh had not been cross-examined on that assertion.

2. Precedents — Considered : Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar, (1999) 7 SCC 604, held that closure of prosecution evidence does not exhaust the power under Section 311 where the evidence is essential. U.T. of Dadra and Nagar Haveli v. Fatehsinh Mohansinh Chauhan, (2006) 7 SCC 529, held that calling a witness to ascertain the truth cannot be treated as filling a lacuna in the prosecution case unless it would cause serious prejudice to the accused resulting in a miscarriage of justice. Iddar v. Aabida, AIR 2007 SC 3029, emphasised whether the evidence was essential to a just decision and required the wide discretion to be exercised judiciously. Rajaram Prasad Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 2013 SC 3081, laid down safeguards, including that additional evidence must not disguise a change in the case and that the parties must have a fair opportunity. The High Court applied those safeguards to the witness proposed at the late stage of trial. These authorities do not impose a blanket bar on recalling a witness after another witness turns hostile.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 311, 161, 164, 313 and 482 concerned the witness application, earlier statements and the High Court challenge. IPC Sections 302, 363 and 364A and Sections 11/13 of the M.P. Dacoity Avam Vyapaharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam were the pending trial charges; their merits were not decided in this application.

4. Issues : Was summoning an unlisted witness who had not been examined during investigation, in place of the original last-seen witness who had turned hostile, essential to a just decision? What was the effect of Vimlesh's failure to mention Jaiveer's account in his earlier statements and of the absence of cross-examination on his new trial account?

5. Ratio / Findings : Neither Vimlesh's statement under Section 161 nor his statement under Section 164 identified Jaiveer as the source of information that the deceased was last seen with the accused. The police had not recorded Jaiveer's statement or listed him as a witness. The application was made after Veer Kumar failed to support the prosecution on that same central circumstance. The absence of cross-examination on Vimlesh's trial assertion did not overcome those omissions. In these circumstances, the proposal changed the prosecution case and impermissibly filled the gap left by the failed last-seen evidence. It did not seek evidence indispensable to a fair decision.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the order summoning the witness under Section 311 and rejected the complainant's application. It directed the trial court to continue the proceedings according to law.

Kamlesh Diwakar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 11021/2016, 08/11/2016, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Identification / test parade and dock evidence - Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2014) 12 SCC 133, distinguishes substantive identification in court from a test identification parade (TIP), which assists investigation and tests reliability. Prior exposure, unfamiliarity, delay, the witness's opportunity to observe and corroboration affect the weight of identification. The authorities considered by the Bench prescribe no invariable deadline for a parade and do not require acquittal merely because no TIP was held. The Bench applied that caution where Buddhu had learned the captors' names from their speech and had seen Kamlesh and Mithlesh at Joura Court before identifying them in the dock. No TIP was held for Kamlesh. For Mithlesh's parade on 25 April 2003, the arrest date and precautions to conceal his identity were not proved, the Naib Tahsildar who conducted it was not examined, and Buddhu disowned the parade. Bhagwan did not identify Kamlesh, and his identification of Mithlesh was unsafe without supporting evidence.

Document proof / ransom letters - Bhagwan described being forced to write two letters demanding ₹5 lakh. Ex P4 and Ex P6, however, were marked through the investigator without being shown to him. There was no handwriting evidence, and the alleged recipients, Cheu and Ratiram, did not testify. Marking the letters as exhibits and the evidence of seizure did not establish authorship, dispatch or receipt. The letters could not corroborate the appellants' personal involvement.

Ransom abduction / accused-wise proof - The other abductees, Thakur Lal and Fosu, did not support the identification of either appellant. The Court distinguished evidence of captivity and an alleged ransom demand from proof that Kamlesh and Mithlesh had committed the offence under IPC Section 364A read with MPDVPK Act Sections 11/13. The identifications affected by prior exposure or lacking support, together with the unproved letters, left reasonable doubt. Both convictions and life sentences were set aside, with directions for release and refund of fines.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On the night of 11–12 December 2002, Buddhu and Bhagwan Singh were in the fields near their hut when several men armed with guns and lathis allegedly took them into captivity in the forest. Bhagwan said that he was forced to write two letters demanding ₹5 lakh. He escaped after about four days and reported the incident on 18 December. Thakur Lal and Fosu, allegedly abducted later, did not identify the appellants. The police seized the alleged inland ransom letters, Ex P4 and P6, said to have been produced by Cheu and Ratiram, and arrested Kamlesh on 27 February 2003. Buddhu named Kamlesh and Mithlesh in his police statement, but later explained that he recognised the captors' faces and learned their names from their calls to one another. Mithlesh underwent a TIP on 25 April 2003; no TIP was held for Kamlesh. On 3 October 2006, the Special Judge, Sheopur, convicted both under IPC Section 364A read with MP Dacoity and Vyapaharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam Sections 11/13, imposing life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000 with imprisonment in default. In their separate appeals under Section 374, the appellants challenged identification, the parade and proof of the letters. The prosecution defended the convictions.

2. Precedents — Considered : Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2014) 12 SCC 133, was reproduced at length and applied. Identification in court is substantive evidence; a prior police TIP is an investigative check on memory and reliability, is not compulsory, and is not substantive evidence. A first identification in the dock after suggestive prior exposure is vulnerable without independent corroboration. The Bench also cited Prahlad Singh on tutored identification in court, Mohd. Iqbal M. Sheikh on suspects known only by appearance and the effect of a police show-up, and Sheo Shankar Singh on the non-mandatory nature of a TIP. Pramod Mandal, quoted within Sheo Shankar Singh, rejected a fixed period for a parade or a fixed number of identifying witnesses and left acceptability to assessment of the whole record. Malkhansingh and Aqeel Ahmad adopted the same flexible approach. The Bench applied the caution in Prakash to the earlier courthouse exposure and the weaknesses in the identification evidence against each appellant. It preserved the possibility of accepting trustworthy identification in court without a TIP in an appropriate case.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 364A was the charge of abduction for ransom. MP Dacoity and Vyapaharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam Sections 11 and 13 were the linked special-Act charges. CrPC Section 374 governed the appeals. The case diary statement, Ex D1, was used to test the claimed prior naming of the appellants. Evidence Act Section 9 supplied the identification context discussed in the passage from Malkhansingh quoted in Sheo Shankar Singh. The Court assessed authorship and receipt of the letters as matters requiring proof; assigning exhibit numbers did not, by itself, establish their contents or provenance.

4. Issues : (i) Did Buddhu's recognition of the appellants' faces, naming in his police statement and identification in the dock reliably establish Kamlesh's identity when no TIP was held for him and Buddhu had seen both appellants at Joura Court before testifying? (ii) Could the TIP and identification in court establish Mithlesh's identity when Buddhu denied the parade, the arrest and concealment history were not proved, the conducting officer was not examined, and Bhagwan's identification lacked other corroboration? (iii) Were Ex P4 and P6 proved to have been written by Bhagwan under compulsion and received by Cheu and Ratiram, and could exhibit marking overcome the absence of proof from the maker and recipients? (iv) Once the unreliable links were excluded, had the prosecution proved each appellant's participation in the ransom abduction beyond reasonable doubt?

5. Ratio / Findings : Buddhu's naming of Kamlesh in the case diary statement did not assist the prosecution: he recognised the captors by their faces and had learned their names from their calls during captivity. He admitted seeing both men at Joura Court before identifying them in the dock. Bhagwan did not identify Kamlesh at all. No TIP was held for Kamlesh, although the police considered one necessary for Mithlesh, and there was no other reliable corroboration. As regards Mithlesh, Buddhu told the court that the police had not asked him to identify an accused, despite the recorded parade. Bhagwan said that he had identified Mithlesh in Ex P3. Mithlesh's arrest date and precautions to conceal his identity before the parade on 25 April 2003 were not proved, and the Naib Tahsildar who conducted it was not examined. Buddhu's earlier sighting and the absence of independent support also undermined identification in court. As to the letters, Bhagwan was not asked whether the exhibits were in his handwriting, no handwriting report was obtained, and neither Cheu nor Ratiram testified to receipt or production. The investigator's evidence of seizure and the absence of an immediate objection did not prove that chain. There was evidence describing captivity and a ransom demand, but, in view of these distinct failures, the prosecution did not prove either appellant's personal involvement beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed both criminal appeals, filed by Kamlesh and Mithlesh. The conviction and life sentence dated 3 October 2006 under IPC Section 364A read with special-Act Sections 11/13 were set aside, and both appellants were acquitted of all charges. As they were in jail, the Court ordered their immediate release unless required in another case. Any fines deposited were to be refunded. If ₹1,000 had already been paid to Buddhu and Bhagwan under the trial court's order, it was to be recovered from them.

Headnote :- Eyewitness contradictions / core credibility - Mallikarjun v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, drawing on Bakhshish Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 12 SCC 187, Sunil Kumar Sambhudaya Gupta v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 13 SCC 657, and Raj Kumar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2013) 5 SCC 722, distinguishes minor discrepancies from omissions or contradictions that materially affect the credibility of the prosecution case. A witness's evidence must be assessed as a whole. Applying these principles, the Court relied on Chandrabhan's prompt FIR naming the accused, the testimony of Rampal and other witnesses, and the seven firearm injuries found at post-mortem. The minor variations alleged by the defence did not undermine the account of the armed attack on Ranveer following an irrigation dispute.

Multiple accused / separate trials - Kampoo, Narayan and Kallu were convicted in the 2010 trial under IPC Sections 302 and 302/34 and Arms Act Sections 25(1)(b) and 27. The record included firearm seizures, transmission of the seized articles to the FSL and the District Magistrate's sanction. Matlab, who had earlier absconded, was tried subsequently, and the relevant witnesses were examined afresh. On the evidence recorded in his trial, the Court accepted the account that he fired a 12-bore gun and rejected his wedding alibi. His conviction under Section 302/34 and sentence of life imprisonment were affirmed. The Arms Act convictions in the earlier trial concerned Kampoo, Narayan and Kallu. Both appeals were dismissed. All appellants were already in jail and were directed to serve their remaining sentences.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 28 January 2008, Chandrabhan, his brother Ranveer and Ranveer's son Rampal were irrigating a field at Barjorpura. Kampoo objected to their use of water from the government canal, and Chandrabhan said that they would stop. According to the prosecution, when the three were returning at about 5 p.m. near Nihal Chowkidar's house, Kampoo came armed with a mouser, Matlab with a 12-bore gun, and Narayan and Kallu with country-made firearms. The prosecution attributed successive shots to the accused, striking Ranveer's chin, shoulders, neck, rib and fingers. He died at the scene. Panjab, Munnidevi and Laxman reached the spot after hearing cries or gunshots. Chandrabhan took the body by tractor to Indergarh police station, about 10–12 km away, and lodged a report naming all four accused that evening, within approximately four hours. Police recovered cartridges, a brick bearing a bullet mark, earth, clothes and weapons. They sent articles for forensic testing and obtained the District Magistrate's sanction under the Arms Act. The post-mortem examination disclosed seven firearm injuries, and the death was found to be homicidal. In the first trial, S.T. 81/2008, Kampoo, Narayan and Kallu were convicted on 30 July 2010 under IPC Sections 302 and 302/34 and Arms Act Sections 25(1)(b) and 27. They received life imprisonment and three-year terms, with a fine of ₹1,000 each and default stipulations. Matlab was shown as absconding. After a supplementary charge-sheet and a separate trial in which eight prosecution witnesses and three defence witnesses were examined, he was convicted under Section 302/34 on 19 December 2015 and sentenced to life imprisonment with a fine of ₹5,000 and a default stipulation. The appeals questioned contradictions in the testimony, reliance on related witnesses, the absence of an independent witness and whether the medical evidence corroborated the prosecution account. Matlab also relied on his claim that he was attending a wedding.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mallikarjun v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, was quoted and applied in assessing whether differences between the police statements and testimony in court materially affected the prosecution case. The discussion quoted from Bakhshish Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 12 SCC 187, including Sunil Kumar Sambhudaya Gupta v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 13 SCC 657, explained that trivial inconsistencies and embellishments do not justify rejection of the evidence as a whole when the essential prosecution account remains credible. The magnitude and material effect of the alleged defects must be assessed. Raj Kumar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2013) 5 SCC 722, also reproduced in that discussion, required the evidence of a witness to be read as a whole. If it appeared to contain a ring of truth, the particular deficiencies and infirmities had to be evaluated to determine whether they rendered it unworthy of belief. The Bench applied these principles to Chandrabhan's prompt FIR, the eyewitness testimony, the physical evidence and the seven firearm injuries.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302 and 34 governed the findings of murder and common intention. Section 294 appeared in the initial FIR. The convictions of Kampoo, Narayan and Kallu under Arms Act Sections 25(1)(b) and 27, and their three-year terms, were affirmed. The District Magistrate's sanction for prosecution was proved as Ex P20. Matlab's subsequent conviction and sentence were under Section 302/34.

4. Issues : (i) Was the account of the irrigation dispute and shooting, including the weapons used by the accused and the sequence of firing, reliable despite the relationship of the witnesses to the deceased, the alleged contradictions and the failure to produce unrelated witnesses? (ii) Did the medical evidence and the articles recovered from the scene corroborate the accusation against Kampoo, Narayan and Kallu, and did the weapon seizures and sanction support their convictions under the Arms Act? (iii) In Matlab's subsequent trial, was his participation proved beyond reasonable doubt despite Laxman's failure to support the prosecution and the three defence witnesses who claimed that he was attending a wedding but gave differing dates?

5. Ratio / Findings : In the first trial, Chandrabhan's account named all four accused soon after the occurrence, described their weapons and participation, and remained substantially consistent. Rampal and the other family or nearby witnesses supported the account of the shooting. The seven firearm injuries found at post-mortem, the cartridges and other articles recovered from the scene, and the weapon seizures corroborated the prosecution case. The Court assessed the differences in the testimony in the context of the evidence as a whole and found that they did not materially affect the prosecution account. It also held that Rampal's testimony could not be disbelieved merely because he was the deceased's son. The investigating officers described the recovery of weapons and ammunition from the first three appellants, the seized articles were sent for chemical examination, and the Arms Clerk proved the District Magistrate's sanction. The Court affirmed the convictions under the IPC and the Arms Act. It separately examined the evidence recorded in Matlab's subsequent trial. Except for Laxman, the prosecution witnesses again supported the account of the attack; Chandrabhan's testimony was corroborated by Rampal and Munnidevi. The defence witnesses claimed that Matlab was at a relative's wedding and produced notarised affidavits. Their accounts differed as to the dates of the wedding or the ceremony following it, and one witness was a close relative brought to court by Matlab's grandson. The Court rejected the alibi as unconvincing in view of the prompt FIR and the eyewitness testimony establishing Matlab's participation with a firearm. On that evidence, it affirmed his conviction under Section 302/34. The Arms Act convictions affirmed in the earlier trial concerned Kampoo, Narayan and Kallu.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both criminal appeals. It affirmed the convictions dated 30 July 2010 of Kampoo, Narayan and Kallu, with their sentences of life imprisonment and three-year terms, and Matlab's conviction dated 19 December 2015 under Section 302/34, with his sentence of life imprisonment. Their respective fines and default stipulations remained in force. All appellants were in jail and were directed to serve their remaining sentences.

Headnote :- IPC Section 498A — Quashing of matrimonial cruelty FIR. The wife alleged demands for a four-wheeler as dowry, abuse, deprivation of food, assault and renewed taunts after a period of reconciliation. The High Court held that the omission of earlier allegations from the mediation record did not justify rejecting the allegations in the FIR. Applying Rupali Devi, it recognised that the mental trauma caused by being compelled to leave the matrimonial home could continue at the parental home. The principles quoted from Taramani Parakh required specific allegations against relatives and left triable disputes for trial. The alleged abuse by the elder brother-in-law in connection with the unfulfilled dowry demand was a specific allegation, rather than the mere inclusion of his name. Its truth could not be tested at the quashing stage. The application under Section 482 to quash the FIR was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant married applicant Kapil Gupta in 2019. In the FIR, she alleged that her husband and relatives in the matrimonial household mistreated her, demanded a four-wheeler as dowry, abused her, denied her food, took away her mobile phone and prevented her from talking to her mother, and pressed her to claim a share in her maternal grandfather's property. She returned to the matrimonial home after mediation in proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights, but alleged that the taunts resumed. The applicants sought quashing of the FIR on the grounds of delay, the absence of cruelty allegations in the reconciliation record and the allegedly vague nature of the accusations, including those against Rahul Gupta, her elder brother-in-law.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicants relied on Kahkashan Kausar v. State of Bihar, (2022) 6 SCC 599, and Jai Prakash Singh in support of their objections concerning general allegations and delay. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was applied to the continuing mental cruelty suffered by a wife after she was driven from the matrimonial home. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was quoted on the need for specific allegations against relatives and the limits of quashing. The quoted principles distinguished proceedings that, on their face, amounted to an abuse of process from cases raising triable issues, in which the truth of competing versions could not be determined at that stage. The quotation referred to Kailash Chandra Agrawal, Kans Raj, K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa. The coordinate High Court decision in Amar Singh v. Vimla was cited for the proposition that compelling a married woman to live at her parental home also amounted to cruelty.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 498A concerned the allegations of cruelty in connection with dowry demands. The application sought quashing under CrPC Section 482. Proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights under Hindu Marriage Act Section 9 supplied the reconciliation record on which the applicants relied. The absence of details of cruelty from that record did not justify rejecting the allegations in the FIR.

4. Issues : Did the absence of earlier allegations from the reconciliation record, the delay in lodging the FIR and the allegedly general accusations show that the proceedings against the husband and relatives were an abuse of process? Did the acts attributed to the elder brother-in-law constitute a specific allegation against him?

5. Ratio / Findings : When spouses decided to forgive each other and resume married life, the mediator was not expected to record every allegation that had led to their separation. The allegations of dowry demands, ill-treatment and circumstances compelling the complainant to live separately disclosed a prima facie case of cruelty. Rahul lived in the same household and was specifically alleged to have abused the complainant because the dowry demand had not been met. That was a specific allegation of his role. Whether the allegations were true was a matter for trial. At the quashing stage, the Court could interfere only if the uncontroverted allegations failed to disclose an offence; the allegations in this case did disclose one.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. The FIR remained intact, leaving the investigation or prosecution to proceed.

Kapil Gupta and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, M.Cr.C. no. 12990/2024, 03/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- IPC Sections 394 and 397, Arms Act and MP dacoity area law — Failure to explain serious injuries sustained by the accused. Karan and Sajjan were alleged to have robbed a couple at gunpoint and were then beaten by villagers. Sajjan died, and Karan sustained multiple injuries. The prosecution failed to explain those injuries and the fatal beating. Its account also contained material contradictions concerning the timing, the alleged taking of the victims' motorcycle while leaving the accused's motorcycle behind, recovery 100 metres from the alleged place of apprehension, and prolonged beating of the victims despite their minor injuries. Applying Mano Dutt and Krishnegowda, the High Court held that the unexplained serious injuries, together with these contradictions, showed suppression of the genesis of the occurrence and created reasonable doubt. Failure to explain a trivial injury would not necessarily have the same effect. All convictions were set aside, and Karan was acquitted.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sunil and Savitri alleged that Karan and two others stopped their motorcycle and, by threatening them with a country-made pistol, took the ornaments and the vehicle. Villagers caught Karan and Sajjan and beat them; Sajjan later died. The police claimed to have seized the victims' motorcycle and a loaded pistol. Karan was convicted under IPC Sections 394/397, MP Dacoity and Vyapaharan Prabhavit Kshetra Act Sections 11/13 and Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a). On the principal count, he was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. For the Arms Act offence, he received one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹500, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. He appealed against the convictions and sentences.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mano Dutt v. State of U.P., (2012) 4 SCC 79, was applied to the effect of the prosecution's failure to explain injuries sustained by an accused. The injuries must be serious and must have been sustained in the occurrence in question. Krishnegowda v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 13 SCC 98, was quoted on defects in the investigation arising from unexplained injuries to an accused and the treatment of a counter-complaint. Gurwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 525, and Kumar v. State, (2018) 7 SCC 536, were also quoted on the significance and limits of non-explanation of injuries. The quoted principles did not make every unexplained injury fatal to the prosecution: clear, cogent and credible evidence could still be accepted, and the serious and contemporaneous nature of the injuries had to be considered. The reproduced discussion included Lakshmi Singh and other decisions. Applying these principles, the High Court distinguished minor unexplained injuries from Karan's multiple injuries and the beating that caused Sajjan's death.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 394, 397 and 34; Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a) in the framed charge and conviction, and Sections 25/27 in the charge-sheet; MP Dacoity and Vyapaharan Prabhavit Kshetra Act Sections 11/13; CrPC Section 374, under which the conviction appeal was filed.

4. Issues : Were the robbery allegations and the alleged recovery of the pistol reliable in view of the unexplained injuries to the accused and the death of the alleged co-accused, the discrepancy between the account of beating and the victims' minor injuries, the inconsistent timing, and the seizure from a public road away from the alleged place of apprehension?

5. Ratio / Findings : The police acknowledged that villagers had beaten both men, but the prosecution did not explain the circumstances in which Karan sustained his injuries or Sajjan was fatally injured.

The claim that the victims had been beaten for a prolonged period was inconsistent with their minor medical injuries. The Court found the account of the robbers taking the victims' motorcycle while abandoning their own implausible. The seizure evidence and the timing of the reports were also inconsistent with the alleged immediate apprehension. These omissions and contradictions, considered together, created reasonable doubt about the prosecution account, including the alleged firearm recovery. The Court further noted that no documentary evidence had been produced to establish ownership of the jewellery. The prosecution had therefore failed to prove Karan's guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal, set aside all convictions and sentences, and acquitted Karan of all charges. He was directed to be released immediately, if not required in another case. Karan Kumar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 158/2013, 13/08/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Murder by burning — Child eyewitness, Section 106 of the Evidence Act and appeal against acquittal. Seven-year-old Soumya described her father, Kashiram, pouring kerosene on her mother and setting her on fire. Kerosene detected in the scalp hair and semi-burnt clothing corroborated her account. The Court rejected the objection that her police statement had been recorded six days after the incident. It accepted the explanation concerning treatment, death and funeral rites and found no delay in recording the statement. Her residence with maternal relatives did not, by itself, establish tutoring. The adult relatives' inability to say that they had seen the actual ignition did not displace the child's reliable account. Kashiram's hospital-attendance defence was disbelieved, and his unexplained absence supported the prosecution case. Section 106 was applied to facts within his special knowledge after the prosecution had established the necessary foundation. Soumya's first police statement had not named the three other accused; the later additions and the adult witnesses' limited observations left reasonable doubt about their participation. Kashiram's conviction under Section 302 and the three co-accused persons' acquittals under Sections 302 and 498-A were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeals concerned Archana's death from burns sustained in the home where she lived with her husband, Kashiram, and their daughter, Soumya. Kashiram appealed against his murder conviction and sentence of life imprisonment with a fine of ₹50,000 and one year's imprisonment in default. The State appealed against the acquittal of Kalyansingh, Ballu alias Sobran and Kailash under IPC Sections 302 and 498-A. Kashiram had also been acquitted under Section 498-A. Soumya was seven years old. Maternal relatives and a neighbour gave further evidence. The post-mortem examination disclosed extensive ante-mortem burns, and the scalp hair and semi-burnt clothing tested positive for kerosene. Archana was unable to make a dying declaration.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kalu alias Laxminarayan v. State of M.P., (2019) 10 SCC 211, was applied to the husband's obligation to explain a homicidal death in the matrimonial home when the relevant circumstances were especially within his knowledge. Tulsiram Sahadu Suryawanshi v. State of Maharashtra, (2012) 10 SCC 373, explained how Evidence Act Sections 114 and 106 operated together. An inference could be drawn from proved facts, but Section 106 did not relieve the prosecution of proving guilt beyond reasonable doubt. The principles quoted from Mir Mohammad Omar and Shambhu Nath Mehra concerned exceptional facts especially within the accused's knowledge that would be impossible or disproportionately difficult for the prosecution to establish. Trimukh Maroti Kirkan v. State of Maharashtra, (2006) 10 SCC 681, addressed murder committed in the privacy of a home. After the prosecution led the evidence it could reasonably produce, the inmates had to give a cogent explanation. A false or absent explanation, in the circumstances described in that decision and after proof of co-residence, was a strong incriminating circumstance. State of Jammu and Kashmir v. Vijay Kumar, (2018) 13 SCC 655, illustrated the separate assessment of the husband and other relatives where homicidal death and recent co-residence had been proved. State of Rajasthan v. Kashi Ram, (2006) 12 SCC 254, required the inference under Section 106 to depend on the particular proved facts. The Bench applied these principles to Kashiram's admitted presence in the house, the disbelieved hospital-attendance account, Soumya's testimony and the forensic evidence. The related witnesses' credibility was assessed in relation to each act and accused. The Bench separately examined the evidence against the other accused and the grounds for interfering with their acquittals.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302 and 498-A; Evidence Act Sections 106, 114 and 145; CrPC Sections 161 and 313. Section 106 supplemented the prosecution's established evidentiary foundation. The material omission in Soumya's earlier police statement was put to her under Section 145 in assessing the allegations against the acquitted co-accused.

4. Issues : Did the interval before Soumya's police statement and her residence with maternal relatives make her account of the burning unreliable? What was the effect of the relatives' testimony and Kashiram's claim that he had accompanied Archana to hospital? Was the participation of the three other accused proved, and did the record justify interference with their acquittals in the State's appeal?

5. Ratio / Findings : A witness's relationship to the deceased did not, by itself, make the witness interested or unreliable. The evidence had to be assessed in relation to the act and the accused concerned. The adult relatives admitted that Archana was already burning when they entered the room; their evidence did not establish that they had seen her being ignited. Soumya's evidence could not be rejected merely because she had awakened on hearing the noise. The Court accepted the explanation concerning treatment, death and last rites for the interval before her police statement and rejected the objection of delayed recording. Nor did living with maternal relatives while her father was missing establish tutoring. Her account that Kashiram poured kerosene and set Archana on fire was supported by the FSL findings. The Court rejected the hospital-attendance defence after considering the contemporaneous records, the inquest and the handing over of the body to Archana's father. Against the foundation established by the prosecution, it considered Kashiram's failure to explain the circumstances within his special knowledge under Section 106. The Court also rejected the suicide suggestion in view of the absence of a kerosene container from the scene and Amit's evidence that Kashiram had a container in his hand, inferring that Kashiram had removed it. As to the other three accused, Soumya's first police statement named only Kashiram. She could not explain the later additions when confronted with the omissions under Section 145, and the adult witnesses had not seen the actual ignition. The evidence therefore left reasonable doubt about the others' participation. Their acquittal under Section 498-A was also supported by Soumya's failure to describe dowry harassment or prior cruelty. The trial court's assessment was neither perverse nor contrary to the record. The possibility of another view was insufficient to reverse the acquittals.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed both appeals. It affirmed Kashiram's conviction under Section 302 and sentence of life imprisonment with a fine of ₹50,000 and one year's imprisonment in default. It also affirmed the acquittals of Kalyansingh, Ballu and Kailash under Sections 302 and 498-A. Kashiram's acquittal under Section 498-A, against which the State had not appealed, remained undisturbed. Kashiram was directed to serve his remaining jail sentence. The bail bonds of the acquitted respondents were discharged. A copy of the judgment was to be supplied immediately to Kashiram free of cost, and the trial record was to be returned immediately with a copy of the judgment for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty — Demand for a fixed deposit in the daughter's name, territorial jurisdiction at the place of shelter and quashing of an FIR. The wife alleged that her husband and in-laws abused and beat her, demanded a ₹5 lakh fixed deposit in their daughter's name, and left her at Datia with a condition that she could return only after the demand was met. Harassment to coerce a woman or her relatives to meet an unlawful demand for property or valuable security, or because of failure to meet that demand, falls within Explanation (b) to IPC Section 498-A. The provision is not confined to dowry demands or to demands made at the time of marriage. Under Rupali Devi, the continuing mental effects of cruelty at the place where a wife takes shelter after being driven away may confer territorial jurisdiction, depending on the facts. The unproved attendance sheet relied on for an alibi, the divorce notice and the delay in lodging the complaint did not justify testing the disputed defence or quashing the cognizable FIR. The delay objection was rejected where the FIR was undisputedly within time. The petition was dismissed; the allegations remained matters for investigation and proof.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The wife alleged that, after her marriage at Lucknow, her in-laws taunted and physically ill-treated her over dowry. They later demanded that her parents create a fixed deposit of ₹5 lakh in her daughter's name. According to her, her husband and father-in-law left her at her parental home in Datia in March 2019 and refused to allow her to return unless the deposit was made. She lodged the complaint in June 2020. Her mother-in-law, father-in-law, husband and brother-in-law sought quashing of the Datia FIR under IPC Section 498-A and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. They relied on the father-in-law's attendance sheet, a divorce petition, the delay in reporting and the fact that the earlier alleged acts had taken place at Lucknow. These were the complainant's allegations and the applicants' defence assertions; their truth was not finally determined in the quashing petition.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rajinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2015) 6 SCC 477, considered the meaning of dowry in the context of Section 304-B and held that Appasaheb and Vipin Jaiswal did not state the law correctly. Jatinder Kumar v. State of Haryana (Criminal Appeal 1850/2010, decided 17.12.2019) treated a later demand for money to extend a clinic as a dowry demand. The High Court considered these decisions together with the wider express terms of Explanation (b) to Section 498-A and rejected the argument that the alleged fixed-deposit demand could not amount to cruelty under that provision. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, explained that the continuing mental consequences of cruelty at the place where a wife takes shelter after being driven away may confer territorial jurisdiction, depending on the facts. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, was relied on in rejecting consideration of the disputed alibi. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, established that divorce proceedings alone do not justify quashing criminal allegations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognised an exception permitting consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or a defence document whose authenticity the complainant does not dispute. In the present case, the Court declined to rely on the attendance sheet because it had not been formally proved. The discussion of Section 482 included S. Khushboo, Amit Kapoor, Bhajan Lal as quoted in Ajay Kumar Das, M. Srikanth, M.N. Ojha and CBI v. Arvind Khanna. These authorities required assessment of whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclosed an offence, while preserving intervention where no offence was disclosed or the proceedings amounted to an exceptional abuse of process. They cautioned against deciding disputed facts or the merits of the defence at that stage. Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, required registration of an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence. Applying these principles, the Bench considered whether the FIR could proceed; it did not determine the applicants' guilt.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 498-A and its Explanation, particularly clause (b); Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act and the definition of dowry discussed in the cited decisions; CrPC Sections 179 and 482. Section 304-B arose in the Supreme Court's discussion of dowry; the present FIR concerned matrimonial cruelty and the Dowry Prohibition Act, rather than a charge of dowry death.

4. Issues : Could the alleged demand, made after marriage, for a fixed deposit in the child's name prima facie amount to cruelty? Did Datia have territorial jurisdiction despite the alleged acts of abuse at Lucknow? Did the attendance sheet, divorce notice or delay in reporting justify quashing the FIR at the investigation stage?

5. Ratio / Findings : Explanation (b) to Section 498-A covers harassment intended to coerce a woman or her relatives to meet an unlawful demand for property or valuable security, as well as harassment because of failure to meet that demand. It is not confined to dowry demands or to demands made at the time of marriage. The alleged deposit demand, accompanied by coercion, could therefore disclose cruelty under that provision. The allegation that the wife had been left at Datia and prevented from returning until the demand was met, together with the continuing mental effects of that conduct there, supported investigation at Datia under Rupali Devi. The attendance sheet had not been formally proved, and the disputed alibi could not be tested at this stage. The Court considered that the complainant had waited in the hope of preserving her marriage; the delay and the lodging of the complaint after receipt of the divorce notice did not, by themselves, establish mala fides. The FIR was undisputedly within time and could not be quashed merely because it had not been lodged immediately. As the allegations disclosed cognizable offences, the Court declined to quash the FIR.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition under Section 482. It declined to quash the FIR under IPC Section 498-A and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act.

Kasturi Devi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 26941/2020, 29/09/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Prevention of Corruption Act Section 17A — Prior approval and investigation of airstrip dues. On a reference arising from a Division Bench's difference of opinion, the Judge declined to quash the Lokayukta FIR against a former Ujjain Collector concerning the State's Datana Air Strip agreement. Section 17A applies where the alleged offence is relatable to an official recommendation or decision. On the facts, the alleged silence and failure to recover maintenance and night-parking charges did not involve such a protected decision. Independently, the preliminary enquiry had begun in 2015, before Section 17A was inserted in 2018, and its continuation was not barred by that provision. The contractual remedy, disputed payments and material filed in the subsequent returns did not displace the prima facie allegations of cognizable offences. Mens rea and the defence of due care remained matters for investigation or trial. The Judge agreed with Sanjay Yadav, J., that the petition should be dismissed, directed expeditious investigation, preferably within nine months from the order, and limited the factual observations to the question whether the FIR disclosed a cognizable offence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Under an agreement made in 2006 and extended to ten years, the State permitted Yash Air, later renamed Centaur Aviation Academy, to use Datana Air Strip. The agreement imposed obligations to pay licence fees and night-parking charges and to maintain the airstrip. The agreement and the Government's sanction order assigned the Collector oversight of specified conditions. Kavindra Kiyawat was Ujjain Collector from August 2014 to August 2016. Complaints made in 2015 led to a Lokayukta preliminary enquiry, followed by a November 2019 FIR against sixteen persons under Section 7 of the Prevention of Corruption Act and IPC Section 120-B. The prosecution alleged that State expenditure of about ₹292.39 lakh on maintenance had not been recovered and that night-parking charges remained unpaid. The petitioner disputed his role, the relevant timing, his knowledge and intent. He relied on deposits and the availability of civil recovery. The Division Bench differed on whether the allegations against him disclosed an offence, while agreeing on the FIR's maintainability under Section 17A. The third Judge considered that statutory question again because respondent No. 3 renewed it, and also addressed whether the allegations disclosed an offence. For that limited assessment, the Judge examined the Collector's obligations under the Government order and agreement.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nathi Devi v. Radha Devi Gupta, (2005) 2 SCC 271, was cited for giving unambiguous statutory words their ordinary meaning when construing 'recommendation' and 'decision' in Section 17A. The Delhi High Court's decision in Manoj Prasad v. CBI (11.01.2019) was cited on Section 17A. The Telangana High Court's decision in Katti Nagaseshanna v. State of Andhra Pradesh (16.11.2018) was quoted on the prospective operation of the amended prosecution-sanction requirement under Section 19. The Judge then separately held that Section 17A did not benefit the petitioner because the preliminary enquiry had begun in 2015 and remained pending when that provision came into force. Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, and State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, cautioned against prematurely stopping investigation of a cognizable FIR. The wider discussion included State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, XYZ v. State of Gujarat, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Bhajan Lal, Amit Kapoor, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy, M. Srikanth, M.N. Ojha and CBI v. Arvind Khanna. These authorities addressed the exceptional grounds for quashing and the limits on deciding disputed facts at that stage. Debendra Nath Padhi and Prashant Bharti/Rajiv Thapar were considered in distinguishing the ordinary rule against considering defence evidence from the stringent exception for exculpatory material of sterling and impeccable quality. Under the quoted test, the material must be sound, reasonable and indubitable; it must rule out the factual assertions against the accused; it must remain unrefuted or be incapable of justifiable refutation; and continuing the trial must amount to an abuse of process and fail to serve the ends of justice. All those requirements must be satisfied. State of Maharashtra v. Vikram Anantrai Doshi, (2014) 15 SCC 29, CBI v. Jagjit Singh, State of T.N. v. R. Vasanthi Stanley and CBI v. Maninder Singh were quoted on the public consequences of financial wrongdoing and why subsequent payment does not necessarily justify quashing. Vijayander Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 3 SCC 389, and V. Ravi Kumar v. State, (2019) 14 SCC 568, addressed the overlap between civil and criminal liability: a contractual claim does not itself exclude a cognizable offence, while a mere breach of contract does not automatically amount to cheating. Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, concerned registration of information disclosing a cognizable offence. The preliminary enquiry did not prevent investigation of relevant allegations omitted from it. The petitioner's reliance on Bhajan Lal was assessed against the prima facie record. Vinod Raghuvanshi v. Ajay Arora, (2013) 10 SCC 581, was also quoted for permitting investigation where the allegations had substance.

3. Statutes considered : Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, Sections 7 and 17A. Section 17A concerns prior approval for enquiry or investigation and is distinct from sanction for prosecution. IPC Sections 120-B and 52, the latter defining good faith by reference to due care and attention; Constitution Articles 226/227; and CrPC Sections 190, 193, 319 and 482 were discussed in relation to the scope of investigation, implication of additional persons and quashing.

4. Issues : Was prior approval under Section 17A required for an enquiry begun before the amendment, or for an alleged omission involving no official recommendation or decision? Did the Collector's contractual oversight duties and the unpaid State dues disclose a cognizable offence at the FIR stage? Did the payments, his omission from the original complaints, the possible responsibility of other officers or the availability of civil recovery justify quashing? What was the scope of the third Judge's decision and of the observations on facts?

5. Ratio / Findings : Section 17A requires the alleged offence to be relatable to an official recommendation or decision. The petitioner himself claimed that he had no knowledge of the agreement and had taken no decision. On that record, remaining silent and failing to pursue the dues did not amount to a protected official decision. Independently, the preliminary enquiry had begun in 2015, before Section 17A came into force, and the later provision did not bar its continuation. The agreement was made on behalf of the State and assigned a defined role to the Collector. Although the petitioner disputed liability for earlier fees and work completed before his tenure, the agreement continued during his tenure, maintenance expenditure remained unrecovered and night-parking charges were admittedly unpaid. Those circumstances warranted further investigation. Subsequent adjustment of some amounts, the civil recovery remedy and the omission of his name or particular allegations from the original complaints did not conclusively exclude an offence. The preliminary enquiry report did not finally determine the matter. The Court left it to the Lokayukta or D.G.P. (Lokayukta) to examine whether the enquiry officer's omission of the night-parking issue from that report was intentional or bona fide. The petitioner's claimed lack of knowledge and absence of intent remained matters for trial, and the Court held that he would have to establish that he had acted with due care and attention. The factual observations were expressly confined to prima facie sufficiency and did not determine guilt. The third Judge agreed with Sanjay Yadav, J., and differed from B.K. Shrivastava, J., on whether the FIR should be quashed.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the petition under Article 226 to quash FIR 0282/2019. It directed that the investigation be completed as early as possible, preferably within nine months from the date of the order, and not be kept pending without reason. The factual observations were limited to whether a cognizable offence was disclosed; they did not finally determine culpability or the precise amount recoverable.

Kavindra Kiyawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 27734/2019, 21/09/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Double murder and attempted murder — Injured and related witnesses, medical evidence, common object and defective charges. Following an irrigation dispute, an armed group killed Pahalwan and Darshan and assaulted Ajab; shots fired at Bhanupratap missed. Ajab's injuries, the prompt FIR and the eyewitness accounts supported the finding of a coordinated assault in furtherance of a common object under Section 149. An injured witness's account deserved due weight but remained open to rejection for strong reasons, including major contradictions or discrepancies. Relationship alone did not disqualify a witness. On the facts, the estimated firing distance, blackening and rigor mortis did not displace the credible eyewitness evidence. Section 307 required the requisite intention or knowledge and an act towards commission of the offence; an injury was not essential. The failure to specify separate counts for each victim in the charges had caused no demonstrated failure of justice under Section 464 CrPC. Ramhet's appeal had abated on his death. The surviving appellants' convictions and sentences for murder, attempted murder and rioting were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : At about 10:15 a.m. on 16 October 2006, an irrigation dispute led an armed group to the field where Pahalwan, Darshan, Ajab and Bhanupratap were present. Pahalwan and Darshan were shot dead. Ajab sustained five incised wounds and swelling, while Bhanupratap reported that shots had been aimed at him but he had escaped injury. He lodged the FIR about half an hour after the occurrence. Kedar, Ramhet, Bharat, Devaram and Rampreet were convicted under Section 302/149 for the murders of Pahalwan and Darshan, Section 307/149 for the attempts to kill Ajab and Bhanupratap, and Section 148 for rioting. The sentences were life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, under Section 302/149; five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, under Section 307/149; and one year's rigorous imprisonment under Section 148. All sentences were to run concurrently. Surajbhan, who had absconded during the trial and was later arrested and tried separately, had his appeal heard with these appeals but reserved for a separate judgment; Dilip remained shown as absconding. Ramhet died while the appeal was pending, and his appeal abated. The surviving appellants challenged the reliability of the eyewitnesses, the medical and ballistic evidence, the timing of the occurrence, the common object and the form of the charges.

2. Precedents — Considered : Baleshwar Mahto v. State of Bihar, (2017) 3 SCC 152, quoting Abdul Sayeed, explained the special evidentiary weight of a witness injured in the occurrence. That account was not immune from scrutiny: strong grounds, including major contradictions and discrepancies, could justify its rejection. Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, and Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, distinguished mere relationship from an interest in securing a false conviction. Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, and the discussion of FIR detail in V.K. Mishra and Kamal Kant Dubey distinguished minor variations from contradictions affecting the core of the case. Jagdish Narain v. State of U.P., (1996) 8 SCC 199, distinguished an investigating officer's own observations at the scene from information supplied by a witness. Dayal Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 8 SCC 263, explained the assessment of medical opinion together with eyewitness evidence. Manjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2019) 9 SCC 529, explained that a common object could be inferred from conduct and surrounding circumstances without prior concert. Liability under Section 149 extended to an offence committed in prosecution of that common object or one the members knew was likely to be committed in its prosecution. The quoted principles also warned against treating a passive onlooker who did not share the common object as a member of the unlawful assembly. Vinubhai Ranchhodbhai Patel v. Rajivbhai Dudabhai Patel, (2018) 7 SCC 743, treated the absence of stick injuries as relevant but not conclusive. Krishnan v. State and State of U.P. v. Harban Sahai supported reliance on a prompt FIR when assessing the suggestion of fabrication. State of M.P. v. Harjeet Singh, (2019) 20 SCC 524, and the Section 307 decisions quoted in it distinguished intention and an overt act from the result, without requiring a fatal injury or any injury at all. Guiram Mondal v. State of W.B., (2013) 15 SCC 284, explained that an inquest concerned the apparent cause of death and was not required to identify the assailants. State of W.B. v. Laisal Haque, (1989) 3 SCC 166, quoting Willie (William) Slaney, required an actual failure of justice before a charge defect could invalidate the conviction. State of U.P. v. Naresh, Rizan and Brahm Swaroop were also quoted on injured or related witnesses and minor discrepancies. Charan Singh supported the assessment of the time of death, and Bhagwan Jagannath Markad addressed common-object liability. State of M.P. v. Kanha and State of M.P. v.

Saleem were separately quoted on Section 307. K.T. Mydeen was cited as the basis for deciding the separately tried Surajbhan's appeal by a separate judgment. The appellant relied on the Madhya Pradesh High Court's decision in Krishna Sewak in disputing the ballistic terminology.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 141, 148, 149, 302, 307 and 319, the latter defining hurt; CrPC Sections 218, 219, 220, 374 and 464. For Section 307, the act and the requisite intention or knowledge had to be distinguished from the result. Section 149 required qualifying membership of the unlawful assembly and an offence committed in prosecution of its common object or one the members knew was likely to be committed in prosecution of that object.

4. Issues : Did the injured and related eyewitnesses reliably establish each appellant's role? Did the estimated firing distance, blackening, rigor mortis or absence of further lathi injuries disclose a material contradiction? Did the armed group share a common object? Could the shots that missed Bhanupratap and the simple injuries sustained by Ajab constitute offences under Section 307? Had the use of a single charge covering several victims prejudiced the defence?

5. Ratio / Findings : Ajab's injuries sustained in the occurrence, the prompt FIR and Brijendra's corroborating account supported the central prosecution case despite Bhanupratap's observation from a distance and the minor variations in sequence. Blackening recorded in the post-mortem findings did not, by itself, justify rejecting the eyewitness accounts. The development of rigor mortis depended on conditions about which the doctor had not been adequately questioned; the medical estimate and the stomach contents were consistent with the morning attack. Bharat's blows with a sharp weapon, the firearms and lathis carried by the group, and the injury and scene evidence showed coordinated participation rather than casual presence. The fact that Ajab had only one injury attributable to a blunt object did not disprove the participation of both lathi-bearing appellants, Devaram and Rampreet. The Court construed the FSL report's firing-pin description, 'ek saman', as meaning 'identical' and held that the report supported the prosecution. The multiple discharged cartridges were consistent with shots having been aimed at Bhanupratap. The first limb of Section 307 did not require a wound, and the simple nature of Ajab's wounds did not exclude an intended lethal attack. The omission of the assailants' names from the inquest reports was immaterial to the limited purpose of an inquest. The accused knew the victims and the acts alleged against them, faced the relevant evidence and showed no actual prejudice from the single Section 302/149 and Section 307/149 charge descriptions. Separate counts for each victim should have been specified, but the absence of demonstrated prejudice did not warrant setting aside the convictions.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeals of the surviving appellants and affirmed the convictions and sentences for the two murders, the attempted murders and rioting. The concurrent sentences included life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, under Section 302/149; five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, under Section 307/149; and one year's rigorous imprisonment under Section 148. Kedar, who was in custody, was directed to serve his remaining sentence. The bail bonds of Bharat, Devaram and Rampreet were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve their remaining sentences. Copies of the judgment were to be supplied to the appellants immediately, free of cost, and the trial record was to be returned immediately for information and compliance. Ramhet's appeal had already abated on his death.

Kedar Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 687/2010 & 691/2010, 20/01/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 125 CrPC — Interim maintenance for wife and children; age objection and ex parte restitution decree. The father, who did not dispute paternity, sought production of the three children's birth certificates under Section 91. His application alleged that all three were adults but stated no date of birth; at the hearing, counsel asserted that only respondent No. 2 was an adult. The Court held that the pending request did not require interim maintenance to be withheld: if any child were later found to have been an adult on the date of the maintenance application, the amount paid to that child could be recovered or adjusted. Nor did an unproduced ex parte decree for restitution of conjugal rights establish that the wife was living separately without sufficient cause. The husband had neither sought enforcement nor proved genuine efforts to resume cohabitation. Interim maintenance of ₹2,000 per month for the wife and ₹1,500 per month for each child was affirmed; the revision was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In proceedings under Section 125 CrPC, Seema alleged that Kedar had harassed her for dowry, driven her and their three children from the matrimonial home, and neglected to maintain them. The Family Court awarded interim maintenance of ₹2,000 per month to Seema and ₹1,500 per month to each child. Kedar challenged the order under Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act read with Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. His pending Section 91 application sought the children's birth certificates. Although that application alleged that all three children were adults, his counsel argued that only respondent No. 2 was an adult. Kedar also relied on an unproduced ex parte decree for restitution of conjugal rights. The revision concerned only interim maintenance, not a final determination of the harassment allegation, the children's ages or ultimate entitlement under Section 125.

2. Statutes considered : Sections 91, 125, 397 and 401 CrPC; Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act; Order XXI Rule 32 CPC, mentioned because Kedar had never used that procedure to enforce the restitution decree. The Court did not finally determine any child's age or ultimate entitlement under Section 125.

3. Issues : Whether the Family Court could award interim maintenance without first deciding the pending Section 91 request for birth certificates, when the children's majority was alleged without any birth date; whether an unproduced and unenforced ex parte restitution decree established that Seema was living separately without sufficient cause; and whether the interim amounts should be affirmed.

4. Ratio / Findings : Kedar was the children's father and was expected to know their birth dates, yet his Section 91 application stated none. It alleged that all three children were adults, while counsel later submitted that only respondent No. 2 was an adult. Paternity was undisputed. The Court therefore treated the application as a delaying measure and held that technical objections could not leave the wife and children destitute. No irreparable loss would result from deciding interim maintenance first, because any amount paid to a child later found to have been an adult on the application date could be recovered or adjusted. The restitution decree was not produced, had been passed ex parte, and had never been pursued for enforcement under Order XXI Rule 32 CPC. Unless Kedar proved genuine efforts to resume cohabitation and Seema's refusal without sufficient cause, he could not use that decree to avoid interim liability. The ruling was confined to the interim order and the record then before the Court.

5. Relief : The High Court affirmed the Family Court's award of interim maintenance of ₹2,000 per month to Seema and ₹1,500 per month to each of the three children and dismissed the revision.

Headnote :- CrPC Sections 309 and 482 — Closure of cross-examination after repeated adjournments. Yashoda Singh's and Suryapal Singh's examinations-in-chief had been recorded in 2017 and 2018, but their cross-examination remained incomplete more than six and five years later. After earlier excuses concerning counsel's health and absence, the trial court expressly directed the accused to arrange alternative representation for the next hearing. On 27 May 2023, they again sought time to engage counsel and produced no order sheets to challenge the recorded history of delay. The High Court held that the rights to counsel of choice and cross-examination did not confer an absolute licence to postpone the trial indefinitely. Section 309 requires day-to-day examination and recorded reasons for an adjournment, with special written reasons when witnesses are present. One witness was elderly and Yashoda was in poor health. A late offer to pay ₹5,000 in costs was treated as another attempt to delay the trial. The closure order was affirmed and the Section 482 application was dismissed. The ruling was a fact-specific finding that the accused had given up the right to cross-examine through their delaying conduct after an express warning.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Sessions Trial No. 86/2017, Yashoda Singh and Suryapal Singh gave their examinations-in-chief in 2017 and 2018 respectively, but the defence did not complete cross-examination. On an earlier date, the defence sought an adjournment because one lawyer had low blood pressure and another was out of station. The trial court directed the accused to arrange alternative representation if their chosen lawyers could not attend the next hearing. On 27 May 2023, they again sought time to engage counsel, and the court closed their right to cross-examine the two witnesses. The accused challenged that order under Section 482 CrPC, asserting a statutory right to cross-examination and later offering ₹5,000 in costs for another opportunity. They did not produce the trial court's order sheets to contradict its account of repeated adjournments.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court's decision in Akash Batham v. Santoshi, affirmed in SLP (Cri.) No. 4464/2017, and Kuldeep Singh Tomar v. State of M.P. addressed adjournments when witnesses are present. Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2015) 3 SCC 220, applied Section 309 CrPC and the requirement of fairness to both sides, warning that long separation of examination-in-chief and cross-examination exposes witnesses to pressure and requires special recorded reasons. Its reproduced discussion referred to Gurnaib Singh v. State of Punjab, Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh and Talab Haji Hussain v. Madhukar Purshottam Mondkar. Akil v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 7 SCC 125, reproduced the statutory day-to-day and written-reason safeguards through a Delhi High Court circular. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241, associated prompt trial with accurate witness memory and protection from inducement or intimidation. Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668, and Gurnaib Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 7 SCC 108, criticised repetitive adjournments and placed active trial-control responsibility on the Bench and Bar. State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh, (2001) 4 SCC 667, explained Section 309's day-to-day command, special-reasons exception and possible responses to non-cooperation; its reproduced discussion also referred to Raj Deo Sharma v. State of Bihar and Raj Deo Sharma (II) v. State of Bihar. Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334, required compelling reasons to defer a present witness and reproduced N.G. Dastane v. Shrikant S. Shivde on counsel's duty to arrange coverage if genuinely unavailable. The Court applied these principles to the express warning and years of delay in the present case.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 309(1) and 309(2) CrPC require expeditious, day-to-day examination once witnesses' evidence begins, recorded reasons for departing from that course, and special written reasons for adjourning when witnesses are present. Section 482 concerned the requested inherent supervisory relief. The accused's fair opportunity to test the evidence had to be balanced against a fair and prompt trial for the prosecution, victim and witnesses.

4. Issues : Whether the rights to counsel of choice and cross-examination made the closure order a jurisdictional error despite repeated defence-caused delay, an express warning and failure to arrange substitute counsel; and whether an offer of costs justified reopening cross-examination after years of postponement.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that the applicants' delaying conduct amounted to giving up their valuable statutory right to cross-examine. They had knowingly allowed more than six and five years to pass after the two witnesses' examinations-in-chief, had been expressly directed to arrange alternative counsel, and still sought another adjournment when the case was called. They produced no trial order sheets to substantiate a different history. One witness was elderly and Yashoda was in poor health; repeatedly summoning them imposed an independent cost on the fairness of the trial. The right to counsel of choice did not permit indefinite adjournments. The late offer of ₹5,000 in costs was treated as another attempt to postpone cross-examination and did not cure the conduct or prejudice to the witnesses. On those facts, the trial court had committed no error, much less a jurisdictional error, by closing the right to cross-examine.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the Section 482 application and left undisturbed the trial court's order dated 27 May 2023 closing the applicants' right to cross-examine Yashoda Singh and Suryapal Singh.

Headnote :- Evidence Act, 1872, Sections 25 and 27; CrPC Sections 162, 313 and 374; IPC Section 302 — murder proved by circumstantial evidence. The accused husband's police FIR, which described repeated pickaxe blows to his wife, was self-inculpatory and excluded as a confession except to the extent that information leading to discovery was admissible under Section 27. A child witness's partly adverse account and the neighbour's evidence established that the couple had quarrelled and were together on the roof. The neighbour's omitted assertion that the husband took his wife downstairs was disregarded, and he had not seen a pickaxe assault. The multiple penetrating wounds and medical evidence excluded an accidental fall onto the bricks in the adjoining plot. Human blood on the recovered pickaxe and the husband's shirt, although its group could not be determined, corroborated the other proved circumstances. His market alibi in the Section 313 examination conflicted with the presence evidence. Applying the requirement of a complete chain consistent only with guilt, the Division Bench affirmed the Section 302 conviction and life sentence. Neither the inadmissible FIR confession nor a false defence was used as a substitute for independent prosecution proof.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Khemchand Kushwah appealed his conviction by the Sessions Judge, Guna, in Sessions Trial No. 76/2011 for murdering his wife, Goda Bai, under Section 302 IPC. He had been sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹500, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. On 25 February 2011, the couple and two young granddaughters were at home. Khemchand gave the police an FIR describing a quarrel on the roof over his allegation of infidelity, repeated pickaxe blows and disposal of the body into the adjoining plot. Because the report was his own self-inculpatory statement to the police, that narration could not itself prove the killing. The post-mortem disclosed extensive ante-mortem lacerated and penetrating wounds, including injuries to the neck, liver and kidney. Dr D.S. Rana excluded a fall onto building materials or iron rods as their cause; the adjoining plot contained stacked bricks, not iron rods or stones. Puja (PW1), a hostile child witness, nevertheless placed both grandparents quarrelling on the roof and also said that the deceased had jumped. Bhavana (PW6) gave an accidental-fall account and turned hostile, as did the accused's son, Jagdish (PW7). Neighbour Vishal Singh (PW2) described the roof quarrel and fist blows but admitted that he had not seen a pickaxe assault. The source records blood on the roof and wooden frame, while the FSL report records blood on the earth seized from the roof. Under memorandum Ex. P10 and seizure Ex. P11, the police recovered a pickaxe and the accused's shirt and trousers. FSL report Ex. P13 found human blood on the pickaxe and shirt, but the blood group could not be determined. In his Section 313 answers, Khemchand claimed that he had gone to the market and also rejected Puja's jumping account.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aghnoo Nagesia v. State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 134, held that a confessional FIR made by an accused to the police, including incriminating admissions integral to the confession, is barred by Section 25 of the Evidence Act except to the extent saved by Section 27. The Bench accordingly excluded Khemchand's self-incriminating FIR while treating information concerning the pickaxe as admissible; it also held that the signed FIR could not be used against him under Section 162 CrPC. Khujji v. State of M.P., (1991) 3 SCC 627, held that unexplained human blood on a weapon or an accused's clothing, even without a determined group, may be a link corroborating other evidence. Khujji distinguished Kansa Behera v. State of Orissa and Surinder Singh v. State of Punjab, whose particular evidentiary settings did not justify conviction on ungrouped blood. Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 11 SCC 111, referring to State of Rajasthan v. Teja Ram and Molai v. State of M.P., treated human-origin blood on a weapon as an incriminating circumstance. Munna Kumar Upadhyay v. State of A.P., (2012) 6 SCC 174, with its discussion of Asraf Ali v. State of Assam and Manu Sao v. State of Bihar, explained that Section 313 gives an accused a fair opportunity to answer each material circumstance and that a false answer may support an adverse inference only in conjunction with prosecution evidence and subject to prejudice. Rohtash Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2013) 14 SCC 434, discussing Musheer Khan v. State of M.P., Sunil Clifford Daniel v. State of Punjab and State of Maharashtra v. Suresh, held that a false explanation may supply a missing link in an otherwise proved circumstantial chain, but the prosecution must first prove its case beyond reasonable doubt. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, stated the five requirements for a firmly established, conclusive and exclusively incriminating chain. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, held that grave suspicion cannot replace reliable, clinching proof. Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, stated that gaps or conjecture cannot sustain conviction and that a reasonable innocent hypothesis must be excluded. John David reproduced discussion of State of U.P. v. Ram Balak, Hukam Singh v. State of Rajasthan, Eradu v. State of Hyderabad, Earabhadrappa v. State of Karnataka, State of U.P. v. Sukhbasi, Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, Ashok Kumar Chatterjee v. State of M.P., Bhagat Ram v. State of Punjab, C. Chenga Reddy v. State of A.P., Padala Veera Reddy v. State of A.P., State of Rajasthan v. Raja Ram and State of Haryana v. Jagbir Singh. The appellant relied on Satye Singh v. State of Uttarakhand, Cr.A. No. 2374/2014, decided 15 February 2022, for the rule that suspicion cannot substitute for proof.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC governed the murder conviction and minimum sentence of life imprisonment. Sections 25 and 27 of the Evidence Act governed the police-confession bar and discovery exception. Sections 162, 313 and 374 CrPC concerned the Court's treatment of the signed police FIR, the accused's opportunity to explain incriminating circumstances and the conviction appeal. The Court assessed FSL report Ex. P13, post-mortem report Ex. P17, the scene and seizure material, and prior police statement Ex. D1 only for the evidentiary questions for which each was relevant.

4. Issues : Whether Goda Bai's death was homicidal rather than the result of a fall; what part, if any, of Khemchand's self-incriminating police report was admissible; which portions of the neighbour's and hostile children's evidence remained reliable; what weight could be assigned to the pickaxe and shirt bearing ungrouped human blood, the roof evidence and the market alibi raised under Section 313; and whether the admissible circumstances proved Khemchand's authorship beyond reasonable doubt and justified maintaining the life sentence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The penetrating wounds caused by a hard, blunt but pointed object, the pathologist's express rejection of the suggested fall, and the actual contents of the adjoining plot established homicidal death and displaced the children's jump or accidental-fall accounts. The FIR confession was excluded under Section 25. The Court used only the discovery information concerning the pickaxe under Section 27 and separately relied on the memorandum, seizure, scene and FSL evidence. Vishal's earlier complaint against Khemchand was considered, but his core account of the couple's roof quarrel was supported by Puja and by Khemchand's own answers admitting the neighbour and earlier quarrels. Vishal's assertion that he saw Khemchand take Goda Bai downstairs was omitted from his police statement and was expressly disregarded; he did not claim to have seen the pickaxe assault. Blood on the roof and wooden frame answered the proposed absence of a blood trail. The seized pickaxe and shirt bore human blood that Khemchand did not explain. Because the blood group was unknown, this result corroborated the other links but did not itself identify Goda Bai as the blood source. The market alibi was unsupported by suggestions to witnesses and contradicted by Puja's presence evidence. Khemchand's rejection of Puja's jumping account also undermined the fall theory. Applying Sharad Birdhichand Sarda and the other circumstantial-evidence authorities, the Bench found a complete chain consisting of the proved roof confrontation, medically established homicide, scene and recovery evidence and false explanation, with no reasonable innocent hypothesis.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the conviction under Section 302 IPC and the sentence of life imprisonment, a ₹500 fine and one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. Khemchand, who was already in jail, was directed to serve the remaining sentence. The Court also directed that he receive an immediate free copy of the judgment and that the trial record be returned for information and compliance.

Headnote :- Evidence — deceased's police report and rejected oral dying declaration. The trial court disbelieved Samrath Singh's account of what the deceased had allegedly told him and Laxman's claimed eyewitness account. The High Court also rejected the widow's claimed oral dying declaration because of her conduct and inconsistent account. The injured man's contemporaneous police report therefore remained the principal account of the assault. Neither its contents nor the maker's mental condition was challenged in the recording officer's cross-examination. Read with the medical evidence, the report proved that Khoob Singh's fist assault during the quarrel caused the fatal liver injury.

Medical evidence — internal injury without an external mark — The lacerated cirrhotic liver and internal haemorrhage established the cause of death. The medical witnesses nevertheless accepted that a fall could have caused the injury and doubted that the seized heavy hammer had been used because there was no external or rib injury. The Court assessed those alternatives with the deceased's police report and distinguished an assault with fists, which could leave no external mark. Whether Devendra had used a different hammer did not require decision after his appeal abated.

Homicide — intention inferred from the circumstances — Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, requires careful consideration of the circumstances when distinguishing an offence under Section 302 from one under Section 304 IPC. Relevant factors include the weapon, the part of the body targeted, the force used, a sudden quarrel, prior enmity and premeditation; the list is not exhaustive. Here, the spontaneous dispute over a drinking tumbler, the surviving appellant's fist blows and the absence of deliberate blows to the abdomen did not establish the mental element required for murder merely because the assault caused death.

Homicide — assailant's lack of knowledge of the victim's disease — under Section 300 secondly and illustration (b), an assailant's knowledge of the particular victim's disease is material where that condition makes the intended injury likely to cause death. Shankar Narayan Bhadolkar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 9 SCC 71, distinguished that knowledge from an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and from the lower probability of death required by Section 299. Thangaiya v. State of T.N., (2005) 9 SCC 650, explained the three degrees of culpable homicide and the same requirement of knowledge of the victim's condition. The prosecution did not prove that the appellant knew of the enlarged cirrhotic liver, intended to kill or intended an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. His conviction under Section 302/34 was therefore replaced by one under Section 304 Part II IPC.

SC/ST Act — Section 3(2)(v) as applicable before the amendment — Dinesh v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 3 SCC 771, required proof under the former provision that the offence was committed on the ground of the victim's protected caste status. Patan Jaman Vali v. State of A.P., Cr. A. 452/2021 (27.04.2021), distinguished that requirement from the knowledge requirement and the presumption under Section 8(c) introduced with effect from 26 January 2016. The amended provisions did not apply to the 2002 incident. As neither a caste certificate nor evidence of a caste-based motive was proved, the conviction under Section 3(2)(v) was set aside.

Sentence — imprisonment already undergone after substitution of conviction — Kuldeep Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1996 SC 2988, and Raj Singh v. State of Haryana, (2000) 10 SCC 151, were considered as instances in which a sentence under Section 304 Part II was limited to the period already served. Having considered the sudden occurrence, the appellant's young age in 2002, his lack of knowledge of the victim's condition, the long lapse of time and the imprisonment already served, the Court imposed that period as the sentence and directed release unless he was required in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Khoob Singh and Devendra were convicted by the Special Judge, Vidisha, on 18 December 2002 in Sessions Trial No. 122/2002. For the offence under Section 302/34 IPC, Khoob Singh was sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹5,000, with four months' imprisonment in default. For the offence under Section 3(2)(v) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, he was sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹15,000, with six months' imprisonment in default. Devendra died while the appeal was pending, and his appeal was dismissed as abated on 6 December 2019. The Court therefore examined Khoob Singh's responsibility without deciding Devendra's remaining merits.

The prosecution case arose from a quarrel in a liquor shop over a drinking glass. In his police report, Ex. P-16, Ramcharan stated that Devendra struck his abdomen with a hammer and that Khoob Singh threw him down and beat him with fists and blows. The police initially treated the report as disclosing a non-cognizable offence under Section 155 CrPC and sent him for medical examination. He was intoxicated and had a tense, painful abdomen. He declined referral to Hamidia Hospital, Bhopal, and died in Sironj Hospital on 6 April 2002. An FIR, investigation, post-mortem examination and charge sheet followed. The medical evidence disclosed a ruptured, cirrhotic liver and internal haemorrhage without an external injury. The appellant argued that the eyewitness accounts had been disbelieved, that he had only used his fists during a sudden quarrel, that the account of an assault with the heavy hammer was doubtful and that he did not know of the deceased's liver disease.

The prosecution examined twelve witnesses and the defence examined none. The trial court disbelieved Samrath Singh's account of what the deceased had told him and Laxman's claimed eyewitness account. The High Court rejected the widow Nanni Bai's claimed oral dying declaration because of her conduct and inconsistencies with the surrounding accounts. The recording officer's evidence concerning Ex. P-16 and the injured man's mental condition was not materially challenged. The High Court considered the competing medical explanations, the ingredients of murder and of the SC/ST offence as it stood before the amendment, and the sentence to be imposed if the homicide conviction was reduced.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, sets out a non-exhaustive list of circumstances from which an intention to cause death may be inferred. They include the weapon used; whether it was carried or picked up at the spot; whether a vital part was targeted; the force used; a sudden quarrel; premeditation; enmity; provocation; undue advantage; and the number of blows. The High Court applied that approach to the fist assault and the spontaneous dispute.

Shankar Narayan Bhadolkar v. State of Maharashtra, (2005) 9 SCC 71, explains Section 300 secondly: an intended injury to a victim with a particular disease may amount to murder if the assailant knows that the disease makes the injury likely to cause that victim's death. If the assailant has no knowledge of the victim's special condition, no intention to kill and no intention to cause an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, the offence is not murder merely because the fatal injury was intentionally inflicted. The passage also distinguishes the probability of death required by Section 299(b) from that required by Section 300 thirdly. The High Court applied these distinctions to the deceased's cirrhotic liver and the absence of proof that the appellant knew of it.

Thangaiya v. State of T.N., (2005) 9 SCC 650, explains that culpable homicide is the genus and murder its gravest degree. The intermediate degree is punishable under Section 304 Part I and the lowest degree under Part II. For Section 300 secondly, an intention to cause bodily injury must be accompanied by knowledge that the particular victim's condition makes the injury likely to cause death; an intention to cause death itself is unnecessary. The High Court applied that explanation, the statutory illustration and the evidence in holding that the appellant's offence fell under Section 304 Part II.

Dinesh v. State of Rajasthan, (2006) 3 SCC 771, states that the former Section 3(2)(v) required proof that the underlying offence was committed against the victim on the ground of membership of a Scheduled Caste or Scheduled Tribe. Without that proof, the enhanced offence was not made out. Patan Jaman Vali v. State of A.P., Cr. A. No. 452 of 2021, judgment dated 27 April 2021, distinguished that requirement from the knowledge requirement introduced in 2016 and the presumption of knowledge under Section 8(c) where the accused was acquainted with the victim or the victim's family. It also acknowledged the difficulty of proving the basis of violence where caste, gender and disability intersect. Applying the earlier law to the 2002 offence, the High Court found that caste status had not been proved by a certificate and that a caste-based motive had not been established. It explained the later standard without applying it retrospectively.

Kuldeep Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 1996 SC 2988, and Raj Singh v. State of Haryana, (2000) 10 SCC 151, provided sentencing comparisons for limiting imprisonment under Section 304 Part II to the period already served. The High Court considered the appellant's actual imprisonment and the long lapse of time before imposing that sentence in this case.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 299, 300 (particularly secondly, thirdly and illustration (b)) and 304 Part II IPC govern the distinction between culpable homicide and murder and the degree of culpable homicide established on the evidence. Here, the offence under Part II rested on knowledge rather than a proved intention sufficient for murder. Section 302/34 IPC was the provision under which the appellant had originally been convicted; the Court did not decide the deceased co-accused's individual culpability after his appeal abated. Section 3(2)(v) of the SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989, as applicable to the 2002 incident, required proof that the offence was committed on the ground of the victim's caste or tribal membership. The 2015 amendment, effective from 26 January 2016, replaced that causal requirement with knowledge of membership and introduced the rebuttable presumption under Section 8(c) concerning acquaintance with the victim or the victim's family. The Court explained the later provisions but did not apply them to this incident. Section 374 CrPC governed the appeal, while Section 155 CrPC concerned the initial police classification of the report.

4. Issues : (i) After Samrath Singh's account of what the deceased had told him, Laxman's claimed eyewitness account and the widow's claimed oral dying declaration were rejected, did the remaining evidence establish a fatal assault by Khoob Singh, or did the absence of an external injury and the possibility of a fall leave an accidental death in question? (ii) Did fist blows during a sudden quarrel amount to murder under Section 300 where the deceased had an enlarged, diseased liver, but the prosecution had not proved that the appellant knew of that condition, deliberately targeted the abdomen or intended death or an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death? (iii) For the 2002 occurrence, were protected caste status and commission of the offence on that ground proved under Section 3(2)(v), and could the 2016 knowledge requirement alter the applicable test? (iv) If the conviction was reduced, what sentence was appropriate in view of the imprisonment already served, the appellant's age and the long pendency of the appeal? Devendra's individual appeal was not decided after it abated.

5. Ratio / Findings : The post-mortem examination attributed death to internal haemorrhage from a lacerated liver, disclosed cirrhosis and found no external injury. The doctors accepted that a fall could cause such an injury. One doctor considered an assault with the seized 3½ kg hammer unlikely in the absence of an external or rib injury, but accepted that fist blows could leave no external mark. The trial court had rejected Samrath Singh's account of what the deceased had told him and Laxman's claimed eyewitness account, while the High Court rejected the widow's claimed oral dying declaration. The deceased's contemporaneous report, Ex. P-16, recorded by R.G. Katiyar, remained unchallenged as to its contents and the maker's mental condition. Read with the medical evidence, it established beyond reasonable doubt that a quarrel occurred, that Khoob Singh threw Ramcharan down and beat him with fists and blows, and that the beating caused the liver laceration and death. Whether Devendra had used a different hammer did not require decision after his appeal abated.

Section 300 illustration (b) makes the assailant's knowledge of the particular victim's disease material to liability for murder. Pulicherla Nagaraju required intention to be assessed from the circumstances. Shankar Narayan Bhadolkar and Thangaiya distinguished an intended injury inflicted with knowledge of the victim's special condition from an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and from the lesser degrees of culpable homicide. The evidence showed an unplanned quarrel over a tumbler among persons consuming liquor, followed by this appellant's fist assault. Prior enmity, deliberate blows to the abdomen and even acquaintance with the deceased were not proved. Nor was it shown that the appellant knew of the cirrhotic, enlarged liver. The prosecution failed to establish an intention to kill or to cause an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The Court held that the act amounted to culpable homicide of the third degree and substituted Section 304 Part II for Section 302/34.

Section 3(2)(v) had to be applied as it stood before 26 January 2016. Dinesh required proof that the offence was committed on the ground of the victim's protected caste status. Patan Jaman Vali explained why the later knowledge requirement and the presumption under Section 8(c) could not be applied to an earlier offence. The prosecution neither produced and proved the deceased's caste certificate nor linked the sudden dispute over a tumbler to his caste. The conviction under the SC/ST Act therefore failed on those separate grounds, independently of the change in the homicide conviction.

In sentencing the appellant for the substituted offence, the Court recorded 257 days of pre-trial imprisonment, later custody following his arrest in November 2018 and a total which it described as approximately three years and four months in jail. It also considered the earlier bail order and the history of duplicate appeals, the sudden occurrence and the appellant's lack of knowledge of the deceased's condition. More than nineteen years had passed since the offence, and the appellant had been about twenty years old at the time. Kuldeep Singh and Raj Singh supplied sentencing comparisons. In those circumstances, the Court imposed the imprisonment already undergone.

6. Relief : The High Court partly allowed the appeal. It set aside Khoob Singh's conviction under Section 302/34 IPC and convicted him instead under Section 304 Part II IPC, limiting the custodial sentence to the imprisonment already undergone. It also set aside his conviction under Section 3(2)(v) of the SC/ST Act. The Court directed his immediate release unless he was required in another case and ordered that he receive a free copy of the judgment. Its concluding paragraph affirmed the trial judgment only with those modifications. Devendra's appeal had already abated on his death.

Headnote :- Complaint case — limited inquiry under Section 202 - Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230, Kewal Krishan v. Suraj Bhan, 1980 Supp SCC 499, and Mohinder Singh v. Gulwant Singh, (1992) 2 SCC 213, establish the limited scope of an inquiry under Section 202 CrPC. The court must decide whether the complaint and preliminary evidence disclose sufficient ground to issue process under Section 204 or whether the complaint should be dismissed under Section 203. The inquiry also protects a proposed accused from a false, vexatious or harassing complaint, but it is not a trial and does not require proof sufficient for conviction. Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876, requires judicial appraisal of the available material within that limited purpose. Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, (2010) 7 SCC 578, explains that 'sufficient ground' means a prima facie case, not a final finding of guilt.

Cognizance — judicial application of mind without a trial-like merits review - Mehmood Ul Rehman v. Khazir Mohammad Tunda, (2015) 12 SCC 420, requires the court, before issuing process, to apply its mind to whether the complaint, recorded statements and inquiry material prima facie constitute an offence. Summoning a person is a serious step and cannot be mechanical. That duty does not, however, permit a revisional court to reappraise the preliminary material as though conducting a trial. The revisional court discharged Pachouri of the SC/ST Act allegations after such a meticulous assessment. The High Court set that decision aside without finally determining whether the alleged offences had been committed.

Revision — limits of revisional scrutiny; reasons required for remand - Vijaywat had filed no revision, yet the revisional court commented on the trial court's territorial jurisdiction in relation to him. It discharged Pachouri of the SC/ST Act allegations after prematurely weighing the preliminary evidence and remanded the allegations under Sections 294 and 506 Part II IPC without explaining why reconsideration was necessary. A matter cannot be remanded merely to have the Magistrate rewrite the order. The High Court therefore set aside the revisional order in its entirety, allowed the complainant's Section 482 application and dismissed Pachouri's connected application.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Kishanlal Choudhary, a Home Guard employee who described himself as a member of the Chamar Scheduled Caste, filed a private complaint against N.R. Pachouri and Devendra Kumar Vijaywat. The complaint arose from his transfers between Jabalpur and Katni during 2011–12. He alleged delay in relieving him, a demand for money by Vijaywat, directions to perform domestic and cleaning work, withholding of salary, intimidation and caste-related insults. He separately alleged that Pachouri used abusive and threatening language, including in telephone conversations with Kishanlal's brother, and required him to apologise and perform menial work. These were allegations in the complaint, not facts finally found proved. The complaint attributed different incidents to the two accused, while the connected applications before the High Court principally concerned the challenge by and against Pachouri.

Neither Kishanlal's preliminary statement nor his son Ram Gopal's statement alleged that Pachouri had insulted Kishanlal by his caste name. Kishanlal's elder brother Vishnupal described a telephone call in which caste-related language was used, and Amrit Lal Tiwari described a later caste-related rebuke. On 10 September 2012, the Magistrate took cognizance and issued process under Sections 294 and 506 Part II IPC and the SC/ST Act provisions recorded in paragraph 9 of the judgment as Sections 3(1)(x) and 3(2)(7). On Pachouri's revision, the Sessions Court discharged him of the special-statute allegations and remanded the IPC allegations for reconsideration. The revisional court also addressed territorial jurisdiction in relation to Vijaywat although he had filed no revision. Kishanlal invoked Section 482 CrPC to challenge the discharge and remand, while Pachouri's connected application challenged the remand of the IPC allegations.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mehmood Ul Rehman v. Khazir Mohammad Tunda, (2015) 12 SCC 420, holds that issuing process is a serious step. The court must apply its mind to whether the complaint, recorded statements and inquiry material prima facie constitute an offence; summoning cannot be mechanical. The High Court relied on that requirement while keeping the cognizance threshold distinct from proof at trial.

Rosy v. State of Kerala, (2000) 2 SCC 230, describes the two limited purposes of a Section 202 inquiry: to determine whether a prima facie case justifies issuing process and to prevent process on a false, vexatious or harassing complaint. The evidence is not to be meticulously appraised as at trial or at the stage of framing charge, and the proposed accused ordinarily has no right to intervene in the inquiry. The passage quoted by the High Court refers to Ranjit Singh on when a preliminary inquiry is necessary, and to Chandra Deo Singh, Vadilal Panchal, Pramatha Nath Talukdar, Nirmaljit Singh Hoon and Mohinder Singh as supporting authorities. The High Court applied the central distinction between a threshold inquiry and final assessment of the evidence.

Kewal Krishan v. Suraj Bhan, 1980 Supp SCC 499, explains that, for a complaint involving an offence triable exclusively by the Court of Session, the Magistrate at the Sections 203–204 stage asks on a cursory view whether the preliminary material provides prima facie support. That threshold is lower than the standard applied when framing charge, and the material is not to be judged as proof of final guilt. Its discussion of commitment under Section 209, discharge under Section 227 and an impermissibly meticulous preliminary appraisal supported the High Court's conclusion that the revisional court had assessed the disputed evidence as though at trial.

Mohinder Singh v. Gulwant Singh, (1992) 2 SCC 213, reiterates that Section 202 permits only a restricted inquiry into whether sufficient ground exists to proceed under Section 204; it is not a full-dress trial of whether the evidence can sustain a conviction. Pramatha Nath Talukdar v. Saroj Ranjan Sarkar, AIR 1962 SC 876, discusses the material on which judicial satisfaction under Sections 200–204 must rest and the exceptional circumstances in which a second complaint may follow an earlier dismissal. For the present case, the High Court relied on the limited nature of the inquiry and the need for judicial application of mind.

Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, (2010) 7 SCC 578, holds that 'sufficient ground' in Sections 203, 204 and 209 means satisfaction that a prima facie case exists, not evidence sufficient for conviction. Returning to that test in paragraphs 22–23, the High Court held that the revisional court had exceeded the permissible preliminary scrutiny by meticulously appraising the evidence. It treated both that appraisal and the unexplained remand as material illegality.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 200, 202, 203 and 204 CrPC concern examination of a private complainant and witnesses, the limited preliminary inquiry, dismissal where sufficient ground is absent, and issue of process where a prima facie case exists. The passage quoted from Kewal Krishan also discusses commitment under Section 209 and discharge under Section 227 to distinguish later procedural standards. Section 482 CrPC supplied the High Court's jurisdiction in the two connected applications arising from the Sessions revision. The complaint alleged offences under Sections 294 and 506 Part II IPC. The judgment describes the SC/ST Act allegations with differing subsection labels: Sections 3(1)(x) or 3(1)(10), and Sections 3(2)(v), 3(2)(7) or 3(2)(vii).

4. Issues : (i) Did the revisional court apply the proper threshold under Sections 202–204 CrPC when reviewing the Magistrate's process order, or did it prematurely resolve the disputed preliminary accounts of caste-related insults, obscene abuse and threats? (ii) Could it comment on territorial jurisdiction concerning Vijaywat, who had filed no revision, and discharge Pachouri of the SC/ST Act allegations through a meticulous assessment of the preliminary statements? (iii) Could it remand the IPC allegations without giving a reason for reconsideration, merely so that the Magistrate would rewrite the order?

5. Ratio / Findings : Reading Mehmood Ul Rehman with Rosy, Kewal Krishan, Mohinder Singh, Pramatha Nath Talukdar and Shivjee Singh, the Court held that issuing process on a complaint requires genuine judicial application of mind to the alleged offence and the supporting preliminary material because summoning is a serious step. The Section 202 inquiry nevertheless remains a limited screening exercise. It asks whether a prima facie case supplies sufficient ground to proceed, or whether the complaint should be rejected for want of such ground, while guarding against false, vexatious or harassing complaints. It is not a trial and cannot be converted into proof beyond reasonable doubt or a meticulous resolution of credibility. The later-stage standards discussed in relation to Sections 209 and 227 were distinguished, not imposed on the complaint inquiry.

Applying that test, the High Court found that the Sessions Court had meticulously assessed the complainant's and witnesses' statements before discharging Pachouri of the SC/ST Act allegations. That evaluation exceeded the limited scrutiny permitted at the process stage. The Sessions Court had also commented on territorial jurisdiction concerning Vijaywat, who had not filed a revision, and had remanded the IPC allegations without identifying any error that required reconsideration. A remand merely to have the Magistrate rewrite the order was impermissible. The High Court held that the discharge and the unexplained remand involved material illegality.

6. Relief : The High Court set aside in its entirety the revisional order identified in the operative paragraph as dated 14 November 2018. It allowed Kishanlal's application and dismissed N.R. Pachouri's connected application. The order did not convict or acquit anyone and made no final finding that caste-based abuse had occurred.

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence — complete chain and reasonable hypotheses - Sharad Birdhichandra Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622, set out five conditions: every circumstance must be established, be consistent only with guilt and be conclusive; the circumstances must exclude other reasonable hypotheses and together form a complete chain. The Court applied this test to the short period in which an infant was left with her father, her homicidal death, bloodstained recoveries and the explanation that the Court rejected; it did not count an unproved extra-judicial confession or alleged river sighting as proved facts.

Last seen — time gap, supporting links and special knowledge - Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, Mahavir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 6 SCC 716, and Jagroop Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 768, were considered in deciding whether the interval allowed for the intervention of another perpetrator. Jagroop illustrated that the time gap must be assessed alongside the post-mortem and search evidence, rather than by a mechanical rule. Rambraksh v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2016) 12 SCC 251, cautioned that last seen alone cannot sustain conviction. Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, required the prosecution to establish the initial facts. Under Section 106 of the Evidence Act, an explanation of when and how the accused parted from the deceased, being within his special knowledge, was to be considered only with other incriminating circumstances. The mother left Nikita with Kishanlal and found her dead about thirty minutes later; his river account lacked witness support and did not explain when he left the infant.

Forensic proof — ungrouped human blood as a link - Khujji v. State of M.P., (1991) 3 SCC 627, distinguished the lack of conclusive blood-group attribution from the corroborative value of human blood on an accused's weapon or garment where other evidence is reliable. Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 11 SCC 111, also treated an FSL finding of human blood on a knife as incriminating. The seized sickle and clothes carried human blood whose group could not be ascertained; the Court treated this as one link in the established chain, not a conclusive match to the deceased.

Hostile testimony — supported portion retained - The mother's testimony did not prove the alleged extra-judicial confession, but her repeated account that she left the child with the appellant was consistent with her prompt report. The Court relied on that limited portion and the other established circumstances, without treating her being declared hostile as proof of the confession or as a reason to reject all her testimony. The conviction and life sentence under Section 302 IPC were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Kishanlal appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 1 January 2010 of the Sessions Judge at Guna in S.T. No. 281/2009, convicting him of the murder of his eight-month-old daughter Nikita under Section 302 IPC and imposing life imprisonment, a fine of Rs 200 and one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. The prosecution case began with a report by his wife Manju Bai. She said she went to a well with their older children to fetch water, leaving the infant at home with Kishanlal; on returning about thirty minutes later, he was gone and she found the child's head separated from her body under a shawl. The account initially referred to an unknown killer. Police investigated, arrested Kishanlal, seized a sickle and garments, and received an FSL report identifying human blood on the articles without a determinable blood group.

The defence argued that prosecution witnesses had turned hostile, that Kishanlal had gone towards the river rather than remaining with the child, and that ungrouped blood did not prove that the stains came from Nikita. The State relied on the short last-seen interval, the appellant's failure to explain when he left the infant, and the recoveries. The post-mortem doctor described ante-mortem decapitation and other incised injuries, with death from shock due to extensive haemorrhage; the doctor was not cross-examined. Manju Bai did not support an alleged extra-judicial confession and was declared hostile on that issue, but reaffirmed her account of leaving the child with Kishanlal. Pinki Bai, Virjo Bai and Phool Singh did not support important prosecution suggestions, including the asserted river sighting.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sharad Birdhichandra Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622, set out the five requirements for proof based entirely on circumstantial evidence: fully established facts, consistency only with guilt, conclusive tendency, exclusion of reasonable alternative hypotheses, and a complete chain leaving no rational ground compatible with innocence. Its reproduced discussion distinguished "must be" from "may be" guilty, drawing on Shivaji Sahebrao Bobade, and addressed the limited role of an accused's false explanation after the prosecution proves the links. The High Court applied the rule to assess custody, death and the recoveries together. Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, required close temporal proximity between the victim being last seen with the accused and the discovery of death, so an intervening actor is reasonably excluded. The passage referred to Bodhraj, Rambraksh and Anjan Kumar Sarma on that caution. Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, required initial prosecution proof and explained that the accused may then bear a burden under Section 106 of the Evidence Act to explain events within his special knowledge; last seen is not conclusive by itself and requires corroborating circumstances. Mahavir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 6 SCC 716, reiterated the need for a very short interval. Jagroop Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 768, illustrated assessment of a contested gap alongside the search evidence and the medical evidence of the time of death, rather than by a rigid formula.

Rambraksh v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2016) 12 SCC 251, expressly said that last-seen evidence alone cannot sustain conviction; the prosecution must complete the chain, with the narrow time gap reducing the likelihood of another perpetrator. Its quotation of Krishnan, Arjun Marik and Bodhraj illustrated the danger of long gaps and missing corroboration. The High Court applied all these cases to an infant left with the appellant for roughly half an hour and then examined the additional bloodstained articles and his unsupported river account rather than relying on custody alone.

Khujji v. State of M.P., (1991) 3 SCC 627, distinguished cases where ungrouped human blood on clothing or a weapon was insufficient to convict on its own from one where it corroborated reliable evidence. Failure to determine the blood group does not make the finding of human blood wholly immaterial. Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 11 SCC 111, cited the incriminating value of an FSL finding of human blood on a knife, with references to Teja Ram and Molai. The High Court treated the sickle and clothes as a supporting link, without treating the laboratory finding as a match to Nikita's blood.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC was the provision under which the appellant was charged with murder and his conviction was affirmed. The medical and circumstantial findings were used to establish beyond reasonable doubt that he was the perpetrator. Section 374 CrPC conferred appellate jurisdiction. Section 313 CrPC is relevant to Kishanlal's explanation that he went toward the river; the Court tested this against testimony and the fact that the infant had been left in his sole care. Section 106 of the Evidence Act was judicially considered through Ashok and applied only after the prosecution proved last-seen proximity and other circumstances: the accused's particular knowledge of how and when he parted from his infant did not displace the prosecution's initial burden. The discovery statement and sickle recovery formed part of the evidence.

4. Issues : (i) Was the child's death homicidal, and what did the medical evidence establish? (ii) Could the reliable portion of Manju Bai's account, despite hostility on an alleged confession, establish that Kishanlal was last alone with the infant during a short interval before discovery of death? (iii) Did his river explanation, the bloodstained sickle and clothing with human blood but no group, and the other proved circumstances complete the chain required for a murder conviction, or leave a reasonable possibility that another person had intervened? (iv) If guilt remained proved, was there any basis to disturb the sentence imposed? The Court did not find that an extra-judicial confession had been proved or that there was a direct eyewitness account of the killing.

5. Ratio / Findings : The unchallenged post-mortem evidence proved decapitation and homicidal death. Manju Bai's testimony was accepted on the separate, consistent fact that she left Nikita with Kishanlal and returned about half an hour later to find him absent and the infant dead; her prompt report corroborated this. The prosecutor could not elicit evidence of the alleged extra-judicial confession, so it did not form a link in the chain. Phool Singh did not substantiate the reported river sighting, and the Court did not use it as affirmative proof that Kishanlal was there. Under the Supreme Court's last-seen authorities, the unusually short interval gave substantial weight to the fact that the infant had been left with the appellant, but that circumstance was not conclusive on its own.

Kishanlal said under Section 313 that he went toward the river, but no witness supported seeing him there and he did not say when he left his eight-month-old daughter or give a reasonable account of leaving her unattended. The Court considered that omission with the proved proximity. It also regarded the river explanation as indicative of a guilty mind, observing that he might have gone there to wash himself. The independent seizure testimony, the investigating officer's evidence and the FSL report established that the recovered sickle and garments carried human blood. Although the blood group was unknown and the evidence could not identify the blood as Nikita's, the principles in Khujji and Rameshbhai permitted the blood finding to be used as corroboration alongside other reliable links. The Court found that the medically established death, the interval during which the infant was left with the appellant, the recovery and the inadequate explanation of when and how he parted from her together satisfied Sharad Birdhichandra Sarda's complete-chain test and excluded a reasonable innocent hypothesis. It therefore found that Kishanlal murdered Nikita.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal. The Sessions Judge's Section 302 IPC conviction, sentence of life imprisonment, Rs 200 fine and one month's rigorous imprisonment in default were affirmed. Kishanlal, already in custody, was to serve the remaining term; a copy of the judgment was directed to be supplied to him free of cost.

Headnote :- Child sexual offence — circumstantial identification after flight - The five-year-old prosecutrix could not give meaningful evidence, but the Court did not require her testimony in the presence of other reliable evidence. Three witnesses saw and identified the appellant running from an isolated place immediately before finding the child unconscious and bleeding. Nanak v. State of U.P., 1984 Supp SCC 628, was considered for the incriminating value of flight from the scene as part of the evidence as a whole. The prompt FIR, witness accounts, medical injuries and FSL findings together established the appellant's identity beyond reasonable doubt despite differences about when witnesses learned his name.

Medical and forensic proof — injury pattern, human semen and absence of accused injury - Examination showed genital lacerations, ruptured hymen, bite abrasions and other bodily injuries; a possible fall did not explain the injuries taken together. Human semen and sperm on the vaginal swab and slide established sexual assault. State of H.P. v. Raghubir Singh, (1993) 2 SCC 622, was applied to reject the argument that the absence of injury to the accused's penis necessarily disproved the prosecution case; the examination occurred sixteen days after the incident. The Section 376(2)(f) IPC conviction and life sentence for the assault on a very young child were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appellant challenged the judgment dated 17 February 2012 of the Sessions Judge at Guna in S.T. No. 350/2011, convicting him under the then-applicable Section 376(2)(f) IPC and sentencing him to life imprisonment, a fine of Rs 500 and one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. The prosecution alleged that in October 2011, while the child's parents and her uncle and aunt were away for work, the young child, who was in her uncle's care, was taken near a school. A boy informed the uncle of an incident. Cattle-grazing witnesses said they saw the appellant flee from an isolated area, where the child lay unconscious with bleeding from her genital area and facial injuries. The uncle reported the matter promptly. The prosecution initially included Section 324 IPC in the charge-sheet, but the trial charge and appellate conviction concerned Section 376(2)(f).

The trial court could not record the child's evidence because she was about five years old and did not answer its questions. Her uncle did not see the assault himself and qualified the inconsistent statement in the initial report about whether he had seen the appellant flee. The defence disputed the reliability of Phulla, Khema and Gudda and argued that the perpetrator's identity had not been proved. The child's medical examination showed extensive genital lacerations, a ruptured hymen, cheek bite abrasions and contusions. Vaginal swab and slide yielded human semen and sperm on FSL examination. The appellant was arrested sixteen days later; his medical examination found no indication of incapacity for sexual activity, and the defence relied on the absence of penile injury.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nanak v. State of U.P., 1984 Supp SCC 628, was quoted in relation to a case where an immediate neighbour saw the accused flee with a knife, alongside other witness testimony and surrounding circumstances. The quoted decision held that the trial court's acquittal was unreasonable. The High Court regarded flight as an important piece of circumstantial evidence. The High Court treated the witnesses' sighting of the appellant fleeing the isolated scene as one important circumstance, then tested identity against the child's immediate condition, the witnesses named in the promptly lodged FIR, medical findings and forensic result.

State of H.P. v. Raghubir Singh, (1993) 2 SCC 622, held that the absence of injuries on the male organ cannot invariably discredit an otherwise reliable rape case; the significance of such absence depends on the facts, and an earlier contrary inference in Rahim Beg arose from its own evidentiary setting. The High Court applied this qualification where the appellant was arrested and medically examined sixteen days after the incident, and accepted the child's genital injury pattern and FSL semen findings with the independent identification evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 376(2)(f) IPC was the applicable provision under which the appellant was charged with and convicted of raping a child in the 2011 incident. The original investigation mentioned Section 324 IPC, but the judgment identified no trial finding or operative conviction under that section. Section 374 CrPC provided for the appeal. The medical examinations, FSL swab and slide, and witnesses' identification were used as evidence of the sexual assault and its perpetrator.

4. Issues : (i) Did medical findings and the FSL report establish sexual assault on the young child despite the defence suggestion that a fall might cause genital injury? (ii) In the absence of recorded testimony from the child herself, did the three witnesses' observations and identifications of the appellant fleeing an isolated scene, with the prompt FIR and physical evidence, prove his identity beyond reasonable doubt? (iii) Did the absence of penile injury on the appellant, examined sixteen days after the incident, undermine that proof? (iv) Was there reason to interfere with the life sentence?

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor documented hymenal rupture, deep genital lacerations, cheek bite abrasions and other contusions; a fall on a pointed object might explain an isolated genital injury but not the whole pattern. The FSL finding of human semen and sperm on the vaginal material provided further proof of rape. The child was too young and did not respond to questions, so her evidence could not be recorded at trial; the Court recorded no trial statement from her. Her uncle found her in immediate distress but was not a direct eyewitness to the assault, and his report discrepancy was considered. Khema directly described the appellant running from the spot; Gudda identified him in court despite learning his name from Khema, and Phulla also identified him after initially saying he did not know him by name. Their accounts, the isolated site, the immediate discovery and the promptly lodged FIR naming the witnesses formed a coherent chain identifying the appellant. Nanak reinforced the evidentiary value of flight where corroborated.

The defence's objection based on the absence of injury to the appellant's penis was rejected under the rule in Raghubir Singh, which requires assessment in the particular factual circumstances. Sixteen days separated the assault and arrest, enough time for any minor injury to heal; absence of such injury did not disprove the otherwise supported case. The Court found guilt beyond reasonable doubt and affirmed Section 376(2)(f). It considered the victim's very young age and the gravity of the crime and found no reason to reduce the life sentence. The Court stated that such acts must be dealt with firmly to provide a safe society for minor girls.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. The Section 376(2)(f) IPC conviction, life imprisonment, Rs 500 fine and stated default term of one month's rigorous imprisonment were affirmed. The appellant, already in jail, was to serve the remaining sentence. The High Court directed a free copy of its judgment to him and return of the trial record with a copy for compliance.

Kishna Banjara v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 360/2012, 20/07/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Criminal-side writ — exceptional transfer to CBI - State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, as considered through Himanshu Kumar, K.V. Rajendran and Royden Harold Buthello, requires the constitutional power to transfer an investigation to be used sparingly, on a need established in the particular case to restore a credible and fair investigation, address the involvement of high officials or substantial ramifications, or avert a likely failure of justice. Subrata Chattoraj v. Union of India involved a massive multi-State deposit scam, influential participants and an unexplained money trail; those features were distinguished because this petitioner identified no comparable inadequacy in the completed local investigation. Vishal Tiwari v. Union of India, AIR 2024 SC 414, and Anant Thanur Karmuse v. State of Maharashtra, (2023) 5 SCC 802, reiterated that grave allegations and a desire for a CBI investigation cannot substitute for strong material showing bias or deliberate failure. The writ for Crime No. 177/2022 was dismissed.

Further investigation — post-charge-sheet power and limits - State of Punjab v. CBI, (2011) 9 SCC 182, distinguishes further investigation under Section 173(8) CrPC from fresh or de novo reinvestigation, and recognises High Court power to direct appropriate independent investigation to secure justice despite filing of a report. Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2016) 4 SCC 160, Bharati Tamang v. Union of India, (2013) 15 SCC 578, and Babubhai v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 12 SCC 254, explain that even the commencement of trial is not an absolute bar where a need to ensure fairness has a factual foundation; K.V. Rajendran ordinarily leaves cases in which investigation is complete to proceed to trial, except in rare circumstances. The present petition failed because no such need was established, rather than because the Court lacked power after the charge-sheet was filed.

Agency selection — fair process and particularised basis - Himanshu Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, drawing on Romila Thapar v. Union of India and CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, distinguished the right to a proper investigation from a party's claimed right to choose the agency; it preserved extraordinary court intervention on supported grounds. Royden Harold Buthello considered the need for a credible process of discovering the truth, while cautioning that an accused's unsubstantiated dissatisfaction does not justify transfer. This petitioner claimed public interest but was not the complainant and did not point to any concrete defect in the police work or charge sheet. General allegations of fraud and the later controversy about bail were insufficient to justify a change of investigating agency.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Kishor Samrite filed a writ petition under Article 226 seeking an inquiry by the CBI or another higher authority into an alleged deposit or Ponzi scheme and transfer of Crime No. 177/2022 from local police. He described many investors and villagers in Balaghat, large sums, media reports, alleged suicides, representations to authorities and discovery of further money after bail. These were grounds and assertions in his petition, not facts the High Court adjudicated as proved. The petitioner was not the complainant and described himself as a public-spirited person. At the hearing, counsel for accused persons in other identified proceedings said that bail granted to them had later been cancelled and that investigation had been completed, a charge sheet filed and trial begun. The High Court recorded those procedural facts but did not decide the accused persons' separate proceedings or the fraud charges in this writ.

Samrite relied on Subrata Chattoraj to argue that a multi-State scam involving large sums and an inadequate local inquiry required investigation by the CBI. When asked to identify what the police had failed to investigate and the basis for his allegation, counsel referred to alleged subsequent cheating after bail but could not identify a defect in the investigation or the charge-sheet. The pleadings likewise did not make a specific allegation against the investigative agency supporting transfer. The Court surveyed the exceptional-transfer authorities and dismissed the petition.

2. Precedents — Considered : Subrata Chattoraj v. Union of India, W.P.(C) No. 401/2013 (9 May 2014), was invoked by the petitioner's counsel and then examined by the Judge. The quoted reasons for transferring the chit-fund investigation included enormous collections from vulnerable investors, millions of claims, multi-State and possible international ramifications, politically influential persons, regulatory questions and a money trail that had not been fully traced. The Supreme Court did not premise transfer solely on police fault; public confidence in independent investigation mattered. The High Court distinguished it because the petitioner furnished no comparable case-specific deficiency or reason to replace the police.

State of Punjab v. CBI, (2011) 9 SCC 182, recognised High Court power to secure the ends of justice through a fresh or independent investigation notwithstanding Section 173(8) CrPC's ordinary limits on subordinate courts; the judgment discussed the distinction in Mithabhai Pashabhai Patel between further investigation and ordinarily forbidden reinvestigation, and the transfer under Article 226 in Nirmal Singh Kahlon even after a charge-sheet had been filed. The High Court invoked it to reject a categorical post-charge-sheet bar, while refusing transfer here because necessity had not been established.

Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2016) 4 SCC 160, stressed a victim's demand for a fair investigation where that demand had a factual foundation and held that filing of a report or even commencement of trial does not create an absolute bar to constitutional courts ordering an independent investigation to prevent injustice. It required a real foundation for grave suspicion, not imagination. Bharati Tamang v. Union of India, (2013) 15 SCC 578, catalogued the courts' power in an appropriate case to address concealed deficiencies, constitute an SIT, monitor investigation and transfer after charge sheet, with de novo investigation only exceptionally. The Court considered those powers but found no factual basis for exercising them in the present case.

Babubhai v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 12 SCC 254, favoured appropriate further investigation under Section 173(8), potentially through an independent agency, when serious irregularity is found, while warning against routine court interference and ordinarily forbidden reinvestigation. Himanshu Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, reported as (2023) 12 SCC 592 in the later quotation, drew on the Constitution Bench in State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571: transfer to the CBI cannot be ordered merely because it is requested, but may secure credibility where State investigation is tainted, influential officials are implicated or wider ramifications or fundamental rights require it. It also stated that filing a charge-sheet or commencement of trial is not an absolute bar. Its discussion of K.V. Rajendran, Romila Thapar and CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi distinguishes exceptional judicial choice of agency from a litigant's unilateral choice. The High Court applied the rare-case test to the absence of particular allegations here.

K.V. Rajendran v. Superintendent of Police, CBCID South Zone, Chennai, (2013) 12 SCC 480, was separately examined: ordinarily, cases in which investigation is complete and a charge-sheet has been filed proceed to trial, with no premature merits opinion, but transfer remains possible where high officials are implicated, the police work appears tainted or public confidence demands a fair independent inquiry. Vishal Tiwari v. Union of India, AIR 2024 SC 414, required strong material on the record showing deliberate inaction, inadequacy or apparent bias and cogent justification for exceptional judicial displacement of the statutory investigator.

Royden Harold Buthello v. State of Chhattisgarh, AIR 2023 SC 1231, considered Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, the factors in Mithilesh Kumar Singh concerning credible discovery of the truth and victims' confidence, and the refusal in Arnab Ranjan Goswami to transfer an investigation on an accused's unsubstantiated dissatisfaction. It framed the test as an exceptional need for an outside agency to secure a fair trial. Anant Thanur Karmuse v. State of Maharashtra, (2023) 5 SCC 802, reiterated the same framework by reproducing Himanshu Kumar and the associated distinction between proper investigation and agency choice. The High Court consolidated these overlapping authorities into the exceptional-transfer standard.

A.R. Antulay v. Ramdas Sriniwas Nayak appeared only in the petitioner's pleaded grounds on general standing to initiate proceedings. The Court found no allegation against the investigating agency warranting transfer and dismissed the petition.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was the petitioner's jurisdictional basis for writ relief in criminal proceedings; the judgment considered the constitutional court's exceptional power to ensure fair independent criminal investigation, with Supreme Court authorities also discussing Article 32. Section 173(2) CrPC concerns the filed police report and Section 173(8) concerns the ordinary power of further investigation. The distinction between further investigation and fresh, de novo investigation or reinvestigation remained relevant even after the police report had been filed. Section 482 CrPC was explained through State of Punjab v. CBI as a separate basis for the High Court's inherent power, not as the provision under which Samrite actually filed. The case was described as Crime No. 177/2022.

4. Issues : (i) Could the High Court under Article 226 transfer the State police's investigation of Crime No. 177/2022 to the CBI after a charge sheet and while trial was underway? (ii) What exceptional facts and evidentiary showing would justify that step despite the statutory role of the ordinary investigating agency? (iii) Did this petitioner's allegations of a large deposit fraud, public harm, representations and post-bail events identify concrete police bias, omitted lines of investigation or defects in the charge sheet sufficient to warrant transfer?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the existence of constitutional power from the conditions for exercising it. State of Punjab v. CBI, Dharam Pal and Bharati Tamang establish that filing a report and commencement of trial do not create an absolute bar to the High Court directing fair further investigation or, exceptionally, an independent investigation. Babubhai and K.V. Rajendran preserve the distinction between ordinary further investigation and exceptional fresh or de novo investigation, and caution that cases in which a charge-sheet has been filed ordinarily proceed before the trial court without premature judicial merits opinions. The long line from Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights through Himanshu Kumar, K.V. Rajendran, Vishal Tiwari, Royden Harold Buthello and Anant Thanur Karmuse requires a specific showing of grave inadequacy, apparent bias, influence of powerful officials, wider ramifications or need to preserve credible justice. No party has an automatic right to insist on the CBI as the investigating agency; a need for a proper independent investigation, supported by facts, may nevertheless justify exceptional intervention.

Subrata Chattoraj illustrated that public confidence can demand CBI investigation of a sprawling multi-State scam even without a prior finding that local officers wholly failed; the exceptional facts of that case could not simply be applied to this petition. Samrite's allegations of large sums, villagers affected, representations, subsequent recovery and further cheating after bail were not themselves evidence that the local police had omitted a material inquiry or filed a deficient charge sheet. When asked directly, counsel identified no specific lapse. The writ grounds did not make a particular allegation against the investigative agency warranting transfer. Thus the relief failed on the facts, not solely on the petitioner's non-complainant status or the stage of the criminal case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition seeking an inquiry by the CBI or another higher authority and transfer of Crime No. 177/2022 because no case warranting judicial interference had been made out. No transfer, fresh investigation, reinvestigation or merits direction was issued; the already filed charge sheet and trial were left in their existing course.

Headnote :- Food adulteration — overlapping statutes and overriding effect - The milk sample was collected on 29 August 2010, before the repeal of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act took effect on 5 August 2011. Manik Hiru Jhangiani v. State of M.P., Cr. A. 3864/2023 (14 December 2023), was considered for the overriding effect of Section 89 FSSA where imprisonment under the earlier Act conflicts with the monetary penalty under the later statute, and for the concern under Article 20(2) about punishing the same act under both regimes. That Supreme Court case concerned misbranding under Section 52. The High Court applied its reasoning on overriding effect to adulteration under Section 57, while maintaining the distinction between the two offences.

Revision — conviction retained and sentence changed - Both laboratories found that the sampled milk did not meet the statutory standard, and the applicant showed no perversity in those factual findings. He had not objected to prosecution under the PFA before the trial or appellate court. The High Court affirmed the adulteration conviction but, instead of requiring a new prosecution under the FSSA, replaced the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of Rs 2,00,000 under Section 57, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default and release upon payment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Komal Singh Yadav sought revision under Sections 397/401 CrPC after the Additional Sessions Judge, Morena, affirmed the Judicial Magistrate's conviction under Sections 7/16 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954. A milk sample was drawn from a tanker on 29 August 2010. The public analyst found adulteration; on the applicant's request for retesting, the Central Food Laboratory report also found the sample below the prescribed solids-not-fat minimum and positive for glucose under Appendix B, Item A.11.01.11 of the Prevention of Food Adulteration Rules, 1955. The lower courts imposed six months' rigorous imprisonment, Rs 2,000 fine and one month's rigorous imprisonment in default.

The applicant argued that the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006, had already come into existence when the sample was collected and that his conviction and imprisonment under the PFA should not stand. He sought instead a monetary penalty under Section 57 FSSA, contending that the adulterant was not shown to be injurious to health. The High Court examined the notification fixing 5 August 2011 as the PFA repeal date, the Supreme Court's ruling on overlapping statutes, the two laboratory reports and whether to set aside the conviction to permit a fresh prosecution under the FSSA or modify the sentence in the existing case.

2. Precedents — Considered : Manik Hiru Jhangiani v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 3864/2023, decided 14 December 2023, was the material Supreme Court authority quoted and applied. In a case of misbranding where imprisonment under Section 16 PFA and a monetary penalty under Section 52 FSSA were both available, the Supreme Court considered Article 20(2)'s prohibition on double jeopardy and the overriding effect of Section 89 FSSA over inconsistent food laws. It held that Section 52 prevails to the extent of the inconsistency in punishment and that both regimes cannot cumulatively punish the same act of misbranding. The High Court expressly applied that reasoning on conflict and overriding effect to adulterated milk under Section 57 FSSA, which provides a different monetary penalty. It identified the inconsistency as one concerning punishment and modified the sentence while preserving the proved conviction.

3. Statutes considered : PFA Sections 7 and 16 formed the basis of the conviction and custodial sentence imposed at trial; the applicable milk standard was the cited item in Appendix B of the 1955 Rules. The Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006, was already in force in relevant respects during the period of overlap, while the PFA repeal took effect on 5 August 2011. Section 89 FSSA gives the Act overriding effect over inconsistent provisions of another food-related law. Section 57 FSSA was applied to impose the monetary penalty for adulteration in this case, whereas Section 52, concerning misbranding, was the provision considered in Manik Hiru Jhangiani. Article 20(2) was discussed through that Supreme Court decision as preventing double punishment for the same act. Sections 397/401 CrPC governed the revisional proceeding.

4. Issues : (i) Did the PFA remain applicable to a sample taken on 29 August 2010 despite the existence of the FSSA, given the notified repeal date? (ii) Did the laboratory findings establish adulteration, and was any perversity shown in the concurrent findings? (iii) How should Section 89's overriding effect resolve inconsistent PFA imprisonment and FSSA Section 57 monetary sanction: by undoing the conviction and inviting new prosecution, or by preserving it and modifying the sentence? (iv) What precise penalty and release consequence would follow? Counsel submitted that the adulterant was not found injurious to health and sought a fine of Rs 2,00,000.

5. Ratio / Findings : The PFA had not been repealed when the sample was collected, since the Government notification made the repeal effective from 5 August 2011. The Court therefore rejected the premise that prosecution under the earlier Act was inherently void merely because the later Act existed. Both the public analyst and the Central Laboratory found that the milk did not meet the prescribed standard. The applicant pointed to no perversity in those findings and had not challenged his prosecution under the PFA in the lower courts. The Court relied on Manik Hiru Jhangiani for the overriding effect of Section 89 where overlapping food statutes impose inconsistent sanctions, noting its reasoning on double jeopardy for the same act. Here, the inconsistency concerned the punishment. With adulteration proved, the Court chose to retain the conviction and replace imprisonment under the PFA with the monetary penalty under Section 57, rather than require a new prosecution under the FSSA. This was the High Court's application of the principle to adulteration; the quoted Supreme Court holding directly concerned misbranding under Section 52.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the revision to the extent of modifying the sentence. The conviction for adulterated milk and the lower-court judgments were otherwise affirmed, but the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment was replaced by a fine of Rs 2,00,000 under Section 57 FSSA, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default. As the applicant was in jail, the Court directed his immediate release after payment of that amount; failing payment, he would undergo the default term.

Komal Singh Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 5994/2024, 12/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (301) Prev Next

Headnote :- Forensic DNA — fetal paternity distinguished from parent-child relationship - The FSL results, as recited by the Court, identified the appellant as the biological father of the fetus in his adolescent daughter and excluded Vishal Shrivastava. The appellant's ordinary biological relationship with his daughter did not answer the separate question of the fetus's paternity. Ravi s/o Ashok Ghumare v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 9 SCC 622, was considered for the strong, but context-dependent, evidentiary value of DNA profiles in sexual-assault cases. Its discussion of Y-STR expressly limits the ability to distinguish males in the same paternal line. The Court relied on the reported result together with the surrounding facts, rather than on a mere parent-child match.

Circumstantial chain — proof rather than suspicion - Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, Padala Veera Reddy v. State of A.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 706, Ramreddy Rajesh Khanna Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 172, Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 259, Sunil Clifford Daniel v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 205, and Satish Nirankari v. State of Rajasthan, (2017) 8 SCC 497, were applied for their shared principles: each link must be reliably proved, and the circumstances taken together must exclude a reasonable explanation consistent with innocence. A false defence cannot fill a gap in the prosecution case. The Court affirmed the appellant's convictions for rape, murder and destruction of evidence on the FSL result and the other circumstances, while considering Vishal's exclusion separately.

Last seen — temporal limit and corroboration - Ramreddy Rajesh Khanna Reddy, Hatti Singh v. State of Haryana, 2007 (2) CCSC 802 (SC), and State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, require a short interval and corroborating evidence before last-seen circumstances can implicate an accused. The fact that the father and daughter lived together was one link in the chain, not proof by itself. The appeal was dismissed, and the convictions under Sections 302, 376 and 201 IPC and the sentences were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Komal Tiwari appealed against the decision dated 3 November 2010 of the Additional Sessions Judge, Datia, in Sessions Trial No. 33/2007. He had been convicted under Section 302 IPC (life imprisonment and a fine of Rs 10,000), Section 376 IPC (ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 5,000), and Section 201 IPC (seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 5,000), with default stipulations. The deceased, identified as his daughter X and described as about fourteen, was reported dead on 19 July 2006. The initial police intimation recorded the appellant's account that she had gone out and was later found dead. An inquest, post-mortem examination, seizures and further investigation followed; the appellant was arrested months later. The prosecution alleged sexual assault, pregnancy, throttling and burning to conceal the crimes. Those allegations required proof in the appeal; the Court did not simply treat the initial report or the allegations as established facts.

The post-mortem doctor recorded extensive burns covering about 95 per cent of the body. In the passage reproduced, he did not give a definitive opinion on the cause of death; the judgment referred to possible viscera testing. The Court, however, described FSL DNA reports Exs P25 and P26 as identifying Komal Tiwari as the biological father of the fetus in the victim and excluding another person investigated, Vishal Shrivastava. The defence argued that a father's DNA naturally matches his daughter's and that Vishal may have had an illicit relationship with her. The appellant also challenged the absence of a direct eyewitness and the completeness of the circumstantial chain. He alleged faulty investigation after the death of the officer who conducted the initial inquest.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ravi s/o Ashok Ghumare v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 9 SCC 622, was invoked in the Court's discussion of forensic DNA. In that Supreme Court case, a laboratory witness explained mixed samples in a sexual-assault case, Y-chromosome STR profiling and other comparative profiles. The Supreme Court accepted the well-supported profiling as powerful corroboration, while noting that Y-STR alone cannot distinguish males of the same paternal lineage and must be considered with the entire record. The High Court applied that analysis to the reported finding about the fetus's paternity. It rejected the appellant's argument that his ordinary biological relationship with his daughter explained the finding about the paternity of her fetus. The Court discussed DNA profiling, including STR loci, Y-chromosome inheritance and mitochondrial DNA analysis of hair, before relying on the fetal DNA findings in this case. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, set out five principles requiring fully proved circumstances consistent with guilt and a complete chain excluding any reasonable conclusion consistent with innocence. Padala Veera Reddy v. State of A.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 706, restated the need to establish the circumstances firmly and to prove a complete chain when they are considered together. Ramreddy Rajesh Khanna Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 172, required clinching proof and warned that grave suspicion cannot substitute for it. Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 259, warned against allowing emotional considerations to displace legal proof. Sunil Clifford Daniel v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 205, reiterated that the prosecution must complete the chain and that a false defence cannot excuse a missing link. Satish Nirankari v. State of Rajasthan, (2017) 8 SCC 497, summarised the requirements of conclusive circumstances and exclusion of another perpetrator. The High Court considered these authorities together and affirmed the three convictions on the circumstances it found proved, rather than on the heinousness of the charges alone.

Ramreddy Rajesh Khanna Reddy was also cited on the last-seen theory: a sufficiently short interval and corroboration are needed to exclude an intervening perpetrator. Hatti Singh v. State of Haryana, 2007 (2) CCSC 802 (SC), repeated that limitation. State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, warned against inferring guilt where the interval is long or uncertain and there is no other positive evidence. The High Court considered the fact that the appellant and his daughter lived together alongside the evidence of the fetus's paternity and the other circumstances; the judgment does not establish an exact last-seen time.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 376, 302 and 201 IPC were the three provisions under which the convictions were affirmed: sexual assault, murder and causing disappearance of evidence. The appellant invoked Section 374(2) CrPC for the appeal; his statement under Section 313 and the initial merg intimation formed part of the procedural record. Section 27 of the Evidence Act was mentioned in connection with the appellant's memorandum and seizures, but the Court did not formulate an independent rule on the admissibility of discovery evidence. Section 161 CrPC appears in the judgment's account of some brothers' earlier police statements describing the occurrence, although the Court otherwise treated the case as circumstantial. The fetal DNA result and the reported comparison with Vishal were considered as evidence, without any numerical likelihood ratio stated in the judgment.

4. Issues : (i) Did the prosecution prove the charged rape of the adolescent daughter, murder by throttling and burning, and disappearance of evidence beyond reasonable doubt despite absence of a clearly identified direct trial eyewitness? (ii) Did the fetal DNA finding identify the appellant as the fetus's biological father, as distinct from his undisputed status as the deceased's father, and what did exclusion of Vishal establish? (iii) Did domestic custody, medical and DNA results, witness accounts and reported conduct form the complete circumstantial chain demanded by the Supreme Court, or was it speculative? (iv) Did the death of an earlier investigating officer or alleged imperfection in inquiry justify acquittal, and did sentence call for change? The judgment did not separately report a precise forensic probability or an exact last-seen interval.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court understood the FSL reports as identifying the appellant as the biological father of the fetus in the deceased and excluding Vishal. It rejected the defence argument that a father's DNA naturally matches his child's, because the comparison concerned the fetus, a different person. The Court relied on Ravi Ghumare's discussion of DNA as support for the evidentiary value of forensic findings considered with the surrounding facts. The brothers' testimony, as summarised, established that the appellant and the deceased lived together without other household members, while the brothers lived elsewhere. The Court considered the doctor's finding of extensive burns and the investigative record. The separate DNA exclusion of Vishal supported his acquittal by the trial court.

Applying Sharad and the other circumstantial-evidence decisions, the Court concluded that the finding about the fetus's paternity, the living arrangements and the other material formed a chain pointing to the appellant and excluding the proposed alternative. The death of the original investigator and continuation of the investigation by another officer were not, by themselves, fatal to the prosecution case; the remaining evidence had to be assessed. On the last-seen theory, Ramreddy, Hatti Singh and Satish required proximity in time and corroboration. The Court treated shared residence as part of the cumulative case. It found rape, murder and subsequent burning to remove evidence proved and affirmed the trial court's decision; the judgment did not give a more precise medical opinion on the cause of death or a DNA statistic. In upholding life imprisonment for murder, the Court considered the seriousness of the offence and the victim's age. It also concluded that the prosecution had proved the complete chain of circumstances beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the Sessions judgment dated 3 November 2010. The sentence of life imprisonment under Section 302 and the fines, the sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment and fine under Section 376, and the sentence of seven years' rigorous imprisonment and fine under Section 201 remained in force, with their default stipulations. If the appellant was on bail, his bail and surety bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately to serve the remaining sentence. Copies of the judgment were to be sent to the jail and to the trial court, the latter with the record. Vishal's acquittal was not disturbed.

Headnote :- Dowry death — Section 304-B ingredients - The Court affirmed the husband's conviction under Section 304-B IPC because Manju died in circumstances other than normal in her matrimonial home within a year of marriage. The evidence established a demand for Rs 1,50,000 and a vehicle, followed by beating and harassment before her death. The Court did not need to determine the precise cause of death or decide an unframed murder charge; the relatives' unchallenged acquittals remained final.

Medical and forensic evidence — negative poison analysis - The doctor who conducted the autopsy died before trial. The doctor who had merely attended and co-signed the report acknowledged that it recorded no specific symptoms of poisoning, and the FSL detected no poison. Those limits prevented poisoning from being treated as conclusively established. Nevertheless, the absence of a ligature mark contradicted the reported hanging, and the ante-mortem abrasions and burns remained unexplained. The negative viscera result therefore did not require the Court to treat the death as natural.

Sentence — appellate delay - The appeal's fourteen-year pendency did not, by itself, entitle the husband to a reduction of the ten-year rigorous-imprisonment sentence. In the circumstances found proved, the Court affirmed the sentence, cancelled bail and directed him to surrender.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : According to her maternal uncle Kamlesh (PW 2), Manju married Krishna Gopal on 11 May 1999. She died on 14 April 2000 in her matrimonial home. The initial information given by the appellant's father, Bhagwan Das, described a locked room and stated that Manju had been found hanging after the husband and his parents returned from harvesting. Village chowkidar Bhagwan Singh Parihar (PW 1) reported the death; he found Manju dead and a rope hanging from the roof. The inquest, scene examination and body record led to a dowry-death FIR on 15 April, a post-mortem, viscera analysis and a charge under Section 304-B read with Section 34 IPC against the husband, his father, mother and brother.

Post-mortem report Ex. P8 recorded putrefaction, abrasions and burns, but no ligature mark on the neck. Its author, Dr B.K. Shrivastava, died before trial. Dr R.S. Dhengula (PW 11), who had attended and co-signed the report, proved it without defence opposition. He acknowledged that it described no specific symptoms of poisoning, although the original opinion attributed death to shock caused by poison. FSL report Ex. P7 detected no poison. Kamlesh's police statement recorded Manju's report of dowry demands and harassment, but not his claim that he had personally seen her injuries. Kallu (PW 3) conceded that his account of the vehicle demand was partly based on what his wife told him. Usha (PW 4) and Kathule (PW 5) described the demand for money and a vehicle, threats and injuries. Mahendra (PW 7) acknowledged that some of his knowledge came from Usha after Manju's death. No police complaint had been made during Manju's lifetime.

The defence suggested that Manju disliked the marriage, wanted to open a beauty parlour and wished to move to Jhansi, and that she had written the incomplete inland letter Ex. D6. The letter was unsigned and its authorship was not proved. The husband had also not stated in his Section 313 examination that dissatisfaction with the marriage had led Manju to commit suicide. On 16 October 2003, the trial court acquitted the father, mother and brother; those acquittals were not appealed. It convicted the husband under Section 304-B IPC and sentenced him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. In his appeal under Section 374 CrPC, he challenged the findings on unnatural death and dowry cruelty and sought leniency because of the delay.

2. Statutes considered : Section 304-B IPC governed the offence. The Court required proof that the woman died otherwise than under normal circumstances within seven years of marriage and that she had been subjected to dowry-related cruelty or harassment before death; it assessed the evidence against the husband individually. Section 34 IPC formed part of the joint charge, but the other accused had been acquitted and their acquittals were not challenged. Section 302 IPC was outside the case because no murder charge had been framed, so the Court did not determine a homicidal mechanism. Section 374 CrPC provided the appellate route. The husband's Section 313 CrPC examination was relevant because he did not advance the asserted explanation involving facts within his special knowledge. The Court did not treat silence alone as proof of guilt, but found that defence unsupported. The judgment did not expressly interpret Section 113-B of the Evidence Act.

3. Issues : (i) Did the negative FSL report and limits of autopsy proof create doubt that death was otherwise than normal within seven years of marriage, despite injuries and the contradicted hanging account? (ii) Was the dowry demand and cruelty proved against this husband before death, notwithstanding evidentiary omissions, partly indirect relatives' accounts, the unhappy-marriage theory and the co-accused's final acquittals? (iii) Was fourteen years' appellate pendency a reason to reduce the ten-year sentence? The precise mechanism of death and an unframed murder charge were not decided.

4. Ratio / Findings : The Court did not accept the autopsy opinion of poisoning as conclusive. The doctor who conducted the autopsy had died, the co-signing doctor had merely attended, the report recorded no symptoms of poisoning and the FSL found no poison. Even so, the absence of a ligature mark contradicted the report that Manju had been found hanging, and the ante-mortem abrasions and burns remained unexplained. The Court observed that chemical analysis may fail to detect some poisons and that clear surrounding circumstances must still be considered. It treated the initial account as misleading and considered the husband's failure to explain the scene and injuries material in context. It therefore found that Manju had died in circumstances other than normal in her matrimonial home within the statutory period. That conclusion did not determine the precise cause of death or murder: no Section 302 charge had been framed, and the other accused's acquittals were final.

On dowry cruelty, the Court distinguished Kamlesh's omitted claim that he had personally seen injuries from the account in his police statement that Manju had reported the demands and harassment. It considered Usha's evidence of demands for money and a vehicle, Kathule's evidence of threats and injuries, the partly second-hand elements of Kallu's and Mahendra's testimony, and the absence of an earlier FIR. The ante-mortem injuries supported the account of beating. The proposed Jhansi and beauty-parlour explanation and the unsigned, incomplete letter lacked reliable support; the husband had not advanced that explanation in his Section 313 examination. Although the Court cautioned that silence alone could not be used against an accused, it found the asserted explanation unproved when weighed with the remaining evidence. It concluded beyond reasonable doubt that the husband had demanded Rs 1,50,000 and a vehicle and had continued to harass and beat Manju when the demand was not met. He was therefore liable for dowry death. The finding concerned the husband alone and did not disturb the unappealed acquittals.

On sentence, prolonged pendency did not automatically warrant leniency. The Court considered that Manju died within a year of marriage and that the hanging account was misleading, and found no error in the ten-year rigorous-imprisonment sentence. It did not lay down a universal rule that delay is irrelevant in every sentencing case.

5. Relief : The High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the Additional Sessions Judge, Seonda's judgment dated 16 October 2003, which convicted Krishna Gopal under Section 304-B IPC and sentenced him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment. His bail and surety bonds were cancelled immediately, and he was directed to surrender before the trial court to undergo the remaining sentence. The unchallenged acquittals of Bhagwan Das, Devabai and Vikram were not disturbed.

Case Sr. no. (303) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 — Section 143A — discretionary interim compensation - The Court considered Rakesh Ranjan Shrivastava v. State of Jharkhand and Another, Criminal Appeal No. 741/2024, decided 15.03.2024, which treats Section 143A(1) as directory and requires brief reasons addressing the relevant factors. Interim compensation can be awarded only if the complainant makes out a prima facie case. A prima facie plausible defence may justify refusal, and financial distress supported by evidence may also be considered. Once an award is justified, its amount requires a separate assessment of the transaction, the parties' relationship and the other circumstances. The High Court declined to interfere with the direction to pay 8%, while expressly stating that the trial court's order had not been supplied and its actual reasons could not be examined.

Financial distress — bank default — evidentiary sufficiency - A notice under Section 13(2) SARFAESI recording arrears and classification of the account as an NPA established loan default, but did not by itself establish the asserted bankruptcy. The accused produced no material showing bankruptcy or regular payment of instalments before the financial decline he attributed to the Covid period. His unsupported plea therefore did not justify interference with the Section 143A direction; the finding was confined to the material placed before the Court.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant, Ashok Kumar Dwivedi, alleged that after retirement he received approximately ₹22 lakh in benefits and, being on friendly terms with Krishna Kumar Gupta, advanced him ₹15 lakh when Gupta represented that his business urgently required money. According to the complaint, Gupta later issued a cheque for ₹13 lakh and promised the balance of ₹2 lakh in cash. The cheque was dishonoured for insufficient funds. Following statutory notice, Gupta's reply through counsel alleged that a blank signed cheque had been stolen and misused. The complainant then instituted a Section 138 Negotiable Instruments Act case, SC NIA No. 48/2021 before the JMFC at Umaria, and sought interim compensation under Section 143A. These are the complainant's allegations and the accused's pleaded response; the High Court did not adjudicate the ultimate cheque liability.

In answering the interim-compensation request, Gupta said that his finances were near bankruptcy and that he had required a lawyer supplied by the Legal Aid Services Authority. On 17.01.2024 the trial court partly allowed the request and directed payment of 8% of the ₹13 lakh cheque amount. Criminal Revision No. 13/2024 was dismissed by the Third Additional Sessions Judge, Umaria on 09.03.2024. Gupta invoked Section 482 CrPC against the revisional and trial orders. He argued that counsel provided through legal aid was incompetent for not citing Rakesh Ranjan Shrivastava, which recognised discretion under Section 143A, and that his financial condition made even the reduced award inappropriate. He also placed a bank notice under Section 13(2) of the SARFAESI Act before the High Court.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Rakesh Ranjan Shrivastava v. State of Jharkhand and Another, Criminal Appeal No. 741/2024, decided on 15.03.2024, the Supreme Court's paragraph 19 was reproduced and considered. It holds that the Section 143A(1) power is discretionary and directory: 'may' cannot be read as 'shall'. The deciding court must record brief reasons showing consideration of relevant factors. It should prima facie assess the complainant's case and the defence in the accused's reply; an interim direction requires the complainant to make out a prima facie case, while a prima facie plausible defence may justify refusal. Financial distress of the accused may be considered. If compensation is warranted, the court must also assess the amount in light of the nature of the transaction, the parties' relationship and other relevant circumstances; the stated parameters are not exhaustive. The High Court specifically addressed the financial-distress factor from paragraph 19(c)(i), tested the accused's asserted bankruptcy against the material tendered and refused interference. It did not re-examine the trial court's reasons or independently verify every element of that court's discretionary assessment because Gupta had not filed its order. The Supreme Court judgment was delivered six days after the revision and almost two months after the trial order, so the High Court also rejected the allegation that legal-aid counsel's failure to cite it in those earlier courts proved incompetence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 was the basis of the pending cheque-dishonour prosecution. Section 143A governed the complainant's request for interim compensation pending that prosecution and the discretionary 8% direction under challenge; the High Court considered the Supreme Court's construction of its subsection (1) and the need to evaluate both entitlement and amount. Section 482 CrPC supplied the procedural jurisdiction invoked before the High Court following the criminal revision. The bank's notice was issued under Section 13(2) of the Securitisation and Reconstruction of Financial Assets and Enforcement of Security Interest Act, 2002; it was considered as evidence offered for the accused's financial condition, not as a decision about that Act's enforcement or the underlying debt.

4. Issues : (1) Whether the Section 143A interim-compensation direction, affirmed in revision, called for interference when the accused invoked the Supreme Court's discretionary framework, asserted financial distress and had not supplied the trial court's order for scrutiny. (2) Whether a SARFAESI demand notice recording bank-loan default and NPA classification adequately supported his assertion that he had become bankrupt or financially unable to meet the 8% direction. (3) Whether failure of legal-aid counsel to rely on Rakesh Ranjan Shrivastava before the trial and revisional courts could substantiate an allegation of incompetence when that judgment was delivered only after both orders. The merits of the Section 138 complaint and any prospective defamation claim were not issues decided.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court set out the Supreme Court's paragraph 19 parameters rather than treating interim compensation as mandatory. The governing inquiry calls for brief reasons on all relevant factors, the prima facie case made out by the complainant and the defence pleaded by the accused. A plausible defence can weigh against compensation, and financial distress may bear on discretion; if an award is justified, its quantum requires consideration of the transaction and parties' relationship. In applying those principles, the High Court concentrated on Gupta's claimed bankruptcy. The Section 13(2) notice showed a loan of ₹24,90,000 taken on 30.03.2018; it recorded ₹31,81,599 in default and NPA classification as of 08.09.2023. The Court distinguished being in default of a bank loan from proof of bankruptcy. Gupta had not provided a declaration of bankruptcy, material showing pending bankruptcy proceedings or proof that he regularly serviced instalments before the Covid-19 period, although he ascribed deterioration of his business to that period. The material therefore did not persuade the Court that his finances justified interference. This case-specific failure of proof is not a rule that an accused must always obtain formal insolvency adjudication before financial difficulty can be considered.

The High Court expressly acknowledged that the trial court's order had not been placed before it. It therefore could not ascertain whether the trial court had correctly reduced the potential compensation figure from 20% to 8% after exercising its discretion. It nonetheless inferred from the reduced rate that the trial court had appropriately considered the pleadings and merits, and concluded that interference was unwarranted on the record presented. The judgment does not provide the absent trial order's reasons or hold that a reduction alone invariably demonstrates compliance with Section 143A.

On counsel, the Court declined to presume any lawyer incompetent. The trial order preceded Rakesh Ranjan Shrivastava by nearly two months and the revision preceded it by six days. Non-citation of a later decision could not support the accused's repeated allegations against the lawyer provided through legal aid. The Court described the accusations as baseless and gave that lawyer liberty, if he wished, to institute defamation proceedings; it did not adjudicate a defamation cause of action.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The revisional dismissal and the trial court's direction that Gupta pay 8% of the cheque amount as interim compensation therefore stood undisturbed. The High Court granted no exemption on the asserted financial condition and made no final determination of liability under Section 138. It gave counsel liberty to bring a separate defamation proceeding if so advised; it neither ordered such a suit nor decided its merits.

Headnote :- CrPC, Section 438 — duration of anticipatory bail — charge-sheet and trial - The Court applied Sushila Aggarwal v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2020) 5 SCC 1, as explained and followed in Nathu Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2021) 6 SCC 64: anticipatory-bail protection ordinarily is not limited to a fixed period and does not normally expire on summons, framing of charge or filing of charge-sheet. Particular circumstances may justify a reasoned condition limiting the duration of protection or linking it to an event. As the anticipatory bail granted to the applicants on 31.10.2018 had no such limit, it continued to operate notwithstanding their later appearance before the JMFC.

Bail cancellation — consequential release by magistrate — separate challenge - The JMFC's release order dated 11.03.2019 rested solely on the existing High Court anticipatory-bail order, without independently assessing the gravity of the case or the allegations. It did not replace the subsisting protection with a separately reasoned grant of bail. The complainant was therefore not required to challenge the JMFC's order before seeking cancellation of the High Court's grant for the alleged breach of its conditions. The ruling depends on the actual terms of both orders.

CrPC, Sections 362 and 482 — recall of final cancellation order - An application seeking recall could not be used to obtain a substantive review of the High Court's order dated 28.06.2021 cancelling anticipatory bail. After rejecting the alleged merger with the consequential release by the JMFC, the Court held that Section 362 barred the requested alteration and dismissed both connected applications; no question of correcting a clerical error arose.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This common judgment disposed of M.Cr.C. No. 37497/2021, filed by Krishna Kumar Naroliya, Radha Naroliya and Surendra Naroliya, together with M.Cr.C. No. 37509/2021 filed by Mrigendra Naroliya. The Court used the first application's facts for convenience. The applicants faced investigation in Crime No. 568/2018 at Police Station Kotwali, Morena under Sections 498-A, 506 and 34 IPC read with Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. On 31.10.2018 the High Court granted them anticipatory bail in M.Cr.C. No. 41981/2018 subject to conditions, without fixing a termination date. After a charge-sheet was filed, they appeared before the JMFC at Morena on 11.03.2019; the JMFC released them because the High Court had already granted anticipatory bail.

A complainant subsequently sought cancellation under Section 439(2) CrPC, alleging that the applicants had breached the conditions of the earlier protection, committed further offending conduct and threatened the complainant. The High Court cancelled the anticipatory bail by order dated 28.06.2021 in M.Cr.C. No. 41733/2019. The present applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to recall that cancellation. They contended that the earlier Section 438 order had merged into the JMFC's release on 11.03.2019, which they described as regular bail, so the complainant needed to challenge the JMFC order before the High Court could cancel the original anticipatory bail. The State opposed recall. During these proceedings the High Court had requested a police status report. Police reported that arrest warrants could not be executed because the applicants were absent from the given address; their counsel could not explain the failure to surrender after cancellation. The Court treated them as absconding, but the decisive merger and review analysis rested on the orders and governing law, not on an independent adjudication of the underlying domestic-cruelty or threat allegations.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Constitution Bench decision in Sushila Aggarwal and Others v. State (NCT of Delhi) and Another, (2020) 5 SCC 1, was quoted and applied for the normal duration of Section 438 protection. Its rule is that anticipatory bail is not invariably confined to a fixed period or terminated at the charge-sheet, summons or charge stage; it can ordinarily continue to the end of trial. The court granting relief can, for reasons linked to particular facts or the proceeding stage, impose a shorter duration, a condition tied to an event or ordinary conditions under Sections 437(3) and 438(2). The High Court compared that qualified rule with the actual order of 31.10.2018 and found no temporal limit. The quotation also referred to Gurbaksh Singh Sibbia v. State of Punjab, (1980) 2 SCC 565, as the antecedent Constitution Bench authority informing the scope of anticipatory bail; the present Court did not independently elaborate any separate Sibbia proposition beyond the reproduced Sushila Aggarwal discussion.

Nathu Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Others, (2021) 6 SCC 64, was also quoted and applied. It explains the governing approach in Sushila Aggarwal: ordinarily, anticipatory bail continues without a fixed end date, but in special circumstances a court may limit its duration if it gives reasons that a superior court can examine. The High Court relied on that explanation to confirm that the original grant in this case had not expired when the charge-sheet was filed or the applicants appeared before the Magistrate.

3. Statutes considered : Section 438 CrPC governed the initial anticipatory-bail grant, whose duration and effect were central. Sections 437 and 439 were relevant to the applicants' asserted distinction between anticipatory and later regular bail; the judgment recounts a Section 439(2) cancellation application and the JMFC's release, but holds that the latter relied on the existing protection rather than making a fresh merits assessment. Section 482 CrPC supplied the route used to seek recall of the High Court's cancellation order; Section 362 CrPC barred the substantive review the request would entail. IPC Sections 498-A, 506 and 34, with Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, identified the investigated alleged offences but their ingredients were not interpreted or decided. The Court made no final finding of guilt in the underlying crime.

4. Issues : First, did anticipatory bail granted without a specified end date continue after charge-sheet and appearance before the JMFC, or did the Magistrate's subsequent release displace it? Second, where that JMFC order relied only on the earlier High Court grant, was the complainant obliged to challenge it independently before seeking cancellation of the original anticipatory bail? Third, could the applicants use Section 482 to recall the High Court's completed cancellation decision on that merger theory, consistently with Section 362's prohibition on review? The police report concerning their non-surrender furnished context, but the Court did not retry the truth of the original cruelty allegations or the alleged later threats in this recall proceeding.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the JMFC's order dated 11.03.2019 rather than treating its label as decisive. It found that the JMFC had released the applicants because they already held anticipatory bail, without a fresh assessment of the gravity, seriousness or factual merits of the allegations. Under Sushila Aggarwal and Nathu Singh, the original Section 438 order would ordinarily remain effective after the charge-sheet and through trial unless a shorter duration had been imposed for stated reasons. The order dated 31.10.2018 had no time limit. The JMFC's consequential release therefore neither extinguished that protection nor required the complainant first to seek cancellation of the purported independent grant of regular bail. The High Court considered the JMFC's limited approach appropriate in light of the earlier order. This reasoning concerns the particular terms of the orders before the Court, rather than every later bail order a Magistrate might pass.

The Court also noted the police status report that the applicants were not found at their stated address and that arrest warrants remained unexecuted after cancellation. Counsel gave no explanation for their failure to surrender, and the Court described the applicants as absconding. The present proceeding concerned recall, rather than a fresh cancellation adjudication under Section 439(2). As the merger argument failed, recalling the cancellation order dated 28.06.2021 would substantively alter a concluded order. The Court held that Section 362 CrPC prohibited that review, notwithstanding the application under Section 482. It did not consider whether a purely clerical or arithmetical correction would be possible.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both Section 482 applications seeking recall of the order dated 28.06.2021 cancelling anticipatory bail; that cancellation order was not recalled.

Headnote :- Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 — Section 482 — police investigation — prayer to compel charge sheet - A complainant whose FIR remained under investigation sought a High Court direction requiring the police to file a charge sheet. In D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the Supreme Court held that investigation falls within the police's statutory domain and that the High Court's inherent power must be exercised sparingly for the purposes recognised by Section 482. An investigation does not necessarily result in arrest, seizure or a charge sheet; it may properly lead to a conclusion that no case is made out. Applying that rule, the Court refused to supervise the investigation by directing that it result in a charge sheet. The precedent's quoted discussions of discretionary arrest in M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, and notice before judicial directions with serious consequences in Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, formed part of the Supreme Court passage. The Court did not separately decide any question of arrest or of directions against an accused who had not been heard.

Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 — Section 173(1) — pending FIR — completion without unnecessary delay - Refusal to order a charge sheet does not permit an investigating officer to keep an investigation pending indefinitely. Section 173(1) requires completion without unnecessary delay. The officer must determine through investigation whether an offence is made out and take the lawful steps to submit a final report, which may be a closure report or a charge sheet. The Court disposed of the Section 482 petition with a direction to conclude the investigation in Crime No. 870/2017 as early as possible and proceed according to law. It did not prescribe the report's conclusion or a fixed deadline. The applicant could submit a grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, for consideration in accordance with law.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Krishna Kumar Sharma had complained to the police, following which Crime No. 870/2017 was registered at Police Station Kotwali, Guna, District Guna, alleging offences under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471, 120-B, 447 and 34 of the Indian Penal Code. Counsel for the applicant submitted that, despite registration of the FIR, the police had not concluded the investigation. The applicant invoked Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, in M.Cr.C. No. 8407/2019 before the Gwalior Bench and specifically sought a direction to the respondents to file a charge sheet in that crime. The reported order records the State's appearance through the Public Prosecutor but no distinct factual response. The question before the Court was therefore the permissible judicial response to a still-pending police investigation, rather than the truth of the complaint or sufficiency of the proposed prosecution evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was expressly invoked and extensively quoted by the High Court. The quoted Supreme Court decision concerned a High Court order treating witness statements, arrest, seizure, protection of property and filing of a charge sheet as obligatory investigative acts. The Supreme Court explained that police have a statutory duty and discretion to investigate, while courts ordinarily should not guide the agency on the manner of investigation. Depending on the evidence, an investigation may justify a charge sheet or a conclusion that no case is made out; it does not invariably require arrest, seizure or a charge sheet. Section 482 inherent power is to be exercised sparingly, carefully and only to secure the ends of justice, give effect to an order under the Code or prevent abuse of a court's process. The quoted decision also disapproved consequential directions made mechanically without reasons or hearing the persons likely to be affected. The present Court applied the central rule to the particular prayer before it: ordering a charge sheet would amount to supervision and predetermination of the police investigation, so the prayer could not be granted. It did not use the quotation to decide a new question about arrest, seizure or notice on this record.

Within the quoted reasoning in D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Supreme Court reproduced M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on Section 41 CrPC: arrest on cognizable-offence information is discretionary, requires caution because it affects liberty and reputation, and is not a mechanical consequence of an FIR. That reasoning explains why a judicial order cannot presume compulsory investigative steps. The High Court did not separately adjudicate any arrest request in Sharma's case. The quoted Supreme Court judgment also referred to Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, for the principle that a person likely to suffer serious consequences from a judicial investigation direction should receive a reasonable opportunity of hearing. Notice to the accused was part of the higher court's warning about intrusive orders, not an independently decided procedural issue in the present petition.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC supplied the applicant's jurisdictional route. The Supreme Court authority quoted by the Court describes the High Court's inherent powers to give effect to an order under the Code, prevent abuse of a court's process, or otherwise secure the ends of justice, and stresses cautious use. That power did not authorise the requested instruction that the police file a particular report regardless of the investigation's result. Section 173(1) CrPC was separately reproduced and applied: 'Every investigation under this Chapter shall be completed without unnecessary delay.' It imposed a duty of timely completion while leaving the investigating officer to determine whether the case supported a charge sheet or closure report and to take the lawful procedural steps. Section 41 CrPC appears within the quoted M.C. Abraham passage about arrest discretion, not as a provision directly applied to a proposed arrest here. Sections 420, 467, 468, 471, 120-B, 447 and 34 IPC identify the FIR allegations; the Court did not interpret their ingredients or make a finding that any offence was proved.

4. Issues : First, could the High Court, acting on a complainant's Section 482 application while an FIR was under investigation, direct police to file a charge sheet rather than permit an independent assessment and legally appropriate final report? The applicant's concern was the lack of progress, but the relief sought prescribed the prosecution outcome. Second, even though the specific charge-sheet prayer could not be granted, did Section 173(1) require the investigating officer to finish the pending investigation without unnecessary delay, and what direction could preserve that statutory duty without dictating the conclusion? The Court did not determine the allegations' truth, the identity or culpability of an accused, or whether a charge sheet would ultimately be justified.

5. Ratio / Findings : On the first issue, the Court expressly held that the requested charge-sheet direction could not be granted. It adopted D. Venkatasubramaniam's distinction between a police duty to investigate in accordance with law and an impermissible court order specifying the course or outcome of the investigation. An officer may conclude on collected material that a prosecutable case exists, or that it does not. Directing the filing of a charge sheet before the officer reaches that conclusion would put the Court in the role of supervising the investigation. The extensive higher-court quotation described examples of arrest and seizure directions, the discretion under Section 41 reflected in M.C. Abraham, and the hearing problem reflected in Divine Retreat Centre. Those examples fortify the limit on judicial intervention but do not establish that such steps were sought or taken in this case. The Court neither evaluated the IPC allegations nor converted the applicant's assertion of delay into proof that a charge sheet was warranted.

On the second issue, the Court reproduced the mandatory text of Section 173(1) and reasoned that the investigating officer cannot simply leave the investigation pending. The officer must reach a conclusion, on investigation, whether an offence is made out, complete the exercise as early as possible, and file the appropriate final report without delay. The Court expressly identified both a closure report and a charge sheet as possible lawful outcomes. Its direction to conclude the investigation and take necessary steps under law addressed the delay while preserving the agency's fact-finding and reporting responsibility. It imposed no specific calendar deadline and expressed no view on the report's merits.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court finally disposed of the Section 482 application. The prayer to direct filing of a charge sheet was refused. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the investigation in Crime No. 870/2017 as early as possible and take necessary steps in accordance with law, including an appropriate final report following the officer's conclusion, without predetermining closure or prosecution. No fixed deadline, finding on guilt, compulsory arrest or seizure, or order to file a charge sheet was made.

Headnote :- Indian Penal Code, 1860 — Sections 306 and 107 — instigation — continuous conduct depriving deceased of livelihood - Abetment requires a culpable act of instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid and a meaningful link with the suicide, not a bare assertion of harassment. Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, recognises that instigation may be inferred from a continued course of conduct leaving no apparent alternative, while excluding a stray angry utterance without the required intention. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, likewise treats intent and circumstances as decisive without a rigid formula; Sanju alias Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, M. Mohan v. State, AIR 2011 SC 1238, and Amalendu Pal alias Jhantu v. State of W.B., (2010) 1 SCC 707, set out the related requirements of mens rea, active or proximate conduct and more than ordinary harassment. State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, cautions against equating ordinary discord and a victim's unusual sensitivity with abetment. Applying these principles at the charge stage, the Court considered the allegations that Krishnapal and Amar Singh had continuously and forcibly cultivated Bharat Yadav's land and that Babu Singh and Phool Singh had obstructed its irrigation, depriving him of his livelihood before his suicide. It held that there was prima facie material for prosecution, without expressing a final view on proof, causation or property title.

Criminal Procedure Code, 1973 — Sections 228, 397 and 401 — revision against charge under Sections 306/34 IPC - Praveen Pradhan, (2012) 9 SCC 734, and Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, distinguish the tentative charge-stage view from assessing or analysing the record to reach a firm finding of guilt; Amit Kapur also recognises that a coercive course of conduct may support an inference of instigation. On the prosecution allegations of persistent deprivation of the deceased's livelihood, the High Court found prima facie material warranting trial and dismissed the revision against the charge. Its observation that a claimant to possession should use a civil court, rather than forcibly take or control another's land, explained why the alleged forcible conduct was not treated as a trivial property disagreement; it did not determine civil title or conclusively establish the Section 34 element.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Bharat Yadav died by consuming poison. The police charge sheet alleged that Krishnapal Yadav and Amar Singh Yadav had forcibly cultivated land belonging to him, while Babu Singh Yadav and Phool Singh Yadav forcibly prevented him from irrigating the field. Counsel for the four applicants characterised the allegations as insufficient for abetment of suicide even if accepted in full. The High Court described the alleged conduct as continuous interference with the deceased's land and livelihood, rather than a simple episode of beating or harassment. The judgment does not provide a date of suicide, a detailed account of the land dispute, the deceased's statements, particular items of evidence, or a finding on title; the factual propositions are prosecution allegations considered at the charge stage. The 7th Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri, framed charges under Sections 306/34 IPC by order dated 20 September 2021. The applicants filed criminal revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC challenging that order. The State was represented, but the reported judgment does not set out a separate detailed State submission.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court assembled a line of Supreme Court authority to define abetment and assess the alleged continued course of conduct. Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, explains instigation as goading, urging, provoking, inciting or encouraging the act. Express words need not name the ultimate consequence if the conduct supports reasonable certainty of incitement; a sustained course creating circumstances in which the deceased saw no other option can support an inference of instigation. A remark in anger without the intended consequence does not. The Court used this distinction to consider the alleged conduct depriving the deceased of his livelihood rather than treating any harassment as automatically sufficient.

Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, was quoted for the abettor's intention, the three Section 107 modes, rejection of an unintentional angry remark as instigation, and the absence of a rigid formula. Direct proof of a verbal incitement is not indispensable where circumstances support an inference, and a charge-stage assessment remains tentative. Its quotation also mentions State of Punjab v. Iqbal Singh, (1991) 3 SCC 1; Surender v. State of Haryana, (2006) 12 SCC 375; Kishori Lal; and Sonti Rama Krishna v. Sonti Shanti Sree, (2009) 1 SCC 554, as support for the anger/intention proposition. Those nested references are not separately analysed by the present Court. Sanju alias Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, was quoted independently for the statutory alternatives of Section 107 and the necessity of mens rea in instigation.

Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, and M. Mohan v. State represented by the Deputy Superintendent of Police, AIR 2011 SC 1238, were invoked for the mental process of instigation or intentional aid, clear mens rea, and a positive, active or direct act intended to put the person in a position of seeing no option but suicide. The passage attributed to Gangula additionally cautions about attributing undue significance to ordinary domestic discord or a deceased's hypersensitivity. State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, supplies a related caution that ordinary petulance or differences, viewed with a similarly situated person in mind, are not necessarily inducement to suicide. The Court considered these judgments in addressing the applicants' argument that the conduct alleged here was no more than harassment; the present Court distinguished the allegations as continuous deprivation of livelihood, without purporting to make a final evidentiary finding.

Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, was quoted to identify instigation, conspiracy and intentional aid as distinct routes under Section 107, with provocation or persuasion central to instigation; its discussion of Section 109 concerned the relationship of an abetted act and punishment. Amalendu Pal alias Jhantu v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 1 SCC 707, stresses careful factual assessment, direct or indirect incitement, an active role, and the insufficiency of bare harassment absent positive conduct proximate to suicide for conviction. Its quoted analysis also explains intentional aid and facilitation under Explanation 2 to Section 107. The Court cited these safeguards as part of the offence framework, but determined only the sufficiency of allegations for a charge, not the proof required for conviction.

Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, was quoted on the procedural stage: the record should yield a tentative charge-stage view, rather than an evaluation as at trial; instigation may be inferred where an accused's sustained conduct creates a situation of extreme frustration and no apparent alternative. Its passage refers to Chitresh Kumar Chopra and Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618, for the course-of-conduct principle. Ramesh Kumar is a nested reference rather than a separately discussed holding here. These authorities overlap on the need for intentional, connected conduct; their common rule was applied to the unusually persistent alleged interference with the deceased's livelihood from the land. None was cited as a final determination that the applicants in fact abetted the suicide.

3. Statutes considered : Section 306 IPC punishes abetment of a suicide; the Court reproduced its text. Section 107 IPC defines abetment by (first) instigation, (second) conspiracy accompanied by an act or illegal omission in pursuance of it and to accomplish its object, or (third) intentional aid by act or illegal omission. The reproduced explanations cover instigation by wilful misrepresentation or by wilful concealment of a material fact that the person is bound to disclose, whereby the person voluntarily causes or procures, or attempts to cause or procure, the act to be done. They also address conduct before or at the time of commission that is intended to facilitate the act and does facilitate it as a form of aid. The Court's operative analysis concerned alleged continued acts and omissions capable of supporting instigation or involvement, rather than a particular agreement to conspire. Section 34 IPC accompanied the framed charge, but the judgment does not separately construe common intention or allocate a proved common design among the four applicants. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC supplied the revision jurisdiction against the charge order. Section 228 CrPC is discussed in the Praveen Pradhan quotation as the tentative framing-of-charge context; no final conviction standard was being applied to decide guilt. Section 109 IPC appears in quotations from Kishori Lal and Amalendu Pal as background to punishment for an abetted act, not as a separate charge decided here.

4. Issues : The principal issue was whether, taking the prosecution's account of forcible cultivation and obstruction of irrigation at the charge stage, the applicants' alleged course of conduct could prima facie amount to abetment of Bharat Yadav's suicide under Sections 306 and 107 IPC, or whether it showed only a land dispute/harassment insufficient for the charge. A related stage-specific issue was whether the revisional Court should set aside the Sessions Judge's Section 306/34 charge for lack of material, without undertaking the final assessment of intention, causal nexus and evidence reserved for trial. No civil title dispute or final criminal culpability was before the Court for adjudication.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first rejected the applicants' description of the case as a simple harassment or beating allegation. On the prosecution account, Krishnapal and Amar Singh had forcibly cultivated the deceased's land and Babu Singh and Phool Singh had prevented irrigation. This allegedly prevented the deceased from using his field and earning a livelihood; he subsequently consumed poison. Against Section 107's definition and the cited Supreme Court tests, the Court viewed the acts and omissions as continuous in nature and as prima facie supporting the culpable involvement required by Section 306. It did not say that every encroachment or quarrel is abetment, or that suicide alone proves the accused intended it. The material allegation was sustained deprivation of livelihood, which could support an inference from the surrounding circumstances, rather than a single casual insult. The Court observed that anyone claiming title or possession ought to approach a civil court rather than forcibly seize or interfere with another's land. That observation explained why the asserted property claim did not justify treating the alleged conduct as trivial; it did not resolve ownership or treat civil wrongfulness as a substitute for proof of criminal mens rea.

The Court's review was confined to the framing of charges. Praveen Pradhan and Amit Kapur supplied the caution that a provisional inference of instigation may be drawn from the circumstances without finally assessing the record at this stage. The Court found prima facie material warranting prosecution of the applicants, and therefore left the charge order undisturbed. Its conclusion is common to the four named applicants, but its narration preserves their different alleged roles: two cultivated the land and two prevented irrigation. The Court found prima facie material warranting prosecution on the alleged continuous conduct. The conviction-stage safeguards quoted from Gangula Mohan Reddy, M. Mohan and Amalendu Pal remained relevant to the proof required at trial; the present decision sustained the charge rather than recording guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. The order dated 20 September 2021 of the 7th Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri, framing charges under Sections 306/34 IPC against the applicants remained in force and the prosecution could proceed. The High Court granted no discharge or charge alteration, made no final finding that the accused instigated Bharat Yadav's suicide, and did not adjudicate civil title to the land.

Headnote :- Indian Penal Code, 1860 — Sections 299, 300 thirdly and 302 — intentional fatal firearm injury - Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, requires objective proof of the bodily injury and its nature, proof of intention to inflict that particular injury, and objective proof that the injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death; intention to cause death itself need not be separately shown under clause Thirdly. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079/2005, was quoted for the sequence of analysis under Sections 299, 300 and 304 and the different roles of intention and knowledge. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, likewise emphasised ordinary-course sufficiency. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319; Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444; Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799; State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639; and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, identified the circumstances relevant to intention and rejected automatic reduction to Section 304 merely because there was a single injury. The Court affirmed the murder conviction on the basis of the accepted eyewitness account of the appellant firing at Sanju's chest/underarm and the post-mortem proof of devastating, fatal gunshot injuries. The quoted sudden-fight Exception 4 criteria from Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, and Kanhaiyalal were not separately applied to a proved sudden fight on this record.

Evidence — related eyewitnesses — hostile independent witnesses - Jayabalan v. UT of Pondicherry, (2010) 1 SCC 199, and Seeman v. State, (2005) 11 SCC 142, require careful scrutiny for consistency but prohibit rejection merely because a witness is related or interested; the quality of the evidence, rather than the number of witnesses, is decisive. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, rejects automatic discredit from independent witnesses turning hostile, and Appabhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1988 SC 696, distinguishes peripheral discrepancies from damage to the core case. The Court found PW5 and PW9, brothers of the deceased, and PW8, a relative by marriage, credible on the appellant's firing despite minor omissions and the hostility of shopkeepers PW2 and PW3. Jodhan's nested discussion of the enhanced weight of an injured eyewitness was not applied to these witnesses as injured persons.

Evidence — medical and ocular proof — firearm injuries - The eyewitness identification was tested against the doctor's findings of right-arm and right-chest/underarm firearm wounds, broken ribs, destructive internal injury, bleeding and recovered bullet particles. The Court held the fatal medical account compatible with the material eyewitness version notwithstanding variations about the second shot and distances, and affirmed the Section 302 conviction and life sentence. The appellant's acquittal on separate Arms Act charges was not disturbed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Kuldeep Singh Rajawat appealed his conviction under Section 302 IPC and sentence of life imprisonment with a fine of Rs 2,000 and a default stipulation imposed on 13 May 2011 by the First Additional Sessions Judge to the Court of Special Judge and First Additional Sessions Judge, Bhind, in Sessions Trial No. 164/2007. The prosecution alleged prior enmity, including an earlier firing case pending against Kuldeep and juvenile co-accused Mauni. On 1 May 2007 at about 11 a.m., Sanju alias Shyamsunder was near Lahar Chaurah; the account placed Kuldeep, Mauni and Toni arriving by motorcycle and taking Sanju towards an empty shop. The prosecution attributed a shot to Kuldeep and another to Mauni. Pramod Kumar Sharma (PW9), the deceased's brother, informed police; Dehati Nalishi was recorded at about 11:20 a.m. and Crime No. 127/2007 at Police Station Dehat, Bhind, at about 11:45 a.m.

Police prepared scene records, seized soil and a 315-bore bullet, and arranged the post-mortem. Dr Ravindra Choudhary (PW4) found firearm injuries involving the right arm and right chest/underarm, fractured ribs, severe damage to internal organs, and recovered bullet particles. A country-made firearm and shell were seized from juvenile co-accused Mauni on 14 May 2007; the reported forensic opinion concerned that gun's working condition and bullet/cloth traces. The prosecution examined eleven witnesses. Independent shopkeepers Guddu Batham (PW2) and Dwarika Prasad (PW3) did not support its case. PW5 Brajendra and PW9 Pramod were brothers of the deceased; PW8 Ramesh was related by marriage. The appellant denied firing, asserted that the earlier case was false, and claimed he was at a relative's marriage in Village Baknasa, but called no defence witness. He was acquitted of the charges under Sections 25/27 and 30 of the Arms Act for lack of evidence and was convicted of murder. On appeal, he attacked the related witnesses as interested or chance witnesses, alleged omissions and contradiction with Section 161 CrPC statements and medical findings, and disputed proof that he fired a 315-bore weapon. The State maintained guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was the principal authority on clause Thirdly. The judgment reproduces its four-stage analysis: objectively establish the injury and its nature; prove intention to inflict the very injury found, rather than an accident or a different intended injury; and determine objectively whether that injury is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The prosecution bears the burden throughout. Neither a separate intention to cause death nor subjective knowledge that the injury was fatal is essential once the specified elements are proved. The Court used the framework with the eyewitness identification and doctor's evidence of fatal chest and internal damage to affirm Section 302.

Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals (Cri.) 1078–1079/2005, was quoted for the route from Section 299 culpable homicide through Section 300 clauses and exceptions to Section 302 murder or Section 304 Parts I/II. Its passage distinguished intention and knowledge, including the special knowledge in Section 300 Secondly. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, addressed the intentional infliction of an injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death under Section 300 Thirdly. Those authorities supplied the classification framework rather than a separate finding that a Section 300 exception applied.

The Court also quoted multiple Supreme Court decisions on why a single blow does not automatically determine the offence and on how intention may be inferred. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, explained that one blow may yield Sections 302, 304 or 326 depending on weapon, vital site, manner and circumstances. Pulicherla Nagaraju alias Nagaraja v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, listed non-exhaustive factors such as weapon, vital target, force, premeditation, enmity, sudden quarrel and number of blows, warning against both unwarranted reduction and unwarranted murder classification. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred intention from a crowbar, chosen vital part and injury force. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, quoted Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram to reject an automatic Section 304 outcome for a single blow and recounted Exception 4 criteria. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, similarly weighed circumstances and quoted State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh on intended injury versus seriousness. These examples support contextual examination of intention; the prosecution here described two firing acts, so their single-blow facts were not findings about this episode. The nested authorities were quoted through the named decisions rather than separately factually analysed. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, supplied the four requirements for Section 300 Exception 4: no premeditation, a sudden mutual fight with the person killed, heat of passion, and no undue advantage or cruel/unusual conduct. The Court did not find a sudden fight or expressly apply that exception to convert the present conviction.

For witness credibility, Jayabalan v. UT of Pondicherry, (2010) 1 SCC 199, rejects both pedantic suspicion and uncritical acceptance of an interested witness, requiring a consistency assessment. Seeman v. State, (2005) 11 SCC 142, holds that relationship or sole-witness status alone is no reason to discard otherwise credible evidence; non-production of one named independent witness does not itself negate it. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, rejects a rule that hostile independent witnesses automatically discredit related witnesses. Its extended quotation then discusses enhanced reliability of an injured witness through Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259, with further nested citations; the present PW5, PW8 and PW9 were not said to be injured, so that limb was not applied as a factual finding. Appabhai v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1988 SC 696, was invoked to assess non-examination or non-support of independent witnesses and to distinguish ordinary observation or memory discrepancies from contradictions that strike at the prosecution's foundation. The High Court used these authorities to credit the core of three related witnesses' testimony despite hostile shopkeepers and minor differences.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 299 and 300 IPC distinguish culpable homicide, murder and the exceptions, and Section 302 prescribes punishment for murder. The Court focused on Section 300 Thirdly: intentional infliction of the specific bodily injury, sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. It discussed intention versus knowledge and Section 304 Part I/II through quoted authority, but affirmed murder rather than altering the conviction. Exception 4's sudden-fight elements were reproduced; no separate factual satisfaction of that exception appears in the reasoning. Section 34 appeared in the registered FIR's formulation and the prosecution's initial account; the appellant's conviction considered here was Section 302. Sections 25/27 and 30 of the Arms Act were charged, but he was acquitted on those counts and the appeal did not reverse that acquittal. Section 161 CrPC statements formed part of the appellant's alleged contradiction argument, not a separately decided admissibility question. The appeal challenged the trial court's final conviction and life sentence.

4. Issues : First, did credible ocular, medical and surrounding evidence prove beyond reasonable doubt that Kuldeep intentionally inflicted the fatal firearm injury on Sanju, attracting Section 300 Thirdly and Section 302 rather than a lesser homicide classification? This required distinguishing intent to inflict the particular injury from a separate intent to kill and evaluating the injury's objective ordinary-course sufficiency. Second, could the related eyewitnesses' evidence be relied on despite asserted chance presence, differences from early statements, and the hostility of two independent shopkeepers? Third, did the medical and forensic record materially conflict with, or corroborate, the core eyewitness account of firearm death and the appellant's participation? The Court quoted sudden-fight and single-blow doctrines, but no developed defence case of a proved mutual sudden fight or an application of Exception 4 appears in the ultimate reasoning.

5. Ratio / Findings : On homicide, the Court read Sections 299 and 300 in the Virsa Singh framework. Although the authorities discussed various forms of intention, knowledge, a single blow and Exception 4, the Court applied the law to an intentionally fired shot at a vital area, with post-mortem proof of severe chest and organ damage sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course. PW9 attributed the first shot to Kuldeep; PW8 and PW5 materially supported the account. PW4's findings included right arm and chest injuries, broken ribs and extensive internal damage. Prior enmity was part of the prosecution setting and could support motive, but the conviction rested on credited direct evidence and medical support. The Court rejected the appellant's challenge and agreed with the trial judge that Section 302 was proved beyond reasonable doubt.

On witness credibility, the Court individually identified PW5 and PW9 as the deceased's brothers and PW8 as a relative by marriage. It accepted their presence and core identification of Kuldeep firing near the shop. It regarded omissions and differences in description or the Dehati Nalishi as minor, not fatal to their materially consistent account. Jayabalan and Seeman required caution but forbade rejection solely for relationship; Jodhan established that hostile independent witnesses did not automatically discredit the related witnesses; Appabhai allowed peripheral variation without discarding the credible substance of the evidence. PW2 and PW3's lack of support was considered, but the Court did not rely on a rule that every hostile witness had been intimidated as a proved fact. The Court also observed generally that witnesses may withhold testimony through fear of accused persons. PW7 was described as hearsay and unsupportive; he was not transformed into an eyewitness. The alibi was stated by the appellant without supporting defence testimony and did not create a reasonable doubt in the Court's view.

On physical proof, the Court found PW4's post-mortem consistent with firearm injuries and death by the resulting internal damage and bleeding. It considered variations in distances, knowledge of who fired the second shot, and between spot-map Exhibits P6 and P11, but accepted the investigating officer's description of the body position and did not find the variations destructive of the main case. A forensic report on a seized 315-bore gun and bullet/garment material appeared in the investigation narrative; the judgment did not clearly make a unique ballistic identification of a firearm recovered from Kuldeep. The Court did not set aside the separate acquittal under the Arms Act. The death and sufficiency of injury were supported by the medical evidence, and the identification of the appellant as the person who fired was supported by the eyewitnesses whom the Court believed, read with the consistent medical evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the 13 May 2011 conviction under Section 302 IPC and life imprisonment, the Rs 2,000 fine and the trial court's default stipulation. It ordered that Kuldeep, in Central Jail, Gwalior, be informed of the appeal result through the concerned Jail Superintendent and that the trial court record be returned with a certified copy for information and compliance. The judgment did not disturb the earlier acquittal on Arms Act counts or alter the murder conviction to Section 304. Kuldeep Singh Rajawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 502/2011, 13/12/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 — Section 311 — recall for cross-examination — essentiality, bona fides and delay - Rajaram Prasad Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2013) 14 SCC 461, treats the wide recall power as directed to evidence essential for a just decision, exercised judicially and cautiously. Its discussion includes the fair-opportunity principle in P. Sanjeeva Rao v. State of A.P., (2012) 7 SCC 56; delay alone is not an absolute bar. Ratanlal v. Prahlad Jat, (2017) 9 SCC 340, makes explanation of delay a material factor. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Kumar Yadav, (2016) 2 SCC

402, requires tangible reasons, rather than a bare assertion of the need for a fair trial, and regard to witness hardship; State of Haryana v. Ram Mehar, (2016) 8 SCC 762, balances accused, victim and society and rejects indiscriminate magnanimity. In the pending Prevention of Corruption Act trial, defence counsel left PW5 Ramgopal's cross-examination midway after an unparticularised allegation of inaccurate recording. The accused's later motion did not identify any question, actual answer and divergent dictated answer, nor adequately explain the interval from closure on 26 May 2017 to the application on 9 January 2018. The Court found no bona fide basis showing that recall was essential and affirmed refusal under Section 311.

Fair trial — right to counsel — existing advocate's withdrawal during cross-examination - Mohd. Ajmal Amir Kasab v. State of Maharashtra, (2012) 9 SCC 1, requires appointment of a lawyer for an unrepresented accused at the commencement of trial unless the accused clearly makes an informed choice to defend himself. The applicant here had counsel; when counsel left, the trial judge offered the accused a chance to cross-examine, but he insisted upon the same lawyer. The judge was not bound to impose another amicus against that choice. The later offer to counsel to put questions in question-and-answer form was also recorded as refused. This ruling is confined to the opportunities and refusals found on the record, not a general exemption from providing representation.

Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 — Section 309 — witness present — day-to-day examination and special reasons for adjournment - Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2015) 3 SCC 220, Akil v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 7 SCC 125, State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh, (2001) 4 SCC 667, Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334, Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668, Gurnaib Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 7 SCC 108, and Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241, were considered for continuous examination, recorded exceptional reasons, and the prejudice to witnesses and justice from routine delay. Where PW5 was present and counsel voluntarily ceased questioning without a substantiated obstacle, the Court held that the trial court need not adjourn indefinitely and could close that opportunity in the circumstances, subject to the statutory safeguards.

Advocate's court duty — challenge to deposition record — contemporaneous particulars - R.K. Anand v. Delhi High Court, (2009) 8 SCC 106, Amit Chanchal Jha v. High Court of Delhi, (2015) 13 SCC 288, P.D. Gupta v. Ram Murti, (1997) 7 SCC 147, D.P. Chadhu v. Triyugi Narain Mishra, (2001) 2 SCC 221, and O.P. Sharma v. High Court of Punjab and Haryana, (2011) 6 SCC 86, explained the ethical principles governing counsel's duty to court, witness and client. An assertion that the judge inaccurately dictated an answer required identification of a specific discrepancy between the question, answer and recorded text and timely resort to the trial court. The applicant supplied neither; the late affidavit denying counsel's return did not overcome the order sheet, whose sequence was consistent with the deposition ending first. The Court confined this assessment to the recall application and did not decide the separate contempt proceeding.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Kuldeep Singh Tomar was on trial in Special Sessions Trial No. 11/2015 before the First Additional Sessions Judge/Special Judge (Prevention of Corruption Act), Morena, on an alleged offence under Section 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. The reported judgment does not narrate the trap allegation's merits. Ramgopal (PW5) appeared for examination on 26 May 2017. His cross-examination began with questions about other traps. Defence counsel Harswaroop Maheshwari objected that the judge was dictating or recording an answer differently from the witness's words and left the courtroom before cross-examination was completed. The reproduced deposition sheet records the judge's and witness's positions about the recording, an opportunity offered to the accused, his insistence that only his advocate would question the witness, and closure of the remaining cross-examination. The trial court's order sheet also recorded counsel's later return and refusal of an offer to continue in question-and-answer form. The Court noted a separate motion for contempt concerning counsel's conduct and expressly did not decide it.

The accused did not promptly apply to correct a particular deposition entry or challenge the alleged misrecording. On 9 January 2018 he moved under Section 311 CrPC to recall PW5, saying absence of counsel had prevented complete cross-examination and that further questioning was necessary for the defence. The Special Judge rejected the motion on 19 January 2018, describing counsel's voluntary departure and treating reconsideration of 26 May 2017 as impermissible review. The accused invoked

Section 482 CrPC before the High Court. He alleged that counsel could not continue because the witness's answers were being recorded inaccurately, argued that the judge should have supplied an amicus if his advocate behaved improperly, and submitted that belated filing alone cannot defeat Section 311. He also challenged the order-sheet statement that counsel returned and declined the question-and-answer offer; during the High Court proceeding, affidavits from counsel and an associate, filed on 4 March 2018, denied aspects of that record. The State maintained that adequate opportunity had been given, no specific inaccurate question and answer had been identified, and the accused could not use the consequences of counsel's conduct to demand recall.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ratanlal v. Prahlad Jat, (2017) 9 SCC 340, was expressly quoted for the relevance of explaining delay in a Section 311 application. The High Court used it to assess the unexplained passage between 26 May 2017 and 9 January 2018, while not announcing a limitation period. The accused cited P. Sanjeeva Rao v. State of A.P., (2012) 7 SCC 56, for the proposition that late recall may still be required for a fair defence. The High Court later reproduced its reasoning within Rajaram Prasad Yadav: even a four-year delay and possible prosecution prejudice did not prevent the grant of a necessary opportunity in that case. It treated fair opportunity as important but found this applicant's self-created and unexplained situation different. Counsel also cited Md. Sukur Ali v. State of Assam, (2011) 4 SCC 729, on defence representation; the judgment does not quote or independently analyse that decision, instead deciding the amicus point through the recorded choice and Kasab. The State cited Umar Mohammad v. State of Rajasthan and Nisar Khan v. State of Uttaranchal, but the Court did not separately analyse either decision.

R.K. Anand v. Delhi High Court, (2009) 8 SCC 106, was extensively quoted for the role of advocates and professional standards as integral to justice. Amit Chanchal Jha v. High Court of Delhi, (2015) 13 SCC 288, repeated those concerns and the dignity of the profession; its quotation included further authorities on professional norms. P.D. Gupta v. Ram Murti, (1997) 7 SCC 147, required fairness by counsel to client, court and opposite party. D.P. Chadhu v. Triyugi Narain Mishra, (2001) 2 SCC 221, balanced fearless advocacy with propriety and court assistance. O.P. Sharma v. High Court of Punjab and Haryana, (2011) 6 SCC 86, recognised advocacy's expression rights alongside decorum and the prohibition on unfounded allegations. The High Court relied on this body of principle only to examine whether leaving an active cross-examination on an unparticularised accusation was a justifiable cause; it withheld any determination of the separate contempt reference. Nested professional-conduct citations, including Pritam Pal, Sanjiv Datta, Bar Council of Maharashtra v. M.V. Dabholkar, R.D. Saxena and D.C. Saxena, occur in the quoted Supreme Court extracts without an individual factual application by this Court.

Mohd. Ajmal Amir Kasab v. State of Maharashtra, (2012) 9 SCC 1, was quoted on the court's absolute duty at trial commencement to provide counsel to an unrepresented accused unless a clear informed decision to defend personally is made. The High Court distinguished the present circumstances: the accused already had a lawyer and, after his departure, specifically insisted that cross-examination be done by that lawyer rather than accepting the offered alternative. The initial representation duty did not require the appointment of a different amicus against that choice here. Kasab's quotation mentions Suk Das as its source; that case was not separately applied.

Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2015) 3 SCC 220, was invoked against routine adjournments in criminal trials, especially deferral of cross-examination once the witness is present. Akil v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 7 SCC 125, reproduced procedural reminders about day-to-day witness examination. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241, Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668, and Gurnaib Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 7 SCC 108, explained public justice and the risk of delay, fading memory or witness pressure. State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh, (2001) 4 SCC 667, explained Section 309's requirement of continued examination and its exception permitting adjournment for special reasons recorded in writing when a witness is in attendance. Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334, criticised deferral of cross-examination without compelling reason and quoted Shambhu Nath and N.G. Dastane on counsel's obligation not to inconvenience witnesses. Vinod Kumar's own extensive quotation also refers to Gurnaib, Swaran and Shambhu Nath; the Court applied these overlapping statements as part of the principle requiring day-to-day examination. They were not independent findings of witness tampering here.

Rajaram Prasad Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2013) 14 SCC 461, was reproduced at length on Section 311, read with Section 138 of the Evidence Act. It explained the broad scope of recall and the controlling requirement that the evidence be essential to a just decision. Recall may correct genuine omissions and secure truth at any stage, but the power is exercised judicially with caution, without using additional evidence to fill a lacuna unfairly, to disguise a retrial or to cause serious prejudice, and with an opportunity of rebuttal. The quoted survey included Jamatraj Kewalji Govani, Mohanlal Shamji Soni, Raj Deo Sharma (2), UT of Dadra and Nagar Haveli v. Fatehsinh Mohansinh Chauhan, Iddar v. Aabida, P. Sanjeeva Rao, Sk. Jumman and Natasha Singh; the material principle they shared and the qualification protecting a fair defence informed this framework, while the High Court did not resolve their separate factual settings. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Kumar Yadav, (2016) 2 SCC 402, required specific tangible reasons why fair trial would fail without recall and consideration of witness harassment and delay; blanket assertion was insufficient. State of Haryana v. Ram Mehar, (2016) 8 SCC 762, cautioned that a liberal or magnanimous approach is no automatic rule and that fair trial balances accused, prosecution, victim and society. The High Court applied these limits on recall because the applicant could identify no actual recording discrepancy or circumstance beyond counsel's control necessitating PW5's return.

3. Statutes considered : Section 311 CrPC empowers the court at any stage to summon, examine, recall or re-examine a witness; where the evidence appears essential to the just decision, the court has a duty to act, subject to judicial assessment of necessity and fairness. Section 138 of the Indian Evidence Act governs the order of examination and re-examination, discussed in Rajaram Prasad Yadav. Section 309(1) CrPC requires day-to-day continuation after witness examination begins unless adjournment beyond the following day is necessary for recorded reasons. Section 309(2) and its provisos impose special written reasons where witnesses are present and address a party or pleader unwilling to examine or cross-examine a witness present in court. The Court used this framework to evaluate the demand to defer PW5's cross-examination. Section 482 CrPC supplied the High Court's inherent-power procedural route against the 19 January 2018 order. The Prevention of Corruption Act Sections 13(1)(d) and 13(2) identify the pending trial; their offence elements and the trap merits were not adjudicated. Constitutional legal-representation and fair-trial principles arose through Kasab and the recall authorities, but the Court did not decide a separate constitutional challenge to the corruption charge.

4. Issues : The central question was whether PW5's recall under Section 311 was essential for a just trial when defence counsel had voluntarily abandoned cross-examination after alleging that the trial judge misrecorded answers, without specifying any particular question, actual answer and recorded divergence, and when the application came more than seven months after closure. A distinct question was whether the judge should have appointed another lawyer or adjourned after counsel left despite the accused's expressed insistence on the same advocate and PW5's presence. The Court also had to resolve whether the belated affidavits and absence of a return notation in the deposition sheet displaced the 26 May 2017 order sheet recording counsel's later return and refusal. It expressly excluded the separate contempt matter from decision. The trial's corruption allegations and PW5's ultimate truthfulness were not being decided.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court inspected the deposition sheet and noted that the cross-examination had barely begun, initially addressing other traps rather than much of the trap in issue. Even assuming that counsel was genuinely dissatisfied with the dictation, the accused did not present an immediate objection or application specifying what was asked, answered and incorrectly recorded. Neither the subsequent Section 311 motion, which attributed incomplete questioning merely to counsel's absence, nor the Section 482 application supplied those particulars. No factual basis was therefore established to justify counsel's departure on the ground of misrecording. The passage from closure on 26 May 2017 to the 9 January 2018 motion mattered as part of the factual assessment; the Court did not hold that every delayed Section 311 motion fails. The wide power explained in Rajaram Prasad Yadav, the latitude for a fair defence in P. Sanjeeva Rao, the requirement of tangible reasons in Shiv Kumar Yadav and the balanced approach to fairness in Ram Mehar required a bona fide explanation of why PW5's further questioning was essential. The Court found none; the applicant could not create the difficulty through his side's conduct and then invoke an unqualified interest of justice. The trial judge's stated concern about impermissible review was not converted into a categorical bar on recall; the High Court upheld refusal on its fuller Section 311 and factual reasoning.

On representation, the Court distinguished Kasab's obligation to supply counsel at the outset of trial from a mid-hearing dispute where counsel of choice was already representing the accused. The deposition and order-sheet record showed an offered opportunity to the accused, who said the same lawyer would cross-examine; after counsel returned, the order sheet recorded an offer to proceed in question-and-answer form and refusal. In that setting the court was not required to appoint a different amicus contrary to the expressed choice. This depended on the recorded opportunity and response, not on an assumption that an unrepresented accused can routinely be deprived of legal aid. Section 309 made continuation with a witness in attendance the rule and required special written reasons for postponement. The unsubstantiated objection and refusal furnished no such reason; the cited Supreme Court cases explained harm to witnesses and justice from deferring cross-examination at counsel's convenience.

On the challenged record, the fact that counsel's return was not in the deposition sheet did not establish that the order sheet was false: the deposition was closed before the later order-sheet writing. The original Section 311 application and Section 482 petition did not contain the denial raised later; the affidavit supplied during the High Court case was treated as an afterthought. The Court rejected the factual attack on the order sheet, but confined the professional-conduct discussion to the need for recall. Its review of the advocates' duties under R.K. Anand and related cases did not itself decide contempt or discipline. PW5's evidence remained for the trial court to assess on its merits; the High Court did not endorse the prosecution's corruption allegation.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application and affirmed the Special Judge's 19 January 2018 refusal to recall PW5 under Section 311 CrPC in Special Sessions Trial No. 11/2015. The closure of the remaining cross-examination was left undisturbed. A copy of the order was directed to be sent immediately to the trial court. No finding on the pending corruption charge or on the separately initiated contempt proceedings was made.

Kuldeep Singh Tomar v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 5816/2018, 08/03/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Indian Penal Code, 1860 — Sections 52, 191 and 192 — false affidavit in court — good faith and contempt - Good faith under Section 52 requires due care and attention. Pradeep Kumar Tiwari admitted signing a blank sheet and the notarial register without reading or adopting the contents of the affidavit later filed to assert that Dilip Pandey executed a disputed vakalatnama, although he knew it would be used in the High Court. The unchallenged handwriting opinion found the questioned client signature was not Dilip's. Baban Singh v. Jagdish Singh, AIR 1967 SC 68, distinguishes sworn false evidence or a document fabricated for a judicial proceeding under IPC Sections 191–192 from a mere declaration under Section 199. Muthu Karuppan v. Parithi Ilamvazhuthi, (2011) 5 SCC 496, requires a prima facie case of deliberate falsehood on a matter of substance before prosecution in the interests of justice. Dhananjay Sharma v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 SCC 757, and Chandra Shashi v. Anil Kumar Verma, (1995) 1 SCC 421, explain that a knowingly false affidavit or fabricated filing can obstruct justice and amount to criminal contempt; the element of deceit matters. Those principles were reproduced through the High Court's Kamla Sharma decision and applied to Pradeep's admitted conduct. The Court rejected his reliance on trust in his employer as a good-faith explanation under Section 52, held him guilty of contempt, and accepted apology with a warning and Rs 15,000 costs subject to default consequences.

Court representation — vakalatnama authenticity — unauthorised appearance - A litigant's authority to an advocate depends on a genuine vakalatnama. Dilip Pandey denied the signature on the 11 January 2023 filing. The State examiner's opinion that it was not his signature remained unchallenged by advocate S.K. Pathak. The Court held his appearance for Dilip unauthorised, barred further appearance for that respondent and rejected a withdrawal request that still asserted the signature's authenticity. It accepted Pathak's apology conditionally with warning and Rs 15,000 costs. The order did not find that he personally made the forged signature.

M.P. High Court Rules — Chapter 9 Rule 13 — affidavit oath and notary's verification - The oath officer must ascertain that the affiant has read and understood the document; where it is read, translated or explained, the required certification is made, and affidavits meeting the specified conditions must be impounded under the rule. Pradeep's account of signing blank material and the absence of an endorsement that he understood the later affidavit led the Court to find apparent notarial dereliction. United India Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Arti Bano, 2022 (2) Gau LR 223 (Gauhati High Court), was considered for the solemn nature of attestation and notarial-register safeguards. The affidavit was sealed and the SP, Satna, directed to secure expert comparison of notary Ramdas Sharma's signature with specimen signatures; further action was reserved pending that report. The separate reported death of Dharmesh Chaturvedi was also sent for verification, not accepted as finally established.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Miscellaneous Petition No. 4375/2022, respondent No. 3 Dilip Pandey filed IA No. 16531/2023 after discovering that several advocates were shown as acting for him under a vakalatnama filed on 11 January 2023. He denied signing it and alleged forgery; he said he had also complained to police without action. The Court treated the allegation seriously on 12 February 2024, sealed the original filing in the Registry and directed the Superintendent of Police, Satna, to verify the signature, with expert photography and comparison against admitted/specimen signatures. An application to withdraw the authority for respondents 2, 3 and 7 followed on 15 February, and other affidavits were filed claiming to have witnessed Dilip's signature. The State handwriting expert reported on 11 March that the questioned signature had not been made by the person whose admitted signatures were compared. On 21 March the Court issued show-cause notices to Pradeep Kumar Tiwari and Dharmesh Chaturvedi concerning affidavits supporting the disputed authority.

A senior advocate later stated that Dharmesh had died in a road accident on 15 April 2024; the Court had no verification report and directed SP, Satna, to confirm the death with FIR and post-mortem material by 7 November. It recorded an earlier postal endorsement from 8 April but did not infer whether the later death claim was true. Pradeep responded that he was Dharmesh's employee, had signed a blank sheet and notary register on instructions, had not read or understood the final affidavit, and had trusted his employer. He apologised. Advocate S.K. Pathak acknowledged that Dilip had complained and did not challenge the expert's signature opinion, though his withdrawal request continued to assert that Dharmesh told him the signature was genuine. The Court considered Pradeep's false affidavit, Pathak's authority and conduct, and the notarial act of Ramdas Sharma. This order disposed of the interlocutory application with several consequential directions; it did not decide the underlying petition's substantive merits.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reproduced substantial portions of its earlier Kamla Sharma and Ors v. Sukhdevlal and Ors, M.Cr.C. 8770/2016, decided 18 April 2022, to explain the character of an affidavit as evidence given on oath and the response to deliberate falsehood. Within that earlier decision, Baban Singh v. Jagdish Singh, AIR 1967 SC 68, explains why knowingly false sworn affidavits tendered in a judicial proceeding may constitute giving or fabricating false evidence under IPC Sections 191 or 192, depending on the act and purpose, rather than merely a Section 199 declaration. The present Court used that distinction in treating the admitted affidavit as a serious court filing; it did not initiate or conclude an IPC prosecution in this order. The Kamla Sharma quotation also includes the definitional provisions of the General Clauses Act and Oaths Act.

Dalip Singh v. State of U.P., (2010) 2 SCC 114, was quoted within Kamla Sharma on the denial of judicial relief to litigants who pollute proceedings with falsehood. Muthu Karuppan, Commissioner of Police, Chennai v. Parithi Ilamvazhuthi, (2011) 5 SCC 496, requires a prima facie case of deliberate falsehood on a matter of substance and a reasonable foundation before prosecution is ordered as expedient in the interests of justice. The Court relied on these principles when assessing the admitted blank-sheet affidavit and handwriting report. Dhananjay Sharma v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 SCC 757, sets out the obstruction/interference limb of Section 2(c) of the Contempt of Courts Act for false affidavits intended to pervert judicial process. Chandra Shashi v. Anil Kumar Verma, (1995) 1 SCC 421, explains that fabricated material filed with deceit or knowledge can interfere with the administration of justice. Rita Markandey v. Surjit Singh Arora, (1996) 6 SCC 14, was mentioned in Kamla Sharma as relying on Dhananjay Sharma, with no independent factual exposition. The present Court adopted the solemnity and deliberate falsehood analysis while granting a conditional apology and costs, without separately convicting or sentencing anyone under the IPC. Iqbal Singh Marwah and State of H.P. v. Suresh Kumar Verma appear in counsel submissions quoted from Kamla Sharma and were not independently decided here; the controversy under Section 195 CrPC about a document in the custody of the court belonged to that earlier case, not this application.

For notarial safeguards, the Court directly quoted United India Insurance Co. Ltd. v. Arti Bano, 2022 (2) Gau LR 223 (Gauhati High Court). That decision treats an affidavit as a voluntary sworn declaration, not a typed formality; the oath officer must observe the statutory/rule steps and keep a proper register, because courts act on such evidence. The present Court applied the safeguards it described alongside Chapter 9 Rule 13 of the M.P. High Court Rules to Pradeep's explanation and the absence of an understanding endorsement. It did not conclusively decide the authenticity of the notary's own signature.

3. Statutes considered : Section 52 IPC defines good faith negatively: an act or belief without due care and attention is not in good faith. The Court applied it to reject Pradeep's assertion that reliance on his employer excused signing an affidavit meant for court without reading it. The reproduced Kamla Sharma discussion identifies IPC Sections 24–25 on dishonest/fraudulent intent, Sections 191–193 on false evidence, fabrication and punishment, and the distinct treatment of a declaration under Section 199. Section 2(c) of the Contempt of Courts Act, 1971, covers conduct interfering or tending to interfere with judicial proceedings or administration of justice, with knowledge/deceit important in the cited cases. Section 3(3) General Clauses Act and Sections 3–4 Oaths Act are reproduced in the earlier judgment to explain oath and affidavit. Chapter 9 Rule 13 of the M.P. High Court Rules is directly applied to the oath officer's inquiry into reading and understanding, explanation and certification where required, and impounding specified suspect affidavits. The Gauhati decision discusses Oaths Act Section 3, CPC Section 139, Notaries Act Section 8(e) and Notaries Rules Rule 11(2); those are contextual to proper attestation, not independent charges here. No substantive issue under the underlying miscellaneous petition was determined.

4. Issues : First, did Pradeep's admitted signing of blank material and the later affidavit filed to prove the disputed vakalatnama amount to an innocent good-faith mistake, or to a false sworn filing interfering with the Court's work, and what response was appropriate to his apology? Second, did the handwriting finding and Pathak's stance leave valid authority for Pathak to appear for Dilip, or justify the qualified withdrawal and continued representation? Third, had the notary complied with Rule 13's inquiry into the affiant's understanding, and what investigation of the notary's signature was needed before final further action? The Court also directed verification of Dharmesh's reported death, which remained an unproved factual matter, not a finding of criminal liability.

5. Ratio / Findings : Pradeep admitted that he signed a blank sheet and notarial register, did not know the resulting affidavit's contents, and knew it was being placed before the High Court. The affidavit's assertion that Dilip signed the vakalatnama in the affiants' presence was contradicted by the handwriting report. The Court applied Section 52's due-care requirement and rejected employer trust, low education and absence of reading as good faith. A sworn affidavit intended to influence the Court cannot be treated as a worthless piece of paper. Applying the principles protecting the administration of justice reproduced from Kamla Sharma and the Supreme Court authorities quoted in it, the Court held Pradeep guilty of contempt for the false affidavit. The result was a warning and conditional acceptance of apology with Rs 15,000 costs, not a separately pronounced conviction for IPC false evidence. It also observed that Pathak filed and relied on that affidavit, but accepted his apology and imposed the same costs rather than finally convicting him of forging the authority.

On representation, the expert's opinion of 11 March compared the disputed signature Q1 with Dilip's admitted and specimen writings and concluded that he had not written it. Pathak did not challenge that opinion. Dilip's complaint and Pathak's admitted police telephone inquiry confirmed that the dispute had been brought to his attention; a fresh genuine vakalatnama might have removed doubt. The proposed withdrawal was qualified by continued insistence on the document's genuineness and was rejected. The Court held that Pathak had been appearing without Dilip's authority and restrained further appearance for Dilip immediately. It did not identify the person who wrote the forged signature. Pathak expressed regret for not withdrawing on notice; the Court expressed the expectation that he would verify vakalatnamas before future representation from his office and made acceptance of the apology conditional on costs.

On oath administration, Rule 13 required an inquiry into whether the affiant had read and understood the affidavit, explanation where needed, and a proper certificate if explained. Pradeep's own account and the missing endorsement made the attestation appear casual and deficient. The Court criticised notary Ramdas Sharma's conduct but took an investigative step rather than final disciplinary or forgery adjudication: it sealed the affidavit, directed SP, Satna, to obtain it and compare the questioned notarial signature with Ramdas's specimen, and awaited the State examiner's report. The quoted Gauhati authority explained the reason for the formal safeguards: affidavits are used as evidence to decide rights, so a mechanical signature or entry without voluntary understanding undermines the oath.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the interlocutory application. Pathak was restrained with immediate effect from appearing for respondent Dilip Pandey on the forged vakalatnama; his qualified withdrawal application was rejected. Pathak and Pradeep each received a warning and had to deposit Rs 15,000 costs in the High Court Registry within one month. Their apologies were accepted for the time being subject to that payment; on default the Registrar General was directed to begin cost recovery and register a contempt case. The SP, Satna, was directed to verify Dharmesh Chaturvedi's reported accidental death with FIR and post-mortem report by 7 November 2024, and to obtain expert comparison of notary Ramdas Sharma's signature on Pradeep's sealed affidavit with his specimen by 10 November 2024. Further action concerning the notary was reserved after the report, and the case was listed for 13 November 2024. The underlying petition was not finally decided in this order.

Kunj Bihari v. Jhinguri and Ors., M.P. no. 4375/2022, 15/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Constitution of India — Article 226 — registered FIR — prayer to compel investigation, arrest and charge sheet - D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, holds that police have a statutory duty to investigate but the High Court ordinarily cannot direct the manner of investigation or require arrest, seizure and charge-sheet filing regardless of the evidence; Section 482 inherent power is exercised sparingly. Its quotation invokes M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, for cautious discretionary arrest rather than mechanical arrest upon FIR, and Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, for a hearing before orders seriously affecting persons not before the court. Although the precedent's order arose under Section 482, the Court applied its limit on judicial direction of investigative steps to this Article 226 prayer concerning Crime No. 124/2020 and refused to direct arrest and filing of a charge sheet. It did not decide the accusation's merits.

Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 — Section 173(1) — investigation without unnecessary delay - Judicial refusal to dictate arrest or a charge sheet does not excuse an indefinitely pending FIR investigation. The investigating officer must conclude it as early as possible and, after determining whether an offence is disclosed, take lawful steps to file the appropriate final report, whether closure or charge sheet. The Court disposed of the writ with that prompt-completion direction and liberty to approach the Superintendent of Police, Jabalpur, with a grievance for consideration according to law. It fixed no deadline or prosecution outcome. The petition also requested security for the complainant and family until arrest, but the order gives no separate reasoning or express security direction.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Kusum Raja had lodged Crime No. 124/2020 at Police Station Ishanagar, District Chhatarpur. The reported order does not describe the underlying event, alleged offences, identified suspects or investigative steps. In Writ Petition No. 17997/2020 under Article 226 of the Constitution, she asserted that police had taken no effective action or investigation and that suspects had not been arrested. She asked the High Court to direct prompt investigation, arrest of persons concerned and their prosecution, and also requested security for herself and her family until arrest. The petition was heard by video conferencing. The order records her counsel's contention but no separate detailed State response or evidence of a specific threat.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court expressly quoted and applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488. In that decision the Supreme Court set aside a High Court order which had directed, in substance, particular investigative steps including witness statements, arrest, seizure and filing of a charge sheet. Investigation is the police's statutory domain; a court ordinarily cannot prescribe the precise manner of investigation, and an investigation may result in a charge sheet or in a conclusion that no case is made out. The quoted decision described the purposes for which inherent power under Section 482 CrPC must be exercised with caution and criticised casual, reasonless directions with serious effects on persons not heard. The present Court applied the core proposition to the Article 226 relief: a direction to arrest suspects and file a charge sheet would supervise and predetermine the police investigation.

The quotation in D. Venkatasubramaniam includes M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, which treats Section 41 CrPC arrest as a discretionary, cautious step affecting liberty and reputation, not a mechanical consequence of a cognizable FIR. That principle explains why Kusum Raja's arrest request could not be granted merely because a case was registered. The quoted Supreme Court judgment also invokes Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, for a reasonable opportunity of hearing to a person likely to be seriously affected by a judicial direction to investigate, arrest or seize. The High Court reproduced this caution but did not separately decide a notice dispute in the present petition. The extensive quotation did not amount to independent findings of fact concerning the Ishanagar FIR.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 supplied the writ jurisdiction invoked for directions to police and security. The Court's operative reasoning used the separation between a permissible duty to complete investigation and impermissible judicial prescription of arrests or a charge sheet. Section 173(1) CrPC was reproduced: every investigation under the relevant Chapter shall be completed without unnecessary delay. The Court applied it to require a conclusion and the lawful final report; closure and prosecution remained open alternatives. Section 41 CrPC appears in the quoted M.C. Abraham passage on police arrest discretion, not as a specific arrest decision by the High Court. Section 482 CrPC appears in the quoted D. Venkatasubramaniam ruling because that earlier case concerned inherent power; the current proceeding was an Article 226 writ.

4. Issues : The petitioner raised police inaction after an FIR and sought intervention specifying investigation, arrest and prosecution. The decided issue was whether the High Court should compel police to arrest persons and file a charge sheet in a pending investigation, or whether that would impermissibly assume the agency's judgment about the evidence and lawful outcome. The second issue was the independent statutory obligation under Section 173(1) to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay despite refusal of the predetermined outcome. A security request was pleaded, but the Court did not give an express separate finding on threat, entitlement, conditions or protective measures; it laid down no separate rule on security.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted D. Venkatasubramaniam's distinction between police duty and police discretion over investigative steps. Its quoted context explained why neither arrest nor a charge sheet is inevitable and why higher-court orders can have grave consequences, particularly without hearing affected persons. The present Court concluded that directing arrest and filing of a charge sheet would amount to supervision of investigation and declined those requests. It did not conclude that the complainant's allegations were false, that the police had in fact performed adequate investigation, or that an investigating officer could disregard the FIR. The quoted Section 482 constraints are described as part of the Supreme Court precedent; the jurisdiction presently invoked was Article 226.

The Court then reproduced Section 173(1)'s mandatory timing rule and reasoned that the investigating officer must not keep the case pending without conclusion. The officer must assess whether an offence is made out and file the lawful final report, which may be a closure report or charge sheet. The direction to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take necessary statutory steps enforces the duty to complete the investigation promptly without determining its outcome. Nothing in the reasons resolves the separate request for family security; it was neither expressly granted nor given a distinct refusal rationale.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the writ petition. The Court refused to direct arrest of suspects or a compulsory charge sheet. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the Crime No. 124/2020 investigation as early as possible, make the lawful assessment and take required steps for the appropriate final report without unnecessary delay. It fixed no precise date for completion and did not order prosecution. No express security arrangement for the petitioner or family was ordered.

Kusum Raja v. Station House Officer, Ishanagar, W.P. no. 17997/2020, 05/02/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Evidence Act, 1872 — Section 11 — alibi — onus and preliminary quashing - Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, quoting Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, treats an alibi as evidence relevant because it is inconsistent with presence, rather than as a statutory exception: the prosecution must prove presence and participation; after that burden is met, the accused must support a claim of absence with positive, stringent proof, although evidence creating a reasonable doubt may benefit him. S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, reiterates that failure of alibi does not itself prove the prosecution case. In a Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS challenge to an FIR alleging a lathi assault, the applicant's asserted presence at a friend's house based on CCTV and phone-location material did not establish an indisputable alibi at the preliminary stage. The Court rejected quashing, not the accused's right to contest presence at trial.

Electronic evidence — CCTV clock — reliability of claimed alibi timestamp - Counsel conceded that the date and time on a third-party residence's CCTV system were manually entered and could be changed. The Court declined to treat the apparent recording time as decisive proof of absence from the field during the alleged assault. It made no finding of actual manipulation and made no final ruling on the recording's admissibility.

Telecom location — device and person — limited inference - A mobile tower may indicate the phone's location, but its owner need not be at the same place; the Court illustrated that a handset could be given to another person. On that limited reasoning the asserted distant tower location did not conclusively negate the applicant's alleged participation or warrant FIR quashing. The illustration was not a finding that this applicant fabricated a location, and prosecution proof remains necessary.

Investigation — accused's role — choice of method or agency - Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, states that an accused ordinarily cannot choose the investigating agency or dictate method, while acknowledging exceptional Article 226 directions upon demonstrated mala fide exercise and the Constitution Bench caution on routine transfer. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, discusses the absence of an automatic pre-report participation or hearing right and the lawfulness of further investigation; those quoted contexts were not separate orders in this case. Applying that limit on an accused's control over investigation, with Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, M.Cr.C. 10446/2017, the Court found the applicant's complaint to the SP did not entitle him to dictate how the pending investigation should proceed. The quashing application was dismissed without a final finding on the BNS allegations.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Crime No. 392/2024 at Police Station Banmore, District Morena, arose from a complainant's account that, while he worked in his field at about 4 p.m. on 28 December 2024, cattle belonging to Balu Gurjar entered and threatened his crop. He asked Balu to remove them. The FIR alleged that Balu, Rajveer, Kalla and Lakhan Singh abused and challenged him; Balu struck his head with a lathi, Rajveer his right shoulder, Kalla threw him down, and applicant Lakhan struck his back. The complainant's elder brother Surendra and Mukesh reportedly intervened after hearing him. The FIR invoked BNS Sections 296, 115(2), 351(2) and 3(5). These are allegations, not proved trial findings.

Lakhan Singh applied under Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS, 2023, to quash the FIR and consequential proceedings. He alleged personal enmity and denied being at the field, claiming that he was going to his friend Deepak's house in the tempo-stand lane at Kushwaha Market. He relied on CCTV at Mitthan Singh Fauji's residence and the tower location of his phone as indicating a distant place, and said a complaint to the Superintendent of Police had received no heed. During argument, counsel conceded that the CCTV system's date and time were manually set and thus capable of alteration. The High Court considered his legal arguments and the FIR without deciding who owned the cattle, whether the injuries were proved, or the ultimate authenticity of the digital sources.

2. Precedents — Considered : Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, was quoted on the burden of proving an alibi. It reproduces Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283: alibi is the evidentiary relevance of a fact inconsistent with presence under Section 11 Evidence Act, not a Penal Code exception. The prosecution first bears and retains the burden of proving the accused's presence and participation. Once that burden is discharged, an accused asserting that he was so far away participation was impossible must establish the defence by positive and stringent proof. Evidence of sufficient quality creating reasonable doubt about presence can still favour the accused. The High Court quoted Binay Kumar Singh again directly and applied the test to the inconclusive CCTV and handset-location claims at FIR-quashing stage; it did not conduct a trial to determine those sources' evidentiary value. Vijay Pal's passage lists Gurpreet Singh, Sk. Sattar and Jitender Kumar as reiterating the rule, but they were not each separately applied on distinct facts here.

S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, was also quoted directly for positive evidence and the stringent alibi threshold. Crucially, it states that even a failed alibi does not relieve the prosecution of proving its case beyond reasonable doubt. Its own quotation of Gurpreet Singh concerned concurrent trial and appellate fact findings, a context absent in this pretrial quashing petition. Binay Kumar Singh's nested references to Dudh Nath Pandey and State of Maharashtra v. Narsingrao Gangaram Pimple similarly supplied historical support without independent treatment by this Court. The present Court applied these authorities to conclude the defence material was insufficiently definitive for immediate quashing; it did not decide final guilt.

Romila Thapar and Ors v. Union of India and Ors, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted at length on the lack of an accused's right to select an investigating agency or direct its method. Its passage invokes Narmada Bai and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt for that rule, and Divine Retreat Centre and State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights for the qualified possibility of extraordinary Article 226 intervention upon demonstrable mala fides or exceptional need; vague assertions are inadequate. The quoted Supreme Court case itself involved a request to change agency and other circumstances unlike this local assault FIR. The High Court applied that limit on an accused's control over investigation when considering Lakhan's complaint to the SP. It was not deciding a request for a particular CBI transfer. The quotation's discussion of later bail, discharge and quashing remedies was not a merits determination of those remedies here.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, was separately quoted on the accused's limited participation while police gather material. It reproduces Union of India v. W.N. Chadha on no automatic pre-report hearing or control of investigative manner, CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi on no say in agency choice, Sri Bhagwan Samardha on further investigation after a report, and Narender G. Goel on testing evidence at trial. Those embedded decisions clarify the investigative-stage boundary; the present Court did not itself direct further investigation, deny notice on an agency-transfer application, or decide a report under Section 173(8). Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior and State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 10446/2017, decided 30 November 2017, was cited as a prior High Court application of the no-say rule.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC and Section 528 BNSS, 2023, were both stated as the application's inherent-power route; the Court declined quashing at this preliminary FIR stage. The FIR charged BNS Sections 296, 115(2), 351(2) and 3(5), but the judgment did not analyse each statutory ingredient; those provisions identify allegations only. Section 11 of the Indian Evidence Act is quoted in Binay Kumar Singh as the basis for relevance of an alibi inconsistent with presence. The decision uses the Supreme Court's distinction between the prosecution's burden of proof and the accused's burden to establish an alibi rather than treating alibi as a statutory exception or the failed defence as proof of guilt. The quotations from Romila Thapar and Dinubhai mention CrPC Sections 173(2), 173(8), 204 and 202 as contexts of investigation, report and participation; no final report, process issue or further-investigation order was adjudicated in Lakhan's application.

4. Issues : The principal question was whether Lakhan's asserted alibi, drawn from third-party CCTV and his phone's tower location, was sufficiently decisive and reliable to displace an FIR specifically alleging that he struck the complainant's back and to justify quashing at the threshold. This involved the timing source's admitted manual setting, the difference between a handset's location and its owner's location, and the continuing prosecution burden despite a doubtful alibi. The independent issue was whether the named accused's complaint to the SP gave him any right to require police to investigate in his preferred manner. The Court did not finally determine the footage's authenticity, the tower record's exact coverage, the credibility of the complainant, or guilt under the listed BNS sections.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered the alibi authorities together with the electronic assertions. Counsel fairly accepted that the CCTV date/time was manually entered and alterable. That concession prevented reliance on the displayed time as conclusive proof that Lakhan was elsewhere at the exact time alleged, but the Court did not find it actually altered. A tower result for a mobile device similarly does not by itself prove that the subscriber was carrying it; the Court offered the possibility of someone giving the device to another to make a misleading location. This was an illustration of the evidentiary gap, not a finding that Lakhan did so. In light of the named physical assault allegation, the disputed material did not establish an alibi with the positive certainty required to justify quashing the FIR on the material presented. The proposition from Binay Kumar Singh and S.K. Sattar that prosecution still must prove presence and participation remains intact. The order dismissed the quashing application without finally determining the authenticity or evidentiary value of those sources.

On investigative control, counsel could not point to any entitlement of an accused to have the SP direct the police along a particular line simply because he made a complaint asserting innocence. Romila Thapar and Dinubhai stated the general rule that the accused neither chooses the agency nor dictates police methods, with exceptional constitutional intervention requiring facts supporting mala fide or extraordinary need. Lakhan's assertion did not make out such a case in the order. The High Court concluded that the facts and circumstances, taken as a whole, disclosed no ground for interference under its inherent power. It did not adjudicate whether a future final report, discharge request or trial defence would succeed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS to quash Crime No. 392/2024 and consequential proceedings. The FIR and investigation remained in place. No direction to the SP to conduct a specified investigation, no transfer to another agency, and no final rejection of an alibi after trial were ordered. The applicant's evidentiary and procedural defences remained to be tested at the appropriate later stage.

Headnote :- Criminal investigation — informant also investigator — Mukesh Singh v. State (Narcotic Branch of Delhi), 2020:INSC:524, in which the Constitution Bench held that an investigation is not automatically invalid, nor is an accused automatically entitled to acquittal, merely because the police informant also investigates. Bias or prejudice depends on case-specific facts. Bhagwan Singh, Megha Singh and Rajangam were confined to their facts and Mohan Lal's contrary automatic-acquittal rule was overruled. The applicant's objection that the complainant and investigating officer were the same person did not, by itself, vitiate this Arms Act trial.

Arms Act, 1959 — Section 25(1-B)(a) — unlicensed .315 bore country-made pistol with live cartridge — Ex. P-1 recorded seizure at 17:15 and Ex. P-2 formal arrest at 17:30. PW-2's statement that no article was found at the time of arrest did not contradict the recovery made fifteen minutes earlier. A valid search does not require the accused to have been formally arrested first. The fact that an independent seizure witness turned hostile did not prevent the seizure from being proved through police personnel. The FIR also invoked Section 27; the conviction and revision concerned Section 25(1-B)(a).

Criminal revision — Sections 397 and 401 CrPC — conviction affirmed on appeal — The High Court declined to interfere because no perversity in the concurrent factual findings was shown. It stated the statutory minimum imprisonment for Section 25(1-B)(a) was one year and rejected reduction of the two-year rigorous imprisonment term to the shorter period undergone. The revision was dismissed in limine and the bail bonds were cancelled. The applicant was directed to surrender by 28 March 2025; otherwise, the trial court was to issue an arrest warrant. The Court relied on the sequence of seizure and formal arrest and the absence of any demonstrated perversity.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : While on patrol, SHO Sunil Singh Rajput received information that Lakhan Parihar of Kaprana was travelling towards Raunakhedi with a country-made pistol and an alleged intention to commit an offence. Police proceeded near Raunakhedi Electricity Power House. The applicant allegedly ran on seeing them but was apprehended. A physical search revealed a .315 bore country-made pistol with a live .315 bore cartridge in its chamber. The police removed the cartridge. He could not produce a licence. Crime No. 130/2020 was registered for Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27 of the Arms Act. Police filed a charge sheet, and the JMFC framed a charge under Section 25(1-B)(a) on 27 January 2021. The applicant pleaded not guilty. Prosecution examined Ramhet Jatav (PW-1), Santosh Singh Bais (PW-2), Girjashankar (PW-3), Deepak Tiwari (PW-4), Lokendra Singh Kirar (PW-5), Hariom Sharma (PW-6), and Sunil Singh Rajpoot (PW-7); the defence called no witness.

The JMFC, Shivpuri, convicted him in RCT No. 521/2020 on 29 February 2024 and imposed two years' rigorous imprisonment, Rs.200 fine, and one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. The Sixth Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri, dismissed Criminal Appeal No. 80/2024 on 15 October 2024. In revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC, the applicant argued that the complainant and investigating officer were the same person, the independent seizure witness had turned hostile, and PW-2 said no incriminating article was found when he was arrested. He requested reduction of imprisonment to the period undergone. The State opposed. The prosecution evidence was that the applicant could not produce a firearm licence.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court relied on the Constitution Bench decision in Mukesh Singh v. State (Narcotic Branch of Delhi), 2020:INSC:524. It reproduced paragraph 13, which answers the reference. The mere fact that an informant police officer subsequently investigates does not itself make the inquiry unfair or biased, vitiate the trial, or entitle the accused to acquittal. Claimed prejudice must be tested on facts and circumstances. The High Court rejected the applicant's objection that the trial was vitiated merely because the complainant and investigating officer were the same person.

Mukesh Singh discusses Bhagwan Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (1976) 1 SCC 15; Megha Singh v. State of Haryana, (1996) 11 SCC 709; and State v. Rajangam, (2010) 15 SCC 369. The observations and acquittals in those cases, where the informant also investigated, were confined to their facts. They did not establish that the combination of roles inevitably caused bias. The Constitution Bench expressly overruled the contrary per se rule in Mohan Lal v. State of Punjab, (2018) 17 SCC 627, and other contrary decisions. Those four authorities appear in the reproduced passage; the High Court did not separately apply them to different items of evidence in Lakhan's case. The High Court separately applied principles concerning proof of seizure through police witnesses, sentencing and revisional interference.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC governed revision against the conviction affirmed on appeal. The Court stated that concurrent factual findings could not be disturbed unless perversity was shown. The charge and conviction were under Section 25(1-B)(a) of the Arms Act. The order states that the minimum term of imprisonment is one year and relies on that premise to refuse reduction to the period undergone. Section 27 appeared in the FIR account but was not the charge of conviction under review. The information about an intended offence explained why the police approached the applicant; the Court did not decide a separate charge of attempting that offence. Exhibit P-1 was the seizure memo and Ex. P-2 the arrest memo; their respective times 17:15 and 17:30 were controlling.

4. Issues : Did the fact that the police complainant also investigated, by itself, vitiate the trial? Did hostility of the independent seizure witness and PW-2's statement that nothing incriminating was found at arrest defeat proof of seizure of the pistol and cartridge, given the seizure and formal-arrest times? Could imprisonment be reduced to time served despite the Court's stated one-year minimum, and was there perversity in concurrent findings warranting interference under Sections 397 and 401?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted Mukesh Singh's case-specific approach. An investigation is not inherently biased, and the trial is not vitiated, merely because the informant police officer also conducted the investigation. The High Court therefore rejected the objection based solely on the complainant and investigating officer being the same person. Whether the combination of roles caused bias or prejudice must be assessed on the facts of each case.

The Court examined the sequence rather than isolating PW-2's remark. PW-2 described the tip, visit to Raunakhedi, flight and apprehension, search disclosing the .315 pistol and chambered live cartridge, unloading, nonproduction of licence, and two memos. Ex. P-1 recorded seizure at 17:15. Ex. P-2 recorded formal arrest at 17:30. His paragraph 9 statement that nothing was found at arrest at 17:30 was consistent with earlier recovery. Formal arrest before seizure is not essential to the validity of a search. The independent seizure witness's hostility did not legally foreclose proof through police personnel. The Court thus resolved the alleged contradiction on the chronology of this seizure and arrest.

The trial and appellate factual conclusions stood. The revisional court could not interfere with concurrent factual findings unless perversity was shown. Counsel identified none. The Court refused to reduce the sentence to the period already undergone, stating that Section 25(1-B)(a) prescribed a minimum term of one year. The two-year rigorous imprisonment term and fine remained. The Court retained the two-year term after stating the one-year minimum and finding no perversity in the concurrent findings.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the revision in limine. The applicant was on bail. The Court cancelled his bail bonds and directed him to surrender before the trial court on or before 28 March 2025. If he failed to surrender, the trial court was to issue an arrest warrant so that he could serve the remaining sentence. The office was to send the order and lower-court record for information and compliance. The affirmed conviction was under Section 25(1-B)(a), with two years' rigorous imprisonment, Rs.200 fine and one month's default rigorous imprisonment.

Lakhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 5348/2024, 18/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (313) Prev Next

Headnote :- Evidence Act, 1872 — dying declaration — murder conviction despite hostile eyewitnesses — Under Laltu Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2019) 15 SCC 344; Ramesh v. State of Haryana, (2017) 1 SCC 529; and Krishan v. State of Haryana, (2013) 3 SCC 280, a dying declaration may be the sole basis of conviction without independent corroboration if the maker could identify the assailants, was mentally fit, spoke voluntarily from personal knowledge, and the statement withstands careful scrutiny. Siyasharan's Ex. D-1 was taken by a Naib-Tahsildar at 9:30–9:45 a.m. with a doctor's fitness certificate. The recorder's later claim that the voice was unclear had not been noted contemporaneously and was rejected. The declaration identified an armed group, with Manvendra and Lakhan as assailants, and was consistent with the head and waist injuries. The Court considered the reference to "Ratanlal" alongside the FIR and Siyasharan's later identification of "Lakhan"; no person named Ratanlal was tried.

Hostile witnesses — Krishan's quotation of Bhajju and Mrinal Das — A witness's hostility does not erase the whole of that witness's evidence or make an otherwise reliable dying declaration unusable. Nine witnesses, including the complainant, did not support the prosecution; the convictions rested on the declaration, the evidence of its recorder and the doctor, and the medical corroboration. The State suggested that a compromise in a cross-case explained the hostility; the Court did not treat that suggestion as an independently proved fact.

Medical proof — MLC ex. P-9 and post-mortem ex. P-27 — Multiple sharp head injuries, a skull fracture and a lumbar incised wound established homicidal death from head injury and supported the dying account. The fact that emergency treatment preceded the later MLC did not disprove the patient's fitness when the earlier declaration was recorded.

IPC — Sections 302 and 34 — Applying Hardev Singh, Krishnan, Preetam Singh and Subed Ali, the Court held that common intention may be inferred from conduct and concert even if every participant does not inflict a blow. Nirbhay's and Mithlesh's joint armed entry and abuse supported their constructive liability for the acts of Manvendra and Lakhan. All four life sentences and Rs.2,000 fines were affirmed. Nirbhay and Mithlesh were ordered to surrender, Manvendra to continue his sentence, and Lakhanlal received conditional surrender directions because the record did not establish whether he had surrendered after parole or whether his parole had been extended. Appeal dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 27 October 2008 Jitendra Singh Lodhi reported that at about 7 a.m. his father Siyasharan was sitting in their house when Lakhanlal, Manvendra, Nirbhay and Mithlesh arrived with axes and a sickle following prior enmity. The report alleged that Lakhanlal, Manvendra and Nirbhay struck his father on the head with axes and that Mithlesh struck him on the waist with a sickle; it also alleged injury to Jitendra when he intervened, injuries to Jaivendra, rescue by others, and threats as the group left. The police sent Jitendra, Jaivendra and Siyasharan for examination. Naib-Tahsildar Ashok Bhatnagar recorded Siyasharan's dying declaration Ex. D-1 in hospital. Siyasharan later died during treatment. The police recorded the seizure of axes from Lakhanlal, Manvendra and Nirbhay. The charge sheet cited IPC Sections 302, 307, 324, 452, 294, 506-B and 34. The defence called no witness.

The Sessions Judge, Datia, in Sessions Trial No. 30/2009 convicted all four under Section 302/34 IPC on 30 October 2009 and imposed life imprisonment, Rs.2,000 fine and three months' simple imprisonment in default, acquitting them of Sections 452 and 324/34. In their appeal under Section 374 CrPC, the appellants said all eyewitnesses including complainant Jitendra were hostile, leaving only Ex. D-1; they challenged its reliability and differences from FIR Ex. P-13. The State maintained that a reliable dying declaration can suffice and suggested a compromise in a cross-case to explain witness hostility. That explanation remained the State's submission; the Court did not find that a compromise had been proved.

2. Precedents — Considered : Laltu Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2019) 15 SCC 344, was quoted for the rule that corroboration is not invariably required, provided the declaration is reliable and neither conceals the truth nor falsely implicates the accused. Its quoted facts involved a recording doctor and supporting eyewitnesses; this appeal instead had hostile eyewitnesses. The High Court therefore applied its reliability rule without importing the factual corroboration present in that case. Ramesh v. State of Haryana, (2017) 1 SCC 529, was quoted on necessity-based admissibility and on the need to establish the maker's opportunity to identify the accused, mental fitness, voluntary statement from personal knowledge and reliability on strict scrutiny. Its passage says a declaration is neither inherently extra strong nor weak, may be made to a Magistrate, doctor or another person, and no universal injury percentage dictates fitness. Jai Karan, Rambai, Khushal Rao and Vikas are embedded authorities in that quotation. Here Ex. D-1 was supported by the doctor and Naib-Tahsildar, although no independent eyewitness supported the prosecution.

Krishan v. State of Haryana, (2013) 3 SCC 280, was quoted at length on hostile witnesses and dying declarations. It reproduced Bhajju on reliance upon a trustworthy dying declaration despite hostile witnesses and on the admissible parts of hostile testimony under Section 154 of the Evidence Act. It also reproduced Mrinal Das on the primacy of evidentiary quality over quantity. Munnu Raja, Khushal Rao, Koli Lakhmanbhai, Prithi, Manu Sharma and Ramkrushna appear nested in the Bhajju excerpt as explanations. The High Court held that hostility of material witnesses does not prevent conviction on a trustworthy dying declaration proved by the persons connected with its recording. The convictions rested on the dying declaration and the evidence supporting its recording, rather than on any partly supportive eyewitness account.

On common intention, Hardev Singh v. State of Punjab, (1975) 3 SCC 731, was quoted for shared intention directed to the particular crime. Krishnan v. State, (2003) 7 SCC 56, explained participation, acting in concert, liability for different acts and the fact-specific application of that provision. Its reference to conspiracy and unlawful assembly distinguished other forms of constructive liability; this prosecution concerned Section 34, rather than Sections 120-A or 149. Preetam Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2003) 12 SCC 594, explained that a common plan may develop at the scene but must precede the offence, and may be inferred from conduct; Krishna Govind Patil and Ramashish Yadav were embedded supporting references. Subed Ali v. State of Assam, (2020) 10 SCC 517, explained unison despite different active or passive roles and inference from arrival, weapons, assault and conduct. Its quotations of Ramaswami Ayyangar, Nandu Rastogi and Surendra Chauhan, plus reference to Nand Kishore, illustrate participation without each accused striking. The Court applied those principles to the four appellants' joint armed entry, abuse and assault.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the appeal against conviction. Section 154 Evidence Act and Section 161 CrPC arose in the Krishan/Bhajju quotation on hostile-witness examination and prior police statements; the Court did not decide a discrete application under either. Sections 302 and 34 IPC governed the affirmed conviction for murder committed in furtherance of common intention. The FIR and charge sheet listed further offences, while trial acquittal of Sections 452 and 324/34 was noted; the appeal did not revive those acquittals. Section 302's minimum life imprisonment was the Court's stated reason not to reduce the sentence. Each appellant's sentence included a Rs.2,000 fine and three months' simple imprisonment in default. Cross-case No. 134/2008 was used only to corroborate Mithlesh's presence through her own submission before the trial court.

4. Issues : The Court first asked whether Siyasharan died by homicidal violence, considering the MLC, the autopsy and the suggestion that the injuries resulted from an accident or fall. It then asked whether the appellants perpetrated the assault notwithstanding nine hostile witnesses and whether Ex. D-1 was reliable, particularly because the recorder later claimed that the voice was unclear, the declaration initially said Siyasharan could not see which person struck his head, and the declaration used 'Ratanlal' before identifying 'Lakhan.' A further question was whether Nirbhay and Mithlesh shared an intention to commit murder despite absence of a specifically proved lethal blow from either, and whether all four convictions and life terms should stand. Finally, the appellants' different custody and parole positions required separate operative directions.

5. Ratio / Findings : Autopsy surgeon Dr. Ajay Gupta (PW-14) recorded stitched sharply cut head wounds, abrasions, underlying bone cut/fracture and a lumbar incised wound in Ex. P-27. He attributed the cardio-respiratory failure to a head injury that was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course and rejected a fall explanation. Dr. M.M. Shakya (PW-8) recorded several bleeding scalp and waist incised wounds in MLC Ex. P-9 and explained urgent treatment before completing medical documentation. The Court found homicidal death and later treated the pattern of three head cuts and a waist cut as corroborating Ex. D-1. The medical evidence established the nature and cause of death but did not identify an assailant.

Moolchand (PW-2), Ram Milan (PW-3), Neksaee (PW-4), Ratiram (PW-5), Komal Singh Patel (PW-7), complainant Jitendra (PW-9), Arvind (PW-10), Maithlisharan (PW-11) and Jaivendra (PW-13) turned hostile. The Court thus examined Ex. D-1 independently. Bhatnagar (PW-15) said he asked Siyasharan's name, obtained a doctor fitness certificate, recorded his words in the patient's language, and sent the declaration in a sealed envelope the same day. Family members and PW-8 were present, but Bhatnagar denied that they had prompted the deceased or interfered with the recording. His trial assertion that Manvendra's and Lakhan's names had been spoken in an unclear voice, coupled with a claim of weak hearing, was absent from his contemporaneous record and any report to superiors. The Court regarded the later assertion as an attempt to mislead it. No trial-court note corroborated hearing weakness. PW-8 independently certified mental fitness and said the patient could speak; the High Court found Siyasharan mentally fit and well oriented.

The recorded words described morning armed arrival of 'Ratanlal,' Manvendra, Nirbhay and Lakhanlal's wife, abuse and axe blows to head and waist, with initial inability to see who delivered a particular blow. In subsequent answers, Siyasharan named Manvendra and Lakhan as the attackers and said that Manvendra had delivered repeated blows. The Court acknowledged the reference to "Ratanlal" but found that no person of that name had been tried or identified by the defence; FIR Ex. P-13 named Lakhanlal and Ex. D-1 later named Lakhan. It found the declaration proved beyond reasonable doubt and supported by the medical distribution, establishing Manvendra and Lakhanlal's participation.

The Court inferred Nirbhay's and Mithlesh's common intention under Section 34 from their joint arrival at the victim's house while armed with axes, their abuse and their presence during the group assault. It also cited Mithlesh's trial-court stand that she had injuries in cross-case No. 134/2008 as support for her presence. The Court relied on the declaration's account of joint armed arrival and abuse to hold Nirbhay and Mithlesh vicariously liable for the acts of Manvendra and Lakhan. Under the cited authorities, different roles do not prevent liability where the common intention to commit the particular crime and participation in the criminal enterprise are established. All four were found guilty under Section 302/34. The life sentence was left undisturbed as the statutory minimum stated by the Court.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the judgment and sentence of 30 October 2009 in Sessions Trial No. 30/2009. Nirbhay and Mithlesh, on bail from December 2009, had bail bonds cancelled and were directed to surrender immediately. Manvendra was already in jail and was to undergo the balance. If Lakhanlal had surrendered after expiry of parole, he was to serve the balance; if Lakhanlal had not surrendered or his parole had been extended, he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court. The direction was conditional because the record did not establish whether Lakhanlal had surrendered after parole or whether his parole had been extended. Copies were ordered supplied to Manvendra and Lakhanlal, and the trial record returned for compliance. Life imprisonment, Rs.2,000 fine and three months' simple imprisonment in default remained for each appellant. Lakhanlal and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 779/2009, 04/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (314) Prev Next

Headnote :- CrPC — Sections 154 and 157 — negative preliminary-inquiry report — Kailash Vijayvargiya v. Rajlakshmi Chaudhari, 2023:INSC:494, explains that registration upon cognizable information is distinct from the higher "reason to suspect" threshold for beginning an investigation. If the police foreclose an investigation under Section 157(1), they must report that decision to the Magistrate; the Magistrate may direct investigation or hold inquiry, without directing its manner. The Waraseoni SHO sent a no-offence report to the SDO(P) but withheld it from the Magistrate. The High Court held that withholding the report was a material illegality, directed the DGP to circulate the governing judgment and this order through SPs to SHOs, and warned that future deviations would be treated seriously. The warning was prospective; the Court made no finding of collusion in the present case.

Complaint and revision — Sections 156(3), 200, 203, 362 and 482 CrPC — A JMFC's 2022 dismissal was set aside by a 2023 revisional remand; after that remand, the Magistrate could reappraise the existing material and issue a pre-cognizance direction under Section 156(3) without reviewing a subsisting final order. Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338, on impermissible recall after summons and overruling of K.M. Mathew, was distinguished. If the Magistrate had collected further complaint evidence, the proceeding would instead have moved into the Section 200 procedure. The direction was made before cognizance.

Section 156(3) affidavit — Priyanka Srivastava v. State of U.P., (2015) 6 SCC 287 — An affidavit that incorporated the complaint and solemnly affirmed personal knowledge of its contents supplied the required accountability safeguard; it did not have to repeat every allegation. The Court also explained that, had the negative police report been submitted, the complaint could have been treated as a protest petition. The applicants did not argue that, even if all allegations were accepted, no offence would be disclosed. Their Section 482 application was dismissed; the disputed allegations about society donations and property were not adjudicated on their merits.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Respondent No. 2 made allegations against Lakhiram Ramchandani and other society members about donations, the tenancy or allocation of shops, property alienation and accounts for Sindhi Samaj Kalyan Samiti and related bodies at Waraseoni. A coordinate Bench disposed of W.P. No. 7765/2021 on 6 April 2021 by directing the Town Inspector to consider any complaint submitted within seven days with a certified copy of the order. The Bench referred to its order of 24 December 2020 in W.P. No. 18878/2020. The complainant applied to the SHO on 12 April 2021. Police conducted a preliminary inquiry and prepared a report dated 5 June 2021 stating that no cognizable offence was disclosed, but sent it to the SDO(P) rather than to the Magistrate. Contempt Case No. 1643/2021 was dismissed on 1 September 2021 because the police had considered the complaint and made a decision; that order did not determine the Magistrate's later statutory powers.

Respondent No. 2 then moved the JMFC under Sections 156(3) read with 200 CrPC. After recording witness statements the JMFC dismissed the request on 6 August 2022 for want of a disclosed cognizable offence. The complainant's Criminal Revision No. 75/2022 succeeded before the Second Additional Sessions Judge on 30 January 2023, setting aside the dismissal and remanding for reconsideration. On 21 June 2023 the JMFC in UNCR No. 49/2022 directed police investigation under Section 156(3). The applicants invoked Section 482 to seek quashing of both the remand and the later order, together with dismissal of the complaint. They argued that the police report and the earlier dismissal of the complaint precluded the later direction, that no new evidence had been obtained, and that the supporting affidavit was inadequate. They denied misappropriation, saying members' donations financed a building and major donors became tenants. Respondents alleged large unaccounted shop payments, cash retention, diverted discretionary-quota funds, deficient minutes and income-tax returns, alienation without Registrar permission and an audit later withdrawn after cancellation of society registration. These financial assertions remained disputed allegations and submissions; the High Court did not decide their truth.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kailash Vijayvargiya v. Rajlakshmi Chaudhari, 2023:INSC:494, was quoted at paragraph 59. The duty under Section 154 to register cognizable information differs from Section 157(1), which requires "reason to suspect" before an investigation begins. The police need not investigate every registered FIR if sufficient grounds are absent, but a decision under the proviso to Section 157(1) not to investigate must be reported to the Magistrate, who may direct an investigation or hold an inquiry. The Magistrate remains informed but cannot prescribe police investigative methods. Counsel for the applicants conceded the reporting duty. The High Court directly applied it to the SHO's negative preliminary-inquiry report withheld from judicial scrutiny and issued a prospective circulation direction. The separate reference in the quotation to a final report under Section 173 did not establish that such a report had been filed in this case.

Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal, (2004) 7 SCC 338, was discussed for the rule that, after issuing summons, a Magistrate cannot recall that order under Section 203; an aggrieved accused must seek relief under Section 482. It overruled the contrary position in K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala, (1992) 1 SCC 217. The High Court distinguished those circumstances: the JMFC's dismissal had been set aside in revision, and reconsideration followed the remand rather than a self-recall of any subsisting order. Section 362 therefore did not bar reconsideration.

Priyanka Srivastava v. State of U.P., 2015:INSC:239 : (2015) 6 SCC 287, was quoted. It requires a sworn affidavit with an application under Section 156(3), disclosure and documentary support of prior approaches under Sections 154(1) and 154(3), and appropriate verification by the Magistrate. These safeguards deter casual or false applications and expose a false deponent to prosecution. The present Court applied the affidavit safeguard to the actual filing produced by the applicants and held that incorporation of the complaint and the affirmation of personal knowledge were sufficient. Lalita Kumari appears inside the Priyanka quotation for contexts where preliminary inquiry may arise; the High Court did not separately apply its categories to resolve the society-fund merits. The earlier coordinate-Bench writ and contempt orders formed part of the procedural history; they did not amount to findings on the present complaint's merits.

3. Statutes considered : The applicants invoked the High Court's inherent power under Section 482 CrPC. Section 156(3) empowers a Magistrate to direct an investigation before taking cognizance. Section 200 governs examination of a complaint after that stage, while Section 203 concerned the prior dismissal and the comparison with Adalat Prasad. The bar on reviewing a final order under Section 362 did not prevent fresh consideration after the revisional court set aside the earlier order. Section 157 required reporting a negative decision not to investigate to the Magistrate, in distinction from Section 154 registration; Section 173 describes a later final-report path in the Supreme Court quotation, not a report that was filed here. Sections 154(1) and 154(3) appeared in Priyanka's requirements for prior police approaches. The Court did not analyse the ingredients of any disputed society, fiscal or penal provision and made no finding that any such ingredient was satisfied or disproved.

4. Issues : The Court asked whether the SHO could retain a negative preliminary inquiry report without submitting it to the competent Magistrate; whether, after the successful revision and remand, the JMFC's Section 156(3) order amounted to an impermissible review under Section 362 or required additional evidence; whether that order amounted to taking cognizance; and whether the complainant's affidavit met Priyanka Srivastava. It did not decide whether the society's shop transaction, cash handling, audit cancellation, registration or donations amounted to any particular offence. Counsel did not argue that the allegations, even if accepted in full, failed to disclose an offence. The Court therefore did not adjudicate an ingredient-based ground for quashing.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that a negative preliminary-inquiry report must be submitted to the Magistrate rather than retained by the SDO(P). Section 157 requires a report to the Magistrate, who can decide whether investigation or an inquiry is appropriate. The SHO had not made such a filing; the High Court held that this was a material illegality because it deprived the Magistrate of statutory oversight. It directed the Director General of Police, M.P., to circulate the Kailash Vijayvargiya judgment and this order to all SPs, who should circulate them to SHOs. It warned that future deviations would be treated seriously and might support a presumption that the SHO deliberately withheld the report to benefit an accused. The warning was prospective and conditional; it was not a finding that the officer in this case acted with a corrupt intention. Had a report been submitted, the complainant's filing could also have functioned as a protest petition; the judgment did not purport to decide a filed closure report.

The dismissal dated 6 August 2022 ceased to subsist when the revisional court set it aside on 30 January 2023. Reappraisal of the material already before the JMFC complied with the remand; no additional collection of evidence was required. The 21 June 2023 Section 156(3) order directed investigation before cognizance; the respondents accepted that cognizance had not been taken, and the Court rejected the applicants' contrary characterization. The Court reasoned that gathering additional complaint evidence would have moved the proceeding beyond the pre-cognizance route and into Section 200. The judgment did not pronounce the preliminary inquiry binding on the JMFC or equate ordering investigation with issuing process against applicants.

On affidavit, the applicants produced the complainant's sworn document but argued that it had to repeat every allegation in detail. The affidavit declared the complaint true to the deponent's personal knowledge and incorporated the complaint. The Court held that this was a sufficient solemn affirmation because a false statement could expose the deponent to prosecution. It did not dispense with an affidavit altogether. Once these procedural objections failed, and no argument on the substantive ingredients was made, there was no ground to exercise the inherent power.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the application. The revisional remand of 30 January 2023 and the JMFC's 21 June 2023 police-investigation direction remained in force; the private complaint was not dismissed. The direction for DGP circulation and the prospective warning to the police remained operative. The Court made no finding that the applicants had committed misappropriation or that the complainant's financial allegations were true.

Headnote :- Evidence — child witnesses — Nivrutti Pandurang Kokate v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2008 SC 1460, requires scrutiny of a child witness's capacity, susceptibility to influence and whether the evidence bears the ring of truth. Kundan Singh (PW-1), then about fourteen, testified that he saw Lakhmichand cut the neck of his twelve-year-old brother, Dilip, with a hasiya. Nine-year-old Vikram (PW-13) also implicated the attackers. The Court weighed their peripheral omissions and Vikram's ambiguous attribution of the weapons; it did not treat either as an automatic ground for exclusion.

Related witnesses — independent eyewitness not examined — Karulal v. State of M.P. permits conviction on the credible testimony of related witnesses. The mother's prompt FIR alleged the hasiya attack on the neck. At trial, she and several relatives described arriving mainly after Kundan's cry, finding Dilip dead and seeing the armed accused flee. The Court relied on Kundan's direct account together with this evidence of the immediate aftermath; it did not treat every relative as an eyewitness to the fatal cut.

Contradictions — Mallikarjun v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, quoting Bakhshish Singh, Sunil Kumar Sambhudaya Gupta and Raj Kumar Singh, distinguishes minor omissions from defects that destroy the core of the case. The earlier police statements omitted certain details about the search, the villagers and the capture. Nevertheless, PW-1 had stated that he saw the attack, and the FIR specifically identified Lakhmichand as the person who cut Dilip's neck. The High Court found that the central version remained intact.

Medical corroboration — The autopsy recorded twenty-one injuries, including a deep transverse incised wound to the neck that severed the major vessels and trachea; death resulted from shock and hemorrhage. The police reported seizing the hasiya and knife and sending the articles to the FSL, but the judgment does not discuss any positive laboratory result. The trial court's sentence of life imprisonment and fine of Rs.1,000 under Section 302 IPC was affirmed, and the appeal under Section 374 CrPC was dismissed. Co-accused Kanhaiya's trial acquittal was not reversed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 5 August 2009, the day of Rakshabandhan, twelve-year-old Dilip went around noon to ease himself near the water-tank boundary at Panchkuiya/Raghogarh. His mother, Soram Bai, reported at 2:30 p.m. that, against a background of animosity, Lakhmichand, armed with a hasiya, his son Kallu, armed with a knife, and Kanhaiya pursued the boy. Her FIR alleged that Kanhaiya and Lakhmichand held Dilip, Lakhmichand cut his neck and Kallu inflicted a knife injury. A crowd gathered, and the accused fled. Crime No. 295/2009 was registered under Section 302/34 IPC. The police prepared a spot map and dead-body panchnama and recovered ordinary and blood-stained soil. They reported seizing a hasiya on Lakhmichand's disclosure and a knife on Kallu's disclosure. The soil, weapons and the deceased's clothes were sent for chemical analysis. The judgment identifies an FSL report at Ex. P-32 but does not describe its contents or any specific positive link.

The police filed a charge-sheet against Lakhmichand and Kanhaiya. On 19 July 2010, the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Guna, convicted Lakhmichand under Section 302 IPC in Sessions Trial No. 354/2009 and sentenced him to life imprisonment with a fine of Rs.1,000 and a default stipulation whose term this judgment does not state. The prosecution examined nineteen witnesses and the defence examined two. In his appeal under Section 374 CrPC, Lakhmichand challenged the interested, related and allegedly inconsistent evidence, the absence of an independent eyewitness and the failure to accept the agricultural-work alibi given by Kallu alias Kalluram (DW-2). The State supported the conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nivrutti Pandurang Kokate and Ors. v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2008 SC 1460, was quoted in considering the evidence of the child witnesses, particularly Vikram. A child's intelligence and understanding of the obligation of an oath are primarily assessed by the trial judge, whose conclusion may be disturbed if the preserved record shows that it was erroneous. Children may be pliable, susceptible to tutoring and imaginative, and their evidence therefore requires caution; but age does not bar reliance when careful scrutiny reveals the ring of truth. The High Court treated Vikram's relatively minor inconsistencies as natural in context and regarded his account as supportive, while Kundan's evidence supplied the principal direct accusation. The judgment records neither a fresh voir dire of either child nor a finding that the defence had actually tutored them.

Karulal v. State of M.P. was invoked, without a reporter citation in the order, for the proposition that credible testimony of related witnesses may sustain a conviction despite the relationship. The Court applied that principle in answering the complaint that no independent eyewitness had been examined. It did not hold that every relative personally witnessed the cutting of Dilip's throat or that relationship could substitute for scrutiny of credibility.

Mallikarjun and Ors. v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, was quoted on minor discrepancies. The reproduced paragraph from Bakhshish Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 12 SCC 187, in turn quotes Sunil Kumar Sambhudaya Gupta v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 13 SCC 657, and Raj Kumar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2013) 5 SCC 722. Those passages require the court to determine whether omissions or contradictions materially affect the trial or the core of the case, and warn against discarding an otherwise truthful account in its entirety because of trivial embellishments. State v. Saravanan appears within the reproduced quotation from Sunil Kumar on appellate restraint; it was not separately applied to the facts. The High Court used this chain of authority to assess the witness discrepancies; it did not hold that every omission was immaterial.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided the appeal against conviction. The trial conviction under Section 302 IPC, the sentence of life imprisonment and the fine were affirmed. Section 34 IPC appeared in the FIR's original accusation against multiple persons, but this appellate judgment describes Lakhmichand's conviction as one under Section 302 alone. The Court neither disturbed Kanhaiya's acquittal nor considered a separate appeal concerning constructive liability. The earlier police statements exhibited as Ex. D-1, D-3, D-4, D-5, D-6 and D-7 were compared with the trial evidence; the judgment made no separate ruling on their admissibility under Sections 161/162 CrPC.

The investigative narrative mentions the dispatch of articles to the FSL at Sagar and the report at Ex. P-32, but does not analyse it as proof that a particular person's blood was found on a weapon.

4. Issues : The central issue was whether the prosecution proved beyond reasonable doubt that Lakhmichand killed Dilip by inflicting the sharp neck wound, despite the witnesses' family relationship, the absence of an independent direct witness, discrepancies between the trial evidence and the FIR or police statements, and DW-2's assertion that Lakhmichand was working in a field. The related issues were whether adolescent Kundan and nine-year-old Vikram could be relied upon after scrutiny; what the mother and other relatives personally saw, as distinct from what they heard or found on arrival; whether the medical injuries corroborated the ocular account; and whether the trial court's assessment disclosed illegality or perversity. The appeal did not reopen Kanhaiya's acquittal or determine Kallu's separate status.

5. Ratio / Findings : The mother's initial report specifically accused Lakhmichand of cutting her son's neck with a hasiya. At trial, Soram Bai (PW-7) described sending Kundan to look for Dilip, hearing his cry and seeing Lakhmichand and the others flee while armed. Her FIR and police statement omitted some details about the search and what Kundan had reportedly told her. The Court acknowledged those omissions but found that the prompt FIR retained the direct attribution of the neck attack to Lakhmichand. It therefore did not treat her trial account as proof that she personally witnessed the entire assault. Rather, her evidence supported the prompt identification, Kundan's cry and the immediate aftermath.

Kundan (PW-1) testified that he saw Lakhmichand cut Dilip's neck and Kallu stab him. In cross-examination, he described the tank wall and nearby houses, acknowledged that the lower tank area was not visible from his house, and said that he went directly to the spot and was the first to arrive. His police statement, recorded two days later, omitted the names of the assembled villagers and the detail that the accused were caught, but stated that he had seen the incident and then cried for help. The Court regarded those omissions as peripheral to his account of witnessing the neck assault, taking account of his age and the shock of seeing his younger brother killed. Vikram (PW-13), aged about nine, also described reaching the spot and seeing the accused attack Dilip. The judgment notes discrepancies in his account, including the sequence and attribution of the weapons, but treats them as minor and assesses his evidence cautiously under Nivrutti.

Sheela (PW-5), Khushilal (PW-6), Pinki (PW-8) and Jyoti (PW-9) mainly heard Kundan's cry, reached the place, saw Dilip with his neck cut and observed Lakhmichand and Kallu armed, or saw the accused fleeing. They were principally witnesses to the immediate aftermath; parts of their accounts of the actual blows came from Kundan or differed as to what they had personally seen. The Court identified differences from their police statements but found the central identification and immediate aftermath consistent. Pachelal (PW-12) also saw the body and people running, not the precise cut. Balkishan (PW-10) was hostile, and the prosecution obtained nothing supportive in cross-examination; his evidence was not treated as affirmative corroboration. Ashok Kumar Jatav (PW-2) corroborated the arrest and seizure and recounted what the father had told him, not a personal view of the assault. Parvat Singh (PW-11) described the memorandum and seizure of the hasiya; in cross-examination he placed the preparation of both the memorandum and seizure memo at the police station. The Court recounted that evidence but did not rest the conviction solely on a scientifically identified weapon.

Post-mortem doctor B.L. Kushwah (PW-4) found twenty-one injuries, including an 8 x 4 x 3 cm deep transverse cut on the front of the neck that severed the major vessels, trachea and soft tissue, multiple incised injuries to the face, scalp, nape, back, hands and abdomen, and abrasions. Death resulted from shock and hemorrhage due to the multiple injuries. He said that all injuries except injury 1 were simple and that treatment within five minutes might have saved the child. The Court nevertheless found that the medical evidence corroborated the ocular evidence. The judgment did not discuss the FSL report as proving a blood match.

Kallu alias Kalluram (DW-2) said that Lakhmichand was doing agricultural work and was of good character. The Court found that assertion insufficient to displace the prompt FIR, Kundan's core account, and the supporting medical and immediate-aftermath evidence. It assessed the family relationship and the omissions instead of rejecting the prosecution testimony wholesale, and found no illegality or perversity in the trial court's appreciation. It did not state a general rule that a defence alibi fails merely because its witness is related or because a co-accused's name appears in the record.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the conviction and sentence imposed on 19 July 2010 in Sessions Trial No. 354/2009: life imprisonment under Section 302 IPC and a fine of Rs.1,000, with the original default stipulation. The operative paragraphs issued no fresh custody direction, and this judgment does not quantify the default term. Co-accused Kanhaiya's acquittal remained part of the recorded background. The evidentiary holding rests on the child's direct account, the prompt accusation, the immediate-aftermath evidence and the extensive medical corroboration.

Headnote :- IPC — Sections 327 and 383 — hurt for the purpose of extorting property — A demand for a bicycle was refused, after which the applicant assaulted the complainant with a lathi out of annoyance. That sequence did not prove that the hurt was caused to extort the bicycle or compel an illegal act. The prosecution had to establish the specific coercive purpose; timing alone could not supply it. The conviction under Section 327 was therefore set aside. The decision does not make successful delivery of property an element of Section 327; on these facts, the prosecution failed to prove the required purpose.

IPC — Section 323 — Gopal Giri's account that he was beaten with a lathi was corroborated by Dr. S.P.S. Raghuvanshi's MLC, Ex. P-6, which recorded eight contusions. Voluntary hurt remained proved beyond reasonable doubt, and the High Court substituted a conviction under Section 323. The trial acquittals under Sections 294 and 452 remained undisturbed.

Sentencing in revision — Sections 397 and 401 CrPC — The applicant had spent 26 days in custody during the trial and another 83 days after conviction, totalling 109 days. For the substituted conviction under Section 323, the Court reduced the imprisonment to the period already undergone. Because the complainant had sustained multiple injuries, it increased the fine from Rs.1,000 to Rs.15,000 and directed payment within two months, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : At about midnight on 11 April 2008, Gopal Giri was fetching water from a public tap near Shivpuri. Lala asked to borrow his bicycle. When Gopal refused, Lala abused him. After Gopal objected, Lala returned with a lathi, followed him into his home, brought him outside and struck him. Gopal fell and sustained multiple injuries. A report was lodged at Police Station Kotwali, Shivpuri, at about 12:45 a.m. on 12 April, and Crime No. 230/2008 was registered under Sections 327, 452, 294 and 323 IPC. The police had Gopal medically examined, prepared a spot map, recorded witness statements, arrested Lala and filed a charge-sheet. On 26 May 2008, the JMFC framed charges under Sections 294, 452 and 327. Eight prosecution witnesses testified, including Gopal (PW-2) and Dr. S.P.S. Raghuvanshi (PW-5); the defence called no witness. The judgment states that Lala Srivastava, Kundan Singh and Manju also witnessed the occurrence, but the revision was decided on Gopal's evidence and the MLC rather than on a separate credibility analysis of each named witness.

On 23 April 2010, the JMFC acquitted Lala under Sections 294 and 452 but convicted him under Section 327, sentencing him to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs.1,000 with a default stipulation. The Fourth Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track Court), Shivpuri, affirmed the conviction in Criminal Appeal No. 102/2010. In the revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC, Lala did not primarily deny beating Gopal. He argued that, even on the prosecution's version, the assault following refusal of the bicycle arose from annoyance, not the purpose of extortion required by Section 327, and that at most Section 323 applied. The State supported the concurrent judgments.

2. Statutes considered : Section 383 IPC defines extortion as intentionally putting a person in fear of injury and thereby dishonestly inducing the delivery of property, valuable security, or a signed or sealed item convertible into valuable security. Section 327 IPC punishes voluntarily causing hurt for the purpose of extorting property or valuable security from the sufferer or an interested person, or of constraining either person to do an illegal act or facilitate an offence. The Court quoted both provisions and focused on the purpose required by Section 327: the lathi blows had to be shown as a means of coercion, rather than a reaction to the refusal of a request. Section 323 IPC supplied the lesser offence of voluntary hurt proved by the assault and contusions. Sections 294 and 452 were among the trial charges, but the acquittals under those provisions were not disturbed. Section 323 appeared in the FIR and charge-sheet narrative, although the quoted formal-charge paragraph lists Sections 294, 452 and 327. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC supplied the revisional jurisdiction.

3. Issues : The principal issue was whether the lathi beating that followed the refusal to lend a bicycle was inflicted for the purpose of extorting that property or compelling an illegal act within Section 327. If not, did the victim's direct account and the medical evidence nevertheless prove voluntary hurt under Section 323 beyond reasonable doubt? Upon altering the conviction, what sentence and fine properly reflected the 109 days already spent in custody and the eight contusions? The Court was not required to reconsider the acquittals on the abusive-language and house-trespass charges or to decide that an unsuccessful attempt at extortion can never satisfy Section 327.

4. Ratio / Findings : Gopal (PW-2) said that Lala demanded his bicycle, abused him when he refused, grabbed his neck, threw him down and assaulted him with a lathi. The Court distinguished the sequence of events from proof of the purpose of the assault. On the prosecution's version, Lala did not use injury or fear to compel Gopal to hand over the bicycle after the refusal. Rather, the refusal angered him, and he beat Gopal out of annoyance. A conviction under Section 327 requires proof that the voluntary hurt was inflicted for the purpose of extorting property or compelling the proscribed act; that nexus was absent from the accepted prosecution account. The High Court therefore rejected the concurrent courts' legal characterisation under Section 327 without finding that the complainant had sustained no injury. Section 383 explained the concept of extortion. The order did not add completed delivery as an element of Section 327; it distinguished the required purpose of extortion from ordinary voluntary hurt by applying the statutory texts to the complainant's account.

Dr. Raghuvanshi (PW-5) recorded eight contusions in the MLC, Ex. P-6, over the lower back, left arm, left hand, right side of the neck, right buttock, posterior right thigh, left buttock and left knee. Those findings corroborated Gopal's account of the lathi assault. The Court found that hurt under Section 323 was proved beyond reasonable doubt and substituted that conviction. The applicant had spent 26 days in custody during the trial. Paragraph 18 records that he spent a further 83 days in custody after the JMFC's conviction, apparently because he did not furnish bail despite suspension of sentence, until the High Court granted bail on 14 July 2010. The Court regarded the total of 109 days as sufficient imprisonment for the lesser offence. Because of the number of injuries, it increased the fine to Rs.15,000; the order did not make a separate compensation award to Gopal.

5. Relief : The High Court disposed of the revision by setting aside the conviction under Section 327 and the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment, and substituting a conviction under Section 323. It limited imprisonment to the 109 days already undergone and increased the fine to Rs.15,000, payable within two months. In default of payment, the applicant had to undergo three months' rigorous imprisonment. The acquittals under Sections 294 and 452 remained undisturbed. The order did not direct a retrial or separate payment to the victim, or find that the bicycle had ever been transferred.

Headnote :- Investigation — accused's role — Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, establish that an accused has no right to choose a different district or agency or dictate the manner of investigation. The authorities preserve the qualified power under Article 226 to intervene where mala fide investigation is demonstrated; their distinct contexts of hearing and further investigation did not themselves warrant any such direction here. The petitioners, accused in a Section 498-A case, had already failed in an application to quash the FIR, and a charge-sheet had been filed.

Court monitoring and supervision — Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, distinguishes monitoring progress and fairness in rare cases from supervising how an investigation is conducted or influencing the police opinion under Section 173(2). Such supervision could compromise the independence of the trial. The Court therefore refused the request for SP or High Court control over investigative steps.

Article 226 — CBI transfer — State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, Constitution Bench, as quoted in Romila Thapar, requires this extraordinary power to be exercised sparingly, cautiously and only in exceptional situations, not merely on unsubstantiated allegations against the local police. Filing of the charge-sheet did not remove the High Court's constitutional power, but these accused petitioners disclosed no exceptional circumstance. The petition was dismissed without deciding innocence or guilt. The separate prayer for a marital-separation direction, based on Sneha Parikh, was recorded but not separately adjudicated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Crime No. 13/2024 was registered at Police Station Mahila Thana, Narsinghpur, under Section 498-A IPC against petitioner Lalit Jhariya and others. Lalit had earlier sought quashing of the FIR dated 4 April 2024 in M.Cr.C. No. 17045/2024, which the High Court dismissed on 7 May 2024. In this Article 226 petition, the accused petitioners sought production of the records relating to specified annexures; transfer of the inquiry outside Narsinghpur to an independent district officer under SP supervision; or a CBI investigation into the allegedly unfair inquiry by respondent No. 4. They also sought action against that officer if unfairness was found and a decision regarding separation of petitioner No. 1 and respondent No. 5 by reference to Sneha Parikh v. Manit Kumar. The order does not set out the underlying matrimonial allegations, the officer's particular acts, or evidence substantiating bias. It records that a charge-sheet had been filed before the writ petition was decided.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar and Ors. v. Union of India and Ors., 2018:INSC:912 : (2018) 10 SCC 753, was reproduced at length. It states that an accused is not entitled to appoint an investigating agency or dictate the manner of investigation, drawing on Narmada Bai and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt. Its reference to E. Sivakumar explains why an accused ordinarily need not be heard before a direction for a CBI inquiry in another case. Divine Retreat Centre distinguishes an impermissible midstream substitution of an investigator through inherent power from a justified Article 226 direction where mala fide exercise of investigative power is established. The quotation from the Constitution Bench decision in State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, preserves the Article 226/32 power to transfer an investigation to the CBI but requires sparing, cautious and exceptional use to secure credibility, complete justice or fundamental rights, rather than a routine response to allegations against the police. Paragraph 29 of Romila Thapar discussed arrests, disputed links to a banned organisation and pending defence remedies in that different case. Those were facts from the cited precedent, not facts of the Narsinghpur Section 498-A FIR. The High Court applied the principles that an accused has no say in the choice or manner of investigation and that intervention is exceptional, and then found that the petitioners had not shown an exceptional case.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, 2014:INSC:139 : (2014) 4 SCC 626, was also quoted extensively. The quoted passages addressed the absence of ordinary participation or a pre-report hearing for an accused; CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi on the absence of a right to choose the investigating agency; Sri Bhagwan Samardha on lawful further investigation after a report without a mandatory hearing for the accused; and Narender G. Goel on testing the evidentiary value later at trial. Dinubhai concerned an inquiry criticised as an effort to exculpate a suspect, unlike this petition by accused persons seeking transfer. These nested authorities explain the procedural boundary. The High Court did not itself direct further investigation under Section 173(8), hear a challenge to a letter rogatory, or decide a right to notice where someone else sought a CBI transfer. The prior local decision in Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, M.Cr.C. No. 10446/2017, decided on 30 November 2017, was cited for the same principle that an accused has no say in the manner of investigation.

Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary and Ors., 2013:INSC:839 : (2014) 2 SCC 532, was quoted on the distinction between monitoring and supervision. Monitoring can maintain oversight of progress and freedom from outside interference in rare and compelling circumstances, while supervision would direct how the police conduct the investigation and shape their opinion under Section 173(2), making an independent trial difficult. The High Court directly applied that distinction to the request for SP or court control. Sneha Parikh v. Manit Kumar, AIR 2018 SCW 575, was cited by the petitioners in relation to marital separation, but the Court neither extracted nor applied a proposition from it and did not decide the separation claim.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution supplied the writ jurisdiction under which an independent investigation and transfer to the CBI were sought. The Court expressly acknowledged that this power may be exercised even after a charge-sheet has been filed, but only on exceptional facts. Section 498-A IPC identified the matrimonial-cruelty offence alleged in the FIR, though its ingredients and truth were not tried in the writ proceedings. The earlier dismissed FIR-quashing application formed part of the procedural background, not the operative jurisdiction of this petition. Section 173(2) CrPC appeared in Manohar Lal Sharma as the police-report opinion whose independence could be undermined by judicial supervision. Section 173(8) and provisions concerning the complaint process, notice and hearing appeared in the Dinubhai quotation, but the High Court did not make a further-investigation order in this case.

4. Issues : The Court identified three controlling questions: whether an accused can seek investigation by a chosen agency or in a chosen manner; whether the High Court may supervise investigative steps; and whether any exceptional circumstance justified transfer to the CBI in this case. Because the charge-sheet had been filed, the Court also addressed whether its constitutional transfer power remained available and whether the petitioners could pursue their defence before the trial court. The marital-separation prayer and the conditional request for action against respondent No. 4 were recorded in the relief clause but received no separate factual or legal analysis on the merits. The Court was not deciding the underlying Section 498-A allegations or reconsidering the merits of the already dismissed quashing application.

5. Ratio / Findings : The cited Supreme Court authorities deny an accused an ordinary right to select the investigator, district, mode or agency. The petitioners' status as accused persons and their preference for investigation outside Narsinghpur or by the CBI could not by themselves justify writ control. The possibility of intervention under Article 226 for a mala fide investigation or a genuinely exceptional case affecting rights remains; the quoted decisions in Romila Thapar and Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights expressly preserve that power. Here, however, the petitioners established no exceptional circumstance. The decision therefore rejects this particular petition; it does not hold that an accused can never seek a fair-investigation remedy, regardless of the facts.

Manohar Lal Sharma supplied a separate structural reason for refusing the request that the police investigate under judicial or administrative directions about particular steps. Monitoring in a rare case watches progress and fairness; supervision dictates the conduct of the investigation and risks influencing the trial court through the resulting police opinion. The High Court held that directing investigation in a particular manner would amount to supervision and refused that relief. It did not categorically bar monitoring in an appropriate rare case.

Filing of the charge-sheet did not divest the High Court of its Article 226 power to direct a CBI investigation, but the absence of exceptional circumstances made transfer unwarranted. The petitioners could assert their innocence and challenge the prosecution evidence before the trial court. Dismissal of the earlier quashing application was procedural background, not an evidentiary finding of guilt in this writ proceeding. The Court made no separate order on marital separation or punitive action against the officer.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the writ petition. It did not transfer the investigation to another district or the CBI, direct an SP-controlled method or court-supervised investigation, order action against respondent No. 4, or grant a separation direction. The filed charge-sheet and the petitioners' ordinary opportunity to defend themselves at trial remained. The judgment did not decide the truth of the cruelty allegation.

Lalit Jhariya and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 22960/2024, 22/08/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- IPC — Sections 415, 420, 463, 464, 465, 468 and 471 — alleged false affidavit prepared from a signature on blank paper — A chowkidar allegedly signed blank paper without knowing its intended contents; text was later typed on it and presented as his sworn affidavit supporting a reply in a civil suit. An affidavit is a legally significant declaration on oath, not an expendable sheet of paper. On those allegations, obtaining the signature by deception, falsely attributing the completed document to the signatory, and using it as genuine prima facie disclosed cheating, forgery, forgery for cheating and use of a forged document. The notary's inability to recall a register signature, lack of personal acquaintance with the deponent and the police failure to seize the register raised questions of authenticity; they did not establish fabrication conclusively at the charge stage.

CrPC — Section 195(1)(b)(ii) — Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, approving Sachida Nand Singh, holds that the bar concerning the specified document offences applies when the forgery is committed after the document has been produced in court and while it is in custodia legis. An affidavit allegedly fabricated outside court before it was filed did not attract that bar.

Revision against framing of charges — Sections 397 and 401 CrPC — Despite a specific query, the applicant did not produce the complete charge-sheet or Mahesh's police statement. The High Court therefore examined the allegations only provisionally, affirmed the charges under Sections 420, 465, 468 and 471 IPC, and directed the trial court to decide the case on the evidence without being influenced by its observations. Smt. Kamla Sharma, Dalip Singh, Muthu Karuppan, Dhananjay Sharma, Baban Singh and Chandra Shashi were discussed through a quoted earlier High Court decision on the seriousness of false sworn filings; the order made no finding of contempt or perjury against this applicant.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rishi Parisar and Surya Nagar are adjoining colonies in Bhopal. Lalji Sharma, a resident of Rishi Parisar, alleged that the water and electricity infrastructure serving his colony stood outside it on land in Surya Nagar and that the Surya Nagar complainant had taken unauthorised connections, leaving Rishi Parisar residents with inadequate water. The complainant and his wife were advocates. In their pending civil suit, RCSA No. 369/2016, for declaration and permanent injunction, Lalji supported his reply to an application under Order 39 Rules 1 and 2 CPC with an affidavit attributed to Mahesh Ahirwar, a chowkidar at the infrastructure. The complainant later produced a three-page affidavit in which Mahesh disowned the earlier affidavit and said that Lalji had obtained his signature on blank paper without disclosing its purpose. The truth of those rival accounts remained for trial.

An application under Sections 340 and 195 CrPC, invoking Sections 191, 192, 193 and 196 IPC in relation to the disputed affidavit, had earlier been rejected on the ground that the matter concerned evidence. The complainant then applied under Section 156(3) CrPC, alleging cheating and forgery. By an order dated 1 June 2018, the JMFC directed registration of an FIR under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B IPC. After investigation, the police filed a charge-sheet, and on 29 May 2024 the Sessions Court framed charges in Sessions Trial No. 292/2022 under Sections 420, 465, 468 and 471. Lalji, appearing in person, challenged that order in revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. He argued that, even if accepted, the allegations disclosed at most false evidence under Section 193, for which Section 195 required a court complaint, and not cheating or forgery. The High Court noted that he had filed selected portions of the police papers, omitting Mahesh's Section 161 statement and other annexures, and declined to make a definitive assessment of the evidence at the charge stage.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court quoted its earlier decision in Smt. Kamla Sharma and Ors. v. Sukhdevlal and Ors., M.Cr.C. No. 8770/2016, decided on 18 April 2022, on the status of an affidavit as a verified statement on oath carrying evidentiary and penal significance. That decision reproduced provisions of the General Clauses Act, the Oaths Act and the IPC relating to false evidence, and surveyed Supreme Court authorities. Dalip Singh v. State of U.P., (2010) 2 SCC 114, condemned falsehood and suppression by litigants. Muthu Karuppan v. Parithi Ilamvazhuthi, (2011) 5 SCC 496, required prima facie deliberate falsehood on a material matter and expediency in the interests of justice before prosecution. Dhananjay Sharma v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 SCC 757, explained how false affidavits may obstruct justice and constitute contempt. Baban Singh v. Jagdish Singh, AIR 1967 SC 68, distinguished false evidence on oath under Sections 191 and 192 from a declaration under Section 199. Chandra Shashi v. Anil Kumar Verma, (1995) 1 SCC 421, concerned fabricated material filed in court and contempt by deceit. Rita Markandey's reliance on Dhananjay Sharma also appeared within the quoted decision. These authorities explained the gravity and authentication of sworn filings; they were not separate findings that Lalji had committed contempt or perjury. The Court used that discussion to reject his description of the affidavit as an insignificant piece of paper.

The directly applied authority on the statutory bar was Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, 2005:INSC:129 : (2005) 4 SCC 370. Paragraph 33, as quoted, approved Sachida Nand Singh v. State of Bihar, (1998) 2 SCC 493, and confined Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC to the specified offences committed in relation to a document after its production or admission in court, while it was in custodia legis. The High Court applied that temporal distinction because the alleged typing and fabrication occurred outside court before the affidavit was filed.

3. Statutes considered : Section 415 IPC defines cheating by deception and fraudulent or dishonest inducement to deliver or retain property, or by inducing an act or omission likely to cause harm; Section 420 punishes the relevant form of cheating. Section 463 defines forgery, and Section 464 includes making a document with false authorship or authority and obtaining a signature through deception about its contents. Sections 465, 468 and 471 were the framed charges for forgery, forgery for the purpose of cheating and using a forged document as genuine. Sections 467 and 120-B appeared in the directed FIR but were not among the four charges under challenge. The quoted earlier High Court decision referred to Sections 24, 25 and 191–193 IPC, Section 3(3) of the General Clauses Act and Sections 3–4 of the Oaths Act to explain the significance of an oath. Section 193 was Lalji's proposed alternative characterisation, not a framed charge. Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC requires a court complaint for the specified document offences committed after production while the document is in court custody, as construed in Iqbal Singh Marwah. Sections 340 and 195 appeared in the earlier rejected application and Lalji's statutory-bar argument. Sections 397 and 401 governed the revision; Section 161 concerned the omitted statement of Mahesh and the available statement of the notary. The underlying application under Order 39 CPC explained the purpose for which the affidavit was filed but was not decided in the revision.

4. Issues : Did the alleged procurement of Mahesh's signature on blank paper, the later insertion of contents, and presentation of the completed paper as his authorised sworn affidavit disclose the ingredients of cheating and making and using a false document sufficient to sustain charges under Sections 420, 465, 468 and 471? Did Section 195 bar the police prosecution merely because the affidavit was filed in a civil court, or only if the relevant forgery occurred after the document had been produced in court? Could the applicant obtain a merits assessment in revision by relying on selected charge-sheet papers while withholding Mahesh's police statement? The Court also considered the notary's identification, the missing register and the legal significance of an affidavit. It did not decide ownership of the utility infrastructure, the legality of the complainant's connections, the genuineness of Mahesh's first affidavit, or guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court quoted Sections 415, 463 and 464 IPC and tested the charge allegations on a provisional assumption that they were true. On its view that an affidavit is property and a legally significant document, the alleged deceptive procurement of the signature could sustain the charge under Section 420. Adding words without the signatory's authority and presenting the completed paper as his affidavit could satisfy Section 464's definition of making a false document and support the charges under Sections 465, 468 and 471. This was a charge-stage characterisation, not a final finding that Lalji had forged the affidavit. Because Lalji had omitted annexures and Mahesh's Section 161 statement, the Court did not have the complete police material; it also directed that the trial court remain uninfluenced by its provisional observations. In his Section 161 statement, notary Manohar Pathak said that he did not consider it necessary to obtain a deponent's signature in his register, could not recall whether he had done so in this instance, did not know Mahesh personally, and had been told the accompanying person's name by the person identified by the applicant. The police did not seize the register. The High Court criticised that investigative omission because the register could have shed light on the notary's practice and the authenticity of the disputed affidavit. It did not treat the omission alone as conclusive proof that the affidavit was forged, and the notary's credibility remained for trial. The Court stressed that an affidavit is a declaration on oath carrying legal consequences and cannot be treated as worthless; the quoted false-affidavit authorities supplied context, not a contempt order in this case.

The alleged fabrication occurred outside court before the affidavit was filed, not by alteration or interpolation while the document was in court custody. Under Iqbal Singh Marwah, the bar in Section 195(1)(b)(ii) did not defeat the present cheating and forgery prosecution. Lalji's contention that only Section 193 could apply did not answer the independent allegations of pre-filing fabrication and cheating. The Court expressly noted that the trial court had not framed a charge under Section 193 and considered that provision only because Lalji had relied on it.

6. Relief : The High Court affirmed the Sessions Court's order dated 29 May 2024 in Sessions Trial No. 292/2022 and dismissed the criminal revision. The charges under Sections 420, 465, 468 and 471 IPC remained for trial. The Court expressly directed the trial court to decide the case independently on the evidence, without being influenced or prejudiced by its provisional observations. There was no conviction, contempt finding, charge under Section 193, direction to seize the notary register, or decision on the pending civil suit.

Lalji Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., Cr.R. no. 3372/2024, 24/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- FIR timing — homicide occurred at about 20:00 and FIR ex. P-1 was recorded at 20:20 — Later family protest and the investigating officer's description of a subsequent arrival with the body did not prove an antedated or antetimed FIR. The FIR scribe affirmed 20:20; the CSP already knew Crime No. 1/2011 by 20:30–20:45, and the eyewitnesses described transfer of the body to hospital after reporting. Protest about incomplete recording and later naming of Puran did occur. Dharmendrasinh, Achhar Singh and Bhagwan Jagannath Markad require the whole evidence, not a stray sentence, to be assessed.

CrPC — Section 157(1) — Dispatch of the FIR to the Magistrate was not proved: no date, dispatch number or acknowledgement was proved, nor was evidence from the carrier produced. The provision safeguards against manipulation. Mahmood, Jafarudheen and Zahira Habibulla require careful appraisal of the other evidence rather than automatic acquittal for a police lapse. Similarly, the absence of a light-pole notation in the map did not invalidate identification by eyewitnesses who knew the accused as neighbours and saw them in the light from the market and motorcycle. Prithvi (Minor) was applied.

Witnesses — pillion rider and two brothers — Enmity may motivate crime or false implication. Kinship does not by itself discredit testimony, and an interested/inimical witness calls for discerning scrutiny. The Court addressed Harbeer Singh, Raju, Yogesh Singh, Mohd. Rojali Ali and other Supreme Court authorities and distinguished the cases of Kanakarajan and Noor Aga, cited by the defence, where independent proof was inadequate. The closure of shops and reluctance of local bystanders helped explain why no independent market witness testified; the three direct accounts were accepted.

Section 313 CrPC — The firearm FSL report, which had not been put to the appellants, was excluded under Bhalinder Singh and Samsul Haque. The evidence of seizure and the armourer remained; the seized weapons were not linked to the actual fatal projectile. Rakesh, Gulab and Krishna Gope establish that nonrecovery of the precise murder weapon does not invariably defeat reliable direct evidence.

Medical and common object — One close-range gunshot caused fatal brain injury; stab and laceration were also documented. The fact that only one shot hit the deceased despite three alleged shooters, and that a laceration was found despite the alleged use of a sword, did not completely rule out the eyewitness account, under CBI v. Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, Baleshwar Mahto and Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy. Krishnappa holds that Section 149 liability does not require each armed member to strike or inflict a distinct wound. The convictions of the five appellants under Sections 148 and 302/149 IPC, and of three appellants under Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27 of the Arms Act, together with their concurrent sentences, were affirmed. Puran remained acquitted. All four appeals were dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : At about 20:00 on 4 January 2011 Pinkad rode a motorcycle through Chhatri Mandi, Gwalior, with his friend Girish (PW-1) as pillion. He paused to speak with brothers Nihal (PW-2) and Ravindra (PW-3) at a handpump. According to the FIR and their evidence, Gopal Pal, Chimppi alias Narendra and Lalla alias Dharmendra appeared with country-made pistols, Monu Maratha with a sword, and Illu alias Ramendra with a katar. Gopal made a hostile statement referring to Pinkad as a Mehtar and threatened to kill him. The three pistol holders fired; Monu and Illu struck with their weapons. Girish jumped away, the brothers hid when threatened, and Pinkad fell with a head gunshot injury and bleeding. The five fled. Nihal lodged FIR Ex. P-1, Crime No. 1/2011, recorded at 20:20; the body was taken in an auto to the police station and mortuary. The prosecution attributed motive to previous hostility over alleged teasing. Nihal later complained that Puran alias Dhapole also used fists/blows, leading to his addition as sixth accused.

Police recorded merg, prepared an inquest and spot map, seized ordinary and blood-stained earth, arrested and recovered several weapons, and charged IPC Sections 302, 341, 147–149, SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act Section 3(2)(v), and Arms Act Sections 25/27. The Special Judge (Atrocities), Gwalior, in Special Sessions Trial No. 105/2011 acquitted Puran but convicted the five present appellants on 7 May 2012 under Sections 148 and 302/149 IPC. Lalla, Chimppi and Gopal additionally were convicted under Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27. Each received one year RI and Rs.1,000 fine for Section 148, life imprisonment and Rs.10,000 fine for Section 302/149, with one month's simple imprisonment in default for Section 148 and four months' simple imprisonment in default for Section 302/149; the three Arms Act appellants additionally received one year RI and Rs.1,000 fine under Section 25(1-B)(a), and seven years RI and Rs.1,000 fine under Section 27, with one-month default SI for each Arms count. Terms were concurrent. The record does not identify a separate SC/ST Act conviction in the sentencing table.

2. Precedents — Considered : On alleged FIR antetiming and isolated discrepancies, Dharmendrasinh v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 4 SCC 679, rejects mechanical application of falsus in uno and assesses exaggeration or faulty investigation against the whole corroborated account. Achhar Singh v. State of H.P., (2021) 5 SCC 543, distinguishes an exaggerated statement, where a truthful core may survive, from a wholly false one; Bhagwan Jagannath Markad v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 10 SCC 537, similarly asks if discrepancies shake the account's core. The Court used these when reconciling IO PW-11's later station-arrival passage with the scribe's evidence and the early knowledge of the crime number, not to pronounce every protest statement true.

On Section 157 dispatch and investigative defects, Leela Ram v. State of Haryana, (1999) 9 SCC 525, cautions against automatic rejection for investigative irregularity. Mahmood v. State of U.P., (2007) 14 SCC 16, quoting Anil Rai and Alla China Apparao, describes Magistrate oversight and the significance of extraordinary unexplained delay in sending the FIR copy, which depends on the facts. Jafarudheen v. State of Kerala similarly emphasizes early Magistrate receipt to guard against later embellishment while rejecting delay as sole ground for acquittal. State of U.P. v. Jagdeo, (2003) 1 SCC 456, and Zahira Habibulla H. Sheikh v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 4 SCC 158, require an independent and analytical appraisal of credible evidence, potentially using trial/appellate evidence powers in an appropriate case, rather than rewarding designedly poor investigation. Their nested State of Rajasthan v. Kishore, Karnel Singh, Paras Yadav, Ram Bihari Yadav and Amar Singh references were background. Prithvi (Minor) v. Mam Raj, (2004) 13 SCC 279, treats a missing light-pole notation in a site plan as a potential investigative lapse, not automatic destruction of credible close-range identification.

The Court quoted an extensive series of decisions on related witnesses: Kunwarpal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2014) 16 SCC 560, and State of U.P. v. Kishan Chand, (2004) 7 SCC 629, recognise that enmity may provide a motive both for false implication and for the crime. Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, and Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, discuss scrutiny of related or genuinely interested testimony, its quality and when cautious corroboration may be helpful. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52; Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195; Rupinder Singh Sandhu, Shamim, Rizan and Mohd. Rojali Ali, (2019) 19 SCC 567, reinforce fact-specific scrutiny. Embedded Dalip Singh, Darya Singh, Hari Obula Reddy and other authorities elaborate, but were not individually applied to the facts of this occurrence.

For missing market witnesses, Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271; Nagarjit Ahir v. State of Bihar, (2005) 10 SCC 369; State of A.P. v. S. Rayappa, (2006) 4 SCC 512; and Sadhu Saran Singh v. State of U.P., (2016) 4 SCC 357, recognize that reliable testimony is not automatically discredited by bystanders' reluctance to testify. The defence cited Kanakarajan v. State of Kerala, (2017) 13 SCC 597, where missing credible independent witnesses mattered alongside weak prosecution proof, and Noor Aga v. State of Punjab, (2008) 16 SCC 417, concerning unexplained absence of material search witnesses and serious procedural gaps in a different special-statute context. The Court did not treat those decisions as laying down an incorrect rule; it distinguished their factual need for independent corroboration from reliable eyewitness accounts and a closed market here.

On Section 313, Bhalinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (1994) 1 SCC 726, prevents reliance on an incriminating circumstance never put to the accused and insists prosecution stand on its own proof. Samsul Haque v. State of Assam, (2019) 18 SCC 161, quotes Asraf Ali's need for distinct questions and demonstrated prejudice, and Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade on excluding unput material or sometimes remitting a deficient examination. The Court chose exclusion of this FSL report, without ordering a retrial. Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188; Gulab v. State of U.P., Criminal Appeal No. 81/2021, 9 December 2021; and Krishna Gope v. State of Bihar, (2003) 10 SCC 45, separately explain why failure to seize or match the actual homicide weapon does not invariably defeat credible direct proof.

On differences between eyewitness and medical evidence, CBI v. Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC 1, was quoted at length, including Yogesh Singh, Sunil Kundu, Bastiram and Dayal Singh to distinguish ordinary variance from medical impossibility. Baleshwar Mahto v. State of Bihar, (2017) 3 SCC 152, quoted Kamaljit Singh on minor variations. Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy v. State of A.P., (2014) 12 SCC 457, supported a possibility that a cutting weapon's blunt edge or dulled blade produced a laceration. The local Division Bench Bhaggo Bai v. State of M.P., Cr.A. No. 1116/2014, decided 13 May 2022, was also cited on that point. These authorities do not mean medical proof may be disregarded where it completely rules out the asserted assault. Finally, Krishnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2012) 11 SCC 237, supplied the Section 149 common-object rule that actual injury by each assembly member is unnecessary; nested Lalji, Allauddin Mian, Ranbir Yadav, Kishan Chand and Deo Narain were supporting references.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 148 punished armed rioting and Section 302 read with Section 149 supplied homicide liability for each member of an unlawful assembly acting for the common object or knowing the offence likely. Section 149 differs from direct attribution of a particular fatal bullet. IPC Sections 147 and 341 appeared in the charge-sheet background. The charges included Section 302 read with SC/ST Act Section 3(2)(v) or, in the alternative, Section 302/149 IPC read with Section 3(2)(v), in the context of the alleged caste-related language. However, the appeal's sentencing table and conclusion identify no separate Atrocities Act conviction; the High Court did not analyse the caste ingredient as a distinct appellate issue. The three pistol appellants' separate convictions were under Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27. CrPC Section 157(1) governed prompt FIR copy to the Magistrate, a safeguard not proved complied with here; Section 159 was referenced in Supreme Court quotations on Magistrate oversight. Section 313 required an opportunity to explain the forensic report, which was excluded for lack of a question. Sections 311 and 391 CrPC and Evidence Act Section 165 appeared in Zahira's discussion of tools for dealing with designedly deficient investigation, but were not exercised in this appeal.

4. Issues : Was Pinkad's death homicidal, and did three eyewitnesses identify the five convicted appellants in a well-lit market group attack? Was Ex. P-1 actually registered at 20:20 or prepared later after protest, and what consequence flowed from failure to prove Section 157 Magistrate dispatch? Should the accounts of Girish, Nihal and Ravindra be discounted because two were brothers and one a friend, there was prior enmity, and no independent shopkeeper testified? Did the missing pole in the spot map make nighttime identification unsafe? What remained of recovery proof after excluding an FSL report not put under Section 313, and did absence of a forensic link to the actual murder weapon destroy ocular proof? Did one fatal bullet and a laceration conflict materially with testimony of three shots and sword/katar blows? Finally, could Lalla and Chimppi be convicted under Section 302/149 when neither was individually shown to have fired the only bullet that hit? The appeal did not adjudicate a separate SC/ST Act conviction or a new charge against acquitted Puran.

abrasion. He attributed death to shock and hemorrhage from the head injury, which was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature, and described the death as homicidal. He said the tattooing suggested a close shot, only one entry existed, some other injuries could result from fall or a sharp/double-edged weapon, and no seized weapon was shown to him.

Girish rode immediately behind Pinkad, while Nihal and Ravindra stood nearby. They named Gopal, Lalla, Chimppi, Monu and Illu with pistols, sword and katar and described the firing and assault. Their presence was natural; old enmity required closer scrutiny but also gave a possible motive for attack. The Court found their core accounts credible despite some differences in precise weapon effects and the later naming of Puran, whom the trial court acquitted. The market was open at the time; local accused were known to witnesses; proximity, asserted street illumination, shops and motorcycle headlamp permitted observation. The site plan's failure to mark a pole was a police omission, not conclusive proof of darkness. Shops had closed by the IO's arrival and the Court found missing independent market testimony did not in these circumstances outweigh direct accounts. The Court also referred to the general reluctance of bystanders to testify against local accused persons.

For the FIR chronology, the FIR scribe PW-15 maintained that it was recorded at 20:20. CSP PW-11 said he learned of the registered crime number by 20:30–20:45 and went to the scene, then described a later police-station visit and protest with the body. The Court read these statements with the eyewitnesses' account that the body had been taken to hospital after reporting and could have returned. It accepted that agitation occurred and inferred it concerned disagreement over details recorded; Puran was added by a later written application. The defence did not put the protest sequence to Nihal or Ravindra. It rejected antetiming. Separately, it found no proof of the FIR copy's dispatch or receipt before the Magistrate under Section 157. That failure required close examination of other evidence with appropriate caution, rather than treating the FIR as false merely because the first informant could not control police dispatch.

The IO recounted recoveries of three country pistols, a sword and a katar, supported by seizure witnesses, and armourer PW-9 found the sealed firearms working with an explosive smell. The FSL report on Gopal's pistol was not put to the accused under Section 313 and was therefore excluded. The Court further acknowledged that no reliable connection had been established between the seized weapons and the fatal shot, treating the actual crime weapon as untraced. That did not eliminate credible ocular proof under the cited nonrecovery cases. The separate Arms Act convictions in the trial order were affirmed.

Only one shot struck Pinkad although three armed men reportedly fired. The Court held that, once Lalla and Chimppi were found to be members of the unlawful assembly who participated in the assault, whether their shots hit the deceased was immaterial. The buttock stab was compatible with sharp attack; the head laceration could be from a dulled sword edge, its blunt side, impact or fall as considered by the doctor. The medical picture did not entirely negate the witnesses' group-assault narrative. Lalla and Chimppi were named and placed in the armed five-person assembly from the beginning, and Section 149 made their membership and homicidal common object, rather than proof of a separate wound from each, the controlling question. The Court affirmed guilt beyond reasonable doubt; it did not extend conviction to Puran or identify which of the three seized pistols caused death.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed all four connected appeals; the Special Judge's 7 May 2012 convictions and concurrent sentences were affirmed. Lalla, Chimppi, Gopal, Illu and Monu remained convicted under IPC Sections 148 and 302/149 with the specified life term, fines and defaults; Lalla, Chimppi and Gopal also remained convicted under Arms Act Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27 with the trial's respective one-year and seven-year terms and fines. Illu, on bail, had his bonds cancelled and was directed to surrender immediately; the others, in jail, were to serve the remainder. Copies were to be supplied free and the trial record returned. Puran's acquittal and the absence of a separately stated SC/ST Act conviction were not disturbed.

Lalla and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 467/2012 & 531/2012 & 711/2012 & 770/2012, 21/11/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (320) Prev Next

Headnote :- False evidence — Section 340 CrPC — preliminary inquiry — The Court applied

Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253: the court must form an opinion that inquiry into an offence which appears to have been committed is expedient in the interests of justice, but may do so from the material already before it without a preliminary inquiry. Such an inquiry, if chosen, aids the expediency decision and is not a trial of guilt. Absence of a separate inquiry did not invalidate the complaint against the seizure witness merely on that account.

False evidence — Section 340 complaint — proposed accused's hearing — The Court also applied Pritish, (2002) 1 SCC 253, to hold that there is no statutory right to be heard by the referring court before it makes the complaint. The appeal provided by Section 341 does not imply a requirement of a pre-complaint hearing. The person has a right to participate and seek discharge at the later Magistrate stage; the referring court does not decide guilt or innocence. Laxman Rao's objection that he was entitled to be heard before the complaint was made therefore failed.

False evidence — expediency and administration of justice — The Court applied Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370: a court complaint is discretionary and turns on the apparent misconduct's effect on justice, not a routine response to every incorrect statement. Laxman Rao, a seizure witness and Gram Raksha Samiti member, first placed ₹80,000 recovery in Pahada, corrected it to Ramkumar Niranjan's Bhander house when confronted by the prosecutor, then reverted to Pahada in defence cross-examination. The High Court assessed this repeated material shift as deliberate assistance to the accused and upheld the trial court's complaint direction. The pending prosecution was to proceed; the revision was dismissed, without a finding of criminal guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In a trial arising from the 13 July 2009 robbery of bus passenger Rakesh Jain and the taking of approximately ₹20 lakh, charges under IPC Sections 120-B and 412 were pending in Sessions Trial No. 118/2010. Laxman Rao was a witness to a seizure involving ₹80,000 said to be accused Ramkumar Niranjan's share. In examination-in-chief he stated that Niranjan's memorandum placed the money in his village Pahada and that it was seized from his house there under Ex. P-7. The prosecution treated this as incorrect and had him declared hostile. In the prosecutor's cross-examination Rao corrected the location to Niranjan's house at Bhander, attributing his first answer to faded memory. In the accused's cross-examination he acknowledged Gram Raksha Samiti membership but again said that the money had been seized from Pahada. The High Court characterized the alternating material accounts as intentional weakening of the prosecution case. It did not determine the truth of the recovery as an issue in the robbery trial or finally adjudicate Rao's criminal liability.

The Sessions Court's final decision on 4 February 2013 directed a complaint under Section 340 CrPC concerning Rao's evidence. A complaint was filed as Criminal Case No. 145/2013. Rao objected that there had been no preliminary inquiry; the JMFC at Guna rejected that application on 1 September 2018. The First Additional Sessions Judge dismissed his Criminal Appeal No. 251/2018. Rao invoked Sections 397 and 401 CrPC to challenge the order. He argued that preliminary inquiry and a hearing were needed and that a witness should not be prosecuted merely because his evidence did not support the prosecution. The State opposed the revision.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pritish v. State of Maharashtra and others, (2002) 1 SCC 253, was quoted and applied on two distinct procedural points. Its discussion of Section 340 requires the court to consider whether an inquiry into an offence apparently committed in relation to its proceedings is expedient in the interests of justice. The preliminary inquiry is an optional means of reaching that opinion, not a compulsory precondition or an adjudication whether a particular person is guilty. The High Court used this rule to reject Rao's argument that the complaint failed without a prior separate inquiry. Pritish also explains that, although the referring court need not give the proposed accused a pre-complaint hearing, the person is heard when called by the Magistrate, can participate in the pre-trial inquiry and can seek discharge. The Section 341 appeal does not imply an earlier hearing right. The High Court followed these safeguards at the respective procedural stages in rejecting Rao's second objection. The quoted Pritish passage itself referred to the Constitution Bench caution in M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, against pronouncing guilt or innocence at the Section 340 stage; the High Court's use of Pritish keeps the present opinion within that threshold and does not involve a separate examination of the facts in M.S. Sheriff.

Iqbal Singh Marwah and another v. Meenakshi Marwah and another, (2005) 4 SCC 370, paragraph 23, was quoted on the discretion conferred by Section 340. A court is not bound to complain about every apparent offence within Section 195(1)(b). Expediency is assessed by the effect or impact on the administration of justice, rather than merely the magnitude of harm to a particular person; even serious individual loss from a forged document can have a limited bearing on proceedings amid voluminous evidence. The cited passage also warns against a construction leaving a forgery victim remediless. This case involved shifting sworn testimony about the site of seizure. The High Court applied the expediency criterion to Rao's repeated changes on a material recovery fact and affirmed the complaint, rather than adopting an automatic-prosecution rule.

3. Statutes considered : Section 340 CrPC authorizes the court, on considering it expedient in the interests of justice that inquiry be made into an apparently committed offence described in Section 195(1)(b) in or in relation to its proceedings, to record the requisite opinion and make a written complaint to the competent Magistrate; it may hold a preliminary inquiry first but need not. Section 195(1)(b) governs the court-complaint route for the covered public-justice offences. Section 341 provides an appeal from a court's complaint decision; the quoted Pritish analysis explains why that later remedy does not mandate a prior hearing. The Magistrate's ensuing procedure and discharge protections were described through CrPC Sections 343 and 238–243; these govern later adjudication, not the referring court's Section 340 threshold. Sections 397 and 401 supplied the High Court's revisional jurisdiction. The underlying robbery-related IPC Sections 120-B and 412 identify the separate trial in which Rao testified; they were not charges adjudicated against him in this revision.

4. Issues : First, did Section 340 make a preliminary inquiry indispensable before a court could direct a complaint about Rao's allegedly false seizure testimony? Second, was Rao entitled to be heard by that court before the complaint was made, given the later appeal and Magistrate procedures? Third, did the varying answers show more than an ordinary hostile or mistaken witness, so that inquiry was expedient in the interests of justice rather than automatic punishment for failure to support the prosecution? The revision did not determine whether the ₹80,000 had actually been recovered in Bhander or Pahada, the accused's guilt in Sessions Trial No. 118/2010, or Rao's guilt in the separate complaint prosecution.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted Pritish's distinction between forming an expediency opinion and conducting an optional preliminary inquiry to help form it. A court may use the proceedings and evidence already available to decide that the apparent false-evidence offence should be examined by the criminal court; the absence of a separate inquiry is not, by itself, fatal. The High Court rejected Rao's argument that a preliminary inquiry was mandatory. The High Court did not say every hostile turn is enough: the discretion still requires an interests-of-justice finding. It also applied Pritish's hearing sequence. The referring court is deciding whether an allegation merits inquiry, not whether Rao is guilty, so he had no pre-complaint hearing right at that stage. He retained the legal opportunity to answer the accusation before the Magistrate and to seek discharge; a Section 341 appeal is a distinct later safeguard.

On expediency, the High Court examined the three answers rather than treating the witness's mere failure to support the prosecution as conclusive. In chief Rao placed the recovery in Pahada. Under the prosecutor's questioning he gave Bhander, saying forgetfulness had led to the first mistake. Under the accused's questioning he again identified Pahada as the place of recovery. Because the recovery location was material to the prosecution case, the Court inferred intentional assistance to the accused from the repeated reversal. Rao's Gram Raksha Samiti membership and the statutory duties the Court attributed to it were considered in its assessment. Iqbal Singh Marwah's administration-of-justice criterion supplied the reason to sustain the complaint in these circumstances, not a rule requiring prosecution whenever a witness varies an answer. The present conclusion is a Section 340 threshold and revisional finding, leaving proof of a charged offence to the ensuing criminal trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision. The interim stay of Criminal Case No. 145/2013, granted on 19 August 2019, was vacated. The trial Magistrate was directed to make every endeavour to conclude the prosecution within one year from the decision; if Rao failed to cooperate, the court below was free to take coercive steps to secure early disposal. No conviction for false evidence was entered in this revision, and no determination of the underlying robbery accused's liability was made.

Laxman Rao v. Court of Third Additional Sessions Judge, Guna and others, Cr.R. no. 3958/2019, 02/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Multiple FIRs — one search, three statutes — A house raid allegedly disclosed country liquor, ganja and a loaded unlicensed pistol, producing Excise Act, NDPS Act and Arms Act FIRs within six minutes. The High Court held that the officer's choice to record three offences separately did not, by itself, establish a deliberate mala fide act aimed at preventing the accused from canvassing for his wife. It did not decide an abstract same-transaction second-FIR rule or guilt for the alleged recoveries.

Investigation — accused's choice of agency — The Court applied Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, including its discussion of Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt and E. Sivakumar: the accused has no entitlement to select an investigating agency or dictate the manner of investigation. The High Court also followed Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior. The registration of three FIRs within that period and the unsubstantiated allegation of political pressure did not justify transfer to an independent agency.

Article 226 — fair investigation and exceptional transfer — Romila Thapar's discussion of Divine Retreat Centre preserved intervention for demonstrated mala fide exercise of investigative power, while State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, requires CBI transfer to be ordered sparingly and cautiously for exceptional needs, rather than routinely on allegations against the police. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, AIR 2014 SC 666, was invoked against supervising the investigation. No specific illegality or basis for exceptional intervention was established here, so transfer and other writ relief were refused. The request to preserve CCTV footage and to pursue officials was not separately decided on the merits.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Laxman Yadav petitioned under Article 226 after Police Station Datia Civil Lines registered three crimes following a search of his house on 4 July 2022. He said Crime Nos. 239, 240 and 241/2022 were lodged within six minutes under ruling-party pressure, deliberately preventing him from canvassing for his wife in the Datia municipal councillor election. He asked principally for investigation of Crimes 240 and 241 by an independent agency, inquiry and disciplinary action against police officials, and preservation of CCTV footage for 4 July from midnight until 6 a.m. These were his allegations and requested remedies, not established findings of political interference.

The State said one raid found seven boxes with 350 quarters of country liquor, a total described by the Court as 63 bulk litres, 500 grams of ganja, and an unlicensed loaded .315-bore country-made pistol. Crime No. 239 was for Section 34(2) of the M.P. Excise Act, No. 240 for Section 25(1) of the Arms Act and No. 241 for Sections 8/20 of the NDPS Act. The State emphasized that the NDPS FIR itself recorded a smell of liquor and ganja during the raid and argued that distinct offences under different enactments justified distinct registrations, with no procedural lapse or evidence of fabrication. The High Court treated the account of the raid and items as appearing from the record for the limited writ decision. It did not conduct a trial of possession, licence status or search reliability.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar and others v. Union of India and others, (2018) 10 SCC 753, paragraphs 24–30, was quoted at length and expressly applied. It reaffirmed that an accused cannot choose the agency or method of investigation. The quoted passage relied on Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat for the no-choice principle and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India for no accused right to control the manner of investigation or prosecution; the latter itself listed W.N. Chadha, Mayawati, Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki, CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, CCI v. SAIL and Janata Dal as supporting authorities without separately analysing their facts. Romila also discussed E. Sivakumar v. Union of India, which rejected an accused's demand for a hearing as a matter of course before a transfer to the CBI in the circumstances there, referring to Dinubhai and Narender G. Goel. The present petitioner was affirmatively seeking transfer, so that quoted principle explains the limits on the accused’s hearing rights, but no separate hearing claim was decided in this case.

The same Romila passage explained Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala: neither accused nor complainant may choose an officer as of right, and inherent jurisdiction does not permit a midstream replacement merely to substitute an officer of the court's own choice; Article 226 nevertheless allows directions on convincing proof of mala fide exercise of investigative power. It reproduced the Constitution Bench warning in State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, paragraph 70: constitutional CBI transfers are exceptional and require caution, for example where investigative credibility, national or international implications, complete justice or enforcement of fundamental rights require them; bare allegations against local police do not suffice. Romila itself found vague allegations inadequate in its own setting. The High Court used those limits to assess the present election-pressure claim, not to declare all agency transfers impossible.

The High Court cited its own Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior and State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 10446/2017, decided 30 November 2017, for the principle that the accused has no say in how investigation is conducted. It also invoked Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, AIR 2014 SC 666, for the proposition that it could not supervise the investigation as requested; the Court relied on that authority when refusing to supervise the investigation. These authorities governed the writ remedy and investigation control; they did not determine the legality of each FIR or the truth of seizure allegations.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was the source of the extraordinary writ relief sought. The court assessed whether concrete mala fide investigative conduct or another exceptional ground justified changing the agency; the cited Supreme Court decisions limit routine intervention while preserving constitutional power on an adequate foundation. Section 34(2) of the M.P. Excise Act was the reported liquor offence in Crime No. 239; Section 25(1) of the Arms Act concerned alleged unlicensed possession of the loaded pistol in Crime No. 240; Sections 8/20 of the NDPS Act concerned alleged ganja possession in Crime No. 241. These provisions identify the three separate offences and factual setting. The High Court did not decide whether each charge would stand.

4. Issues : Did the registration of three FIRs within six minutes after a single raid, each tied to an item and a different special statute, itself establish deliberate political targeting, mala fides or illegality by the officers? Could the petitioner, as an accused in the challenged FIRs, choose an independent agency or require the High Court to direct how investigation should proceed? Was there a sufficiently specific exceptional foundation for Article 226 intervention despite the usual limits on investigation control? CCTV preservation and inquiry or discipline of officials were requested; the petition was dismissed without granting those directions. It did not decide a comprehensive bar on multiple FIRs for a single transaction.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the raid as appearing to reveal three categories of articles: 63 bulk litres of country liquor, 500 grams of ganja and one loaded .315-bore pistol. The separate Excise, NDPS and Arms Act registrations reflected the investigating officer's choice to record three alleged offences. Timing alone and the shared raid did not persuade the Court that the officer acted deliberately to injure Yadav's election campaign. Its language was that separate registration in the officer's wisdom could not on this record be called mala fide; it did not resolve whether a single consolidated FIR would have been the only legally correct alternative, or adjudicate the defence in the underlying cases. The State's assertion that the petitioner had committed the three offences was a litigating position, not a conviction by the writ court.

Applying Romila Thapar and Prabal Dogra, the High Court held that a person arrayed as an accused cannot select a new agency or prescribe investigative steps merely because he distrusts local officers. The quoted Supreme Court discussion preserves an exception for mala fide investigation and, under Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, particularly serious reasons requiring an independent agency. Here the political-pressure allegation was not substantiated by specific illegality; the simultaneous FIRs and the alleged items in one raid supplied no basis to infer fabrication. The court thus found no ground to transfer the investigation. Its invocation of Manohar Lal Sharma against supervising investigation addressed the request to direct the investigative manner; it did not eliminate the exceptional Article 226 jurisdiction described in Romila. The order did not inspect or preserve CCTV in the operative part and did not decide the separate merits of disciplinary proceedings.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. It refused transfer of the investigation of Crimes 240 and 241/2022 to another agency and issued no direction controlling the manner of investigation. The requested inquiry or discipline of named officials and preservation of 4 July CCTV footage were not granted. The three FIRs remained in place for ordinary investigation, with no quashing, finding of guilt or determination of the validity of any future charge.

Laxman Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, W.P. no. 18055/2022, 05/08/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- CrPC — Section 233(3) — defence witnesses — The judge shall issue process requested by an accused entering defence unless, for recorded reasons, the application is for vexation, delay or defeating the ends of justice. Government employment and inconvenience to official duties are not among those grounds. The Special Judge refused five identified government witnesses in a Prevention of Corruption Act trial solely on that basis; the High Court set aside that portion and remanded the request for decision under Section 233, without itself compelling the witnesses' attendance.

Defence evidence — previously examined prosecution witness — State of M.P. v. Badri Yadav, (2006) 9 SCC 549, discussed use of Section 233(3) to reject a vexatious attempt to re-examine prosecution eyewitnesses as defence witnesses after full cross-examination and failed Section 311 recall. Its quotation of Yakub Ismailbhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 12 SCC 229, warned against facilitating later recantation of sworn testimony. The Amit Hardware proprietor had already testified for the prosecution and had been made available for full cross-examination; refusal to call him again for the defence was affirmed. The decision does not announce a categorical ban applicable to every distinct and proper defence purpose.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Laxmi Narayan Vishwakarma was an accused in SC Lok 06/2017 before the Special Judge, Prevention of Corruption Act, Vidisha. At the defence-evidence stage he filed a witness list and described records to be proved through the proposed witnesses. Serial numbers 1–4 were the Secretary of Gram Panchayat Ukayla, the Public Information Officer of Janpad Panchayat Ganjbasoda, the Janpad's Chief Executive Officer and the station house officer of Police Station City Kotwali, Ganjbasoda. Number 6 was the present Secretary of Gram Panchayat Visdha. Number 5 was the proprietor of Amit Hardware. The revision concerned the grounds for refusing process for the listed defence witnesses.

On 24 September 2021 the Special Judge refused process for government officials numbered 1–4 and 6 on the view that their court attendance would hamper official duties. The judge separately refused the Amit Hardware proprietor because he had already testified as a prosecution witness and Vishwakarma had a full cross-examination opportunity. In revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC, counsel challenged the refusal during the defence stage. Counsel for the Lokayukta fairly accepted that the prosecution itself must have examined some government officials. The High Court considered the two sets of witnesses separately.

2. Precedents — Considered : For the request to call the already examined proprietor, the High Court quoted State of M.P. v. Badri Yadav and another, (2006) 9 SCC 549. In that case prosecution eyewitnesses had been examined, cross-examined and discharged; a Section 311 CrPC recall application was rejected; years later they were recalled ostensibly under Section 233(3) and examined as defence witnesses. The Supreme Court said the judge had power to refuse frivolous or vexatious process sought for delay or to defeat justice. The quoted decision addressed that sequence of prosecution examination, unsuccessful recall and later defence examination. The High Court applied its reasoning on abuse of process in light of the fact that Amit Hardware's proprietor had already been available for full cross-examination.

Badri Yadav quoted Yakub Ismailbhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 12 SCC 229, where an eyewitness who had identified accused persons later filed an affidavit repudiating sworn prosecution testimony and blaming the police; the quoted Supreme Court reasoning rejected permitting a witness to perjure himself by such a resiling statement. The High Court reproduced that passage as part of Badri Yadav's rationale, but the present record does not say the Amit Hardware proprietor signed a repudiating affidavit, was in custody with the accused, or had sought to recant. Those were facts of the nested authority, not findings about him.

3. Statutes considered : Section 233(1) CrPC requires that a Sessions accused who is not acquitted under Section 232 be called to enter defence and adduce supporting evidence; subsection (2) provides for a written statement's inclusion in the record. Subsection (3), central here, directs issuance of process compelling attendance of a defence witness or production of a document or thing on the accused's application, subject to recorded reasons for refusal if the application is for vexation, delay or defeating the ends of justice. The statutory exceptions are directed at abusive use of court process; official workload is not one of them. Section 311 appears in the quoted procedural history of Badri Yadav as the earlier failed recall route, not as a separate application decided in Vishwakarma's trial. Sections 397 and 401 governed revision. The Prevention of Corruption Act identifies the special trial setting.

4. Issues : Could the Special Judge decline process for five identified government functionaries merely because their attendance as defence witnesses would disrupt public duties, despite Section 233(3)'s stated grounds and the records the accused proposed to prove? Did the same right require summoning the Amit Hardware proprietor again after prosecution examination and a full opportunity for defence cross-examination, in view of the abuse-of-process concern addressed by Badri Yadav? The High Court did not determine the relevance or admissibility of each underlying record or whether the five officials would ultimately be summoned after a fresh statutory decision.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court read the actual language of Section 233, including the accused's opportunity to enter defence and subsection (3)'s requirement of process subject to recorded vexation, delay or ends-of-justice reasons. The Special Judge had relied solely on inconvenience to government work for witnesses 1–4 and 6. That consideration was foreign to the provision and could not deprive the accused of a defence-evidence opportunity. The Lokayukta counsel's concession that the prosecution had also examined government officials supported the Court's rejection of that ground. The High Court rejected the reason without making its own final relevance finding; on remand the Special Judge must apply Section 233(3) to the requested witnesses and any records. The proprietor's position was different. He had already been called by the prosecution, examined and made available for full cross-examination by the accused. The High Court invoked Badri Yadav's warning that Section 233(3) should not be used to bring back prosecution witnesses for vexation or to defeat justice, and quoted its reliance on Yakub Ismailbhai Patel's protection of the integrity of sworn testimony. On this record it found no case to summon the proprietor again and upheld that refusal. The judgment does not record an additional distinct defence purpose for calling him, nor a proposed recanting affidavit.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly set aside the Special Judge's order of 24 September 2021. It remanded only Vishwakarma's request to examine listed government witnesses 1–4 and 6 for a new decision in accordance with Section 233 CrPC. It left intact the refusal to summon witness 5, the Amit Hardware proprietor, who had already testified and been made available for full cross-examination. The criminal revision was disposed of; no acquittal, finding on the corruption allegation, automatic summons order or direction as to the ultimate defence evidence was made.

Laxmi Narayan Vishwakarma v. State of M.P., Cr.R. no. 2536/2021, 29/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — FIR quashing — face-value test and investigation - Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, and State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, were considered on the need for restraint before stopping the investigation of a disclosed cognizable offence. The Bhajan Lal exceptions reproduced in S. Khushboo, (2010) 5 SCC 600, and Padal Venkata Rama Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, together with Amit Kapoor, (2012) 9 SCC 460, permit intervention where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence, are inherently improbable, are subject to a legal bar or reveal an abuse of process. M. Srikanth, (2019) 10 SCC 373, and M.N. Ojha, (2009) 9 SCC 682, recognise the corresponding need to prevent manifest injustice. The allegations of a dowry demand, beating, threat and expulsion disclosed a triable case involving a cognizable offence. The High Court therefore refused to quash the FIR without deciding whether those allegations were true.

Section 482 CrPC — disputed defence and mini-trial - XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, Amit Kapoor, State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, and CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, were considered on the limits of weighing evidence or assessing a disputed defence before trial. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognises a narrow exception for public documents or documents whose veracity is undisputed. That exception did not make the applicant's disputed account of the matrimonial relationship conclusive. Her claim that cohabitation lasted only briefly and the co-accused's earlier apprehension that a complaint would be lodged were matters for proof, not grounds for treating the FIR as false.

Matrimonial cruelty — relatives — specificity of allegations - Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, requires particular caution where omnibus allegations are made against relatives not generally involved in the couple's affairs, while leaving a triable case of harassment to trial. The allegations that this mother-in-law beat the complainant over a specified dowry demand and excluded her from the matrimonial home were treated as specific. Meera v. State, (2022) 3 SCC 93, was cited concerning a mother-in-law's duty to protect her daughter-in-law and the gravity of cruelty by one woman to another. Neither authority was treated as establishing the applicant's guilt. The quashing application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Laxmi Pandey, the mother-in-law of respondent No. 2, sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 525/2022 registered at Barela Police Station, Jabalpur. The FIR named her and other accused for offences under Sections 498-A, 323, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The complainant said she married Pritesh Pandey on 3 May 2022 according to Hindu rites. She alleged that her father spent approximately ₹15 lakh and supplied cash and household articles according to his means. Despite this, the accused on her husband's side, including the applicant as described in the FIR, allegedly beat her over a further demand of ₹30 lakh, threatened that her husband would marry again, and turned her out of the matrimonial house, saying she could return only after the demand was met. These were allegations, not findings made after evidence was taken.

The applicant argued that the accusations were false and that a co-accused had earlier approached the police expressing apprehension of false implication. She said the complainant had lived with her husband for only ten to twelve days, had subsequently created trouble and did not wish to live with him. She relied on that competing version in seeking quashing of the FIR. The order records that the applicant's counsel was heard. It does not record evidence at trial, a concluded investigation or a final adjudication of the family dispute. The High Court first set out the governing Section 482 precedents and then applied the threshold test to the allegations and the defence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, was cited on the error of prematurely quashing an FIR without proper investigation and the cautious exercise of Section 482 where continuation would amount to an abuse of process. Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, likewise protects the statutory police power to investigate where the FIR prima facie discloses a cognizable offence, subject to the exception for malicious and vexatious proceedings. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, explains why an offence disclosed by the allegations ordinarily requires investigation to gather evidence. Its quotations from Swapan Kumar Guha and Jeffrey J. Diermeier explain the same interest in investigation and the cautious exercise of inherent power to secure justice. Those cases were reproduced within Ujjal Kumar Burdhan and were not separately applied to the facts of this case.

XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, and State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, warn against deciding disputed matters or halting an incomplete investigation through a roving inquiry under Section 482. S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, reproduces the Bhajan Lal examples concerning the absence of a prima facie offence and proceedings manifestly attended with mala fides. It also discusses the duty to prevent the persecution of an apparently innocent person through a wholly untenable complaint. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336, requires a quashing decision to apply the governing law to the actual facts and state the reasons for the conclusion. After considering the authorities, the High Court addressed the particular allegations and the defence.

Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, sets out a broad framework for the cautious exercise of jurisdiction under Sections 397 and 482. The reproduced propositions distinguish allegations that prima facie disclose an offence when taken at face value from an inherently absurd case. They recognise express legal bars and abuse of process, balance personal liberty against the complainant's right to prosecute, and prohibit a detailed assessment of prosecution evidence, defence material or the prospects of conviction at the stage of charge or quashing. The discussion limits the application of Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia's approach based on special features in predominantly civil cases. The present Court did not separately analyse every case in the extensive citation list. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, repeats Bhajan Lal's warning that quashing is exceptional and does not permit an inquiry into the FIR's genuineness.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, states the ordinary rule against assessing an accused's defence or the veracity of documents on which the accused relies. It acknowledges an exception in an appropriate case for a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. The High Court cited that exception but did not identify such an indisputable document in this case. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, describes both the exceptional grounds of absence of an offence or abuse of process and the prohibition on using Section 482 to bring a legitimate prosecution to an end through an assessment of the evidence. Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, reproduces the Bhajan Lal categories and the protection of a complaint that has a sufficient factual foundation even if it does not reproduce the ingredients of the offence verbatim. It also reproduces the discussion in Madhavrao and P.P. Sharma on the limited circumstances in which settlement of a civil dispute may be considered. The High Court did not apply that approach to settlement of a civil dispute in this case.

M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, recognises that proceedings may be quashed where the FIR allegations, even if fully accepted, or the uncontroverted material supporting them make out no offence. M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, explains the need for caution in both directions: routine interference obstructs an inquiry, while refusal to stop proceedings based on inherently improbable allegations or instituted to harass can itself cause injustice. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, disapproves of deciding disputed defence facts under Section 482. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, order of 30 June 2021, rejects detailed scrutiny of the evidence as though at trial and states that an FIR need not be an encyclopedia. These authorities informed the Court's conclusion that proceedings may be quashed where the uncontroverted allegations disclose no offence, but the applicant's defence cannot be tried at this stage.

On the allegations against a relative in a matrimonial case, the Court invoked Meera v. State by the Inspector of Police, (2022) 3 SCC 93, concerning the seriousness of cruelty by a mother-in-law and her responsibility to protect her daughter-in-law. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, provides a quashing test directed more specifically to such cases: courts must guard against omnibus allegations against relatives not involved in the couple's affairs, while leaving a triable case of harassment and disputes about reliability to trial. Its lengthy quotation from Amit Kapoor and its distinctions from Neelu Chopra, Manoj Mahavir Prasad Khaitan and Geeta Mehrotra concern the circumstances of those other cases. The High Court did not treat the facts of those cases as findings about this applicant. The rule in Taramani was applied to the specific allegations in this case.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to prevent abuse of process or secure the ends of justice. At the FIR stage, the wide inherent power is exercised cautiously. The Court considers the complaint's uncontroverted allegations as a whole and ordinarily leaves a disclosed cognizable offence to investigation and trial, without trying contested evidence or the defence. Sections 397 and 228 CrPC, investigation provisions such as Sections 155 and 156, and the report under Section 173(2) appear in the quoted Supreme Court discussions of other procedural settings. This petition did not independently decide a revision, the framing of a charge or a defect in a police report under those provisions. Sections 498-A, 323, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act are the offences specified in the FIR. The Court held that the allegations disclosed a cognizable offence for the purpose of deciding whether to quash the FIR. It did not separately examine the ingredients of each offence for a final determination, determine guilt or decide an evidentiary presumption.

4. Issues : First, taking respondent No. 2's allegations of a dowry demand, physical cruelty, threats and exclusion from the matrimonial home at face value, did the FIR disclose a triable case involving a cognizable offence attributable to the applicant mother-in-law, or did it warrant exceptional quashing under Section 482? Second, could the applicant's account of short cohabitation and the co-accused's earlier expression of apprehension establish that the complaint was false without testing the evidence? Third, how did the caution against vague or omnibus matrimonial allegations against relatives apply where the FIR alleged active conduct by the mother-in-law? The Court did not decide whether the alleged events occurred, whether any accused was guilty, or which version was ultimately credible. No compromise was put forward as a basis for relief.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court began by considering the statutory interest in investigating an allegation of a cognizable offence and the exceptional role of Section 482 in preventing abuse of process. After considering the cited Supreme Court decisions, it stated the governing threshold: proceedings can be quashed where the uncontroverted allegations do not make out an offence, while the accused's defence cannot be determined at this stage. The Court applied those limits on Section 482 jurisdiction to the allegations and the applicant's disputed defence. The quotation of numerous quashing decisions did not mean that every possible Bhajan Lal category arose on the facts of this case.

As recounted in the FIR, the accusations went beyond merely naming the applicant as a family member. The complainant alleged beatings linked to a further demand of ₹30 lakh, threats that her husband would marry again, and exclusion from the matrimonial home until the demand was met. The High Court described the allegations as clear and specific and held that they prima facie disclosed a cognizable offence. It treated the mother-in-law as an alleged participant and cited Meera's observation on her expected responsibility to protect her daughter-in-law. This was an assessment of whether there was a triable accusation, not an independent finding that the applicant had committed cruelty or that every charged offence had been proved. The caution in Taramani about relatives not generally involved in the couple's affairs being named through omnibus allegations remained relevant, but did not displace the specific accusation in this FIR.

The applicant's assertion that cohabitation lasted only ten to twelve days and that trouble followed was a disputed account of the facts. A co-accused's earlier application to the police expressing fear that an FIR would be lodged likewise did not prima facie disprove the complaint. Neither provided an uncontroverted basis for stopping the case. The Court did not identify an undisputed public document falling within the narrow exception in Mohd. Akram Siddiqui. It held that the truth, credibility and reliability of the allegations had to be assessed in the ordinary criminal process. Its refusal to quash left all issues for trial open.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application and refused to quash Crime No. 525/2022 at Police Station Barela, Jabalpur. The FIR and the ordinary course of investigation or prosecution could therefore continue. The order contained no finding of guilt, direction to convict, final determination of credibility, special condition or remand. The applicant remained free to establish her defence at trial through the appropriate process.

Headnote :- Police investigation — arrest — complainant's writ - Registration of an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence does not automatically require the police to arrest the accused. D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was applied. The passage it quotes from M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explains that the investigating officer must exercise the discretion under Section 41 CrPC cautiously, having regard to the person's liberty and reputation. The Court refused the petitioner's request for a direction to arrest the accused in the two pending FIRs. It did not rule that an arrest could never be justified.

Article 226 — police investigation — predetermined charge sheet - D. Venkatasubramaniam holds that a court ordinarily cannot direct the steps the police must take in an investigation, compel arrest, seizure or the filing of a charge sheet, or assume that the investigation must support prosecution. The evidence may justify a closure report. The passage reproduced from that decision refers to Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, which cautions against judicial directions concerning an investigation that have serious consequences for affected persons without first hearing them. Notice was not independently in issue in the present case. The High Court refused to supervise the investigation by directing the filing of a charge sheet or requiring the requested outcome within fifteen days.

CrPC — Section 173(1) — BNSS Section 193 as cited — timely conclusion - Judicial restraint does not permit the police to delay an investigation unnecessarily. The officer must assess whether an offence is made out, conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the lawful steps required for a final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet. The Article 226 petition was disposed of with that limited direction in respect of FIR Nos. 75/2024 and 177/2024 and liberty to approach the Superintendent of Police, Chhatarpur, without a fixed deadline or a finding on the accusations.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Laxmikant Chaturvedi filed Writ Petition No. 33104 of 2024 under Article 226 before the Jabalpur Bench. He referred to FIR No. 75/2024 dated 17 February 2024 and FIR No. 177/2024 dated 7 April 2024, registered at respondent No. 3 police station on a complaint he had made. The prayer quoted in the order sought a mandamus directing the police to complete both investigations and submit a final report or challan before the competent court within fifteen days. He also sought production of the records and appropriate relief. Counsel submitted that the police had neither arrested the accused nor completed the investigation. The Court considered the request for arrest, whether directing the filing of a charge sheet would amount to supervising the investigation, and the statutory duty to conclude the investigation. It cited a Supreme Court decision on improper judicial directions to the police, then reproduced the requirement in Section 173(1) CrPC that investigation be completed without unnecessary delay, while also referring to Section 193 BNSS. The petition concerned the scope of writ relief where investigations had not been completed. The Court did not decide whether the FIR allegations were true or whether any eventual arrest would be necessary.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam and others v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and another, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was expressly cited and materially applied. The passage reproduced by the High Court concerned an earlier High Court order that treated the recording of statements, arrest, seizure and filing of a charge sheet as obligatory. That order also fixed a period for investigation without sufficient reasons and without hearing the affected persons. The Supreme Court held that the police have the statutory duty and discretion to investigate, and that courts ordinarily should not direct how an investigation proceeds or prescribe its result. An investigation need not result in arrest, seizure or prosecution. After gathering evidence, the officer may find grounds for a charge sheet or conclude that no case is made out. The Supreme Court also explained the cautious exercise of inherent power under Section 482 and set aside the intrusive order. In the present Article 226 writ, the High Court applied the principle against judicial supervision to refuse directions compelling arrest and a predetermined charge sheet, while separately directing timely completion according to law. It did not treat all the procedural circumstances of the cited case as facts of this case.

D. Venkatasubramaniam reproduced M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on the discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC. A police officer may arrest on the prescribed grounds, but must assess whether arrest is necessary in the circumstances. An FIR does not automatically require arrest, particularly because arrest intrudes on liberty and affects reputation. That rule, quoted within the precedent, was directly relevant to the petitioner's complaint that no accused had been arrested. The same Supreme Court passage cited Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on the need to hear persons likely to be affected by a judicial direction concerning an investigation that would have serious consequences for them. The present High Court did not independently decide an allegation that a hearing had been denied or issue a direction against accused persons who had not been heard. The reference reinforced restraint in framing writ relief.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution supplied the jurisdiction invoked for mandamus. It did not entitle a complainant to choose investigative methods or compel the police to reach a particular result. Section 173(1) CrPC, reproduced in the order, directs completion of every investigation under the relevant Chapter without unnecessary delay. Section 41 CrPC appears in the explanation of arrest discretion quoted from the Supreme Court decision. Section 482 CrPC appears in the quoted precedent's warning about the limits of inherent power. This petition itself proceeded under Article 226.

4. Issues : Could the writ court direct the police to arrest the accused in the two FIRs because the complainant was dissatisfied that no arrest had been made? Could it require a charge sheet or another predetermined result in favour of prosecution within the requested fifteen days, before the investigating officer had completed the assessment of evidence? Separately, did the statutory requirement to complete investigations without unnecessary delay justify a limited direction to bring them to a lawful conclusion while preserving the police's discretion as to the appropriate final report? The Court did not decide whether anyone should ultimately be arrested, whether an offence had been proved, or which report the officer must file.

5. Ratio / Findings : On arrest, the Court held that the requested direction could not be granted. It applied the rule in D. Venkatasubramaniam that investigation is within the police's domain and the M.C. Abraham reasoning quoted in it that Section 41 permits arrest when the statutory grounds exist, rather than requiring arrest mechanically. The petitioner's complaint that no arrest had been made did not justify a judicial direction requiring that particular investigative step. The conclusion left any lawful later arrest to the officer's assessment under the statute. It was not a finding in favour of the accused on the underlying allegations.

The Court held that directing arrest and the filing of a charge sheet would amount to supervising the investigation. D. Venkatasubramaniam had rejected a court's casual and mechanical prescription of investigative steps and recognised that, on completion of the investigation, the police might file a charge sheet or conclude that no case was made out. The High Court therefore did not grant the prayer for completion within fifteen days as framed or require a challan. The quoted warning about hearing affected persons and giving reasons remained part of the precedent's rationale. It was not a separate ground adjudicated in this case. The petitioner's grievance about delay did not determine what the evidence would ultimately establish.

On timely completion, the Court reproduced the requirement in Section 173(1) that investigation be completed without unnecessary delay and referred to Section 193 BNSS. An officer cannot leave the investigation of a registered case unresolved indefinitely. The officer must reach a reasoned conclusion from the investigation as to whether an offence is made out and proceed to the appropriate report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet, without unnecessary delay. The Court gave effect to that statutory duty by directing completion as early as possible and the necessary steps according to law. It set no fixed date and made no finding on the merits.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the writ petition. It did not order arrest, filing of a charge sheet or completion within fifteen days. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigations as early as possible and take the steps required by law. Chaturvedi was free to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Chhatarpur, about any grievance, which was to be considered in accordance with law. The choice of the final report, any lawful arrest and the merits of the FIR allegations remained for the competent authorities to address through the ordinary process.

Laxmikant Chaturvedi v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 33104/2024, 24/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / Section 528 BNSS — quashing — different-purpose earlier report and disputed defence - The complainant's earlier report that her husband was missing did not mention matrimonial cruelty. That report served a different purpose from the later FIR; its silence on cruelty did not establish that the FIR was an afterthought. At the quashing stage, the High Court would not compare the accounts to decide their credibility or determine the applicants' factual allegation of adultery. The Supreme Court authorities listed in paragraph 7, including XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, and CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, were cited collectively on the restraint required against a roving inquiry into the evidence where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence.

Matrimonial criminal proceedings — earlier divorce petition — counterblast inference - Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was applied for the rule that the pendency of a divorce petition under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act does not by itself bring a criminal case arising from related facts to an end. The FIR allegations must be assessed to determine whether they prima facie disclose a cognizable offence; quashing cannot rest on an adverse inference drawn from the sequence of filings as an extraneous consideration. The husband's petition of 21 March 2024 preceded the wife's FIR of 30 July 2024, but that chronology alone did not establish the alleged counterblast. The history of attempts at reconciliation in Pratibha belonged to that case and was not a finding in this case.

IPC — Section 498-A — ouster and continuing mental cruelty - Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted on the mental trauma caused by dowry-related abuse and forced departure from the matrimonial home, which may continue while the wife takes shelter with her parents even without a fresh physical assault there. Amar Singh v. Vimla, Criminal Revision No. 2376/2020 (MP High Court, 22 June 2021), was also cited on compelling a wife to live at her parental home. The FIR alleged demands for a vehicle or ₹20 lakh, assault, continued harassment and expulsion with the child. The Court treated those allegations as a triable accusation of cruelty against the husband, father-in-law and elder brother-in-law, without determining guilt or territorial jurisdiction.

Section 482 CrPC — informer mala fides — face-value cognizable offence - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, explains that inherent power prevents abuse of process but does not permit a factual mini-trial. Where an accusation prima facie discloses a cognizable offence, a disputed assertion of the informer's mala fides is secondary. The discussion of Bhajan Lal in that decision preserves the exception for proceedings shown to be manifestly malicious. The Court did not accept the applicants' reliance on the timing of the divorce petition and their other disputed allegations as grounds for quashing the proceedings arising from the charge sheet. The application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Laxminarayan Rawat (the father-in-law), the elder brother-in-law and the complainant's husband, who were applicants 1, 2 and 3 respectively, sought quashing of Criminal Case No. 1675/2024 before the JMFC, Morena, under Section 482 CrPC, which the order refers to alongside Section 528 BNSS. The police had filed a charge sheet in Crime No. 18/24 alleging offences under Sections 498-A, 323, 294 and 506 read with 34 IPC. The Court did not finally adjudicate those accusations.

According to respondent No. 2's FIR, as recounted in the order, she married applicant 3 on 29 April 2017. She stated that her parents had given ₹11 lakh in cash, 25 tolas of gold, 500 grams of silver and household articles. She said relations were initially good, but tensions later arose when she noticed an S&G tattoo on her husband's hand, and she visited her parental home. After the child's birth, she alleged that a four-wheeler was demanded. When her husband came to take her back in December 2018, he allegedly made a vehicle or ₹20 lakh a condition of her return. When she said her parents could not afford it, he allegedly kicked and punched her and abused her. On her parents' persuasion, she returned to the matrimonial house, but she alleged that the applicants continued to harass her physically and mentally for dowry. Her mother-in-law died on 6 September 2023. She alleged that on 23 September the applicants expelled her and her child, after which she lived with her parents in Morena. On 14 November 2023, her husband allegedly came there, repeated the unfulfilled demand, and beat and abused her. When she informed applicants 1 and 2, they allegedly demanded ₹20 lakh and told her not to return if her parents could not pay. These allegations were considered for the threshold test; they were not proved findings.

The applicants argued that the wife lodged the FIR on 30 July 2024 only after the husband filed a divorce petition on 21 March 2024 and she received notice. They described it as a false and malicious counterblast, alleged that she was living in adultery, and relied on her earlier report at Agar police station that her husband was missing. That report did not mention cruelty. Counsel invoked Bhajan Lal. After hearing the applicants' counsel, the High Court examined these objections in light of the earlier report's different purpose and the substantive allegations in the FIR.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicants invoked State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, on mala fide prosecution as a possible exceptional ground for quashing. The Court did not regard the mere assertion of a retaliatory motive as proof that this category applied; it examined whether the uncontroverted FIR allegations disclosed an offence. Paragraph 7 collectively cites XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v.

State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, order of 30 June 2021; Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682. The Court cited these decisions together for the common test of taking allegations at face value and the prohibition on a roving factual inquiry. It did not quote or individually analyse those sixteen decisions, or apply a distinct factual ratio from each, in this case.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi and others, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted extensively and directly applied to the contention that the FIR was a counterblast to the divorce petition. In that case, the Supreme Court reversed quashing based on delay and a divorce petition. It explained that attempts at reconciliation accounted for the later complaint on that record, and that civil divorce proceedings neither extinguish criminal proceedings nor permit the High Court to go beyond the FIR allegations and assume falsity. The present Court applied the general principles that the proceedings are separate and that the allegations must be tested for a prima facie offence, rejecting the inference that the Rawat FIR was necessarily retaliatory. It did not find that reconciliation efforts had taken place in this case merely because they had occurred in Pratibha.

Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted on the meaning of cruelty under Section 498-A: physical acts, abusive or humiliating exchanges and forced exclusion can cause mental trauma that continues while a wife stays with her parents. The High Court applied that principle to this wife's alleged expulsion and continuing residence with her parents. It did not decide a separate dispute about territorial jurisdiction. It also cited its own decision in Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla, Criminal Revision No. 2376/2020, decided on 22 June 2021, for the proposition that compelling a married woman to live at her parental home amounts to cruelty.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar and others, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was then quoted at length on the purposes of inherent power in preventing abuse and the exceptional categories drawn from R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal. The quotation distinguishes cases involving no legal evidence from those requiring an assessment of evidentiary reliability. It also covers allegations so absurd and inherently improbable that no prudent person could find sufficient ground for proceeding against the accused. The passage stresses that the informant's alleged mala fides are secondary if the information discloses a cognizable offence; the evidence collected and led at trial determines the accused's fate. The present Court expressly adopted that conclusion after finding prima facie allegations of cruelty and dowry demands. R.P. Kapur, Bhajan Lal and the other decisions cited within the Renu Kumari quotation supply its framework. The Court did not independently decide whether a legal bar, want of sanction or absence of evidence justified quashing in this case.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC, with Section 528 BNSS mentioned parenthetically in the order, supplied the inherent jurisdiction to quash proceedings. The Court could examine whether the uncontroverted allegations in the FIR and the ensuing proceedings arising from the charge sheet prima facie disclosed an offence. It could not decide the correctness of contested allegations or conduct a trial of the defence evidence. Section 498-A IPC was central to the continuing mental cruelty principle quoted from Rupali Devi. Sections 323, 294 and 506 read with 34 IPC were the other charged offences, but their distinct ingredients were not individually interpreted. Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 identified the husband's divorce proceedings; their pendency did not determine the criminal case. The missing-person report concerned a different subject of investigation. The Court neither interpreted a provision governing such reports nor decided the evidentiary use of the omissions in that report at trial. It did not substitute BNS provisions for the IPC charges or give a final ruling on the merits.

4. Issues : Did the omission of cruelty allegations from the wife's missing-person report establish a contradiction so conclusive that her later matrimonial FIR had to be quashed as an afterthought, or did the earlier report serve a different purpose? Could the High Court accept the applicants' allegations of adultery and falsity at the stage of exercising inherent powers without deciding disputed facts? Did the filing of a Section 13 divorce petition before the FIR make the criminal case a retaliatory counterblast, despite the separate legal character of divorce and cruelty proceedings? Taking the allegations of dowry demands, assault, joint harassment and exclusion from the matrimonial home at face value, was there a triable accusation under Section 498-A against the three applicants, including alleged continuing mental cruelty after the wife went to her parents? Finally, could the asserted mala fides of the informer independently defeat proceedings where the FIR prima facie disclosed a cognizable offence? The Court did not decide guilt, credibility at trial, the truth of the adultery allegation or a separate jurisdictional claim.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first rejected the inference sought to be drawn from the Agar missing-person report. Its limited purpose was to report the husband's disappearance. A complainant need not set out every separate matrimonial grievance in such a report; the omission did not establish that the later cruelty allegations were fabricated. Comparing the two accounts to determine their truth would require the roving inquiry into the evidence prohibited by the Section 482 authorities cited collectively in paragraph 7. The allegation of adultery was also a disputed question of fact that could not be resolved at this stage. The Court did not rule out every later evidentiary use of the earlier report. It only declined to draw a final conclusion about credibility from the omission in these proceedings.

The sequence of the divorce petition and FIR likewise did not by itself establish malicious prosecution. The applicants supplied the dates and described the FIR as a counterblast. Pratibha makes clear that divorce and criminal proceedings may continue independently even where they arise from related family events. A court exercising inherent powers must identify a proper ground for quashing by assessing whether the FIR prima facie discloses an offence or whether the proceedings constitute an abuse of process, rather than drawing an adverse inference solely from the sequence in which the divorce petition and FIR were filed. The explanation concerning reconciliation in Pratibha was not imported as a fact of this case. The High Court described the counterblast submission as misconceived, without purporting to determine every alleged motive after evidence.

The FIR alleged that the husband demanded a vehicle or ₹20 lakh as a condition and assaulted the complainant; that the applicants continued to harass her physically and mentally; that she and her child were expelled on 23 September 2023; that a further assault and demand occurred in November; and that the father-in-law and brother-in-law later demanded ₹20 lakh. The Court described the allegations against all applicants as specific and sufficient at the prima facie stage. Rupali Devi explained the distinction between the cessation of physical acts at the matrimonial home and the continuing psychological distress after a wife is forced to leave. Amar Singh was cited on compelled residence with parents. The ruling neither established the truth of the allegations nor treated the different acts alleged against the applicants as the same conduct. It did not determine territorial jurisdiction.

Finally, the Court applied the principle in Renu Kumari requiring caution in both the exercise and refusal of inherent power. The Bhajan Lal category of manifestly malicious proceedings remained available where established. The applicants' disputed claims of falsity, adultery and retaliatory timing, however, did not displace the cognizable accusation disclosed by the FIR. On this record, the informer's motive was secondary to the prima facie allegations. The proceedings arising from the charge sheet were therefore allowed to continue, leaving the merits and reliability of both versions for trial.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the application and refused to quash Criminal Case No. 1675/2024 before the JMFC, Morena, arising from Crime No. 18/24. It made no finding of guilt or acquittal, reached no final conclusion about evidentiary credibility, and imposed no additional condition. The pending prosecution could continue through the ordinary process.

Laxminarayan Rawat and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 47295/2024, 12/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (326) Prev Next

Headnote :- IPC — Sections 464, 467 and 468 — revenue-record interpolation — distinct false-document context - Mohammed Ibrahim v. State of Bihar, (2009) 8 SCC 751, concerned a person who executed a conveyance in his own name while falsely claiming title. That false claim alone did not amount to making a false document under Section 464. Parminder Kaur v. State of U.P., AIR 2010 SC 840, concerned alterations to dates on certified copies, for which no benefit or loss was explained. The Court distinguished the circumstances of those cases from the alleged insertion of 'Quilla' in an original government revenue register. The insertion's potential effect on the temple's identity or location, together with the 2014 Tahsildar letter describing the father-son dispute, provided a plausible motive and led the Court to reject the applicant's argument that he could gain nothing from the change at the Section 482 stage. The Court did not finally determine who wrote the entry.

Investigation — missing CCTV footage — evidentiary inference - The alleged visit to inspect the office register on 4 January 2017 preceded the complaint of 31 January and the witness's statement of 14 February about the cameras installed there. The Court considered the limited storage of CCTV systems and the possibility that earlier recordings would be overwritten. It declined to infer intentional suppression or terminate the prosecution merely because the footage had not been collected. The retention period of the particular camera and the actual deletion of footage were not established. The applicant was expressly left free to challenge the omission by cross-examining the witness at trial.

Evidence Act — Sections 45, 47 and 73 — handwriting proof - The State Examiner's report stated that the person who wrote the standard writings S5–S19 did not write Q1, but it also noted a similarity between Q1 and the writing marked A–A in the same register. Applying Manorama Naik v. State of Odisha, Criminal Appeal No. 423/2022 (14 March 2022), the Court held that a handwriting expert's opinion is neither conclusive nor the sole means of proving handwriting. Testimony and judicial comparison under the Evidence Act remain available. The Court held that the report did not justify quashing, leaving authorship and the weight of the evidence for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Leelakrishna Mishra applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 272/2017, registered at Police Station Sabalgarh, Morena, under Sections 420, 467 and 468 IPC, and the resulting charge sheet. The dispute concerned a revenue record describing temple Shri Laxminarayan Ji through its pujari Bhawani Shankar, the applicant's father. Bhawani Shankar complained that an older certified copy did not contain 'Quilla' before Sabalgarh in the temple's description, whereas a later copy did. He sought correction of the record and action against the person responsible. The Naib Tahsildar conducted an enquiry. Munshilal Dhakad, an Assistant Grade-II in the revenue office, stated that the applicant had obtained a certified copy and asked to inspect the record, after which the disputed word appeared in a different ink. The applicant acknowledged obtaining a certified copy on 4 January 2017 but denied altering the original record. In the report of 13 April 2017, the Naib Tahsildar attributed the suspected interpolation to him, and the Tahsildar referred the matter to the police. These were allegations arising from the investigation, not findings of authorship reached after trial.

The applicant said that, despite the family dispute with his father, he stood to gain nothing from the insertion of the word. He relied on an expert's finding that the questioned writing was not his and alleged that the police had deliberately failed to collect CCTV footage from the revenue office. He relied on two Supreme Court decisions on forgery. The State opposed quashing. The Court reproduced the Tahsildar’s letter of 20 December 2014 to the Collector, which reported an enquiry into Bhawani Shankar's complaint. The letter recorded the applicant's allegation that his father had demolished the earlier temple structure and moved the deities to a building attributed to Devendra Kumar and Santosh Kumar. It also described the father-son disagreement over residence, ownership and the temple site. The Court used this history as a possible explanation for why a change to the description of the temple's location in the revenue register could matter. The letter does not itself identify who wrote the later entry in 2017.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicant relied on Mohammed Ibrahim and others v. State of Bihar and another, (2009) 8 SCC 751. That decision distinguishes a person who executes a property conveyance in his own name on a false claim of ownership from one who pretends to be another person or to act with another's authority. In that context, a mere false claim of ownership does not constitute forgery under Section 467 unless a false document, as defined by Section 464 IPC, has been made. The High Court considered that rule but did not apply it to the different allegation of a physical alteration to the original government register. It examined the potential significance of that alteration. It did not conduct a full trial of all the ingredients of Sections 420 or 468.

Parminder Kaur v. State of U.P. and another, AIR 2010 SC 840, was also specifically examined. The quoted Supreme Court decision concerned alterations to dates on certified revenue copies submitted in civil litigation. On the facts of that case, no one could explain how adding a digit to those dates would secure an advantage or cause a loss, and the alleged alterations were insufficient to sustain the allegation of forgery. The present Court distinguished the insertion of 'Quilla' in the revenue register. The 2014 Tahsildar letter, the father-son dispute and the presumptive effect of official revenue entries provided a plausible purpose for the alteration, relating to the temple's location and claimed identity. The Court rejected the applicant's contention that he had no motive. It neither treated the earlier authority as overruled nor conclusively determined the handwriting.

Manorama Naik v. State of Odisha and another, Criminal Appeal No. 423/2022, order dated 14 March 2022, was invoked. In that case, the handwriting expert's opinion had first been produced before the High Court and was unavailable when cognizance was taken. The Supreme Court explained that such an opinion is not the sole means of proving a signature or handwriting; Sections 45, 47 and 73 of the Evidence Act provide other means of proof. The present Court applied that general principle and refused to treat this examiner's opinion as decisive at the Section 482 stage. It did not state that, in the present case, the opinion had likewise been filed for the first time before the High Court.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the application to quash the FIR and charge sheet. At that stage, the Court could not finally resolve disputed authorship, the likely effect of an alteration or contested omissions in the investigation as it would at trial. Sections 420, 467 and 468 IPC were the offences registered. The judgment's substantive discussion concerned the alleged falsification or forgery of an official revenue entry and the contention that the applicant had no motive; it did not finally determine each statutory ingredient. Section 464 IPC arose in Mohammed Ibrahim's distinction between a false assertion of ownership and the making of a false document. Sections 45, 47 and 73 of the Indian Evidence Act were invoked through Manorama Naik concerning expert opinion, proof by persons acquainted with the handwriting and judicial comparison, as applicable. The judgment did not conduct a final comparison under Section 73. It noted that an official revenue entry carries a presumption unless corrected, but did not specify or interpret any revenue-code provision.

4. Issues : Did the alleged insertion of 'Quilla' in the original revenue register have sufficient apparent significance to defeat the applicant's submissions that he had no motive and that no forgery was made out at the quashing stage, given the distinction between that insertion, a mere disputed ownership claim and alterations to dates on certified copies? Could the failure to seize CCTV footage from the revenue office more than a month after the alleged access justify an inference of deliberate suppression by the investigators or the quashing of proceedings, or should the omission be tested at trial? Did the expert's finding that the writer of the S5–S19 samples did not write Q1 finally establish that the applicant could not be linked to the alteration, despite the report's additional comparison with A–A and the other statutory means of proof? The Court did not decide the criminal charges, the camera's actual retention period or the ultimate attribution of the handwriting.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the allegations in the present case from those in the two Supreme Court decisions relied on by the defence. Mohammed Ibrahim concerned a conveyance executed in one's own name on a false claim of title, rather than the physical addition of a word describing location to an official register. Parminder Kaur concerned changes to dates on copies without a demonstrated benefit or loss. Here, the older certified copy did not contain 'Quilla', the later entry contained it in a different ink, and the 2014 letter explained the continuing dispute about the temple's former location, the deities and the private building. The Court reasoned that adding 'Quilla' could change the temple's apparent identity or location and undermine the father's claim to be its pujari. Because an official revenue entry carries a presumption until corrected, the Court rejected the applicant's contention that the change could serve no purpose. That inference concerned possible motive and the alteration's prima facie significance. It did not conclusively establish that the applicant personally made the entry or that each charged offence was proved.

The Court declined to infer that the CCTV footage had deliberately not been collected. It noted that the applicant had obtained the certified copy on 4 January 2017, that the complaint was made on 31 January, and that the witness's statement identifying the installed cameras was recorded on 14 February. In the Court's view, the footage of the earlier date would in all probability have been overwritten by the time of the investigation because ordinary CCTV systems have finite storage. The applicant remained entitled to cross-examine the revenue-office witness about the omission at trial. The refusal to quash on this ground did not determine every evidentiary consequence that might arise later.

The expert's opinion contained two comparisons. It stated that the person who wrote the standard writings S5–S19 did not write Q1, and noted a similarity in the letter 'La' between Q1 and the writing marked A–A in the same register. The Court described the report as inconclusive, noted that similarity, and held that the other means of proof under Sections 45, 47 and 73 remained available under Manorama Naik. The negative comparison was thus retained in the assessment, but was not accepted as finally exonerating the applicant. Authorship and the weight of the evidence remained for the trial court to determine.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application and refused to quash Crime No. 272/2017 and the consequential proceedings arising from the charge sheet. It expressly preserved the applicant's liberty to raise the omission to collect CCTV footage during trial. It made no final finding on guilt, authorship of the handwriting, actual deletion of CCTV footage or entitlement to correction of the revenue entry.

Leelakrishna Mishra v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 47574/2018, 25/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- NDPS Act — Section 50 — body and bag search — recovery only from bag - The appellant was given a notice under Section 50 and was personally searched, but nothing was recovered from his body or clothing. The ganja was found in the bag he carried. The Court acknowledged State of Rajasthan v. Parmanand, (2014) 5 SCC 345, which had treated a combined search as attracting Section 50, and applied the later detailed analysis in Ranjan Kumar Chadha v. State of H.P., Criminal Appeals 2239–2240/2011 (6 October 2023). Ranjan Kumar Chadha explained the tension between Dilip, Shah Alam, Parmanand and S.K. Raju on one side, and the larger-bench decisions in the Pawan Kumar and Baljinder Singh line on the other. Section 50 concerns recovery from the person; a defect in that search does not automatically invalidate an independently proved recovery from a bag or vehicle. Ranjan Kumar Chadha discussed the limited scope of the statutory text, the continuing mandatory personal-search right under Baldev Singh and Vijaysinh Chandubha Jadeja, and the distinction between personal recovery and recovery from a bag or conveyance. Than Kunwar, Kallu Khan and Dayalu Kashyap formed part of that quoted analysis. On this record, the High Court held that a discrepancy in the notice was immaterial to the recovery from the bag. It did not validate a defective notice where the recovery is from the person.

NDPS investigation — informant as investigator — case-specific bias - Applying Mukesh Singh v. State (Narcotic Branch of Delhi), (2020) 10 SCC 120, the Court rejected the argument that the prosecution was automatically vitiated because Gulbag Singh had received the tip, made the seizure and conducted most of the investigation. Mukesh Singh requires actual bias, prejudice or unfairness to be established on the particular facts, while the informant's dual role may be relevant when evaluating the evidence. It overruled the contrary categorical approach in Mohan Lal v. State of Punjab, (2018) 17 SCC 627. The Court assessed the later involvement of an ASI and the evidence, without treating the dual role alone as entitling the appellant to acquittal.

Evidence — police and seizure witnesses — independent witnesses hostile - Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1, and Tahir v. State (Delhi), (1996) 3 SCC 338, require careful scrutiny of police testimony, but do not require independent corroboration in every case. Govindaraju v. State, (2012) 4 SCC 722, permits reliance on reliable, cogent police testimony duly supported by admissible evidence. Rohitash Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2013) 14 SCC 434, rejects a prohibition on police officers giving evidence. Mukesh Singh, (2020) 10 SCC 120, rejects suspicion based solely on a witness's official position. Girja Prasad, Praveen Kumar and Karamjit Singh were cited for the same line of authority, without separate analysis. The Court refused to acquit merely because the independent witnesses had turned hostile and the case rested on police witnesses. It found the seizure from the bag proved and relied on the FSL report identifying the material as ganja.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 11 February 2005, Town Inspector Gulbag Singh received information that Lisyu was selling ganja. He recorded it in Rojnamcha Sanha No. 592, prepared an information panchnama (Ex. P.4), and informed the SDO(P), Panna. The SDO(P)'s reader said that the officer was away from headquarters. Gulbag Singh prepared a panchnama for the proposed raid and went to the spot with police personnel and witnesses. The appellant was found standing there. The police gave him a notice under Section 50 of the NDPS Act, recorded the notice panchnama (Ex. P.6) and his consent (Ex. P.7), and searched him. No contraband was found on his body or clothing. Small packets of suspected ganja were found in the bag he carried. The police prepared seizure, testing and weighing panchnamas, including Exs. P.9 and P.11. Gulbag Singh took the appellant and the material to the station, registered the FIR, and deposited the material in the malkhana under Ex. P.3. The material was sent to the forensic laboratory under Ex. P.18; the report, Ex. P.19, identified it as ganja. The investigation was handed over to ASI Kishan Singh Thakur, who prepared a spot map on 12 February 2005. An arrest memo dated 11 February and notice to the appellant's brother were also recorded.

The police filed a charge sheet under Sections 8/20 NDPS Act. The appellant denied guilt. Seven prosecution witnesses testified, including the seizing officer and other police personnel; the appellant called no defence witness. On 28 June 2006, the trial court convicted him in Special Case No. 2/2005 under Section 20(b)(ii)(B). It imposed one year's rigorous imprisonment and a ₹5,000 fine, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. He appealed under Section 374 CrPC. Through amicus curiae, he argued that the independent witnesses had turned hostile and that the remaining police testimony should not sustain the prosecution. He also argued that the Section 50 notice did not amount to substantial compliance and that the complainant's conduct of most of the investigation had tainted it. The State answered that the recovery was from a bag, so any flaw in the notice for personal search could not affect the result.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court expressly referred to State of Rajasthan v. Parmanand Singh, (2014) 5 SCC 345, for the proposition that Section 50 applies where both the accused and the bag he carries are searched, even if nothing is recovered from his body and the contraband is found in the bag. The Court then reproduced extensively Ranjan Kumar Chadha v. State of Himachal Pradesh, Criminal Appeals Nos. 2239–2240/2011, decided on 6 October 2023. It followed that analysis to reach the contrary conclusion for the bag recovery in the present case. The High Court did not independently determine the precedential status of every earlier authority or purport formally to overrule Parmanand.

The passage from Ranjan Kumar Chadha traced the decisions concerning searches of both the person and a bag through Dilip v. State of M.P., (2007) 1 SCC 450, which had treated a personal search conducted without the safeguard as affecting recovery from a scooter. Union of India v. Shah Alam, (2009) 16 SCC 644, followed Dilip where heroin was found in shoulder bags during a body search. The passage also considered Parmanand and the three-Judge decision in S.K. Raju v. State of West Bengal, (2018) 9 SCC 708. S.K. Raju stated that Section 50 was attracted when both the person and the bag carried were searched, regardless of where the recovery was made, and found compliance in that case. The quotation explained that the larger-bench decision in State of H.P. v. Pawan Kumar also concerned a search of both the person and the bag, yet did not apply Section 50 where recovery was only from the bag.

Ranjan Kumar Chadha contrasted State of Punjab v. Baljinder Singh, (2019) 10 SCC 473, in which a defect in a personal search yielding no contraband could not invalidate an independently proved recovery of poppy husk from a vehicle. Its discussion relied on State of Punjab v. Baldev Singh, (1999) 6 SCC 172, and Vijaysinh Chandubha Jadeja v. State of Gujarat concerning the mandatory obligation, in a genuine personal search, to inform the person of the right to be searched before a Gazetted Officer or Magistrate. It also addressed the consequence where a conviction depends on illicit articles recovered from the person without compliance. Baljinder Singh rejected Dilip's extension of the defect to a vehicle recovery; the quoted passage acknowledged that Baljinder Singh had not examined S.K. Raju. Ranjan also recounted the Delhi High Court's attempts in Akhilesh Bharti and Kamruddin to distinguish a bag held in the hand from a vehicle, and criticised their account of the facts in Pawan Kumar. Than Kunwar v. State of Haryana, (2020) 5 SCC 260, applied Baljinder Singh despite noting S.K. Raju, and held Section 50 unnecessary for recovery from a bag where personal search had yielded nothing. Kallu Khan v. State of Rajasthan applied the distinction concerning a vehicle. Dayalu Kashyap v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2022) 12 SCC 398, rejected an attempt to extend a complaint about an impermissible third option under Section 50 to recovery from a polythene bag carried on a kanwad. These examples and the Delhi decisions appeared within the Supreme Court quotation. Their treatment was part of the Ranjan Court's analysis, adopted here for the narrow conclusion concerning bag recovery, rather than additional individual holdings of this High Court.

In its final analysis, Ranjan Kumar Chadha recognised the concern that a bag closely accompanying a person might be used to evade the safeguard, and the earlier concept of an object inextricably linked to the person. It nevertheless treated the plain wording of Section 50, the larger-bench decisions in Pawan Kumar and Baldev Singh, and the prohibition on judicially supplying a statutory omission as controlling. It described the distinction between bag recovery in S.K. Raju and vehicle recovery in Baljinder Singh. It also explained that Parmanand had followed Dilip without reconciling the larger-bench decision in Pawan Kumar, and that Baljinder Singh had regarded Dilip as incorrect. The quoted statutory-interpretation authorities, including Filip Tiago De Gama, D.R. Venkatchalam, Rishabh Agro and Padma Sundara Rao, supported that reasoning within Ranjan. This High Court did not invoke them as independent grounds determining the appeal. It applied Ranjan to the personal search yielding nothing and the proved recovery from the bag, and held that Section 50 compliance was unnecessary for that recovery.

Mukesh Singh v. State (Narcotic Branch of Delhi), (2020) 10 SCC 120, was quoted at length on the objection that the informant was also the investigator, and was later invoked again concerning official witnesses. It held that neither the NDPS Act nor the general law automatically bars the informant officer from investigating. Actual bias, unfairness or prejudice must be established on the facts. The dual role can receive weight in assessing the evidence where bias or unfair investigation is established and the prosecution depends solely on that officer's deposition, without other witnesses. The decision specifically overruled Mohan Lal v. State of Punjab, (2018) 17 SCC 627, to the extent that it required categorical invalidity and acquittal. Within the quotation, Mukesh Singh referred to State of Rajasthan v. Ram Chandra, Union of India v. Vipan Kumar Jain, Bhaskar Ramappa Madar and State v. V. Jayapaul for the approach based on the facts of each case. The present Court followed Mukesh Singh rather than independently analysing those subsidiary citations. It rejected the appellant's submission that the investigation was automatically vitiated.

For police testimony, the High Court itself cited Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1. That decision states that acceptable police evidence cannot be discarded solely because no independent witness was examined, though it requires greater care in scrutiny. Govindaraju v. State, (2012) 4 SCC 722, was cited concerning reliable, trustworthy and cogent official testimony supported by admissible evidence as appropriate. Rohitash Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2013) 14 SCC 434, rejected a prohibition on police officers giving evidence and discussed independence by reference to the source from which a witness comes and possible enmity. Mukesh Singh required police testimony to be treated like other testimony, without an automatic requirement of independent corroboration or unsupported suspicion of dishonesty. Tahir v. State (Delhi), (1996) 3 SCC 338, permitted conviction on reliable police evidence after the careful scrutiny required as a matter of prudence; there is no rule invariably requiring independent corroboration. Girja Prasad v. State of M.P., (2007) 7 SCC 625, Praveen Kumar v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 12 SCC 199, and Karamjit Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.) were cited for similar law. The judgment did not separately discuss their reasoning or give the full Karamjit citation, and the Court developed no additional ratio from them. These authorities supplied the Court's reason for rejecting acquittal based merely on the hostility of independent witnesses and the official position of the remaining witnesses.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC supplied appellate jurisdiction to challenge the 2006 conviction and sentence. Sections 8 and 20 of the NDPS Act provided the framework for the prosecution and conviction. The Court did not separately analyse quantity thresholds or recalibrate the sentence under those provisions. Section 50 raised the material safeguard question. The safeguard requires a person to be informed of the right to be searched before a Gazetted Officer or Magistrate. Compliance is mandatory where the provision applies to recovery from the person. On the cited authority, however, the Court treated the proved recovery from the bag, with no recovery from the body or clothing, as outside that requirement. The quotation from Mukesh Singh referred to NDPS Section 68, protecting an officer's source of information, Section 58 as a statutory safeguard, and the special investigative procedure in Chapter V. These provisions formed the background to rejecting automatic bias; they were not separate grounds requiring proof of compliance in this appeal. No separate statutory rule concerning independent seizure witnesses was interpreted.

4. Issues : First, did a claimed discrepancy in the Section 50 notice undermine the conviction where the police searched both Lisyu and the bag he carried, but recovered ganja only from the bag? The Court had to consider Parmanand's approach to a combined search and the later analysis quoted from Ranjan Kumar Chadha, while preserving the distinct mandatory rule for recovery from the person. Second, did the complainant officer's receipt of information, raid, seizure and substantial investigative work automatically vitiate the case, or did bias or prejudice have to be proved on the particular facts? Third, could the trial court rely on police witnesses after the independent witnesses turned hostile, and did the law require independent corroboration regardless of the reliability of the official testimony? The appeal also challenged the conviction and sentence, but the judgment did not develop an independent sentencing principle or address a separate challenge to forensic sampling, the malkhana chain or quantity.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court expressly noted the earlier rule in Parmanand and then applied Ranjan Kumar Chadha's analysis of the divergent Section 50 decisions. A notice had been given and Lisyu had been personally searched, but no illicit material was recovered from his body or clothes. The proved recovery was from the bag he carried. The Court applied the understanding that Section 50's protection for a personal search does not invalidate an independently proved recovery from a bag merely because the person was searched as well. It therefore held compliance unnecessary for the material on which the conviction rested. Any discrepancy in the notice did not prejudice this prosecution. The Court did not decide the precise contents of the notice or state that an invalid notice would be harmless where drugs were found on the body. Nor did it treat the giving of a notice as a substitute for the mandatory communication where the provision applies.

On the objection to the investigation, Gulbag Singh was both the officer who received the information and the officer who conducted much of the operation. The record also described a later handover to ASI Kishan Singh Thakur. Mukesh Singh ruled out a universal inference of bias merely from the informant's dual role. Bias and prejudice must be demonstrated on the individual record. The complainant-investigator's role may still receive weight when assessing the evidence where bias or unfair investigation is proved and the prosecution depends solely on that officer's deposition, without other witnesses. The appellant advanced the categorical objection, which the Court rejected as misconceived.

The hostility of the independent witnesses did not make the police witnesses legally incapable of proving the case. The Court applied the cited Supreme Court authorities to require careful examination of official testimony, without presuming dishonesty or invariably insisting on independent corroboration. It found the seizure of ganja from the appellant's bag proved and noted that the FSL report identified the substance as ganja. The Court accepted the prosecution's proof of the seizure from the bag and the FSL identification of the material as ganja. Having rejected the Section 50 and investigation objections and accepted the recovery, it found no ground for interference. It also held that the sentence required no interference.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the judgment of the Special Judge, NDPS, Panna, dated 28 June 2006 in Special Case No. 2/2005. It upheld the conviction and the sentence of one year's rigorous imprisonment, a ₹5,000 fine and the recorded three-month default term. Lisyu was directed to surrender before the trial court immediately and, in any event, by 15 February 2024. His bail and surety bonds were cancelled. If he failed to surrender by that date, the trial court was to issue an arrest warrant to ensure that he served the remaining sentence. A copy of the judgment and the trial record were to be sent to the trial court for information and compliance. The Court did not order a retrial, acquittal or reduction of sentence.

Lisyu v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1263/2006, 19/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Evidence — related and interested witnesses — careful scrutiny - Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, required cautious scrutiny of an interested witness's account to determine whether it was cogent and had a ring of truth; Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, warned that hostility and infirmities must be examined while rejecting a rule that independent corroboration is always indispensable. Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, distinguished a relative who is a natural witness from one whose interest or animus is proved and accepted intrinsically reliable testimony after scrutiny. Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, gave a more nuanced account, questioning an absolute related-versus-interested distinction and calling for heightened care where enmity is shown. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, required credible evidence and material corroboration where motive for false implication is demonstrated; Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, likewise refused to reject a related witness solely for relationship. The Court applied this body of law to the deceased's four family witnesses; the absence of testimony from neighbours was not decisive, and the signed reconciliation agreement Ex. P/4 was additional material.

Evidence — omissions and contradictions — materiality - Applying Yogesh Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, and Narayan Chetanram Chaudhary v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 457, the Court held that minor omissions or differences are not automatically contradictions; only those that reach the core of the case, make testimony seriously doubtful or render it improbable materially affect the prosecution case. The appellant's general objection to the relatives' omissions did not defeat the evidence on this record.

IPC — Section 498A — written reconciliation and cruelty - Ex. P/4 recorded the husband's apology and promises of proper care, food, clothing, freedom to visit family and an end to harassment after the earlier report and departure. It contained no express account of the specific dowry demand. The Court treated the undisputed signature and undertakings as supportive of the relatives' accounts of prior cruelty, and found that maltreatment continued after her return; it affirmed the husband's conviction while the three in-laws' acquittals remained undisturbed. The Court also quoted S. Govindaraju v. State of Karnataka, (2013) 15 SCC 315, on an accused's Section 313 explanation for incriminating circumstances; it noted his evasive reply concerning Ex. P/4 without treating his silence alone as proof of every charge.

IPC — Sections 107 and 306 — abetment by sustained cruelty in the particular circumstances - The Court found that the husband had caused the deceased to leave and lodge a cruelty complaint, obtained her return by written apology, yet continued to mistreat her, causing her to lose hope of improvement before she committed suicide by setting herself on fire. It reasoned that, on this record, creating a situation in which she perceived no viable alternative amounted to abetment under Section 107, notwithstanding the unavailability of the discussed statutory presumption. The five-year Section 306 and two-year Section 498A terms were affirmed in light of the same history.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal concerned the death of Mumtaz Bee, who had married Liyakatuddin about eight to ten years earlier. The prosecution alleged that her husband and his parents and sister mistreated her after marriage and that he beat her, sometimes while intoxicated, and demanded money from her parental family for a business. The Court later examined the written reconciliation agreement, Ex. P/4, as evidence of strained relations and the husband's assurances. It did not treat the agreement as a literal recital of all the alleged dowry demands.

The prosecution alleged that her treatment did not improve. Mumtaz Bee died on 16 October 1996 after being burned with kerosene. A merg inquiry, body panchnama, site map, photographs, seizure of a plastic kerosene container, matchbox and clothes, statements, a post-mortem and forensic material followed. An FIR of 17 October 1996 under Sections 498A and 306 IPC led to arrests of the husband and three in-laws. The doctor, Dr. Mahavir Khandelwal, reported about 95% ante-mortem burns and a kerosene smell; he was not cross-examined on that testimony.

The Additional Sessions Judge, Jaora, framed charges under Sections 306 and 498A on 22

September 1997. Seven prosecution witnesses testified; the accused called none. By judgment of 13 May 1999 in S.T. No. 15/1997, the trial court convicted Liyakatuddin, imposing five years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹1,000 fine for Section 306 and two years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹500 fine for Section 498A, with unspecified default imprisonment. His father, mother and sister, identified in the judgment as Goremiyan alias Azizuddin, Chhoti Bee and Jakiya alias Kali, were acquitted; neither State nor complainant appealed that acquittal. The High Court referred to them only to the extent necessary to assess the husband's case.

Liyakatuddin appealed under Section 374 CrPC and was granted bail on 2 December 1999. In 2018 no advocate appeared when the case was called; the appointed amicus also did not attend the later hearing. Relying on Surya Baksh Singh, the High Court reserved the appeal after scrutinising the record and hearing the Public Prosecutor. The appellant's lawyer subsequently filed written submissions, which were taken into account. The appeal grounds challenged reliance on the relatives in the absence of testimony from neighbours, claimed that the agreement restored cordial relations, and asserted omissions, exaggeration and no recent harassment. The written argument asserted that the duration of the marriage precluded a presumption under Section 113A of the Evidence Act. The State submitted that repeated cruelty after the solemn assurance drove the deceased to suicide.

2. Precedents — Considered : Surya Baksh Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2014) 14 SCC 222, was cited in paragraph 1 as the governing law when the appeal was reserved for decision in the absence of counsel and the amicus. The High Court did examine the appeal record, heard the prosecutor and considered late written arguments; the order attributes no more specific rule to Surya Baksh Singh.

Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, was quoted for especially careful scrutiny of an interested witness and reliance when the account is cogent, credible, trustworthy and rings true; a contradicted interested account is not usually conclusive. Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, was quoted for attentive scrutiny of relatives who testify and share hostility toward the accused, without turning independent corroboration into a universal prerequisite; the quality of the evidence matters, rather than the number of witnesses. Its quotation included Darya Singh's caution that a witness may correctly name the actual offender yet add another from hostility. Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, quoted Hari Obula Reddy to reject an invariable corroboration rule and distinguished kinship as a natural-witness feature from a proved interest in obtaining punishment. The present Court drew on this group to reject the categorical argument that the deceased's family could not prove cruelty.

Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, was quoted. It examined the distinction made in State of Rajasthan v. Kalki between a relative and an interested witness, then noted that Basawan Singh's Constitution Bench treatment of a naturally present trap witness undermined an absolute claim that a natural witness can never be interested. The passage from Raju described degrees of interest and enmity, and the need for greater care when assessing the account of a related and inimical witness. It discussed Dalip Singh's warning against assuming relatives fabricate, Darya Singh's caution about hostility and added names, and the rule in Waman and Sarwan Singh that corroboration is a matter of prudence rather than a legal requirement. Raju called for discerning scrutiny in light of actual motive and infirmity.

Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, repeated that relationship alone does not require corroboration and that intrinsically probable interested evidence may sustain conviction, but unreliable or suspicious evidence must be rejected and material corroboration sought if a motive for false implication is established. Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, drew together the principles in Dalip Singh, Piara Singh, Hari Obula Reddy and Ramashish Rai: interest or enmity calls for careful evaluation; enmity can motivate a false charge or an offence; trustworthy family evidence cannot be thrown out simply because of kinship. The High Court quoted these authorities collectively and, in applying them, referred to the family's account, the absence of neighbourhood witnesses and the agreement.

Yogesh Singh was separately quoted for the rule that minor omissions, inconsistencies and embellishments do not undermine the core case unless they create serious doubt about the witness's credibility or reach the root of the case. Narayan Chetanram Chaudhary v. State of Maharashtra, (2000) 8 SCC 457, distinguished material contradictions from ordinary variations due to memory and observation; its quoted discussion includes State of H.P. v. Lekh Raj and Leela Ram on assessment in context, rather than a mathematical comparison of witnesses' accounts. The present Court adopted the materiality test and rejected the general ground based on omissions. S. Govindaraju v. State of Karnataka, (2013) 15 SCC 315, was also quoted: where an accused is confronted under Section 313 CrPC with incriminating circumstances, an unexplained or falsely explained circumstance may be used as a link in a circumstantial chain; the answer must be considered with the whole evidence. Here the judgment had already called Liyakatuddin's answer on execution of Ex. P/4 evasive while recording that he did not dispute his signature. It did not treat his answer alone as complete proof of cruelty or abetment.

After discussing the evidence, the High Court addressed the seven-year presumption and the ingredients of abetment in its own reasoning.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the conviction appeal. Section 313 CrPC governed the accused's response to incriminating circumstances; the judgment records an evasive reply to Ex. P/4 but an undisputed signature. Sections 498A, 107 and 306 IPC governed the questions of cruelty and abetment of suicide. The appellant had been prosecuted earlier under Section 498A based on the 1991 report; this trial concerned the later death and cruelty charge, and the prior proceedings and agreement were used as context. The Court reasoned that a situation created through cruelty in which the deceased saw no alternative to suicide amounted to abetment under Section 107 in these circumstances, and affirmed the convictions for both charged offences.

4. Issues : Could the conviction appeal be determined on the record when the appellant's advocate and appointed amicus had failed to attend, with written argument later supplied? Could the relatives' testimony establish marital cruelty without neighbours, when objections were raised concerning their relationship, potential interest, asserted omissions and the later reconciliation? What probative significance did Ex. P/4 have despite its failure to recite a particular dowry demand, and what weight could be given to the accused's Section 313 response? Did the duration of the marriage preclude the claimed seven-year presumption, and, if so, did the evidence independently establish continued cruelty and abetment under Sections 107 and 306? Finally, did the five-year and two-year terms warrant interference? The unappealed acquittals of the three in-laws were outside the appeal's operative scope.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court proceeded in the absence of counsel and the amicus, examined the record itself, heard the prosecutor and took the later written submissions into account. The doctor's unchallenged evidence established 95% ante-mortem burn injuries with a smell of kerosene; scene photographs, container and seized articles supported the conclusion that Mumtaz Bee set herself on fire.

The relatives' accounts concerned past beating and demands, the deceased's removal to her family and earlier report, the husband's apology, her return and asserted continuing maltreatment. Relationship did not legally disqualify them. The Court adopted the Supreme Court's nuanced rule: examine whether interest or hostility is actually established; scrutinise the account and material infirmities carefully; accept credible, intrinsically probable evidence without insisting on a fixed number of detached witnesses. It declined to discard testimony solely because no neighbour testified. It also noted the actual terms of Ex. P/4: strained relations and detailed promises to treat his wife and children properly, supply meals, clothing and facilities and permit family visits, with no express admission of the pleaded dowry demand. The appellant's signature was not disputed, although his Section 313 explanation was evasive. The Court inferred from the undertakings, alongside the family accounts, that earlier cruelty had driven her away. It found that the later return on those assurances did not prove lasting reconciliation or an end to the cruelty.

As to omissions, the Court used Yogesh Singh and Narayan Chetanram Chaudhary to reject the mechanical treatment of every variation as a contradiction that undermines the case. A discrepancy must materially affect the central narrative, cast serious doubt on credibility or affect the inherent probability of the account. The Court treated the omissions objection as concerning minor differences and applied the materiality test to the evidence. The separately quoted S. Govindaraju rule about Section 313 non-explanation was not used to dispense with the prosecution's burden.

On its own assessment of the relatives' accounts and Ex. P/4, the Court found that the husband had first driven Mumtaz Bee away by beatings and harassment, induced her return with a written apology and assurances, then continued to mistreat her. It inferred that the broken undertaking left her without hope of a happy married life and that she chose suicide in that situation. Applying its reasoning under Section 107, the Court held that this amounted to abetment supporting the conviction under Section 306, and the same conduct supported Section 498A. This is the High Court's final finding in this appeal, not an automatic rule that a suicide after reconciliation establishes instigation. The three in-laws' acquittals were not reopened.

In considering punishment, the Court examined the sequence of initial harassment, a pending 498A case, written apology and later false assurance, and found no reason to interfere with the five-year and two-year imprisonment terms.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed Liyakatuddin's conviction and sentence in S.T. No. 15/1997, judgment of 13 May 1999, under Sections 306 and 498A IPC: five years' rigorous imprisonment and ₹1,000 fine, and two years' rigorous imprisonment and ₹500 fine, respectively, with the trial judgment's default imprisonment not quantified in this appellate text. Because he was on bail, his bail bonds were cancelled and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to undergo the remaining jail sentence. The acquittals of Goremiyan alias Azizuddin, Chhoti Bee and Jakiya alias Kali remained unchallenged and untouched.

Liyakatuddin v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 705/1999, 21/08/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- IPC — Section 376 — alleged false promise of marriage — HMA Section 15 during divorce appeal - On the fifth bail application, the accused argued that the complainant's pending appeal from a divorce decree prevented her from remarrying and that an alleged promise of marriage therefore could not have induced consent under a misconception of fact. The Court applied Anurag Mittal v. Shaily Mishra Mittal, (2018) 9 SCC 691, which followed Lila Gupta v. Laxmi Narain, (1978) 3 SCC 258, and held that a marriage contracted during a statutory waiting disability is not automatically void; the consequences of treating it as void must also be considered. The Court also quoted Krishnaveni Rai v. Pankaj Rai, Criminal Appeal No. 321/2020 (19 February 2020), on the distinct proposition that contravention of HMA Sections 5(ii) or 5(iii) does not itself render a marriage void, though it may make the marriage voidable. These principles defeated the asserted automatic legal disqualification at the Section 439 stage. The prosecutrix was said to support the prosecution, and the applicant's earlier bail applications had been dismissed on merits. The order did not find that a second marriage had actually occurred or finally determine the alleged promise, consent or ingredients of the offence under Section 376 IPC.

Trial management — expedition direction — trial court calendar - Applying M. Gopalakrishnan v. Pasumpon Muthuramalingan, SLP (Crl.) Diary No. 30839/2021 (11 March 2022), the Court declined the late bail-stage request for an expeditious trial because a cursory expedition order could disturb the trial court's calendar.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nabal Singh Morya sought regular bail in Crime No. 105/2021 registered at Police Station Kotwali, District Shivpuri, for offences under Sections 376, 323 and 506 IPC. The order describes this as his fifth application under Section 439 CrPC. His earlier bail applications had been dismissed on merits, and the fourth application, M.Cr.C. No. 13375/2022, was dismissed as withdrawn on 25 March 2022.

The applicant's principal submission was that the prosecutrix had filed First Appeal No. 1904/2019 against a divorce decree and that the appeal was ultimately dismissed on merits. Invoking Section 15 of the Hindu Marriage Act, he argued that she was legally unable to remarry while the appeal was pending and that his alleged promise of marriage therefore could not have induced her consent under a misconception of fact. Counsel also asserted that she had been convicted of murdering her stepson and had caused allegedly false cases to be registered against her former husband, Raju Jatav. Those assertions were defence submissions, not independent findings in this order. The State and the complainant opposed bail. They argued in particular that conviction for another offence would not disqualify a person from reporting an offence committed against her. The Court recorded that the prosecutrix was said to support the prosecution case. After addressing the relationship and legal-capacity argument, counsel sought an expeditious trial because of the applicant's custody.

The case diary was available. Paragraph 3 records that the applicant was arrested on 5 March 2021, while counsel's custody submission in paragraph 10 refers to 5 March 2022; the order does not reconcile the two dates. Counsel also relied on the former husband's acquittals in the allegedly false cases. The order records these matters as defence submissions and makes no independent finding that they undermined the complainant's credibility or established the applicant's innocence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Anurag Mittal v. Shaily Mishra Mittal, (2018) 9 SCC 691, was quoted on HMA Section 15. In a supplementary opinion, Justice S.A. Bobde agreed with the principal opinion and explained Lila Gupta v. Laxmi Narain, (1978) 3 SCC 258: even a prohibitory waiting provision did not necessarily render a marriage contracted during that period null. The quoted passage also warned against inferring nullity merely from a disability and referred to the consequences for children who might be conceived or born during the period of disability. The High Court relied on that non-automatic-nullity principle to reject the applicant's claim that the pendency of the complainant's divorce appeal conclusively made a marriage impossible in law. The order did not find that a marriage had actually been celebrated or finally decide deception or consent. Krishnaveni Rai v. Pankaj Rai and another, Criminal Appeal No. 321/2020, decided on 19 February 2020, was quoted separately. Paragraph 30, reproduced in the order, states that contravention of HMA Sections 5(ii) or 5(iii) does not make a marriage null and void, although the marriage may be voidable at the option of the underage party or the party who could not validly consent. Those conditions differ from the pending-appeal restriction in Section 15. The High Court used the passage to reinforce the distinction between a statutory disability and automatic voidness; it did not find that either party in this case was underage or incapable of consent under Section 5.

M. Gopalakrishnan and others v. Pasumpon Muthuramalingan and another, SLP (Crl.) Diary No. 30839/2021, decided on 11 March 2022, was cited for the warning that a High Court should not issue a cursory expedition direction that disturbs the trial court's calendar. The Court applied that warning to counsel's request for expeditious disposal and issued no such direction.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC supplied the regular-bail jurisdiction. This was the fifth application, after the earlier applications had been dismissed on merits and the fourth had been dismissed as withdrawn. IPC Sections 376, 323 and 506 were the registered offences. The disputed defence argument concerned alleged consent under a misconception of fact arising from a promise of marriage in the Section 376 accusation; the Court did not finally determine the ingredients of rape, a false promise or the other two offences. Section 15 of the Hindu Marriage Act was the central legal-capacity provision. The quoted Supreme Court authority addressed the effect of remarriage during the interval associated with a divorce decree and appeal, distinguishing a statutory disability from nullity. HMA Sections 5(ii) and 5(iii) appeared through Krishnaveni Rai as a different example of non-automatic nullity and possible voidability; no violation of those provisions was alleged on these facts. The Court did not interpret Article 21 or any statutory time limit for trial.

4. Issues : At the provisional stage of a successive bail application, did the prosecutrix's pending divorce appeal under Section 15 HMA make her legally incapable of remarriage so as conclusively to defeat the accusation that sexual intercourse had been induced by a false promise of marriage? This required the Court to distinguish a statutory restriction on remarriage from the legal consequence of voidness and from final proof of deception and consent. The applicant also sought a direction for expeditious disposal of the trial, raising whether a routine expedition order could be issued without disturbing the trial court's calendar. The order recorded the allegations about the prosecutrix's prior conduct and the State's response but made no final finding on the alleged conviction, the other cases or her credibility.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected the applicant's contention that, because the prosecutrix had appealed against her divorce decree, Section 15 made any subsequent marriage void and a promise of marriage inherently incapable of inducing consent. Anurag Mittal's reading of Lila Gupta established the distinction between a statutory waiting disability and the separate legal consequence of nullity. The quotation from Krishnaveni Rai supplied a contextually distinct illustration that contravention of conditions under the Hindu Marriage Act need not automatically make a marriage void. The Court therefore held that a second marriage performed during the pendency of an appeal cannot be treated as void merely for that reason. The prosecutrix was said to support the prosecution case. In view of that circumstance, the procedural stage and the previous merits refusals, the Court found no ground to take a contrary view on bail. It did not finally assess the evidence, find that a second marriage had occurred, decide whether the applicant had made or intended to honour a promise of marriage, or hold that the prosecutrix's reported earlier conviction invalidated her complaint.

On the request for expedition, the Court cited M. Gopalakrishnan and declined to issue a cursory direction that could disturb the trial court's calendar. The refusal of bail and the refusal to direct expedition were confined to the material considered on this fifth application.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the fifth application for regular bail and issued no direction for expeditious disposal of the trial.

Nabal Singh Morya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 25054/2022, 21/06/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- CrPC — framing of charge — strong suspicion; limited sifting — M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI, Bengaluru, (2020) 2 SCC 768, drawing on P. Vijayan, requires a judicial examination of the prosecution statements and documents. The judge is not a mere post office: a charge requires material raising grave suspicion, but the court cannot conduct a roving inquiry into probative weight or ordinarily examine defence documents under Section 227. Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, distinguishes possible commission, which is sufficient for a charge, from guilt proved beyond reasonable doubt and requires material against the particular accused, not suspicion alone. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, relying on Ramesh Singh and Dipakbhai Jagdishchandra Patel, similarly requires face-value ingredients and strong suspicion founded on material capable of becoming evidence at trial, without deciding veracity or a probable defence. Applying that limited test to the complainant's and her husband's accounts, the High Court sustained the charges against both officials; it made no finding of guilt.

CrPC — Section 397 revision — restraint in revising a charge order — Applying State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, the Court held that revision of a charge order concerns material supporting a strong suspicion of an offence capable of proof at trial, not whether guilt is certain. After assessing the material at face value, it dismissed both revisions under Sections 397/401. It did not decide any question concerning the interlocutory-order bar.

IPC — Section 354 — complaint by female research fellow — the complainant alleged that Nageshwar Mishra made indecent comments after a disputed demand for commission on her fellowship payment and repeated the comments on the incident day. In the Registrar's chamber, she alleged that Rakesh Kumar Chauhan moved towards her, her husband intervened, and both officials then assaulted her. Taken together at the charge stage, these attributed allegations supplied prima facie material for the Section 354 charge. The order neither finally determines the requisite conduct or intent nor treats every comment, by itself, as constituting the offence.

IPC — Sections 323/34 — two victims; two counts — The complaint alleged that Nageshwar threw the complainant's husband to the ground, and that both officials assaulted the complainant during the chamber confrontation. Taking that account at face value, the Court sustained the two Section 323/34 counts concerning the complainant and her husband. Common intention, actual injury, the attribution of individual blows and witness credibility remain for trial; the unproved allegations were not treated as convictions.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : These connected criminal revisions arose from the same prosecution at Rewa. Nageshwar Prasad Mishra filed Cr.R. No. 852/2017, and Registrar Rakesh Kumar Chauhan filed Cr.R. No. 574/2017; the order also spells the latter surname as "Chouhan". Each challenged the Judicial Magistrate First Class's order dated 19 January 2017 in Criminal Case No. 1545/2015, framing charges under Sections 354 and 323 read with Section 34 IPC, with the latter in two counts. The High Court used the factual account in the first revision to decide both matters by a common order.

The complainant and her husband were research fellows at Awadhesh Pratap Singh University. She alleged that Nageshwar Mishra demanded a commission when she sought payment of her fellowship; after she complained, he harassed her and made indecent comments. She said that she repeatedly complained to the Registrar but no action followed. On the incident day, Nageshwar allegedly made another indecent comment. When she went to the Registrar's chamber to complain, she found Nageshwar there. She alleged that Registrar Rakesh told her not to complain and to leave. Her husband entered and asked to whom she could complain if the administrative officer would not receive it. The Registrar allegedly moved towards her, and her husband intervened. Nageshwar allegedly threw her husband to the ground, while both officials allegedly assaulted her. She further alleged that her husband's phone was snatched and that the Registrar attempted to snatch hers. This was the complainant's account and prosecution material accepted provisionally for the charge inquiry, not established trial fact.

Counsel for the applicants argued that, even if every allegation were accepted, no offence under Sections 354 or 323 IPC was made out. Counsel for the State and the complainant maintained that the alleged affront to the complainant's modesty and the assaults on both persons warranted the charges. Hearing the connected revisions under Sections 397/401 CrPC, the High Court considered both the charge-stage standard and the alleged roles of the two officials. Neither revision was an appeal against conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI, Bengaluru, (2020) 2 SCC 768, was quoted extensively. Drawing on P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398, the Supreme Court distinguished mere suspicion, where discharge may follow if two views are possible, from grave suspicion supported by material. The judge must sift the police statements and prosecution documents and consider broad probabilities and basic infirmities; the judge is not a prosecution post office. But this limited scrutiny cannot become a roving inquiry, a trial of probative weight or a final determination of guilt. If the prosecution case, even if fully accepted, cannot disclose an offence, a trial is unwarranted. The quoted passage also discussed the "record of the case" under Section 227 CrPC and, by reference to State of J&K v. Sudershan Chakkar and State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, explained that an accused ordinarily cannot tender separate defence documents at that stage. The High Court adopted the material-versus-mini-trial distinction; no separate dispute concerning defence documents or the technical application of Section 227 to a JMFC case arose.

Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, was quoted for the distinction between a charge based on an opinion that the accused might have committed the offence and a conviction requiring proof beyond reasonable doubt. The trial judge must nevertheless apply a judicial mind, examine the different categories of accused and find some material supporting the strong suspicion; suspicion alone is insufficient. The High Court applied this framework to the two officials and their respective alleged roles without finally weighing credibility.

State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, was quoted for the limited sifting or weighing permitted to decide whether the facts, taken at face value, disclose the charged ingredients and grave suspicion, without a roving trial-stage review. The reproduced passage cited State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39, on strong suspicion under Sections 227/228, and Dipakbhai Jagdishchandra Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 16 SCC 547, on the need for some material capable of becoming evidence at trial, rather than certainty of conviction or detailed scrutiny of a probable defence. State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, was quoted specifically on revisional interference under Section 397 with an order framing charge. The decision requires attention to material raising a strong suspicion of an offence that may be proved at trial and rejects application of the final-guilt standard at the preliminary charge stage. The High Court applied that principle in dismissing both revisions.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC supplied the High Court's revisional jurisdiction over the Magistrate's order dated 19 January 2017. The reproduced Supreme Court passages addressed Sections 227 and 228 CrPC as illustrations of the discharge and charge standards. The High Court applied their general prima facie and strong-suspicion reasoning to the JMFC charge order without deciding any separately contested Magistrate-specific procedural provision. The Section 354 IPC charge rested on the alleged indecent comments and incident involving the complainant. The Section 323 IPC charge concerned the alleged hurt to her and her husband in two counts, while Section 34 supplied the alleged common-intention basis. The Court found preliminary material for both offence groups. It did not finally decide the physical or mental elements, the extent of injury, or common intention. The alleged commission demand formed the background to the confrontation and complaints; no separate corruption charge was decided.

4. Issues : Could the Magistrate frame charges when the applicants contended that, even accepting the complainant's allegations, no offence under Section 354 or 323 arose? How far could the charge court examine police material, basic infirmities, the individual roles and a likely defence, and how should the High Court review that determination under Sections 397/401? Applying that threshold, did the alleged indecent comments and movement towards the complainant provide material for the Section 354 charge, and did the alleged assaults on her and her husband provide material for the two Section 323/34 counts? Final credibility, guilt, the truth of the commission allegation and the prospect of acquittal were not issues for decision.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court drew from the four Supreme Court decisions a limited charge-stage inquiry. A judge must identify supporting material and cannot blindly accept a request to frame charges; a bare or weak suspicion is insufficient. Strong or grave suspicion founded on statements and documents, with the alleged facts taken at face value, suffices, although guilt must later be established by admissible evidence at trial. The court may consider broad probabilities and facial ingredients but cannot conduct a detailed roving inquiry, test credibility exhaustively or weigh defence material as though deciding the trial. Revisional review under Section 397 applies the same stage-appropriate standard to the charge order; it does not require proof that the accused is already certainly guilty.

As to Nageshwar, the prosecution account included the alleged fellowship-commission demand, harassment after the complaints, indecent comments, his presence in the Registrar's chamber, the alleged act of throwing the complainant's husband to the ground, and participation in assaulting the complainant. As to Rakesh, it alleged refusal to receive the complaint, movement towards the complainant before her husband intervened, participation in assaulting her and an attempt to seize her phone. The judgment recorded these as statements made by the complainant and her husband; it did not find their account proved. Considered together rather than as isolated fragments, the allegations supplied prima facie material for the Section 354 charge and the two Section 323/34 counts. Common intention and witness reliability remain for trial.

The Court found no ground to interfere with the Magistrate's order dated 19 January 2017 against either accused. Its dismissal finally disposed of the revisions but remained only a prima facie determination concerning the criminal charges.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed both criminal revisions. The order of the JMFC, Rewa, in Criminal Case No. 1545/2015, framing charges under Section 354 and Section 323 read with Section 34 IPC in two counts against Nageshwar Prasad Mishra and Rakesh Kumar Chauhan, remained in force. The prosecution was left for trial; this order convicted neither applicant and finally adjudicated none of the allegations.

Nageshwar Prasad Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Rakesh Kumar Chauhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.R. no. 852/2017 & 574/2017, 08/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- IPC — Sections 96–106 and 307 — private defence and proportionate response — In Bhanwar Singh v. State of M.P., (2008) 16 SCC 657, the Supreme Court, drawing on Anil Kumar and Dharam, identified the accused's injuries, the imminence of the threat, access to public authorities, proportionality and the confusion of a sudden attack as relevant considerations. The right is defensive, not a licence for aggression or reprisal; yet force used in a split-second response cannot be weighed in golden scales. Madan Mohan Pandey v. State of U.P., 1991 CrLJ 467 (SC), treats the weapon used and the number of shots fired as relevant, while Biri Singh v. State of U.P., 1992 CrLJ 1510 (SC), addresses inseparably mixed truth and falsehood and reasonable doubt about excess. In the linked counter-case, Roop Singh's party was found to have initiated the violence. Nandu and his brother Rajendra were injured, and Rajendra died. On these facts, Nandu's single abdominal gunshot was held to be a defensive response that did not exceed the right of private defence, and his conviction under Section 307 was set aside. This conclusion is case-specific; it does not make every use of a firearm against an aggressor lawful.

Proof — injuries to the accused and origin of the encounter — Parshuram v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 524/2021 (3 November 2023), was applied for the proposition that failure to explain injuries to an accused may cast doubt on whether the prosecution has disclosed the true genesis of the incident. The record in this appeal included the cross-FIR and injury exhibits, the investigating officer admitted the counter-case, Roop Singh did not explain the injuries, and three other alleged eyewitnesses turned hostile. The adverse inference arose from the cross-incident record as a whole; it is not an automatic consequence of every unexplained injury.

Cross-cases — separate records and coordinated hearings — A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Criminal Appeal No. 1306/2021 (29 October 2021), was quoted for the rule that each cross-case must be decided on its own evidence, without importing evidence recorded in the other case, while the trials or appeals should be heard simultaneously.

Evidence — abdominal gunshot, firing distance and recovery — The doctor and the X-ray supported the existence of a gunshot injury, but the doctor rejected the complainant's asserted firing distance of five feet. The independent seizure witness denied the alleged handover. The Court doubted the precise recovery and the prosecution's aggressive account, yet found that Nandu fired one shot to save himself. Medical proof of a gunshot did not, without resolving those discrepancies and the counter-party's attack, establish an unlawful attempt under Section 307.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal arose from Nandu alias Narendra Sharma's conviction under Section 307 IPC by the Additional Sessions Judge, Gadarwara, District Narsinghpur, in Sessions Trial No. 65/2003 on 29 October 2005. He was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹500, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The case concerned an encounter on 19 December 2001 that led to opposing FIRs at Police Station Saikheda. In Crime No. 148/2001, Roop Singh alias Ram Singh alleged that, while he and his associates were going to the Gadarwara court to testify, Rajendra, Jainendra, Geeta Bai and Nandu emerged from bushes, tried to prevent them from attending court, and Nandu shot Roop Singh in the abdomen with a country-made firearm. The FIR invoked Sections 341 and 307/34 IPC. Medical examination disclosed a deep epigastric gunshot wound with omental prolapse and multiple pellets, including pellets visible on X-ray. A statement of the injured man was recorded in the form of a dying declaration, but he survived; it therefore did not become evidence of the cause of his death. Jainu alias Jainendra and Geeta Bai were acquitted, and the State did not appeal. Proceedings against Rajendra abated after he died during the trial.

The defence gave a different account of the same incident. On Rajendra's report, Crime No. 147/2001 was registered against Roop Singh's group, alleging that eight persons armed with lathis assaulted Rajendra and Nandu. Rajendra died during treatment on 22 December 2001, after which Section 302 IPC was added to the counter-case. Separate Sessions Trial No. 120/2002 resulted in the counter-party's convictions under Sections 148, 302/149 and 307/149 IPC. Their appeals—Criminal Appeal Nos. 2360/2005, 2405/2005 and 30/2006—were decided by a separate judgment. The present judgment records that those convictions were affirmed and that Roop Singh's group was held to be the aggressor. The record of this appeal itself contained the cross-FIR, the injury exhibits relating to Nandu and Rajendra, and the investigating officer's admission that a counter-case had been registered.

Nandu challenged his conviction under Section 307. He argued that the complainant's group began the violence; that he fired only to defend himself and his brother; and that the medical evidence about firing distance, the firearm-recovery evidence and the alleged eyewitness accounts did not support the prosecution's version. The State maintained that the evidence proved the charge and that, even if a right of private defence arose, use of the firearm exceeded it. The appellate court heard the parties and reviewed the testimony of Roop Singh, the three alleged eyewitnesses, the seizure witness, the doctors and the investigating officer, together with the contemporaneous documents.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bhanwar Singh v. State of M.P., (2008) 16 SCC 657, was quoted at length on the right of private defence. Its discussion of Anil Kumar v. State of U.P., (2004) 13 SCC 257, identified the accused's injuries, the imminence of the threat, the injuries caused and the opportunity to seek public intervention as relevant factors. It described private defence as a necessary response to present danger, not aggression or retrospective reprisal, and required that the force used should not be unduly disproportionate, while cautioning that a threatened person's split-second choice cannot be weighed in golden scales. It cited Dharam v. State of Haryana, (2007) 15 SCC 241, for the prohibition on vindictive or malicious force. The High Court applied that composite principle to the reciprocal encounter, the injuries and the single shot; it did not create a mechanical one-shot safe harbour.

Madan Mohan Pandey v. State of U.P., 1991 CrLJ 467 (SC), was invoked for considering the weapon used and the number of shots fired when deciding whether the right of private defence was exceeded. Biri Singh v. State of U.P., 1992 CrLJ 1510 (SC), was cited for a case in which truth and falsehood were so intertwined that they could not safely be separated and the prosecution had not proved its version beyond reasonable doubt; in that setting, the accused could not be said to have exceeded the right. The Court applied those principles in the context of three hostile eyewitnesses, the accused's injuries and a single shot.

Parshuram v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 524/2021, decided on 3 November 2023, was cited for the proposition that unexplained injuries to an accused may cast doubt on whether the prosecution has presented the real genesis of the encounter. Here, the cross-FIR, the admitted reciprocal violence and the medical injury exhibits made that omission material. The Court did not state that every unexplained injury is automatically fatal to the prosecution. A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Criminal Appeal No. 1306/2021, decided on 29 October 2021, was quoted on cross-cases: each case must be decided on its own record, evidence from one cannot simply be used in the other, and parallel trials or simultaneous appellate hearings are desirable. The quoted passage itself notes that the Supreme Court's actual dispute involved two separate prosecutions for the same offence because one accused had absconded, a situation different from the reciprocal FIRs here.

3. Statutes considered : Section 307 IPC was the offence of conviction challenged in the appeal. The original FIR also invoked Sections 341 and 307/34; the appellate order did not separately dispose of another conviction under Section 341 or a distinct count under Section 34. Sections 96–106 IPC provide the general right of private defence of person and property. The judgment relied specifically on Section 96, under which an act done in exercise of that right is not an offence, subject to the limits of a real or reasonably perceived imminent danger and a response that is neither excessive nor vindictive. The counter-case involved Sections 147, 148, 149, 341, 294, 323 and 506-B and, later, Section 302 IPC. The separate trial convictions described in this judgment included Sections 148, 302/149 and 307/149. Those offences supplied context for the reciprocal incident; this appeal did not retry or formally alter the companion convictions. The Court used the firearm evidence and the parties' conduct to reject unlawful intent under Section 307 in this particular defensive setting, not to give a comprehensive construction of every element of Section 307.

4. Issues : Was the abdominal gunshot reliably attributable to Nandu as an unlawful attempt to murder Roop Singh despite the inconsistencies concerning firing distance and recovery, the hostile supporting witnesses and the proved counter-assault? Did Nandu face an imminent danger from Roop Singh's group, so that the shot was protected by Section 96, and, if so, did the use of a firearm and the vital injury show that the single shot exceeded the right of private defence? How did the unexplained injuries to Nandu and Rajendra affect the reliability of the complainant's account and the identification of the encounter's true origin? How could the simultaneously decided counter-case appeals be considered while keeping the evidentiary record of each appeal separate? The Court did not decide the acquitted co-accused's guilt or reopen the companion appeals in this judgment.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor confirmed a substantial abdominal gunshot wound, and the X-ray disclosed multiple pellets. That evidence proved a gunshot injury, but the doctor stated that it could not have been caused from the five-foot distance described by Roop Singh. The three alleged eyewitnesses—Jagdish, Mohan and Ghanshyam—turned hostile, leaving Roop Singh as the only witness directly supporting the alleged aggressive attack. He admitted the cross-case and the parties' earlier enmity but did not explain the injuries to Nandu and Rajendra. The Court doubted the firearm recovery and held that the precise aggressive narrative was not proved, while still accepting that Nandu fired one shot. These are distinct findings: doubt about the particular seized object and the stated distance did not amount to a finding that Nandu fired no shot.

The injury evidence and the counter-case material established that the two groups clashed in the same occurrence. The investigating officer admitted Crime No. 147/2001, and the defence injury exhibits were produced and proved in this case. The judgment identifies Roop Singh's group as the aggressor and records that the companion appeals affirmed their convictions. Under Bhanwar Singh, defensive necessity and proportionality had to be assessed amid the turmoil of the actual attack. The Court emphasised the injuries to Nandu and Rajendra, Rajendra's death, the single gunshot, and the absence of repeated firing or evidence of a deliberate, pinpointed aim at a vital part. It held that Nandu fired to save himself and did not use excessive force; Section 96 therefore protected the act.

The Court accordingly reversed Nandu's conviction under Section 307, holding that he acted in private defence and that the prosecution had not proved its contrary account beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The High Court allowed the criminal appeal, set aside the conviction and seven-year sentence imposed on 29 October 2005 in Sessions Trial No. 65/2003, and acquitted Nandu alias Narendra Sharma. As he was on bail, his bail bonds were discharged, and any fine deposited by him was ordered to be refunded. A copy of the judgment, together with the trial-court record, was directed to be sent to the court concerned. The acquittals of the co-accused and the abatement of the proceedings against Rajendra remained undisturbed. The separate counter-case appeals were not formally disposed of by the operative order in this judgment.

Nandu alias Narendra Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Criminal Appeal No. 2301/2005, decided on 16 October 2024, Division Bench, Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia and Vishal Mishra, JJ., High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- IPC — Section 376 — child prosecutrix — alternative cow-injury explanation and internally inconsistent medical record — A six-year-old testified that the appellant raped her after she went to feed a cow. Her mother saw her emerge crying from his room, and Kailadevi also saw her crying and coming from his house. Blood and inflammation were found on her private part. In the same paragraph, the judgment records the doctor as first saying that a cow-horn injury was possible and then stating "with authenticity" that such an injury was impossible; the Court's final finding relies on the latter statement. The incomplete hymen examination was therefore not treated as conclusive by itself. The conviction rested on the child's account, the supporting ocular circumstances, the medical observations and the DNA evidence.

Evidence — y-chromosome STR profiling — pre-arrest sealing and fabrication theory — The DNA report recorded a Y-STR profile on the child's underwear and the appellant's Y-STR profile on her clothes. Dr Shalini Mishra sealed the child's clothes at 11:30 p.m. on 31 January 2013, before the appellant was arrested on 1 February 2013. The Court held that this sequence excluded the possibility that the investigating agency had smeared the sealed underwear with the appellant's semen after his arrest, and it treated the DNA result as corroboration. The finding was tied to the recorded custody sequence and the other evidence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Narayan Singh appealed against the judgment dated 26 April 2013 of the Additional Sessions Judge, Ambah, District Morena, in S.T. No. 80/2013, convicting him under Section 376 IPC. He was sentenced to ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹25,000, with one year's rigorous imprisonment in default. The prosecutrix was about six years old. At about 11:00 a.m. on 31 January 2013, her mother, who was observing a Thursday fast, gave her dough to feed a cow tied near another house. When the child did not return for about half an hour, the mother searched for her and, according to her testimony, saw the child emerge crying from the appellant's room while he went back inside. The child said that he had raped her after gagging her and had threatened to strangle her if she disclosed the incident. The mother saw blood on the child's private part and underwear, washed the child and her clothes, and informed family members. The father returned later, and the FIR was recorded at 5:00 p.m. that day.

The child and her mother testified. Her grandmother and Kailadevi also supported the prosecution; Kailadevi saw the child crying and later said that she had emerged from the appellant's house. The mother described the child's blood-stained pink pants and yellow underwear and the referrals from Ambah to Morena and then to Kamla Raja Hospital, Gwalior, where the child remained for two or three days. Dr Shalini Mishra found inflammation and blood on the vaginal surface but could not examine the hymen because the child was crying and would not cooperate. She said that rape could not be ruled out and that the opinion required correlation with the surrounding circumstances and laboratory examination. The judgment's account of her cross-examination is internally inconsistent: it first records that a cow-horn injury was possible, but immediately records her categorical statement that the injuries could in no circumstance have resulted from a cow attack. The child said in cross-examination that a cow had thrown and injured her; her mother denied that account and also denied that a marital dispute or pressure from the father had prompted a false report. The investigators seized the child's clothes and samples, an alleged blood-stained bedsheet, a shirt and other articles; samples and clothing were also collected from the appellant. A seizure witness admitted political rivalry and an earlier prosecution but denied that he had merely signed papers without witnessing the proceedings. A doctor found the appellant potent. The prosecution examined twelve witnesses, and the appellant examined one defence witness. The trial court convicted him. No advocate appeared for the appellant in the High Court, which reviewed the record, heard the State and considered the grounds in the memorandum of appeal.

2. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC conferred appellate jurisdiction. Section 376 IPC was the charged offence, and the conviction under that provision was affirmed. The Court held that the applicable minimum sentence was ten years and declined to interfere with it. Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act appears in the account of the appellant's memorandum and the related seizures; the Court did not make a separate ruling on discovery admissibility.

3. Issues : Whether the child's account, the mother's and Kailadevi's observations, the medical findings and the DNA result proved the charge under Section 376 IPC beyond reasonable doubt despite the cow-injury explanation and the incomplete medical examination. Whether sealing the child's clothes before the appellant's arrest answered the suggested fabrication of DNA material on the underwear. Whether the ten-year sentence required appellate interference.

4. Ratio / Findings : The child described the assault after entering the appellant's room. Her mother found her crying as she emerged, observed blood and received her immediate account; Kailadevi also saw the child crying and coming from the appellant's house. The Court considered the child's cross-examination statement that a cow had thrown and injured her and the mother's denial of that version. The medical examination showed inflammation and blood, although the hymen could not be examined and the doctor's recorded testimony about cow-horn causation is internally inconsistent. In reaching its conclusion, the Court expressly relied on the categorical statement that the injuries could not have resulted from a cow attack, together with the ocular evidence and the DNA report.

The DNA report, as reproduced in the judgment, recorded a Y-chromosome STR profile on the child's underwear and the appellant's Y-STR profile on her clothes. Dr Shalini Mishra sealed the child's clothes at 11:30 p.m. on 31 January 2013, and the appellant was arrested on 1 February 2013. The Court held that the investigating agency could not have smeared the already sealed underwear with the appellant's semen after his arrest. Treating that chronology as an answer to the fabrication theory, it combined the forensic result with the ocular and medical evidence and found guilt proved beyond reasonable doubt.

The Court maintained the sentence of ten years' rigorous imprisonment and the fine, holding that ten years was the applicable statutory minimum. Because the appellant had already served the awarded prison term and had been released, no further custody direction was required.

5. Relief : The High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the judgment dated 26 April 2013 in S.T. No. 80/2013, including the conviction under Section 376 IPC, ten years' rigorous imprisonment, the ₹25,000 fine and one year's rigorous imprisonment in default. As Narayan Singh had already undergone the awarded imprisonment and been released, nothing further was required.

Narayan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. No. 469/2013, decided on 28 March 2022, Single Bench, Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, J., High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Gwalior Bench.

Headnote :- CrPC — Section 389 — suspension of sentence distinguished from stay of conviction — public servant convicted under the Prevention of Corruption Act — The petitioner challenged his termination after conviction under Sections 7 and 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. In his pending criminal appeal, the prison sentence had been suspended, but the conviction had not been stayed. Applying K.C. Sareen v. CBI, Chandigarh, (2001) 6 SCC 584, the High Court held that the two orders have different effects: neither an appeal nor suspension of the sentence makes the conviction disappear. A stay of conviction is exceptional; the applicant must disclose the specific adverse consequence, and the appellate court must consider its ramifications and give written reasons. Sareen cautions against staying a corruption conviction merely to enable a convicted public servant to continue in office pending appeal, even when imprisonment is suspended. The Court found no illegality in the termination under the Madhya Pradesh service rules. Relying on its decision in Badelal Pathak, it also rejected entitlement to provisional pension and gratuity after conviction. The writ petition was dismissed without deciding the merits of the criminal appeal or any application to stay the conviction.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Narendra Gangrade filed a petition under Article 226 challenging the Engineer-in-Chief, Water Resources Department's order dated 18 April 2019 terminating his service. By a criminal judgment dated 11 January 2019, he had been convicted under Sections 7 and 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act. The judgment records sentences of two and three years' rigorous imprisonment, respectively, with fines of ₹5,000 and ₹1,000. The service order relied on Rules 19(1)(2) and 10(9) of the Madhya Pradesh Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1966.

Gangrade filed Criminal Appeal No. 350/2019. By an order dated 4 February 2019, his sentence was suspended. His counsel submitted that, despite the conviction, he should at least continue in service as a suspended employee. Gangrade had since reached the age of superannuation and also complained that pension and gratuity were not being paid. The Court recorded that he did not claim that his conviction had been stayed. The writ petition sought reversal of the service termination and consequential benefits; it did not require the Court to dispose of the pending criminal appeal or reassess the evidence supporting the corruption conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : K.C. Sareen v. CBI, Chandigarh, (2001) 6 SCC 584, was extensively quoted and applied. Paragraphs 10–15 distinguish the ordinary suspension of the execution of a sentence from the exceptional suspension of an order of conviction under Section 389(1) CrPC, including where the conviction produces a disqualification. Sareen holds that merely filing or admitting an appeal does not justify keeping the conviction in abeyance. The appellate court must consider the consequences, and a public servant convicted of corruption should not be enabled to continue in public office through a stay of conviction while an appeal or revision is pending, even though imprisonment may be suspended. The High Court used that distinction and public-interest principle to assess an unstayed conviction; it did not adjudicate a Section 389 application.

Within the passage from Sareen, the three-Judge Bench decision in Rama Narang v. Ramesh Narang, (1995) 2 SCC 513, is discussed. Ordinarily, Section 389 suspends an executable sentence or an order for compensation, fine or probation; a conviction does not disappear merely because an appeal is filed. In some circumstances, however, a conviction itself may produce an executable disqualification, and a stay may then be available. The applicant must specifically draw the consequence to the appellate court's attention, and the court must record reasons in writing. A general stay obtained without disclosing its purpose cannot automatically remove the disqualification. These qualifications, reproduced through Sareen, informed the High Court's distinction; the Court did not hold that a conviction can never be stayed.

Sareen also quoted Deputy Director of Collegiate Education (Admn.) v. S. Nagoor Meera, (1995) 3 SCC 377, on taking action under clause (a) of the second proviso to Article 311(2) after a government servant's conviction without awaiting an appeal or revision. If the employee is later acquitted, the service order may be revised and, upon reinstatement, the benefits restored. It also cited State of T.N. v. A. Jaganathan, (1996) 5 SCC 329, which set aside a discretionary stay of conviction for public officials convicted, among other matters, of corruption, including an attempted use of Section 482. The High Court reproduced these passages as part of Sareen's public-interest analysis; it did not make a fresh ruling under Article 311 or Section 482. The High Court also cited Badelal Pathak v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, W.P. No. 18341/2023, decided on 5 September 2023, for the proposition that a convicted employee is not entitled to provisional pension or gratuity.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution conferred the writ jurisdiction invoked to challenge the service order. The conviction was under Sections 7 and 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act; the writ order did not reconsider the elements of those offences. Rules 19(1)(2) and 10(9) of the Madhya Pradesh Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1966, were cited as the basis of the post-conviction service action. Section 389(1) CrPC is the appellate suspension provision analysed in Sareen and the quoted Rama Narang discussion. The quoted Nagoor Meera passage concerns clause (a) of the second proviso to Article 311(2), and the quoted Jaganathan passage refers to Section 482 CrPC. The provisions are stated at the level at which they entered the High Court's reasoning.

4. Issues : Whether the order dated 4 February 2019 suspending Gangrade's prison sentence in Criminal Appeal No. 350/2019 also prevented the adverse service consequences of his unstayed corruption conviction, so that the Engineer-in-Chief could not terminate his service and should at least retain him as a suspended employee. This required the Court to distinguish suspension of a sentence from a stay of conviction and apply the Supreme Court's public-interest treatment of corruption convictions. A related issue was Gangrade's claim to pension and gratuity after superannuation, for which the Court relied on Badelal Pathak.

5. Ratio / Findings : The conviction, sentence and later appellate order were undisputed procedural facts. The Court expressly found that the conviction itself had not been stayed. Suspension of a sentence affects the execution of imprisonment; it does not set aside or suspend the underlying conviction. Gangrade therefore could not derive a right to remain in service from the order dated 4 February 2019. Applying Sareen, the Court distinguished an exceptional, specifically justified stay of conviction from the ordinary suspension of imprisonment pending appeal. Through the quoted discussion of Rama Narang, it explained that an applicant seeking relief from a conviction-triggered disqualification must identify that consequence and that the appellate court must record reasons. The distinction preserves the limited statutory possibility of a properly justified stay of conviction but does not allow suspension of the sentence to be treated as such a stay.

Sareen further holds that merely entertaining an appeal does not temporarily exonerate a public servant judicially convicted of corruption. It counsels against staying such a conviction to permit continued public office while the challenge is pending, even if imprisonment is suspended, because public confidence and administration may suffer. Nagoor Meera and Jaganathan supported prompt service consequences and restrained use of the power to stay a conviction. The High Court adopted that public-interest approach and found that the unstayed conviction permitted Gangrade's termination under the stated service rules. It did not decide the merits of a conviction-stay request or hold that a prison sentence can never be suspended.

For the post-superannuation claim, the Court relied on Badelal Pathak for the proposition that a convicted employee is not entitled to provisional pension or gratuity. The quoted passage from Nagoor Meera recognises that, if the employee is later acquitted, the service order may be revised and benefits restored upon reinstatement. That eventuality was not before the Court. The decision rested on the conviction remaining operative, not on a finding that the pending criminal appeal lacked merit.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the writ petition and declined to interfere with the termination order dated 18 April 2019. It granted no direction for continued or suspended employment, provisional pension or gratuity. The criminal conviction remained unstayed, while the prior suspension of the prison sentence and the pending criminal appeal were unaffected by the writ order.

Narendra Gangrade v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, W.P. No. 9307/2019, decided on 22 September 2023, Single Bench, Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, J., High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Jabalpur Bench.

Case Sr. no. (334) Prev Next

Headnote :- BNSS — Section 482 — anticipatory bail in alleged public-money misappropriation — The prosecution alleged false computer entries recording the purchase and movement of food grain that had not been purchased. The applicant, described as a society computer operator, voluntarily offered to deposit ₹10 lakh and relied on a similar deposit offered by a co-accused who had received anticipatory bail. Applying Ramesh Kumar v. State of NCT of Delhi, (2023) 7 SCC 461, paragraph 26, the High Court held that, exceptionally, an accused's voluntary offer to account for all or part of allegedly misappropriated public money may be considered before bail is finally decided, because returning public money may serve the larger public interest. That approach does not extend to private disputes involving money allegedly lost through cheating. The Court directed the applicant's release on depositing ₹10 lakh with the Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation Limited by 30 November 2024, producing the receipt, and furnishing a personal bond of ₹1 lakh with one surety in the same amount. The bail order would automatically stand cancelled if he did not withdraw his parallel writ petition seeking transfer of the investigation; otherwise, it would remain effective until the end of trial but become ineffective upon a bail jump.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Narendra Kumar Pandey applied in M.Cr.C. No. 47379/2024 under Section 482 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. The order describes the application as one for anticipatory bail in Crime No. 61/2024, Police Station Dharkundi, District Satna. The registered offences were under Sections 406, 417, 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B IPC, and Section 13(1)(b) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, as identified in the order. The case diary was available. According to counsel's account of the prosecution case, false entries in a society's computer system represented the procurement and transportation of food grain that had not actually been purchased. Counsel described fictitious purchases worth about ₹90 lakh and alleged misappropriation of ₹92.64 lakh of public money by more than eight persons. These figures and the description of the scheme were allegations and submissions, not final findings or an adjudicated loss.

Pandey submitted that he was a computer operator who had been compelled by others to enter the incorrect information. He had also filed W.P. No. 23452/2024 seeking transfer of the investigation to another agency. By an order dated 22 August 2024, a coordinate Bench directed that no coercive steps be taken against him. Asked how he presently apprehended arrest despite that protection, counsel acknowledged that he did not, but submitted that the writ petition might fail because an accused had no right to seek transfer of an investigation. Counsel proposed to withdraw it, after which the apprehension of arrest would revive. The statement about the accused's lack of such a right was counsel's submission in this bail proceeding, not an independently reasoned holding on transfer jurisdiction.

Counsel relied on the anticipatory bail granted to co-accused Samrat Singh on 6 September 2024 after he offered to deposit ₹10 lakh. Counsel contrasted the rejection of co-accused Dhananjay Dwivedi's application on 3 October 2024 after he declined to deposit that amount and argued the case on merits. Pandey likewise volunteered to deposit ₹10 lakh; the State opposed the application. The judgment is internally inconsistent about custody: although it repeatedly frames the matter as anticipatory bail based on an apprehension of arrest, paragraphs 8 and 12 state that Pandey had been in jail for the last, or more than, four months. The digest records that conflict without resolving it.

2. Precedent — Considered : Ramesh Kumar v. State of NCT of Delhi, 2023:INSC:596, (2023) 7 SCC 461, was cited by counsel, quoted by the Court and applied to the offered deposit. Paragraph 26 does not prohibit consideration of an accused's willingness to pay or deposit money in every bail case. In an exceptional case alleging misappropriation of public money, a court may consider an accused's voluntary proposal to account for all or part of that money before finally deciding anticipatory or regular bail, because restoring public money may serve the larger public interest. The passage distinguishes private disputes involving money allegedly lost through cheating, where that approach is unwarranted. The High Court applied the public-money branch of the principle to the ₹10 lakh condition. Neither the allegation nor the proposed deposit was treated as a final admission or determination of guilt.

The final direction cites XYZ and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Another, 2021:INSC:192, (2021) 16 SCC 179, as the basis for sending intimation of the bail grant to the complainant. The judgment was invoked only for that notification direction. The two co-accused bail orders and the coordinate Bench's interim protection in the writ petition were procedural comparators or background, not Supreme Court precedents laying down general rules.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, was the provision invoked for the anticipatory-bail application. The registered offences were under Sections 406, 417, 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B IPC, and Section 13(1)(b) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, with the order referring to the 2018 amendment. The no-coercive-steps order arose in the separate investigation-transfer writ petition. The operative bail direction specified the deposit, receipt, personal bond, matching surety and withdrawal condition. The bail order did not finally determine ownership of the alleged funds or the applicant's guilt.

4. Issues : Whether Pandey could obtain anticipatory bail on his undertaking to withdraw the transfer writ, despite acknowledging that the coordinate Bench's no-coercive-steps order meant he did not then apprehend arrest. Whether, consistently with the narrow exception in Ramesh Kumar, his voluntary offer to deposit ₹10 lakh could be considered where public money was alleged to have been misappropriated. What conditions would govern his release and the continuance of bail. The Court did not decide whether the investigation should be transferred, who was ultimately responsible for the false entries, the actual amount lost, or the criminal liability of any accused.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first elicited counsel's admission that the interim writ order removed any present apprehension of arrest. Counsel's proposed withdrawal of the writ supplied the contemplated basis on which that apprehension would revive. The Court therefore made withdrawal of W.P. No. 23452/2024 an express condition for the bail order to remain effective; it did not decide the writ petition's prospects or transfer the investigation. The Court treated the computer-entry defence cautiously. It considered it not very important at the bail stage whether Pandey entered the false information under another person's pressure or voluntarily, because he might still be responsible for his own act. That observation was not a final finding on intent, complicity or guilt.

For the financial condition, the Court reproduced paragraph 26 of Ramesh Kumar and applied its exceptional public-money rationale to the allegations and Pandey's voluntary offer to deposit ₹10 lakh. The Supreme Court passage permits consideration, in the larger public interest, of an offer to account for all or part of allegedly misappropriated public money before bail is finally determined. It does not establish a general payment requirement for bail and expressly excludes the same approach in private disputes involving money allegedly lost through cheating. The different treatment of the two co-accused appeared in counsel's submissions and was not converted into a general parity rule.

The operative order required Pandey to deposit ₹10 lakh with the Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation Limited by 30 November 2024, produce the receipt, and furnish a personal bond of ₹1 lakh with one surety in the same amount to the trial court's satisfaction. It provided that the anticipatory-bail order would automatically stand cancelled if Pandey did not withdraw the parallel writ petition; otherwise, it would remain effective until the end of trial. Upon a bail jump, the order would become ineffective and the trial court could take him into custody. The Court also directed intimation to the complainant by reference to XYZ. These were conditions of the particular order.

6. Relief : The High Court allowed the application and directed Pandey's release on bail if he deposited ₹10 lakh with the Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation Limited by 30 November 2024, produced the receipt, and furnished a personal bond of ₹1 lakh with one surety in the same amount to the trial court's satisfaction. The order would automatically stand cancelled if he did not withdraw W.P. No. 23452/2024. If the writ was withdrawn, the order would remain effective until the end of trial, subject to becoming ineffective upon a bail jump. Intimation of the bail grant was to be sent to the complainant.

Narendra Kumar Pandey v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. No. 47379/2024, decided on 8 November 2024, Single Bench, Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, J., High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Jabalpur Bench.

Headnote :- IPC — Section 460 — night house-trespass or house-breaking causing death or grievous hurt — joint liability requires proof of the accused's participation - The Davars' home was broken into at night, property was allegedly stolen, and guard Bhagwan Singh was found dead. The Court explained Section 460's temporal requirement and its application to persons jointly concerned when any person guilty of the nighttime offence voluntarily causes or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt. It did not infer Nandu's participation merely from the condition of the scene and the medical proof of death. The circumstances relied upon by the prosecution failed to connect him with the offence, and his conviction and life sentence were set aside.

IPC — Sections 299, 300 thirdly and 304 — homicide established, but the offender's identity not proved - Three incised injuries on the head and nose, together with skull fractures and coma, supported the doctor's conclusion that the death was homicidal. The Court reviewed Virsa Singh's distinction between the intention to inflict the particular injury proved and the objective assessment whether that injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. It also considered Arun Nivalaji More on the categories of homicide and the roles of intention and knowledge. The authorities cautioning against automatic classification by the number of blows were also quoted. Those principles did not supply the missing proof that Nandu was the assailant or establish any individual intention or knowledge on his part.

Evidence — identification of stolen articles and recovery - The organiser of the purported property-identification proceeding said that it took place at a school without police presence. He nevertheless admitted that the police had brought the property and prepared the written record, while one owner initially stated that the identification occurred at the police station. The owners' and the brother's accounts of opening and examining the house also differed. The alleged recovery was made from an open place and was unsupported by the memorandum witnesses. In the circumstances of this case, these conflicts impaired the reliability of the alleged link to Nandu.

Evidence — circumstantial chain — motorcycle and property links insufficient - No witness identified Nandu at the house or as one of the riders seen near the area at 3 a.m. The constable's alleged report of the motorcycle number was not entered in any station record. The seized motorcycle had neither a key nor ownership documents linking it to Nandu, and the fingerprints collected during the investigation were not examined. The alleged recovery and property-identification evidence were also unreliable. Applying Padala Veera Reddy, Sharad Birdhichand Sarda and Ramreddy Rajeshkhanna Reddy, the Court held that the circumstances did not form a complete and exclusive chain establishing guilt beyond reasonable doubt. Nandu was acquitted of the charge under Section 460 and ordered to be released if not required in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nandu appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the Third Additional Sessions Judge, Fast Track, Guna's judgment of 26 June 2006 in Sessions Trial No. 268/2005. He alone was convicted under Section 460 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment, a ₹500 fine and one additional year of rigorous imprisonment in default. The prosecution had charged an absconding Jackey separately under Section 299 CrPC; this appeal did not decide Jackey's case. Umesh and Varsha Davar were away in Jaipur on the night of 24–25 March 2005. Unknown persons allegedly removed a window grill, entered their Mathur Colony, Guna house, stole ornaments, a men's watch and a Sai Baba idol, and killed their watchman Bhagwan Singh. Their brother Gulshan Davar reported finding the body, rope and damaged window the next morning and lodged FIR Ex. P/2. A merg and spot map were prepared. The house-breaking and death were not disputed as events; the offender's identity was the live issue.

Dr P.K. Sharma's postmortem Ex. P/5 described two incised head wounds over the right parietal and frontal regions with bone fractures and a further incised wound over the nose bridge. He attributed death to coma following head injuries and characterised it as homicidal. Constable Bhaskar Singh Raghuvanshi said that at about 3 a.m. he saw three young men, whom he described as looking like Pardis, on motorcycle MP-08-J-7149 coming from the colony's direction and turning away on seeing police. He said he read the plate by torchlight and told the station after learning of the murder at about 5 a.m. He did not identify Nandu as a rider. Investigators arrested Nandu, seized a motorcycle under Ex. P/13, recorded his memorandum Ex. P/15, and asserted seizure of stolen property under Ex. P/14. Dinesh Sharma, a municipal councillor, conducted an article-identification proceeding Ex. P/1. The defence challenged its venue and procedure, the open-place recovery and the timing, the absence of corroboration for the plate information, and the inference from the motorcycle.

The appeal was argued for Nandu by Anoop Nigam and opposed by the State. The Court framed issues whether he committed lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night, caused the guard's death while committing that offence, whether the death amounted to culpable homicide and murder, and whether Nandu was the murderer. It examined each issue in light of the evidence concerning identity.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was explained in the Court's discussion of Section 300 Thirdly. The prosecution must prove the existence and nature of the bodily injury, the intention to inflict that particular injury—as distinguished from an accidental injury or an intention to inflict a different injury—and, objectively, that the injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Once those elements are proved, a further intention to cause death or knowledge that the injury was likely to be fatal is unnecessary. The Court reviewed this framework before assessing the fatal injuries, but it did not establish who inflicted them. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079 of 2005, was quoted on the intention and knowledge limbs of Section 299, the clauses and exceptions of Section 300, and the division between Parts I and II of Section 304 where culpable homicide does not amount to murder. The judgment reproduced a context-specific discussion of Section 300 Secondly and Thirdly that referred to a differently named victim.

The Court also quoted Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, for the ordinary-course sufficiency of an intended injury; Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, for the absence of an automatic rule that a single blow excludes murder; and Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, for the cumulative conditions of Section 300 Exception 4, including a sudden mutual fight, absence of premeditation, and absence of undue advantage or cruelty. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, supplied a non-exhaustive list of circumstances bearing on intention, while Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, concerned a crowbar blow to a vital part of the skull. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, reproduced passages from Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram concerning a single blow and Exception 4. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, quoted State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh to distinguish the intention to inflict the proved injury from the seriousness of that injury.

Padala Veera Reddy v. State of A.P., AIR 1990 SC 79, was quoted for firmly established, unerringly incriminating circumstances forming a complete chain excluding innocence. Its quotation itself cites Gambhir and other cases as background; their individual facts and holdings were not independently considered. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622, supplied the five conditions: circumstances must be fully established, consistent only with guilt, conclusive, exclude other hypotheses, and make a complete chain leaving no reasonable ground consistent with innocence. The Court expressly applied these and found the chain unproved. Ramreddy Rajeshkhanna Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 172, was quoted to emphasise clinching proof of each link and that grave suspicion is no substitute; its embedded references to Anil Kumar Singh and Reddy Sampath Kumar were not separately analysed by the present Court. The three circumstantial-proof authorities directly supported acquittal.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the appeal against conviction. Section 460 IPC was the sole provision under which Nandu was convicted. Its quoted text applies where, during lurking house-trespass by night or house-breaking by night, a person guilty of that offence voluntarily causes or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt, and it extends liability to every person jointly concerned in the nighttime offence. The requirement that the harmful act occur while the nighttime trespass or house-breaking is being committed was material. IPC Sections 299 and 300 were extensively discussed in relation to the guard's homicidal death, while Sections 302 and 304 appeared in the quoted precedent framework. Nandu's recorded trial conviction was under Section 460, not a separate Section 302 count adjudicated in this appeal. The charge sheet filed against the absconding Jackey under Section 299 CrPC was a separate procedural matter, not a reference to culpable homicide under the IPC. The memorandum and alleged recovery were considered through the exhibits and witness testimony.

4. Issues : The Court had to decide whether the prosecution proved that Nandu was jointly concerned in the nighttime entry or break-in and that an act causing death or grievous hurt occurred while that offence was being committed so as to attract Section 460; whether the medical evidence established homicidal death and how the principles under Sections 299 and 300 applied; whether the article identification, memorandum and recovery linked him to the stolen property; and whether the motorcycle sighting, seized motorcycle and other circumstances formed an exclusive chain proving his identity and participation beyond reasonable doubt. The Court also had to determine the effect on his life sentence and custody if that proof failed.

5. Ratio / Findings : First, the Court reproduced Section 460 and emphasised the words “at the time of” the nighttime trespass or house-breaking. The act causing or attempting to cause death or grievous hurt must occur while that offence is being committed. Extended liability rests on the accused being jointly concerned in the underlying nighttime offence when one guilty participant voluntarily causes or attempts to cause death or grievous hurt. The prosecution, however, failed to connect Nandu with the entry or the killing. The broken grill, missing property and the guard's death established the occurrence alleged by the prosecution, but not Nandu's identity or participation.

Second, Dr P.K. Sharma's evidence established that Bhagwan Singh died from head injuries and consequent coma, with fractures in two regions of the skull and an incised wound over the nose. The Court recorded the doctor's opinion that the death was homicidal and that the injuries were sufficient to cause death. In its preceding legal discussion, the Court explained Sections 299 and 300, including Virsa Singh's distinction between the intention to inflict the actual injury and the objective question whether that injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. It also discussed the roles of intention and knowledge in the classification of offences under Sections 302 and 304. The Court extensively reproduced Supreme Court illustrations concerning single blows, weapons, vital body parts, provocation and sudden fights. None resolved the separate evidentiary question whether Nandu was the attacker, and no eyewitness identified him as such. The Court therefore acquitted Nandu of the Section 460 charge after finding that the circumstantial chain was not proved.

Third, the alleged discovery and identification of the stolen property did not provide a reliable link to Nandu. Gulshan and Umesh materially differed over when and in whose presence the house was unlocked and its contents examined. The memorandum witness Rajesh Solanki gave differing accounts of the place of arrest and signing. The seizure of glass and rope witnessed by Hariom and Pawan did not result from Nandu's memorandum, and both witnesses said that they signed at the direction of the police. The investigating witness stated that only a motorcycle was seized when Nandu was arrested; he described the later seizure of stolen property from an open place, but no memorandum witness supported it. Dinesh Sharma said that the property-identification proceeding took place at a school without the police, yet admitted that the police had brought the articles and prepared Ex. P/1 for him. Varsha initially placed the identification at the police station and later attempted to correct that account. The Court treated these contradictions and the absence of independent support as defeating the alleged identification.

Fourth, Bhaskar Singh reported three unidentified riders around 3 a.m. near several colonies, on a motorcycle whose plate he said he saw with a torch. He did not recognise Nandu; a description that riders looked like Pardis did not identify individuals. His claimed post-patrol report of the number had no Rojnamcha/Sanha entry or other document. The seized bike had no key or ownership documents tying it to Nandu. Investigators took fingerprints but did not have them examined. The circumstances therefore lacked reliable links both from the scene to the riders and from the numbered bike to Nandu. Applying Padala Veera Reddy, Sharad Birdhichand Sarda and Ramreddy, the Court required proof of each inculpatory link and exclusion of reasonable innocence. It expressly found the cumulative chain incomplete. Suspicion from the purported motorcycle, recovery or property identification could not meet the criminal standard. The State's defence of the conviction failed; the fact of homicidal death did not cure the attribution gap.

6. Relief : The High Court allowed the criminal appeal, set aside the conviction and life sentence imposed on 26 June 2006 under Section 460 IPC, and acquitted Nandu of that charge. Referring to the Superintendent, Central Jail, Gwalior's report dated 11 August 2021 that Nandu was in prison, the Court ordered his release in the matter arising from this trial if he was not required in another case. It also directed that the trial-court record be returned promptly with a copy of the judgment.

Nandu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 499/2006, 01/09/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- CrPC — Section 36 — independent parallel inquiry during investigation - According to the prosecution case, police found Narendra Pal Singh Tomar and Rajkumar unloading illicit liquor from a truck. After Tomar represented to the Superintendent of Police, the City Superintendent of Police (CSP) conducted a separate inquiry and reported that he was absent from the spot; he was therefore omitted from the charge sheet. Applying Deepak @ Preetam Verma, as affirmed in Surendra Singh Gaur, the High Court held that neither Section 36 nor the cited police circular authorised an independent inquiry alongside the investigating officer's ongoing FIR investigation. It declared the CSP report to be without jurisdiction and a nullity that could not be considered for any purpose. The quoted Supreme Court order recognised that the circular conformed to Section 36 but held that the officers' parallel procedure did not conform to the circular or the law.

CrPC — Section 319 — summoning an omitted person on trial evidence - A co-accused sought to summon Tomar while prosecution evidence was being recorded. The FIR, witness statements recorded under Section 161 CrPC and the witnesses' court evidence indicated his involvement in unloading a truck containing 1,919 litres of illicit liquor. Because the CSP report was a nullity, it could not control the trial court's assessment. Citing Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 3 SCC 92, the High Court upheld the Section 319 summons and dismissed the revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. The finding of prima facie involvement was not a determination of guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Narendra Pal Singh Tomar brought Criminal Revision No. 3103/2021 under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC against the Sixth Additional Sessions Judge, Morena's order dated 8 October 2021 in S.T. No. 339/2017. By that order, the trial court summoned him as an additional accused under Section 319 CrPC after he had not been included in the charge sheet. According to the prosecution case, police received information that illicit liquor was being unloaded near Rajkumar's premises, formed three parties and found Tomar and Rajkumar unloading a truck bearing registration No. HR69-2733 into the premises. Tomar allegedly fled when police arrived, while Rajkumar was arrested. Police seized 1,919 litres of liquor valued at about ₹16 lakh.

Tomar represented to the Superintendent of Police, Morena that he had no connection to the offence. While the FIR investigation was pending, the SP assigned a separate inquiry to the City Superintendent of Police. The CSP concluded that Tomar was not at the spot; on this basis the police did not charge-sheet him. During the prosecution evidence in Rajkumar's trial, Rajkumar himself applied under Section 319 to summon Tomar. The trial court acted on evidence that had come before it. Tomar's principal revisional argument was that the CSP's report made summoning unnecessary. The State opposed and said a simultaneous, separate Section 36 inquiry was impermissible. The High Court had the case diary and heard counsel for both sides.

2. Precedents — Considered : Deepak @ Preetam Verma and another v. State of M.P. and another, M.Cr.C. No. 12592/2018, order dated 11 September 2018, was the High Court's earlier ruling that an independent parallel inquiry under Section 36 CrPC during an ongoing investigation is not maintainable. The present Court applied that ruling. The Supreme Court's order dated 18 January 2022 in Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P. and others, SLP (Criminal) No. 1345/2019, affirmed the rejection of the independent parallel inquiry and was quoted extensively. It held that neither Section 36 nor the circular invoked by the officers provided for a simultaneous, separate inquiry into the same FIR. The order further stated that the 26 June 2010 circular conformed to Section 36, but the procedure actually followed by the officers conformed neither to the circular nor to the law. Finding no ground to interfere under Article 136, the Supreme Court dismissed the petitions. The present Court treated that reasoning as governing the CSP's report in this case.

Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 3 SCC 92, was expressly cited as support for upholding the trial court's Section 319 summons on the FIR and witnesses' court testimony. It applied the authority to the particular evidence and procedural stage, finding the summons permissible rather than deciding final culpability.

3. Statutes considered : Section 36 CrPC was invoked as authority for senior police involvement. The ruling concerned an independent parallel CSP inquiry conducted during the pending FIR investigation and the legal effect of its report. Witness statements recorded under Section 161 CrPC and evidence given in court were treated as sources of prima facie implication. Section 319 CrPC empowered the trial court to summon a person not already accused on the basis of evidence emerging during trial; the present order reviewed that exercise after prosecution evidence had begun. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC conferred revisional jurisdiction. Article 136 of the Constitution appears in the quoted Supreme Court order as the basis on which that Court declined to interfere.

4. Issues : Could a CSP's exonerating report, created on the SP's direction as an independent inquiry while the investigating officer's FIR investigation continued, be relied on under Section 36 to prevent the trial court from summoning Tomar? Did the FIR, Section 161 statements and witnesses' trial evidence supply a sufficient basis in this record for the Sessions Court to exercise Section 319 after Tomar was omitted from the police report? The associated revisional question was whether the 8 October 2021 order warranted interference. The Court did not determine whether Tomar actually committed the underlying liquor offence or finally assess a defence of nonpresence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court first identified the origin of the CSP report: Tomar asked the Superintendent of Police to examine his plea that he was absent from the spot, and the CSP conducted a separate inquiry while the original investigation remained pending. Deepak @ Preetam Verma had rejected such a parallel inquiry. The quoted Supreme Court order in Surendra Singh Gaur explained that neither Section 36 nor the State circular authorised an independent inquiry alongside the investigating officer's work on the FIR. It recognised that the circular conformed to Section 36 but held that the officers' actual procedure conformed neither to the circular nor to the law. Applying that reasoning, the High Court declared the CSP report to be without jurisdiction and a nullity that could not be considered for any purpose.

The Court then identified prima facie material independent of the CSP report. It found that Tomar was specifically named in the FIR; the statements recorded under Section 161 CrPC and the witnesses' court evidence indicated his involvement in unloading the truck; and the witnesses admitted his involvement in cross-examination. The Court further observed that supplementary statements by police personnel giving Tomar a clean chit indicated his influential status. After stating, "Be that whatever it may," the Court relied on the named FIR and the witnesses' evidence and, citing Hardeep Singh, held that the trial court had committed no error in summoning Tomar as an additional accused under Section 319 CrPC.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the criminal revision as lacking merit, leaving operative the Sixth Additional Sessions Judge's order dated 8 October 2021 in S.T. No. 339/2017 summoning Tomar as an additional accused under Section 319 CrPC.

Narendra Pal Singh Tomar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, Cr.R. no. 3103/2021, 28/06/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (337) Prev Next

Headnote :- Police discipline — criminal prosecution and departmental inquiry arising from the same incident - An FIR concerned alleged misconduct by police personnel at a Gwalior spa. A police employee also faced disciplinary charges for leaving his Morena headquarters without permission and for entering the spa in uniform, without any investigative purpose, and behaving improperly. In an Article 226 challenge to the departmental charge sheet, the High Court compared the allegations in the two proceedings. It held that the unauthorised-departure charge was absent from the FIR. Although the charge concerning entry into the spa and misconduct partly overlapped with the criminal allegations, it also raised an independent service-discipline issue because the employee had allegedly entered the spa in uniform without any investigative purpose. The disciplinary charges were therefore not identical to the FIR allegations, and the departmental inquiry could proceed simultaneously with the criminal prosecution. The writ petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Narendra Rasak, a police employee posted at Morena, petitioned under Article 226 to quash a disciplinary charge sheet dated 10 May 2024 and the proceedings based on it. He invoked Rule 18 of the Madhya Pradesh Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1966, and contended that Crime No. 117/2024 at Police Station University, Gwalior covered the same matter. The disciplinary charge sheet contained two allegations: first, that on 26 March 2024 he left headquarters without his superior's permission, in breach of paragraph 64(3), (4) and (5) of the Police Regulations; and second, that he entered The Beach Spa in police uniform without any investigative purpose, misbehaved with female employees and the manager, abused them and assaulted them.

The FIR narrative, as recounted by the Court, alleged that two persons wearing police trousers and shoes, but no shirts, forcibly entered the spa after the manager objected, demanded women, offered ₹2,000, slapped a female employee, misbehaved with the staff and abused them. It also referred to another man in police uniform who entered while the altercation was underway and left after observing it. Rasak's counsel submitted that Rasak was the person alleged to have forcibly entered the spa with the two partly undressed police personnel. The Court also recorded that all three police personnel had filed M.Cr.C. No. 55634/2024 under Section 482 CrPC, which was dismissed on 20 January 2025. The State opposed the writ petition and relied on the distinct allegations of unauthorised absence from headquarters and misconduct in uniform.

2. Precedents — Considered : Capt. M. Paul Anthony v. Bharat Gold Mines Ltd. and another, 1999:INSC:139, (1999) 3 SCC 679, was cited by Rasak. The High Court reproduced paragraph 10 of that decision, which records the appellant's submissions that the departmental and criminal proceedings arose from the same facts and evidence and that continuing the inquiry would prejudice his defence, along with submissions concerning his illness and non-payment of subsistence allowance. After examining the charges in the present case, the High Court held that they were not identical to the FIR allegations.

Stanzen Toyotetsu India Private Limited v. Girish V. and others, 2014:INSC:40, (2014) 3 SCC 636, was also cited. The quoted passage retained the discretionary stays granted in that case, directed the criminal trial to be concluded within one year and provided that the disciplinary inquiry would resume if the trial was not completed within that period. In Rasak's case, the High Court did not stay the disciplinary inquiry. It decided the petition by comparing the disciplinary charges with the FIR allegations.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution of India was invoked to seek quashing of the departmental charge sheet and proceedings. Rule 18 of the Madhya Pradesh Civil Services (Classification, Control and Appeal) Rules, 1966 was relied on in the relief claimed. Paragraph 64(3), (4) and (5) of the Police Regulations formed the stated service-law basis of the unauthorised-departure charge. Section 482 CrPC was mentioned only as the provision under which the three police personnel had filed an earlier application, dismissed on 20 January 2025.

4. Issues : Whether the disciplinary charges and the FIR allegations were identical, so that the charge sheet dated 10 May 2024 and the departmental inquiry should be quashed or halted while Crime No. 117/2024 proceeded. The Court compared the first charge of unauthorised absence from Morena headquarters and the second charge concerning conduct at the spa while in uniform with the allegations in the FIR.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the identity of the charges as the only question for consideration. On the first charge, Rasak was posted at Morena, whereas the incident occurred at Gwalior. The disciplinary charge alleged that he had left headquarters without his superior's permission. That service-discipline allegation was not identical to any allegation in the FIR and was therefore independent of the criminal case.

On the second charge, the alleged forcible entry and conduct at The Beach Spa partly overlapped with the FIR allegations. The disciplinary charge, however, also concerned Rasak's alleged entry into the spa in police uniform when he had not gone there to investigate any offence. The Court held that this aspect was independent of the FIR and itself amounted to serious misconduct. It therefore concluded that the disciplinary charges were different from the FIR allegations and that the departmental inquiry could proceed simultaneously with the criminal prosecution.

The High Court quoted Capt. M. Paul Anthony and Stanzen Toyotetsu India Private Limited but did not grant a stay. As no other argument was advanced, it found no ground to quash the disciplinary charge sheet or halt the inquiry.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the writ petition. The departmental inquiry was allowed to proceed simultaneously with the criminal prosecution.

Narendra Rasak v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, W.P. no. 14545/2025, 02/05/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- BNSS — Section 528 — police refusal to register FIR — remedy before magistrate - The applicant sought a direction from the High Court requiring the police to register an FIR on his complaint. The Court distinguished the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from the remedy available when the police fail to act. Aleque Padamsee and Divine Retreat Centre identify the ordinary remedy as a complaint before the competent Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe also recognise recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and to the Magistrate under Section 156(3), who may direct registration and proper investigation and may monitor the investigation. The Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria holds that an ordinary writ of mandamus for registration may be declined when the statutory remedies remain unexhausted, subject to the recognised exceptions to the alternative-remedy rule. The application under Section 528 BNSS was dismissed with liberty to approach the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Naresh Dhanuk filed Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 46692/2024 under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. He sought a direction requiring the police to act on his complaint by registering an FIR. His counsel submitted that the police had not registered an FIR despite the complaint. The State opposed the application on the ground that he had an efficacious remedy before the concerned Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC.

The Court considered whether an application seeking a direction to the police to register an FIR was maintainable. After hearing the parties, it examined Supreme Court decisions on the duty to register cognizable information, the statutory remedies available on police inaction and the restraint governing direct High Court intervention. The final order granted Dhanuk liberty to pursue a complaint before the Magistrate.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee and others v. Union of India and others, 2007:INSC:760, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty to register an FIR when the information discloses a cognizable offence from the remedy available if the police fail to perform that duty. In the latter situation, the aggrieved person may file a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The decision distinguishes the police-duty issue considered in Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2006) 2 SCC 677, and Lallan Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2006) 12 SCC 229, from the remedial procedure considered in All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359. The High Court applied that distinction to Dhanuk's request for a direct registration order.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and others, 2008:INSC:341, (2008) 3 SCC 542, reiterates that when police take no action on information supplied to them, the informant ordinarily proceeds under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The Magistrate may inquire into the complaint, direct a police investigation, dismiss the complaint under Section 203 if no offence is disclosed, or issue process if the evidence prima facie discloses an offence. The decision also recognises that the High Court may intervene under Article 226 in a rare case of clear mala fide abuse of investigative power and non-compliance with Chapter XII, while remaining unable to dictate how the investigation must be conducted.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of Uttar Pradesh and others, 2007:INSC:1243, (2008) 2 SCC 409, explains that a person whose FIR is not registered may first approach the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) CrPC and may thereafter apply to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). The Magistrate may direct registration and proper investigation and may monitor its progress. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage and others, (2016) 6 SCC 277, follows Sakiri Vasu and reiterates that the complainant should ordinarily approach the Magistrate rather than the High Court. It adds that the Magistrate may, where necessary, recommend a change of investigating officer, although the Magistrate does not conduct the investigation personally. The operative liberty granted to Dhanuk referred specifically to a complaint under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. and others, W.A. No. 247/2016, decided on 20 December 2016, holds that a writ of mandamus compelling registration under Section 154 CrPC may be declined when the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, unless the recognised exceptions stated in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, apply. It also distinguishes the registration duty stated in Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, from an entitlement to obtain a writ directing registration without first using the statutory remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was the inherent-powers provision invoked in the application. The quoted authorities considered the police duty under Section 154 CrPC, a representation to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), and a Magistrate's power under Section 156(3) to direct and monitor an investigation. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC govern the ordinary complaint route identified in Aleque Padamsee and Divine Retreat Centre, while Section 203 appears in the quoted discussion of dismissal after inquiry. In the operative order, the High Court expressly granted liberty to proceed under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS. Article 226 was discussed in the authorities concerning limited constitutional intervention.

4. Issues : Whether the High Court should exercise its power under Section 528 BNSS to direct registration of an FIR when the police had not acted on the applicant's complaint, or whether the applicant should pursue the statutory remedies before the superior police officer and the Magistrate. The Court also considered the distinction between the police duty to register cognizable information and the procedure available to enforce that duty.

5. Ratio / Findings : Information disclosing a cognizable offence imposes a duty on the police to register an FIR. The remedy for police inaction, however, was the controlling question in this application. Aleque Padamsee and Divine Retreat Centre establish that the aggrieved person ordinarily approaches the competent Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The limited possibility of Article 226 intervention in a clear case of mala fide abuse of investigative power did not displace that ordinary statutory route. The High Court therefore declined to issue the requested direction and dismissed the application with liberty to approach the Magistrate.

Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe further identify the sequence of approaching the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) CrPC and, if necessary, the Magistrate under Section 156(3), who may direct registration and proper investigation and monitor the investigation. Shweta Bhadauria applies the alternative-remedy principle to a request for mandamus compelling registration, while preserving the recognised exceptions to that rule. It also explains that Lalita Kumari's statement of the police duty to register does not itself determine whether a direct writ should issue. Those principles supported the refusal to entertain Dhanuk's request under Section 528 BNSS and the grant of liberty to pursue the Magistrate's complaint jurisdiction.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the application. It granted Dhanuk liberty, if he so desired, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS for redress of his grievance.

Headnote :- Criminal medical negligence — plasma transfusion during COVID treatment — grossness and expert support - The patient's family arranged an additional plasma unit through an outside supplier. They alleged that the doctors began transfusion without inspecting the bag or verifying the cross-match report, stopped after a reaction and placed the patient on a ventilator. In a Section 482 challenge to the refusal to take cognizance against two doctors under Section 193 CrPC, the High Court applied Jacob Mathew, Kusum Sharma, Martin F. D'Souza, Malay Kumar Ganguly and S.K. Jhunjhunwala. An error, accident or adverse result does not by itself establish the gross or very high degree of negligence required for criminal prosecution. A private complainant must support the charge with a prima facie credible opinion from a competent doctor, and investigating officers should obtain independent competent medical opinion before proceeding against a doctor. Here, the doctors stopped the transfusion when they noticed the reaction. Without expert medical material, the Court could not determine whether the circumstances allowed further laboratory re-examination and cross-matching before transfusion. The applicant filed no Medical Board report. The High Court therefore upheld the refusal to add the doctors, although on grounds different from the trial court's reference to a possible later application under Section 319 CrPC.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Naresh Kumar Gupta challenged, under Section 482 CrPC, the order dated 12 October 2021 passed by the Ninth Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, in S.T. No. 256/2012. His application under Section 193 CrPC sought cognizance against respondents 2 and 3, two doctors, in a pending prosecution of other persons arising from allegedly adulterated plasma. Gupta's brother, Manoj Gupta, had COVID-19 and was admitted to R.J.N. Spectra (Apollo) Hospital. The family supplied one unit of plasma, after which the doctors said that another unit was required. Gupta alleged that respondent 3 referred him to an employee, Jagdish Bhadkariya, who provided the number of accused Mahesh Mourya. Mourya connected the family with Ajay Tyagi, who allegedly supplied another unit for ₹18,000. The family thus obtained the second unit from outside the hospital.

Gupta alleged that the doctors began the transfusion without inspecting the plasma bag or verifying its cross-match report. When a reaction appeared, they stopped the transfusion and placed Manoj Gupta on a ventilator. Gupta described the purchased unit as adulterated and sought to prosecute the doctors under IPC Sections 304, 420, 465, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B. These were allegations against the proposed additional accused, not findings that the doctors had committed adulteration, fraud, forgery or conspiracy, or had caused the patient's condition. The trial court rejected the Section 193 application because action could be considered under Section 319 CrPC and there was no good reason to take cognizance at that stage. The High Court examined Gupta's challenge and the alleged medical negligence on different grounds.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jacob Mathew v. State of Punjab, (2005) 6 SCC 1, controlled the criminal-medical-negligence analysis. It distinguishes ordinary professional negligence from the higher criminal threshold. A lack of care, accident or error of judgment does not by itself establish criminal negligence. The standard is that of an ordinarily competent practitioner exercising ordinary skill in light of accepted practice and the knowledge available at the relevant time. Criminal liability requires gross or very high negligence, mens rea and a sufficiently direct connection to the injury, including under Section 304-A IPC. The Bolam formulation asks whether no ordinarily prudent medical professional would have acted or omitted to act as alleged. For a private complaint, Jacob Mathew requires prima facie credible opinion from another competent doctor; an investigating officer should obtain independent competent medical opinion, preferably from a suitably qualified government doctor, before proceeding against a doctor. It also cautions against routine arrest unless investigation or appearance makes it necessary.

Kusum Sharma and others v. Batra Hospital and Medical Research Centre and others, (2010) 3 SCC 480, reiterates the requirement of reasonable skill and care, the distinction between culpable or gross negligence and an error of judgment, the legitimacy of acceptable differences in medical opinion, and the need to protect doctors from harassment without insulating genuinely deficient care. The High Court used those principles to assess the request to add the doctors. Martin F. D'Souza v. Mohd. Ishfaq, (2009) 3 SCC 1, restates the Bolam standard of an ordinarily skilled doctor and discusses referring a proposed complaint against a doctor or hospital to a competent doctor or committee before issuing notice on a prima facie negligence allegation. The quoted passages address consumer and criminal fora and caution against routine police harassment.

Malay Kumar Ganguly v. Dr. Sukumar Mukherjee and others, (2009) 9 SCC 221, explains the elements of Section 304-A IPC—death caused by a rash or negligent act not amounting to culpable homicide—and the need to establish duty, breach, causation and grossness in criminal medical-negligence cases. It distinguishes criminal culpability from tort or consumer negligence and requires examination of the medical professional's work and direct or proximate causation, rather than an inference from an adverse result. S.K. Jhunjhunwala v. Dhanwanti Kaur and another, (2019) 2 SCC 282, applies Jacob Mathew and the Bolam standard of ordinary competent skill, recognises that a doctor does not guarantee a cure, and holds that a reasonable medical choice is not negligent merely because it fails. The gallbladder-surgery facts quoted from that authority were not facts of Manoj Gupta's treatment. The High Court used these authorities collectively to decline unsupported criminal prosecution of the doctors.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to challenge the Sessions order. The applicant relied on Section 193 CrPC to seek cognizance against the two doctors. The trial court referred to possible action under Section 319 CrPC at a later stage, but the High Court affirmed rejection on the absence of the medical support required for a criminal-negligence prosecution. Gupta sought prosecution under IPC Sections 304, 420, 465, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B. The discussion of Section 304-A IPC in Jacob Mathew and Malay Kumar Ganguly supplied the criminal-negligence framework. The Court declined to direct the medical-negligence prosecution without the Medical Board report required by its reasoning.

4. Issues : Whether the two doctors should face additional criminal prosecution because they asked the family to obtain another plasma unit, the alleged referral chain led to an outside supplier, and they allegedly failed to inspect the bag or verify its cross-match report before transfusion. Whether the reaction and immediate cessation of transfusion, in the circumstances of first-wave hospital pressure, met the gross criminal-negligence standard and the requirement of independent expert support. Whether the Court could decide, without a competent medical report, if there had been sufficient time for further laboratory re-examination and cross-matching. Whether the Sessions Court's refusal of the Section 193 application should stand although it had relied on possible later action under Section 319.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first separated the doctors' request for another plasma unit from criminal wrongdoing. During the first COVID-19 wave, hospitals were overloaded and doctors were attempting to treat patients; the judgment described plasma transfusion as one of the treatment protocols at that time. The family obtained the second unit from Ajay Tyagi through the described contact chain. Asking for another unit did not itself establish medical negligence or connect the doctors with the alleged adulteration. When a reaction appeared after transfusion began, the doctors stopped the transfusion and returned the unit to the family. The Court found no negligence in their conduct after the reaction became apparent. It treated the alleged failure to inspect the bag and verify the cross-match report before transfusion as the remaining question.

Jacob Mathew requires a gross departure from the conduct of an ordinarily competent medical professional; criminal negligence cannot be inferred merely from deterioration, an adverse result or the availability of a potentially better technique. Kusum Sharma, Martin F. D'Souza and S.K. Jhunjhunwala reinforce context-sensitive reasonable skill, acceptable medical alternatives and protection against unsupported proceedings. Malay Kumar Ganguly distinguishes criminal culpability under Section 304-A from tort or consumer negligence and requires grossness and direct or proximate causation.

The Court noted that every plasma bag carries a cross-match report, but asked whether these doctors had sufficient time, amid the hospital conditions, to send the unit for laboratory re-examination and further cross-matching. It declined to decide that technical question without medical expertise.

The applicant produced no report from the Medical Board contemplated by the safeguards in Jacob Mathew. The High Court therefore upheld the refusal to prosecute the doctors for medical negligence. Although the trial court had relied on the possibility of action under Section 319 CrPC, the High Court affirmed the same refusal on these different grounds.

6. Relief : The High Court affirmed, on different grounds, the Ninth Additional Sessions Judge's order dated 12 October 2021 in S.T. No. 256/2012 and dismissed Gupta's Section 482 application. It declined, on the material presented, to take cognizance against respondents 2 and 3 under Section 193 CrPC.

Headnote :- FIR quashing — sexual assault allegation — reporting delay, limitation and disputed consent — The complaint alleged that, following an earlier marriage proposal rejected by the complainant and her family, the applicant offered to take her to his sister's house on 3 December 2020 but instead took her to a hotel, raped her twice, threatened her and thereafter promised marriage. The FIR was lodged on 12 April 2022, after the applicant, according to the FIR, subsequently expressly refused to marry her. The applicant described the relationship as consensual and relied on the delay in reporting. The Court also considered Section 468 CrPC. The High Court applied Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid to hold that delay alone neither makes an FIR illegal nor warrants its quashing; prompt reporting is useful but does not by itself establish the truth of the allegations. Section 468 did not bar proceedings on an allegation under Section 376, which carries punishment exceeding three years. The question of consent under Section 90 IPC could not be finally determined by accepting the applicant's account of a consensual relationship when the FIR alleged an initial forcible act, a change of destination, a threat and a subsequent assurance of marriage. Taken at face value, the allegations prima facie disclosed offences under Sections 376 and 506, and factual disputes required evidence and cross-examination at trial. The Section 482 application was dismissed. These were prima facie conclusions, not final findings on rape, a false promise of marriage, intimidation or credibility.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Naresh Rajoriya sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 84/2022 at Mahila Thana, Bhopal, registered under Sections 376 and 506 IPC. Both the applicant and complainant were described as persons with disabilities. The complainant's account in the FIR was that about four years earlier Rajoriya proposed marriage. She initially refused, saying she would marry according to her family's wishes, and her family also refused when he approached them because of the difference in caste. They later talked and he visited her house. On 3 December 2020 she went shopping in Bhopal; he met her at the bus stand and proposed a visit to his sister's house. She accepted that destination, but, according to the FIR, he took her instead to Avni Palace Hotel in Ashoka Garden and forcibly raped her twice. She alleged that he threatened her life, warned of social defamation and difficulty marrying if she reported it, and assured her he would marry her. The account places the assurance of marriage after the alleged hotel assault. The complainant said she did not report at once because of those threats and concerns. When she later asked him to marry her, he allegedly deferred their marriage until after his sister's marriage, and on 18 March 2022 expressly refused, saying his own marriage was fixed. She informed her family, after which her father and uncle made approaches to his family; the FIR followed on 12 April 2022. Rajoriya argued that the roughly one-year-four-month gap made the FIR suspect. He submitted that the complainant was an adult, that she pressed him for marriage because he had a government job, and that a consensual adult relationship could not be rape. These were defence submissions, not findings that consensual intercourse occurred or that the complainant had a particular motive. Counsel relied on Prashant Bharti and the Delhi High Court decision in Anand Kaushal. The complainant opposed quashing, maintaining that rape and a false promise were prima facie shown.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ravinder Kumar and another v. State of Punjab, 2001:INSC:414, (2001) 7 SCC 690, was quoted on delay in furnishing the first information to the police. The law prescribes no fixed time for lodging an FIR. Prompt reporting may permit immediate investigation and reduce the opportunity for concoction, yet promptness alone does not guarantee genuineness, and genuine reasons can explain delay. The High Court applied this limited proposition to reject delay as an independent ground for quashing under Section 482, without declaring the complainant credible or the asserted explanation proved. Mohammad Wajid and another v. State of U.P. and others, 2023:INSC:683, AIR 2023 SC 3784, was cited for the narrower proposition that delay in FIR registration by itself does not warrant quashing.

Prashant Bharti v. State of NCT of Delhi, 2013:INSC:51, 2013 Cri LJ 3839, and Anand Kaushal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), 2020:DHC:1719, 2020 Cri LJ 3716, were cited by the applicant's counsel.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR. Sections 376 and 506 IPC concerned the offences of rape and criminal intimidation alleged in the FIR; they were not convictions. Section 90 IPC was identified as the consent question potentially affected by misconception of fact; the Court expressly reserved whether that provision applied until trial evidence and cross-examination. Section 375 IPC was invoked in the submission of the applicant's counsel that consensual intercourse between adults does not amount to rape; the Court did not accept that alleged consensual premise as a fact at this stage. The Court considered Section 468 CrPC as a possible limitation bar. The Court found that it did not apply to the Section 376 accusation because that offence is punishable by more than three years' imprisonment.

4. Issues : Could the approximately sixteen-month gap between the alleged hotel assault and lodging the FIR, viewed with the pleaded threats and subsequent marriage discussions, by itself invalidate the FIR or justify quashing? Did Section 468 CrPC prevent proceedings on the Section 376 allegation? Could the Court, in proceedings under Section 482, finally accept the applicant's account of a consensual adult relationship or determine the question of misconception under Section 90 on his version when the FIR alleged a forcible initial act after being taken to a place other than the agreed destination, a threat, and only later a marriage assurance? Did the allegations, taken at face value, prima facie disclose offences under Sections 376 and 506, leaving contested facts for trial? The Court was not deciding guilt, the truth of the alleged threats, whether the applicant had always intended to marry, or the complainant's final credibility.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court separated three objections. On reporting delay, it applied Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid. Delay does not, in itself, make an FIR illegal or automatically justify ending the prosecution before investigation or trial. The complaint described threats, social concerns and subsequent discussions, but the High Court did not conduct a final evidential assessment of those explanations. The Court's statutory time-bar discussion was distinct from the objection based on reporting delay: it held Section 468 CrPC inapplicable to the Section 376 accusation because its potential sentence exceeds the three-year threshold.

On consent, the Court read the FIR in sequence. Initial marriage negotiations had been refused. On the specified date the complainant allegedly agreed to visit the applicant's sister's house, rather than to go to a hotel or have intercourse. She alleged that he initially raped her twice by force at the hotel and then promised to marry her. The applicant's description of the encounter as consensual physical relations between adults was therefore disputed; it was not an uncontested fact apparent from the FIR. Whether her consent was vitiated under Section 90 IPC, and what the encounter involved, required evidence tested in cross-examination. The Court did not hold as a final matter that a subsequent refusal to marry proves a deliberately false promise from inception, or that a promise after the alleged forcible assault was the sole legal foundation of the rape charge. It made no final finding on the separately alleged threat or the ingredients of Section 506.

Under Section 482, the Court could not hold a mini-trial or weigh contested evidence. It could quash if uncontroverted allegations, taken at face value, failed to constitute an offence. Here, the FIR allegations were prima facie capable of supporting prosecution for offences under Sections 376 and 506. That limited threshold conclusion left all disputed evidence and defences for the trial court.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the application declining to quash Crime No. 84/2022. The FIR and prosecution for Sections 376 and 506 IPC could proceed on the prima facie allegations. The order did not direct conviction, decide whether the complainant's version was ultimately proved, pronounce a final Section 90 consent finding, or adjudicate the applicant's guilt. Headnote :- Murder appeal — child eyewitness, unexhibited FSL report and sudden-fight plea — The appellant's minor niece, the deceased's daughter, awoke after the first axe blow and saw further blows inside the house. Her grandfather, who was outside, heard her immediate report and found the victim injured. Others corroborated the prompt alarm, although several prosecution witnesses turned hostile. Applying Bhagwan Singh, Panchhi, Yogesh Singh and Alagupandi, the High Court scrutinised the risk of tutoring and found Julie reliable. Corroboration was available in this case, but the Court recognised it as a rule of prudence, not an absolute legal precondition to relying on a child witness. The State FSL report, filed in original and signed by its Joint Director, had not been exhibited. Section 293 CrPC permitted its use: a copy had been supplied to the appellant, specific blood findings had been put to him under Section 313, and he had not sought the expert's examination. Mast Ram and Tarajee Khimchand informed the distinction between statutory admissibility, proof and exhibit marking. Unexplained human blood on the appellant's clothing further supported the prosecution case. The alternative plea under Section 304 failed. Multiple deep axe injuries to the neck and other parts of the victim, who was lying in the house, showed cruelty and undue advantage under Raj Paul Singh and Lavghanbhai. The appellant's plea of a sudden incident did not overcome those findings. The Section 302 conviction and life sentence were affirmed. The report's use depended on its Section 293 character and the safeguards applied here; corroboration of child testimony remained a matter of prudence rather than an inflexible requirement in every case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Naresh Singh appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the Sessions Judge, Bhind's judgment dated 4 May 2011 in S.T. No. 171/2010. He had been convicted under Section 302 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment, a fine of ₹1,000 and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Mithla, the wife of his elder brother and mother of Julie (PW2), died following an attack in the family house. The initial information attributed to the appellant's father, Biharilal/Bihari (PW1), described a nighttime axe attack after a dispute over Naresh's drinking and Mithla's refusal to marry him. At trial, however, Bihari did not claim to have seen the blows. He was asleep outside, while Julie woke inside after the first assault, saw the subsequent blows and immediately informed him. Mithla died while being taken to hospital. The defence suggested that an unknown intruder had killed her and, alternatively, that the sudden, unpremeditated act fell under Section 304 IPC.

Dr Jitendra Shrivastava (PW15) recorded five injuries, including deep chop wounds on the left side of the neck severing major cervical vessels, an ear wound and a wound on the right hand. Death was homicidal, caused by shock from excessive haemorrhage due to antemortem injuries. The doctor stated that one weapon could have caused all five injuries and that they could have been inflicted while Mithla lay straight. Julie said that she woke after the first assault and saw about five further blows. She identified her uncle and, frightened, went outside to inform Bihari. He found his daughter-in-law grievously injured. Roshan (PW4) heard him shout the allegation, and Bachhulal (PW13) recounted Julie's report by telephone. Several neighbours and seizure witnesses turned hostile wholly or partly. The police seized an axe and clothing said to be bloodstained at the appellant's instance. The investigating officer acknowledged that the FSL report had been received but not exhibited. The record refers to the initial FIR as Crime No. 18/2010 and its subsequent registration at Raun as Crime No. 93/2010.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bhagwan Singh v. State of M.P., (2003) 3 SCC 21, was quoted on the careful assessment of a young child's evidence. Competence does not remove the need to consider immaturity and susceptibility to tutoring; adequate corroboration was sought in that case's circumstances. Its reference to Panchhi did not make corroboration a universal statutory requirement. Panchhi v. State of U.P., (1998) 7 SCC 177, was quoted at length: a child's evidence is not inherently unworthy of belief, and corroboration is a matter of practical wisdom rather than an inflexible rule of law. Prakash, Baby Kandayanathil, Raja Ram Yadav and Dattu Ramrao Sakhare appeared within that reproduced passage.

Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, was quoted on careful scrutiny of child testimony, susceptibility to influence and prudent corroboration, without rejecting the evidence merely because the witness is a child. Its quoted list also included Ashok Dixit and Suryanarayana. Alagupandi v. State of T.N., (2012) 10 SCC 451, was quoted for the proposition that truthful and reliable child testimony may sustain a conviction. It expressly states that corroboration is not required in every case, although seeking it is desirable as a matter of prudence. The High Court applied these principles to Julie's opportunity to see the later blows, her immediate conduct, her evidence as tested in cross-examination and the available corroboration. Bihari was not treated as an eyewitness to the actual attack.

State of H.P. v. Mast Ram, (2004) 8 SCC 660, was quoted on Section 293(1) CrPC, which permits the use of a qualifying government scientific expert's report, and its relationship with the officers listed in subsection (4). The Supreme Court rejected an insistence on oral proof based on the expert's designation. Mast Ram concerned a ballistic report; this appeal concerned a State FSL blood report signed by a Joint Director. Tarajee Khimchand v. Yelamarti Satyam, (1972) 4 SCC 562, was cited for the principle that mere exhibit marking does not dispense with proof. Sudir Engineering Co. Ltd. v. Nitco Roadways Ltd., Delhi High Court, Suit No. 765/1990, 23 March 1995, was quoted at length on the identification function of an exhibit endorsement and the distinction between identification and proof. Raj Paul Singh v. State, (2012) 10 SCC 144, was quoted on Exception 4 to Section 300 IPC. A person who fatally attacks an unarmed victim who poses no threat cannot establish the absence of undue advantage merely by asserting that the encounter was sudden. The references to Narayanan Nair Raghvan Nair and Kikar Singh formed part of that authority's explanation of the exception, rather than findings about the facts of this appeal. Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, was quoted for the contextual Section 302/304 factors stated in Dhirendra Kumar: the circumstances, the source and nature of the weapon, the vital part targeted, the force used, participation in a fight, prior enmity, provocation, heat of passion, undue advantage and cruelty. The High Court applied the injury pattern and the factors concerning undue advantage and cruelty to reject the alternative plea.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided for the appeal. Section 302 IPC was the basis of the conviction under challenge. The defence sought the lesser alternative under Section 304 IPC, which the Court examined through the sudden-fight and undue-advantage requirements of Exception 4 to Section 300. Sections 293(1), (2) and (4) CrPC address the use of reports from specified government scientific experts and the Court's power to summon them. The judgment reproduced Section 293 and applied it to the signed State FSL report. The appellant had received a copy and had not sought to cross-examine the scientific officer. Specific report findings were put to him under Section 313 CrPC in questions 40–42. The blood-group and human-blood findings remained distinct: question 41 concerned blood group A on the deceased's sari, while question 42 concerned human blood on the appellant's baniyan and pants and the deceased's clothes. The Court relied on the unexplained human blood on the appellant's own clothes, not on a finding that its group matched the victim's.

4. Issues : Whether Julie's testimony was reliable despite her childhood, the possibility of tutoring, cross-examination and her declaration as hostile on aspects of motive. Whether her natural presence, immediate disclosure and corroboration by Bihari, Roshan and Bachhulal established the assailant's identity beyond reasonable doubt despite the unknown-intruder suggestion. Whether the original government FSL report, signed, supplied to the appellant and specifically put to him under Section 313 CrPC, could be read against him under Section 293 despite not being exhibited. What the report established and what corroborative weight it carried. Whether the plea of a sudden, unpremeditated incident brought the repeated axe attack within Exception 4 and Section 304, or whether the manner of attack, the parts targeted and the victim's condition established cruelty and undue advantage supporting murder. The sentence challenge was confined to the proposed change in offence classification.

5. Ratio / Findings : The medical evidence established homicidal death from extensive blood loss following sharp-weapon injuries. Julie's presence with her mother inside the house was natural. Bihari placed Julie, Naresh and the deceased there while he slept outside. Julie saw the later attacks after waking on the first assault. Bihari recounted her immediate report; Bachhulal described her telephone report, and Roshan heard the alarm. The High Court found that cross-examination had not undermined her identification of the assailant. Bihari's partial hostility and the prosecution's cross-examination of Julie on motive did not displace her credible direct account or its prompt corroboration. Julie admitted an interest in Naresh being jailed so that her family could obtain the land, but denied the defence suggestions of a property dispute and an unknown killer. The Court nevertheless found her tested evidence trustworthy. Bihari did not see the axe blows himself. He was sleeping outside the doorway and did not report anyone else entering or leaving the house. With Naresh present inside, the Court ruled out a stranger as the assailant. A child's evidence requires careful scrutiny for tutoring, but Alagupandi and Panchhi rule out automatic rejection and do not make independent corroboration an inflexible legal condition in every case. Corroboration was available here. The Court also considered the seizure of the axe and clothes. Although one memorandum/seizure witness denied those acts, Munnalal and the investigating officer proved them.

The original FSL report, signed by the Joint Director of the State FSL, Gwalior, had been filed, supplied to the appellant and retained in the trial record's B file. Ordinarily, an unexhibited prosecution document cannot be used against the accused, although material favourable to him may be considered. Section 293 CrPC, however, permits qualifying government scientific experts' reports to be used as evidence without routine oral proof. The appellant had received the report, specific questions about it had been put to him under Section 313, and he had not sought the scientific officer's examination. Mast Ram supported its statutory use. Conversely, an exhibit stamp does not itself determine admissibility or proof: Tarajee Khimchand and the quoted Sudir Engineering passage distinguish an identification mark from proof. On these statutory and procedural grounds, the Court read the report despite the missing exhibit mark. It also admonished trial courts to remain vigilant and exhibit reports otherwise admissible under Section 293. The unexplained human blood on Naresh's baniyan and pants supplied additional circumstantial support. The Court did not identify it as the victim's blood through a matched blood-group finding.

On Exception 4, the medical evidence was that the victim was lying straight when the injuries were inflicted. Repeated axe blows caused multiple chop and incised wounds, including deep neck wounds to major vessels. The Court applied Raj Paul Singh's undue-advantage principle and Lavghanbhai's factors concerning the weapon, vital part, force, fight and cruelty. It found both cruelty and undue advantage, particularly because the appellant's father was outside and no other male member was inside the house. The appellant's plea that the incident occurred suddenly did not overcome the Court's findings of cruelty and undue advantage. On those findings, the Court held that the act did not fall under Section 304 IPC. Julie's reliable identification, the surrounding corroboration and the FSL circumstance established guilt beyond reasonable doubt, and the murder conviction was upheld.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the Sessions Judge's judgment dated 4 May 2011 in S.T. No. 171/2010, convicting the appellant under Section 302 IPC. Life imprisonment, the ₹1,000 fine and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default remained. The Court declined to interfere with life imprisonment because it was the minimum sentence for the Section 302 offence. The appellant was already in custody and was directed to serve the remaining sentence. A free copy of the judgment was to be supplied to him, and the trial court record was to be returned. The Court declined to reduce the offence to Section 304 and read the qualifying FSL report despite its missing exhibit mark. Neutral citation: 2022:MPHC-GWL:6607-DB.

Headnote :- Child witness — capacity and careful assessment — Naresh's jail appeal from a Section 302 IPC conviction turned on his daughter Chanha's account that he struck her mother Vidhabai on the head with a stone. The Division Bench reviewed Section 118 Evidence Act, the trial judge's role in assessing comprehension and rational answers, possible tutoring, prudential corroboration, and the judge's questioning power under Section 165. Chanha identified her father and the stone, described the assault and immediate aftermath, and was not shaken in cross-examination; medical evidence of hard blunt injuries and the recovered stone corroborated her account. The conviction and life sentence were affirmed. The passage quoted from Jibhau says that failure to conduct a preliminary examination is not necessarily fatal; Rameshwar and Panchhi describe corroboration as prudence rather than an invariably necessary legal condition; Ratan Singh permits conviction on the credible testimony of a child as the sole witness.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Naresh, convicted in Sessions Trial No. 243/2009 by the Third Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri on 5 February 2010 of murdering Vidhabai under Section 302 IPC, pursued a jail appeal. He received life imprisonment, a ₹5,000 fine and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. On 9 June 2009 a woman's body was found in Shyamlal's field. Village Kotwar Hakim Singh informed Pohri police, a merg inquiry followed, and Crime No. 102/2009 was first registered against an unknown person. The body was identified as Vidhabai at the time of the post-mortem. Investigation implicated Naresh in crushing her head with a stone. His daughter Chanha (PW7) was the main eyewitness. In its account of Chanha's parentage, the judgment refers to Naresh as her father and Vidhabai as her mother. The appellant described Vidhabai as living with him as a wife; that was his submission, rather than a finding determining their marital status.

The appellant alleged that he had been falsely implicated because Vidhabai's family objected to their relationship on grounds of caste. He also alleged that the FIR was antedated, that there were contradictions, and that the child had been tutored. He also asserted sudden heat of passion and lack of premeditation, as a ground for challenging his conviction under Section 302. Chanha said Naresh, her father, struck her mother on the head with a stone in her presence, crushing it. She identified him in court and identified the seized stone, said she cried out without anyone coming and that he took her to his sister's house afterward. Dr Ram Kumar Choudhary (PW6) found multiple antemortem injuries caused by a hard and blunt object and opined that the death was homicidal. The Court's ultimate assessment emphasized Chanha's natural, unrebutted testimony, the medical evidence and stone recovery.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sidhartha Vashist v. State (NCT of Delhi), AIR 2010 SC 2352, was cited on a judge's active role in seeking the truth under Section 165 Evidence Act, subject to the restriction that questions must not confuse, coerce or intimidate a witness. Mohamed Sugal Esa v. The King, AIR 1946 PC 3, was quoted for the principle that a court may act on admissible child evidence and that corroboration is a sound prudential safeguard, in the absence of a statutory requirement. Rameshwar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 1952 SC 54, was quoted for the need for the judge to bear in mind corroboration as a matter of prudence, with no rule of practice that corroboration must be present in every case.

Arbind Singh v. State of Bihar, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 416, was quoted on susceptibility to tutoring and looking for corroboration particularly when the account betrays traces of it. Panchhi v. State of U.P., (1998) 7 SCC 177, was quoted for careful scrutiny without treating childhood as an automatic stigma, and for adequate corroboration as practical wisdom rather than a strict rule of law. The quoted passage also cites Prakash, Baby Kandayanathil, Raja Ram Yadav and Dattu Ramrao Sakhare. Bhagwan Singh v. State of M.P., (2003) 3 SCC 21, was quoted on the special care and corroboration sought for a particularly young child who cannot form a proper view through immaturity.

Ratansingh Dalsukhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 1 SCC 64, was quoted on the trial judge's position in assessing a child's intelligence and understanding of the obligation to tell the truth, subject to appellate correction on the record. It was then invoked for the proposition that a child's credible testimony, standing alone, can sustain a conviction after close scrutiny. Golla Yelugu Govindu v. State of A.P., (2008) 16 SCC 769, was quoted for Section 118's capacity test rather than any fixed minimum age. Sakshi v. Union of India, (2004) 5 SCC 518, was quoted at length on proposed arrangements for witnesses in child sexual-abuse cases, the Section 273 CrPC confrontation concern and possible screen arrangements.

Other High Court authorities reproduced were The State v. Dukhi Dei, AIR 1963 Ori 144 (particularly the importance of a prompt account given before any opportunity for coaching), Jibhau Vishnu Wagh v. State of Maharashtra, 1996 (1) Cri LJ 803 (a preliminary child examination preferable but its absence not necessarily fatal), and Dhani alias Dhaneswar Naik v. The State, 1999 (3) Cri LJ 2712 (capacity to understand and rationally answer rather than age alone under Section 118).

3. Statutes considered : The conviction under Section 302 IPC and the sentence of life imprisonment were affirmed. Section 118 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 presumes persons competent unless tender years or other listed causes prevent understanding questions or rational answers; the judgment discussed capacity and the trial judge's assessment. Section 165 permits a judge to ask questions or order production to discover or properly prove relevant facts, subject to the statute's restrictions. The judgment must rest on relevant facts that have been duly proved. The Sakshi quotation also discusses Section 273 CrPC and a proposed screening procedure in child sexual-abuse cases.

4. Issues : Can a criminal conviction rest on an eyewitness who is a child, and what safeguards inform competency and credibility under Section 118? Did Chanha understand and reliably recount the event rather than repeat a tutored accusation, given the asserted family enmity and contradictions? Did her account survive adversarial testing and receive relevant corroboration from medical examination and physical recovery?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Division Bench treated the child's testimony as the principal evidence identifying the assailant. Under Section 118, tender age by itself does not disqualify; the real concern is comprehension, rational answers and reliability under careful trial-court observation and appellate scrutiny of the record. The judge may actively seek relevant proof under Section 165 but cannot confuse, coerce or intimidate. A child may be influenced or tutored. In its summary of safeguards, the Court stated that a preliminary inquiry must be conducted before a child is examined, that the child's mental capacity must be assessed, and that the child's evidence should be corroborated. The quoted Jibhau ruling specifically says omission of preliminary examination does not itself create a fatal defect, while Ratan Singh permits conviction on credible testimony from a child as the sole witness.

Chanha identified her father in court, gave a direct account of his striking Vidhabai's head with a stone, identified that stone, and described her immediate cry and movement to his sister's house. The Court considered her version natural and unshaken in cross-examination. Dr Choudhary's finding of multiple antemortem injuries caused by a blunt object supported her account of how the assault occurred; the stone had been recovered. The Court found that this evidence supported the trial court's conclusion beyond reasonable doubt. The Court found the eyewitness account and corroborating medical evidence and stone recovery sufficient to establish guilt beyond reasonable doubt. The Court observed that a child may be an important sole eyewitness to offences committed within the home and may have a strong memory of the incident. It also noted the possibility of exaggeration and the Court's role in assessing the evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed Naresh's Section 302 conviction and life sentence with ₹5,000 fine and the stated default term in S.T. No. 243/2009. Naresh was in jail and the judgment directed notice of the result through the Jail Superintendent and return of trial records. The order's equivalent citations are ILR[2022]MP157 and 2021(III)MPJR(SC)117.

Headnote :- Police refusal to register FIR — magistrate complaint route and effect of Section 156(3) order — The applicants sought a direction under Section 482 CrPC on complaints made to the station house officer and Superintendent of Police. Without examining their allegations on merits, the High Court held that they had an efficacious remedy before the competent Magistrate. It also clarified that, where a Magistrate empowered under Section 190 makes a pre-cognizance order for police investigation under Section 156(3), the police must register an FIR on the cognizable offence disclosed before beginning Chapter XII investigation, even if the order does not expressly direct registration. Mohd. Yousuf v. Afaq Jahan was quoted and applied for that consequence and for the distinction that a Magistrate ordering such investigation has not yet taken cognizance or examined the complainant on oath. If the Magistrate does not make a Section 156(3) order, the Magistrate may take cognizance, proceed under Chapter XV, record complainant witnesses and, where police assistance is needed, direct an inquiry under Section 202(1). The Court dismissed the petition with liberty to use Sections 156(3) or 200. It did not itself direct FIR registration, find that a particular cognizable offence was disclosed, or decide the complaint on merits.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Narottam Pathak and the other applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC for a direction to register an FIR on a complaint dated 20 October 2015 to the station house officer, City Kotwali, Morena, and another dated 5 March 2016 to the Superintendent of Police, Morena. The judgment does not state the underlying allegations and expressly avoids the merits. Counsel cited the Madras High Court order in Sugesan Transport Pvt. Ltd. v. Inspector of Police, Crl.O.P. No. 19197/2016, decided on 27 September 2016, which recognised the Section 156(3) remedy; counsel also sought similar additional directions. The High Court referred the applicants to the ordinary Magistrate route and then explained the consequence of a Section 156(3) investigation order, contrasting it with cognizance under Chapter XV and a possible Section 202(1) inquiry. The judgment records no existing Section 156(3) order or complaint-specific determination of a cognizable offence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171; Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409; and Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, were cited together in paragraph 3 in support of the efficacious complaint and Magistrate remedy where police do not register an FIR. The Court also relied on Soniya v. State of M.P., W.P. No. 8906/2016, decided on 24 October 2016, and Smt. Sudami Devi v. State of U.P., Writ-C No. 47416/2016, decided on 30 September 2016, for that remedy. Counsel relied on Sugesan Transport in seeking similar additional directions; the Court held that no further direction was necessary because the statutory remedy was complete and efficacious.

Mohd. Yousuf v. Smt. Afaq Jahan, AIR 2006 SC 705, was quoted and applied. The quoted passage distinguishes an investigation ordered under Section 156(3) before cognizance from the procedure of taking cognizance and examining the complainant on oath. FIR registration consists of entering the substance of cognizable information in the police station record under Section 154 and ordinarily precedes further investigation under Chapter XII. When a Magistrate directs investigation under Section 156(3), the police must therefore register an FIR regarding the cognizable offence disclosed by the complaint, even if the order does not expressly direct registration. The requirement concerns the cognizable offence disclosed by the complaint.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the applicants' route to the High Court. Section 156(3) permits a Magistrate empowered under Section 190 to order police investigation. The Court explained that Chapter XII investigation begins with FIR registration on cognizable information under Section 154 and ends with the police report under Section 173; registration is therefore the necessary first step after a qualifying Section 156(3) order, whether or not the order expressly says so. If the Magistrate does not make that pre-cognizance order, the Magistrate may instead take cognizance, examine the complainant under Section 200 and follow Chapter XV. After recording complainant witnesses, the Magistrate may seek police assistance through an inquiry under Section 202(1).

4. Issues : Should the High Court use Section 482 to direct FIR registration on the applicants' complaints despite the available complaint and Magistrate remedy? When a Magistrate empowered under Section 190 makes a pre-cognizance investigation order under Section 156(3), must police register an FIR even if the order does not expressly direct registration? How does that route differ from cognizance under Chapter XV followed, where warranted, by a Section 202(1) inquiry? The Court deliberately did not reach the merits of the allegations, decide whether a particular cognizable offence was disclosed, or determine how the competent Magistrate should exercise discretion on a future application.

5. Ratio / Findings : The applicants had a complete and efficacious statutory remedy, so the High Court declined to direct registration without entering the complaint's merits. Reading Section 156(3) with Chapter XII and following Mohd. Yousuf, the Court held that a pre-cognizance order for police investigation carries a duty to register the FIR on the cognizable offence disclosed; omission of an express registration direction does not relieve the station officer of that first step. The investigation proceeds from FIR registration to the police report under Section 173. The registration duty presupposes a complaint disclosing a cognizable offence and an actual Section 156(3) investigation order. The Court explained the available statutory route without deciding that such an order or an offence-specific determination already existed in the applicants' case. If the Magistrate does not consider a Section 156(3) order appropriate, the Magistrate may take cognizance, follow Chapter XV, record complainant witnesses and, if police assistance is needed, direct an inquiry under Section 202(1). Mohd. Yousuf's statement that the complainant need not be examined on oath concerns the different, pre-cognizance Section 156(3) route. The Section 202(1) inquiry follows cognizance and the recording of complainant witnesses; it is distinct from an investigation ordered under Section 156(3) before cognizance. The Magistrate retains the procedural choice described in the judgment.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the petition, leaving the applicants free to file an application or complaint under Sections 156(3) and 200 CrPC before the competent Magistrate. It granted no direct FIR-registration direction and made no determination on the allegations. The judgment is reported at ILR [2017] MP 762.

Headnote :- Regular bail — age of prosecutrix, asserted marriage, and alleged voluntary departure — On the sixth application under Section 439 CrPC, following five earlier applications, the applicant relied on an ossification opinion said to show that the prosecutrix was major, subsequent marriage and residence with his family, her alleged voluntary departure, and nearly three years in custody. The fifth application had been dismissed, and counsel attributed the previous merits-based refusals to the prosecutrix's minority. The applicant had been arrested in a case alleging offences under Sections 323, 366 and 376 IPC. Applying Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana to the victim's age, the Court held that available school records excluded resort to medical age opinion under Section 94(2) of the Juvenile Justice Act, 2015; the two sources could not therefore be treated as equal, contradictory evidence. Under Independent Thought v. Union of India, which read down Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC, marriage did not answer the rape allegation involving a wife below eighteen. Quoting and applying Anversinh alias Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v. State of Gujarat and its distinction of S. Varadarajan, the Court rejected the contention that voluntary departure alone excluded kidnapping. The relevant conditions were the minor's knowledge and capacity to understand the full import of her actions, voluntary abandonment of guardianship, and absence of the accused's assistance or inducement. Bail was refused in the circumstances. The sufficiency of the trial evidence for conviction remained for the trial court; the bail order did not finally decide the charges.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Navendra Singh Gurjar filed his sixth application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC in MCRC No. 29152/2021. He had been arrested on 16 August 2018 in Crime No. 49/2018, registered at Police Station Pandokhar, District Datia, for offences under Sections 323, 366 and 376 IPC. The fifth application was dismissed on 27 July 2020 in MCRC No. 23443/2020. Counsel attributed the earlier merits-based refusals to the prosecutrix's minority and submitted that an ossification assessment showed her to be major. Counsel also submitted that she had married the applicant and was living with his family, that she had accompanied him voluntarily and had not been kidnapped, and that he had spent approximately three years in custody. The State opposed bail, and the case diary was available. The Court noted the applicant's statement that the trial was at an advanced stage and left the sufficiency of the evidence already on record for conviction to the trial court.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, was invoked and applied for the proposition that the statutory method of determining a child's age under juvenile-justice law also applies to the victim's age. The Court applied that proposition with the order of materials specified in Section 94(2) of the 2015 Act. As the prosecutrix's school record was available, a medical or ossification estimate could not be treated as competing evidence to be preferred for bail. The documentary-before-medical priority therefore governed the age assessment.

Independent Thought v. Union of India, (2017) 10 SCC 800, was invoked and applied. The Supreme Court read down Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC so that sexual intercourse with a wife below eighteen years constitutes rape notwithstanding the exception's former wording. The applicant's assertion of subsequent marriage and the prosecutrix's residence with his family did not therefore answer the sexual-offence allegation merely by invoking marriage, on the minority premise applied for bail. The sufficiency of the trial evidence for conviction remained for the trial court to decide.

Anversinh alias Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v. State of Gujarat, Criminal Appeal No. 1919/2010, decided on 12 January 2021, was quoted and applied to the voluntary-departure contention. Anversinh distinguished S. Varadarajan because that case concerned 'taking', rather than 'enticement'. The reasoning in S. Varadarajan assists an accused only where a minor who understands the full import of her actions voluntarily leaves her guardian's care without the accused's assistance or inducement. The minor's knowledge and capacity, her voluntary abandonment of guardianship, and the absence of inducement are distinct conditions; an assertion that she went willingly does not by itself establish them. S. Varadarajan was discussed through the quoted Anversinh analysis and did not provide an automatic defence. In this bail proceeding, the High Court rejected the inference that the single claim of voluntariness established absence of kidnapping; it did not determine the competing trial evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the sixth regular-bail application. The alleged offences were Sections 323 (hurt), 366 (kidnapping or abduction for the specified purpose) and 376 (rape) IPC. The Court considered the age, marital-exception and voluntary-departure grounds relevant to Sections 366 and 376 when deciding bail; proof of the charged offences remained for the trial court. Clauses (i) and (ii) of Section 94(2) of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015 specify the documentary sources for determining age. The Court held that medical opinion could be considered only if those documents were unavailable and, applying Jarnail Singh, used that method for the victim's age. Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC was read in light of Independent Thought's holding concerning a wife below eighteen.

4. Issues : Could an ossification report suggesting majority create two contradictory age assessments requiring the favourable view when school records were available? Did the asserted subsequent marriage and residence with the applicant's relatives answer the rape allegation involving a minor wife? Did alleged voluntary departure exclude kidnapping for bail without establishing the minor's capacity, voluntary abandonment of guardianship, and absence of the applicant's assistance or inducement? In light of those grounds, the custody period, previous merits-based refusals and the reported advanced trial stage, was a case made out for bail? The application concerned provisional liberty; the sufficiency of the trial evidence for conviction remained for the trial court.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected the submission that the school record and ossification opinion constituted equal, contradictory age evidence. Section 94(2) requires the specified documentary sources to be considered before medical opinion, which becomes relevant only in their absence. Under Jarnail Singh, that method also applies to the victim's age. Because the prosecutrix's school record was available, the Court could not consider the ossification opinion or accept the claimed conflict on which the applicant sought the favourable view. The school record's availability therefore defeated this renewed age ground for bail.

The assertion of subsequent marriage and co-residence did not support the marriage-based ground for bail on the Section 376 allegation. Independent Thought read down Exception 2 to Section 375 in relation to a wife below eighteen; a spousal relationship does not exempt sexual intercourse with a minor wife from rape. The Court applied that rule in refusing bail. The sufficiency of the evidence for conviction remained for the trial court.

The Court rejected the contention that the prosecutrix's alleged willingness, by itself, excluded kidnapping. In the passage quoted from Anversinh, S. Varadarajan was distinguished as concerning 'taking', rather than 'enticement'. The relevant conditions were that the minor had the knowledge and capacity to understand the full import of her actions, voluntarily left her guardian's care, and acted without the accused's assistance or inducement. The single assertion that she had accompanied the applicant voluntarily did not establish the absence of the accused's participation or the other conditions. The Court rejected that categorical defence at the bail stage; the competing trial evidence and ultimate proof of Section 366 remained for trial.

Having rejected the renewed grounds, the Court found no case for granting bail on the sixth application in the totality of the circumstances. It expressly left to the trial court whether the evidence already on record was sufficient for conviction and noted the applicant's statement that the trial was at an advanced stage. Counsel's submission that custody had lasted approximately three years was before the Court. The age-evidence priority, minor-wife marital exception and voluntary-departure contention were considered in deciding bail.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the sixth application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC. Navendra Singh Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 29152/2021, 30/06/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Inherent jurisdiction — compromise-based quashing — alleged stalking and physical or sexual harassment on a public road — The applicant sought quashing of Crime No. 137/2017 and Criminal Case No. 199/2018 under Section 482 CrPC on the ground that the complainant had compromised with him. Neither the applicant's counsel nor the complainant's counsel appeared to press the application, which the Court therefore decided on the FIR copy. The allegations concerned earlier stalking, obstruction of the woman's scooter on a public road causing her to fall, grabbing her hand with an improper sexual intention, threats and abuse, followed by departure when she raised an alarm. The applicant was specifically alleged to have driven the motorcycle. Applying Gian Singh v. State of Punjab and Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab, and quoting State of M.P. v. Laxmi Narayan, the Court held that the alleged conduct involved society's interest in women's safe movement in public. The asserted private compromise did not justify quashing the FIR or prosecution. The quoted framework permits quashing in fully settled disputes of an overwhelmingly and predominantly civil character, while restricting that power for serious offences affecting society and requiring consideration of the accused's conduct in private, non-serious cases. Its Section 307, Arms Act and corruption examples formed part of that precedent's framework. The application was dismissed; the FIR allegations remained for adjudication in the criminal case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nazim Ahmad applied under Section 482 CrPC in M.Cr.C. No. 27031/2018 before the High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Gwalior Bench. He sought quashing of FIR Crime No. 137/2017, registered at Police Station Sirol, Gwalior, and Criminal Case No. 199/2018, pending before the Judicial Magistrate First Class, Gwalior. According to the FIR, the complainant ran Vaishno Coaching at Sirol and travelled there daily from Morar. She alleged that on 21 September 2017, at about 11:30, Ahmad and another person on a black motorcycle blocked her way, causing her to fall from her scooter. Ahmad allegedly grabbed her hand with an improper intention and threatened to kill her; the other accused allegedly also grabbed her with an improper intention and used abusive language. They left on the motorcycle when she shouted. The FIR specifically alleged that Ahmad was driving it. She also alleged earlier stalking and harassment, which she had not disclosed because she feared them. She reported the matter after speaking to her sister and brother-in-law. These were the allegations on which the application was considered.

The application stated that the complainant had compromised with Ahmad. Neither her counsel nor the applicant's counsel appeared to press the application; a Public Prosecutor was recorded for the State. The Court therefore decided the application on the copy of the FIR filed with the petition. It considered whether the nature of the alleged conduct and its occurrence on a public road justified ending the prosecution on the asserted private compromise.

2. Precedents — Considered : Gian Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 10 SCC 303, and Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 6 SCC 466, were expressly invoked for the distinction between offences affecting private parties and offences against society. The Court applied the principle that an offence against society ordinarily should not be quashed under Section 482 merely because the parties have compromised.

State of M.P. v. Laxmi Narayan and others, Criminal Appeal No. 349 of 2019, decided on 5 March 2019, was quoted and applied. The reproduced passage permits the exercise of Section 482 in respect of offences not compoundable under Section 320 where the dispute has an overwhelmingly and predominantly civil character, particularly a commercial, matrimonial or family dispute, and the parties have resolved the entire dispute. Offences under special statutes such as the Prevention of Corruption Act, and offences committed by public servants acting in that capacity, cannot be quashed merely on a compromise between the victim and offender. Serious offences under Section 307 IPC or the Arms Act that affect society ordinarily cannot be quashed on that ground. However, the High Court must consider more than the formal inclusion of Section 307: after investigation and collection of evidence, once a charge sheet has been filed or a charge framed, or during trial, it may examine the injuries, whether they affected vital parts of the body, and the weapons used to determine whether Section 307 was included merely for its own sake or whether the prosecution had collected sufficient evidence which, if proved, would support a charge under it. That examination is not permissible while investigation is continuing. The passage requires paragraphs 29.6 and 29.7 of Narinder Singh to be read together and harmoniously. In private, non-serious cases involving non-compoundable offences, the Court must also consider the accused's antecedents and conduct, including whether and why the accused absconded and how the compromise was obtained. The High Court applied the distinction between private disputes and offences affecting society to the allegations in the present case; the statutory examples formed part of the quoted framework.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to quash the FIR and the criminal case pending before the JMFC. Section 320 CrPC appeared in the quoted Laxmi Narayan framework distinguishing statutory compounding from the discretionary quashing of non-compoundable offences. A private compromise did not entitle the applicant to quashing of the alleged conduct affecting society. Section 307 IPC, the Arms Act and the Prevention of Corruption Act appeared in the Supreme Court passage as examples of restrictions on compromise-based quashing. The qualification concerning examination after investigation and filing of a charge sheet or framing of a charge also formed part of that framework. The application was decided under the CrPC in 2019.

4. Issues : Did the application's assertion that respondent No. 2 had compromised justify quashing FIR Crime No. 137/2017 and Criminal Case No. 199/2018 under Section 482 CrPC? On the allegations in the FIR, did the earlier stalking, public-road obstruction, grabbing, threats and abuse concern a private dispute alone, or did they affect society's interest in women's safety in public? With neither the applicant's counsel nor the complainant's counsel appearing to press the application, these questions were considered on the FIR copy filed with the petition.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered the nature of the allegations rather than treating the asserted compromise as decisive. Under Gian Singh and Narinder Singh, an offence against society should not be quashed under Section 482 merely on a compromise. The quoted Laxmi Narayan framework permits quashing where an entirely resolved commercial, matrimonial or family dispute has an overwhelmingly and predominantly civil character, while restricting it for serious conduct affecting society and the other specified categories. Its qualifications concerning a Section 307 charge require examination of the supporting evidence at the permitted procedural stage. Its private, non-serious case category also requires consideration of the accused's antecedents and conduct.

The FIR alleged earlier stalking and harassment, obstruction of the complainant's scooter on a public road causing her to fall, grabbing with an improper intention, threats and abuse, and departure after she raised an alarm. It specifically alleged that the applicant drove the motorcycle. The complainant attributed her earlier silence to fear. The Court treated allegations of girls being stalked and physically or sexually abused as a serious concern for society's ability to provide an environment in which they could move safely. Because the incident was alleged to have occurred on a public road and there was a specific allegation of earlier harassment, the Court held that the FIR and criminal case could not be quashed on the asserted compromise. The application was decided on the FIR copy in the absence of counsel for the applicant and complainant.

The Court thus applied the distinction between private disputes and offences affecting society to the alleged repeated stalking and public sexual harassment. The asserted settlement did not justify terminating this prosecution. The allegations remained for adjudication in the criminal case.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the application. FIR Crime No. 137/2017 and pending Criminal Case No. 199/2018 were not quashed on the asserted compromise. The FIR allegations remained for adjudication in the criminal case.

Headnote :- Food adulteration — Section 89 Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006 — distinct IPC cheating allegation — The applicants sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of an FIR registered under IPC Sections 420, 272, 273 and 34 following a dairy inspection and food analysis. They contended that the FSSA entirely displaced the IPC. The Court distinguished Manik Hiru Jhangiani, which concerned the predecessor Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. It read Ram Nath v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Sushil Kumar Gupta v. State of West Bengal as concerning Sections 272–273 IPC and the overriding effect of the FSSA, particularly Section 59. It observed that registration under Sections 272–273 in this case 'might not be correct'. However, the alleged sale of adulterated milk as pure milk to unsuspecting purchasers, considered with the recovery of powder capable of use as an adulterant, could disclose a distinct offence of cheating under Section 420. Section 89 did not exclude every IPC offence. The Court followed Rohit Jain and Manish Gupta on that distinction. It also relied on State of M.P. v. Rameshwar for the proposition that a special Act does not necessarily bar recourse to general criminal law in the absence of a statutory bar. The application to quash the FIR was dismissed. The Court stated that the trial court could frame FSSA charges if warranted by its assessment. The High Court did not expressly quash Sections 272–273, finally determine the ingredients of Section 420, or decide any issue of prior punishment or double jeopardy.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Neelkamal Sharma and the other applicants filed Misc. Criminal Case No. 46662 of 2022 under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime No. 73/2022 registered at Police Station Umri, Bhind, under IPC Sections 420, 272, 273 and 34. At about 1:30 p.m. on 19 April 2022, police officers and a Food Safety Officer inspected Neelkamal Dairy. Harikamal Sharma, who was present, identified Neelkamal as the proprietor and said that his brother held the licence, which he could not produce at the time. The officers reported finding milk stored in the basement; three bags containing 75 kilograms of white powder; 32 litres of semi-prepared milk; 41 kilograms of ghee in two tanks; fifteen empty one-litre vanaspati ghee packets; a parked tanker said to contain 3,200 litres of adulterated milk; and two drums containing 300 litres of milk. Samples were collected and the other articles seized. The order records the market value of the seized articles as ₹25,280. These were inspection and prosecution allegations, rather than final factual findings after trial.

The applicants contended that the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006 (FSSA) overrode the IPC provisions concerning food adulteration and rendered the entire FIR unlawful. They relied on Ram Nath, Sushil Kumar Gupta and the coordinate-bench decision in Rajkumar Tinkar. The State supported registration of the FIR and relied on Manik Hiru Jhangiani. The Court recorded the food analyst's description of the milk sample, referred to as 'Ghol' or solution, as an adulterant under Section 3(1)(a) FSSA. It also recorded that the seized white powder was maltodextrin, which could be used as an adulterant. The allegation that adulterated milk was being offered to consumers as pure milk provided the independent basis for Section 420 IPC.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ram Nath v. State of Uttar Pradesh and others, 2024:INSC:138, (2024) 3 SCC 502, was cited by the applicants and examined by the Court. The Court reproduced its express limitation to IPC Sections 272 and 273 and its conclusion that, when those food offences are made out, Section 59 FSSA is also attracted and prescribes a more stringent offence. The Court did not treat Ram Nath as excluding every IPC offence committed in the course of a food business. Its observation that registration under Sections 272–273 'might not be correct' remained qualified.

Sushil Kumar Gupta v. State of West Bengal, Criminal Appeal No. 1798/2024, decided 22 March 2024, was cited by the applicants and discussed by the Court. The High Court stated that it also concerned only IPC Sections 272–273 and prohibited simultaneous prosecution under both statutes for those food-adulteration offences. The High Court distinguished that decision from the separate issue under Section 420. Rajkumar Tinkar v. State of M.P., MCRC No. 2159/2012, decided 3 April 2024, was also distinguished.

Manik Hiru Jhangiani v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 3864/2023, decided 14 December 2023, was expressly distinguished. As described in the present order, Manik concerned the validity of prosecution under Sections 7/16 of the repealed Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 for a sample collected on 29 August 2010, after the FSSA had come into existence. The present FIR included IPC cheating as well as IPC food-adulteration offences. Manik did not determine the separate cheating issue arising in this case.

Rohit Jain v. State of M.P., MCRC No. 14294/2021, order dated 23 February 2024, and the passage from Manish Gupta v. State of M.P., MCRC No. 11462/2021, order dated 1 April 2021, quoted in it were reproduced and followed. They supported the proposition that selling adulterated or substandard milk as pure and safe may constitute cheating independently of food safety violations. The quoted passage from Manish Gupta also contained earlier statements permitting prosecution under Sections 420 and 272 together in the absence of an FSSA bar, and discussing Section 26 of the General Clauses Act where no prior penalty had been imposed.

State of Madhya Pradesh v. Rameshwar and others, 2009:INSC:456, (2009) 11 SCC 424, paragraphs 48 –49, was quoted in Manish Gupta and separately reproduced by the present Court. In the context of the MP Co-operative Societies Act and the Prevention of Corruption Act, it rejected the contention that a special statutory code necessarily excludes recourse to general criminal law where no statutory bar exists. It also held that the objection to converting civil disputes into criminal cases did not apply to the alleged conspiracy to cheat a bank. The present Court relied on that reasoning in holding that counsel had identified no FSSA provision excluding Section 420 IPC.

3. Statutes considered : Section 89 FSSA gives the Act overriding effect to the extent that provisions of another food-related law are inconsistent with it. The High Court reproduced the provision and applied the priority recognised in Ram Nath in relation to Sections 272 and 273 IPC. Through Ram Nath, it identified Section 59 FSSA as the more stringent food-safety offence attracted when the food adulteration covered by those IPC provisions is made out. Section 3(1)(a) FSSA was referred to in recording the analyst's description of the sample. The Court stated that the trial court could frame appropriate FSSA charges if it concluded that the applicants had committed an offence attracting penalty or punishment under that Act. The order itself framed no charge.

Section 272 IPC concerns adulteration of food or drink so as to make it noxious, with the intention of selling it or knowledge that it is likely to be sold. Section 273 IPC concerns selling, offering or exposing for sale food or drink that is noxious or unfit for consumption, with knowledge or reason to believe that it is in that condition. Both provisions were reproduced in the judgment. The separate allegation under Section 420 IPC concerned selling an adulterated product to unsuspecting purchasers by representing it as pure. Section 34 IPC formed part of the FIR, but the Court did not determine individual common intention or the liability of each accused. Section 482 CrPC governed the application to quash the FIR. Section 26 of the General Clauses Act appeared in the quoted Manish Gupta decision in relation to prior penalty and duplicate prosecution; it was not separately adjudicated as a defence in the present case. The Prevention of Food Adulteration Act, 1954 and the MP Co-operative Societies Act arose in the distinguished precedent and the cited analogy, respectively; they did not govern the applicants' alleged conduct in 2022.

4. Issues : Did Section 89 FSSA and the Supreme Court decisions on overlapping food-adulteration laws bar the FIR's allegations under Sections 272 and 273 IPC, and did that position require quashing the entire FIR? Did the separate allegation of selling adulterated milk to consumers as pure disclose a prima facie offence under Section 420 IPC, without inconsistency with the FSSA having been shown? How did the Supreme Court decisions concerning food offences, the predecessor food law and the interaction between special statutes and general criminal law apply to the different offences alleged in this FIR? What relief was available under Section 482, and what question concerning FSSA charges remained for the trial court? The Court did not determine guilt, actual purity or sale on the basis of trial evidence, the final liability of each applicant, any previously imposed FSSA penalty, or a claim of double punishment.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the statutory provisions and the scope of the cited decisions. Manik Hiru Jhangiani concerned prosecution under Sections 7/16 of the former Prevention of Food Adulteration Act after the FSSA had come into existence; it did not determine the separate IPC cheating issue in this case. Paragraph 29 of Ram Nath, reproduced in the order, expressly concerned IPC Sections 272 and 273 and their overlap with the more stringent Section 59 FSSA. The Court treated Section 89 as overriding inconsistent food-related law. It read Sushil Kumar Gupta as also precluding simultaneous prosecution under both statutes for those food-adulteration offences. It therefore observed that, in light of Ram Nath, the police 'might not be correct' in registering offences under Sections 272–273. However, in refusing to quash the FIR, it did not expressly quash those counts.

On the separate allegation of cheating, the Court considered the analyst's description of the adulterated milk solution and the seized powder capable of adulterating milk products. At the stage of considering whether to quash the FIR, it concluded that the alleged dairy business involved selling adulterated milk to the public as pure milk. The applicants had not contended that consumers were informed that the milk was adulterated. Following Rohit Jain and Manish Gupta, the Court held that such conduct could constitute deception of purchasers under Section 420 IPC. This provided the basis for refusing to quash the FIR on the ground that the FSSA displaced the IPC altogether. The alleged representation of adulterated milk as pure supported registration under Section 420 IPC despite the FSSA objection. The decision concerned quashing of the FIR, rather than guilt after trial.

The Court stated that counsel had relied only on Section 89 and had identified no provision completely barring Section 420 IPC. In paragraphs 17–18, it further observed that the alleged recovery of adulterated milk products and powder capable of use as an adulterant could amount to an offence, and that prosecution under the FSSA was also available. It dismissed the application to quash the entire FIR without separately quashing the food-adulteration counts. The order did not acquit the applicants on any count, frame charges, or finally evaluate the evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC. FIR Crime No. 73/2022 remained in force, without express partial quashing of IPC Sections 272–273. The Court stated that the trial court could frame FSSA charges if it concluded that the applicants had committed an offence attracting penalty or punishment under that Act. It did not discharge any individual accused, determine guilt, or direct a conviction. The trial and assessment of any charges remained for the competent court. Headnote :- Investigation — judicial directions to arrest or file charge sheet — timely completion — In an application under Section 528 BNSS concerning an FIR already registered under IPC Sections 420/467, the complainant alleged police inaction. She sought investigation by a higher-ranking officer, arrest of the accused and filing of a charge sheet. The Court refused to direct arrest or filing of a charge sheet as the necessary outcome of investigation. It quoted and applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan

Krishnamachari: the police must investigate in discharge of their statutory duty, while exercising the discretion conferred by law. The quoted M.C. Abraham decision explains that an FIR alleging a cognizable offence does not make arrest automatic or mandatory. The evidence may justify either a charge sheet or a closure report. The Supreme Court decision also cautions against judicial directions prescribing particular investigative steps and against consequential orders affecting persons who have not been heard. No separate hearing defect was determined in the present case. The Court distinguished directions controlling the outcome from enforcement of Section 173(1) CrPC, cited with Section 193 BNSS: investigation must be completed without unnecessary delay and followed by a lawful final report. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law. The applicant could approach the Superintendent of Police with any further grievance. No arrest was ordered, no charge sheet was compelled, and no finding was made on the IPC allegations.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Neha Shakya applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, invoking the High Court's inherent jurisdiction in Misc. Criminal Case No. 55128 of 2024. On her complaint, Police Station Lahar, Bhind, had already registered Crime No. 195/2023 under Sections 420 and 467 IPC. She alleged that the police had taken no further action and had not arrested the persons accused by her. She sought a fair and transparent inquiry by an officer not below the rank of Deputy Superintendent of Police, arrest of the accused to safeguard her family, and filing of a charge sheet. The Court quoted a Supreme Court judgment concerning another High Court's directions to arrest, seize property and file a charge sheet. It disposed of the present application by directing completion of the investigation in accordance with law.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam and others v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and another, 2009:INSC:1132, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was expressly quoted in paragraph 4 and applied in paragraph 5. The reproduced passages disapproved of a High Court's unreasoned directions requiring the police to record witness statements, arrest the accused, seize property and file a charge sheet. Those directions prescribed the course of investigation before the police had exercised their statutory judgment. The police's statutory duty and discretion permit either a charge sheet or a report that no case is made out; every investigation need not result in arrest, seizure or prosecution. The inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC is confined to giving effect to an order under the Code, preventing abuse of the process of a court, or securing the ends of justice. Casual judicial observations may unduly influence the police. The Supreme Court also noted that the affected accused had neither been impleaded nor heard before the far-reaching directions were issued. These principles informed the present Court's refusal to direct arrest or filing of a charge sheet. It made no adverse investigative order against a named accused.

M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, was quoted within D. Venkatasubramaniam. Its principle concerning Section 41 CrPC is that arrest following a report of a cognizable offence is discretionary. The power must be exercised cautiously, with regard to the needs of investigation, the nature of the alleged offence and the circumstances of the person concerned, since arrest affects liberty and reputation. A police officer is not bound to arrest automatically upon receipt of a report. The High Court relied on that reasoning in refusing to direct arrests in Shakya's case. It did not determine, on a fully developed record, whether any particular suspect should be arrested.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, paragraph 51, was reproduced in the quoted discussion in D. Venkatasubramaniam. It states that a judicial order initiating investigation against a person, with drastic consequences for that person, should not be passed without a reasonable opportunity of hearing, particularly where the allegations are anonymous. In D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Supreme Court set aside the earlier High Court order and held that the absence of notice itself rendered the order a nullity. The present Court quoted that reasoning but did not determine any separate notice violation in this case.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant invoked the High Court's inherent power under Section 528 BNSS. The Court relied on D. Venkatasubramaniam, which concerned the corresponding inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC. The FIR alleged cheating and forgery under IPC Sections 420 and 467, but the Court did not determine their ingredients or factual merits. Section 41 CrPC appeared in the quoted M.C. Abraham discussion of police discretion to arrest; arrest was not treated as a judicially mandated consequence of an FIR. The order reproduced Section 173(1) CrPC, requiring every investigation under the chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay, and cited Section 193 BNSS alongside it. The duty to reach a timely and lawful conclusion was distinguished from any supposed obligation to file only a charge sheet. The Court required a final report according to the result of investigation, expressly permitting either a closure report or a charge sheet.

4. Issues : After registration of Crime No. 195/2023, could the High Court, on the informant's application under Section 528, direct the police to arrest the identified accused and file a charge sheet, or otherwise prescribe the outcome of investigation? Did the police nevertheless have a duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay and take the lawful steps required for a final report? The prayer also sought investigation by a more senior officer and referred to safety concerns, but the Court issued no specific direction selecting an investigating agency or granting protection. It did not determine whether the alleged IPC offences had occurred, whether the criteria for arrest were satisfied for any person, or which final report the evidence would justify.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the complainant's allegation of inaction from her request for directions controlling police action. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam, it held that the investigating agency must determine, within the law, how to investigate, whether arrest is necessary and whether the evidence warrants a charge sheet or a closure report. The quoted M.C. Abraham passage explains that arrest is a discretionary power affecting liberty, rather than an automatic consequence of a report of a cognizable offence. A direction to arrest, seize property or file a charge sheet irrespective of the evidence collected would improperly control and prejudge the investigation. The Court therefore expressly refused the requests for arrest and compulsory filing of a charge sheet. The quoted Supreme Court decision also disapproved of unreasoned directions affecting persons who had not been heard; the present Court did not determine a separate hearing issue on this record.

Those limits on judicial directions did not relieve the police of the duty to complete an investigation. Section 173(1) CrPC, cited with Section 193 BNSS, requires completion without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer must reach a lawful conclusion on whether an offence is made out and submit the corresponding final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet. The direction to conclude the investigation 'as early as possible' and take the steps required by law enforced that duty without choosing the contents of the report, appointing an investigator of a specified rank, ordering custody or determining guilt. The order did not quantify any unjustified delay or fix a deadline. The applicant remained free to approach the Superintendent of Police with any further grievance.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court disposed of the application. It refused to direct arrest or filing of a charge sheet, and directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the necessary steps in accordance with law. The applicant was permitted to approach the Superintendent of Police, Bhind, with any grievance, to be considered according to law. The Court did not order investigation by a Deputy Superintendent, direct the arrest of any particular accused, compel a particular prosecutorial outcome, or determine the merits of the IPC allegations. Neutral citation: 2025:MPHC-GWL:1113.

Headnote :- Section 153A IPC — political cartoon, free speech and quashing threshold — A folk singer sought quashing of an FIR concerning a social-media cartoon about an incident in which a person allegedly urinated on another belonging to a reserved category. She contended that the post exposed a serious incident and was protected commentary. The Court noted that the cartoon depicted a black cap, white shirt and khaki-coloured half trousers. Counsel accepted that the additional dress did not reflect the actual incident. The Court inferred an attempt to associate the incident with a particular ideology and held that the intention behind the added clothing and its factual justification required examination at trial. It refused to quash the FIR on the asserted satirical or Article 19(1)(a) defence. Amish Devgan v. Union of India was quoted at length: political criticism, even when harsh or false, receives strong protection, while vilification targeting a group by identity, with the required public-order connection, may attract Section 153A. Mere thought does not amount to an attempt. Patricia Mukhim v. State of Meghalaya was also quoted on mens rea, a tendency to cause public disorder, assessment of the expression as a whole in context, and the involvement of at least two protected groups. Merely offensive ideas are insufficient. The Court did not convict the applicant, find a proved public-order disturbance, or hold that every false detail or satirical expression is independently criminal. The application under Section 482 was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Neha Singh Rathore, a folk singer, applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR No. 1001/2023 dated 10 July 2023, registered at Police Station Baidhan, Singrauli, under Section 153A IPC, and the consequential proceedings. Counsel stated that a person, while intoxicated, had urinated on another belonging to a reserved category, and that Rathore had a moral responsibility to bring the incident to public attention. A cartoon uploaded on her Twitter and Instagram accounts depicted a half-naked person urinating on a seated person, yellowish-brown or khaki half trousers lying on the ground, a black cap, a white shirt and a belt. She stated that she had been accused of acting for other political parties and was not afraid of threats. The State opposed quashing, contending that the representation could promote disharmony between groups and referring to tension following the underlying incident. It also submitted that the direct perpetrator had been detained under the National Security Act and that a separate challenge to that detention had been dismissed. Those detention proceedings formed part of the State's submissions and background; they were not independently adjudicated in this application.

The Court asked counsel whether the clothing shown in the cartoon corresponded to that worn by the actual perpetrator. Counsel conceded that some of the depicted clothing had not been worn at the incident. From that alteration, the Court inferred an attempt to associate the incident with a particular ideology. It held that the purpose of adding the clothing was a question for trial. The order described the cartoon filed as Annexure A/2.

2. Precedents — Considered : Amish Devgan v. Union of India and others, AIR Online 2020 SC 930, was cited by the State, quoted at length and relied on by the Court. The reproduced passages distinguish protected political criticism and debate about government policy, including strong or false statements, from speech directed at humiliating, alienating or inciting hatred or violence against a group. They emphasise context, purpose, group identity and harm, rather than treating the government as the arbiter of truth. For Section 153A(1)(b), public tranquillity bears the narrower meaning of public order; every minor disturbance of law and order is not sufficient, although acts of local significance may qualify. An attempt requires an overt act beyond mere preparation or thought, reasonably proximate to commission of the offence. Intention and likely harm remain relevant even where intervention prevents completion. The High Court relied on those principles in treating the admitted addition of clothing as an attempt to attribute the incident to a particular ideology. Kedar Nath Singh, Arun Ghosh, Aman Kumar and Mohd. Yakub were referred to within the quoted Supreme Court reasoning; they did not constitute separate High Court findings on a different offence.

Patricia Mukhim v. State of Meghalaya and others, 2021:INSC:213, (2021) 15 SCC 35, was separately quoted in paragraph 15, after the High Court had stated its own view. The quotation affirms freedom of speech under Article 19(1)(a), subject to the restrictions enumerated in Article 19(2). In relation to Section 153A, it treats intention to cause disorder or incite violence as essential and places the burden of proving mens rea on the prosecution. Intention must be assessed from the language and circumstances of publication, reading the expression as a whole rather than relying on isolated strong passages. Its discussion of Bilal Ahmed Kaloo requires involvement of at least two groups; inciting one group without reference to another does not suffice. It applies the standard of an ordinary reasonable observer and distinguishes serious vilification from mere repugnancy or offensive opinion. Balwant Singh, Manzar Sayeed Khan, Ramesh, Bilal Ahmed Kaloo and Pravasi Bhalai Sangathan formed part of the Supreme Court reasoning reproduced through Patricia Mukhim. The High Court did not expressly distinguish Patricia Mukhim or apply it to quash the FIR; it dismissed the application after reproducing the passage.

3. Statutes considered : Section 153A(1) IPC was reproduced in full. Clause (a) concerns words, signs, visible representations and other means which promote or attempt to promote disharmony, enmity, hatred or ill-will between the specified groups on the grounds stated in the provision. Clause (b) concerns acts prejudicial to harmony between groups which disturb or are likely to disturb public tranquillity. The quoted interpretation in Amish Devgan confines public tranquillity in that clause to matters of public-order significance. Clause (c), concerning organisation of or participation in violent exercises, was reproduced, but no such activity was alleged in this case. Subsection (2), concerning conduct at a place of worship or an assembly engaged in worship, was also reproduced but not applied. The cartoon was considered as a visible representation. The question at the quashing stage was whether the alleged addition of ideological clothing, viewed in its setting, could support the charged promotion or attempt. The order did not finally identify an exact subclause for framing a charge.

Section 482 CrPC governed the application to quash the FIR. The Court considered whether the uncontroverted allegations disclosed an offence and left the disputed intention for trial. Articles 19(1)(a) and 19(2) of the Constitution governed the asserted artistic and satirical freedom and the permissible reasonable restrictions. The Court recognised an artist's liberty to criticise through satire, but rejected that explanation for the allegedly baseless addition of ideological clothing at this stage. Section 505 IPC appeared in the Patricia Mukhim quotation, rather than in the FIR described in this judgment. The State referred to National Security Act detention of the person involved in the underlying incident; that detention was not treated as a basis for punishing this applicant. The applicable provisions were those of the IPC and CrPC.

4. Issues : Did the alleged social-media post, read as a whole and including the added clothing, disclose a prima facie attempt under Section 153A to promote disharmony between groups, or amount only to protected condemnation and satire of a disturbing incident? Could absence of mens rea or the artistic explanation be determined on the Section 482 record, or did the disputed purpose of the added imagery require trial? How did the statutory ingredients apply with the free-expression, public-order, intention and whole-context principles in Amish Devgan and Patricia Mukhim? The questions arose at the quashing stage, rather than on final proof of an actual public-order disturbance, the protected groups involved beyond an ideological association, or guilt after evidence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered the language of Section 153A and the cartoon as described in the order. Counsel's concession that the depicted clothing did not reflect the actual incident was central to its assessment. It inferred that the additional cap, shirt and khaki-coloured clothing associated the alleged wrongdoer with a particular ideology without a basis in the incident. It treated this as an attempt to disrupt harmony and provoke enmity or ill-will, and refused to quash on the artistic and free-expression explanation. Paragraph 10 expressly left the intention behind the choice of clothing for trial; paragraph 12 stated that the defence of absence of intention had to be proved by the applicant there. Applying the test whether uncontroverted FIR allegations disclose an offence, the Court concluded that the departure from the actual incident prevented acceptance of the claimed protection for satire at that stage.

The quoted principles in Amish Devgan distinguish criticism of government policy from hatred directed at a group by identity and require assessment of likely serious harm to public order, particularly under Section 153A(1)(b). Its discussion of attempt requires more than thought or mere preparation. The separate quotation from Patricia Mukhim places proof of mens rea on the prosecution and requires assessment of the expression as a whole in context, including involvement of at least two groups and tolerance of merely offensive ideas. The inference in the present case concerned the circumstances alleged; it did not establish a general rule that political cartoons satisfy the offence. The High Court refused to terminate this particular FIR at the threshold.

The Court did not separately determine the correctness of the State's account of public tension or the underlying detention proceedings. It found no ground for interference under its inherent power and left the merits to be addressed by the prosecution and defence at trial.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the application and declined to quash FIR No. 1001/2023 and the incidental proceedings under Section 153A IPC. It did not convict or punish the applicant, restrain further posting, hold that protected criticism generally falls outside constitutional protection, or decide the underlying NSA detention. Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act — cheque handwriting and Section 20 — The complainant alleged a loan of ₹3 lakh, delivery of a signed cheque, its dishonour for insufficient funds, service of notice and prosecution under Section 138. After the complainant's evidence and his own examination under Section 313 CrPC, the accused sought examination by a handwriting expert, asserting that neither the signature nor the other entries were his. In his recorded answers, however, he had admitted signing cheque No. 759479, giving it to the complainant and receiving the statutory notice. The Court held that, in these circumstances, identifying the writer of the remaining entries would not justify sending the cheque to an expert. The bank had not returned it for a mismatch of signatures. Following Vipin Kumar Vimal Kumar HUF, the Court relied on the prima facie authority under Section 20 NI Act to complete an incomplete instrument that had been signed and delivered, subject to the provision's limits. It left the accused's separate defence that he had borrowed only ₹1 lakh and repaid it for consideration at trial, while recognising his right to a fair opportunity to defend himself. The trial and revisional courts' refusal of expert examination was upheld. The Court made no final finding on the legally enforceable debt or guilt under Section 138. It applied the reproduced Section 20 provision to the admitted signing and delivery of the cheque in refusing this particular expert reference.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vimal Kumar's complaint under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act alleged that he and Nicky Chaurasia knew each other through business. Chaurasia had borrowed ₹3 lakh for domestic needs and, when repayment was demanded, signed and delivered a cheque on 22 August 2014, asking that it be presented after two or three days. The cheque was presented on 26 September 2014 and returned the same day for insufficient funds. The complainant sent the statutory notice and instituted the prosecution. After the complainant had examined all his witnesses and the accused had been examined under Section 313 CrPC, the accused applied to send the cheque to a handwriting expert, asserting that neither the signature nor the entries were in his handwriting. The Judicial Magistrate First Class, Ashok Nagar, rejected the application in Criminal Case No. 2484/2014 on 2 July 2016. The II Additional Sessions Judge dismissed Criminal Revision No. 25/2016 on 26 September 2016. Chaurasia challenged those orders under Section 482 CrPC in Misc. Criminal Case No. 12242/2016.

In answer to question 5 under Section 313, Chaurasia admitted signing cheque No. 759479 and giving it to the complainant. In answer to question 7, he again admitted delivery, and in answer to question 8, he admitted receiving the registered notice. The High Court treated those recorded admissions as contradicting the assertion in his expert application that the signature was not his. It also noted his separate defence on the merits: he had borrowed ₹1 lakh, rather than ₹3 lakh, and had repaid it. That defence remained for assessment at trial. The discussion concerned the relevance of the proposed handwriting examination at that procedural stage, rather than a finding of criminal guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Vipin Kumar Vimal Kumar H.U.F. v. Shobhit Kumar alias Mintu Samaiya, MCRC No. 8893/2015, decided on 26 August 2015 by a coordinate bench of the same High Court, was quoted and followed in paragraph 8. The coordinate bench reasoned that, where a cheque had not been dishonoured for a mismatch of signatures, there was no prima facie need for expert verification of the signature. Examination of the handwriting or ink in the other entries would at most show that someone else had filled them in. That circumstance was not necessarily fatal where the accused had signed and delivered the instrument and the NI Act recognised authority to complete it. Without a specimen for comparison, an expert might not even identify who wrote the other entries. Successive expert references could delay the proceedings without resolving liability. The quotation referred to Satyendra Upadhyay and Bhadauriya Tiles for the same principle. The present Court adopted that limited practical reasoning in light of the express Section 313 admission of signing and delivery. It did not hold that a cheque with a genuinely disputed signature, or an issue requiring expert analysis, could never be examined.

3. Statutes considered : Section 138 NI Act governed the complaint arising from dishonour for insufficient funds of the cheque allegedly issued for the loan, followed by statutory notice. The order did not determine every element of the offence, limitation, the existence of a legally enforceable debt, or the ultimate operation and rebuttal of presumptions at trial. Section 20 NI Act was reproduced. A person who signs and delivers to another a paper stamped in accordance with the law relating to negotiable instruments, either blank or incomplete, thereby confers prima facie authority on the holder to make or complete a negotiable instrument for an amount within the stamp limit. The proviso limits recovery by a person other than a holder in due course to the amount intended by the signer. The Judge applied the provision to the admitted signing and delivery of the cheque to explain why an expert did not need to identify the writer of its remaining contents in this case.

Section 313 CrPC governed the accused's examination. The Judge relied on his answers as the factual basis for signing and delivery, rather than as a final determination of the loan balance. Section 482 CrPC provided the procedural basis for the High Court petition after dismissal of the criminal revision challenging refusal of expert examination. The Court expressly recognised the right to a fair trial and to defend oneself, while leaving the asserted smaller loan and repayment for the trial court to assess. The order did not treat the fact that someone else wrote the other cheque entries as a conclusive defence to Section 138.

4. Issues : Did refusal of handwriting-expert examination of the disputed cheque amount to error or denial of a fair defence after the accused had admitted signing and delivering it in his Section 313 answers? Would an opinion that someone else wrote the other entries be material in light of the prima facie authority to complete an instrument under Section 20 and the bank's return of the cheque for insufficient funds, rather than a mismatch of signatures? Did that refusal determine the separate factual defence that a smaller loan had already been repaid? The Court did not decide the enforceable amount, whether a statutory offence had been completed, whether there was an actual forgery, who wrote the cheque entries, or the technical scope of Section 20 for every form of cheque.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court examined the record rather than accepting the unsupported assertion in the application for expert examination. In his Section 313 answers, Chaurasia had admitted signing and delivering the specific cheque, had repeated his admission of delivery, and had also admitted receiving the notice. The bank had returned the cheque for insufficient funds. An inquiry into whether the signature matched the bank's specimen therefore did not address the actual ground of dishonour. An expert might at most establish that someone else wrote the remaining text. The coordinate bench had explained why another person's handwriting in the body did not automatically negate an instrument that had been signed and delivered, and why unrestricted expert references could delay a Section 138 case. The present Court regarded those considerations as sufficient to uphold the Magistrate's refusal in the circumstances of this case. It did not hold that expert evidence was inherently inadmissible or that a request made in the interests of a fair trial could always be rejected as delaying the proceedings.

The Court's application of the provision supplied the further reason that identifying the writer of the other entries would not, by itself, resolve the Section 138 dispute. The discussion concerned prima facie authority, rather than a final, irrebuttable presumption of a debt of ₹3 lakh. The reproduced Section 20 referred to stamped paper and an amount not exceeding that covered by the stamp. The Court expressly left the plausibility of the accused's defence that he had borrowed ₹1 lakh and repaid it to the trial court. That defence could be assessed on proper evidence despite refusal of this particular expert reference.

The order upheld the lower courts' expert-referral decision but did not convict, determine all presumptions under the NI Act, or foreclose a relevant defence.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed Chaurasia's Section 482 petition without costs. The orders of the JMFC and the revisional court refusing the requested handwriting-expert examination remained effective. The Section 138 complaint continued for trial, with the defence concerning the loan and repayment still open. Reported citation: ILR [2017] MP 236.

Headnote :- Criminal procedure — maintenance jurisdiction — Section 126(1) CrPC - A wife and daughter applied for maintenance under Section 125 at Gwalior, relying on the wife's parental home and asserted permanent address there. The wife worked as an Airport Authority air-traffic controller and lived in Delhi, where the daughter also lived and studied. In the husband's revision against rejection of his territorial objection, the Court held that casual stays or flying visits do not amount to residence, and that a temporary residence acquired solely to confer jurisdiction does not suffice. Genuine residence for the time being may confer jurisdiction without permanent domicile. A subsequent transfer does not, by itself, remove jurisdiction established when the application was filed. The statutory alternatives also permit proceedings in the district where the husband is or where the spouses last resided together; neither alternative established jurisdiction at Gwalior on these facts. The Court discussed the Delhi High Court's Asha Devi/Sachin Gupta passage and the Madras High Court's treatment of residence in K. Mohan, applying the distinction between actual temporary residence and a casual visit. It rejected the separate submission that the daughter resided at Gwalior in light of the wife's application and the daughter's Delhi residence and studies. The Gwalior Family Court's order was set aside, and the Section 125 proceeding there was held to be without territorial jurisdiction. Substantive maintenance rights were not decided, and the applicants were given liberty to apply before a court with jurisdiction. The accounts of the wife's earlier employment and claimed return to her parental home were the parties' competing positions. They did not amount to a finding that only permanent residence could confer jurisdiction.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nirman Sagar and respondent No. 1, Monika Sagar Chaudhari, were husband and wife; respondent No. 2 was their daughter. The wife and daughter applied for maintenance under Section 125 of the Code of Criminal Procedure before the Family Court at Gwalior. The husband challenged territorial jurisdiction by an application under Order VII Rule 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure read with Section 126 CrPC. He asserted that the marriage had taken place at Bhopal on 29 November 2019 and that the spouses had last lived together there. He also asserted that Monika, an Airport Authority of India employee, lived and worked in Delhi, where their daughter was studying. He relied on the Delhi addresses she had disclosed in her reply to a petition for restitution under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act and in her own application under Section 24. According to him, the Gwalior parental-home address in the maintenance cause title had been used to create a forum that otherwise lacked jurisdiction. These were his pleaded contentions. The ruling concerned residence under Section 126, rather than the merits of the maintenance claim.

In reply, the respondents stated that Gwalior was the wife's permanent address and parental home, while Delhi was her work posting rather than her permanent address. Their counsel also relied on her occasional visits to her parents at Gwalior. They asserted that she had entered employment before marriage, was first posted at Calcutta in 2010 and had been posted in Delhi since 2011. They also asserted that she had returned to her parental home after being deserted in 2014, while continuing to attend her job in Delhi. On 25 October 2021, the Additional Judge to the Principal Judge, Family Court, Gwalior, rejected the husband's objection in Case No. 234/2019 (new No. 367/2021), relying on the wife's parental home and asserted permanent address at Gwalior. The husband challenged that order under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC in Criminal Revision No. 3060/2021. The judgment determined that procedural challenge.

2. Precedents — Considered : The wife relied on Asha Devi and others v. Muneshwar Singh @ Munna, Criminal Revision No. 614/2018, decided by the Delhi High Court on 17 December 2021. The Judge reproduced paragraph 7, which quoted the coordinate-bench decision in Sachin Gupta v. Rachana Gupta, Criminal Revision Petition No. 476/2018, decided on 21 January 2019. The quoted principle was that Section 126(1)(b) does not require permanent residence. A place where the wife resides for the time being may confer jurisdiction, but a residence temporarily acquired solely to confer jurisdiction does not suffice. The present High Court applied that distinction to the actual living arrangements when the application was filed; it did not regard the assertion of a permanent address as sufficient. The remaining Asha Devi excerpt referred to the respondent's arrest in Delhi and a submission relying on Bhaskar Lal Sharma v. Monica & Ors., (2014) 3 SCC 383, that a maintenance order could be enforced against a person living outside the country. That enforcement proposition formed part of the party's submission reproduced in the quotation.

The Court also quoted K. Mohan v. Balakanta Lakshmi, 1983 Criminal Law Journal 1316 (Madras High Court), at length. Drawing on Corpus Juris Secundum and Words and Phrases, that judgment explained that the meaning of ‘reside’ depends on the statutory context and purpose. It may mean domicile or actual temporary living, but even the liberal meaning excludes a casual stay or flying visit. The present Court adopted that distinction in paragraph 10 and applied it in paragraph 14. It did not require permanent domicile in every maintenance application.

3. Statutes considered : Section 125 CrPC governed the underlying maintenance application by the wife and daughter. The High Court did not decide their eligibility, need or the amount of any entitlement. Section 126(1) CrPC supplied the territorial rule. As reproduced in paragraph 8, proceedings under Section 125 may be brought against a person in any district (a) where he is, (b) where he or his wife resides, or (c) where he last resided with his wife or, as applicable, with the mother of an illegitimate child. The Court interpreted ‘resides’ in clause (b) as actual residence, rather than a formal permanent address or occasional visits to the parental home. Its observation about a later transfer concerned the relevant time: jurisdiction established when the application was filed is not lost merely because of a subsequent transfer. The order also reproduced subsections 126(2) and (3), concerning evidence in the presence of the person against whom maintenance is sought or through counsel, ex parte proceedings for deliberate nonattendance, and costs. Those provisions did not control the territorial issue. The husband's objection invoked Order VII Rule 11 CPC read with Section 126 CrPC. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provided the route for revision. Sections 9 and 24 of the Hindu Marriage Act were mentioned in connection with the wife's disclosures of her Delhi address and employment in related proceedings; restitution and interim maintenance in those proceedings were not adjudicated.

4. Issues : First, did Section 126(1) confer territorial jurisdiction on the Gwalior Family Court over the wife's and daughter's Section 125 application because the wife described her parents' Gwalior address as her permanent address and visited them, despite her longstanding employment and living arrangements in Delhi? This involved distinguishing genuine residence for the time being from a casual visit or a residence acquired solely to confer jurisdiction, and considering whether the spouses had last lived together in Gwalior. Second, could the daughter independently sustain the Gwalior application on counsel's assertion that she had previously stayed with her maternal grandparents there, in light of the maintenance application's statements and her Delhi studies? The revision did not require determination of the underlying maintenance claim, the effect of employment on need, or the power to enforce an eventual order abroad.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered the alternative grounds of jurisdiction under Section 126(1). The respondents did not contend that the spouses had last resided together at Gwalior. The wife's claim to that forum rested on her parental address and visits. The quoted Delhi High Court passage recognised that residence for the time being could confer jurisdiction without being permanent, but excluded a temporary stay undertaken solely to create a forum. The Madras High Court's discussion further established that even a liberal meaning of residence did not include a casual visit. Thus, where a working person genuinely resided in a place when the application was filed, a subsequent transfer would not, by itself, defeat that court's jurisdiction. Conversely, describing a place as a permanent address did not establish actual residence there at the relevant time. The Court did not decide that employment in another city invariably determines domicile.

On its assessment of the record, the Court found that Monika had been posted in Delhi since 2011 and worked there as an Airport Authority air-traffic controller. Her parental home and visits to Gwalior did not establish residence in that district when the maintenance application was filed. The Family Court had treated the asserted permanent address and parental home as sufficient, without applying the statutory residence test. The High Court rejected that approach and found that the Gwalior address in the cause title had been given to confer jurisdiction. That finding concerned territorial jurisdiction on the application, employment and living arrangements; it did not determine the validity of the marriage or the substantive maintenance claim.

The Court separately considered the daughter's position. Counsel submitted that she had previously lived with her maternal grandparents at Gwalior. The Judge found that submission inconsistent with paragraph 1 of the wife's application, which stated that the daughter lived with her. The extract reproduced after paragraph 13 described daughter Dakshata Chaudhary as then residing with applicant No. 1. The Court expressly found that the daughter was studying in Delhi and that both respondents lived there. The asserted earlier stay with the grandparents therefore did not establish Gwalior residence for this application. The judgment did not decide whether a child genuinely resident in a district could independently establish jurisdiction on different evidence; the objection was determined on the actual facts and the alternatives stated in Section 126.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the husband's criminal revision. It set aside the Family Court's order dated 25 October 2021 rejecting the territorial objection and held that the wife's and daughter's Section 125 application in that court was without territorial jurisdiction. It expressly granted them liberty to apply under Section 125 before a court having jurisdiction under Section 126 CrPC. The Court made no maintenance award, did not reject the claim on its merits, and specified no costs or further deadline. Neutral citation: 2022:MPHC-GWL:5062.

Headnote :- Inherent powers — Supreme Court quashing standard — retaliatory FIR - Rishipal Singh v. State of U.P., (2014) 7 SCC 215, quoted and applied the principle in Medchl Chemicals & Pharma (P) Ltd. v. Biological E. Ltd., (2000) 3 SCC 269: quashing at an early stage is exceptional and must not routinely cut short a prosecution. Intervention is nevertheless warranted where the allegations, on their face, do not disclose an offence or legal process is used vindictively. The Court recognised that, where allegations disclose a cognizable offence, the informant's mala fides ordinarily become secondary. It nevertheless examined whether the complainant's later FIR was a counterblast to her daughter-in-law's earlier cruelty prosecution and divorce, maintenance and domestic-violence proceedings. On this record, it found the FIR delayed, the allegations superficial and trivial, and the complaint retaliatory. It held that continued investigation would misuse lawful authority. The Section 482 application was allowed, and the FIR under IPC Sections 323, 294, 506 and 34 was quashed. The earlier proceedings supplied the context; they did not establish a presumption that every subsequent complaint was false.

Preliminary inquiry — related family litigation — consequence of omission - The applicants relied on Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P. and submitted that the police should have examined their asserted absence from the scene before registering the FIR. The Court observed that the complainant's express identification of one accused as her daughter-in-law's father called for a preliminary inquiry. It nevertheless held that the absence of an inquiry did not, by itself, invalidate the FIR. Quashing rested on the separately reasoned finding of abuse, rather than automatic procedural invalidity. The Court did not determine the applicants' asserted alibi after a trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants, Nirmal Singh Mertia and his brothers Sumer Singh and Sudarshan Singh, were related to respondent No. 2, Vidya Singh Bhadoriya, through her son's marriage to Nirmal's daughter. On 15 January 2024, Vidya lodged the report registered as Crime No. 13/2024 at Police Station University, Gwalior. She alleged that all three applicants had come to her home at about 7:30 p.m. on 23 December 2023 and demanded ₹50 lakh. When she said that she could not pay, they abused her, struck her with fists and blows, injured her left hand and threatened to kill her unless she paid. She stated that her neighbours, Pradeep Singh Bhadoriya and Punit Tomar, intervened after she cried out. She attributed the reporting delay to her husband's absence from Gwalior. The police registered offences under IPC Sections 323, 294, 506 and 34. These were allegations in the FIR, rather than facts proved at a trial or separately disproved by the High Court.

The applicants sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC in Misc. Criminal Case No. 20621 of 2024. Their counsel described Vidya's FIR as a counterblast to the prior proceedings brought by Nirmal's daughter against her husband and his family. She had filed a divorce petition on 14 October 2021, an application for maintenance under Section 125 CrPC on 18 July 2022, and an FIR on 13 September 2022 alleging offences under IPC Sections 498A, 377, 406, 323, 504, 506 and 34 against her in-laws. A complaint under Section 12 of the Domestic Violence Act against Vidya and other in-laws was also pending. Counsel further asserted that the three applicants had not been present on the alleged date and, relying on Lalita Kumari, submitted that the police should have conducted a preliminary inquiry. The State and complainant opposed quashing. They contended that the absence of an inquiry was not sufficient by itself, and that the allegations of mala fides and counterblast raised disputed facts for trial. The order recorded that Vidya and others were facing trial on the daughter's earlier FIR; it did not adjudicate the merits of those proceedings or establish the applicants' claimed absence.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Judge cited and quoted Rishipal Singh v. State of U.P., 2014:INSC:461, (2014) 7 SCC 215, in paragraph 7. That Supreme Court decision reproduced Medchl Chemicals & Pharma (P) Ltd. v. Biological E. Ltd., 2000:INSC:103, (2000) 3 SCC 269, on the restricted and careful exercise of inherent jurisdiction at the FIR, complaint or charge-sheet stage. The passage states that initial quashing must be exceptional to avoid prematurely ending a prosecution. Intervention is warranted, however, where the complaint on its face does not constitute the alleged offence or a frustrated litigant uses legal process vindictively. The present Judge adopted both the caution and the inquiry into vindictiveness. He expressly recognised that, where a cognizable offence is disclosed, the complainant's mala fides become secondary, while the Court may still consider whether the FIR was brought by a frustrated litigant. He applied that approach to the earlier family litigation, delay and allegations he found superficial and trivial, and held that continued proceedings would be an abuse. Rishipal was not treated as authority for quashing every later cross-complaint merely because another proceeding had been filed first. Medchl appeared within the Supreme Court passage that was adopted; its qualification formed part of that quotation.

The applicants' counsel cited Achin Gupta v. State of Haryana, 2024:INSC:369; Anupriya Pal v. State of U.P., (2019) 14 SCC 643; Akanksha Katiyar (Allahabad High Court); and the Madhya Pradesh High Court decisions in Pradhumna, Chandrakant alias Rajaram Parmar, Himanshu Sharma and Saiyad Asfaq Ali. The order recorded those citations as counsel's submissions. Counsel also relied on Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P., 2013:INSC:748, (2014) 2 SCC 1, in seeking a preliminary inquiry. The Court stated its own conclusion on the need for an inquiry in these circumstances and held that omitting it did not, by itself, invalidate the FIR.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC supplied the inherent power invoked to quash the FIR and stop investigation where continued process would be an abuse. The Court treated intervention as exceptional, rather than as routine factual appellate review of an FIR. IPC Sections 323 (voluntarily causing hurt), 294 (obscene acts or words), 506 (criminal intimidation) and 34 (common intention) were the offences stated in the challenged report. The Court considered both the superficial nature of the allegations and their timing in relation to the earlier proceedings. IPC Sections 498A, 377, 406, 323, 504, 506 and 34 identified the daughter's earlier case; those charges were not tried in this quashing application. The Section 125 CrPC maintenance application, matrimonial divorce petition and complaint under Section 12 of the Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act were contextual proceedings said to precede the mother-in-law's FIR. No entitlement to maintenance, divorce or domestic-violence relief was determined. Counsel invoked Lalita Kumari, and the Judge assessed the consequence of omitting an inquiry on the facts of this case.

4. Issues : First, did the sequence of matrimonial and criminal proceedings, considered with the reporting delay and the allegations as stated, establish that Vidya's later FIR was a retaliatory abuse warranting exceptional intervention under Section 482, although a bare assertion of mala fides would not ordinarily defeat allegations of cognizable offences? The parties disputed whether the counterblast allegation was established or involved facts requiring trial. Second, did the absence of a preliminary police inquiry, despite the family relationship disclosed in the FIR, invalidate registration? The applicants relied on their asserted absence and Lalita Kumari in submitting that an inquiry was necessary. The High Court was not asked to determine the truth of the earlier complaints or guilt in the present IPC case.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court relied on Rishipal Singh and the Medchl passage reproduced in it to explain both aspects of the Section 482 threshold. Criminal process should ordinarily continue after FIR registration, and the power to quash at inception is restricted. A complaint that facially discloses an offence is not automatically defeated merely because the informant is hostile. The Court may nevertheless prevent a frustrated litigant from using investigation or prosecution vindictively. That assessment depends on the actual complaint and its context, rather than merely the accused's description of it as a ‘counterblast’. The Judge expressly stated that allegations of a cognizable offence make motive secondary, but do not preclude examination of abuse by a frustrated litigant.

Applying that approach, the Judge found that the daughter's cruelty case against Vidya and her in-laws was at trial, and that her divorce, maintenance and DV Act proceedings had all begun before the 2024 FIR. He considered Vidya's delay of approximately three weeks and her recorded explanation that her husband was away, and described the FIR allegations as superficial and trivial. Taking those circumstances together, he inferred retaliation against the proceedings brought by the daughter. The stated basis was that inference of abuse and the nature of the allegations in this setting. The Court did not determine the claimed alibi by taking evidence. Its findings of triviality and counterblast were made at the quashing stage; they did not establish a universal rule that family disputes or reporting delay make allegations false. The Court concluded that continuing the FIR and investigation would misuse investigative or judicial authority.

As to inquiry, the Court observed that Vidya's express description of Nirmal as her daughter-in-law's father called for a preliminary police inquiry into the circumstances. It nevertheless held that the absence of an inquiry did not, by itself, invalidate the FIR. Quashing therefore rested on the separate finding of abuse under Section 482, rather than merely the omitted preliminary step. The Court did not lay down a general rule that an alibi must be verified before every cognizable FIR. Counsel had relied on Lalita Kumari. The respondents' contention that the counterblast question required trial was rejected on this record through the Judge's contextual assessment, rather than through a separate trial of the earlier litigation.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application and quashed FIR Crime No. 13/2024 at Police Station University, District Gwalior, alleging offences under IPC Sections 323, 294, 506 and 34 against the applicants. The challenged FIR and its investigation were thereby terminated as directed. This was not an acquittal after trial or a decision in the daughter's earlier cases. The judgment granted no independent compensation, specified no costs and gave no direction determining the asserted alibi. Neutral citation: 2025:MPHC-GWL:7931.

Headnote :- Penal law — abetment of suicide — Section 306 read with Section 107 IPC - Section 107 recognises instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid. Suicide following a marital disagreement does not, by itself, establish any of these modes. The Court quoted Chitresh Kumar Chopra, (2009) 16 SCC 605, and Praveen Pradhan, (2012) 9 SCC 734: a deliberate course of conduct may imply instigation without express words if it reasonably incites suicide and leaves no alternative, but intention and context remain essential. Sanju, (2002) 5 SCC 371, Gangula Mohan Reddy, (2010) 1 SCC 750, M. Mohan, AIR 2011 SC 1238, and Kishori Lal, (2007) 10 SCC 797, were cited on mens rea, a positive act or intentional aid, and the statutory alternatives. Praveen Pradhan and Amit Kapur, (2012) 9 SCC 460, require only a tentative view at the charge stage, rather than a trial of the evidence. Even on that basis, none of the wife’s alleged domestic acts, taken at face value, supported intentional instigation or aid. The Section 306 charge was set aside and she was discharged.

Suicide — domestic discord — proximity and ordinary petulance - Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, and Ramesh Kumar, (2001) 9 SCC 618, caution against treating ordinary domestic differences, or a victim’s sensitive reaction to them, as sufficient to establish the accused’s abetment. Amalendu Pal, (2010) 1 SCC 707, requires scrutiny for direct or indirect incitement and proximate positive action. The Court cited Kumar @ Shiva Kumar (1 March 2024) as stating the same law. Applying these qualifications, the Court held that late meals, household chores performed by the husband, the wife’s shopping and parental visits, dancing at her brother’s wedding and insistence on returning to Pali did not amount to a deliberate act pushing her husband to suicide. The order concerned a death by hanging and competing allegations. The ruling addressed the sufficiency of the material for framing a charge; it did not lay down a categorical rule excluding sustained coercive conduct in a different case from Section 306.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nisha Saket was married to Preetam Saket, who had obtained a compassionate government appointment on 1 April 2014 after his father's death. They married on 26 April 2016. Preetam later died by hanging in his government accommodation at Pali Project, Pali. A Merg inquiry under Section 174 CrPC was registered, the body was sent for postmortem and witness statements were recorded. The police then registered an FIR against Nisha under Section 306 IPC. His mother, respondent No. 2 Radha Bai, and other witnesses alleged that Nisha behaved poorly towards the family after returning to the matrimonial home for a second time in July 2016. They alleged that she sometimes did not prepare food before Preetam left for duty, left the child with neighbours while shopping with others, and quarrelled when challenged. They also alleged that she left him to mop, clean and wash clothes, visited her parents without his permission, watched a crime television programme and objected to his monthly payment of ₹10,000 to his mother. These remained prosecution allegations; they were not findings that domestic labour or a spouse's independent movement constituted abetment of suicide.

The order described a disagreement when Nisha danced at her elder brother's marriage ceremony. It also recorded the allegation that, on 18 July 2021, she insisted that the family return from the ceremony to Pali, although Preetam wanted to stay and speak with his mother. On 19 July at about 2:51, she telephoned her brother-in-law to say that Preetam had died by suicide. Paragraph 22 also recorded an allegation that, in 2016, Nisha had left the house by crossing a boundary wall and was recovered at Budhar Square. The prosecution relied on these events to allege abetment. The Sessions Judge, Umaria, framed a charge under Section 306 on 18 July 2022 in Sessions Trial No. 42/2022. Nisha challenged that order through Criminal Revision No. 3161 of 2022 under Sections 397/401 CrPC. She argued that, even if every allegation were accepted, Section 107 abetment would not be made out. The State and complainant argued that the alleged harassment had left Preetam with no alternative. A separate challenge to the FIR under Section 482, MCRC No. 31993/2022, had been withdrawn on 15 March 2024 with liberty to pursue the revision, since the charge had already been framed. The judgment decided the challenge to the charge order without determining every factual dispute about the marriage.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Judge reviewed and applied Supreme Court principles on abetment of suicide. Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Government of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, paragraphs 16–17, explains instigation as goading, urging, provoking or encouraging. Express words directing suicide are unnecessary, but reasonable certainty of incitement must be discernible. A deliberate, continuing course of conduct may create a situation in which the deceased perceives no alternative. An angry utterance without an intention that its consequences follow is insufficient. The High Court tested the wife's alleged domestic behaviour against this requirement of a positive and intentional connection, rather than inferring abetment from suicide alone. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, paragraphs 17–18, explains that instigation depends on the abettor's intention and the circumstances, rather than a rigid verbal formula. Direct evidence may be absent, but the circumstances must support an inference that a situation compelling suicide had been created. It limits a court considering quashing or a charge to a tentative view under Section 228 CrPC, rather than a firm trial verdict. The Judge quoted this principle before testing whether the accusations, even taken at face value, met the definition of the offence. The Praveen Pradhan extract contains citations to State of Punjab v. Iqbal Singh, Surender, Kishori Lal and Sonti Rama Krishna. Sanju @ Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, was quoted on all three statutory modes under Section 107 and the mens rea inherent in instigation. Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, (2010) 1 SCC 750, was summarised on the mental process, clear intention and active or direct conduct intended to push the deceased into suicide. Its discussion of ordinary domestic discord and hypersensitivity cautions against attributing abetment where such discord would not ordinarily induce a person in comparable circumstances to commit suicide. M. Mohan v. State represented by the Deputy Superintendent of Police, AIR 2011 SC 1238, repeated the requirements of a mental process, a positive act, intention and a causal connection leaving no other option. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, paragraph 6, was reproduced on Section 107's three alternatives and the ordinary meaning of instigation. Its explanation of Section 109 concerns punishment for an abetted offence where no specific punishment is provided. Section 306 itself prescribes punishment for abetment of suicide.

State of West Bengal v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, calls for careful evaluation of whether cruelty actually induced suicide. It cautions against treating ordinary domestic discord and a victim's sensitivity to it as sufficient without assessing causation and the likely response of a person in comparable circumstances. The present Court cited this qualification and held that the described marital frictions could not establish abetment. Amalendu Pal @ Jhantu v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 1 SCC 707, paragraphs 12–16, requires close scrutiny of whether harassment left the person with no alternative. It requires proof of direct or indirect incitement, a positive act proximate to the death, and an active role through instigation or intentional facilitation. The extract discusses Section 107's intentional-aid clause and Explanation 2 in describing the requirements for conviction. The High Court used those elements to decide whether the allegations warranted prosecution; it did not conduct a trial to determine guilt. Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618, was cited directly in paragraph 20 for the qualifications concerning angry utterances and ordinary domestic discord.

Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, paragraph 35, was quoted on the procedural limit: at the charge stage, courts form a tentative view from the record and documents, without fully evaluating or marshalling the evidence. The extract also repeats Chitresh Kumar Chopra and a nested passage from Ramesh Kumar explaining that instigation may arise from a continuing course of conduct that leaves no option. The High Court discharged Nisha because no legally relevant allegation emerged even at that tentative threshold, rather than after a full assessment of witness credibility. Finally, Kumar @ Shiva Kumar v. State of Karnataka, Criminal Appeal No. 1427/2011, decided on 1 March 2024, was cited in paragraph 21 as laying down the same law. All these authorities form part of the Court's legal discussion in paragraphs 11–21. The quotations address intention, positive action, proximity, domestic discord and the standard applicable at the charge stage.

3. Statutes considered : Section 306 IPC punishes a person who abets another's commission of suicide with imprisonment that may extend to ten years and a fine. Death by suicide alone does not prove another person's abetment. Section 107 IPC defines abetment through three alternatives: instigation; conspiracy accompanied by an act or illegal omission in pursuance of the conspiracy and in order to do the thing; or intentional aid by an act or illegal omission. Explanation 1 treats a person as instigating an act if, by wilful misrepresentation or wilful concealment of a material fact that the person is bound to disclose, the person voluntarily causes or procures, or attempts to cause or procure, the act. Explanation 2 treats a person as aiding an act if, before or at the time of its commission, the person does anything in order to facilitate its commission and thereby facilitates it. The Judge reproduced Section 107 twice and examined whether there was a legally relevant intentional connection between the wife's alleged acts and the suicide. None of the alleged domestic incidents was treated as an actual conspiracy, wilful misrepresentation or facilitation; the prosecution broadly relied on harassment amounting to instigation. Section 174 CrPC governed the death inquiry, rather than the test for abetment. Sections 397/401 CrPC provided revisional control over the Sessions Judge's charge order. Section 228 CrPC appeared in the Praveen Pradhan quotation to identify a tentative presumption at the charge stage, rather than final proof. The High Court was deciding whether the material supported the charge, rather than conducting a trial under Section 306. Section 482 concerned the withdrawn parallel FIR challenge. Section 109 IPC appeared only in Kishori Lal's reproduced explanation of general abetment; it was not an independently charged offence.

4. Issues : Did the witness statements and prosecution allegations, assumed to be true at the charge stage, disclose a mode of intentional abetment under Section 107 sufficient to support a charge under Section 306 against Nisha? Or did they describe ordinary marital disagreements followed by her husband's suicide, without incitement, intentional aid or causal proximity? The Court considered the alleged conduct against the quoted principles governing inferential instigation and ordinary domestic discord. How was the tentative standard at the charge stage to be applied without prematurely conducting a full trial? The Court did not determine whether the witness accounts were true, diagnose the deceased as hypersensitive or assign legal fault for domestic arrangements unrelated to abetment.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Judge first set out Sections 306 and 107, then quoted and discussed the Supreme Court decisions requiring intention and a positive contribution to suicide. Instigation may be inferred from conduct over time; direct words are unnecessary if the conduct reasonably and deliberately creates an intolerable situation with a causal connection to suicide. These principles carry important qualifications. An angry quarrel or ordinary discord, without an intention that suicide follow, is insufficient. Harassment alone does not establish the proximate incitement described in Amalendu Pal. A person's decision to die does not prove that the spouse instigated, conspired in or intentionally aided the suicide. Orilal Jaiswal and the related passages caution against treating a reaction to ordinary domestic differences as sufficient without considering whether comparable conduct would induce a person in similar circumstances to commit suicide and whether the accused's conduct played the legally required part. The High Court applied these principles to assess the allegations at the charge stage. It neither conferred categorical immunity on spouses nor required an express verbal invitation to suicide in every case.

The Court grouped the allegations into eight categories in paragraph 22. Nisha was alleged to have left the house once in 2016, behaved badly towards her in-laws, sometimes failed to prepare food before her husband left for work, shopped while a neighbour watched the child, and left him to mop and wash clothes. She was also alleged to have visited her parents without permission, danced at her brother's wedding and quarrelled when he objected, and insisted that they return together to Pali on 18 July 2021. The Court did not treat her dancing, movement, parental visits or the allocation of household work as acts establishing abetment of suicide. Even accepting the prosecution's account and its sequence of events, none disclosed deliberate conduct intended to push Preetam towards suicide, direct or indirect incitement with the necessary connection, or intentional facilitation of death. The Court described the allegations as trivial domestic events of a kind generally occurring in households. It observed that even counsel for the State and complainant could not identify which alleged facts constituted statutory abetment. The order's factual summary also mentions the wife's objection to her husband's monthly payment to his mother and her watching a crime television programme.

Praveen Pradhan and Amit Kapur precluded a final evaluation or marshalling of the entire record as though after trial. The High Court could nevertheless conclude that the prosecution's own version did not support an inference of the ingredients of the offence. It expressly reasoned that, even if all the allegations were accepted, there was no basis to presume instigation. Cogent and convincing material showing acts of incitement was required, rather than a bare temporal connection with the death. The order set aside the charge for want of a prima facie case of abetment. It did not declare that suicide had never followed the dispute, acquit Nisha after evidence or vindicate her factually in respect of every alleged act. The separate FIR challenge had been withdrawn; it did not result in a distinct ruling quashing the FIR.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal revision, set aside the order dated 18 July 2022 of the Sessions Judge, Umaria, in Sessions Trial No. 42/2022 framing a charge under Section 306 IPC, and discharged Nisha. It ordered no remand, further condition, costs or determination of the separate withdrawn MCRC. Reported citation: ILR [2024] MP 2376; neutral citation: 2024:MPHC-JBP:15335.

Headnote :- Territorial jurisdiction — Sections 177–178 CrPC — connected acts in more than one local area - The accused sought a zero FIR and transfer on the ground that the alleged sexual touching and threat had occurred in Delhi. The complainant's FIR also alleged that he had telephoned her in Morena with a job offer that induced her to travel to Delhi. On that alleged sequence, the Court treated the Morena call as part of the transaction and held that Morena police could register the FIR. It therefore rejected the territorial objection. This assessment accepted the allegations for the purposes of the writ; it neither proved the call or offence nor made unrelated contact sufficient to establish venue.

Criminal-side writ — monitoring versus supervision of investigation - Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, distinguished exceptional judicial monitoring of free, fair and timely investigative progress from supervision of investigative methods. Such supervision risks influencing the report under Section 173(2) and the trial. Applying that distinction, the Court refused the accused's request under Article 226 for directions to obtain particular call records, bank CCTV footage and WhatsApp chats. The police remained free to investigate relevant material independently; the writ court did not select evidence or dictate the methods of investigation.

Sexual-harassment complainant — sensitive and stereotype-free process - The Court invoked XYZ v. State of Madhya Pradesh, order dated 5 August 2022, SLP (Cri.) No. 1674/2022, which reiterated the need for sensitivity in registration and adjudication. Through quotations from Virender and Aparna Bhat, XYZ cautioned against stigmatising assumptions and described trial safeguards for vulnerable witnesses. The accused's writ described the complainant as a woman of 'easy virtue' and relied on chats to challenge her claimed illiteracy. The Court did not accept those labels as findings and noted that the chats filed by the accused himself included her allegations. It ordered no trial accommodation and made no finding of guilt. The unpleaded request for notice under Section 41A, raised by reference to Arnesh Kumar, was not granted; anticipatory bail under Section 438 remained available. The writ was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Respondent No. 4 lodged the report on which Crime No. 736/2022 was registered at Police Station Kotwali, Morena, alleging offences under Sections 354 and 506 IPC. According to the FIR as recounted by the Judge, she had lost her husband in 2013, lived with her children in rented premises and was looking for work. About eight days before the report, she allegedly received calls in Morena from a person identifying himself as Nishant Mishra. He represented that he worked at Mahindra Kotak Bank in Noida and could help destitute women obtain employment. She travelled to Delhi on 20 July 2022 and met him near the bank at about 6 p.m. After tea, she allegedly followed him to an empty plot on the promise of discussing a job. She alleged that he held her hand, began putting his hand inside her clothing to touch her breast, and threatened to kill her if she did not satisfy him in exchange for employment. She said that she escaped, returned to Morena, told her brother and lodged the FIR on 24 July. These particulars remained allegations, rather than final findings of assault or intimidation.

Nishant filed Writ Petition No. 17991 of 2022 under Article 226, principally seeking a direction requiring the investigating officer to obtain the complainant's call detail records, bank CCTV footage and WhatsApp chats. In argument, he submitted that the entire physical incident had occurred in Delhi, so Morena police lacked territorial jurisdiction and should have registered a zero FIR for transfer. His representation to the police asserted that the complainant's mobile location would show that she had never come to Delhi. It used the disparaging description 'easy virtue' and alleged false implication through a honey trap. His counsel also suggested that WhatsApp messages contradicted her claim to be illiterate. These assertions were not adjudicated as proved. After argument, he relied on Arnesh Kumar to seek a notice under Section 41A, although the request was neither pleaded nor specifically made in the writ prayers. The State appeared. The order recorded no trial or complete body of investigation evidence. The Judge considered the FIR's sequence of events, the requested control over investigation, the precedent requiring sensitivity towards complainants and the unpleaded concern about arrest, then dismissed the writ.

2. Precedents — Considered : Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary and others, (2014) 2 SCC 532, paragraphs 38–39, was quoted and followed on the distinction between monitoring and supervising an investigation. In rare and compelling circumstances, monitoring keeps watch over proper, impartial and timely progress without external interference. Supervision directs the execution or manner of the inquiry. The Supreme Court warned that a superior court's direction of investigative conclusions could effectively shape the report under Section 173(2) and impermissibly influence the later trial. The High Court applied that principle directly: directing the collection of particular records, video footage and messages at the accused's request would dictate investigative methods, rather than monitor the investigation's integrity. It neither found general police misconduct nor ordered a monitoring regime. The Judge next quoted XYZ v. State of Madhya Pradesh, SLP (Cri.) No. 1674/2022, order dated 5 August 2022, paragraphs 30–35, at length. XYZ stressed that courts must treat complainants of sexual harassment and assault sensitively, recognising trauma, stigma and barriers to complaint registration, while ascertaining the complete truth and the accused's actual complicity. It reproduced a passage from the Delhi High Court's decision in Virender v. State of NCT of Delhi on the trial judge's responsibility to prevent embarrassment from concealing material evidence. XYZ also quoted Aparna Bhat v. State of Madhya Pradesh against paternalistic or misogynistic courtroom stereotypes and extraneous reasoning that undermines a survivor's confidence in neutral justice. The nested references to State of Maharashtra v. Bandu @ Daulat and Smruti Tukaram Badade concerned vulnerable-witness deposition centres. This High Court issued no such directions. XYZ described trial courts' duties, subject to the stated qualifications, including appropriate in-camera proceedings, a screen or the accused's departure during testimony, respectful questions, and completion of cross-examination in one sitting where possible. The present Court invoked these principles in a writ containing disparaging allegations against the complainant. It did not order those accommodations or determine the truth of the underlying charge.

Arnesh Kumar v. State of Bihar, (2014) 8 SCC 273, was invoked only by counsel in paragraph 11 to seek a notice under Section 41A. The Judge noted that the petition pleaded no basis for fearing unlawful police action and sought no such relief, and that the accused could apply for anticipatory bail under Section 438. The present order made no independent ruling on the detailed arrest and notice standards in Arnesh Kumar.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 177 and 178 CrPC were reproduced. Section 177 states the ordinary rule that inquiry and trial take place where the offence was committed. Section 178 permits inquiry or trial in any of several local areas where the place of commission is uncertain, the offence is committed partly in different areas, a continuing offence extends across areas, or the offence consists of several acts in different local areas. The Judge applied this venue framework to FIR registration because, on the FIR's account, the inducement call reached the complainant in Morena before the alleged contact in Delhi. He neither determined final trial venue on proved evidence nor addressed a later jurisdictional challenge after investigation. Sections 354 and 506 IPC were the registered allegations of sexual assault or criminal force and intimidation; their ultimate elements and guilt were not tried. Article 226 supplied the writ power invoked for investigative directions, rather than an entitlement to direct every evidentiary step taken by the police. Section 173(2) CrPC appeared in Manohar Lal Sharma's warning against pre-empting the investigator's report and the trial court's decision. Sections 41A and 438 CrPC arose only in connection with the accused's late request for notice and the available anticipatory-bail remedy. Section 327 CrPC and Sections 376, 376A–D IPC appeared in the XYZ quotation as examples of trial protection for more serious sexual offences. They were neither charges in this FIR nor the basis of accommodations actually ordered.

4. Issues : Did the alleged job-inducement calls received by the complainant in Morena form a sufficient part of the reported transaction there under Sections 177–178, despite the physical touching and threat alleged in Delhi? If so, was registration by Morena police free from the asserted jurisdictional error? Could the accused invoke Article 226 to compel collection of specific electronic and CCTV evidence for his proposed defence, or would that amount to prohibited supervision rather than permissible monitoring? How should the Supreme Court's guidance on sensitivity towards sexual-harassment complainants inform the treatment of a writ containing demeaning descriptions, while preserving fair investigation and proof? Finally, should the Court entertain an unpleaded request for notice under Section 41A based only on counsel's oral reliance on Arnesh Kumar? The Court did not decide the truth of the FIR, the preservation or admissibility of any digital item, the accused's risk of arrest or the merits of the sexual-offence allegation.

5. Ratio / Findings : On jurisdiction, the Judge read the FIR as describing connected acts. The accused allegedly called the complainant in Morena, where she lived, promised her work, persuaded her to travel to Delhi and then committed the charged conduct there. The calls were therefore treated as part of the alleged acts giving rise to the case in Morena. Section 178 expressly permits jurisdiction in more than one local area where an offence is partly committed, or consists of acts, in different areas. On that basis, the Court found no error in the registration of the FIR by Kotwali police, Morena. The allegation that physical touching occurred in Delhi did not, by itself, require the proposed zero FIR and transfer to Delhi. This was an assessment of jurisdiction on the face of the FIR. It neither established that the calls had occurred nor treated an unrelated preliminary conversation as independently proving an offence.

The Court left the assessment and collection of the requested material to the investigator in accordance with law. Manohar Lal Sharma did not authorise the writ court to select the precise investigative leads favoured by a suspect. Monitoring concerns whether an investigation proceeds fairly and without interference. Supervision directs how the investigation is conducted and may impair the trial court's independent decision. The writ prayers specified the evidence that police should obtain; granting them would therefore amount to supervision. The Court refused those particular directions and left ordinary investigation to proceed. It neither declared digital evidence inadmissible nor decided whether the complainant had travelled to Delhi. Nor did it hold that Article 226 provides no remedy of any kind to secure a fair investigation.

The XYZ passage provided the context for treating the complainant sensitively. The Court reproduced the Supreme Court's concerns about stigma, stereotyping, access to FIR registration and care for trial witnesses. The accused's police representation used the 'easy virtue' label and alleged a honey trap, while counsel relied on chats to challenge the claim of illiteracy. The Court did not adopt either characterisation. Instead, it observed that the petitioner himself had filed WhatsApp chats containing specific allegations by the complainant against him. Considering the record as a whole, it found no reason to entertain the writ. That observation neither authenticated the chats nor adjudicated them as trial evidence. The Judge also did not order the witness measures listed in XYZ in this case.

On Section 41A, the Judge considered counsel's late reliance on Arnesh Kumar. He noted that the petition pleaded no apprehension that the police would act unlawfully and contained no prayer for such notice. He also noted the available remedy of an application for anticipatory bail under Section 438. He issued no advance direction concerning arrest. The dismissal rested on rejection of the territorial and investigative-control objections, the lack of a basis for the new notice request and the limited record. It neither convicted nor exonerated either party.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. Registration of Crime No. 736/2022 at Morena under Sections 354 and 506 IPC remained undisturbed. No order required collection of call data, bank CCTV footage or WhatsApp material. The Court ordered no FIR transfer, Section 41A notice, special witness accommodation or costs. The accused remained free to seek anticipatory bail under Section 438 through the ordinary remedy, if appropriate.

Headnote :- Inherent powers — serious sexual offences — marriage or compromise after FIR - In a petition under Section 482 to quash allegations of repeated rape under Section 376(2)(n) IPC and aggravated penetrative sexual assault under POCSO Sections 5(l)/6, the accused relied on an Arya Samaj marriage certificate dated 18 March 2019 and asserted that conviction was impossible. The Court applied State of M.P. v. Madanlal, (2015) 7 SCC 681, which rejects compromise through a later marriage or a lenient approach in rape cases. Shimbhu v. State of Haryana, (2014) 13 SCC 318, cautions against pressure on a complainant and reliance on settlement to mitigate rape. State of M.P. v. Laxmi Narayan, (2019) 5 SCC 688, and Parbatbhai Aahir v. State of Gujarat, (2017) 9 SCC 641, distinguish statutory compounding under Section 320 from discretionary inherent quashing and require consideration of seriousness, public interest and social impact. Applying those limits to the minor's allegations of repeated sexual relations, pregnancy and a subsequent marriage, the Court refused to treat the wedding as a ground for ending the prosecution. The cited coordinate decision in Arif Khan had treated Pankaj Parmar as per incuriam for overlooking higher authority and POCSO's special-statute context. The present decision reproduced and followed that reasoning.

Sexual offences — minor's consent — later marriage - The school marksheet recorded the complainant's date of birth as 1 February 2001. The alleged final act occurred on 27 June 2018, before she turned eighteen. The Court held that her consent was immaterial to the alleged intercourse while she was a minor, and that a later marriage could not make it a ground for compromise. It quoted Satish Kumar Jayanti Lal Dabgar, (2015) 7 SCC 359, on why a minor's purported sexual consent has no legal effect. That judgment concerned a statutory provision applicable to girls under sixteen; the present Court referred to Section 375 Sixthly and POCSO's protection of children under eighteen. This was a refusal to quash on the face of the allegations, not a finding that the acts or the validity of the marriage had been proved.

Evidence — possible hostility of prosecutrix — independent proof - Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, Criminal Appeal No. 913/2016, order dated 28 September 2018, held on its own record that a hostile complainant did not require acquittal where medical, serological and circumstantial material remained. The High Court applied the narrower principle that marriage and a possible change of testimony could not guarantee acquittal here. The complainant's blood and the newborn's remains had been sent for DNA testing; the order recorded no result. The Court presumed neither a positive DNA result nor conviction. The accused's absconding and the charge sheet filed under Section 299 CrPC were additional circumstances. The petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nitesh Raghuvanshi sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 377/2018, registered at Police Station Basoda City, Vidisha, under Section 376(2)(n) IPC and Sections 5(l)/6 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012. In her FIR dated 24 July 2018, the complainant described herself as a Class IX pupil in 2017 who walked to school. Nitesh, an ICICI Bank employee, used to visit a relative in her village. She alleged that a relationship developed and that he repeatedly had sexual intercourse with her on a promise of marriage. The order recounted an earlier rape case and recorded his arrest as 24 March 2017. It described a renewed assurance of marriage that led her to change her statement, his release on bail and further intercourse. She alleged a final act on 27 June 2018 while attending a marriage at Basoda, followed by pregnancy and his refusal to marry. These were allegations and procedural history, rather than findings of guilt in this proceeding. The judgment recorded the first arrest and the later 2018 FIR in that sequence, without supplying further details of the earlier case.

The prosecution relied on the complainant's Class IX marksheet, which recorded her date of birth as 1 February 2001. On that basis, she was under eighteen at the alleged act in June 2018 and when the FIR was lodged in July. The order recorded that she delivered a child on 19 December 2018 and that the child died during treatment. It reported asphyxia associated with premature lungs and stated that her blood and the child's body parts had been sent for DNA testing. It recorded no returned test result. Nitesh produced a marriage certificate dated 18 March 2019 from Arya Samaj Mandir, Indore. He submitted that they were living peacefully and that she was pregnant again. He contended that the allegations were false, continued prosecution would ruin both their lives, and conviction was impossible after marriage. The State opposed quashing, relying on the complainant's minority and the serious allegations. It also stated that a charge sheet had been filed under Section 299 CrPC while Nitesh was absconding. The Court considered whether the later marriage and an anticipated change of testimony justified quashing. It did not conduct a trial on the age document's authenticity, scientific proof, marriage validity or the rape allegations.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of M.P. v. Madanlal, (2015) 7 SCC 681, paragraphs 18–22, was quoted and formed a central basis of the decision. The Supreme Court rejected compromise in cases of rape or attempted rape and warned that an offender's offer of marriage could pressure a complainant rather than justify a lenient approach. It discussed dignity and the public interest extending beyond private reconciliation. Madanlal quoted Shyam Narain v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 7 SCC 77, on dignity. It also explained Shimbhu v. State of Haryana, (2014) 13 SCC 318, and the confined facts of Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2011) 13 SCC 705, and Ravindra v. State of M.P., (2015) 4 SCC 491. Those earlier sentence reductions, in which compromise was among the circumstances, were not binding precedents for general leniency. The present Judge applied Madanlal's rejection of a subsequent marriage as a ground for Section 482 quashing; he did not impose a sentence. Shimbhu was also quoted directly later. It states that rape is noncompoundable and that compromise may result from pressure rather than free consent. It also discusses the old Section 376(2) sentencing proviso and its deletion by the 2013 amendment. That sentencing context differs from the present FIR, but the caution about settlement supported refusal to quash.

State of M.P. v. Laxmi Narayan, (2019) 5 SCC 688, was quoted on the error of mechanically quashing a serious FIR under Section 307/34 on compromise without considering noncompoundability, social impact and the character of the offence as a public wrong. That case concerned attempted murder, rather than the rape and POCSO allegations here. Its general caution against relying on private settlement and a predicted acquittal was applied by analogy. Shiji and Vikram Anantrai Doshi appeared within the reproduced reasoning. Parbatbhai Aahir v. State of Gujarat, (2017) 9 SCC 641, paragraph 16, was also quoted extensively. It distinguishes statutory compounding under Section 320 from the inherent power preserved by Section 482. That power serves the ends of justice or prevents abuse of process, and its exercise requires attention to the circumstances and gravity of the case. Appropriate private commercial disputes may be quashed after settlement where conviction is remote and continued proceedings would cause oppression and prejudice. The framework excludes heinous public offences such as rape and recognises the public interests involved in economic offences. The High Court applied the part of that framework concerning serious offences. The civil, commercial and economic examples describe its boundaries; they are not facts of this sexual-offence case.

The Court reproduced the Delhi High Court's decision in Vikash Kumar @ Sonu v. State, Crl.M.C. No. 2763/2017, 1 August 2017. It declined to treat marriage as a basis for quashing a rape FIR and described another similar Delhi order whose special-leave challenge had been dismissed. Gian Singh, Deepak Gulati and the other nested references formed part of that context. The Judge also quoted the coordinate decision in Arif Khan v. State of M.P., MCRC No. 39588/2019, 20 September 2019. Arif Khan had treated Pankaj Parmar as per incuriam because it had not considered Madanlal, Laxmi Narayan, Shimbhu, the Vikash Kumar material, POCSO's special-statute character or Section 375 Sixthly. The present Judge used that discussion as reinforcement; his independent refusal rested principally on the quoted Supreme Court limits and the minor's allegations. Gian Singh and Narinder Singh also appear in the quoted Arif Khan reasoning. Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, Criminal Appeal No. 913 of 2016, order dated 28 September 2018, was quoted in rejecting the submission that a complainant's future hostility necessarily eliminates the prospect of conviction. The conviction in that case was sustained on the combined identification, medical and serological evidence, although the complainant did not identify the accused in court. The nested extract from Iqbal v. State of U.P. explains that a test identification parade is not substantive evidence without an incriminating connection. The nested extract from Nar Singh v. State of Haryana concerns a fact-sensitive assessment of an omission under Section 313 CrPC and the balance of prejudice. The High Court relied on Hemudan's general point about independent evidence. It did not apply that case's particular serology or Section 313 outcome as findings against Nitesh. Samples in his case had been sent for DNA testing; no positive result was reported.

Satish Kumar Jayanti Lal Dabgar v. State of Gujarat, (2015) 7 SCC 359, was quoted on a prosecutrix's age and the absence of legal effect in a minor girl's purported sexual consent, even after marriage. The extract expressly concerned a girl below sixteen in its own statutory context. The present case involved a girl under eighteen and POCSO. Through the Arif Khan passage, the Court referred to Section 375 Sixthly and applied the cited under-eighteen rule to the present IPC and POCSO allegations. None of the quoted Supreme Court authorities was used to decide an actual DNA result, the marriage's legal status or guilt after trial.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC preserved the High Court's inherent power invoked to quash the FIR. That power is distinct from compounding under Section 320 CrPC. Noncompoundability alone does not end the inherent-powers inquiry in every case. Here, however, seriousness and public impact made settlement-based termination inappropriate for the alleged rape and POCSO offence. Section 376(2)(n) IPC was the repeated-rape charge. Section 375 Sixthly was invoked concerning intercourse with a girl below eighteen, irrespective of purported consent. POCSO Sections 5(l)/6 were the recorded aggravated penetrative sexual assault allegation and punishment provision. The cited coordinate decision treated them as part of a special child-protection regime. Section 299 CrPC was the basis on which the State reported a charge sheet in the accused's absence. The Court recorded his absconding without examining the legality of that course. Section 45 Evidence Act and Section 313 CrPC appeared in the quoted Hemudan conviction reasoning concerning expert serology and an omitted question in the accused's examination. Neither was applied to a completed trial of the present applicant. Shimbhu's discussion of the old Section 376(2) sentencing proviso and its deletion by the 2013 amendment concerned sentence reduction in other cases, rather than an operative sentencing issue here.

4. Issues : Could a marriage certificate obtained after an alleged series of sexual acts against a minor, together with a claim of peaceful married life, justify quashing this grave noncompoundable FIR under Section 482 on the basis of private settlement? Could the complainant's apparent earlier change of version, possible future hostility or the accused's predicted acquittal justify bypassing trial if other scientific or circumstantial proof might remain? Did her school-record age and the statutory treatment of a minor's consent prevent purported agreement or later marriage from negating the sexual-offence allegations on the face of the record? The Court did not resolve disputed paternity, DNA evidence, trial proof of the age document, the outcome of the alleged earlier prosecution or the validity of the 2019 ceremony.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered the FIR and case diary at the limited stage of a quashing petition. The marksheet's recorded birth date placed the complainant below eighteen even when the FIR was lodged. She alleged repeated intercourse on promises of marriage and a final act in June 2018 while underage, followed by pregnancy and childbirth. The Court did not conclusively determine the truth of those allegations. It found a serious prima facie prosecution that could not be ended on the accused's claim of a later wedding. Madanlal and Shimbhu address the risk of using a proposal or act of marriage to pressure a complainant into compromising rape. Laxmi Narayan and Parbatbhai require attention to gravity and the social dimension, rather than mechanically equating settlement with a remote prospect of conviction. On that combined basis, the Judge held that marriage was not a good ground for quashing. In the context of the prior changed statement and renewed alleged exploitation, he described the marriage as apparently an 'eyewash' capable of pressuring the complainant again. That was his assessment of the quashing request, rather than a separate decision invalidating the ceremony or convicting Nitesh.

The complainant's minority separately answered any contention that she had agreed to the alleged acts. Satish Kumar explained why a child's apparent agreement is not informed legal consent in the statutory context of a girl under sixteen. The present Court applied the under-eighteen rule cited for its own IPC and POCSO allegations. It reasoned that her later willingness to marry could neither retrospectively validate the earlier sexual acts nor permit a compromise of serious offences. The earlier change of version after an alleged promise was not treated as proof that the later allegation was true or false; it remained part of the alleged sequence.

The accused's prediction that marriage meant acquittal was separately rejected. Hemudan shows that a complainant's hostility or failure to identify the accused need not prevent conviction where reliable independent evidence remains. In this case, samples had been sent for DNA analysis. The Court neither claimed a positive test nor determined paternity or guaranteed conviction. The State also reported a charge sheet under Section 299 and the accused's continued absconding. These were additional circumstances noted in the final refusal. Credibility, expert results, the applicable ingredients and the defence remained matters for the criminal proceeding, rather than compromise-based quashing under Section 482.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The FIR in Crime No. 377/2018 at Basoda City under Section 376(2)(n) IPC and POCSO Sections 5(l)/6 remained in force, and the filed charge sheet was not quashed. The Court made no finding of guilt, DNA parentage or marriage validity, and granted no sentencing relief.

Nitesh Raghuvanshi v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 34068/2019, 28/11/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cruelty — dowry-linked deprivation — specific allegations against relatives - A wife's FIR under Section 498A IPC and the Dowry Prohibition Act alleged a demand for an air-conditioned car, concealment of food, withholding of meals and water, and her continued exclusion from the matrimonial home. The Court held that dowry-related deprivation of food would amount to physical and mental harassment and that exclusion from the matrimonial home for an unmet dowry demand would amount to mental harassment. It found sufficiently particular allegations against the brother-in-law and his wife and rejected the contention that the FIR against the five applicants was merely omnibus. The Court applied Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, which permits a triable cruelty complaint to proceed. Its nested references to Kailash Chandra Agrawal and Kans Raj caution against implicating distant relatives without tangible roles. This was a face-value assessment under Section 482, rather than a finding that every individual demand or act had been proved.

Inherent powers — divorce petition and later FIR — counterblast inference - The wife reported alleged cruelty the day after conciliation in her husband's divorce proceeding. The husband relied on that sequence, the separation and an earlier complaint about his access to her phone and online accounts to allege fabrication. Applying Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, the Court held that divorce litigation and delay in reporting do not automatically make a cognizable cruelty FIR retaliatory. Efforts at reconciliation may explain delay. Civil and criminal proceedings are independent and involve different standards of proof; when deciding whether a prima facie offence appears under Section 482, the Court should not substitute extraneous civil or investigative findings for the FIR's allegations. The earlier complaint and accusations of adultery showed strained relations, rather than establishing the later FIR's falsity. The Court's observation was conditional: an accusation of adultery, if found false, would itself amount to cruelty. The quashing application was dismissed; the charges and guilt remained matters for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nitish Umariya, his elder brother Ashwini, Ashwini's wife Vaishali, Nitish's mother Sunita and his father Deen Dayal applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 396/2019, registered at Police Station Harda under Sections 498A, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. According to the impugned FIR, respondent No. 2 married Nitish on 27 April 2018 at Itarsi. She alleged that her father had provided dowry and deposited ₹1,80,000 in Deen Dayal's account. Despite this, the applicants demanded an air-conditioned car, hid food and deprived her of meals and water, causing physical and mental harassment. She stated that she had remained at her parental home for about a year and had not been taken back because the demand remained unmet. Those assertions had been investigated and a charge sheet filed; they were not facts proved by the quashing order.

The applicants relied on other litigation and competing allegations. The wife had earlier reported Nitish under Section 354D IPC and Section 66C of the Information Technology Act. She alleged that he had accessed her Facebook and email accounts, retained her Oppo A57 phone, changed account and recovery details, and accused her of a relationship with Sarvesh Gupta. Her earlier report also stated that Ashwini had supported retaining the phone for possible use in court. The husband had filed a restitution petition under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act and later withdrawn it. He had also complained to the police that she was having an affair and had threatened false cases, and had filed a divorce suit alleging cruelty and an extramarital relationship. The parties attended Family Court conciliation on 20 August 2019. She lodged the impugned cruelty and dowry FIR the following day, 21 August. Counsel contended that this timing made it a counterblast and that the earlier cyber and stalking FIR contained no dowry allegation. Counsel also submitted that the relatives lived separately and faced only general allegations, while the wife herself was living away. These remained defence contentions. The Court decided whether the FIR warranted quashing on its face, without determining which disputed account was true.

2. Precedents — Considered : Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, 2015:INSC:221, (2015) 11 SCC 260, paragraphs 12 –14, was quoted and applied to the sufficiency of the family cruelty complaint on its face. Its embedded quotation from Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, warns against summoning distant relatives who were not named in the FIR or were later named without a particular role, unless tangible material supports their involvement. Kailash, in turn, quoted Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, on the danger of routinely implicating all in-laws in dowry cases. The same passage states that a quashing court does not determine the truth of competing versions where the complaint raises triable issues, although it may intervene against abuse apparent on the face of the proceedings. It refers to K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa as quashing parameters. Taramani's own complaint specified harassment and forced separation; the Supreme Court held that truth was for trial and quashing at that stage was impermissible. The present Judge considered the caution about unspecified roles alongside allegations that Ashwini and Vaishali withheld food and that the other applicants were named in the demand and exclusion narrative. He held that the FIR was not merely omnibus, leaving the truth of the allegations and each person's participation for trial.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, 2007:INSC:929, (2007) 12 SCC 369, paragraphs 14–16 and 22, was quoted on the separate counterblast question. The Supreme Court disapproved quashing a wife's FIR on extraneous material or drawing an adverse inference from delay while the family had been attempting reconciliation. It also explained that a husband's divorce case does not automatically end independent criminal allegations arising from the same relationship. At the FIR stage, the question is whether the allegations disclose a prima facie cognizable offence. An investigation report or civil findings should not be used to determine contested truth as though at trial. The present Court applied that principle in rejecting an inevitable inference of retaliation from the wife's filing immediately after divorce conciliation. It suggested that she might have remained quiet in the hope of saving the marriage; it did not conclusively establish that motivation. Pratibha's quoted test also refers to the Bhajan Lal categories.

3. Statutes considered : Section 498A IPC was the principal cruelty charge. Addressing the alleged withholding of food and water, the Court held that depriving a married woman of food because a dowry demand was unmet would amount to physical and mental harassment. Compelling her to remain at her parents' home on that basis would amount to mental harassment. Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act concerned the alleged demand and earlier payment. Sections 506 and 34 IPC were included in the FIR's offence list. Section 482 CrPC governed the limited inherent review of the FIR and filed charge sheet, without determination of contested evidence. Section 354D IPC and Section 66C of the IT Act concerned the earlier separate report about alleged phone and account access. They provided context for marital strain and were not the subject of this quashing application. The restitution proceeding under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act and the husband's divorce claim were civil and matrimonial proceedings relied on in the counterblast argument. The Court stated that civil findings do not bind the criminal court and that the standards of proof differ. It made no operative order in the Family Court case.

4. Issues : Did the FIR, treated as allegations rather than findings, specify dowry-related deprivation and exclusion sufficient to sustain prosecution under Section 498A against the husband and named in-laws, particularly Ashwini and Vaishali? Or was it merely a vague, omnibus account warranting quashing? Did the timing immediately after divorce conciliation, the earlier complaint's lack of dowry detail and the husband's earlier police and civil proceedings necessarily establish a retaliatory counterblast? Could the Court rely on asserted civil facts or decide whose account was true at the Section 482 stage? The decision did not require proof of a threat under Section 506, verification of the alleged bank transfer or online-account access, or a determination that the adultery accusation was false.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Judge first examined the FIR, rather than treating family status alone as sufficient either to prosecute or to exonerate. It specified a car demand and alleged that essentials, including food and water, were withheld to exert dowry pressure. Deliberate deprivation of food on that basis would itself amount to physical and mental harassment. Requiring the wife to remain at her parents' home because the demand was unmet would amount to mental harassment under Section 498A. The Court identified alleged roles for Ashwini and Vaishali in withholding food and hiding eatables, and described the allegations against each applicant as sufficiently specific. Taramani Parakh supported allowing the triable cruelty case to proceed. The nested passages from Kailash and Kans Raj cautioned against implicating distant relatives merely by relationship, without particular roles. The judgment's collective formulation did not prove which applicant actually demanded the car, hid food or excluded the complainant; those matters remained for trial.

On the counterblast argument, the Judge did not treat filing the day after conciliation as establishing malice. Pratibha explains why a spouse may delay a complaint while seeking reconciliation and why civil litigation does not displace criminal process. Here, the earlier phone and account complaint and the husband's accusations of an affair demonstrated longstanding discord, which could coexist with a later cruelty claim. The Court offered a possible explanation: she may have hoped to preserve the marriage until the divorce step made reconciliation unlikely. This was an inference against automatic quashing, rather than an established account of her private motivation. The criminal FIR's allegations supplied the threshold material. Civil allegations and findings would not bind the criminal court, which applies a different standard of proof. The Court stated that an accusation of adultery, if found false, would itself amount to cruelty. Since falsity was not decided, that statement did not establish cruelty by Nitish on this record.

The Judge found specific allegations of dowry-related deprivation on the face of the FIR and, applying Pratibha, rejected timing alone as proof of abuse. The decision was made at the Section 482 threshold after a charge sheet had been filed. It neither established every allegation as proved nor barred the defence at trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The FIR and filed charge sheet in Crime No. 396/2019 remained in force against all five applicants under the listed IPC and Dowry Prohibition Act provisions, subject to the ordinary trial process and defences. The Court made no finding of guilt, separate order in the matrimonial proceedings, costs order or grant of relief concerning the earlier cyber and stalking report.

Nitish Umariya and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 46355/2019, 04/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (356) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers / matrimonial cruelty — relatives' specific role - In Nitin Ahire v. State of Madhya Pradesh, the Court considered Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, which cautions against drawing all in-laws into a dowry prosecution merely through relationship or conjecture. Overt acts attributed to relatives require proof beyond reasonable doubt at trial. The Court also considered Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, which requires a specific role and tangible material before distant relatives are summoned. Its qualifications caution against weighing unnatural death and dowry harassment in golden scales and recognise that a husband and his parents may stand on a different footing. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan was applied in the Section 482 context: extremely general accusations against relatives, considered with the attendant circumstances, may make continued proceedings an abuse of process. These authorities were used to assess the allegations against the unmarried sister-in-law individually, rather than to absolve the husband or mother-in-law.

Partial quashing — collective allegation and procedural stage - The complaint attributed the telephone demand for ₹15 lakh to the mother-in-law. It then alleged collectively that Nitin and Nutan abused and beat the complainant when the demand remained unmet. The Court found no specific date or clear allegation of beating by Nutan and quashed Crime No. 115/2020 and R.C.T. No. 10440/2020 against her under Section 482 CrPC. Although charges had been framed and evidence was being recorded, the respondent conceded that the ongoing trial did not make her petition infructuous. Nitin and Kalpana withdrew their requests in view of Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260. The Court preserved their available trial defences and expressly directed that their prosecution continue. Withdrawal amounted neither to an acquittal on the merits nor to a finding of guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The second respondent married Nitin Ahire on 10 December 2018. She alleged that his unmarried sister, Nutan, lived with them in Bombay. According to the FIR, matters were initially normal, but Nitin's mother Kalpana later demanded ₹15 lakh by telephone to purchase a house in Bombay. Nitin and Nutan were then alleged to have abused and beaten the complainant and pressed her to obtain the money from her parents or leave the matrimonial home. Nutan also allegedly abused the complainant's parents when she resisted by pointing to the expenses they had incurred on the marriage. These were complaint allegations, rather than facts established by evidence in the Section 482 order.

The three applicants sought quashing of Crime No. 115/2020, registered at Mahila Thana, Bhopal, under Sections 498A/34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, together with the resulting R.C.T. No. 10440/2020 before the JMFC, Bhopal. Nutan's counsel stated that the complainant had lived with the family for only 12 days. Counsel referred to a maintenance application under Section 125 CrPC, filed on 6 February 2020, which contained no allegation of a dowry demand by Nutan. Counsel also cited Nitin's notice under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act, sent on 3 March and received on 13 March, followed by the complaint and FIR on 9 October 2020. The submission was that the allegations against the sister-in-law were vague and omnibus. These dates and asserted omissions formed part of counsel's argument; the Court did not expressly treat the maintenance pleading or matrimonial notice as conclusive records exonerating her. The respondent opposed quashing and stated that charges had been framed and evidence was being recorded. The respondent nevertheless conceded that the trial's progress alone did not make the Section 482 petition infructuous. Nitin and Kalpana sought permission to withdraw their requests by reference to Taramani Parakh. The Judge dismissed their applications as withdrawn, with liberty to raise available trial defences, and considered Nutan's application separately.

2. Precedents — Considered : Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., 2015:INSC:221 : (2015) 11 SCC 260, was cited by the applicants' lawyer as the reason for withdrawing the husband and mother's applications. It explained that procedural step; it was neither a separate holding on their guilt nor a new substantive test applied to Nutan.

The Judge quoted Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, 2000:INSC:251 : (2000) 5 SCC 207, on the danger of implicating all of a husband's relatives in dowry-death proceedings merely because of family ties. Overt acts attributed to other relatives must be proved beyond reasonable doubt; conjecture cannot establish guilt. That proof requirement arose in Kans Raj's trial and dowry-death context. In the present cruelty and dowry-demand prosecution, the Judge used its caution against indiscriminate attribution to examine Nutan's individual role. He did not declare that proof at trial had already failed.

Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, was quoted more extensively. On its own record, it upheld a finding of dowry harassment while warning that exaggeration may lead to all family members being named. Its relevant summoning principle requires a specific role and tangible material against distant relatives; naming them alone is insufficient. A further qualification cautions against weighing unnatural death and harassment in 'golden scales'. It distinguishes omnibus allegations against siblings and other relatives from the position of a husband and parents. Monju Roy quoted Kans Raj and Raja Lal Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2007) 15 SCC 415; the latter discussed possible overinclusion of a brother and sister-in-law. Raja Lal Singh, Kamesh Panjiyar and other names appeared within that nested Monju Roy quotation. The Judge applied Monju Roy's specificity principle to Nutan, while maintaining the separate treatment of Nitin's and Kalpana's withdrawn requests.

Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, 2013 (1) UC 155, was quoted on a Section 482 disposition in which extremely general allegations, the absence of individually attributed roles, uncertainty about the relatives' residence and a six-year delay justified quashing only against those relatives. The present Judge applied the principles of individual scrutiny and possible partial quashing to Nutan. The six-year delay and married sister-in-law in Chandralekha belonged to that precedent; they were not facts found in the present case. The current order neither established a comparable delay nor treated residence uncertainty as decisive. It focused on the lack of a specified beating date and a clear allegation against Nutan. The authorities were not applied as blanket immunity for relatives.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR and connected proceedings against a particular accused. The Court exercised it after charges had been framed and evidence had begun; the respondent conceded that the application remained live. It prescribed no general deadline and did not hold that a trial could always be interrupted regardless of the allegations. Section 498A and Section 34 IPC, and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, were the registered cruelty, common-intention and dowry provisions. The ruling addressed whether the complaint supplied a sufficiently clear, individual basis for prosecuting Nutan. Nitin and Kalpana withdrew their requests without a decision on the merits. Section 125 CrPC and Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act appeared in counsel's chronology concerning maintenance and a restitution notice. The Court adjudicated neither maintenance entitlement nor matrimonial relief.

4. Issues : Could the cruelty and dowry FIR and pending trial continue against Nutan, an unmarried sister-in-law, when the telephone demand was attributed to the mother-in-law and the subsequent abuse and beating were alleged collectively, without a dated or clear act by Nutan? This required the Judge to distinguish family association alone from a sufficiently particular individual allegation under Section 482. Did the progress of the trial to framed charges and evidence extinguish the quashing application? The respondent conceded that it did not. The husband and mother withdrew their requests, so the merits of quashing the allegations against them were not decided. The Court did not determine the truth of the complainant's account, the defence chronology or final liability for the offences.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first dealt separately with the applicants. At counsel's request by reference to Taramani Parakh, it dismissed Nitin's and Kalpana's applications as withdrawn, preserving their available defences at trial. Nutan's challenge remained for decision. The Judge considered the Supreme Court's cautions in Kans Raj, Monju Roy and Chandralekha. A dowry complaint is not invalid merely because it names a relative, and allegations of harassment must not be mechanically discounted. Equally, relationship to the husband alone cannot justify prosecution where the person's role lacks adequate particulars. The Court examined the material recounted in the FIR, rather than deciding whether the complainant had proved or disproved the acts at trial.

On the FIR's account, the mother-in-law made the telephone demand for ₹15 lakh to buy a house in Bombay. The next allegation was that 'they' began misbehaving and beating the complainant when the demand remained unmet, and that Nutan abused the complainant's parents. The Judge found this insufficiently specific against Nutan. The order identified no date on which she was alleged to have beaten the complainant and found the clear particulars needed for her prosecution lacking. This concerned Nutan's individual alleged role, rather than a final finding that no demand or harm had occurred. The conclusion was that her continued prosecution was unwarranted.

The respondent acknowledged that the petition remained live even though charges had been framed and witness evidence was in progress. The Court exercised inherent jurisdiction to grant partial relief without laying down a general rule for all advanced prosecutions. Nutan's request was decided separately from the withdrawing applicants' requests. No quashing decision on the merits was made for Nitin or Kalpana, and their trial was expressly to continue. Nor did the order convert Kans Raj's beyond-reasonable-doubt trial standard into a requirement to prove guilt at the FIR stage.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court partially allowed the Section 482 application. It quashed Crime No. 115/2020 at Police Station Mahila Thana, District Bhopal, and R.C.T. No. 10440/2020 before the JMFC, Bhopal, only as to applicant No. 2, Nutan Ahire. The applications of applicant No. 1, Nitin Ahire, and applicant No. 3, Kalpana Ahire, were dismissed as withdrawn, with liberty to raise available trial defences; their prosecution would continue. The order did not acquit them, determine Nutan's evidentiary innocence after trial, dispose of a maintenance or matrimonial case, or quash the FIR against every named person.

Nitin Ahire and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 10692/2021, 04/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / no mini-trial at FIR stage - The Court held that the informant's allegations of a ₹500 demand for liquor, abusive words, a bucket assault and a threat could not be displaced at the quashing stage by the applicant's claim that the incident never occurred and that he had earlier complained about encroachment. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, and State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, cautioned against a roving or premature assessment before investigation was complete. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, explained Bhajan Lal's requirement that inherent power be used sparingly, without testing the FIR's reliability as at trial. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, balanced the prevention of abuse against the need to avoid stifling a legitimate prosecution. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, recognised quashing where the face-value or uncontroverted material disclosed no offence; no such deficiency was shown here. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. No. 709/2021 (30 June 2021), prohibited minute appraisal of the defence and treating an FIR as an encyclopedia. Applying those limits, the Court left the factual disputes for trial.

Defence documents / alleged mala fides - Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was quoted for the ordinary rule against considering disputed defence material, subject to a limited exception for public or undisputed documents. The Court did not find that the asserted encroachment complaints qualified for that exception. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted at length on the cautious exercise of Section 482 jurisdiction. It reproduced R.P. Kapur's recognised grounds and Bhajan Lal's illustrative categories, including manifestly malicious proceedings. Its qualification was that the informant's hostility alone becomes secondary when a cognizable offence is alleged and cannot by itself end the prosecution. The applicant advanced a theory of retaliatory motive but showed no facial absence of the offences charged under Sections 294, 323, 327 and 506 IPC. The application was dismissed without deciding the truth of either account.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nitin Pahariya sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 136/2023, registered at Police Station Khitola Bazar, Sihora, District Jabalpur, under Sections 294, 323, 327 and 506 IPC. His counsel recounted the prosecution allegation that he demanded ₹500 from the complainant to buy liquor. When the complainant refused, he allegedly used filthy language, picked up a bucket lying in the shop, assaulted the complainant with it and threatened his life. The order records neither a completed trial nor a finding that these acts occurred.

Nitin stated that he and others had complained on 15 March 2023 about allegedly illegal construction at the bus stand in Khitola Ward No. 12. He also referred to a complaint to the local SHO on 20 March. According to him, the authorities took no action, but the complainant and other witnesses, whom he associated with the encroachment, resented his continuing objections and falsely implicated him. He denied that the demand or assault had occurred. He thus asked the Court, at an early Section 482 stage, to accept his denial and his account of retaliation in response to the FIR. The Court treated both the denial and the asserted retaliatory motive as defences requiring proof at trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Judge set out the Supreme Court's Section 482 standards before applying them. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, 2019:INSC:1199 : (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted on the error in halting an investigation and conducting a roving inquiry into disputed blackmail and coercion allegations. The present Court applied its procedural caution to avoid trying Nitin's defence while the FIR proceeded; it did not import XYZ's sexual or blackmail facts into this case. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, 2018:INSC:284 : (2018) 5 SCC 718, was quoted briefly against a High Court's premature assessment before investigation was complete.

Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, 2011:INSC:655 : (2011) 12 SCC 319, quoted Bhajan Lal's caution that quashing must be exercised sparingly and with circumspection, without evaluating the genuineness of the allegations. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, 2010:INSC:405 : (2010) 11 SCC 226, explained the balance between preventing needless vindictive proceedings and preserving a legitimate prosecution. A court may quash a face-value complaint that constitutes no offence or lacks a cognizable basis, where there is a legal bar, or where there is sufficient material to show malicious prosecution. It cannot short-circuit a legitimate prosecution by weighing the evidence. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, 2019:INSC:1172 : (2019) 10 SCC 373, likewise approved quashing where either the allegations accepted at face value or the uncontroverted allegations together with the collected evidence disclosed no offence. In paragraph 15, the present Court drew from these authorities the rule that the uncontroverted complaint must fail to disclose a prima facie offence to justify this kind of intervention; it could not conduct a mini-trial.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was quoted for the ordinary rule against appraising an accused's defence or disputable documents. In an appropriate case, however, a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute may be considered. The excerpt referred to Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. The present Court did not find that Nitin's asserted complaints were undisputed, public or dispositive. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, 2019:INSC:1152 : (2019) 10 SCC 686, rejected Section 482 findings based on minute examination of disputed defence details, including after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709 of 2021, order of 30 June 2021, rejected meticulous scrutiny as at trial and stated that an FIR need not be an encyclopedia. The Judge applied those restraints to the present denial and theory of motive.

The Judge then quoted Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, 2008:INSC:278 : (2008) 12 SCC 346, at length. It identified the three purposes of Section 482: giving effect to Code orders, preventing abuse and securing justice. It also required sparing and careful exercise of the power. The passage reproduced R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, on an express legal bar, allegations that do not constitute an offence on their face, and the absence of legal evidence, as distinct from disputes about its weight. It also reproduced State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, and its illustrative categories. These included the absence of an offence or cognizable basis on the face of the allegations, inherently improbable allegations, a legal bar and manifestly malicious prosecution. The quoted passage stressed that, when a cognizable offence is registered, the informant's mala fides alone are secondary: collected evidence and proof at trial ordinarily govern. The Court applied that limitation to the applicant's bare assertion of retaliation.

Paragraph 14 listed Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha as taking a similar view in support of the general caution. The Renu Kumari passage also named later decisions reiterating that position.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the inherent jurisdiction invoked. The Court considered its limited application to early quashing while retaining the power to prevent abuse of court process or secure justice. Section 156(1) and Section 155(2) CrPC appeared in the reproduced Bhajan Lal illustrations, which distinguished cognizable police investigation from non-cognizable investigation requiring a Magistrate's order. The Court did not find that procedural defect in this FIR. Sections 294, 323, 327 and 506 IPC identified the registered offences concerning alleged obscene abuse, assault or hurt, extortion-linked violence and threat. The Court dismissed the quashing request and left the applicant's defence for proof at trial.

4. Issues : Did the reported demand, abuse, bucket assault and threat fail to disclose an offence on their face, so as to justify Section 482 intervention at this stage? The applicant identified no missing element that would remain absent even if the allegations were accepted. Could the asserted earlier encroachment complaints, the complainant's alleged resentment and the denial of any incident establish a manifestly retaliatory FIR without resolving disputed facts or conducting a mini-trial? The public or undisputed-document exception qualified the governing law, but the Court did not decide that these complaints met it. The case did not require a final determination of what occurred, whether the construction was legal or whether the witnesses were biased.

5. Ratio / Findings : In paragraph 15, the Court stated that quashing is available where uncontroverted allegations do not disclose a prima facie offence, but that the High Court cannot determine their factual correctness through a mini-trial. The Supreme Court passages explained why incomplete investigation and alternative facts supplied by an accused ordinarily cannot substitute for proof at trial. The exception for public or undisputed documents remained part of the governing law. The Court treated the applicant's denial and contention about motive as defences requiring proof at trial.

According to the FIR, the applicant demanded ₹500 for liquor. Refusal was followed by abuse, an assault with a bucket and a threat to life. The Judge recorded that counsel could point to no fact showing that the allegations, even if accepted in full at face value, disclosed no offence. Counsel instead argued that the incident was fabricated because of the earlier construction complaints and resulting resentment. Applying Renu Kumari's treatment of an informant's mala fides, the Court held that an assertion of motive alone could not overcome an otherwise cognizable complaint at this stage. The truth of the complaints, their connection with the informant and the participants' credibility were defence issues requiring proof at trial. The result was confined to the allegations and procedural stage described. The quoted authorities recognised exceptional cases involving facial deficiency, a legal bar, uncontroverted material or demonstrated abuse; none was established here. The Court made no adverse finding on Nitin's ultimate defence and did not convict him.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application, finding no ground for interference under Section 482 CrPC. Crime No. 136/2023 was not quashed. The order did not direct conviction, determine guilt under Sections 294, 323, 327 or 506 IPC, decide whether the disputed encroachment was lawful or unlawful, or resolve the truth of the applicant's retaliation claim. The defence remained for ordinary proof as the criminal case proceeded.

Nitin Pahariya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 21788/2023, 05/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / disputed fraud defence - The complaint alleged that Nilesh Shinde and Nitin Vithal Rao Kale posed as Hindustan Petroleum Corporation Limited's Chief HR officer and Depot Manager, respectively, and sought ₹3 lakh. After payment to Nilesh in Nitin's presence, they allegedly handed the complainant a purported dealership document. A preliminary inquiry preceded the FIR. Police verification reportedly revealed that neither man was employed by the company and that it had issued no such letter. Nitin disputed identification, payment, delivery and his presence. The Court applied XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, and S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, against premature roving inquiry, and Ajay Kumar Das, (2011) 12 SCC 319, against testing the FIR's genuineness. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, and M. Srikanth, (2019) 10 SCC 373, supplied the face-value or uncontroverted-material threshold. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. No. 709/2021 (30 June 2021), cautioned against deciding disputed facts through a mini-trial. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognises the limited exception for public or undisputed documents; no document was found to resolve this defence conclusively. Finding a prima facie case, the Court declined to quash the FIR or charge-sheet without deciding criminal guilt.

Alibi / proof burdens - Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, was quoted for the accused's affirmative burden to establish an alibi excluding presence. It also preserves a distinct rule: failure of an alibi cannot itself lead to conviction, because the prosecution must independently prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt. Nitin's claimed absence at delivery was disputed and left for trial. The Court did not decide in the Section 482 proceeding that his plea was proved false.

Section 34 IPC / joint conduct at the quashing stage - The allegation that Nilesh received the money rather than Nitin personally did not defeat a prima facie case of participation. Whether Nitin's signature appeared on the alleged forged letter was immaterial at that stage. The Court relied on the alleged joint representation and demand, Nitin's presence at payment, joint delivery and the reported company denial to leave common intention for trial. It neither held that presence alone always establishes Section 34 nor finally determined authorship of the document.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nitin Vithal Rao Kale sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 253/2022 at Police Station Phoonp, District Bhind, registered under Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC, and of the resulting charge-sheet. The complainant reported a supposed petrol-pump dealership transaction with Hindustan Petroleum Corporation Limited. Police conducted a preliminary inquiry into the complaint before registering the FIR. According to the account recorded by the High Court, co-accused Nilesh Shinde claimed to be the company's Chief HR officer and Nitin its Depot Manager. They allegedly visited the complainant, inspected the site and demanded ₹3 lakh. After that amount was handed to Nilesh in Nitin's presence, they allegedly supplied a purported company allotment or first-information letter. Police asked the company's Mumbai headquarters to verify their employment and the letter. It reportedly replied that neither man was an employee and that it had issued no such letter. This account comprised allegations and preliminary verification, rather than findings after a completed trial.

Nitin's counsel submitted that the complainant had no occasion to know either his name or his father's name, that he had issued no dealership allotment, and that the account of a forged document being supplied after payment was false. Counsel also submitted that no cash was paid to Nitin personally and that he was elsewhere on the alleged delivery date. The State opposed the petition. The Court considered the Section 482 limit on deciding those disputed assertions. It also examined whether the complainant's account of joint conduct supplied a prima facie basis against Nitin, although Nilesh received the money and the document's signature was disputed. The concluding refusal referred to both the FIR and the charge-sheet.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Judge cited and quoted XYZ v. State of Gujarat, 2019:INSC:1199 : (2019) 10 SCC 337, in which the Supreme Court criticised a premature roving inquiry under Section 482 into contested allegations and a disputed settlement after investigation had been stalled. Its caution supported leaving Nitin's denial to assessment through investigation and trial; XYZ's underlying allegations did not become facts of the present fraud case. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, 2018:INSC:284 : (2018) 5 SCC 718, was quoted briefly against a High Court's assessment before investigation was complete. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, 2011:INSC:655 : (2011) 12 SCC 319, recounted Bhajan Lal's requirement that Section 482 be exercised rarely and sparingly, without deciding the reliability or genuineness of FIR allegations at that stage.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, states that a court ordinarily does not examine defence documents supplied by an accused when considering quashing. In an appropriate case, however, it may consider a public document or one whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. The passage named Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. as sources of that exception. The Judge identified no public or undisputed document that proved Nitin's absence or negated the alleged encounter. The exception therefore remained an express qualification, rather than a finding disposing of the case.

State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, 2010:INSC:405 : (2010) 11 SCC 226, was quoted on preventing abuse of criminal process without stifling a legitimate prosecution. It permits quashing where no offence or cognizable basis appears on the face of the allegations, where there is an express legal bar, or where sufficient material shows malicious institution. It does not permit a trial of reliability under Section 482. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, 2019:INSC:1172 : (2019) 10 SCC 373, preserves quashing where either the FIR taken at face value or the uncontroverted allegations with the collected evidence disclose no offence. The High Court applied that threshold to the alleged personation, receipt and document delivery and found sufficient material to proceed. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, 2019:INSC:1152 : (2019) 10 SCC 686, prohibited findings on minute disputed defence facts in an inherent-powers petition, even after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709 of 2021 (30 June 2021), similarly barred meticulous scrutiny as at trial and stated that an FIR need not contain every evidentiary detail. Paragraph 16 listed eight additional Supreme Court decisions as taking a similar view.

Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, 2010:INSC:546 : (2010) 8 SCC 430, was quoted on the plea of alibi. An accused relying on that plea bears an affirmative burden to prove absence by positive evidence excluding presence. Failure to establish it does not, however, relieve the prosecution of independently proving guilt beyond reasonable doubt. The quotation mentioned Gurpreet Singh's appellate treatment of concurrent factual findings on alibi. That nested reference was not applied as an appellate standard in this Section 482 petition. The Judge used Sk. Sattar to explain why Nitin's claimed absence was a trial issue, without finding that he had failed at trial or that the prosecution had proved guilt. The Judge applied Section 34 to the alleged group conduct at the prima facie stage.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the inherent jurisdiction invoked. The Court examined whether the uncontroverted allegations disclosed an offence and declined to determine disputed facts or the alibi in that petition. Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC were the offences recorded in the FIR, concerning cheating and the alleged making or use of forged documents. Section 34 IPC was applied to the asserted common intention underlying the joint approach and transaction. The Judge rejected the contention that proceedings could lie only against the co-accused who physically received the cash or a person whose signature appeared on the disputed letter. The Court made no final finding, after evidence, of agreement, intention or forged execution. It interpreted no petrol-dealership regulatory statute or company policy.

4. Issues : Did the allegations and the company's reported denial provide a prima facie basis for continuing the IPC fraud and forged-document prosecution, or did Nitin's denials concerning the letter, receipt, identification and presence justify quashing the FIR and charge-sheet? The question concerned the scope of Section 482, rather than proof at trial. Was the asserted absence at delivery an alibi that the High Court could decide at this stage, and how did the accused's affirmative alibi burden coexist with the prosecution's independent burden? Could a participant be proceeded against under Section 34 on the alleged joint representation and delivery, even if Nilesh physically received the payment and Nitin had not signed the purported letter? The Court left the complaint's factual accuracy, the genuine company record and final guilt to the trial forum.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first reviewed the Supreme Court's cautions against turning Section 482 proceedings into a trial of disputed facts. According to the complaint, Nilesh and Nitin claimed specific offices in Hindustan Petroleum Corporation Limited, carried out an inspection, sought money, accepted payment through Nilesh and jointly delivered a purported dealership letter. The police inquiry reportedly obtained the company's denial of their employment and of the letter's issuance. In the face of those allegations and that preliminary verification, Nitin's denials raised factual issues requiring evidence. The Court found sufficient prima facie material for prosecution and refused to quash either the FIR or the charge-sheet. Its references to forgery and the company's response described the reported basis for proceeding; they were not a verdict that every forged-document offence had been proved.

Nitin's claimed absence was also disputed. The Judge quoted Sk. Sattar's requirement of cogent affirmative evidence of alibi, together with its equally important qualification: failure to establish an alibi does not itself establish the prosecution case. The Court did not treat Nitin's alibi as disproved; it held that the disputed factual issue could not be adjudicated under Section 482. The prosecution retained its trial burden, including proof beyond reasonable doubt. This petition decided only whether the threshold for quashing was met.

The Court invoked Section 34 in addressing personal receipt and signature. The complainant placed Nitin with Nilesh in the alleged misrepresentation and demand, the receipt of money in his presence and the joint handover. The company's reported denial provided a preliminary basis for the false-representation allegation. The Judge reasoned that Nilesh's physical receipt of the money did not itself protect another participant alleged to share the common intention. Given the ocular account of joint delivery, Nitin's signature on the disputed document was not required before prosecution could continue. That conclusion remained conditional on the facts ultimately proved; proximity to a co-accused alone was not declared conclusive.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. Neither Crime No. 253/2022 nor the charge-sheet was quashed. The alibi, denial of receipt, challenge to identification and letter delivery, and the prosecution allegations remained for appropriate determination on evidence. The order imposed no conviction, sentence, restitution or separate dealership direction.

Nitin Vithal Rao Kale v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 133/2025, 20/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Investigation / accused's choice and participation - An accused seeking a general direction under Section 482 CrPC for a fair investigation could not establish a right to prescribe the officer's methods or obtain court supervision of the investigation into his FIR. Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, quoted Narmada Bai and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt on the rule that an accused cannot choose the investigating agency or manner of investigation. It referred to E. Sivakumar on the absence of an automatic right to be heard on a transfer order. Its discussion of Divine Retreat Centre distinguished substitution of an agency through inherent power from a properly founded Article 226 remedy for mala fide exercise of investigative power. Its quotation of State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, preserved exceptional constitutional control of investigation. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, quoted W.N. Chadha on the absence of a routine right to a hearing or participation while investigative material is collected. It also quoted CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi on agency selection, and Sri Bhagwan Samardha and Narender G. Goel on further investigation and later challenges to evidence. Those principles preserve express statutory opportunities and trial rights. The applicant argued the merits but did not satisfy the Court either that it could supervise the investigation or that he could dictate its manner. The requested direction was therefore refused. State of Orissa v. Devendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, was also cited on the accused's inability to tender defence documents at charge framing; no charge was decided in this petition.

Judicial monitoring / supervision boundary - Manohar Lal Sharma, quoted in paragraph 8 and applied in paragraph 9, distinguishes rare judicial monitoring of timely, impartial progress without external interference from supervision of the officer's factual choices and opinion under Section 173(2) CrPC. Routine directions on the merits risk binding or influencing the later trial court and undermining its independence. The quoted constitutional authorities preserve exceptional monitoring supported by compelling circumstances. Romila Thapar also cautions against changing the agency merely on vague allegations of police mala fides. The High Court treated the requested intervention on the merits as impermissible supervision and dismissed the application.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Omprakash Dhakad filed Misc. Criminal Case No. 5973/2025 under Section 482 CrPC, seeking a direction that the investigating officer investigate the case freely and fairly. An FIR had already been registered against him. The Court specifically asked counsel whether it could supervise the ongoing investigation and whether an accused could dictate how it was conducted. Counsel argued the merits but did not satisfy the Court on either its jurisdiction or the accused's authority. The State appeared through the public prosecutor. The question concerned the limits of investigation directed by an accused or the Court, rather than guilt, innocence or particular police omissions.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India, 2018:INSC:912 : (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted at length. In the context of named accused seeking a change of agency or a special team, it held that an accused cannot choose the agency or insist on a particular manner of investigation or a court-monitored investigation. Its quotation of Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat states the rule against agency choice. Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India states that an accused has no right over the investigation's method or the mode of prosecution. Romila Thapar also discussed E. Sivakumar v. Union of India: an accused has no automatic right to notice or a hearing when a writ court directs CBI investigation. Its discussion of Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala distinguished changing an officer midstream through inherent jurisdiction from Article 226 directions available to an aggrieved person where mala fide exercise of investigative power is established. It quoted the Constitution Bench in State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, on the exceptional nature of even broad constitutional power to transfer investigation to CBI. That power cannot be exercised routinely on an unsubstantiated complaint against local police. On Romila Thapar's own record, vague assertions about arrest and evidence did not justify a change of agency. Available remand, bail, discharge and quashing remedies remained open at their proper stages. The present Court applied the principles limiting accused control and judicial intervention to Omprakash's general request. It neither transferred the case nor made independent findings of misconduct by a particular investigator.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, 2014:INSC:139 : (2014) 4 SCC 626, was then quoted at length. It invoked Union of India v. W.N. Chadha, 1993 Supp (4) SCC 260, to explain that investigation collects material for the report under Section 173(2) CrPC. Natural justice does not automatically require notice before that report or allow the accused to choose the method. W.N. Chadha recognised specified Code exceptions. Dinubhai also quoted CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, (1996) 11 SCC 253, on agency choice and the availability of further investigation when the local investigation proved unsatisfactory. Sri Bhagwan Samardha Sreepada Vallabha Venkata Vishwanandha Maharaj v. State of A.P., (1999) 5 SCC 740, concerned further investigation under Section 173(8), without a mandatory prior hearing for every potential accused. Narender G. Goel v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 65, was quoted on later opportunities to challenge the evidence at trial. Those CBI-transfer and further-investigation histories belonged to the precedents, rather than this applicant's case. The Judge applied their shared rule against routine intervention by an accused in police methods.

State of Orissa v. Devendra Nath Padhi, 2004:INSC:679 : (2005) 1 SCC 568, was cited in a sentence on the accused's inability to tender defence documents at charge framing. It reinforced the limits on early participation. No dispute about documents at charge framing was decided here, and the proposition did not displace the distinct statutory exceptions described in Dinubhai.

Manohar Lal Sharma was quoted in paragraph 8 and applied in paragraph 9. Its quoted paragraphs 38–39 distinguish monitoring the progress and fairness of a rare court-directed inquiry from supervision that dictates the officer's conduct of the investigation. Such supervision may predetermine the opinion under Section 173(2) and improperly affect the later trial. The Judge applied that distinction in refusing directions on the merits. The nested Supreme Court references supported or qualified the quoted reasoning; they did not establish independent factual findings in the present case.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the jurisdiction invoked by the accused for a direction to investigate fairly. The Court held that the request could not be used to supervise police collection of facts or allow the accused to dictate methods. Section 173(2) CrPC appeared in the quoted framework as the report following police investigation. Section 173(8) concerned the lawful possibility of further investigation after a report, without an automatic right for the accused to be heard before the direction. Section 204 and Section 202 CrPC appeared in W.N. Chadha's nested distinction between issuing process and an inquiry after postponing process; neither was a procedure employed in Omprakash's case. Articles 226 and 32 of the Constitution appeared in Romila Thapar and the Constitution Bench's qualified power of exceptional transfer.

Paragraph 7 also referred to Article 226 of the Constitution and Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, in stating the limit on supervision. The application itself was described as one under Section 482 CrPC. That description did not erase the exceptional constitutional principles quoted by the Court.

4. Issues : Could an accused against whom an FIR had been lodged obtain a direction under Section 482 prescribing the investigating officer's methods on a general request for free and fair investigation? Could the Court supervise the merits during investigation, and how did that differ from exceptional monitoring of progress and fairness? Arguments on the criminal case's merits did not substitute for the necessary jurisdictional or factual basis. The Court did not finally decide guilt, any charge, the FIR's validity, any request for transfer to a named agency or any allegation of mala fide police conduct.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Judge asked counsel to establish both the accused's entitlement to dictate the investigation and the Court's power to supervise it. Counsel's assertions on the merits satisfied neither requirement. Drawing on Romila Thapar and Dinubhai, the Court treated the collection of investigative material and the agency's methods as generally belonging to the investigating authority, with no ordinary accused choice or early participation. The principle remained qualified. The quoted authorities recognised Code-specified opportunities, later defence through remand, bail, discharge, quashing or trial, and constitutional directions supported by careful evidence in mala fide or exceptional situations.

Manohar Lal Sharma provided the further reason. Rare judicial monitoring checks that an agency progresses fairly, without undue delay or external interference. Supervision directing which witnesses to believe, what facts to find or how to formulate the final opinion may compromise an independent trial. The direction sought on the merits would, in substance, supervise the officer. The High Court therefore declined to intervene and described investigation as the agency's exclusive domain for those purposes.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application and refused the requested direction to the investigating officer. The order neither quashed nor transferred, monitored or otherwise modified the FIR and investigation. It made no final determination of the underlying accusations, police misconduct or the accused's future statutory remedies.

Omprakash Dhakad v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 5973/2025, 07/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cross-cases / simultaneous appellate disposal - The appeals of the three convicted persons, the State's appeal against the other acquittals in their trial, and the appeal in the Brajesh-death cross-case were heard together. Judgments in the related matters were delivered on 30 April 2021; the three convicted persons' appeals were disposed of together in this common judgment. Nathilal v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 145, supplied the method of hearing before the same judge and decision on the same day, without wholesale transfer of evidence between records. The Court referred to its separate finding in the cross-case that Ramant did not kill Brajesh and discussed an accused's admission there. It also relied on the scene and witness evidence in this case.

Site plan / direct observation - Jagdish Narain v. State of U.P., (1996) 8 SCC 199, and Rameshwar Dayal v. State of U.P., (1978) 2 SCC 518, distinguish physical features observed by the investigating officer from notes reproducing witnesses' accounts of the occurrence. Section 60 of the Evidence Act supports direct observations; Section 162 CrPC restricts investigative statements. The blood, footwear and cartridge locations shown in Ex. D.16 were considered with the testimony to assess where the shooting occurred and why Brajesh's body was moved. The entire map was not treated as substantive eyewitness evidence.

Witnesses / credibility and missing guests - Rupinder Singh Sandhu, (2018) 16 SCC 475; Rizan, (2003) 2 SCC 661; and Mohd. Rojali Ali, (2019) 19 SCC 567, distinguish a natural related witness from one with a demonstrated motive to implicate the accused falsely and secure punishment. Chandrasekar, (2017) 13 SCC 585, and Abdul Sayeed, (2010) 10 SCC 259, accord special evidentiary weight to an injured witness, subject to material contradiction. Sarwan Singh, (1976) 4 SCC 369; Yanab Sheikh, (2013) 6 SCC 428; Mahesh, (2008) 13 SCC 271; Nagarjit Ahir, (2005) 10 SCC 369; Vijendra Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 129; and Sadhu Saran Singh, (2016) 4 SCC 357, were applied in rejecting an automatic adverse inference from the failure to examine more festival guests. The qualification concerning a truly withheld material eyewitness remained.

Contradictions / Section 145 - Sunil Kumar Sambhudayal Gupta, (2010) 13 SCC 657, distinguishes material contradictions from ordinary discrepancies. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan, (2003) 7 SCC 749, rejects automatic application of falsus in uno. Gomati's earlier 'came to know' wording defeated her claim to have directly seen the shootings of the three deceased men. Manohar's conflicting account of the shooters and Kumher's attribution of Raghunath's shooting to Nathu were rejected to that extent, without discarding all their evidence. Under V.K. Mishra, (2015) 9 SCC 588, confrontation under Section 145 of the Evidence Act was required before Rajabeti's police statement could be used to contradict her account concerning Mamta. She had not been confronted with it. Gomati survived, so her doctor-recorded statement did not fall under Section 32 merely because it was labelled a dying declaration. The recorder was not examined. The Court assessed her explanation and corroborated court evidence concerning Nathu, rather than treating the label as substantive proof of the cause of death.

Alibi / conduct and motive - Jitender Kumar, (2012) 6 SCC 204; Om Prakash, (2012) 5 SCC 201; and Jumni, (2014) 11 SCC 355, supported a fair assessment of positive alibi evidence excluding presence. Ramvir's relatives did not establish his claimed move to Patrai. Under Subramaniam, (2009) 14 SCC 415, a false alibi may be an additional circumstance only after independent prosecution proof; it cannot be the sole basis of guilt. Kunwarpal, (2014) 16 SCC 560, recognises that enmity may support either the offence or a false accusation. Matru, (1971) 2 SCC 75, cautions against simply inferring guilt from abscondence. Ramant remained with the bodies, reported the incident and assisted the investigation before his later absence, while the appellants' conduct was assessed in context. Saddik, (2016) 10 SCC 663, and Yogesh Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, treat the absence of an established motive as secondary where direct evidence is trustworthy.

Medical and seizure proof / individual attribution - Bullet and pellet wounds corroborated Ramvir's direct killing of Keshav and Jaswant, Ghanshyam's fatal shot to Raghunath, and the use of two weapons against Mamta. The Court found that Ramvir's bullet killed Mamta and that Ghanshyam's thigh pellets were probably nonfatal. Gomati's pellet injuries, the witness accounts and recovery of the .12-bore gun linked Nathu to her attempted murder. Ramesh Harijan, (2012) 5 SCC 777, permits reliance on dependable portions of hostile attestors' evidence. Rohtash Kumar, (2013) 14 SCC 434, and Mukesh Singh, (2020) 10 SCC 120, require police testimony to be assessed, rather than rejected merely because of the witness's office. The Court accepted the recovery on the attestors' signatures, the officer's account and the armorer's test.

Common intention / charge and relief - Chhota Ahirwar, (2020) 4 SCC 126, recognises that common intention under Section 34 may form during the occurrence where participation and shared purpose are proved; mere presence is insufficient. The three armed appellants' concerted firing supported constructive liability. Mala Singh, (2019) 5 SCC 127, including Karnail Singh, Willie Slaney and Chittarmal, and Dhaneswar Mahakud, (2006) 9 SCC 307, permit substitution of Section 34 for Section 149 where the facts overlap and the defence suffers no prejudice. That condition was satisfied despite the co-accused acquittals. Ghanshyam's conviction for Raghunath's murder changed from Section 302/34 to direct Section 302, and Nathu's conviction for the attempt on Gomati changed from Section 307/34 to direct Section 307. Specific charges had given each notice. Ramvir was not convicted directly under Section 302 for Mamta's murder without such a charge, although his Section 302/34 liability remained. All three appeals were dismissed with those modifications. Concurrent life and seven-year sentences and fines were specified for each appellant.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 16 October 2000, a celebration marking the birth of Ramant Singh's son was taking place at his home in village Khoyala. His Dehati Nalishi stated that a group near Ramvir Singh's sitting room began bursting crackers towards the gathering. When Manohar objected, abuse and stone throwing followed, after which armed men fired towards the house. Keshav, Ramant's father; Jaswant, his brother; Raghunath alias Chhote Singh, his cousin; and Mamta died. Gomati and Manohar were injured. Ramant's first report attributed the deaths of Keshav and Jaswant to Ramvir's mouser, those of Raghunath and Mamta to Ghanshyam's .12-bore gun, and Manohar's injury to Nathu. Later witness accounts differed on several individual shots. The medical records of the deceased and injured showed gunshot wounds. Ramant reported the incident after police arrived to investigate the separate death of Brajesh, Ramvir's nephew. A cross-case concerning that death was registered against members of Ramant's party. The location and movement of Brajesh's body, cartridges near the sitting room and a dilapidated house, and whether Ramant had killed Brajesh were disputed aspects of the episode. These accounts represented prosecution and defence positions, rather than unqualified facts inferred from the FIR alone.

Ten persons were tried in Sessions Trial No. 37/2001 at Morena for four deaths and the attempted murders of Gomati and Manohar. Charges against different accused combined individual offences under Sections 302 or 307 with Section 149 and related IPC and Arms Act allegations. The trial court acquitted seven persons, including Kaushlendra. It convicted Ramvir on two direct Section 302 counts, two Section 302/34 counts and two Section 307/34 counts. Nathu and Ghanshyam were each convicted on four Section 302/34 counts and two Section 307/34 counts. The murder counts carried life imprisonment and fines; the attempt counts carried seven years' rigorous imprisonment and fines. All sentences were concurrent. Nathu, Ghanshyam and Ramvir filed appeals 397, 401 and 425 of 2005. Separate State appeals challenged the acquittals of the seven co-accused and Ramant's acquittal in the Brajesh cross-case. Under Nathilal, the related appeals were heard by the same bench and decided on the same day. This common judgment formally disposed of the three convicted appellants' appeals. The defence alleged false implication because of enmity and Brajesh's death, omitted or contradictory police statements, non-examination of many guests, darkness, failure to prove individual shooters, self-defence or sudden retaliation, and alibis for Ghanshyam and Ramvir. The State and complainant supported the convictions.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nathilal v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 145, supplied the method for cross-cases to be dealt with by the same judge and decided on the same day, with the evidence in each record assessed separately. The High Court referred to its separate decision in State v. Ramant Singh concerning Brajesh's death. It distinguished an admission in that case from wholesale importation of its evidence. Jagdish Narain v. State of U.P., (1996) 8 SCC 199, and Rameshwar Dayal v. State of U.P., (1978) 2 SCC 518, distinguish scene facts personally observed by the officer preparing a site plan from investigative statements about an occurrence the officer did not witness. They apply Section 60 of the Evidence Act and Section 162 CrPC. The Court relied on the physical entries in Ex. D.16, without treating every notation as substantive eyewitness evidence.

Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475; Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509; Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661; and Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, were quoted on why relationship alone does not make a witness interested. Cautious scrutiny remains necessary where prior enmity or benefit may supply a motive to implicate falsely. Rizan reproduced Dalip Singh, Masalti and related authorities. The present Court applied their common credibility principle, rather than an irrebuttable presumption that a relative always tells the truth. Chandrasekar v. State, (2017) 13 SCC 585, and Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259, accord special weight to injured witnesses, subject to rejection for major contradictions or discrepancies. Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1976) 4 SCC 369; Yanab Sheikh v. State of W.B., (2013) 6 SCC 428 (quoting Namdeo and Bipin Kumar Mondal); Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271; Nagarjit Ahir v. State of Bihar, (2005) 10 SCC 369; Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129 (drawing on Gian Chand, Takhaji Hiraji and Dahari); and Sadhu Saran Singh v. State of U.P., (2016) 4 SCC 357, distinguish an essential, available eyewitness who has been withheld from witnesses whose evidence would merely be cumulative. The Court found that direct and injured testimony had already been tested. It did not reject the prosecution merely because every guest had not been called.

Kunwarpal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2014) 16 SCC 560, recognises that enmity may give rise to either the offence or a false accusation. Matru v. State of U.P., (1971) 2 SCC 75, informed the cautious assessment of a suspect's conduct and abscondence. Kundula Bala Subrahmanyam was briefly invoked on conduct after the offence, without creating an automatic presumption. Saddik v. State of Gujarat, (2016) 10 SCC 663, and Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, establish that an unproved motive does not defeat otherwise trustworthy direct evidence. Prithvi (minor) v. Mamraj, (2004) 13 SCC 279, was quoted in addressing the argument that the absence of gas lamps from the site plan defeated identification. A defective plan alone does not displace credible witness evidence. The Court considered that principle in the setting of the night celebration; it did not find that every alleged lamp had been seized or photographed.

Sunil Kumar Sambhudayal Gupta v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 13 SCC 657, distinguishes material omissions from normal discrepancies. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749, rejects mandatory application of falsus in uno and requires the trustworthy residue to be separable. Under V.K. Mishra v. State of Uttarakhand, (2015) 9 SCC 588, a witness's attention must first be drawn to the relevant part of a prior written statement under Section 145 before it can be used as a contradiction. If denied, the contradiction must then be proved through the investigating officer. The Court applied that requirement to an unconfronted police entry about Rajabeti and Mamta, while limiting other witnesses' confronted material contradictions.

Jitender Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2012) 6 SCC 204; Om Prakash v. State of Rajasthan, (2012) 5 SCC 201; and Jumni v. State of Haryana, (2014) 11 SCC 355, were considered on timely, positive proof of an alibi excluding presence. Jumni's quoted passage also requires equal treatment of defence witnesses, rather than automatic disbelief. Subramaniam v. State of T.N., (2009) 14 SCC 415, prohibits using a failed or false alibi as the sole proof of guilt. It may add to the prosecution circumstances only after those circumstances have been independently established. The Court assessed the two specific residential and work alibis after considering the direct prosecution evidence.

Ramesh Harijan v. State of U.P., (2012) 5 SCC 777, permits reliance on usable portions of hostile seizure attestors' evidence. Its nested authorities explain that the entire testimony is not erased. Rohtash Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2013) 14 SCC 434, requires scrutiny and, where possible, corroboration of police testimony, without categorical exclusion. Mukesh Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2020) 10 SCC 120, rejects a legal requirement of independent corroboration merely because the witness is a police officer. The gun recovery was accepted on the signatures, the officer's evidence and the armorer's test. Chhota Ahirwar v. State of M.P., (2020) 4 SCC 126, states the Section 34 rule of joint liability: participation and shared intention must be proved, although the intention may form on the spot. The Court applied it to the concerted armed firing. Mala Singh v. State of Haryana, (2019) 5 SCC 127, quoted Lachhman Singh, Karnail Singh, Willie Slaney and Chittarmal on substituting Section 34 for Section 149 where the charged facts overlap and the defence is not prejudiced. Dhaneswar Mahakud v. State of Orissa, (2006) 9 SCC 307, reinforced that requirement of fair notice. The Court applied it after seven acquittals, without treating the two sections as automatically identical.

3. Statutes considered : Section 60 of the Evidence Act governed the officer's direct observations, as distinct from site-plan entries based on information from others. Section 145 required proper confrontation before a police statement could contradict a witness's court evidence. Statements under Section 161 CrPC and the restrictions in Section 162 were considered, without general use of investigative accounts as substantive evidence. Although a doctor labelled Gomati's statement a dying declaration, she survived, so it did not become proof under Section 32 of the Evidence Act. The recovery account referred to memoranda under Section 27 of the Evidence Act. Section 174 CrPC concerned the inquest background, rather than a separate holding on the purpose of inquests in this appeal.

Sections 302 and 307 IPC concerned four murders and two attempts, with constructive common-intention liability under Section 34. Charges under Section 149 had originally been framed. After most accused were acquitted, the Court considered substitution and the question of prejudice. Sections 147, 148 and 324 IPC and Arms Act 25/27 formed part of the charge history; they did not become separate convictions of the three appellants in this appellate decision. Section 374 CrPC provided the appeal route. The initial account refers to Section 178(3) CrPC for investigation against absconders, without a legal issue under that provision being decided.

4. Issues : The Court considered whether the four deceased died homicidally and whether Gomati and Manohar sustained gunshots. It examined whether Ramant and the other natural or injured witnesses were credible despite relationship, enmity, delayed or conflicting police statements, missing guests, darkness and the Brajesh cross-case; what the scene map, medical and ballistic evidence established about each appellant and victim; and whether the two residential and work alibis excluded participation. It also considered whether the three appellants shared an intention to kill or attempt murder despite using different weapons and the acquittals of other accused, whether Section 34 could replace Section 149 without prejudice, and whether direct convictions under Sections 302/307 could replace constructive counts where a specific individual charge had been framed. This common judgment did not decide the separate State appeals, although it referred to their same-day outcomes.

5. Ratio / Findings : The post-mortem doctors described fatal firearm injuries to Keshav, Jaswant and Raghunath, who died at the scene, and to Mamta, who died after treatment. Gomati and Manohar underwent timely medical examinations and had metallic foreign bodies. Homicide and injury were not materially challenged. Ramant reported to police after they arrived to investigate Brajesh's death and remained for the inquest and site work. The Court rejected an inference of guilt from his later absence alone. It considered the movement of Brajesh's body and the physical items shown in Ex. D.16 significant, while distinguishing the officer's direct observations from witness narratives. The separate cross-case finding that Ramant did not kill Brajesh, and the reference to a participant's admission, were used within the stated same-day decision framework. They did not authorise wholesale transfer of the cross-case evidence. The Court rejected the suggestion that old litigation with Ramlakhan established him as the sole shooter, noting the use of two firearm types and the absence of a reason to spare a guilty rival. Enmity and an uncertain motive did not displace otherwise supported ocular evidence.

After assessing each witness, the Court found Ramant, Rajabeti, Gomati, Manohar and Kumher generally reliable, while rejecting some individual attributions. Gomati's earlier 'came to know' statement prevented her being treated as a direct witness to the shooting of Keshav, Jaswant and Raghunath. She had, however, consistently named Nathu as her assailant and Ghanshyam as Mamta's. Manohar's account of who shot him and Gomati differed materially from his police statement and did not establish those individual shooters; his injury and other observations remained. Kumher's claim that Nathu shot Raghunath contradicted his earlier attribution to Ghanshyam and was rejected. Rajabeti had not been confronted, as Section 145 required, with her police account concerning Mamta. It could not therefore be used as a proved contradiction. Her age, traumatic loss and delayed examination informed the assessment of smaller discrepancies. Since Gomati survived, the doctor-recorded Ex. D.18 was not dying-declaration proof under Section 32. The doctor was not examined, and she explained her use of Ramvir's name. Those limits, the known participants and the medical evidence supported the reliable residue. Non-examination of other guests did not automatically justify an adverse inference, because material natural and injured witnesses had been examined.

Ghanshyam did not establish his whereabouts on 16 October, produce proof of duty or examine his alleged landlord. Ramvir's relatives supplied no convincing documentary or residential basis for his claimed move to Patrai and farming there, while his wife remained the village sarpanch. The Court rejected both alibis after independently assessing the prosecution case; their failure did not itself prove guilt. On the individual acts, Ramvir's .315-bore shots were accepted as fatal to Keshav and Jaswant. Raghunath's pellet injuries and the evidence of Ghanshyam's .12-bore gun led the Court to correct the trial finding attributing his direct death to Ramvir. Mamta suffered effects from both a .315 bullet and .12 pellets. The Court found that Ramvir's bullet killed her and that Ghanshyam's thigh pellet injuries were unlikely to have been fatal. It did not, however, impose an uncharged direct Section 302 conviction for Mamta's murder on Ramvir. Gomati's pellets, the witness attribution and the tested recovered .12 gun supported Nathu's direct attempted murder. The actual source of Manohar's wound remained uncertain after Kaushlendra's separate acquittal. The Court maintained common-intention liability against the three appellants without identifying a proved direct shooter.

Applying Chhota Ahirwar, the Court inferred shared intention under Section 34 from the three armed men approaching the house and firing repeatedly. That intention could form during the incident. The Section 149 charges had put the joint acts and common-purpose facts before the defence, and the Court found no unfairness in applying Section 34 after seven acquittals. It recognised the doctrinal distinction and the possibility of prejudice on other facts. Ghanshyam's conviction for Raghunath's murder was changed to direct Section 302 and Nathu's conviction for the attempt on Gomati to direct Section 307, because each had faced a specific charge and defended that act. Ramvir retained direct murder liability only for Keshav and Jaswant, with Section 302/34 liability for Raghunath and Mamta. All three bore the stated direct and constructive attempt counts. These were final appellate findings on conviction, rather than prima facie procedural observations.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeals with the stated modifications to the judgment of 20 May 2005 in Sessions Trial No. 37/2001. Ramvir remained directly guilty of murdering Keshav and Jaswant on two Section 302 counts, constructively guilty of murdering Raghunath and Mamta under Section 302/34, and guilty on two Section 307/34 attempt counts. Nathu retained four Section 302/34 murder counts. His Gomati attempt count changed to direct Section 307, while his Manohar attempt count remained under Section 307/34. Ghanshyam's Raghunath count changed to direct Section 302; the other three murder counts remained under Section 302/34, and both attempt counts remained under Section 307/34. As set out in paragraph 152, each murder count carried life imprisonment and a ₹1,000 fine, and each attempt count carried seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹500 fine. All sentences were concurrent. Ghanshyam and Ramvir, already in jail, were to serve the remaining sentences and be informed of the judgment. Nathu's bail bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately. The trial record was to be returned. The separate State appeals were decided the same day; this judgment did not newly convict the seven acquitted co-accused.

Nathu Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 397/2005 & 401/2005 & 425/2005, 30/04/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Article 226 criminal writ / alibi / advocate intimidation / FIR threshold — The writ petitioner challenged Crime No. 181/2024 for offences under Sections 294, 506 and 507 IPC. He claimed that hospital photographs placed him elsewhere when he was alleged to have threatened the complainant advocate to abandon a client's brief. The FIR also alleged earlier telephone threats and a demand for compromise. The Court quoted Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283. An alibi is relevant under Section 11 of the Evidence Act, rather than a substantive IPC exception. Once the prosecution establishes presence, the defence must offer positive, cogent evidence excluding presence. The prosecution's own burden remains even if the alibi fails. The hospital claim raised a disputed question of fact that could not be finally determined in the writ proceedings; this was not a finding that the petitioner was at the scene. The Court rejected the claim that an advocate's FIR concerning threats for accepting a brief amounted to misuse of advocacy. The alleged coercion interfered with professional duties. Paragraph 12 listed XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha. The Court drew the general rule that proceedings can be quashed only where the uncontroverted allegations fail to disclose an offence. Since these allegations disclosed a cognizable offence, it dismissed the petition. This assessment of the allegations at face value did not establish guilt, determine the photographs' authenticity or decide any separate offence specific to threats against advocates.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The petitioner filed Writ Petition 36916/2024 under Article 226 challenging Crime 181/2024 at Kotwali Shivpuri, registered under Sections 294, 506 and 507 IPC. The complainant was an advocate representing an accused in RCT 308/2018. According to the FIR account reproduced by the Court, Neetesh made several telephone calls on 23 February 2024, threatening the advocate's life and demanding that he leave the case. He repeated the threat and pressed for a compromise on 11 March. On 19 March, he approached the advocate near the SDM Court in the presence of Arun Sharma, Jai Goyal, Vikas Singhal and Yogesh Tiwari. The allegations included demands that the advocate abandon the brief, abuse referring to his mother and sister, a death threat, and a threat to implicate him falsely under the SC/ST Act. The advocate attributed the delay in reporting to fear.

These were FIR allegations that had not been proved at a criminal trial.

The petitioner claimed that he was treating patients at a hospital at the relevant time and submitted photographs showing him outside the hospital premises. He described the FIR as a misuse of advocacy. The single-judge bench heard his counsel and considered whether the disputed alibi justified discharging him or interfering with the FIR in writ proceedings. A Government Advocate represented the State. The writ decision did not determine guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), 2015:INSC:194, (2015) 4 SCC 749, was quoted at length on positive proof of an alibi once the prosecution establishes presence. It reproduces Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, 1996:INSC:1260, (1997) 1 SCC 283, which treats alibi as a plea relevant under Section 11 of the Evidence Act. That passage preserves the prosecution's burden and requires strict proof from the defence, while allowing the accused the benefit of reasonable doubt arising from defence evidence of sufficient quality. The Court quoted Binay Kumar Singh again separately in paragraph 8, including its references to Dudh Nath Pandey and Narsingrao Gangaram Pimple. Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, 2010:INSC:546, (2010) 8 SCC 430, was separately quoted on positive proof and the express qualification that failure to prove an alibi does not necessarily establish the prosecution case. Its quotation includes Gurpreet Singh's treatment of concurrent factual findings on alibi. Vijay Pal identified Jitender Kumar as reiterating the principle. The Court concluded that the disputed implications of the photographs could not be decided under Article 226. It did not apply the burdens governing final trial adjudication as a declaration of the petitioner's guilt.

Paragraph 12 listed XYZ v. State of Gujarat, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha with citations. The Court invoked them collectively for the proposition that proceedings can be quashed only when the uncontroverted allegations do not disclose an offence. They supported that collectively stated threshold for quashing. None was used to determine whether the hospital photographs were true or to establish an additional substantive offence against advocates.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 provided the jurisdiction for the criminal writ actually filed. Sections 294, 506 and 507 IPC were the offences named in Crime 181/2024. The Court assessed collectively whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclosed a cognizable offence; it did not determine whether the evidence was sufficient for conviction. The complainant alleged a threat of false implication under the SC/ST Act. No actual offence or prosecution under that Act was adjudicated. Section 11 of the Evidence Act was discussed through Binay Kumar Singh as the basis for the relevance of an alibi, rather than an IPC exception. The requirements of prosecution proof and reasonable doubt remained applicable. The RCT number identified the client's pending case, rather than a charge being tried in this writ. Section 482 CrPC was not the stated basis of the petition's jurisdiction.

4. Issues : The immediate question was whether the Court could accept the hospital photographs and claimed alibi as proof of absence and discharge the petitioner in Article 226 proceedings. It also considered whether an advocate's report of threats intended to make him abandon a client's brief could be dismissed as misuse of advocacy, and whether the uncontroverted FIR account disclosed a cognizable offence so as to justify declining interference. The Court did not conduct a trial concerning the alleged telephone calls, test the eyewitnesses or photographic metadata, or determine eventual guilt.

5. Ratio / Findings : Alibi means elsewhere. It is a rule of relevant evidence under Section 11, rather than a statutory exception. The quoted cases require the prosecution first to prove presence and participation. An accused raising an alibi must then produce cogent, positive evidence excluding presence, while evidence that creates reasonable doubt may still benefit the accused. A false or failed alibi does not relieve the prosecution of its burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt. The Court held that this disputed factual issue could not be settled under Article 226 by treating the submitted hospital photographs as conclusive. It did not reject the photographs after testing the evidence or shift the ultimate burden at trial.

The FIR alleged repeated threats to the complainant advocate because he had accepted a client's brief, followed by pressure to compromise, abuse and threats near the SDM Court. The Court reasoned that advocates generally represent their clients' causes without a personal stake. Threatening an advocate merely because the advocate has appeared for a client amounts to interference with professional duties. Describing the FIR as misuse of advocacy did not negate the alleged conduct. At the preliminary stage, the allegations taken at face value disclosed a cognizable offence. The authorities listed in paragraph 12 supported the general threshold for declining quashing. This did not amount to a finding that every witness's account or every element of an offence had been proved. The hospital alibi and the merits remained to be considered in the criminal process.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Article 226 petition, declining to interfere with Crime 181/2024 or quash the FIR. The judgment neither convicted the petitioner nor finally determined his defence. Its reported neutral citation is 2024:MPHC-GWL:21507.

Neetesh Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 36916/2024, 29/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (362) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — The husband sought quashing of the Section 377 charge. He challenged the wife's allegation of unnatural sex, which appeared in her Section 164 statement, and disputed the forensic material. The effect of the delayed allegation and the evidentiary objections fell to be considered at trial. The separate quashing of proceedings against his relatives for want of specific acts did not assist him. The wife's account disclosed a prima facie case. The petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The husband faced prosecution arising from Crime 954/2017, including offences under Sections 498-A and 377 IPC. He disputed the allegation of unnatural sex in the wife's later Section 164 statement. He also questioned the FSL findings of sperm, relying on their separate residence. Proceedings against his siblings had been quashed because there were no specific allegations against them. He expressly confined his arguments in this petition to Section 377.

2. Precedents — Considered : Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh were considered on the sparing exercise of the power to quash proceedings and the prohibition on meticulous appraisal of evidence at that stage. The Court also noted the earlier ruling of 15.03.2019 dismissing his challenge to the DNA notice.

3. Statutes considered : The provisions referred to were Sections 164 and 482 CrPC and Sections 377, 498-A, 323, 294, 506 and 34 IPC. Sections 3–4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were also mentioned.

4. Issues : Could the later disclosure and the accused's forensic objections justify quashing the Section 377 prosecution? Did the relief granted to his relatives also extend to the husband?

5. Ratio / Findings : In considering an application under Section 482, the Court tests whether the uncontroverted allegations disclose an offence, without deciding credibility or conducting a mini trial. The effect of delay in making a particular allegation and the claimed impossibility of the sperm evidence require assessment at trial. The siblings had obtained relief because there were no specific allegations against them. By contrast, the wife directly accused the applicant in her Section 164 statement. Her accusation supplied prima facie material and grave suspicion sufficient for framing the charge. The Court did not decide the other offences, on which no arguments had been advanced.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The Section 377 proceedings continue.

Harsh Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 63657/2021, 14/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Article 226 / matrimonial FIR / preliminary inquiry / accused's role / continuing cruelty — The wife alleged a demand for ₹10 lakh and a Baleno car, taunts, assault and threats by her husband and relatives at Kanpur, misconduct by her father-in-law, a trip to Australia, subsequent expulsion and continuing distress at her parental home in Bhopal. The petitioners sought a preliminary inquiry into documents sent by email, a Section 173(2) report exonerating them, questioning in Australia or payment of their travel expenses, and prosecution of the complainant. Under Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, an FIR must be registered where the information discloses a cognizable offence. A preliminary inquiry in the illustrative category of matrimonial disputes depends on the circumstances. It is not invariably mandatory and concerns disclosure of an offence, rather than the ultimate truth of the allegations. The Court applied its quotation in Meera Yadav of CBI v. Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi, which discusses Managipet, Yashwant Sinha, Charansingh and earlier corruption-case authorities. Failure to hold an inquiry did not automatically invalidate this FIR. Romila Thapar, Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki and Narender G. Goel supplied the rule that suspects have no routine right to a hearing, to choose an agency or to dictate how an investigation proceeds. Exceptional relief under Article 226 remains available where a mala fide investigation is established. Neeharika Infrastructure cautioned against stifling an unfinished investigation or assessing the defence on incomplete material. The petitioners disputed whether all the relatives had returned from Australia. Their counsel nevertheless conceded that they had previously lived together, and the FIR specifically alleged earlier cruelty and misconduct by the father-in-law. Falsus in uno did not erase those earlier allegations. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, supported the principle of continuing mental cruelty where a wife expelled over dowry allegedly suffers at her parental home. This supplied the connection for investigation by Bhopal Mahila Thana. The petition was dismissed, the interim stay of 11 July 2023 was vacated, and prompt completion of the investigation was directed. The Court did not finally determine guilt, the authenticity of the travel material, residence or any entitlement to prosecute the complainant.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Tanweer Seraj and other family members filed Writ Petition 14464/2023 under Article 226. They sought a direction to the police to conduct a preliminary inquiry into documents enclosed with their representation and file a report under Section 173(2) CrPC exonerating them. They also asked that, if personal questioning was needed, an officer be sent to Australia or their travel to Bhopal be paid for, and that the complainant be prosecuted for lodging a false FIR. Crime 116/2023 at Mahila Thana, Bhopal alleged offences under Sections 498-A, 354, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The complainant stated that she married Zain Tanweer at Bhopal on 5 December 2021 and arrived at the matrimonial home in Kanpur on 17 July 2022. She alleged a demand for ₹10 lakh and a Baleno car, taunts, filthy language, beating and sexualised misbehaviour by her father-in-law, Tanweer. She further alleged that the family travelled to Sydney in September 2022 and returned to Kanpur in January 2023. Dowry pressure and assault allegedly continued, and she was expelled with a warning not to return without the money and car. She said that she took shelter at her father's home in Bhopal and tried to preserve the marriage before reporting. These were FIR allegations, rather than final findings of fact by the Court.

The petitioners argued that no preliminary inquiry had preceded registration, that passports and material sent by email showed that not all family members had returned from Australia, and that the alleged acts occurred in Kanpur, outside the territorial jurisdiction of the Bhopal police station. Their counsel relied on Rashmi Chopra, Prashant Bharti and Doliben. The State and complainant opposed the petition. They relied on disclosure of a cognizable offence, continuing harm at the parental home and the absence of a right for the accused to be heard before or during investigation as a matter of course. The investigation remained incomplete because an interim order had stayed it. The Court recorded counsel's concession that all the petitioners had lived together at Kanpur before the Australia trip. It considered the alleged earlier acts, without resolving the disputed travel evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., 2013:INSC:748, (2014) 2 SCC 1, was discussed through the Court's quotation from its earlier decision in Meera Yadav v. State of M.P. It requires registration where the information discloses a cognizable offence. It permits an inquiry for a limited purpose in appropriate categories, including matrimonial disputes, depending on the facts. Such an inquiry is neither a trial of the allegations' truth nor a universal entitlement of the accused. The lengthy Meera Yadav extract quotes CBI v. Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi, Criminal Appeal 1045/2021. That decision surveys P. Sirajuddin, Nirmal Singh Kahlon, Yashwant Sinha, Managipet, Charansingh and K. Veeraswami in the context of corruption by public servants and CBI practice. The High Court applied the general principle that absence of an inquiry does not automatically invalidate the matrimonial FIR. It did not treat the corruption-case facts as findings against these parties. Lalita Kumari's duty to register an FIR remained distinct from its illustrative categories in which an inquiry is permissible.

Romila Thapar v. Union of India, W.P.(Cr.) 260/2018, judgment of 28 September 2018, was quoted at length on an accused's choice of agency or method of investigation and exceptional judicial transfer where genuine mala fide abuse is shown. Its quotations from Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar, Divine Retreat Centre and Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights concern different settings. They support that framework while preserving exceptional control under Article 226. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, was separately quoted on the absence of an automatic right for a proposed accused to be heard during investigation. The quotation includes W.N. Chadha, Rajesh Gandhi, Sri Bhagwan Samardha and Narender G. Goel. Narender G. Goel v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 65, was then quoted separately, recognising the later opportunity at trial to test the evidence. Merely submitting disputed documents did not entitle the petitioners to direct an overseas inquiry, obtain State-funded travel or require a police report exonerating them.

Neeharika Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, was quoted on the police's primary role in investigating cognizable offences, exceptional quashing, assessment of an FIR at face value and restraint in evaluating reliability on incomplete facts. Its extensive references to Prakash P. Hinduja, P. Chidambaram, Khwaja Nazir Ahmad, Skoda Auto, Bhajan Lal and R.P. Kapur state that framework; they are not independent findings of fact in this case. The Court applied it to the disputed return from Australia and the continuing investigation. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., 2019:INSC:479, (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted on mental cruelty continuing at the parental home after expulsion connected with dowry demands. The High Court also cited its decision in Amar Singh v. Vimla, Criminal Revision 2376/2020, decided on 22 June 2021. The alleged continuing effects at Bhopal supported investigation there.

3. Statutes considered : The petition invoked Article 226 for directions concerning the investigation and a final report. The Court refused to direct a particular outcome, while recognising exceptional judicial control over mala fide abuse. Section 154 CrPC governed registration of a cognizable FIR and the limited preliminary inquiry permissible in appropriate circumstances. Section 173(2) concerned the final report sought by the petitioners; no final report had yet been filed. Sections 498-A, 354, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were the alleged offences. No finding of guilt was made. The mental-cruelty aspect of Section 498-A was relevant to the alleged effects at the parental home and the territorial connection. Although the High Court quoted authorities on restraint in quashing under Section 482, this petition was under Article 226. The alternative request to prosecute the complainant for a false FIR was not granted.

4. Issues : Did the absence of a preliminary inquiry in this matrimonial dispute invalidate an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence? Could the suspects rely on their documents to control the method of investigation, obtain a favourable final report or demand an interview overseas or payment of travel expenses? Did the dispute about which relatives returned from Australia eliminate the specific earlier Kanpur allegations and justify ending an incomplete investigation? Could Bhopal Mahila Thana investigate when the complainant alleged that cruelty connected with dowry demands had compelled her to live at her parental home in Bhopal? What relief, if any, should replace or continue the existing interim stay? The Court did not try the underlying accusations.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that a preliminary inquiry is not mandatory in every case within the illustrative category of matrimonial disputes. Its absence alone does not vitiate an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence. The inquiry determines whether a cognizable offence is disclosed, rather than whether guilt is established. The investigating police, rather than the accused, decide how to assess passports and other documents. A suspect or accused has no routine right to be heard in advance, to choose an officer or to direct exoneration through a Section 173(2) report. Exceptional judicial directions remain available where abuse is demonstrated. No established basis for such directions was supplied in this petition, while the investigation had been stopped by an interim order.

The significance of the passports for events after the Australia trip was disputed. The Court did not find the passports forged or authentic. Even if some relatives had not returned, counsel accepted that they had lived together at Kanpur before the trip. The FIR specifically alleged earlier dowry taunts, physical and mental abuse, and misconduct by Tanweer personally. A possibly inaccurate part did not automatically destroy the separable allegations; falsus in uno is not an inflexible rule. Neeharika's caution made it inappropriate to assess the evidence as at a trial while the investigation was incomplete. Applying Rupali Devi, the alleged expulsion connected with dowry demands and continuing mental distress at the parental home in Bhopal supplied the territorial connection for the police station. This was a preliminary determination concerning jurisdiction and allegations disclosing a cognizable offence. It did not prove residence, cruelty, sexual misconduct or the participation of every relative.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. It vacated the interim order of 11 July 2023 and directed respondent No. 1 to complete the investigation as early as possible, without further delay. It did not order a mandatory preliminary inquiry, an exonerating final report, a visit to Australia, payment of travel expenses, prosecution for a false FIR or quashing. The criminal process remained open, with guilt and the defence evidence unresolved.

Headnote :- Article 226 — The challenge to the DNA notice in the investigation into the wife's allegation of unnatural sex failed. Human sperm on a preserved anal slide supplied material for comparison; the lapse of time did not make DNA profiling futile. The investigator could seek cooperation for medical examination. The accused, whose protection from arrest was subject to cooperation, could not dictate the method of investigation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The wife alleged unnatural sexual acts in Crime 954/2017. Human sperm was found on FSL examination of her anal slide, prepared on 30.12.2017. Investigation against the husband continued under Section 173(8) CrPC. The investigator issued a notice dated 07.02.2019 seeking his cooperation with DNA profiling. The Supreme Court's interim protection from arrest required him to cooperate. He challenged the notice as futile because of the delay and as an intrusion on privacy.

2. Precedents — Considered : Dipanwita Roy v. Ronobroto Roy, (2015) 1 SCC 365, was considered on DNA testing and privacy in a different matrimonial setting. Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, and Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police were considered on the accused's lack of control over the manner of investigation.

3. Statutes considered : The provisions referred to were Article 226 of the Constitution and Sections 53-A, 161, 173(8) and 438 CrPC. Sections 112 and 114 of the Evidence Act were discussed through the precedent.

4. Issues : Was the DNA notice outside the investigator's authority or futile because of elapsed time? Did privacy or protection from arrest excuse noncooperation?

5. Ratio / Findings : The existing slide supplied biological material for comparison with the husband's DNA profile. A mismatch could provide evidence in his favour. In these circumstances, the investigator could issue a notice requiring medical examination, referring to Section 53-A although that provision concerns rape. The Court declined to interfere with the manner of a lawful investigation. The Supreme Court's interim order itself required cooperation. The Court's broad discussion of DNA led to a conclusion specific to the preserved sample in this case, rather than a determination of ultimate guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. The notice requiring cooperation for DNA testing remained in effect.

Headnote :- Successive bail / roster / vacation exception / bench hunting — In his second application under Section 439 CrPC concerning Crime 23/2022, the applicant sought listing before the coordinate Bench that had dismissed his first bail application. The Court examined the co-accused persons' successive applications and the administrative directions governing assignment. A circular of 13 May 2022 permitted certain bail and sentence-suspension applications arising from the same crime to be listed before available summer-vacation Benches, but expressly excluded repeat applications. The roster note of 27 June 2022 directed later Section 438/439 matters arising out of the same crime number and the same police station and/or the same trial or appellate court case number, and from the same judgment or order, to the judge who had decided the first revision or bail application. If that judge was unavailable, assignment was subject to the Chief Justice's direction. The applicant's first application was filed during vacation but heard only on 3 September, after the relaxation had ended. Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiyaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 864, supports the discipline of listing repeat bail before the same Bench. Counsel had, however, failed at the first hearing to alert the coordinate Bench to the earlier linked assignment. Having taken a chance before that Bench and lost, he could not insist that the repeat application return to it. Munna Singh Tomar, (1989) MPLJ 414, was distinguished because the factual position concerning assignment differed. The renewed transfer request, already refused on 28 November, could not secure review of the previous day's order in view of Section 362 CrPC. The Court held that the repeat application should be heard by the present Bench and characterised the attempted routing as bench hunting. Counsel chose not to argue bail on the merits, stating that the applicant's case was indistinguishable from those of the co-accused. The application was dismissed. The order did not separately assess the evidence, entitlement to parity or guilt in the case alleging IPC forgery and cheating offences and Section 66D of the IT Act.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Tarun Kushwah was arrested on 8 April 2022 in Crime 23/2022 at Crime Branch, Gwalior. The alleged offences concerned impersonation, cheating, forgery, use of forged documents and common intention under Sections 419, 420, 34, 467, 468 and 471 IPC, along with Section 66D of the Information Technology Act. M.Cr.C. 55955/2022 was his second application under Section 439 CrPC. On 28 November, the Court rejected his request to send it to the coordinate Bench that had dismissed his first application. Counsel renewed the listing request the next day. The judgment records a sequence of bail applications by co-accused Sagar Chauhan, Ashish Ken, Monika Dixit, Rohit Sharma, Akash and Kunal Jatav. Some were initially heard by a vacation Bench, while later repeat applications came before the present Bench. The dates were relevant to administrative assignment; they did not independently establish that every accused's case was identical.

Tarun's first bail application, M.Cr.C. 26884/2022, was filed during vacation but heard and dismissed by the coordinate Bench on 3 September 2022. Relying on the same-judge principle, counsel sought listing of the repeat application before that Bench and invoked Munna Singh Tomar and Shahzad Hasan Khan. The State opposed transfer. The Court invited submissions on the bar under Section 362 CrPC against reviewing the previous day's order, but counsel continued to press the listing request. The underlying cybercrime allegations were neither tried nor assessed on the evidence in this order.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicant invoked Shahzad Hasan Khan v. Ishtiyaq Hasan Khan, (1987) 2 SCC 864, for continuity before the judge who had dealt with earlier bail in the same crime. The Court accepted the same-bench principle. It reasoned, however, that counsel should have informed the coordinate Bench of the earlier linked assignment when Tarun's first application came up for hearing after vacation. The precedent did not entitle an applicant who had taken a chance before that Bench and received an adverse decision to dictate the forum for the next application. Munna Singh Tomar v. State of M.P., (1989) MPLJ 414, was relied on for returning a repeat application to the Bench that first heard it. It was distinguished because the linked co-accused matters had been placed before different available Benches under a temporary vacation relaxation. Neither authority was applied as a test of the merits or proof of cyber-cheating.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the repeat regular-bail application. Sections 438 and 439 also appeared in the later roster note. The circular of 13 May 2022 permitted bail and sentence-suspension matters arising from the same crime number to be listed before an available summer-vacation Bench when the normal Bench was unavailable. Repeat applications were excluded from that exception. The roster/assignment note of 27 June 2022 directed Section 397/401 revisions and Section 438/439 bail applications arising out of the same crime number and the same police station and/or the same trial or appellate court case number, and from the same judgment or order, to the judge who had decided the first revision or bail application. If that judge was unavailable, assignment was to follow the Chief Justice's direction. The Court applied those dates; filing during vacation did not create a permanent exception. Section 362 CrPC barred review of the listing order of 28 November 2022 and provided a procedural reason not to reopen the rejected request. Sections 419, 420, 34, 467, 468 and 471 IPC and Section 66D of the IT Act identified the registered case. Their ingredients were not decided.

4. Issues : Should the repeat bail application be heard by the coordinate Bench that dismissed Tarun's first application, or by the present Bench under the later roster and the assignment of linked co-accused matters? Did the summer-vacation listing exception continue to apply merely because the first application was filed during vacation, although heard in September? Could counsel renew the transfer request rejected the previous day, and what followed from his failure to alert the coordinate Bench to the linked assignment before obtaining an adverse decision there? Counsel declined to address bail on the merits.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the filing date from the hearing date. Tarun's first application was filed during vacation, but the coordinate Bench heard it on 3 September, when the exception was no longer in force. Counsel should have raised the roster principle concerning the first linked bail application at that hearing. The Court described his decision to take a chance there, followed by an insistence after dismissal that all later applications return to that Bench, as bench hunting. The note of 27 June and the history of the linked co-accused applications placed the repeat application before the present Bench. Munna Singh Tomar did not govern these circumstances arising from a temporary exception. Shahzad Hasan Khan supported proper continuity, rather than strategic selection of a forum. Section 362 barred review of the previous day's refusal. These conclusions concerned judicial assignment and the integrity of successive bail applications. They did not establish that any inadvertent mistake always forfeits listing before the same judge, or that a particular co-accused's bail result automatically binds this applicant.

After holding that it was the proper Bench, the Court turned to the merits. Counsel stated that Tarun's case was not distinguishable from those of the co-accused and chose not to argue it. The application was accordingly dismissed. The finding on conduct did not determine the allegations at trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the second application for regular bail, retaining it before the present Bench. The refusal to transfer the matter on 28 November was not reviewed.

Tarun Kushwah v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 55955/2022, 29/11/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Quashing of the prosecution under Sections 498-A/306 was refused. The applicant's cohabitation with the deceased's sister-in-law, their child and the family's acceptance of their relationship supported a prima facie relationship by marriage. Specific allegations of assault, threats and deprivation of household amenities could constitute cruelty even without a dowry demand. Following the woman's suicide, the Court also found a prima facie basis for prosecution for abetment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A woman died after consuming poison. Witnesses alleged that her in-laws and the applicant had threatened, harassed and assaulted her. The witnesses also alleged that they had cut off electricity and water to the room occupied by her and her husband and demanded rent. The applicant lived with the husband's sister, Saroj, after her divorce. They had a two-year-old child and lived in her parental home. He sought quashing on the grounds that he was not a relative of the deceased's husband and that no dowry had been demanded. Charges were subsequently framed in December 2019, but he did not amend his challenge to contest them.

2. Precedents — Considered : U. Suvetha v. State and Vijeta Gajra v. State (NCT of Delhi) informed the interpretation of "relative" as a person related by blood, marriage or adoption. The Court applied Kamala v. M.R. Mohan Kumar, (2019) 11 SCC 491, and the authorities discussed in it concerning the rebuttable presumption of marriage arising from sustained cohabitation. The petitioner cited Joseph Salvaraj, Mamta Shailesh Chandra, Ramesh Kumar, Gangula Mohan Reddy and Prabhu, among others. The Court decided the case on the alleged relationship and conduct.

3. Statutes considered : The provisions considered were Sections 498-A, 306 and 34 IPC and Section 482 CrPC. Section 114 of the Evidence Act arose in the authorities concerning the presumption of marriage.

4. Issues : Was the applicant a relative of the husband for the purposes of Section 498-A? Could harassment unrelated to a dowry demand constitute cruelty? Could the allegations sustain a prosecution under Section 306 at the threshold?

5. Ratio / Findings : The applicant's long cohabitation with Saroj, their child and the family's acceptance of their relationship permitted the Court to draw a rebuttable presumption of marriage and thus treat him as related by marriage to the deceased's husband. A dowry demand is not required under Explanation (a) to Section 498-A. Cruelty includes wilful conduct of such a nature as is likely to drive the woman to commit suicide or to cause grave injury or danger to her life, limb or health, whether mental or physical. The specific allegations of assault, threats and deprivation met the prima facie threshold. The Court held that the allegations, taken together, were also sufficient to warrant prosecution for abetment of suicide. This was a ruling at the threshold, not a finding of guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the quashing application, permitting the prosecution under Sections 498-A and 306 to continue.

Harshit Namdev v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 35340/2019, 20/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 439(2) CrPC / suo motu bail correction / false parity — While hearing co-accused Sikandar's bail appeal, the High Court noticed that the Sessions Judge had granted Gajendra bail on an account contrary to the case diary. It issued a show-cause notice before considering cancellation. The prosecution alleged that Sikandar, Omkar and Gajendra had assaulted Shyamlal, taken him to hospital under the false name Nathuram, and concealed his true identity in connection with his death and cremation. The other accused faced a different allegation: supplying false information that Nathuram had died. The Sessions order described all of them as assailants of Nathuram, stated that Gajendra's role was unspecified and relied on the High Court's bail orders for the second group. Harjit Singh v. Inderjeet Singh, Criminal Appeal 883/2021, 24 August 2021, quotes Mahipal v. Rajesh Kumar, (2020) 2 SCC 118, and Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 508. An original grant of bail can be set aside where discretion was exercised perversely, illegally or without relevant consideration. This is distinct from later cancellation for supervening misconduct or breach of conditions. The authorities quoted within that discussion—Gudikanti Narasimhulu, Ash Mohammad, Sitaram Popat Vetal, Ram Govind Upadhyay and Prasanta Kumar Sarkar—identify the relevant considerations of liberty, gravity, evidence, prima facie involvement and risks to the judicial process. The Court did not conduct a final trial. Gajendra's reliance on Hirasingh's Section 164 statement did not answer the defect in the bail order's premise, because Hirasingh did not claim to be an eyewitness. The High Court found non-application of mind and no genuine parity. It set aside the bail order of 10 August 2021 and required surrender by 24 January 2022, with a warrant to issue on default. It also directed that a prior Supreme Court order declining to interfere with an administrative-side referral concerning the Sessions Judge, together with this decision, be placed before the Chief Justice. No new disciplinary outcome was adjudicated here.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The High Court registered M.Cr.C. 50723/2021 under Section 439(2) CrPC on its own motion while considering bail for co-accused Sikandar Singh Narvariya alias Lalu in Criminal Appeal 5870/2021. The police case began with a report by neighbour Upendra Singh Jatav that Sikandar, Omkar alias Daplu and Gajendra had beaten Shyamlal and taken him to Gwalior, after which his whereabouts were unknown. According to the investigation, Shyamlal was admitted to J.A. Hospital under the false name Nathuram son of Hukum Singh and died on 8 June 2020. Omkar received the body after post-mortem, and the cremation took place away from the village. The police stated that the actual Nathuram had died in 2013. They charge-sheeted the first three for the alleged assault and concealment, and a larger second group for allegedly giving false information about the deceased's identity and a supposed fall from a roof. These were prosecution allegations, not findings at a criminal trial.

The Sessions Judge, Bhind had granted Gajendra bail on 10 August 2021 in B.A. 978/2021. The order referred to his lack of a prior record or flight risk, the completed investigation, the absence of a need for custodial interrogation, pandemic-related delay and parity with several persons granted bail by the High Court. It also described the alleged victim as Nathuram and treated both groups as assailants. The other recipients of bail, however, were accused of giving false information, rather than directly attacking the deceased. After noticing this discrepancy, the High Court issued a show-cause notice. Gajendra's lawyer relied on Hirasingh's Section 164 statement, which did not name Gajendra. After examining that statement, counsel accepted that Hirasingh had not claimed to be an eyewitness and had instead recounted information received from others. No further ground was advanced to justify the Sessions Judge's reasoning.

2. Precedents — Considered : Harjit Singh v. Inderjeet Singh alias Inder, Criminal Appeal 883/2021, decided on 24 August 2021, was quoted extensively as the immediate Supreme Court framework. Its discussion of Gudikanti Narasimhulu v. Public Prosecutor, (1978) 1 SCC 240, balances liberty against the nature of the accusation and evidence, the severity of punishment, antecedents and risks to the judicial process. Ash Mohammad v. Shiv Raj Singh, (2012) 9 SCC 446, stresses regulated liberty and social protection. State of Maharashtra v. Sitaram Popat Vetal, (2004) 7 SCC 521, requires reasons addressing the nature of the accusation, punishment, evidence, tampering and prima facie support for the charge. These authorities were discussed within the quotation from Harjit Singh; their individual historical facts were not separately applied to the present case.

Harjit Singh then reproduced Mahipal v. Rajesh Kumar, (2020) 2 SCC 118, concerning the judicious, rather than mechanical, exercise of discretion under Section 439 and the appellate test for an unsound original grant of bail. Mahipal, in turn, quoted Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598, and Prasanta Kumar Sarkar v. Ashis Chatterjee, (2010) 14 SCC 496, on the relevant factors and the defect in an unreasoned order. The reproduced passage invokes Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 508, to distinguish later cancellation for misconduct or supervening circumstances from setting aside an original order that ignored relevant facts or relied on irrelevant ones. The High Court adopted the approach of reviewing the original order. It did not find that Gajendra had breached the conditions of his release.

3. Statutes considered : The suo motu cancellation proceeding was expressly brought under Section 439(2) CrPC, with notice and a hearing given to Gajendra. The power to grant bail under Section 439 must be exercised on relevant prima facie material; proof of guilt beyond reasonable doubt is not required at that stage. Hirasingh's statement under Section 164 CrPC was assessed according to what he actually claimed as a person who was not an eyewitness. It did not constitute conclusive evidence exonerating Gajendra. The charge-sheet's allegations of murder and false identity formed part of the bail record; the substantive charges remained for trial. The co-accused Sikandar's special criminal appeal for bail prompted the notice, while the present operative order concerned Gajendra's B.A. 978/2021.

4. Issues : Was the Sessions Judge's grant of bail based on a prima facie accurate account of Gajendra's role and a valid comparison with the other persons granted bail? Could an original bail order be set aside for perversity or non-application of mind in the present Section 439(2) proceeding without an allegation of later misconduct? Did Hirasingh's failure to identify Gajendra displace the relevant case diary material when Hirasingh was not an eyewitness? What directions should follow concerning surrender and forwarding the orders for administrative information? The Court did not decide the underlying murder prosecution.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the two groups identified by the prosecution. The first three were alleged to have assaulted Shyamlal and participated in admitting him under a false identity and concealing his body. The other group was alleged to have supplied false information to the police. Nevertheless, the Sessions Judge wrote that all of them had attacked Nathuram, stated that Gajendra's role was not specified, and relied on bail grants for the latter group to extend parity to him. Those premises were contrary to the record. General references to custody, a clean record, pandemic-related delay and parity could not make the order a judicious exercise of discretion. Hirasingh's omission in his Section 164 statement had limited weight because he did not claim to have witnessed the occurrence. The Court held that the original grant was bad in law because it ignored material allegations and falsely projected parity. It set aside the grant on the ground that the order was unsound, rather than because of post-release misconduct. This was a prima facie bail assessment. It neither convicted Gajendra nor decided how the allegation concerning the false identity would be proved at trial. The judgment also referred to an earlier direction to place the Sessions Judge's conduct before the Chief Justice on the administrative side. It noted that the Judge's SLP (Cr.) 9149/2021 had been dismissed on 26 November 2021, with the Supreme Court declining to interfere. The Registrar was directed to forward both orders for information. This passage records an administrative referral and an order declining interference. It does not record a finding in the present judgment that a particular disciplinary sanction had already been imposed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the application under Section 439(2) CrPC by setting aside the bail order dated 10 August 2021 in B.A. 978/2021. Gajendra was directed to surrender before the Trial Court immediately, and in any event by 24 January 2022. If he failed to surrender by that date, the Trial Court was to issue a warrant of arrest immediately. The Principal Registrar was directed to place the Supreme Court's order dated 26 November 2021 and this judgment immediately before the Chief Justice for information.

Headnote :- Section 439 — The police knew that the applicant was in custody in another case and had obtained a production warrant, but neither produced him nor formally arrested him in the present case. They could not rely on their own omission to defeat his bail remedy. For the purposes of this application, the Court treated custody as commencing on the date of the request for the warrant. It granted bail and directed an inquiry by the Inspector General.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Hazrat Khan sought regular bail in a case concerning alleged preparation for dacoity in 2017. He stated that he had been in jail since July 2022. The State objected that he had never been formally arrested in the present case. The SHO admitted knowing that the applicant was in jail in another case and having sought a production warrant on 21.03.2022. Despite being able to do so, the police had neither produced him nor formally arrested him in this case. No article had been recovered from him.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 329/2021, was cited only for notifying the complainant of the grant of bail. The analysis of custody and police conduct was the High Court's own application of the law to this record.

3. Statutes considered : The provisions considered were Section 439 CrPC; Sections 399, 400 and 402 IPC and the other registered offences; Sections 11/13 of the MPDVPK Act; and Sections 25/27 of the Arms Act. The Court also considered the safeguards for liberty.

4. Issues : Could the police avoid review under Section 439 by omitting formal arrest when the accused was already in jail and a production warrant had been issued? How should custody and the officers' conduct affect the decision on bail?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected the State's objection as misconceived and misleading. The police could not unlawfully curtail the available legal remedies through their own omission. The SHO's unexplained failure to produce or arrest the applicant violated his liberty. For the purposes of this bail application, the Court presumed custody from 21.03.2022. It considered the period of detention, the absence of any recovery and the police conduct, notwithstanding the registration of two other cases against the applicant. It also ordered an inquiry by the Inspector General.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for regular bail. The applicant was to be released on furnishing a personal bond of Rs. 1,00,000/- with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the Trial Court/Committal Court, and was required to appear on the dates fixed by the concerned Court. The order was to remain effective until the end of the trial, but would become ineffective in the event of a bail jump. Intimation of the grant of bail was to be sent to the complainant. The Inspector General, Gwalior Range, Gwalior was directed to conduct an inquiry and submit the report to the Principal Registrar of the High Court within one month of the order.

Headnote :- Food Safety and Standards Act / charge separation / stale sample — Mawa seized on 18 October 2011 was reported to be substandard by the Food Analyst, Bhopal. On the seller's appeal under Section 46(4), the notified Referral Laboratory also reported that it was substandard and unsafe. The Trial Court framed charges, but the Sessions Revisional Court set aside the entire order. It directed that a third sample be sent to the Referral Laboratory under the proviso to Section 47(1)(c)(iii) before the question of charges was reconsidered. The High Court held that setting aside the entire order was erroneous because both reports found the mawa substandard. The charge under Section 3(zx) read with Section 51 should have remained intact. The separate unsafe-food charge under Section 3(zz) read with Section 59 could have been reconsidered after a further report, if obtaining one remained useful. No third report had been obtained on remand. The respondent had questioned whether the then five-year-old sample was fit for analysis, the food officer had been asked whether a third sample existed, and the court record had been requisitioned. By the time of the High Court's decision, the short shelf life of mawa meant that a delayed referral would serve no useful purpose, even if a sample remained. The Court therefore set aside the revisional order of 22 October 2016 and restored the charge order of 27 July 2016. It directed the Trial Court to decide the case on the charge-sheet material and expressly determine whether the prosecution proved the offence under Section 3(zz)/59. The order describes the time elapsed since October 2011 as '11 years'. It neither decides guilt nor treats substandard food as necessarily unsafe. It also lays down no blanket rule against a timely statutory referral.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Food Safety authorities seized mawa from Babulal's sweet shop on 18 October 2011. The Food Analyst at Bhopal reported that the sample was substandard. Babulal appealed under Section 46(4) of the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006. A second sample was then sent to a notified Referral Laboratory, whose report dated 24 February 2012 described the mawa as substandard and unsafe. The Trial Court framed charges on 27 July 2016. In Criminal Revision 124/2016, the Additional Sessions Judge, Mandsaur set aside that order on 22 October 2016 and directed a further referral under the proviso to Section 47(1)(c)(iii) before charges were reconsidered. The State challenged the setting aside of the entire charge order under Section 482 CrPC in M.Cr.C. 10196/2017. Its counsel argued that the Revisional Court had accepted the existence of sufficient material for charges and therefore should not have set aside every count pending a third report. Babulal opposed the application.

After the revision, the Trial Court directed the competent authority on 4 November 2016 to obtain the further report. Babulal questioned whether a mawa sample that was already about five years old was fit to be sent for analysis. On 15 November, the food officer was asked to state whether a third sample existed. The High Court requisitioned the trial record in October 2017, although it had not stayed the matter. No third sample was sent. The judgment delivered in September 2024 states that '11 years' had passed since the seizure in October 2011. Its reasoning turned on the very long delay, the product's short shelf life and the absence of a further referral report.

2. Statutes considered : Section 46(4) of the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006 provided for Babulal's appeal against the first analyst's report, after which the second sample was examined by the Referral Laboratory. The proviso to Section 47(1)(c)(iii) was the stated basis of the revisional direction for a third-sample referral. No third sample was ultimately examined, and the usefulness of a referral at the time of decision was assessed in light of the perishability of mawa. Section 3(zx) read with Section 51 concerned the substandard-food charge supported by both reports. Section 3(zz) read with Section 59 concerned the unsafe-food charge, on which the Trial Court was required expressly to determine guilt. Section 482 CrPC was the provision under which the State challenged the revisional order before the High Court.

3. Issues : Could the Revisional Court set aside both the substandard-food and unsafe-food charges when both existing reports agreed, at least, that the mawa was substandard? Would a third Referral Laboratory test, still not conducted, serve any useful purpose in 2024 given the long storage and short shelf life of the product? What should be restored, and what should be left for trial, particularly regarding the unsafe-food allegation? The High Court did not determine the original sample's ultimate composition as a court deciding guilt.

4. Ratio / Findings : The High Court held that the entire charge order should not have been set aside. Both reports supported a prima facie finding that the mawa was substandard. The charge under Section 3(zx)/51 therefore stood on a different footing from the separate unsafe-food charge under Section 3(zz)/59. The Revisional Court could have confined any remand to the latter charge if a further report could have been obtained in time to serve a useful purpose. However, no third sample had been sent to a laboratory following the Trial Court's steps in 2016 and the requisition of the file. Given the short shelf life of mawa, the High Court held that a referral at that stage would serve no useful purpose, even if a sample remained. It restored the Trial Court's charge order and directed that court to assess the charge-sheet material, expressly determining whether the prosecution proved guilt on the unsafe-food charge. It did not equate sufficient material for framing a charge with proof beyond reasonable doubt, treat substandard food as automatically unsafe, or hold that a timely statutory appeal was unavailable. The delay and the distinction between the counts were essential to the decision. The legal analysis rested on the two laboratory reports, the identified provisions of the Food Safety and Standards Act, the distinct charges and the procedural record of the unsuccessful referral.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the State's application under Section 482. It set aside the revisional order dated 22 October 2016 and restored the Trial Court's order dated 27 July 2016 framing charges. The Trial Court was directed to decide the case on the charge-sheet material and specifically determine whether the offence of unsafe food under Section 3(zz)/59 was established. No conviction or acquittal was ordered at that stage, and no delayed third referral was required.

State of Madhya Pradesh v. Babulal, M.Cr.C. no. 10196/2017, 09/09/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 145 CrPC — With a civil suit over the same property pending, initiation of preventive proceedings concerning possession and attachment of the property were unwarranted. The parties could seek interim relief from the civil court. The revisional order setting aside the SDM's order was upheld.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : While a civil suit over possession was pending, the SDM initiated proceedings under Section 145 and attached the disputed property, handing it over to a village panchayat until disposal of the suit. The respondents successfully challenged the order in criminal revision. Citing an apprehended breach of peace, the applicant invoked Section 482 to restore the attachment.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Ram Sumer Puri Mahant v. State of U.P., AIR 1985 SC 472, the Supreme Court held that parallel proceedings under Section 145 are unwarranted where a civil suit between the parties is pending and interim relief is available from the civil court.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 145 and 482.

4. Issues : Could the SDM attach the property until disposal of the civil suit when a suit over the same dispute was already pending? Was the revisional court's intervention erroneous?

5. Ratio / Findings : On the stated facts, the SDM should have dismissed the proceedings under Section 145 rather than kept the property under attachment pending disposal of the civil suit. The parties could seek temporary relief from the civil court. The revisional court committed no jurisdictional error in setting aside the attachment.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 petition and maintained the revisional order.

Headnote :- Writ appeal / Section 439 bail / compensation for alleged illegal detention — A Single Judge's bail order of 28 April 2023 also directed the State to pay Mohit Tiwari ₹10 lakh. In its appeal under Section 2(1) of the Madhya Pradesh intra-court appeal statute of 2005, the State expressly left the grant of bail and the underlying findings untouched, challenging only compensation. The Division Bench treated that severable monetary direction as one under Article 226. Section 439 CrPC permits the grant or refusal of bail and appropriate bail conditions, but does not authorise compensation. The writ appeal was therefore maintainable despite the direction's inclusion in a bail order. The Bench relied on Union of India through I.O., Narcotics Control Bureau v. Man Singh Verma, which quoted RBI v. Cooperative Bank Deposit A/C H.R. Sha, Sangitaben Shaileshbhai Datanta and State v. M. Murugesan on the limits of bail jurisdiction. Those limits preclude collateral systemic directions, compulsory scientific tests or a mini-trial. Compensation for illegal detention may in principle be available, but its factual basis and quantum require assessment in the proper forum rather than determination as part of the Section 439 decision. The ₹10 lakh direction was quashed without disturbing bail. Mohit was left at liberty to bring a civil suit against erring officers for alleged violations of Articles 20 and 21. The civil court was to decide independently. The appeal did not establish that detention was lawful or that all compensation was barred. The order also refers to 'Section 528 of BNS' when describing jurisdiction. Neither the amount of substantive damages nor culpability was finally determined.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : While allowing Mohit Tiwari's regular-bail application in M.Cr.C. 14202/2023 on 28 April 2023, a Single Judge also directed payment of ₹10 lakh for alleged illegal detention. The State filed Writ Appeal 692/2023 under Section 2(1) of the M.P. Uchcha Nyaylaya (Khand Nyay Peeth Ko Appeal) Adhiniyam, 2005. Its counsel repeatedly and expressly confined the challenge to the compensation direction, leaving the grant of bail and the factual findings undisturbed. The State argued that Section 439 CrPC conferred no power to award compensation and that any such award was, in substance, an Article 226 public-law direction against which an appeal lay. It also complained that notice had not been issued to the affected State authorities. Mohit opposed maintainability on the ground that the order was a bail order and defended the amount as compensation for illegal detention.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Division Bench applied Union of India through I.O., Narcotics Control Bureau v. Man Singh Verma as the controlling authority. That decision held that Section 439 bail jurisdiction is limited to the grant or refusal of bail pending trial and cannot extend to collateral compensation for illegal detention. The judgment quoted Man Singh Verma at length. Within that Supreme Court extract, RBI v. Cooperative Bank Deposit A/C H.R. Sha rejected directions in a bail order affecting the distribution of recovered banking funds. Sangitaben Shaileshbhai Datanta v. State of Gujarat criticised compulsory lie detection, brain mapping and narco-analysis as an impermissible mini-trial in bail proceedings. State v. M. Murugesan disapproved criminal-justice committee directions issued after the bail decision. Man Singh Verma also concerned a bail application that had become infructuous after release by a district court. That additional feature of the precedent was not asserted by the Division Bench in relation to Mohit's 2023 bail. The High Court applied the jurisdictional holding to sever and quash the compensation direction made by its own Single Judge.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the Single Judge's regular-bail order and confines that adjudication to liberty and proper bail conditions; the Division Bench did not decide a new bail application. Article 226 supplied the public-law character assigned to the separate illegal-detention compensation direction. That characterisation did not establish an automatic entitlement to compensation. Section 2(1) of the Madhya Pradesh High Court intra-court appeal statute of 2005 provided the route for review of that direction. Articles 20 and 21 were identified as the asserted rights on which Mohit could base a future civil suit against erring officers; no violation was finally found or quantified here. Paragraph 8 of the order says 'Section 528 of BNS' while comparing other jurisdictions with Sections 438/439 CrPC.

4. Issues : Was a writ appeal maintainable against the ₹10 lakh direction when it formed part of a Section 439 bail order? Could the Single Judge award compensation for illegal detention while deciding that application, without the separate process required for such relief? What effect would quashing the direction have on Mohit's possible compensation claim? Bail itself and the Single Judge's factual findings were expressly outside the challenge, and the Division Bench did not reopen them.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Division Bench held that the legal nature of the direction, rather than the heading of the larger order, governed the limited appeal. Compensation cannot be awarded in exercise of the bail power under Section 439; any such direction must be treated as relief under Article 226. The State's writ appeal against that severable direction was therefore maintainable, and the office objection and the respondent's preliminary objection were rejected. Following Man Singh Verma, the Court quashed the monetary direction as beyond the Single Judge's Section 439 jurisdiction. It observed that compensation for unlawful detention is possible, but its factual basis and appropriate quantum require consideration in the proper forum rather than a grant at the bail stage. The Court stated that the trial Court must adjudicate the quantum, taking into account factors including the status, criminal antecedents and fundamental rights of the parties. The Court did not determine whether the detention was lawful, fix final responsibility on the officers, or decide whether ₹10 lakh would be too high or too low after proper proof.

The order expressly preserved Mohit's liberty, if so advised, to bring a civil suit against erring officers for alleged violations of Articles 20 and 21. The civil court was directed to decide independently, uninfluenced by this appellate ruling on the limited question of jurisdiction. The Court expressly stated that it had not held Mohit ineligible for compensation. Neither a stay of the original bail nor a separate finding against the Single Judge's unappealed factual conclusions was made.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the writ appeal. The ₹10 lakh compensation direction in the M.Cr.C. order of 28 April 2023 was quashed, while bail remained undisturbed by the State's appeal. Mohit retained liberty to bring a civil action against erring officers for alleged fundamental-rights violations, without prejudice from this appellate order. The Court awarded no substituted amount, made no fresh finding of illegal detention and did not prejudge the civil suit.

State of Madhya Pradesh v. Mohit Tiwari, W.A. no. 692/2023, 28/07/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 307 appeal — The injuries were proved. The appellant's identity as an assailant was not established. The FIR was against unknown assailants. Witnesses differed about the time of the incident and later identification, and the surviving injured person disowned the purported dying declaration. Human blood of an unascertained group on the axe and shirt could not link the appellant to an axe assault that he was not alleged to have carried out. The conviction was set aside.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Bhojapal sustained two sharp-weapon injuries to his chest and neck in May 2014. His brother's initial report referred to two or three unknown attackers. Later accounts named Hem Pal and two others. The Trial Court acquitted the others but convicted Hem Pal under IPC Section 307 and sentenced him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 10,000/-, with default imprisonment. The evidence concerning the injured person's inability to speak, his purported written account, the police statement, a statement recorded by a Naib Tahsildar, and the bloodstained axe and shirt was contested.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court closely scrutinised the evidence of the related witnesses and applied the statutory limits governing a declaration made by a person who survived.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 307; CrPC Sections 161 and 374(2).

4. Issues : Did the prosecution prove beyond reasonable doubt that Hem Pal was responsible for the established injuries? Could the alleged dying declaration, subsequent identifications and serological evidence overcome the contradictions?

5. Ratio / Findings : Accounts placed the incident at both 9 p.m. and midnight, and differed about how and when the injured person arrived home. The brother's later assertion that the injured person had named Hem Pal conflicted with the FIR and his cross-examination. The injured person denied naming anyone to the Naib Tahsildar. Since he survived, that statement was not admissible as a dying declaration. It could nevertheless be treated as his first statement, but he had disowned the identification it contained. He did not accuse Hem Pal of inflicting the axe blows, attributing them to an acquitted person. The human blood on the seized articles was not grouped. Relatives are not disqualified from giving evidence, but their accounts did not withstand close scrutiny in this case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal, acquitted Hem Pal of the charge under Section 307 and set aside the conviction and sentence. It directed his immediate release unless he was required in another case.

Headnote :- Suo motu bail cancellation / omitted antecedents / post-release absence — While considering a co-accused's bail application, the High Court discovered that Nasir's bail order of 9 November 2022 mentioned only three criminal cases in the Gwalior area. The charge-sheet and case diary, however, included 69 Delhi registrations, one under IPC Section 302. The Court issued notice and called for a report on his appearances before the Trial Court. The report stated that he had been released on 17 November, had not appeared personally, and his advocate had repeatedly sought exemption under Section 317 CrPC. The constable who attempted service reported that Nasir's father and brother had said that he did not live at the address and that they knew neither his whereabouts nor his phone number. Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P., (2016) 15 SCC 422, distinguishes setting aside an original bail grant for overlooked antecedents from cancellation for later misconduct. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21; Manno Lal Jaiswal, Criminal Appeal 97/2022; Anil Kumar Yadav, (2018) 12 SCC 129; Zahoor Ahmad Shah Watali, (2019) 5 SCC 1; and Manoj Kumar Khokhar, (2022) 3 SCC 501, were cited for the requirement that courts consider gravity, evidence, antecedents, flight and witness risks and give reasons, rather than exercise discretion mechanically. The High Court found both a material defect in the original grant and subsequent abscondence. It set aside bail, directed immediate surrender and ordered a warrant if Nasir did not surrender by 31 December 2022. The order describes the total as 'at least 73' cases while separately referring to three local and 69 Delhi cases. These were registrations, not findings of conviction. Neither the underlying charge nor any antecedent offence was finally tried in this proceeding.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Trial Court granted Nasir Shekh bail on 9 November 2022 in B.A. 3161/2022, and he was released on 17 November. While considering a separate application by co-accused Shaqeel Khan, M.Cr.C. 53181/2022, the High Court examined the police case-diary material concerning Nasir's record. It initiated cancellation proceedings of its own motion on 16 November and issued notices. A constable who attempted service was told by Nasir's father and brother that Nasir did not live at the stated address and that they knew neither his whereabouts nor his mobile number. The Trial Court's report of 16 December, reproduced in the order, stated that the case remained at the prosecution-evidence stage. Since release, Nasir had not appeared personally, and counsel had repeatedly sought exemption from personal appearance. On the combined basis of this report and the service information, the High Court found that he had absconded after release and proceeded to hear the case finally.

The original bail order referred to three registered cases involving IPC Sections 454 and 380 in the Morar, Vishwavidyalaya and Thatipur police areas of Gwalior. The police history accompanying the charge-sheet and case diary separately listed 69 Delhi cases at stations including Bhajan Pura, Shahdara, New Welcome, Sabzi Mandi, Chandani Mahal, Lahori Gate, Darya Ganj, Kamla Market, Uttam Nagar, Jyoti Nagar, Crime Branch, Aman Vihar, Jaffrabad, Gokul Puri and Sarai Rohilla, including a registration under IPC Section 302. The High Court described the total as 'at least 73'. These were allegations or registrations, not proved convictions. The history was available in the police material but had escaped the bail court's attention.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P., (2016) 15 SCC 422, was quoted on the importance of serious criminal antecedents and on setting aside a bail order where the granting court had overlooked relevant material. This ground does not require new misconduct. State of U.P. through CBI v. Amarmani Tripathi, (2005) 8 SCC 21, set out the factors of prima facie involvement, gravity, severity, flight, character, repeated offence, witness influence and risk to the process of justice. Its discussion of reasoned bail orders referred to Prahlad Singh Bhati, Gurcharan Singh and Kalyan Chandra Sarkar. Manno Lal Jaiswal v. State of U.P., Criminal Appeal 97/2022, was quoted on a mechanical grant of bail based on wrong facts and the failure to consider evidence specific to the accused and the risk of flight, referring to Anil Kumar Yadav.

Anil Kumar Yadav v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 12 SCC 129, was separately quoted on a superior court's power to intervene where the Sessions Court's exercise of discretion suffers from serious infirmity or perversity, despite the ordinary rule of restraint. The passage reproduced from NIA v. Zahoor Ahmad Shah Watali, (2019) 5 SCC 1, repeated Amarmani's general list of bail factors. Manoj Kumar Khokhar v. State of Rajasthan, (2022) 3 SCC 501, quoted Prasanta Kumar Sarkar on mechanical grants of bail and Ash Mohammad on weighing custody with antecedents and societal concerns. Those nested authorities supported the general standard; they did not involve separate trials of Nasir's Delhi record. The Court applied these authorities to the omission of material antecedents. His later absence supplied a further factual ground.

3. Statutes considered : The proceeding was described as suo motu cancellation of bail following a Trial Court grant; the judgment does not expressly identify Section 439(2) as the provision invoked. Section 317 CrPC appeared in the trial report because counsel repeatedly sought exemption from Nasir's personal appearance. The Court considered those applications together with his relatives' statements and his nonattendance, rather than treating them as an automatic statutory bar to every exemption. IPC Sections 454 and 380 characterised the three local registrations, and Section 302 appeared in the Delhi history. No finding on the merits of those antecedent offences, trial conviction, or special-statute bail test was made.

4. Issues : Did the Trial Court's failure to consider the Delhi antecedent history filed by the police invalidate its original exercise of bail discretion? Did Nasir's failure to appear personally and the inability to locate him after release independently justify cancellation? How should a court weigh registrations, seriousness and flight risk without treating accusations as final guilt? What directions for surrender and enforcement should follow? The merits of the underlying pending prosecution were not tried.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court found a material discrepancy in the record. The Trial Court had considered only three Gwalior registrations when the police diary and charge-sheet also contained a much larger Delhi criminal history, including an alleged murder. Criminal antecedents were relevant to a reasoned balance between liberty and safety, and their omission could have affected the result. Under Neeru Yadav and the other cited bail authorities, the original grant could therefore be set aside for failure to consider material facts, even without proof of a later breach. The Court also found a separate ground arising after release: no personal appearance since 17 November, repeated exemption applications, and family members unable to locate or contact Nasir. It treated these circumstances together as abscondence. The finding concerned bail review and control of appearance.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the Trial Court's bail order of 9 November 2022 in B.A. 3161/2022. Nasir was directed to surrender immediately before the Trial Court. The Trial Court was directed to issue a warrant of arrest if he failed to surrender before it by 31 December 2022.

State of Madhya Pradesh v. Nasir Shekh, M.Cr.C. no. 56158/2022, 20/12/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 319 CrPC — The Trial Court wrongly refused to summon two persons named as assailants on the basis of an unproved hospital alibi, which the police had accepted in omitting them from the charge-sheet. Their specific roles in the FIR and the injury evidence met the heightened threshold under Section 319. The revision was allowed, and the Trial Court was directed to proceed against them.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In an assault arising from a field-boundary dispute, the FIR named Girraj and Mangal and attributed specific blows to them on several injured persons. The police omitted them from the charge-sheet after receiving affidavits stating that they were at a district hospital with an ill person. No supporting records were collected. During trial, the complainant applied under Section 319 to add them as accused. The Trial Court rejected the application, and he filed a revision.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, decided by a Constitution Bench, and Sagar v. State of U.P. stated the exceptional standard governing Section 319. Jitender Kumar v. State of Haryana, Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra and the other cited authorities addressed the burden of establishing a genuine alibi.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 319, 397 and 401; Evidence Act Section 11 in alibi discussion.

4. Issues : Did the evidence justify adding the two persons as accused despite the police accepting their alibi? Could unverified affidavits defeat an application that otherwise met the threshold under Section 319?

5. Ratio / Findings : Section 319 requires strong and cogent evidence led before the Court, exceeding the prima facie threshold for framing a charge but falling short of satisfaction that the evidence, if unrebutted, would lead to conviction. The specific overt acts attributed to the two persons and the corroborating injuries supplied sufficient material. An alibi must be established by reliable evidence excluding presence at the scene, without relieving the prosecution of its independent burden to prove its case. The police had collected no hospital document, and the defence could not be accepted at this stage on bare affidavits. The Trial Court failed to apply the proper standard in exercising its power.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the revision and set aside the rejection order. The Trial Court was directed to proceed against Girraj and Mangal in accordance with law. They were required to appear before the Trial Court on the next date of hearing, failing which the Trial Court was to issue warrants of arrest against them.

Heman Singh Dhakad v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.R. no. 2691/2021, 10/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Appeals against acquittal / deliberate vehicle collision alleged / eyewitness credibility / CCTV identification / motive / disappearance of evidence — The State under BNSS Section 419 and complainant Manish Jaat under Section 413 challenged the acquittal of Pawan @ Kalla of IPC Sections 302 and 201, and Asharam of Section 201. The prosecution said Pawan intentionally struck Ajay Pal Jat's motorcycle with Bolero MP08-CA-3605 over rivalry concerning X (PW9), then arranged denting and painting through Asharam. Applying Mallappa v. State of Karnataka, (2024) 3 SCC 544, and Sambhaji Hindurao Deshmukh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 186, the Division Bench held that an acquittal based on a reasonably possible view cannot be reversed merely because another assessment is possible; material factual error, illegality or perversity is needed. After independently assessing the evidence, it upheld the rejection of PW2's testimony. PW2 was the deceased's maternal uncle, but for two days he did not disclose that he had witnessed a deliberate killing, despite opportunities to do so; the initial report described an accident, his supposed auto was absent from the map and hotel CCTV, its driver was not identified, and he could not read English letters, although the registration plate bore English lettering. The CCTV showed an unidentified white Bolero driving the wrong way, without a legible registration number or an identifiable driver; multiple similar vehicles used the road, the alleged owner was not asked to identify it, and tower analysis omitted the incident interval. The medical evidence established injuries caused by impact but did not identify the person responsible or establish the alleged intention; even assumed motive did not prove the particular vehicle or driver. Without that link, the IPC Section 201 allegations of denting and painting failed as charged against both respondents. Both appeals were dismissed, and the acquittal dated 2 July 2025 was affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : These were two connected appeals decided together by the Gwalior Division Bench on 6 May 2026. The State filed Criminal Appeal 10539/2025 under Section 419 BNSS and complainant Manish Jaat filed Criminal Appeal 7086/2025 under Section 413 BNSS, challenging the First Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri's acquittal in Sessions Trial 166/2024. Pawan @ Kalla was tried under Sections 302 and 201 IPC; Asharam was tried under Section 201. The acquittal was dated 2 July 2025. The charges had been framed on 30 July 2024 and the defence led no witnesses. The prosecution examined PW1–PW15, including eyewitness claimant Arvind Jat (PW2), postmortem doctor Aakash Soni (PW3), alleged vehicle owner Jitendra Ahirwar (PW7), X (PW9) and investigating officer Ravi Chouhan (PW15). The charge-sheet alleged that at about 12:30 p.m. on 26 March 2024, Pawan drove Bolero MP08-CA-3605 the wrong way into Ajay Pal Jat's motorcycle deliberately to kill him, then caused the vehicle to be dented and repainted to make offence evidence disappear. Asharam was separately alleged to have performed the bodywork. The prosecution suggested that Pawan and Ajay Pal had both had relations with X (PW9), that Ajay Pal had lately been residing with her and that this caused animosity. Those are prosecution allegations, not findings that the relationships, intentional impact, or subsequent concealment were proved. The State and complainant argued that the trial judge wrongly disbelieved PW2 and gave insufficient weight to the motive; the respondents pointed to cogent acquittal reasons and absence of perversity.

PW2, the deceased's maternal uncle, said he was travelling as the sole passenger in an auto from Badarwas toward Myana, saw a wrong-way white Bolero hit a motorcycle near Barkheda Bridge and recognised Pawan as its driver. He said that the frightened auto driver continued to Myana. PW2 stayed elsewhere that night, heard the next evening that his nephew had died, and went to the police the following day. He claimed to have noted MP08-CA-3605. In cross-examination he conceded that he did not report his claimed observation to police at nearby Myana Triangle outpost or Myana station, to the deceased's mother (his own sister), or to other family members at the relevant time. His account of when he eventually told them varied. He did not attend the funeral. The spot map did not depict his auto; he supplied neither its plate nor the driver's identity and could not read the English letters on the file, although the Bolero registration letters were in English. The Dehati Nalishi entered by Manish at 12:37 p.m. on 26 March stated only that Ajay Pal had met with an accident and his body was at CHC Badarwas.

PW3 found serious head, limb and other blunt-impact injuries, including fractures. In cross-examination he acknowledged adding the words 'might be due to forceful impact of hard and blunt object' in different ink later, without his short signature, explaining that it was his first postmortem and he sought senior advice. The Court regarded the injuries as resulting from an accident while noting that the prosecution's theory was an intentional collision disguised as an accident. The CCTV footage from Hotel Prem Shri showed a white Bolero moving in the wrong direction, but not a readable registration plate or identifiable driver; several white Boleros used the national highway. PW15 had not asked the alleged owner, PW7, to identify the vehicle visible in the footage, questioned a driver connected with it, or seized its tyres to test for human blood. PW15 said that the tower-location analysis accidentally missed 12:30–12:40 p.m., covering the reported incident time. These gaps concerned identification. Evidence of a collision and a vehicle travelling in the wrong direction did not, by itself, identify MP08-CA-3605 or Pawan.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mallappa v. State of Karnataka, 2024:INSC:104, (2024) 3 SCC 544, was quoted at length and applied. It recognises the appellate court's power to review the entire evidence. It asks first whether the trial court appreciated all the material evidence, next whether its finding was affected by illegality or an error of fact or law, and then whether its view supporting acquittal was reasonably possible. An equally plausible view favouring innocence creates reasonable doubt and reinforces the presumption of innocence; a difference in judicial preference is therefore insufficient. Mallappa's quoted passage reproduces Selvaraj v. State of Karnataka, (2015) 10 SCC 230, which in turn quotes Jagan M. Seshadri v. State of T.N., (2002) 9 SCC 639, requiring an appellate reversal to address and dispel the trial reasons. It also quotes Sanjeev v. State of H.P., (2022) 6 SCC 294, whose summary refers to Vijay Mohan Singh v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 5 SCC 436, and Anwar Ali v. State of H.P., (2020) 10 SCC 166, on engagement with acquittal reasons; Atley v. State of U.P., AIR 1955 SC 807, on reinforced innocence; and Sambasivan v. State of Kerala, (1998) 5 SCC 412, on restraint where two views exist. These latter cases occur as nested authorities within the quoted Mallappa discussion.

Sambhaji Hindurao Deshmukh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 186, was separately quoted and applied: the High Court can review the entire evidence but needs strong reasons based on the evidence to displace a properly reasoned acquittal, such as wrong assumptions about material facts or failure to appreciate evidence. Its quoted supporting authorities were Ganesh Bhavan Patel v. State of Maharashtra, (1978) 4 SCC 371; Babu v. State of U.P., (1983) 2 SCC 21; Awadhesh v. State of M.P., (1988) 2 SCC 557; Thanedar Singh v. State of M.P., (2002) 1 SCC 487; and State of Rajasthan v. Raja Ram, (2003) 8 SCC 180. Bhim Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 10 SCC 461; Ramji Surjya Padvi v. State of Maharashtra, (1983) 3 SCC 629; Anil Kumar v. State of U.P., (2004) 13 SCC 257; and Sachchey Lal Tiwari v. State of U.P., (2004) 11 SCC 410, were additionally cited by the Bench collectively for the same acquittal-review principle.

3. Statutes considered : BNSS Section 419 was the State's stated appeal route and Section 413 the complainant's stated route; the judgment disposed of both on the same evidentiary and acquittal-review grounds. IPC Sections 302 and 201 defined Pawan's murder and disappearance-of-evidence charges, while Section 201 alone was charged against Asharam for the allegedly dented and painted jeep. The Court held the alleged involvement of the identified jeep itself unproved and consequently sustained the acquittal on that charge.

4. Issues : Were the trial judge's reasons for disbelieving PW2 and acquitting both respondents legally defective or perverse, so that either the State's or complainant's appeal could succeed? Was PW2's claimed presence, recognition and plate identification reliable in light of delayed disclosure, family connection, the missing auto and his inability to read English letters? Did the medical evidence, hotel CCTV, tower-location analysis and other investigation prove that the specific Bolero and Pawan caused a deliberate collision, beyond a fatal accident involving an unidentified wrong-way vehicle? Could the asserted motive bridge the identity gap? Without proof connecting the alleged jeep to the event, had the prosecution established the separately charged Section 201 acts attributed to Pawan and Asharam?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court stated and applied the limits governing appellate review of an acquittal.

Appellate reappraisal is possible and was undertaken here; the trial court's possible and properly supported view was not reversible simply because an alternative inference could be imagined. A material error in appreciating the evidence, an incorrect assumption about a material fact, an error of law or perversity would justify intervention, but the appellants established none.

PW2's kinship to Ajay Pal supplied context but did not alone disqualify him. What mattered was the combination of his claimed direct knowledge of an intentional killing, two days' silence despite access to an outpost and station, no timely warning to family including his sister, an initial report of accident alone, an untraced auto and driver, absence of the auto on the map and hotel footage, the evidence that no permit was issued for operating an auto on the national highway, and his inability to read even one English letter while purporting to specify the plate. His account of later communication and the investigating officer's statements added to doubt. The Bench considered the trial court justified in disbelieving this claimed eyewitness.

The doctor established traumatic collision injuries, not which driver or vehicle struck the motorcycle or whether this collision was intentional. The later addition to the postmortem report, made in different ink and without the doctor’s short signature, was disclosed together with his explanation; it did not by itself establish the prosecution’s allegation of a deliberate collision. Hotel footage showed only a wrong-way white Bolero with illegible registration and unidentifiable driver. Multiple similar vehicles used the route. Investigators did not have PW7 identify it or seize tyres to examine for blood, and the cell-tower compilation lacked the precise 12:30–12:40 window. The Court concluded that the involvement of jeep MP08-CA-3605 and Pawan in the collision was not proved. Even if a motive connected with X were assumed, that did not supply the missing proof of identity or murder. Because the specific jeep's involvement was not established, the trial court's conclusion that neither Pawan nor Asharam was proved guilty of the alleged Section 201 concealment by denting and painting it was also sound. These were the Court's case-specific findings.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court has affirmed the First Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri's 2 July 2025 acquittal in ST 166/2024, dismissed State criminal appeal and complainant Manish Jaat's criminal appeal, and directed return of the trial record with a copy of the judgment. Pawan remained acquitted of Sections 302 and 201 IPC and Asharam of Section 201 IPC.

Headnote :- A renewed challenge under Section 482 to the order taking cognizance under the Arms Act was impermissible after rejection of the earlier challenge on merits. The Court was not required to anticipate a ground of limitation that had not been raised. In any event, for limitation under Section 468, the relevant date was the timely filing of the closure report in 2007, rather than the Magistrate’s taking cognizance in 2017. The repeated applications led to costs of ₹10,000 and a direction to initiate contempt proceedings in the event of nonpayment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Police filed a closure report in 2007 in a 2006 Arms Act case. In December 2017, the Magistrate rejected the closure report and took cognizance. Hemant Sharma’s first Section 482 challenge failed in 2018; another petition challenging the rejection of his discharge application and the order in revision failed in January 2021. He again sought quashing, raising limitation under Section 468 for the first time.

2. Precedents — Considered : Anil Khadkiwala v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2019) 17 SCC 294, on successive petitions, was distinguished because a previously raised defence had gone undecided there. Sarah Mathew v. Institute of Cardio Vascular Diseases, (2014) 2 SCC 62, supplied the rule that limitation is computed by reference to the filing date rather than the date of taking cognizance.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 239, 362, 468 –470, 473 and 482; Arms Act Section 25(1-B)(a).

4. Issues : Could a fresh Section 482 petition reopen merits with a ground never raised previously? Did the Magistrate’s ten-year delay render the prosecution time-barred?

5. Ratio / Findings : The first quashing case had been decided on merits; a court cannot be faulted for failing to decide a ground that was never advanced, and Section 362 bars this successive effort. Separately, limitation turns on initiation of the prosecution or filing of the report within time. The timely police report filed in 2007 was therefore not invalidated by the Magistrate's later taking cognizance. The repeated applications amounted to misuse of judicial process.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the petition with costs of ₹10,000, payable to the Registry within a month. The Principal Registrar was directed to initiate suo motu contempt proceedings if the costs remained unpaid after 30 days.

Hemant Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 15637/2021, 26/03/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Murder appeal / child eyewitness / plea at framing / sudden quarrel / Section 302 to Section 304 Part I / sentence undergone — Tikam Singh's daughter Saraswati (PW2), then about eleven, testified that she saw him strike his wife Savitribai twice or thrice on the head with a wooden pillar. Her prompt report to PW1, his sight of the accused leaving with the pillar, PW4's supporting observation, postmortem evidence of head injuries and human blood on the seized pillar supported the finding of homicidal death despite claims of tutoring and accidental fall. At the framing of the charge, the accused said that after a quarrel with his wife he struck her with the pillar and killed her; the trial judge declined to convict merely on that plea and required a full prosecution trial. On the alternative conviction sought, the Division Bench quoted Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, reproducing Dhirendra Kumar's ten-factor inquiry into circumstances, weapon, vital injury, force, sudden fight, provocation and undue advantage. It considered a quarrel about food, a small marriage-mandap pillar lying at the spot, absence of premeditation, and the plea indicating remorse, notwithstanding repeated fatal head blows, and converted IPC Section 302 to Section 304 Part I. The Bench stated that the accused was obliged to establish that he had not taken undue advantage. He had been continuously in custody since 10 July 2010, for 11 years and 10 months; the sentence was fixed at time served and release ordered unless needed in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Sessions Judge, Vidisha convicted Tikam Singh of murder under Section 302 IPC on 2 December 2011 in ST 102/2011 and imposed life imprisonment, a Rs 2,000 fine and one year's rigorous imprisonment in default. He appealed under Section 374 CrPC. His wife Savitribai had been brought dead to District Hospital Vidisha. The marg enquiry, postmortem, spot map, witness statements, arrest, disclosure and seizure of a wooden pillar followed. The postmortem doctor PW3 identified severe right forehead, ear and cheek wounds, a fractured skull with exposed brain and haemorrhage, and coma caused by a head injury and injury to a vital organ. She rejected suggested injury from a simple fall on wood or ground. The appellant disputed the reliability of his approximately eleven-year-old daughter PW2 and two related witnesses and sought alteration of the conviction to Section 304 Part I on the ground that the incident was sudden and unpremeditated; the State supported the conviction.

At the 16 June 2011 charge hearing, Tikam admitted the charge. At that hearing, he said that he had quarrelled with his wife and struck her with a wooden pillar, killing her. Tikam denied the correctness of prosecution documents. The trial court expressly declined to convict on his plea alone and called on the prosecution to prove the case; the appeal therefore reviewed a conviction after evidence, rather than a conviction based solely on the plea. The High Court later treated the plea as one circumstance bearing on his state of mind and remorse in choosing between homicide grades.

Saraswati (PW2) testified as a direct eyewitness: while in the courtyard she saw her father strike her mother on the head two or three times with the pillar; siblings were also at home. She could not tell what words her parents exchanged. She denied an accidental fall during a scuffle or tutoring by her uncle. She promptly informed uncle Laxmansingh (PW1), who arrived and saw Savitribai bleeding and Tikam leaving with a pillar, though he was not present for the blows. Rekha Pal (PW4), described as a niece, saw Tikam pass carrying a pillar but was not an eyewitness to the assault. The investigating officer PW5 described marg and FIR records, the 10 July 2010 arrest, the disclosure and seizure, and forensic submission. PW1 said police obtained his signature on the disclosure memorandum at their instruction, but he was not questioned in cross-examination about the seizure of the pillar or his evidence that he saw Tikam leave with it. The FSL report found human blood on the pillar.

2. Precedents — Considered : Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, was expressly quoted and applied for conversion from Section 302 to Section 304 IPC. The quoted passage sets out the parameters from Dhirendra Kumar v. State of Uttarakhand. The ten matters reproduced are circumstances of the episode, weapon type, whether carried or taken at the scene, targeting of a vital part, degree of force, participation of the deceased in a sudden fight, prior enmity, sudden provocation, heat of passion, and whether the assailant took undue advantage or acted cruelly or unusually. They direct a contextual assessment. The Bench applied the list to a domestic quarrel over food, the pillar said to be at the spot, absence of premeditation and the appellant's earlier admission, while having already found multiple severe head blows proved.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC furnished the convicted person's appeal. IPC Section 302 governed the trial conviction and life sentence; Section 304 Part I governed the conviction substituted on appeal. The judgment referred to Section 428 CrPC for the certificate recording continuous detention and the custody history relevant to credit for detention already undergone. Despite the statement made when the charge was framed, the trial court required the prosecution to prove its case.

4. Issues : Was Savitribai's death homicidal and did the daughter's direct testimony, supported by PW1, PW4, medical findings and the pillar evidence, establish that Tikam inflicted the injuries? Did the suggestion of a fall, her young age, kinship or claimed tutoring create a reasonable doubt? Given repeated fatal blows to the head, did the sudden quarrel over food, the small pillar said to be present at the scene, absence of earlier planning and the accused's prior guilty statement justify replacing murder with Section 304 Part I? What sentence was appropriate after alteration in light of continuous custody for almost twelve years?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first considered whether the death was homicidal, separately from who had caused it. PW3's postmortem showed a forehead wound extending to the bone and exposing brain matter, associated ear and face wounds, skull fracture and intracranial bleeding causing coma; she rejected a fall explanation. PW2 consistently identified her father as the person who struck her mother two or three times. She said she was in the courtyard and promptly told PW1. Cross-examination explored her inability to recount the conversation, presence of other children, a purported scuffle and tutoring, but she did not adopt the suggested alternatives. PW1 saw the immediate aftermath and Tikam leaving with a pillar. PW4's account supported the surrounding circumstances and was partly hearsay as to the killing; she was not treated as a second eyewitness. The seized pillar contained human blood. The Bench found the daughter reliable in the context of those supporting circumstances, and held that Tikam's assault caused death. The charge-hearing admission was not used to dispense with proof because the trial judge had expressly rejected a conviction based solely on the plea.

The Bench then separately considered the degree of homicide. It quoted the factors stated in Lavghanbhai and drawn from Dhirendra Kumar and said that the accused was obliged to establish absence of undue advantage or cruelty. The Bench described a sudden, unpremeditated quarrel about food, a small wooden pillar used for a marriage mandap lying there rather than a lethal weapon brought in advance, and Tikam's guilty statement as showing an 'innocent mind' and remorse. It also acknowledged the multiple vital head injuries, human blood on the pillar, and fatal result. On the overall view it altered the conviction to Section 304 Part I. The alteration rested on those combined circumstances.

As to punishment, the Section 428 certificate and appeal record showed Tikam had been in jail continuously since 10 July 2010 and was never released on bail during the trial or appeal, about 11 years and 10 months by the date of the decision. The Bench also mentioned his subsequent conduct. For the substituted Section 304 Part I conviction, it deemed time already undergone sufficient.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has partly allowed the appeal. The Section 302 conviction and its life sentence were set aside and a Section 304 Part I conviction substituted with sentence equal to detention already undergone. The Court ordered immediate release if Tikam was not required in another case, free delivery of the judgment to him, and return of the trial record with a copy for compliance. Subject to those modifications, the Court affirmed the Sessions judgment and sentence.

Tikam Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1054/2011, 12/05/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Attempt to murder / injured eyewitness / medical-ocular variance / partly hostile witness / motive / concealed recovery / ungrouped human blood — Tillu appealed his IPC Sections 307 and 341 convictions arising from an assault on Sanjay Tiwari (PW1). PW1 identified him in a ten-person test identification parade and in court as the man who struck his head with a Baka; the acquitted co-accused was not identified. PW2 did not support the identification of the assailant, but reliably confirmed their journey, PW1's injured condition and hospital transport; the court used that portion without making him an eyewitness. A lacerated rather than an incised wound did not wholly exclude an assault with a Baka, because blunt or worn-edge impact remained possible; Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy, Bhajan Singh, Ramanand Yadav and Shamsher Singh were applied with their medical-exclusion qualification. Bikan Pandey and Praful Sudhakar Parab supported the limited conclusion that absent proof of precise motive does not negate trustworthy direct evidence. Under IPC Section 307, the controlling question is whether the requisite murderous intention or knowledge accompanied an overt act; a fatal injury is not necessary: Harjeet Singh, Kanha and Saleem were applied to multiple head wounds, skull fractures and contusions. Recovery of a Baka concealed in bushes was not invalidated merely because the place was accessible to the public; Yakub Abdul Razak Memon and its quoted Jeet Singh passage distinguish visibility from accessibility. Human blood without group determination corroborated the direct evidence under Khujji, Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli, Molai and Teja Ram, without proving that the blood was PW1's. The Court affirmed both convictions, five years' rigorous imprisonment and the fine for Section 307, the Section 341 fine, and dismissed the appeal. The initial police account named unknown assailants, the parade failed for the co-accused, and the court's support for Tillu's conviction is accused-specific; the quoted TADA passages concern possession under that special statute.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal was heard finally on 22 August 2022 after an application for suspension of sentence on the ground of delay in hearing the appeal had been listed and counsel earlier sought an adjournment to argue the appeal. The 4th Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior in ST 418/2016 convicted Tillu under Sections 307 and 341 IPC on 24 March 2021. He received five years' rigorous imprisonment, a Rs 1,000 fine and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default under Section 307; for Section 341, a Rs 100 fine and 15 days' simple imprisonment in default, without a substantive custodial term. Co-accused Sagar Soni was acquitted; a third person, Nisha Chauhan, had been dealt with by the Juvenile Justice Board. No appeal against Sagar's acquittal was being determined here. Tillu's appeal challenged identity, the medical consistency of the weapon account, lack of independent support and motive, the Section 307 mental element, recovery of the Baka and the blood evidence.

PW1 Sanjay Tiwari reported from Sahara Hospital that two initially unknown persons stopped his motorcycle late on 10 September 2016 near a forest-department gate, requested a lift or aid for a broken motorcycle, demanded Rs 500 for liquor after refusal, and assaulted him. The Dehati Nalishi and initial FIR invoked Sections 341, 294, 323, 327 and 34 IPC against unknown persons; Section 307 was added during investigation and an Arms Act charge was framed at trial, but the appealed convictions were only Sections 307 and 341. The prosecution examined fifteen witnesses, including the injured PW1, companion Dilip PW2, two doctors, seizure and police personnel, and a Naib-Tahsildar who held the identification parade.

PW1 said Tillu struck his head with an iron Baka, while another boy struck his shoulder with a lathi, and a girl was present. He was treated for four lacerations across temporal, frontal and parietal scalp and left ear. CT imaging described a left lambdoid and parietal skull fracture extending toward temporal bone, left hemotympanum and small fronto-parieto-temporal haemorrhagic contusions. The examining doctor said he was conscious and talking, had not labelled his condition serious in the MLC, and conceded a fall or accident could cause the recorded injuries. PW1 denied falling in a scuffle or at the railway track. He also could not explain why his claimed earlier description of assailants was absent from his first report; the officer who recorded the statement confirmed that no names were initially disclosed. In a 15 September 2016 parade, PW1 identified Tillu among ten persons; he did not identify Sagar. PW1 identified Tillu again in court and continued to attribute the Baka assault to Tillu despite being treated as hostile in relation to Sagar. The officer conducting the parade acknowledged certain administrative omissions concerning her entry into the jail and the request letter; the Court did not find them fatal to Tillu's identification.

Dilip PW2 turned hostile on the question of who delivered the blow, but confirmed returning from a meal with PW1, PW1 moving ahead, finding him injured after assailants had left, and taking him to hospital. PW3 described arrest and Baka recovery from bushes near the scene, as well as blood-stained jeans and motorcycle seizure; the IO and other witnesses described related memoranda and exhibits. A police witness said Tillu was known to him because several cases had been registered, but the Court did not use them to prove the assault. The FSL found human blood on the Baka without determining its group. There was no scientific individual identification of the stain as PW1's.

2. Precedents — Considered : On ocular and medical inconsistency the Judge quoted Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy v. State of A.P., (2014) 12 SCC 457, for the possibility that an axe's blunt or reversed part can produce a laceration without eliminating an eyewitness; Bhajan Singh v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 421, for the primacy of ocular evidence, subject to the qualification concerning medical evidence that renders it improbable or wholly rules it out; Ramanand Yadav v. Prabhu Nath Jha, (2003) 12 SCC 606, for the opinionative nature of medical evidence and the exception where it specifically rules out the injury described by the eyewitness; and Shamsher Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 7 SCC 536, for looking at the doctor's complete opinion and potential blunt axe contact. Hari Chand and Abdul Sayeed are cited within the quoted passage from Bhajan Singh. The Judge also mentioned Modi's medical jurisprudence on scalp wound appearances. These authorities were applied to the claimed Baka blow and lacerated, fractured head. The Court considered that the blade might have become blunt or that its blunt side had struck the injured, so that the weapon account was compatible with the injuries.

For hostile testimony Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 11 SCC 111, Radha Mohan Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 2 SCC 450, and Arjun v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2017) 3 SCC 247, were quoted and applied: a hostile witness's record is not effaced; reliable relevant portions may assist either side upon careful scrutiny. Rameshbhai's quoted line of cases includes Bhagwan Singh, Rabindra Kumar Dey, Syad Akbar, Khujji, Ramesh Prasad Misra, Balu Sonba Shinde, Gagan Kanojia, Sarvesh Narain Shukla, Subbu Singh and C. Muniappan; the C. Muniappan passage also cites cases about minor discrepancies. Arjun's quoted Paramjeet Singh passage and its references to Bhawani, Mahesh, Rajendra, Govindappa, Mrinal Das and Khachar Dipu likewise reinforce cautious reliance.

Bikan Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2003) 12 SCC 616, and Praful Sudhakar Parab v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 12 SCC 783, were quoted for the limited role of precise motive where direct testimony proves crime. Praful's extracts refer to Ravinder Kumar, Jeet Singh and Paramjeet Singh, the last distinguishing motive's role as a link in circumstantial evidence. The Court applied this distinction.

For attempt to murder, State of M.P. v. Harjeet Singh, (2019) 20 SCC 524, and State of M.P. v. Kanha, (2019) 3 SCC 605, were expressly quoted: serious hurt is not indispensable, while weapon, blows, body part and circumstances inform intent or knowledge. State of M.P. v. Saleem, (2005) 5 SCC 554, was quoted at length on intent with an overt act and the distinction between act and resulting wound. Harjeet's quotation includes R. Prakash and Jage Ram; Saleem mentions Balram Bama Patil, Girija Shankar, R. Prakash and Sarju Prasad. They illustrate the same standard. The quoted passage from Saleem also compares Sections 333 and 325.

Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1, was quoted and applied for recovery of an object concealed in a publicly accessible place, especially its reproduction of State of H.P. v. Jeet Singh and State of Maharashtra v. Bharat Fakira Dhiwar. Its further nested discussion cites Durga Prasad Gupta and Sanjay Dutt and addresses conscious possession and the presumption under Section 5 TADA in the context of that special statute. On ungrouped human blood, Khujji v. State of M.P., (1991) 3 SCC 627, distinguishes Kansa Behera and Surinder Singh on their weak remaining proof while allowing human blood as corroboration of direct evidence.

Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli, Molai v. State of M.P., (1999) 9 SCC 581, and State of Rajasthan v. Teja Ram, (1999) 3 SCC 507, were additionally quoted or applied for the evidentiary value of human-origin blood without group identification, assessed in the context of the complete record rather than as automatic proof of the donor's identity.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC was the convicted person's appeal route. IPC Sections 307 and 341 were the actual convictions; Section 307 was reproduced and analysed by the Court as requiring murder-related intention or knowledge and an act toward it, with one punishment limb where no injury results and a heightened limb when hurt results. Section 319 IPC's definition of hurt was quoted to explain that the second Section 307 limb does not require a fatal injury. The first report included Sections 294, 323, 327 and 34 IPC; a Section 25-B Arms Act charge was framed. No appellate conviction under those provisions was affirmed here. Section 27 Evidence Act was discussed through quoted discovery authorities in connection with the hidden Baka, not an admissibility ruling on the accused's entire memorandum or adoption of any separate TADA liability. The FSL report established human-origin blood without a group and did not prove donor identity.

4. Issues : Could the injured PW1 reliably identify Tillu despite unknown assailants in the initial report, night conditions, an incomplete original description and failure to identify Sagar? Was the Baka account irreconcilable with four blunt-type scalp lacerations and CT findings? Did Dilip PW2's hostility erase his dependable account of PW1's journey and immediate aftermath, and was proof of precise motive required in the presence of direct testimony? Did the head assault and circumstances meet Section 307's mental element and overt act, independent of the injury label? Did concealment in bushes remain a meaningful discovery despite public access? What weight could the Court give to human blood on the recovered Baka absent a blood group and individual match? Were the separate Section 307 and Section 341 sentences to be disturbed?

5. Ratio / Findings : PW1 was an injured eyewitness whose presence at the scene was supported by the injuries and PW2's journey and hospital account. The Court found that no reason had been shown for PW1 to falsely implicate Tillu. The parade placed ten persons together and PW1 identified Tillu, while failing to identify Sagar, and he identified Tillu in court. Cross-examination did not materially discredit the positive identification of Tillu; the Court treated the evidentiary position of the acquitted Sagar separately. It did not treat the first report's lack of names as if Tillu had been named there. PW2 was hostile on the blow and assailant but his trustworthy portions remained part of the record and corroborated PW1's presence without directly identifying the assailant. The absence of a separately proved motive did not outweigh the accepted direct account.

Dr Gupta recorded four lacerations and acknowledged that an accident or fall might cause such injuries; the CT showed skull fractures and contusions. The defence inferred that a sharp Baka must always create an incised wound. Applying the quoted Supreme Court decisions, the Court considered contact with the blunt side or a worn edge possible and found that medical opinion did not rule out PW1's direct account. This was a compatibility assessment. Nor does ocular primacy mean medical proof is irrelevant where it truly excludes the claimed mechanism.

On Section 307, the Judge separated the nature of the actual injuries from proof of the required intent or knowledge and an overt act. The account of a Baka blow to the head, multiple lacerations across different areas of the head, and fractures and cerebral contusions permitted an inference of the requisite mental state. The case contained actual hurt, but the Court explained that even life-threatening hurt is not a statutory sine qua non. It affirmed the attempted-murder conviction and the wrongful-restraint conviction.

Seizure witnesses and the IO supported recovery of the Baka from bushes near the scene on Tillu's information. Defence counsel questioned recovery from a place open to the public, but no seizure witness was asked whether the object had been plainly visible. The Court applied the visibility distinction and accepted the recovery of the concealed object despite public access to the place. The FSL established that the blood was of human origin but identified neither its group nor its donor. The accepted injured eyewitness account and recovery were other links; Tillu offered no explanation for the stain, so it added incriminating weight. The conclusion did not assume that ungrouped blood conclusively was Sanjay's. For sentence, the Court noted PW5's unchallenged statement that several cases were registered at Jhansi Road station, and declined to disturb the five-year Section 307 term or Section 341 fine. That limited sentencing reference is not treated as a finding of guilt in other cases.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the 24 March 2021 Sessions judgment under IPC Sections 307 and 341. Tillu, in jail, was directed to serve the remainder of the five-year rigorous-imprisonment sentence under Section 307 with Rs 1,000 fine and its default term as imposed, and the Section 341 Rs 100 fine with its default term; the trial court had awarded no substantive jail sentence under Section 341. A free copy of the judgment was ordered for him and the trial record was to be returned for compliance. The Court did not decide the original suspension application as a separate grant after hearing the appeal finally.

Headnote :- Appeals against convictions for mass abduction for ransom — Captives held for over a month had ample opportunity to identify their abductors, and their identification was corroborated by timely test identification parades; Horam's voluntary absence at dock identification could not defeat the identification evidence. Released captives conveyed the demand for ransom; actual payment was unnecessary to establish the offence. Credible police evidence of recovery supported Jagdish's Arms Act conviction. Life imprisonment was the statutory minimum, and the appeals were dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : About a dozen armed persons abducted villagers returning from a ceremony in January 2000 and held them captive until late February. Some captives were released to convey a demand of ₹11 lakh. Horam, Veera, Ramhet, Jagdish and Munesh challenged their Section 364A life sentences; Jagdish also challenged an Arms Act conviction. They disputed identification, the demand for ransom and its payment, citing a possible election motive and the acquittal of other accused.

2. Precedents — Considered : Malkhansingh v. State of M.P., Pramod Mandal v. State of Bihar, Subhash Krishnan v. State of Goa and Daya Singh v. State of Haryana were considered on test identification parades and identification in court. Malleshi v. State of Karnataka concerned Section 364A ingredients. Rohtash Kumar v. State of Haryana addressed police witnesses. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan, Yogendra and Bhagwan Jagannath Markad were relied on to reject an inflexible falsus-in-uno rule. Vikram Singh v. Union of India and Akram Khan v. State of W.B. were considered on sentencing.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 364A and 365; Arms Act Sections 3 and 25(1-B)(a); Evidence Act Section 9; CrPC Sections 162, 299, 317 and 374.

4. Issues : Were appellants adequately identified? Was the purpose of obtaining ransom proved despite the missing letter and the absence of proof of actual payment? Did election coercion change the offence? Could hostile panch witnesses or other acquittals defeat liability or permit a sentence below life?

5. Ratio / Findings : Each appellant's identification was examined separately; prolonged captivity and timely TIP supported reliable recognition. Horam avoided attendance despite knowing dock identification was due, so the court drew an adverse inference in assessing witnesses who knew and identified him. The released captives conveyed the demand for ransom, and their evidence was independently corroborated; the missing letter and unproved actual payment were not essential. The statutory alternative of compelling a person to abstain from an act also answered the argument concerning the election. The officer's credible account of the seizure of firearms supported the case against Jagdish despite the hostility of the independent witnesses, and witnesses' credible parts could be separated from unreliable parts concerning acquitted accused. Life imprisonment is the minimum sentence under Section 364A.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed all the appeals. The life terms and fines under Section 364A were affirmed, as were Jagdish's three-year Arms Act sentence and fine. Veera's bail was cancelled, and he was directed to surrender.

Horam and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 125/2008 & 145/2008 & 158/2008 & 314/2008, 31/10/2018, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Sheel Nagu & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Article 226 / registered FIR / demand for arrest and chargesheet / investigative discretion / prompt completion — The informant asked the High Court to require police to arrest named accused, complete investigation within a stipulated period, file a chargesheet and act on a representation in an FIR concerning IPC Sections 147, 148, 149, 294, 506, 336 and 120-B. Citing D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, with its M.C. Abraham and Divine Retreat Centre passages, the Court refused to order arrest or compel the filing of a chargesheet: arrest under Section 41 CrPC is discretionary and does not follow mechanically from a complaint disclosing a cognizable offence; police must assess the evidence and may file a closure report. The Supreme Court's caution also concerned judicial prescription of witnesses, seizures and the direction of investigation, and orders affecting persons who had not been heard. Separately, Section 173(1) CrPC requires completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer was therefore directed to finish as early as possible, form a lawful conclusion, and take the steps required for a final report without a fixed date or predetermined result; the petitioner could submit a grievance to the Superintendent of Police. The writ was disposed of. The Court required prompt completion under the statute while preserving the police's discretion over arrest and the decision to file a chargesheet or closure report.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Todal filed Article 226 Writ Petition 3086/2024 at Jabalpur, decided on 16 February 2024. He said that after his complaint the police registered an FIR under IPC Sections 147, 148, 149, 294, 506, 336 and 120-B but had neither arrested the accused nor completed investigation. He sought a direction to respondent 5 to finish within a period fixed by the Court and submit a chargesheet against those accused, action by respondent 4 on a 3 January 2024 representation, and ancillary relief. Those sections were the registered allegations, not offences found proved by the High Court. The relief was thus examined as an attempt to dictate both investigative actions and the outcome of an already registered case, alongside a narrower request for timely completion.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, 2009:INSC:1132, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted at length and applied to reject orders which compel police in a particular case to record statements, arrest, seize property and file a chargesheet. Investigation falls within the police's statutory domain; it need not culminate in arrest or prosecution, and courts should not specify an investigative angle without reason. The selected passages also fault a prior High Court order for drastic directions against persons not heard. The passage quotes M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on Section 41 CrPC's discretionary arrest power, caution for liberty and reputation, and an officer's assessment of whether arrest is necessary, rather than a mechanical response to registration of the case. It separately quotes Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on giving persons likely affected by a judicial investigation direction a hearing. The present judgment did not itself order an arrest or decide whether any specified accused had been denied a hearing; those are boundaries illustrated by the quoted authority. D. Venkatasubramaniam discusses Section 482 CrPC in its own procedural setting, whereas Todal's actual petition was under Article 226; the applicable investigative-restraint reasoning was used without changing the present writ's jurisdictional label.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was the writ jurisdiction invoked. The FIR allegedly covered IPC Sections 147, 148, 149, 294, 506, 336 and 120-B. Section 173(1) CrPC was quoted: every investigation under the relevant chapter shall be completed without unnecessary delay. On that basis the High Court required the investigating officer to conclude as early as possible and take lawful steps to submit a final report, which may be a closure report or a chargesheet. Section 41 CrPC and Section 482 CrPC occur in the Supreme Court precedent extract on arrest discretion and the limits of inherent-power interference respectively; this writ was not a Section 482 petition, and the Court did not apply a categorical arrest prohibition in every lawful investigative circumstance. The existence of an FIR does not decide what the investigation will establish.

4. Issues : Can an informant obtain a writ compelling police to arrest particular accused and file a chargesheet merely because the FIR has been registered and investigation remains pending? How does judicial restraint over investigative choice coexist with Section 173(1)'s duty to complete an investigation without unnecessary delay? What relief, if any, can require progress without dictating evidence gathering or the closure-versus-charge conclusion? Could the petitioner still approach the Superintendent of Police with a grievance? The underlying IPC allegations and the guilt of any accused were not issues for final trial determination in this writ.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted the Supreme Court's warning that police investigation should not be controlled through detailed judicial directions requiring arrest, seizure, recording of statements or a chargesheet. The cited M.C. Abraham reasoning treated arrest as discretionary, depending on its necessity, the nature of the offence and the persons involved; registration of a cognizable case does not itself create an immediate arrest duty. The D. Venkatasubramaniam passage recognised the possibility that an investigation may result in a closure rather than a prosecution report. Therefore the specific requested arrest and chargesheet commands would amount to improper supervision and were refused. The caution about hearing affected persons and avoiding casual directions came from the precedent.

The Court then gave effect to the separate duty imposed by Section 173(1). An investigator must complete the investigation without unnecessary delay and decide on the material whether an offence is made out. It directed completion as early as possible and lawful further steps for a final report, preserving the possibility of either a chargesheet or a closure report. It did not fix a number of days, specify a particular arrest, direct a particular witness statement or find that the allegations necessarily merited a charge. The petitioner remained free to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Narsinghpur, who was to consider any grievance according to law. The direction therefore required timely completion without prescribing the substantive outcome.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has finally disposed of the writ petition. The demand for arrest and compulsory chargesheet was not granted. The investigating officer was directed to finish investigation as early as possible and take necessary steps under law, and the petitioner was permitted to pursue a grievance before the Superintendent of Police. No judicial finding of guilt, specified deadline, arrest warrant, or command that a chargesheet rather than closure be filed followed.

Headnote :- Murder and unlawful assembly appeals — One participant fired the fatal shot after the group chased the informant home; others continued to beat two injured eyewitnesses. The participants' conduct established their common object and liability under Section 149, although only one of them fired the shot. The testimony of the related witnesses was supported by medical evidence and evidence from the scene. Uncertainty about dispatch under Section 157 and minor differences in descriptions of the scene did not undermine the prosecution's proof. The convictions and life sentences were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A vacant-land dispute led to an attack in March 2004. Rustam reported that Hotam's group chased him to the family house; Rajaram passed a gun to Rajesh, whose shot killed Rustam's brother Janved. Rani and Ummed were beaten, and their injuries were medically documented. Rustam was murdered before his trial testimony in this case. Five appellants appealed convictions for rioting, murder and voluntarily causing hurt with the aid of Section 149; Rajaram's appeal had abated following his death.

2. Precedents — Considered : Amish Devgan v. Union of India was considered on the use of an FIR where the informant cannot testify; Rameshwar Dayal v. State of U.P. and others on map evidence; Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi) on related witnesses; Sukhbir Singh v. State of Haryana, Manjit Singh v. State of Punjab, Dev Karan v. State of Haryana, Chandrika Prasad Singh v. State of Bihar and Bhajan Singh v. State of U.P. on common object; Jafel Biswas v. State of W.B. on dispatch of the FIR under Section 157.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 141, 142, 148, 149, 302 and 323; CrPC Sections 157 and 313; Section 30 of the Arms Act was included in the trial charges against the deceased co-accused.

4. Issues : Were the related witnesses' accounts of the incident and the place of shooting reliable despite differences in the maps and the absence of independent neighbours? Did the non-examination of the FIR writer or uncertainty about dispatch to the Magistrate invalidate the prosecution? Could non-shooters share murder liability under Section 149, and was each alleged injury proved?

5. Ratio / Findings : The core account given by the injured witnesses Rani and Ummed was consistent with medical findings, the household layout and blood at the mapped platform. Kinship does not itself defeat credible testimony, nor does the absence of neighbours; the Dehati Nalishi was proved by the officer who recorded it. Non-dispatch of the FIR under Section 157, or uncertainty about its dispatch, is not automatically fatal where there is no doubt about the timing of the FIR. A common object can develop and be inferred from the group's pursuit of the victim, its weapons and conduct, and its continued attack: the others joined the assault even after Rajesh's fatal gunshot, supporting liability under Section 302/149 and under Section 323/149 on two counts for the hurt caused to Rani and Ummed. No one saw the initial attack on Rustam, and his death before testimony left that individual injury allegation unproved.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed the life sentences and fines under Section 302/149, the sentences on two counts under Section 323/149, and the sentence under Section 148. The bail of four appellants was cancelled, and they were directed to surrender; Rajesh was to continue serving his sentence in prison.

Headnote :- Police disciplinary enquiry / parallel criminal prosecution / effect of acquittal / prematurity of a writ challenging a charge sheet — Tourez Khan, a police employee, challenged a departmental charge sheet while facing a criminal trial concerning a complainant's sexual-abuse allegation; during the writ, he was acquitted on 28 February 2022. The disciplinary charges followed a police preliminary enquiry and alleged an extramarital relationship, inducement, a threat concerning abortion, and conduct bringing discredit to the police service under Regulation 63(4). These remained allegations. The criminal prosecutrix supported the prosecution but the trial court disbelieved her substantially because her parents did not corroborate her; the High Court called that acquittal non-honourable and noted that the disciplinary allegations differed. Applying SBI v. R. Periyasamy, (2015) 3 SCC 101; State of Rajasthan v. Heem Singh, (2021) 12 SCC 569; and Inspector General of Police v. S. Samuthiram, (2013) 1 SCC 598, it held that the standards of proof differ: proof beyond reasonable doubt in criminal proceedings and a preponderance of probabilities in disciplinary proceedings; acquittal does not automatically quash an independent departmental case. Applying Kunisetty Satyanarayana, (2006) 12 SCC 28, and the quoted authorities including Prabhash Chandra Mirdha, the Court held that a writ challenging a charge sheet before enquiry is ordinarily premature unless the issuing authority lacks jurisdiction or another exceptional ground is established. It did not test the truth of the allegations. It dismissed the writ, vacated the 27 June 2017 stay, and required the enquiry to conclude within six months. The departmental allegations remained for determination in the enquiry; the 'honourable acquittal' term was applied in the service-law context and is not a distinct criminal verdict category under the IPC or CrPC.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Police employee Tourez Khan filed Article 226 Writ Petition 6308/2017 challenging a departmental charge sheet on the ground that related criminal charges were pending. During the long-pending writ, III Additional Sessions Judge, Singrauli at Waidhan acquitted him on 28 February 2022 in ST 1500083/2016, and he argued that the acquittal also removed the basis for the departmental proceedings. The State replied that one complainant, anonymised as X, had alleged sexual abuse; an SDO(P) preliminary enquiry preceded the service charge sheet. Its three allegations concerned a married employee's relationship with another woman; alleged inducement, a prolonged relationship and a threat to undergo abortion; and alleged dereliction of duty, misconduct and reputational damage to the police department under Regulation 63(4). These remained accusations for the disciplinary authority to determine; they were not facts found proved in this writ. The State emphasised that the service case was not merely based on registration of the criminal case. The High Court described the criminal judgment as one in which the prosecutrix supported the prosecution account, but her testimony was disbelieved mainly because her parents turned hostile or did not corroborate her. The court characterised the acquittal as other than honourable. The writ also raised a procedural issue: a 27 June 2017 interim order had stayed the departmental process for years. The Court had to decide whether the later acquittal or the challenge to a charge sheet before enquiry justified continuing the stay.

2. Precedents — Considered : SBI v. R. Periyasamy, (2015) 3 SCC 101, was quoted on the distinction between a criminal verdict and service discipline. The quoted passage refers to Union Bank of India v. Vishwa Mohan in the context of an inquiry report in banking service, and more directly to Commissioner of Police v. Mehar Singh, (2013) 7 SCC 685, for the distinction between criminal proof beyond reasonable doubt and disciplinary proof on a preponderance of probabilities, the significance of hostile witnesses and the distinction between benefit-of-doubt and full merits acquittal; it also invokes R.P. Kapur, AIR 1964 SC 787, on departmental proceedings after an acquittal other than honourable. The issue of prejudice in the banking case formed part of the quoted precedent; Tourez had not alleged a defect concerning service of the inquiry report.

State of Rajasthan v. Heem Singh, (2021) 12 SCC 569, was quoted at length for the effect of acquittal on discipline. It refers to Southern Railway Officers Association, then reproduces State v. S. Samuthiram, (2013) 1 SCC 598, and its discussion of RBI v. Bhopal Singh Panchal and R.P. Kapur. The quoted passage explains that 'honourable acquittal' is judicial service-law terminology rather than a category stated in the Penal Code or CrPC; even a clean acquittal does not automatically confer reinstatement without a service-rule entitlement, given different standards of proof. The references within that quotation to State of Assam v. Raghava Rajgopalachari and Robert Stuart Wauchope explain that terminology. Inspector General of Police v. S. Samuthiram was separately quoted on a disciplined-force employee, unexamined key witnesses and hostile witnesses, and the distinct civil standard; the facts of that precedent did not establish the allegations against Tourez. The Bench applied these authorities to the independently initiated enquiry and its view of the actual acquittal.

Union of India v. Kunisetty Satyanarayana, (2006) 12 SCC 28, was quoted for the ordinary prematurity of a writ against a charge sheet or notice; its quoted list includes Executive Engineer, Bihar State Housing Board v. Ramesh Kumar Singh, Special Director v. Mohd. Ghulam Ghouse, Ulagappa and Brahm Datt Sharma. The High Court separately quoted its Division Bench decision Jagdish Baheti v. High Court of M.P., which reproduces Secretary, Ministry of Defence v. Prabhash Chandra Mirdha, (2012) 11 SCC 565, and references Sangram Keshari Misra and Upendra Singh. These authorities place determination of the correctness of charges within the disciplinary authority's domain, recognise patent lack of competence as a ground for immediate scrutiny, and discuss the need for prejudice before delay invalidates a proceeding. Ranjeet Singh Kumpawat v. Central Madhya Pradesh Gramin Bank, quoted Upendra Singh, Transport Commissioner v. A. Radha Krishna Moorthy and Jagdish Baheti and noted proved mala fides as a possible exceptional route. None was used to hold that Tourez's alleged misconduct had already been proved or that any actual lack of jurisdiction existed here.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was the jurisdiction for the challenge to the departmental charge sheet, not an appeal against criminal acquittal. Police Regulation 63(4) was invoked in the departmental allegations of misconduct and reputational discredit; the Court did not adjudicate the allegations under that provision on evidence. The different burdens, beyond reasonable doubt for crime and preponderance for service discipline, were applied as explained by the Supreme Court authorities. The quoted cases refer to the Penal Code, CrPC and various service rules in their own settings; the Court applied the distinction between criminal acquittal and departmental adjudication.

4. Issues : Did a later criminal acquittal, characterised by the Court as resting on uncorroborated prosecutrix testimony, automatically extinguish the police department's charge sheet, issued after an independent enquiry into related but distinct service misconduct? Could the High Court test the veracity of charges and quash an initiating charge sheet before enquiry absent lack of issuing competence or a substantiated exceptional ground? What effect should be given to the 2017 interim stay that prevented enquiry progress, and what completion direction was appropriate? Guilt in the criminal case and the truth of the departmental allegations were outside the operative merits decision.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that mere acquittal was insufficient to quash this disciplinary charge sheet. Its reading of the criminal judgment was that X had supported the prosecution, but lack of corroboration by hostile parents led to acquittal. It therefore did not treat the verdict as a full merits exoneration of the conduct; the departmental case arose from a preliminary enquiry, had its own service-law formulation and would be decided on a preponderance of probabilities rather than the criminal standard. The Court expressly said the service charges and criminal allegations differed. That finding supported continuation of the enquiry without treating X's complaint or each allegation under Regulation 63(4) as proved. The Court did not purport to overturn the criminal acquittal or lay down a universal rule that an expressly exonerating verdict can never be relevant under an applicable service rule.

The Court also relied on the prematurity of the challenge to a departmental charge sheet. Such an initiating notice ordinarily does not itself adversely decide service rights, and factual truth belongs to the disciplinary authority. Lack of jurisdiction or competence of the issuing authority is a recognised ground for review at that stage. The quoted authorities also recognise prejudice caused by delay or established mala fides as grounds for intervention, subject to the relevant circumstances; they do not confer blanket immunity from judicial review. Tourez had not made out an applicable defect justifying quashing. Since the interim stay dated 27 June 2017 had suspended progress, the Court vacated it and required completion within six months of the 10 August 2023 decision. That direction governs the enquiry process and supplies no finding about the ultimate disciplinary result.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition, vacated the interim stay of 27 June 2017, and directed the respondents to conclude the departmental enquiry within six months. The police disciplinary charge sheet remained for adjudication in that enquiry. There was no conviction or departmental punishment ordered by this writ court and no alteration to the 28 February 2022 criminal acquittal.

Tourez Khan v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 6308/2017, 10/08/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Appeal concerning two killings and an attack on Ramu — The armed group's concerted assault established liability based on its common object. Principal accounts were supported by injuries, postmortems and recoveries; some hostile or unexamined witnesses did not defeat the prosecution. The life sentences and other sentences were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : After Rambai was reportedly set alight, Ramu travelled with Ganeshram and Babloo to see her in October 2009. An armed group attacked them near the village. Ganeshram and Babloo died and Ramu was injured. The convicted accused appealed, challenging the reliability of the witnesses, the absence of independent witnesses and the recovery evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Surya Baksh Singh v. State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, was noted in relation to the manner in which one appellant's appeal was to be considered. Guru Dutt Pathak v. State of U.P., (2021) 6 SCC 116, supported the principle that the quality of evidence, rather than the number of witnesses, is material when assessing the non-examination of independent witnesses. Other Supreme Court authorities were quoted on common object and evaluation of testimony; the court applied them to the incident as a whole.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 147, 148, 149, 302, 307 and related assault provisions; CrPC Sections 174, 313 and 374(2). Discovery of weapons pursuant to the accused persons' memoranda was considered.

4. Issues : Did the evidence establish the appellants' participation and shared object despite hostile or unexamined witnesses and challenges to seizures?

5. Ratio / Findings : The material witnesses gave consistent accounts of the armed assault, and their testimony remained unshaken in cross-examination. The autopsy findings and medical findings concerning the injured person supported the account of blows with weapons and the finding of homicidal deaths. Some peripheral witnesses turning hostile, and non-examination of an independent or further injured person, did not require rejection of otherwise trustworthy proof. Recovery at the instance of the accused persons and articles collected from the scene corroborated the account. The coordinated assault supported liability under Section 149, and the defence account did not create reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions and sentences. The appellants who were on bail were directed to surrender.

Hukum Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 47/2012, 07/07/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Unsoundness of mind / Section 84 IPC / psychosis during trial / time of offence / Evidence Act Section 105 — Tufan appealed the life sentence under IPC Section 302 for killing his mother Phuliya Bai and five years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 307 for assaulting his father Daujaram; the sentences ran concurrently. He did not contest homicidal death or authorship on appeal, but invoked legal insanity. His father, sister-in-law and a seizure witness described longstanding 'madness' and mental illness on the day of the incident. The investigating officer knew of treatment for mental illness over several months. A September 2012 report diagnosed psychosis, and the trial was stayed. In September 2013 a report stated that he was fit to defend himself, and the trial court reached the same conclusion after questioning him. Applying Mohd. Anwar v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2020) 7 SCC 391; Hari Singh Gond v. State of M.P., (2008) 16 SCC 109; Bapu v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 8 SCC 66; Sudhakaran, Surendra Mishra and T.N. Lakshmaiah, the Division Bench held that medical illness or later psychosis does not alone establish incapacity at the instant of the act to know its nature or wrongfulness. The accused's burden under Section 105 is to establish the exception on a preponderance of probabilities, and he may rely on prosecution evidence. The prosecution retains the burden of proving the offence and its mens rea beyond reasonable doubt, as distinguished in Dahyabhai. The Court found no pre-incident treatment record, considered observations made at his arrest and appearances before the Court, and inferred awareness from his departure from the scene and arrest the following day. It refused Section 84 relief and affirmed both convictions and sentences.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The 3rd Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri convicted Tufan on 27 April 2017 in ST 400169/2012 of killing his mother Phuliya Bai under IPC Section 302 and attempting to murder his father Daujaram under Section 307. The punishments were life imprisonment and Rs 1,000 fine (two months' rigorous imprisonment in default) for murder, and five years' rigorous imprisonment plus Rs 1,000 fine (two months' rigorous imprisonment in default) for the attempt, running concurrently. The injured father reported on 26 March 2012 that after a neighbour Anguri Bai objected to Tufan sitting outside her house and the father queried him, Tufan struck his mother repeatedly with a lathi, then struck his father on the head, shoulder, thigh and hand as he intervened. Daujaram and daughter-in-law Asha sheltered inside; they later found Phuliya dead. The trial court framed both charges. On appeal, counsel did not challenge the finding of homicidal death or the prosecution's proof of the assaults but argued that Tufan lacked the cognitive capacity required for criminal responsibility at the time, invoking Section 84. The Court still reviewed injury and eyewitness facts for that issue rather than treating his concession as eliminating the need for context. The doctor who conducted the postmortem, PW7, described head and ear lacerations, temporal bruising, temporal fractures, exposed brain material and fatal coma from brain injury and haemorrhage. He accepted in cross-examination that falling from a height could produce injuries, but the Court found no evidence of any such fall. The examining doctor, PW8, found a parietal head laceration and swelling on Daujaram's hand, shoulder and thigh; he said a fall or impact with a wall might produce injuries, while the father and Asha supported the assault history. Anguri Bai turned hostile on her alleged complaint to the father, though she accepted that Tufan had sat outside her house and returned after she objected. Daujaram PW2 and Asha PW3 identified Tufan as the assailant; PW4 saw a lathi seizure. PW5 and PW6 were hostile. The Court found the assault proved independently of the disputed precipitating conversation.

The same prosecution witnesses supplied material for the defence: Daujaram said his son had been 'mad' for ten to twelve years, attacked people, had been treated without improvement, and was so affected that day; Asha gave a similar account, and PW4 also described him as in a state of madness. The arresting officer, PW9, said he had learnt during investigation of five to six months' treatment for mental weakness, though he denied being told of 'madness'. Tufan did not call a defence witness or file records of treatment before the incident. Trial order sheets showed that a lawyer was arranged through legal aid, an application for treatment had been made, a report dated 21 September 2012 said he had psychosis and the trial was stayed; on 3 September 2013 a report said he had improved and was fit to defend, a conclusion the trial judge verified by questioning him before framing charges. Those later assessments of fitness to participate in the trial did not directly assess his mental state at the time of the act in March 2012. The Court noted that no abnormality had been observed when he appeared before the trial court or by the arresting officer and that he was apprehended the following day at a bus stand with a lathi.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mohd. Anwar v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2020) 7 SCC 391, was quoted for the civil standard and the need to show a sufficiently serious mental disorder affecting right/wrong understanding particularly at the time of the act; a photocopied OPD card and maternal affidavit were inadequate on the facts there. Hari Singh Gond v. State of M.P., (2008) 16 SCC 109, and Bapu v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 8 SCC 66, were extensively quoted for legal versus medical insanity, the two forms of cognitive incapacity under Section 84, contemporaneous conduct, episodic illness/lucid intervals, and the insufficiency of odd behaviour, absence of motive or mere medical illness. The reproduced discussion in Hari Singh invokes Dahyabhai Chhaganbhai Thakkar, AIR 1964 SC 1563, and Sheralli Wali Mohammed. The quotation also says that where previous insanity is revealed during investigation, an honest investigator should arrange a medical examination; failure to do so can seriously weaken the prosecution. The present Court recorded the officer's knowledge of treatment and the later report.

Sudhakaran v. State of Kerala, AIR 2011 SC 265, was quoted with its Ratan Lal reference for the focus on the time of the act. Surendra Mishra v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2011 SC 627, was quoted for the test of cognitive capacity for criminal responsibility, preponderance under Evidence Act Section 105 and the significance of conduct before, during and after the act; its excerpt includes Bapu, Hari Singh Gond and T.N. Lakshmaiah. T.N. Lakshmaiah v. State of Karnataka, (2002) 1 SCC 219, was independently quoted for the general exception's proof burden, the presumption of sanity and the three propositions stated in Dahyabhai: the prosecution’s burden to prove guilt and mens rea never shifts; the accused must establish the Section 84 exception on the civil standard; and material falling short of proving the exception may still raise reasonable doubt about an ingredient of the offence. The passage invokes State of M.P. v. Ahmadulla and Bhikari in support. These source and nested authorities were used as legal tests, not as factual diagnoses of Tufan.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 84, within the general exceptions, excuses an act done while, by reason of unsoundness of mind, the actor is incapable of knowing its nature or that what he does is wrong or contrary to law. Evidence Act Section 105 requires the Court to presume, subject to rebuttal, the absence of circumstances bringing the case within the exception and places the burden of establishing those circumstances on the accused on the civil standard; it does not transfer the prosecution's continuing burden to prove IPC Sections 302 and 307 and their mens rea beyond reasonable doubt. The murder and attempted-murder sections were the separate convictions for the deceased mother and injured father. The trial was stayed after the report of psychosis and resumed after the later report of fitness; those steps concerned capacity to participate in proceedings at a later date. The report of psychosis was not an automatic statutory finding of Section 84 incapacity at the earlier incident.

4. Issues : Did testimony of family and a seizure witness about many years of illness, the investigator's knowledge of some treatment, and a psychosis report months after the assault make it probable that, at the time of the assault, Tufan could not know the nature or wrongfulness of his act? Was there medical or other contemporaneous evidence of the requisite cognitive impairment, and what weight was due to the circumstances of arrest, conduct after the incident and observations made by the Court? How does the accused's Section 105 exception burden relate to the prosecution's unshifting burden on homicide and attempted murder? Did the evidence, even if insufficient to establish Section 84, create reasonable doubt about the charged mental elements? The appellant did not advance a separate merits challenge to the established assaults, but the Court addressed them in context.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished a general diagnosis or lay label of 'madness' from the statutory capacity question. A person may have an illness or intermittent psychosis without being unable at the material time to understand the act or its wrongfulness. The relatives gave direct oral evidence concerning his condition, including on the day of the incident; that prosecution evidence was available for the purposes of Section 105 and was considered. The September 2012 psychosis report led to a stay of the trial and eventual finding of restored fitness in 2013, but it did not establish what mental faculties were impaired in March 2012. The Court said no pre-incident treatment document was produced, no abnormal behaviour was observed at his arrest or initial appearances before the trial court, and any psychosis was not continuous. It considered repeated blows to mother and father and his being arrested the next day at a bus stand; it characterised his intervening departure as absconding and inferred awareness of the gravity of his act. This is the Court's factual inference, not a universal proposition that every departure proves legal sanity or that lay testimony may never sustain a Section 84 defence.

Under the quoted authorities, an accused can establish the exception on a preponderance of probabilities and may rely on prosecution evidence; the prosecution still bears the burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt. Even if the exception is not established, the evidence may raise a reasonable doubt about culpable intent. Here the Bench found neither cognitive incapacity at the time of the act under Section 84 nor sufficient doubt about the proof of murder and attempted murder to disturb the convictions. The Court distinguished medical from legal insanity and held the later psychosis insufficient to establish legal incapacity at the time of the act. The Court did not impose an additional requirement of producing defence witnesses as an exclusive means of proof. Its rejection rested on the overall evidence including the absence of contemporaneous medical material and the conduct it described.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court rejected the defence under Section 84 and dismissed the appeal. The Court affirmed Tufan's IPC Section 302 conviction and life imprisonment for his mother's homicide, the Section 307 conviction and concurrent five-year rigorous imprisonment for assaulting his father, and the specified fines and default terms. It held life imprisonment to be the applicable minimum for the murder conviction and left the sentence undisturbed. Tufan remained in jail to serve the remaining term. A free judgment copy was directed to him and the trial record returned for compliance.

Headnote :- Section 311 CrPC — Recall of two witnesses was not warranted merely because the accused alleged that his former lawyer, whom he had chosen, had not cross-examined them effectively. Recall to ensure a fair trial requires concrete reasons showing its necessity; a change of advocate and an unsubstantiated allegation of incompetence did not establish any error by the trial court.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In a murder and dowry-death trial with nine prosecution witnesses already examined, the accused sought to recall Kamlesh and Ambika Prasad for further cross-examination, attributing the need for further cross-examination to the alleged incompetence of his former lawyer, whom he had chosen. The trial court refused and he sought revision.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Haryana v. Ram Mehar, (2016) 8 SCC 762, and State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Kumar Yadav, (2016) 2 SCC 402, required tangible reasons showing that recall was essential, with due consideration of hardship to witnesses and delay. R. Muthukrishnan v. Registrar General, (2019) 16 SCC 407, was cited on the Bar Council's disciplinary competence.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 309, 311, 397 and 401; IPC Sections 302/34 and 304-B; Arms Act Sections 29 and 30 as trial charges.

4. Issues : Did a change of counsel and a general claim of inadequate cross-examination require recall of two important witnesses?

5. Ratio / Findings : The discretion under Section 311 serves the just decision of the case, and recall is not routine. The applicant identified no concrete necessity beyond the alleged incompetence of his lawyer; he had made no Bar Council complaint and the court would not presume professional misconduct from omitted questions. A change of counsel could not by itself justify reopening completed cross-examination. The trial court committed no jurisdictional error.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the revision and upheld the order refusing recall.

Headnote :- Cross-examination / closure of defence opportunity / fair trial - The order sheet of 9 February 2024 recorded that the prosecutrix's examination-in-chief and cross-examination had been completed. Her deposition, however, showed that cross-examination had been deferred at the defence's request because counsel was unprepared and needed further instructions. The order sheet of 23 February was not supplied. When the prosecutrix attended on 6 March, newly appearing counsel again sought time and refused to pay witness costs. The Court acknowledged that closure of cross-examination might cause irreparable prejudice to the accused. It nevertheless held him responsible for that situation because his repeated requests for adjournment were intended to harass the prosecutrix. In those circumstances, it upheld closure of the opportunity to cross-examine and dismissed the Section 482 application.

Adjournment / Section 309 CrPC / witness present in court - State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh, (2001) 4 SCC 667, explains the requirement of day-to-day examination under Section 309(1), the need to record reasons for an adjournment beyond the following day, and the further requirement under Section 309(2) of special reasons recorded in writing before an attending witness is sent away without examination. Witnesses lose time and incur financial loss by attending court. Non-cooperation may be addressed through costs proportionate to that loss and other available measures for controlling the trial. The Court applied these requirements where the prosecutrix had repeatedly attended and the defence sought further time because of lack of preparation and a late change of counsel. The statutory exception for an adjournment justified by special reasons recorded in writing remained applicable.

Witness examination / delay and pressure / Supreme Court guidance - Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2015) 3 SCC 220, explains that a lengthy interval between examination-in-chief and cross-examination undermines a fair trial. Cross-examination should be completed on the same day, with continuation on the following day permissible when examination extends late. The decision cites Gurnaib Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 7 SCC 108, on piecemeal trials and the duties of the Bench and Bar, and Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668, on the risk that repeated adjournments tire witnesses or expose them to influence. Akil v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 7 SCC 125, reproduces directions concerning continuous sessions trials and Section 309. The High Court relied on these authorities in refusing adjournments sought merely for their own sake. It considered both the prejudice asserted by the accused and the prosecutrix's repeated attendance.

Counsel's duty / witness costs / unnecessary deferral - Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334, deprecates routine deferral of cross-examination after examination-in-chief when the witness is available. It reproduces N.G. Dastane's statement that counsel should arrange for the examination of witnesses present in court rather than subject them to repeated hardship. Shambhu Nath Singh also discusses costs commensurate with the witness's loss. The Court applied these considerations to the newly engaged advocate's request for time and refusal to pay costs. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241, explained the public-justice reasons for expedition. Its observations about threats and inducement were general guidance, not findings that this prosecutrix had been threatened or won over.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Tulsi Ram Lodhi filed MCRC No. 43730 of 2024 under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, challenging the order dated 6 March 2024 passed by the Additional Judge to the Court of the First Additional Sessions Judge, Begumganj, District Raisen. That order closed his opportunity to cross-examine the prosecutrix. The application concerned his procedural opportunity to cross-examine her. The question was whether a further opportunity should be granted after she had attended court and her examination-in-chief had been recorded.

On 9 February 2024, the prosecutrix appeared and her examination-in-chief was recorded. The order sheet stated that both examination-in-chief and cross-examination had been completed and that she had been released. The deposition sheet, filed as Annexure A/3, showed a different position. After examination-in-chief, the accused's advocate sought deferment of cross-examination because he had not properly prepared the case and needed further information from the accused. The court deferred cross-examination and fixed the matter for 23 February. The applicant did not supply the order sheet for that date. The High Court expressly noted the omission and made no finding about what had occurred on that date.

The prosecutrix again attended on 6 March 2024. R.K. Gupta, Advocate, appeared for the applicant, filed his memorandum and sought time to cross-examine her. When the trial court insisted that the accused pay costs to the witness, counsel refused. The trial court then closed the accused's right to cross-examine her. Before the High Court, the applicant's counsel accepted that the applicant's failure to cross-examine the prosecutrix was not correct, but sought one further opportunity on the ground that denial would cause irreparable loss. The State opposed the application. The High Court considered the sequence of events, the hardship to the prosecutrix attending court, the requirements of Section 309 and the applicant's own responsibility for the prejudice he asserted.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Akash Batham & Ors. v. Santoshi, Criminal Revision No. 380/2017, order dated 21 April 2017 (M.P. High Court, Gwalior Bench), the Court had considered an adjournment request made while witnesses were present. Counsel had been given an opportunity to prepare and cross-examine them after lunch, but instead sought an adjournment to challenge the trial order. The quoted decision found that the request was intended to delay the trial. The present Court relied on it when considering the bona fides of an adjournment request and the need to examine witnesses attending court; it did not treat every request as automatically improper. The judgment records that the Supreme Court affirmed that order in SLP (Criminal) No. 4464/2017 on 30 May 2017. Kuldeep Singh Tomar v. State of M.P., MCRC No. 5816/2018, order dated 8 March 2018, states that day-to-day proceedings in a criminal trial are the rule and adjournment the exception.

Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2015) 3 SCC 220, was quoted at length. The Supreme Court criticised adjournments after examination-in-chief and lengthy intervals before cross-examination, which may expose witnesses to pressure or influence and undermine a fair trial for the accused, prosecution and public. It required compliance with the statutory requirement to record reasons for deferment and stated that cross-examination should ordinarily be completed on the same day. Continuation on the next day was permissible when examination extended late. Its discussion of Gurnaib Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 7 SCC 108, condemned piecemeal proceedings and deferment of cross-examination without special reasons. Its quotation from Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668, described the risk that repeated adjournments tire witnesses or permit improper influence. Its quotation from State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh stressed the hardship and loss of income suffered by summoned witnesses. The High Court relied on these principles in rejecting casual postponement of the prosecutrix's cross-examination after examination-in-chief. The general warnings in those authorities were not findings that this witness had actually been threatened, bribed or won over.

Akil v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 7 SCC 125, was cited through an extract reproducing a circular. The extract sets out the day-to-day examination requirement under Section 309(1), the special written reasons required under Section 309(2) before an attending witness is sent away without examination, and administrative instructions for scheduling sessions cases. The High Court relied on the requirements of expedition and examination of witnesses present in court. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241, explains the public-order and public-justice purposes of criminal law, the need to complete trials before witnesses' memories fade, and the danger of delay and witness influence. These observations provided general guidance; they were not proof that this prosecutrix had been influenced.

Swaran Singh and Gurnaib Singh were also quoted separately later in the judgment. Swaran Singh deplored repeated adjournments that cause witnesses to tire and give up. Gurnaib Singh required trial courts to monitor proceedings actively and counsel to avoid delaying tactics. The Court applied these principles when considering the repeated requests for time and the prosecutrix's attendance.

State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh, (2001) 4 SCC 667, was quoted as the principal explanation of Section 309. It distinguishes the requirement to proceed expeditiously from the stricter requirement, once examination begins, to continue from day to day until witnesses in attendance have been examined. An adjournment beyond the following day requires recorded reasons. If a witness is present, special reasons must be recorded in writing before the case is adjourned without examining that witness. Counsel's convenience alone does not satisfy that requirement. The decision describes measures available where the accused or counsel does not cooperate, including costs commensurate with witnesses' expenses and loss. It also discusses remand and cancellation of bail subject to the procedural conditions stated in that decision; the High Court did not impose those measures in this case. The principles supported the trial court's insistence on witness costs and its refusal to prolong cross-examination because counsel was unprepared or had been newly engaged.

Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334, was quoted for the principle that, absent compelling reasons, cross-examination should not be deferred for long periods after examination-in-chief when the witness is available. It repeats Shambhu Nath Singh on the hardship caused by attendance and N.G. Dastane v. Shrikant S. Shivde on counsel's duty to arrange examination of a summoned witness attending court. Repeated delaying tactics may amount to professional misconduct. The High Court relied on this guidance in refusing adjournments sought for their own sake and protecting the prosecutrix from repeated attendance; it made no independent disciplinary order against an advocate. The references to Raj Deo Sharma and Raj Deo Sharma (II) occur within the extract from Shambhu Nath Singh and concern expedition under Section 309 and reminders to trial courts through the High Courts.

3. Statutes considered : The application under Section 482 CrPC sought to set aside the trial court's order dated 6 March 2024. The High Court considered whether closure of the defence's opportunity to cross-examine the prosecutrix warranted interference in the circumstances of this case. It did not determine her credibility or the accused's guilt.

Section 309(1) CrPC requires inquiries and trials to proceed as expeditiously as possible. Once examination of witnesses begins, it must continue from day to day until all witnesses in attendance have been examined; an adjournment beyond the following day requires recorded reasons. Section 309(2) permits postponement or adjournment, for recorded reasons and on reasonable terms, after cognizance has been taken or trial has commenced. Its witness-attendance proviso further requires special reasons recorded in writing if a witness present in court is not examined. The quoted Supreme Court explanation distinguishes the general power to adjourn from the stricter requirements when a witness is present. It also discusses costs and other measures available in response to non-cooperation. Here, the trial court required payment of costs to the prosecutrix. The Akil extract also reproduces a Delhi High Court circular and administrative instructions for sessions cases. These appear as quoted guidance, not as independently applicable Madhya Pradesh rules.

4. Issues : (i) Whether, to avert the irreparable prejudice asserted by the applicant, the High Court should interfere under Section 482 with closure of his right to cross-examine the prosecutrix and grant a further opportunity, having regard to the conflicting order sheet and deposition of 9 February, the missing order sheet of 23 February, the prosecutrix's attendance on 6 March, and the newly appearing advocate's request for time and refusal to pay costs.

(ii) What the day-to-day examination requirement and safeguards for witnesses present in court under Section 309, as explained by the cited Supreme Court authorities, required of the court and counsel after examination-in-chief had been recorded and cross-examination repeatedly deferred; and whether lack of preparation or a late change of counsel justified a further adjournment on this record. The decision concerned the opportunity to cross-examine and control of adjournments, not the merits of the underlying criminal accusation.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court noted the discrepancy between the order sheet of 9 February and the prosecutrix's deposition. Although the order sheet recorded completed cross-examination, the deposition showed that cross-examination had been deferred. The application therefore concerned an opportunity not yet exercised, rather than a request to repeat completed questioning. The defence had obtained deferment because counsel was unprepared and needed further instructions. The case was fixed for 23 February, but the applicant did not supply that day's order sheet. The Court noted the omission without making a finding about the intervening proceedings. On 6 March, the prosecutrix again attended, another advocate appeared and sought further time, and counsel refused to pay the costs required by the trial court. These were the circumstances in which the trial court closed the opportunity to cross-examine.

The Court considered those circumstances in light of Section 309 and the cited authorities. Kuldeep Singh Tomar states the rule of day-to-day trial proceedings. Akash Batham illustrates scrutiny of the bona fides of an adjournment request when witnesses are present; the judgment records that the order was affirmed in the SLP. Shambhu Nath Singh distinguishes expedition generally, recorded reasons for an adjournment beyond the following day, and special written reasons for adjourning without examining a witness present in court. It recognises the time and income lost by witnesses, rejects counsel's convenience as sufficient justification, and permits appropriate costs in response to non-cooperation. Akil reproduces the statutory requirements and guidance for scheduling trials. Vinod Kumar, with Gurnaib Singh and Swaran Singh, explains how a lengthy interval after examination-in-chief exposes witnesses and the trial to improper pressure and undermines fairness. It also permits continuation on the next day when examination extends late. Mohd. Khalid and its extract from N.G. Dastane emphasise counsel's responsibility to arrange examination of witnesses attending court. Krishnan explains the public-justice interest in prompt and reliable trials. These general warnings did not amount to findings that this prosecutrix had actually been threatened or influenced.

Applying those principles, the Court held that an adjournment should not be granted merely for its own sake and that the hardship to witnesses must be considered. Lack of preparation had already led to deferment on 9 February. On 6 March, the applicant engaged another advocate when the prosecutrix was again present. Since the applicant knew the next trial date, he should have arranged representation earlier. The Court treated the renewed request and refusal to pay witness costs as lacking bona fides and found that the repeated adjournments were intended to harass the prosecutrix. It rejected the late change of counsel as justification in those circumstances. The conclusion rested on the applicant's conduct and the opportunities already afforded to him.

The Court acknowledged that inability to cross-examine the prosecutrix might cause irreparable loss to the defence. It nevertheless held the applicant responsible for that situation because he had repeatedly sought adjournments to harass her. In those circumstances, the trial court had committed no error in closing his right to cross-examine. The ruling concerned interference with the procedural order under Section 482; it did not determine the accused's guilt or the truth of the prosecutrix's evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The order dated 6 March 2024 closing the applicant's right to cross-examine the prosecutrix remained undisturbed, and the further opportunity sought was refused. The operative paragraph contained no order for remand, reopening, costs or any other independent direction.

Tulsi Ram Lodhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 43730/2024, 18/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- NHAI officers' Section 482 petition — The application arose from an allegation that a motorcyclist was injured when his motorcycle fell into a ditch on a national highway. Protection under Section 28 of the National Highways Authority of India Act, 1988 depended on good faith, which required proof of due care and attention in maintaining the road or controlling traffic where it was unsafe. Good faith could not be presumed merely because the applicants were officers of the Authority. The earlier coordinate Bench order quashing another prosecution contained no finding that the officers concerned had acted in good faith on the facts of that case. The Court refused quashing, permitting the prosecution to proceed after the prolonged stay, and directed completion of the trial within one year. Its finding was confined to the quashing proceedings; factual good faith remained for trial on evidence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant reported that, in August 2013, his motorcycle fell into one of the large ditches on NH-7, causing injuries to his leg and hand and damage to the vehicle. He alleged that the NHAI officers responsible for that stretch had left the road unrepaired for several years. The police filed a charge-sheet for offences under the IPC relating to public ways and damage. The applicants obtained a stay of the criminal proceedings in 2014 and sought quashing under Section 28 of the National Highways Authority of India Act, 1988, claiming protection for acts done in good faith.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Iqbal Mohammed Siddiqui v. State of M.P., a coordinate Bench had quashed another proceeding on the basis of Section 28. The order contained no finding that the officers had acted in good faith on the particular facts. The Court therefore distinguished that order and held that it did not assist the applicants.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 16 and 28 of the National Highways Authority of India Act, 1988; Sections 4 and 5 of the National Highways Act, 1956; Sections 31, 33 and 34 of the Control of National Highways (Land and Traffic) Act, 2002;

Sections 52, 431, 283, 290, 336 and 427 of the Indian Penal Code; and Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure.

4. Issues : Whether statutory protection for acts done in good faith required quashing of the prosecution despite allegations that the road was dangerously unrepaired and that the officers had not exercised their powers to close the highway or control traffic.

5. Ratio / Findings : Good faith under Section 52 IPC requires due care and attention. The officers could not establish it merely by asserting their official status. NHAI had a duty to maintain the highway and powers to restrict traffic where the road was unsafe. In view of the allegations of large unrepaired ditches and the absence of maintenance or measures to close the highway or regulate traffic, the Court could not prima facie presume that the applicants had acted in good faith. It expressly confined that finding to the quashing proceedings. Whether the applicants had acted in good faith remained a question of fact for the trial court to decide on evidence, without being prejudiced by the High Court's finding. Referring to the prolonged stay and describing the elapsed period as approximately eleven years, the Court directed completion of the trial within the specified time.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application for quashing. It directed the applicants to appear before the trial court on 31.07.2024 and the trial court to conclude the trial by 31.07.2025. If the applicants failed to appear on the specified date, the trial court was to issue warrants of arrest to secure their presence.

Headnote :- Unlawful assembly / Section 141–149 IPC / successive groups - Section 149 requires an assembly of at least five persons sharing a qualifying common object. Liability may arise without an overt act by each member, but mere presence does not establish that the person shared the object. Rabindra Mahto v. State of Jharkhand, (2006) 10 SCC 432, explained this distinction. Four armed men attacked Virendra and Ramnath and then left. Three others subsequently arrived and assaulted Ramkali and Munnalal. The differences in timing, victims and acts did not establish a single assembly of seven persons. The Section 149 convictions of the appellants whose appeals were contested on merits were therefore unsustainable.

Common intention / Sections 34 and 149 distinguished / first group - Virendra Singh v. State of M.P., (2010) 8 SCC 407, distinguishes Section 34's shared intention and participation from Section 149's wider common-object liability, including its five-person threshold. Devi Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1971) 3 SCC 471, describes anterior intention or a prearranged plan under Section 34. The Court inferred shared intention among Tulsiram, Banshilal, Ramesh and Bablu from their joint armed arrival and assault, notwithstanding Banshilal's individually identified fatal axe blow. For Ramesh and Bablu it substituted Sections 302/34 for Ramnath's murder and 326/34 for Virendra's grievous injuries, retaining life and four-year concurrent terms.

Common intention / later group / limits of vicarious guilt - Sitaram, Jairam and Gangaram arrived after the first group had fled. The Court found that they jointly attacked Ramkali and Munnalal, but no shared intention with the first group to kill Ramnath or cause the earlier injuries to Virendra was established. Their convictions under Section 149 were altered to convictions under Sections 326/34 for grievous hurt to Ramkali and 323/34 for hurt to Munnalal. The concurrent terms of four years and one year were retained. Liability for the murder committed in the first attack could not be extended to the three accused who committed the separate later assault.

Evidence / omission in police statement / related injured witnesses - Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 12 SCC 473, explains under the Section 162 CrPC Explanation that an omission from a Section 161 statement is a contradiction only if contextually significant and relevant. The FIR omitted the attacks on Ramkali and Munnalal, but their injured testimony and medical findings proved the later assault. The Court separately limited the later trio's responsibility for the earlier victims. Relationship alone did not discredit injured witnesses. The counter-case against the complainant party ended in an unappealed acquittal according to the State, from which the Court declined to draw a defence benefit.

Homicidal death / medical corroboration / appellant-specific relief - Ramnath's post-mortem attributed his death to head injury and coma. Medical examinations corroborated the injuries to Virendra, Ramkali and Munnalal. Banshilal's appeal had abated on his death. The Court declined to examine the merits of Tulsiram's appeal because he had completed his sentence and had been released following remission/commutation. Ramesh and Bablu were required to surrender. Sitaram's custody already exceeded his altered term, and his bond was discharged. Jairam and Gangaram were required to surrender to serve the balance of their sentences. The appeal was partly allowed with the stated alterations; the concurrent terms, fines and terms of imprisonment in default were retained.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal under Section 374(2) CrPC challenged the judgment dated 29 November 2010 passed by the VII Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track Court), Sagar, in Sessions Trial No. 681/2009. Seven appellants had been convicted under Sections 302/149 IPC for Ramnath's murder, 326/149 on two counts for grievous hurt to Virendra and Ramkali, and 323/149 for hurt to Munnalal. Each received life imprisonment and a fine of Rs 500, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, on the murder count; four years' imprisonment and a fine of Rs 300, with two months' imprisonment in default, on each grievous-hurt count; and one year's imprisonment and a fine of Rs 200, with one month's imprisonment in default, on the hurt count. The terms of imprisonment ran concurrently. They were acquitted under Sections 294 and 506 Part II. The police had initially registered offences under Sections 294, 323, 324 and 506/34, added Section 302 after Ramnath's death, and filed a charge sheet mentioning Sections 294, 323, 324, 325, 302, 506/34 IPC and Section 25 Arms Act. The convictions under consideration in the appeal were the IPC counts specified above.

The occurrence on 23 September 2009 took place in two stages. According to Virendra's prompt FIR (Ex P/9), Tulsiram came to his house with a sword, Banshilal with an axe, Ramesh with a rod and Bablu with a lathi, and they abused him. Tulsiram struck Virendra on the head with the sword. When Ramnath intervened, Banshilal struck him on the head with the axe. Bablu threw Virendra to the ground, and the four assaulted them with weapons and with their hands and feet. After they fled, Sitaram arrived carrying a baka, accompanied by Jairam and Gangaram carrying lathis. They allegedly attacked and threatened the complainant side. Ramnath died at 3:55 pm that day during treatment. The injured witnesses examined were Virendra (PW2), Ramkali (PW15) and Munnalal (PW4); other witnesses and medical officers were also examined. The investigation included inspection of the site, recovery of soil and weapons, and recording of witness statements. Fifteen prosecution witnesses testified, and Jairam testified in defence.

In their statements under Section 313 CrPC, the accused denied guilt and alleged that the complainant side had been the aggressor. They claimed that the present FIR was lodged in response to Crime No. 628/2009, the cross-case against the complainant party. They relied on contradictions, the FIR's omission of the attacks on Ramkali and Munnalal, allegedly unexplained injuries to the accused, and the fact that Banshilal had individually inflicted the fatal blow. The State relied on the injured witnesses, medical corroboration and participation by the accused while armed, and stated that the accused in the cross-case had been acquitted without an appeal. The record also referred to prior enmity, including an earlier allegation that Virendra had thrown acid. The High Court reassessed the evidence by reference to the timing and victims of each attack.

Banshilal died on 21 February 2015; his appeal was dismissed as abated by order of 19 September 2024. The judgment records that Tulsiram had completed 20 years in custody and was released on 2 October 2023 after remission/commutation; the Division Bench stated that it did not need to examine the merits of his appeal. It heard the appeals of Ramesh, Bablu, Sitaram, Jairam and Gangaram on merits. The outcome and surrender directions differed among those five appellants.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virendra Singh v. State of M.P., (2010) 8 SCC 407, was quoted for four distinctions: Section 34 does not itself create an offence, whereas Section 149 does; in crimes involving violence, Section 34 requires participation, whereas liability under Section 149 may arise from membership without a separate overt act; common object is wider than common intention; and Section 149 requires five persons, whereas Section 34 prescribes no minimum number. The Court applied these distinctions to test the alleged common object of seven persons against the actual sequence of events. It determined each group's liability under Section 34 after finding Section 149 inapplicable.

Rabindra Mahto v. State of Jharkhand, (2006) 10 SCC 432, was cited in the Court's discussion of Section 149. A common object may arise at the spot without prior concert, and an act committed in prosecution of that object may make a member liable. Mere presence, however, is insufficient unless the person shares the object. The High Court applied that qualification in refusing to treat the four earlier assailants and the three later assailants automatically as one unlawful assembly, despite their relationship and violent acts. Devi Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (1971) 3 SCC 471, was quoted for the requirement under Section 34 that the criminal act be committed in furtherance of a common intention existing before its commission, in contrast to the common object under Section 149. The Court inferred the first four accused's prior common intention from their arrival together with weapons and their concerted assault. It confined the later three accused's common intention to their later attack on different victims. It did not hold that identification of the person who inflicted the fatal blow by itself excludes liability based on common intention.

Bhanwar Singh v. State of M.P. was mentioned in the discussion of Section 141. It explained that the common object must fall within Section 141, may arise at the spot, and may be inferred from the weapons, the nature of the assembly and its members' conduct. An otherwise lawful gathering may become unlawful. The Court considered those propositions in examining the alleged common object, but found no single assembly of at least five persons sharing the required object on the evidence.

Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 12 SCC 473, was quoted on the Explanation to Section 162 CrPC. An omission from a statement under Section 161 may amount to a contradiction if it is significant and relevant in its context; whether it does so is a question of fact. Every omission is not automatically a contradiction. The High Court referred to that principle and the injured witnesses' evidence supported by medical findings in rejecting reliance on minor discrepancies. It nevertheless maintained the distinction between the evidence concerning the victims of the earlier and later attacks. The omission of the assaults on Ramkali and Munnalal from the FIR was expressly acknowledged.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374(2) CrPC governed the appeal against conviction. Sections 161 and 162 CrPC governed comparison of statements recorded during investigation with testimony in court. The Explanation to Section 162 specified when a material omission may amount to a contradiction. Section 313 CrPC concerned the accused's responses at trial, in which they alleged false implication and referred to the counter-case.

Sections 141 and 149 IPC concerned an unlawful assembly of five or more persons sharing a qualifying object specified in Section 141, and constructive liability for an offence committed in prosecution of that object. Actual membership and sharing of the object had to be proved. Section 34 IPC imposed joint liability for a criminal act committed in furtherance of common intention. The Court distinguished the requirement of prior common intention and participation from the wider common object and minimum of five persons under Section 149. Having found two successive groups, it replaced the trial court's reliance on Section 149 with liability under Section 34. Section 302 governed Ramnath's murder, Section 326 the grievous injuries to Virendra and Ramkali, and Section 323 the hurt caused to Munnalal. The appellants had been acquitted under Sections 294 and 506 Part II. Section 25 Arms Act appeared in the charge sheet, but no conviction under it was operative in this appeal. The IPC provisions in the cross-case formed part of the background and were not separately adjudicated here.

4. Issues : (i) Did all seven accused form one unlawful assembly with a common object, so that each could bear Section 149 liability for Ramnath's murder and the hurt caused to all three injured persons, despite the two separate attacks at different times and on different victims?

(ii) If that collective basis failed, did common intention under Section 34 and the individualised evidence support convictions for murder and grievous hurt against Ramesh and Bablu as members of the first four? What offences did the later three jointly commit against Ramkali and Munnalal?

(iii) Did the evidence of the injured witnesses, who were related, the medical findings and the investigation support the separate accounts of the two attacks despite omissions, alleged contradictions, prior hostility and the cross-case? What directions concerning conviction, sentence and custody should follow for each surviving appellant? Banshilal's abatement and Tulsiram's recorded completion of sentence limited consideration of the merits of their appeals.

5. Ratio / Findings : Ramnath's death was homicidal. The examining doctor recorded a frontoparietal head wound and other injuries; the autopsy surgeon attributed death to the head injury causing coma. Virendra had six documented injuries, including a scalp-deep incised wound. Ramkali had an incised wound to her hand and a contusion over the clavicle. Munnalal had multiple contusions and abrasions. The Court found that the medical examinations broadly supported the evidence of the injured witnesses and eyewitnesses. It did not infer each accused's liability from the medical evidence alone, but determined the sequence of events and the victims of each attack from the testimony.

Virendra described the arrival of the first four accused with a sword, axe, rod and lathi, Tulsiram's blow to him, Banshilal's blow to Ramnath, Bablu's intervention and the assault by the group. The later three accused arrived after the first four had left. The Court closely examined the accounts of Virendra, Ramkali, Munnalal and Nandkishore. It found consistent evidence of the first group's attack on Virendra and Ramnath and the second group's attack on Ramkali and Munnalal.

Section 149 did not make all seven accused liable merely because they participated at different stages. The Court considered Virendra Singh's distinction between that provision and Section 34, Rabindra Mahto's requirement of a shared object rather than mere presence, Devi Lal's distinction concerning prior common intention, and the requirements under Section 141 of at least five persons and a qualifying common object. It rejected the existence of a single unlawful assembly in this case. The first group comprised four persons and had fled before the later three arrived. The later group's acts and victims were different. The convictions based on Section 149 were therefore unsustainable. The Court did not require prior planning in every case of common object. It expressly recognised that the object may arise at the spot, but found that the necessary assembly and shared object had not been proved on this record.

For the first four accused, their arrival together with weapons, the sustained attack on Virendra and Ramnath, and the location and repeated infliction of injuries established common intention. Banshilal's fatal axe blow did not absolve Ramesh and Bablu of liability for murder under Section 34. The Court found that the attack was not an unplanned altercation occurring on the spur of the moment. Ramesh and Bablu were convicted under Sections 302/34 for Ramnath's murder and 326/34 for the injuries to Virendra. They were not convicted for the later injuries to Ramkali and Munnalal. For the later three accused, the Court inferred a separate common intention to attack Ramkali and Munnalal with a baka and lathis. It excluded liability under Section 302/34 and under Section 326/34 in relation to Virendra, because those accused were not proved to have shared the first group's intention or attacked those victims. Their convictions were altered to Sections 326/34 for Ramkali and 323/34 for Munnalal.

The Court acknowledged that the FIR omitted the attacks on Ramkali and Munnalal. Their testimony as injured witnesses, supported by the medical evidence, nevertheless established those attacks. The Court referred to Baldev Singh and Section 162 for the requirement that an omission be significant and relevant in its context before it is treated as a contradiction. The witnesses' family relationship alone did not justify rejecting their evidence. The counter-case FIR was before the Court and alleged that the complainant side had attacked Jairam and others. The State reported that the accused in that case had been acquitted and that no appeal had been filed. The Court declined to extend the benefit sought by the defence on that basis and held that participation in the present case had been proved. The investigating officer's evidence concerning the scene, statements and recoveries withstood cross-examination; no bias aimed at securing false convictions was demonstrated.

The appellate alterations were confined to the appellants whose appeals were examined on merits. Banshilal's appeal had already abated on his death. The Bench stated that Tulsiram's completed sentence and release made it unnecessary to examine the merits of his appeal. Its findings concerning the first group explained the liability of the remaining appellants; they did not constitute a fresh operative alteration of Tulsiram's conviction. The corresponding terms of life imprisonment and four years for Ramesh and Bablu, and four years and one year for the later three accused, were retained and were to run concurrently. The fines and terms of imprisonment in default remained unchanged.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the appeal. Ramesh and Bablu's four convictions under Section 149 were altered to convictions under Sections 302/34 for Ramnath's murder and 326/34 for the injuries to Virendra. The concurrent sentences of life imprisonment and four years' rigorous imprisonment, and the relevant fines and terms of imprisonment in default, remained unchanged. Their bail bonds were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender forthwith to serve the remainder of their sentences. On default, the concerned court was to issue non-bailable warrants. Sitaram, Jairam and Gangaram's convictions under Section 149 were altered to convictions under Sections 326/34 for the grievous injuries to Ramkali and 323/34 for the injuries to Munnalal. The concurrent terms of four years and one year, fines and terms of imprisonment in default remained unchanged. Sitaram had served eight years, eleven months and nine days; he was not required to surrender, and his bail bond was discharged. Jairam and Gangaram had served one year, one month and four days and one year, one month and eight days, respectively. Their bonds were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender forthwith to serve the balance, with non-bailable warrants to follow on default. The merits of Tulsiram's appeal were not separately examined following his release after completion of the sentence; Banshilal's appeal stood dismissed as abated. The judgment and trial record were to be sent to the trial court, and a copy of the judgment to the jail authorities for compliance.

Headnote :- Death reference and appeal — An earlier conviction had been set aside and the matter remanded for a witness to be examined in the accused's presence. On fresh review, the prosecution failed to establish that Ravi was the offender or that the body recovered was that of the missing child. The alleged seizure of black slacks was antedated, the garments had remained unsealed, and the source of the DNA was doubtful. Prior display of the clothing undermined its identification, and material railway CCTV footage had not been collected. These defects left the chain of circumstantial evidence incomplete. The convictions and sentences were set aside, Ravi was acquitted of all charges, and prosecution for giving false evidence was directed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecution alleged that a seven-year-old child had disappeared from Bhopal railway station in October 2015 and that a girl's body recovered from a well near Vidisha was hers. The High Court found that the body had not been proved to be that of the missing child. It noted that the date of birth given by the mother indicated that her daughter was about four and a half years old, whereas the age of the recovered body had been variously estimated at six to nine years. Ravi had been convicted of kidnapping, rape, murder and concealment. He was sentenced to death for murder and to imprisonment for the remainder of his natural life on the sexual-offence counts. The 2019 conviction had earlier been set aside and the matter remanded because a witness had been examined contrary to Section 273 CrPC. The renewed conviction in 2020 and the death reference came before the High Court for a full review. The police relied on clothing, identification, DNA evidence and an alleged railway journey.

2. Precedents — Considered : N.J. Suraj v. State and Kirshan Kumar Malik v. State of Haryana concerned the loss of evidentiary value of identification following prior display of the person or article to the witness. Union of India v. V. Sriharan, (2016) 7 SCC 1, restricted the power to impose the special sentence of imprisonment for the remainder of a person's life to the High Courts and the Supreme Court. Dayal Singh v. State concerned the duty to investigate fairly. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India required care and consideration of whether action under Section 340 CrPC was expedient in the interests of justice. Pritish v. State of Maharashtra explained that a preliminary inquiry was not mandatory and that the persons concerned were entitled to be heard when prosecution commenced before the Magistrate, rather than before the court decided to make a complaint.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 201, 302, 363, 364, 366A and 376(2)(i), (j), (k); CrPC Sections 273, 313, 340 and 366; Evidence Act Sections 27 and 69.

4. Issues : Whether each circumstantial link and the chain of forensic evidence reliably connected Ravi to the child and the offences; whether the death sentence could be confirmed; and what action should follow the findings that evidence had been fabricated.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found that the alleged seizure of the black slacks was antedated and that the garments had remained unsealed, without reliable proof of safe custody. The mother of the missing child had seen the garments at the police station before the formal identification. Only Ravi's DNA profile was reported on the slacks said to belong to the child; the child's profile was absent. His DNA profile was not found on the vaginal and anal slides. The unexplained biological source of the DNA and the other gaps concerning the samples made the result unsafe to rely on. The videography contradicted the claim that the clothing had been spontaneously discovered. Material CCTV footage from Bhopal station had not been checked, and the other witness testimony and physical evidence did not establish the alleged links. Suspicion could not replace a complete chain of circumstances. The Court directed steps to prosecute the named officials and witnesses for giving false evidence under Section 340, while making clear that this stage did not determine their guilt. It separately held, applying Sriharan, that the trial court could not impose the special sentence of imprisonment for the remainder of a person's life. Section 376(3), inserted in 2018, did not apply retrospectively to the offence alleged to have occurred in 2015.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court declined to confirm the death sentence and allowed the appeal. All convictions and sentences were set aside, and Ravi was acquitted and directed to be released immediately unless required in another case. The Principal Registrar was directed to take the necessary steps for prosecution for giving false evidence. The Registrar General was directed to circulate the judgment containing the sentencing ruling to the Sessions Judges and Additional Sessions Judges.

Case Sr. no. (390) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal proof / related eyewitnesses and physical opportunity - The Court observed that neither kinship nor enmity arising from an earlier drain dispute disqualified an eyewitness by itself. Enmity could provide a motive for either the offence or false implication. Ruli Ram v. State of Haryana; (2002) 7 SCC 691, requires careful assessment of the evidence and a foundation for a plea of false implication. Vidyadharan v. State of Kerala; (2004) 1 SCC 215, requires deeper scrutiny when that plea is raised. Kailash Gour v. State of Assam; (2012) 2 SCC 34, similarly recognises that enmity can operate in either direction. On the evidence in this case, the High Court found the deceased's sons, Surendra and Mohan, unreliable. Each claimed to have observed the incident from about 100 metres away through mustard crop standing above the waist and below the chest. Their accounts differed, and material omissions and contemporaneous documents undermined their claimed presence and ability to see the assault. Their accounts did not establish the assailant's identity beyond reasonable doubt merely because the medical evidence established homicide.

Witness credibility / material police-statement omissions and hostile injured witnesses - Deepak and Dinesh, the two injured witnesses, did not identify their assailant, and the appellant was acquitted of both Section 307 IPC counts at trial. The informant, Mool, and other witnesses also failed to identify the appellant as the assailant. Mohan's police statement omitted his alleged trip to the field, the preceding attempt to assault him and his observation of the fatal assault. He had not told Mool that he had seen the assailant. Randhir's claimed eyewitness account was likewise absent from his police statement. These omissions and inconsistencies, considered together with the obstructed view and enmity, made the claimed identification unsafe. The witnesses' hostility was not, by itself, treated as proof that someone else had committed the offence.

Arrest and seizure documentation / impossible attesting-witness presence - Surendra accompanied his wounded father to Bhind hospital and was recorded as present in the inquest papers prepared at 15:15. Yet he also attested the spear seizure at 14:15 and the arrest at 14:20 in the village. Mool, who was also at the hospital, was said to have given the instructions for a spot map prepared after the supposed arrest, although the map bore neither a date nor a time. The investigating officer's account of the sequence conflicted with Surendra's statement that she had accompanied him to the hospital. On these combined facts, the Court found the seizure, arrest and spot-map records to have been ante-dated and ante-timed. This substantially discredited the claimed immediate recovery and the prosecution's account.

Forensic corroboration / immediate spear recovery without blood - Although the prosecution claimed that the appellant had been caught promptly after three spear assaults, it did not seize his clothing, and the FSL report, Exhibit P.17, showed no blood on the seized spear. In the sequence alleged, there was no suggested interval in which he could have washed the weapon. The absence of stains therefore materially weakened the claimed recovery and identification when considered with the unreliable eyewitness accounts and suspect documents. The post-mortem independently established fatal penetrating injuries, a skull fracture and homicidal death, but did not identify the perpetrator.

FIR transmission / Section 157 CrPC unexplained delay - Bijoy Singh v. State of Bihar; (2002) 9 SCC 147, treats prompt forwarding of the special FIR report to the Magistrate as an external check on police recording. Delay alone need not undermine the prosecution case. It requires the prosecution to explain the interval and the court to examine whether the version given in court was the one originally reported or had resulted from later deliberation. The officer said that the FIR copy had been sent the following day, but produced no receipt and gave no explanation for the delay. In view of the already doubtful identification and police records, the High Court treated this omission as a further reason for caution, rather than as an independent and conclusive bar to conviction.

Murder appeal / identity not established notwithstanding proved homicide - The three stab wounds and internal orbital and maxillary fractures found by Doctor Raje established homicidal injuries to Lakhmi Singh, including a fatal brain injury. Nevertheless, the trial court's Section 302 IPC conviction could not stand because the prosecution's identification evidence and the claimed immediate seizure of the spear failed when considered against the combined factual defects. The Section 307 acquittals concerning the injured persons were not reversed. The appeal was allowed. The Section 302 conviction and life sentence, together with the fine and default term, were set aside, and the imprisoned appellant was ordered to be released unless required in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Udai Singh appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 16 November 2005 passed by the VII Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track), Gohad, in Sessions Trial 115/2004. On 17 March 2004, the police at Barohi received a wireless report that a person described as having gone "lunatic" had attacked several villagers with a spear in Lavan. The prosecution alleged that there had been an earlier drain dispute with Lakhmi Singh's family. In the Dehati Nalishi lodged at Bhind hospital, Mool Singh reported that he had heard of an assault on Dinesh, had seen Udai strike Dinesh and then run towards and injure Lakhmi, and that the family had fled as the police arrived. The police claimed to have arrested Udai near the scene and seized a broken spear. Lakhmi died while being taken to hospital. Dinesh and Deepak had also been injured. The charge sheet alleged murder and two attempts to murder under IPC Sections 302 and 307. The trial court framed those charges on 14 July 2004. Udai denied guilt.

The trial court convicted him under Section 302 and sentenced him to life imprisonment and a fine of Rs 100, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. It acquitted him on both Section 307 counts. On appeal, defence counsel stressed that the injured persons and several other witnesses had not identified him; that the principal witnesses claimed to have observed the incident from roughly 100–150 metres away through mustard crop; and that no blood had been found on the spear allegedly seized promptly, while the accused's clothes had not been seized. The State relied on the relatives' accounts and the claimed arrest at the scene. The appellate court reviewed the whole of the trial evidence, the medical report, the witness statements, the timing and integrity of the police documents, and the cited Supreme Court decisions. The reference to a "lunatic" formed part of the initial radio message; it was neither a judicial diagnosis nor an accepted defence of insanity.

Doctor C.R. Raje found three penetrating wounds involving the left upper eyelid, mouth/tongue and upper arm, fractures of the maxillary and orbital bones, and brain injury with haemorrhage; he said death was homicidal and even prompt treatment could not have saved Lakhmi. Deepak and Dinesh, the injured witnesses, said they did not see who injured them. Mool, who made the hospital report, saw Lakhmi injured but did not support the claimed assailant's identity. Surendra, a son working near his father, and Mohan, another son, purported to observe the spear blow from around 100 metres; Randhir also later claimed observation. The officer Chetna Sharma relied on a 14:15 seizure, 14:20 arrest and a subsequent spot map, while the FSL report found no blood on the spear. These accounts and documents were the central appellate controversy.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bijoy Singh v. State of Bihar; (2002) 9 SCC 147, was expressly quoted for the Section 157 CrPC special-report safeguard. Prompt sending of the FIR to the Magistrate is an external check on the investigating agency. A delay does not alone invalidate the prosecution; a reasonably explained delay permits no adverse inference, whereas an unexplained delay places the court on guard to check for deliberation or the later implication of an innocent person. The prosecution bears the burden of explaining the delay without first requiring the accused to demand an explanation. Here, Chetna said that she had sent the copy the next day, but no acknowledgment was filed and the delay remained unexplained. The Court applied Bijoy Singh as an additional reason to scrutinise an already doubtful account.

Ruli Ram v. State of Haryana; (2002) 7 SCC 691, was quoted on interested or factional witnesses. Independent witnesses may be difficult to find in a divided village, and enmity can provide a motive both for the crime and for false implication. The evidence must be assessed carefully, and a plea of false implication requires a foundation. Credible testimony cannot be discarded merely because the parties were hostile. Vidyadharan v. State of Kerala; (2004) 1 SCC 215, adds that a plea of false implication requires deeper scrutiny of the accusations. Kailash Gour v. State of Assam; (2012) 2 SCC 34, was quoted for the same dual effect of enmity. The Court did not treat enmity alone as disqualifying the witnesses. It applied the caution expressed in these decisions to the admitted drain dispute, together with the obstructed view, the absence of earlier eyewitness assertions, the inconsistent accounts and the suspect police records. In these circumstances, the motive for false implication arising from enmity reinforced the reasonable doubt. The Court did not adopt a rule that a related witness could never sustain a conviction.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC supplied the appellate route for challenging the sessions conviction and sentence. IPC Section 302 was the murder conviction under review; the court accepted homicidal death but required reliable proof that this appellant inflicted the fatal injuries. IPC Section 307 appeared as two attempted-murder counts on which the trial court had acquitted him after the two injured witnesses failed to identify their attacker; the appeal did not disturb those acquittals. Section 157 CrPC was materially discussed through Bijoy Singh: a copy of the FIR or special report is to be forwarded promptly to the Magistrate as an external check, and an unexplained delay calls for close examination of the prosecution account.

Section 175 CrPC appeared in the investigating officer's evidence about notice to witnesses. The trial court had rejected a Section 328 CrPC request alleging inability to defend by order dated 12 July 2004; that procedural history did not become a separately decided ground in the conviction appeal. The principal witness references were Dr C.R. Raje (PW1), Deepak (PW4), Mool (PW6), Surendra (PW7), Randhir (PW9), Mohan (PW10), Chetna Sharma (PW11) and Dinesh (PW13).

4. Issues : (i) Whether Lakhmi's death was homicidal and, separately, whether the prosecution established beyond reasonable doubt that Udai was the assailant notwithstanding the injured witnesses' failure to identify him and the sons' claimed observations from a distant mustard field. (ii) Whether the police-statement omissions, contradictory descriptions of the witnesses' presence and the disputed times on arrest, seizure and spot-map documents rendered the claimed identification and immediate weapon recovery unsafe. (iii) What evidentiary significance the bloodless spear, unseized clothes and unexplained next-day forwarding of the FIR had when assessed cumulatively under the Section 157 safeguard and the Supreme Court's approach to factional witnesses.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first considered medical causation separately from the identity of the offender. Doctor Raje's findings of three stab wounds, a deep injury towards the frontal/occipital bone, orbital and maxillary fractures, shock from brain injury and blood loss, and his opinion that death was homicidal established that Lakhmi had been killed by violence. This medical evidence could not, by itself, identify the person who had wielded the spear. The injured witnesses, Deepak and Dinesh, could not name their assailant even after being declared hostile; the appellant had been acquitted on both Section 307 counts. Mool, the Dehati Nalishi informant, also failed to identify the appellant. Lalji's account was hearsay and contained an omission from his police statement. Ranvir and Shoukeen did not support the prosecution. The witnesses' hostility did not, by itself, establish Udai's innocence, but it removed the claimed corroboration. Surendra said that he was about 100 metres from his father when Udai attacked and that the mustard crop stood above the waist and below the chest. Although he described blows to particular body parts in examination-in-chief, he admitted in cross-examination that he learned which parts had been injured only after he came near. He admitted the family's enmity and did not lodge the Dehati Nalishi himself, despite claiming to have seen the assault.

His attestation of the spear seizure at 14:15 and the arrest at 14:20 was inconsistent with his account of accompanying Lakhmi to Bhind hospital, where the inquest papers recorded his presence at 15:15. The Court concluded from this sequence that he was not in the village to attest those documents. This conclusion rested on the complete testimony and documents, rather than on the clock times alone. Mohan's claimed view from about 100 metres away faced the same crop obstruction. His police statement omitted his claimed journey to the field, his observation of the assault and the earlier attempt to assault him. He had not told the informant, Mool, that he had witnessed the incident. His account also differed from Surendra's as to their presence and movements. Investigator Amresh Bohare confirmed the material omissions. Randhir's claimed eyewitness account was likewise absent from his earlier police statement. The Court rejected these claimed eyewitness identifications after the deeper scrutiny required where there was enmity with the family, as explained in Ruli Ram, Vidyadharan and Kailash Gour. Enmity alone would not have sufficed; the Court found a basis for possible false implication in the substantial inconsistencies independent of that enmity.

Chetna Sharma said that she had arrested Udai, seized a spear and prepared a spot map before visiting the hospital. Surendra, however, said that she had accompanied the injured to hospital. The spot map bore neither a date nor a time and was purportedly prepared on instructions from Mool, who had also accompanied the victim to hospital. In the Court's assessment, the hospital presence of Mool and Surendra, considered with the times on the seizure and arrest memos, meant that their claimed involvement in preparing those documents could not be accepted. The Court found that the police officer had created ante-dated and ante-timed seizure, arrest and spot-map documents, and did not accept the claimed immediate recovery at face value. The officer also failed to explain where the arrested man had remained while she travelled to hospital. The initial wireless/Rojnamcha message merely said that an unidentified person had gone "lunatic" and injured people; it did not identify Udai at the time. The relevant entry was produced during the deferred cross-examination. No bloodstained clothes were seized, and the FSL report, Exhibit P.17, found no blood on a spear allegedly seized almost immediately after three assaults, with no apparent opportunity to clean it.

As to Section 157, Chetna said that the FIR copy had been sent to the Magistrate the following day, but the prosecution produced no receipt and gave no reason for the delay. Bijoy Singh requires an explanation and closer scrutiny of possible later deliberation; it expressly rejects treating transmission delay alone as fatal. Considering the record as a whole, the Court held that the prosecution had failed to prove that Udai had inflicted the fatal injuries. It found that the claimed eyewitnesses had falsely implicated him because of enmity and that the police records had been manipulated. These findings concerned the evidence in this prosecution. They neither identified an alternative attacker nor established a general rule about related witnesses, FIR transmission times or forensic stains.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal appeal. It set aside Udai's conviction under Section 302 IPC and the judgment and sentence dated 16 November 2005 in Sessions Trial 115/2004. His life imprisonment, fine of Rs 100 and default sentence of one month's rigorous imprisonment consequently ceased to operate. As he was in jail, the Court directed his immediate release unless he was required in another case. The trial court's two Section 307 acquittals were not converted into convictions. No retrial, compensation, costs or proceedings against the investigating officer were ordered.

Headnote :- Child rape and murder death reference — Forensic evidence linked Manoj to his eight-year-old cousin. The discrepancies in the laboratory's article codes were clerical rather than substantive. Other circumstantial and medical evidence sustained the finding of guilt. The trial court failed to give an effective hearing under Section 235(2) on the proposed death sentence and mitigating circumstances. The death sentences were therefore commuted to imprisonment for the rest of his natural life, without remission.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : An eight-year-old girl left for school in July 2017 and was later found raped and killed. Manoj, her cousin, was convicted under IPC and POCSO provisions and sentenced to death. The reference and his appeal raised questions about the girl's movements at school, biological samples, the button and clothing comparison, forensic article codes, articles omitted from the investigation, the defence plea of alibi and the trial court's sentencing process.

2. Precedents — Considered : Babu v. State and Ganga Singh v. State of M.P. were considered on the distinction between minor investigative lapses and defects that create reasonable doubt. Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab and State of M.P. v. Laakhan addressed the principle that the quality of witnesses matters more than their number. Dilawar Balu Kurane v. State of Maharashtra was examined in considering the irregularity at the charge-framing stage. Dattatraya and Mohd. Mannan were considered on the requirements of an effective hearing on a proposed death sentence and commutation to imprisonment for the rest of the convict's natural life.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 366, 376A, 302 and 201; POCSO Act Sections 5/6; CrPC Sections 235(2), 293, 366 and 464; Evidence Act Sections 27 and 134.

4. Issues : Did the DNA article-code discrepancy and investigative omissions create reasonable doubt? Had the defence established the plea of alibi? Was the death sentence imposed after a meaningful hearing on sentence?

5. Ratio / Findings : The DNA report used, on one page, the code assigned to a scalp-hair sample that had been returned unopened. However, the expert evidence identified the blood sample and the DNA profile extracted from it. The presence of the child's DNA on Manoj's clothes independently supported the evidence of sexual assault. The medical evidence, the button and thread examination, and the school evidence reinforced that conclusion. The failure to seize the school bag and water bottle, and the non-examination of the grandmother, did not undermine this evidence. The defence evidence supporting the plea of alibi was inconsistent. An advocate who was not authorised to represent Manoj had argued at the charge-framing stage. The Court nevertheless found no resulting failure of justice because the prosecution material raised grave suspicion warranting a trial. It declined to order a retrial and advised the trial court to ensure representation by counsel engaged by the accused or provided through legal aid. The trial court imposed sentence on the day of conviction. Although same-day sentencing was not, by itself, prohibited, the court did not alert Manoj that it contemplated the death penalty or consider mitigating circumstances. It therefore failed to provide a meaningful hearing under Section 235(2).

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the convictions and commuted the death sentences to imprisonment for the rest of Manoj's natural life, without remission. The reference was answered accordingly, and the appeal was allowed only to the extent of the sentence.

Headnote :- Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act / minor alleging rape / statutory safeguards - A 15-year-old petitioner alleged abduction and rape and sought termination of a 12–14 week pregnancy. The Court reproduced the law then applicable under Sections 3(2), 3(4)(a) and 5(1): requirements concerning gestational age and registered medical practitioners' opinions formed in good faith, presumed grave mental-health injury where pregnancy is alleged to result from rape, written guardian consent for a minor, and a separate exception for termination immediately necessary to save the woman's life. On the Board's high-risk assessment and the petitioner's age and trauma, it permitted termination without deciding the accused's guilt.

Child survivor / Medical Board / Murugan Nayakkar - Murugan Nayakkar v. Union of India, W.P. (Civil) 749/2017, order dated 6 September 2017 (Supreme Court), permitted termination for a 13-year-old alleging sexual assault after a Medical Board advised it, weighing age, trauma, agony and risk. The High Court applied that case-specific approach to the Guna Board's report of an underdeveloped uterus and a 12–14 week high-risk pregnancy. It required appropriate precautions, specialist attendance and postoperative State care, together with referral to Medical College Gwalior for skilled management if required; the order did not assume the procedure risk-free.

Physician protection / court-authorized termination / scope - Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon v. Union of India and Others (Bombay High Court) was quoted for risk counselling and protection of doctors acting on the judicial termination permission from litigation arising from that order. The present Court gave that order-specific protection to the doctors involved and permitted experienced substitutes if department heads were unavailable. It did not pronounce a general immunity from all medical liability.

Foetal material / DNA preservation / investigation relief reserved - To allow DNA to be extracted for paternity testing, the Court directed preservation of the foetus after termination. The minor had also alleged police failure to add Section 376 IPC or investigate rape and POCSO fairly. Because multiple reliefs could not be granted in this petition, it gave liberty for a fresh petition on alleged police inaction; it neither ordered an independent investigation nor found the named respondents guilty. A copy went to the Guna Superintendent of Police.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A minor petitioner described as Victim "X", proceeding through her father, filed W.P. No. 17987/2020 under Article 226. She alleged that respondents 5 and 6 had abducted her in December 2019 and subjected her to rape before recovery on 17 October 2020 in the Chachoda area of Guna. The police had registered Crime No. 214/2019 under Section 363 IPC, but she said they ignored her subsequent pregnancy and had failed to investigate Section 376 IPC and POCSO allegations fairly. A medical examination arranged by her father indicated a pregnancy of about three months. These were her allegations and requests for investigation, not judicial findings that a named person committed rape or was the biological father.

She sought three kinds of relief: fair investigation, including the alleged rape and POCSO angle or an independent agency; permission for medical termination under the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971; and preservation of the foetus for DNA evidence. The Court had directed the Chief Medical and Health Officer, Guna on 24 November 2020 to constitute a Medical Board to examine whether termination could be performed. The Medical Board's report recorded a roughly 15-year-old unmarried minor with a 12–14 week pregnancy, an underdeveloped reproductive system/uterus, and high risk; it recommended possible Medical College Gwalior referral for second-trimester termination and skilled management if needed. The need for precautions remained. The Court considered the child's age, alleged sexual trauma and the Board's medical assessment, then dealt separately with medical permission, procedural protection and the investigation request.

2. Precedents — Considered : Murugan Nayakkar v. Union of India and Others, W.P. (Civil) No. 749/2017, Supreme Court order dated 6 September 2017, was quoted in substantial part. It concerned a 13-year-old alleging rape/sexual abuse; a court-constituted Medical Board recommended termination while indicating that termination and delivery carried comparable maternal risks and a premature infant would face complications. The Supreme Court weighed age, trauma, present agony and that Board report, and permitted a scheduled termination at a named hospital. The present Court followed its individualised approach, which considered the child's circumstances and the medical evidence. It did not interpret the cited order as automatic permission for every minor pregnancy or as a finding of rape; it considered the 15-year-old petitioner's distress and Medical Board report while prescribing specific medical precautions and providing for referral.

Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon v. Union of India and Others (Bombay High Court) was quoted for explanation of procedural risk to the patient and immunity to doctors whose opinions and court-authorized termination might otherwise expose them to litigation arising from the petition in which termination was authorised. The Gwalior Bench used it to add order-specific protection for participating doctors and provided for experienced substitute gynaecology and anaesthesia specialists if the department heads were absent. The quoted passage also says the earlier petitioner had been sensitized to risk and could undergo the procedure at her own risk. The Court reserved the police investigation claim to a separate petition.

3. Statutes considered : The Court reproduced the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971 in its form applicable on 2 December 2020, and its operative reasoning invoked Sections 3 and 5(1). Section 3(1) protects a registered medical practitioner from criminal liability for termination in accordance with the Act. Section 3(2), subject to subsection (4), described one practitioner's good-faith opinion for a pregnancy not exceeding 12 weeks; when it exceeds 12 but not 20 weeks, at least two registered practitioners must hold in good faith that continuation would involve a risk to the pregnant woman's life or of grave injury to her physical or mental health, or that there was a substantial risk that the child, if born, would have physical or mental abnormalities rendering it seriously handicapped. Explanation 1 then presumed grave mental-health injury from anguish where the pregnant woman alleges rape; the judgment quoted but did not apply Explanation 2 on failure of contraception. The 12–14 week estimate straddled the 12-week threshold, and the Board had two named specialists. Section 3(3) allowed the actual or reasonably foreseeable environment to inform health risk. Under Section 3(4)(a), termination for one under eighteen required the guardian's written consent. The petition was filed through her father. Section 5(1), quoted as an exception to the length and two-practitioner opinion requirements where immediate termination is necessary in a practitioner's good-faith view to save the woman's life, was reproduced alongside the Section 3 framework.

Article 226 supplied writ jurisdiction. IPC Section 363 was the FIR offence; Section 376 IPC and POCSO appeared as alleged offences for which the petitioner wanted investigation, not findings of guilt or statutory ingredients finally determined here. The Court reserved the police-inaction question and directed DNA preservation after termination to support future paternity investigation; it did not pronounce that any DNA result would independently prove a rape charge.

4. Issues : (i) Should a minor alleging rape, carrying a medically assessed 12–14 week pregnancy with an underdeveloped uterus and identified risk, be permitted to undergo termination under the then-applicable MTP Act framework after Medical Board assessment, and with what medical safeguards?

(ii) Did participating physicians require order-specific protection, and should foetal material be preserved to allow DNA paternity testing?

(iii) Should this combined petition also resolve the claim that police deliberately omitted Section 376 IPC or a POCSO investigation, or should that distinct challenge be left for fresh proceedings? The Court decided termination, related safeguards and preservation; it did not decide the truth of the sexual assault allegation or command an independent agency investigation.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first obtained medical assistance. The Board reported a 12–14 week pregnancy in a 15-year-old, an underdeveloped uterus/reproductive system and high risk, advising skilled referral at Medical College Gwalior if necessary. The Court quoted the MTP Act's conditions that varied with gestational age, opinion requirements, rape-related presumption of grave mental-health injury, rule requiring a guardian's written consent for a minor, and emergency life-saving exception. Its operative assessment was that the petitioner's age, alleged trauma and distress, and Board report merited termination, following the case-specific Supreme Court approach in Murugan Nayakkar. Its observation about life risk was an assessment in this medical and age context, not a universal proposition that all minor pregnancies pose identical risk.

The permission was subject to specific medical safeguards. The authorities were ordered to carry out termination immediately with necessary precautions. If the petitioner appeared before the Medical Board by 6 December 2020, she was to be admitted at District Hospital Guna; the Chief Medical and Health Officer was to arrange referral to Medical College Gwalior if required by the underdeveloped uterus and need for specialist management. Heads of Gynaecology and Anaesthesia and other specialists were to be present, or senior experienced doctors if the heads were unavailable. The State was to provide postoperative care. These directions acknowledged the possibility of procedural danger rather than promising safety.

The Bombay High Court extract in Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon informed the Court's further order that doctors participating in this judicially permitted procedure have immunity against litigation arising from the order. The Court attached protection to their role in complying with this authorization; it did not adjudicate a future allegation of negligence or pronounce unconditional immunity from law. Because paternity could become probative in a later rape investigation, it also directed preservation of the foetus after termination so that DNA could be extracted. Preservation facilitates evidence gathering but does not determine paternity or the alleged criminal liability in the present order.

Finally, the Court separated the petitioner's complaint of deliberate police inaction from the termination proceedings. It said multiple reliefs in the single petition could not be granted, gave liberty to file a fresh petition concerning non-registration of Section 376 IPC, and sent a copy to the Superintendent of Police, Guna. It did not decide whether respondents 5 and 6 committed rape, direct a change of investigating agency, or issue a merits order under POCSO. This limitation is integral to the result.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the prayer for medical termination. The State and medical authorities were directed to arrange the procedure with necessary precautions, admission if she appeared by 6 December 2020, referral to Gwalior Medical College if needed, specialist attendance or experienced substitutes, and State postoperative care. Participating doctors received protection from litigation arising out of the High Court's order. The foetus was to be preserved for potential paternity DNA extraction. The police-investigation grievance was left open with liberty to bring a fresh petition; no finding of rape or direction for independent-agency investigation was made. The writ petition was finally disposed of and a copy directed to the Superintendent of Police, Guna.

Headnote :- Minor boy's sexual assault and murder — The last-seen testimony, medical evidence and matching DNA profiles on the clothes and seized stone supported the convictions. The death sentence could not be confirmed because the accused had not received a meaningful hearing on mitigating circumstances and the trial court had not considered the possibility of reformation. The High Court substituted life imprisonment until natural death without remission.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A minor boy went missing at a village wedding in April 2017. The judgment's opening narrative described him as about ten, while the proved school register recorded his date of birth as 28 June 2008. His unclothed body was found in a dugout, with evidence of penetrative anal assault and ante-mortem head injuries caused by a hard, blunt object. The post-mortem opinion attributed death to asphyxia caused by ligature compression of the neck; the Court's account of the killing attributed it to the use of the seized stone. Yogesh Nath was convicted under IPC Sections 363, 377, 302 and 201 and POCSO Sections 3/4, and sentenced to death for murder. The High Court considered the death reference and the appeal filed from jail together.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bachan Singh v. State of Punjab states that life imprisonment is the rule and death the exception, reserved for the rarest of rare cases when the alternative is unquestionably foreclosed. Mohd. Mannan v. State of Bihar requires a meaningful and effective hearing under Section 235(2), with an opportunity to place mitigating factors on record; sentencing on the day of conviction does not, by itself, invalidate the sentence if that opportunity is given. Dattatraya v. State of Maharashtra emphasizes the rarest-of-rare standard and consideration of mitigating circumstances and the possibility of reform or rehabilitation. Mulla v. State of U.P. permits the court to fix the length of incarceration when replacing death with life imprisonment; the Court followed it in adopting the natural-life alternative here. Other cited authorities guided the assessment of last-seen and DNA evidence.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 201, 302, 363 and 377; POCSO Act Sections 3/4; CrPC Sections 235(2), 354(3) and 366.

4. Issues : Did last-seen and scientific evidence prove sexual assault and killing beyond reasonable doubt? Could the death sentence be confirmed without a meaningful opportunity to place mitigating circumstances before the court?

5. Ratio / Findings : Witness testimony and the material found at the scene corroborated the account of the child being taken from the wedding and the recovery of his body. Medical evidence established penetrative anal assault and homicidal death. The DNA evidence showed matching Y-chromosome profiles and matching components of mixed autosomal profiles in articles associated with the accused and the child. On sentence, the trial court had not given the accused a meaningful opportunity to present mitigating circumstances. It had not considered the possibility of reformation or why an alternative punishment was inadequate, and had sentenced him on the day of conviction. The brutality of the crime alone did not justify the death sentence without the required sentencing inquiry.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court commuted the death sentence to life imprisonment until natural death without remission and affirmed the other convictions. The reference was answered accordingly, and the appeal was partly allowed to the extent of the modification in sentence.

Headnote :- Vehicle confiscation / seized property / defence opportunity - Forest staff seized the owner's tractor and trolley on the allegation that they were being illegally loaded with fifteen flagstones. The owner filed a reply to the show-cause notice, and his counsel cross-examined the departmental witnesses. The confiscation authority nevertheless proceeded directly from recording the last departmental testimony to passing the final order, without giving the owner an opportunity to lead defence evidence. Nothing in the record showed that he had expressed unwillingness to examine defence witnesses. His right to lead evidence could not therefore be closed in proceedings carrying penal consequences. The authority also failed to hear final arguments or consider the written reply. The reply and counsel's vakalatnama were missing from the record, and no reason was given for concluding that the owner knew of the alleged offence. These omissions compounded the denial of natural justice.

Remand / confiscation order / scope - The High Court set aside the prescribed authority's confiscation order of 28 January 2013, the appellate order of 20 June 2013 and the revisional order of 5 May 2014. The matter was remanded to the prescribed authority to continue from the stage reached on 31 December 2012. The authority was to allow the owner to lead defence evidence, consider his reply and both sides' evidence, hear final arguments and decide afresh whether the tractor was liable to confiscation. The six-month period runs from receipt of a certified copy of the High Court order. The orders were set aside for procedural defects; the Court did not finally hold that no forest-related offence or vehicle liability could be established.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vijay Singh, the registered owner of tractor MP07-A-7933 and a trolley, invoked Section 482 CrPC to challenge the confiscation order and the appellate and revisional orders affirming it. On 4 January 2012, forest-post staff at Rehat allegedly found a tractor and trolley being illegally loaded with fifteen flagstones, each approximately 3 by 2 in size. The vehicle was chased and stopped. The driver identified himself as Raje, and the forest staff prepared a spot panchnama and seizure memo. The tractor and trolley were seized, and the flagstones were placed in the custody of Ghatigaon Police Station. The merits remained for the prescribed authority to decide on remand.

The prescribed authority, the DDFO at Ghatigaon, issued notice to the driver and then the owner. On 26 October 2012, the owner filed his written reply, and his lawyer filed a vakalatnama. The authority merely noted that the reply was unsatisfactory and listed the matter for departmental evidence. Narendra Kumar Sharma was examined on 22 December 2012, and R.C. Sharma, Joda Ram Jatav and Devendra Singh Tomar were examined on 31 December 2012. The owner's advocate cross-examined them. The record did not show that the department had closed its case or that the owner had declined to call defence witnesses. The matter was never listed for final arguments. The authority proceeded directly to confiscation on 28 January 2013, without considering the defence reply or giving reasons for concluding that the owner knew of an offence. Copies of his reply and counsel's vakalatnama were not found in the authority's file.

The appellate authority-cum-Conservator of Forest, Gwalior affirmed the confiscation on 20 June 2013 in Appeal 12/2013. The Additional Sessions Judge/Special Judge (Electricity), Gwalior affirmed that decision in Criminal Revision 241/2013 on 5 May 2014. The owner asked the High Court to set those orders aside, arguing that his reply had not been evaluated and that he had been denied an opportunity to lead defence evidence. The Court reconstructed the procedural sequence from the authority's own order sheets, rather than deciding the alleged illegal loading or the merits of the owner's defence.

2. Statutes considered : The petition under Section 482 CrPC sought the setting aside of the revisional, appellate and original confiscation orders. The order identifies the prescribed forest authority and describes the seizure and confiscation. The Court examined the right to be heard before confiscation carrying penal consequences. This required consideration of the written reply, an opportunity to lead defence evidence unless the owner expressed unwillingness to examine witnesses, and a hearing on final arguments. The High Court remanded the question whether the tractor was liable to confiscation to the prescribed authority for a fresh determination after the required hearing.

3. Issues : (i) Whether confiscation of the owner's tractor and trolley could stand when the authority had received his show-cause reply and allowed cross-examination of departmental witnesses, but had not given him an opportunity to lead defence evidence, heard final arguments or explained why it rejected his reply on the question of his knowledge of the offence.

(ii) What consequences followed for the prescribed authority's order and the appellate and revisional decisions affirming it, and from which procedural stage should the matter resume? The Court did not finally determine whether the alleged illegal loading of flagstones had occurred or whether the tractor was liable to confiscation.

4. Ratio / Findings : The High Court tested the owner's complaint against the original order sheets. They confirmed that he had received notice, filed a reply on 26 October 2012 and appeared through counsel, who cross-examined one departmental witness in December and three more on 31 December. There was, however, no recorded closure of the prosecution evidence, no statement by the owner that he was unwilling to lead defence evidence, and no listing for final arguments. The authority proceeded directly to confiscation. Counsel's cross-examination of the departmental witnesses did not exhaust the owner's separate right to lead defence evidence or make final submissions before a decision carrying penal consequences. The Court applied the principles of natural justice to the confiscation procedure disclosed by the record.

The authority's bare statement that the reply was unsatisfactory did not provide a reasoned finding about the owner's knowledge of the alleged offence. The confiscation order did not mention the defence he had raised, and even the reply and counsel's vakalatnama were absent from the authority's record. The Court considered these matters together and found a denial of natural justice. It held that the owner's right to lead defence evidence could not be closed unless he expressed unwillingness to examine witnesses, and that the penal consequences of confiscation did not permit the authority to bypass that protection. The Court also noted that a hearing on final arguments would have allowed the owner to point out alleged infirmities in the departmental evidence. Its conclusion rested on the recorded procedural omissions.

The Court consequently set aside all three orders and restored the proceedings to the stage reached on 31 December 2012. The owner was to be allowed to lead evidence, and the authority was to consider his written reply, both parties' evidence and final submissions before deciding afresh whether the tractor was liable to confiscation. The Court left the substantive outcome to the prescribed authority and imposed a time limit because the alleged incident dated back to January 2012.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 petition, with no order as to costs. The prescribed authority's confiscation order of 28 January 2013, the Conservator's appellate order of 20 June 2013 and the revisional court's order of 5 May 2014 were all set aside. The matter was remanded to the prescribed authority from the stage reached on 31 December 2012. The authority must allow the owner to adduce defence evidence and consider his written reply, both sides' evidence and final arguments. It must then decide afresh whether the tractor is liable to confiscation, completing the exercise within six months from receipt of a certified copy of the High Court order. The Court did not order unconditional permanent release of the tractor or finally reject confiscation.

Headnote :- Death reference — Important prosecution witnesses in the trial for the murder of the accused's adoptive mother were examined in the absence of both the accused and his counsel, without lawful dispensation of his personal attendance under Section 273. The defect caused serious prejudice but was curable. The judgment of conviction and sentence, including the death sentence, was set aside for limited re-examination of the two witnesses and a fresh judgment within the prescribed timetable. Guilt was not finally decided.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Deepak Pachori was convicted of murdering his adoptive mother, Usha Devi, and concealing her body. He was sentenced to death for murder. The alleged motive concerned her fixed deposits. He had filed a missing-person report, and her body was recovered from a walled-off area in the bathroom. In the appeal and death reference, he pressed a procedural objection: Sanjay Dutt

Sharma, the deceased's nephew, and Rambabu Sharma had given their initial testimony in April 2025 when both he and his counsel were absent. He maintained that the later proceedings had not cured the defect.

2. Precedents — Considered : Atma Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2019) 20 SCC 481, recognises the accused's right to be present under Section 273 as a valuable right. It held that, in the circumstances before it, the infringement could be remedied by examining the witnesses afresh in the accused's presence and allowing cross-examination, rather than by automatic acquittal. It distinguished Jayendra Vishnu Thakur. The Court also relied on the powers available in a death reference and an appeal under CrPC Chapters XXVIII and XXIX.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 273, 299, 313, 317, 366–368, 386 and 391; IPC Sections 302 and 201.

4. Issues : Were two important witnesses examined contrary to Section 273? Did that invalidate the whole trial or call for a limited remedy for the procedural defect in the death reference?

5. Ratio / Findings : Neither the accused nor his advocate was present when the initial testimony was recorded, and no valid order dispensed with the accused's personal attendance. Counsel later cross-examined the witnesses, but the record did not show that he was authorised to do so in the accused's absence. The Court considered it unsafe to rely on those statements as recorded. A death reference is a continuation of the trial, and the High Court may direct further evidence to be taken. Treating the defect as curable, the Court ordered a limited remand to examine both witnesses afresh, allow cross-examination and put any new facts to the accused in a limited examination under Section 313. The Court did not decide substantive guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the judgment of conviction and sentence dated 23 July 2025, including the death sentence, and remanded the matter for the two witnesses to be examined afresh in the accused's presence. Neither side may lead other evidence or apply to examine another witness. Any new facts emerging from the two witnesses' evidence must be put to the accused in an examination under Section 313 confined to that purpose. The accused may not raise an additional defence that he had not taken at the trial or in his earlier statement under Section 313. The prosecution must produce the witnesses by 24.07.2026 and ensure their physical presence on the date fixed by the trial court. If the accused seeks to engage a new lawyer, a short adjournment must be allowed, but the next date for examining the witnesses must be within ten days. Re-examination of the witnesses and the further examination under Section 313 must be completed by 24.07.2026. The case must be fixed for final arguments by 10.08.2026, and judgment must be pronounced by 25.08.2026. The trial record must be returned immediately. The reference was answered accordingly, and the appeal was finally disposed of.

In the Reference of the State of Madhya Pradesh v. Deepak Pachori, Cr.Rf.C. no. 5/2025; Cr.A. no. 11168/2025, 24/06/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 125 CrPC / sufficient means and earning capacity / wife and minor child - The JMFC found neglect and fixed Rs 10,000 per month for the wife and separately for the minor daughter. The husband's claim of unemployment was assessed against his admissions concerning his earlier annual pay, several large fixed deposits, a substantial savings balance and overseas work; he did not dispute the deposit findings or allege a medical inability to earn. Shamima Farooqui v. Shahid Khan, (2015) 5 SCC 705, holds that Section 125 seeks dignified, adequate sustenance and an able-bodied husband cannot avoid a subsisting support duty with a bare plea of unemployment or financial difficulty. The quotation of Chaturbhuj v. Sita Bai in Shamima Farooqui places the remedy's purpose of preventing destitution in the context of social justice. The Court found that the husband had sufficient earning capacity and declined to interfere under Section 482.

Maintenance quantum / Kalyan Dey Chowdhury / fact-sensitive assessment - The husband cited Kalyan Dey Chowdhury v. Rita Dey Chowdhury Nee Nandy, AIR 2017 SC 2383, in support of his claim that maintenance should be limited to 25% of income. The High Court reproduced the Supreme Court's caution that permanent alimony must reflect the parties' status and the paying spouse's capacity, with the amount determined by the facts of the case.

Section 482 / maintenance fact findings / no perversity - Following dismissal of the husband's revision and the respondents' separate enhancement revision, the High Court said it would not displace factual findings about earning capacity under Section 482 unless shown perverse and contrary to law. The admitted bank deposits were not disputed, and the Court found no basis for interference. The JMFC's order of 26 November 2019 and the Sessions Court's order of 14 March 2020 remained operative; no enhancement or reduction was ordered.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vikas Ramprakash Mishra applied under Section 482 CrPC against the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Karera's order of 14 March 2020 dismissing his Criminal Revision 22/2020 and affirming the JMFC, Karera's maintenance order of 26 November 2019 in Miscellaneous Criminal Case 24/2013. Abha, respondent 1, was undisputedly his legally wedded wife and respondent 2 their minor daughter. After taking evidence, the JMFC found neglect and awarded each respondent Rs 10,000 per month under Section 125 CrPC. The wife and daughter separately pursued enhancement through Criminal Revision 179/2019, also dismissed by the Sessions Court; the matter before the High Court was the husband's challenge under its inherent powers, rather than a fresh claim for enhancement.

The husband maintained that he was unemployed and could not pay. In his testimony, however, he admitted an annual package of Rs 8.5 lakh in 2008 at a private company, deposits of Rs 7 lakh and Rs 16 lakh, two further deposits of Rs 4 lakh each on the stated dates, and a savings balance of Rs 9,82,855 on 8 November 2013. His testimony recorded deputations in Singapore, the United Kingdom and Belgium, with stated foreign-currency earnings. Before the High Court he did not dispute the substantial deposit findings and did not assert a medical ailment that prevented him from working.

He also invoked Kalyan Dey Chowdhury for a proposed 25% income limit. The Court considered Shamima Farooqui's Section 125 support principle and the Kalyan Dey passage concerning permanent alimony, compared each award with the figure it adopted for earning capacity, and held that no perversity or legal error justified altering the maintenance orders.

2. Precedents — Considered : Shamima Farooqui v. Shahid Khan, (2015) 5 SCC 705, was quoted at length. The Supreme Court had criticised a reduction made without reasons after the husband's retirement, emphasizing that Section 125 is meant to prevent financial destitution and furnish a wife with support adequate to her status and dignity, not bare physical survival; the duty is heightened when children are with her. Where an able-bodied husband can support himself, bare claims of unemployment or poor business do not by themselves excuse him from maintaining a wife entitled under the statute, subject to statutory disqualification. The present Court applied that principle to a husband whose earnings, bank deposits, international work and absence of any claim of medical inability to work belied an unsupported inability claim, while maintaining separate awards for wife and daughter.

Within the Shamima Farooqui extract, Chaturbhuj v. Sita Bai described Section 125 as a social-justice remedy to prevent vagrancy and protect women and children, with reference to Capt. Ramesh Chander Kaushal v. Veena Kaushal and Article 15(3) and Article 39 of the Constitution. Savitaben Somabhai Bhatiya v. State of Gujarat was cited there as reinforcing that purpose within the Shamima Farooqui extract. The extract also quoted the Delhi High Court's decision in Chander Parkash Bodh Raj v. Shila Rani Chander Prakash on the need for an able-bodied husband to show cogent grounds for inability to maintain his wife and child, and on the adverse inference when he withholds his exact earnings. These were subsidiary passages within the cited Supreme Court reasoning, not distinct factual determinations on the present husband's current salary.

Kalyan Dey Chowdhury v. Rita Dey Chowdhury Nee Nandy, AIR 2017 SC 2383, was invoked by counsel for an asserted 25% benchmark. The Court reproduced the Supreme Court's words that permanent alimony must befit the spouses' status and the paying spouse's capacity, and that the amount depends on the case's facts and may be adjusted in light of various factors. The Court compared the separate annual awards of Rs 1.2 lakh with a stated earning capacity of Rs 8.4 lakh and declined interference.

The judgment also referred to Shila Bai (Smt.) and Another v. Ashok Kumar Patel, ILR [2014] MP 832, in describing an able-bodied husband's support duty. In reporting the lower court's reliance, the judgment describes Shila Bai as a Supreme Court decision.

3. Statutes considered : Section 125 CrPC provided the wife and minor child with a summary remedy for maintenance. The lower courts found the legal relationships, neglect and the husband's sufficient means or capacity, and granted monthly support to each respondent. The quoted Supreme Court material explains its social purpose and standard of support sufficient for a dignified life, subject to the statute's disqualifications. Section 482 CrPC was invoked against the JMFC and revisional orders. The High Court stated that factual findings, especially undisputed deposits and earning capacity, could not be displaced under that jurisdiction unless perverse and contrary to law. The wife's and daughter's separate revision for enhancement had been dismissed. Article 15(3) and Article 39 appeared within Shamima Farooqui's quotation of Chaturbhuj as context for the social-justice purpose, not independent constitutional grounds decided by this Bench.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the husband's stated unemployment overcame the lower courts' evidence-based findings of earnings, fixed deposits, savings and capacity to maintain his legally wedded wife and minor daughter at Rs 10,000 per month each.

(ii) Whether the passage from Kalyan Dey Chowdhury imposed the 25% limit he asserted on final Section 125 awards, and whether Section 482 allowed the High Court to revisit the undisputed income findings or quantum when the findings had not been shown to be perverse and contrary to law. The Court did not reassess the respondents' separate enhancement revision.

5. Ratio / Findings : The statutory entitlement rested on the accepted relationships of wife and child and the JMFC's finding of neglect. The evidence of means was not a bare assumption based on a prior job title: the husband himself acknowledged substantial annual remuneration, large fixed deposits on different dates, a savings balance of nearly Rs 10 lakh and international assignments. He did not contest the lower courts' deposit findings in the High Court. The Court also noted that he had not claimed any medical condition making him unable to work. Shamima Farooqui explains why a capable husband may not treat maintenance under Section 125 as a bare survival allowance or avoid support by an unsupported assertion of unemployment. The Bench therefore concluded that his capacity sufficed to maintain both respondents. The earlier employment and bank balance had evidentiary value in this case.

The Court next considered the claimed 25% cap. The reproduced passage from Kalyan Dey concerns permanent alimony suited to status and means, with the amount dependent on the facts and open to adjustment according to the circumstances. The High Court held that these awards, based on the facts of the case and supported by admitted means, required no reduction.

Finally, the High Court articulated a limit on its Section 482 intervention at this stage: it would not interfere with factual findings unless demonstrated perverse and contrary to law. The threshold for interference was not met, given the husband's failure to contest the deposits and the absence of a substantive error. The dismissal left the wife's and daughter's existing monthly awards intact, not enhanced; the challenged maintenance orders were affirmed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The JMFC, Karera's 26 November 2019 order directing Rs 10,000 per month to Abha and Rs 10,000 per month to the minor daughter, and the Second Additional Sessions Judge's 14 March 2020 affirmance, remained in force. The High Court ordered no reduction, enhancement, remand, new payment condition or separate costs.

Headnote :- Seven-year-old child's sexual assault and murder — Discovery of the concealed body, the misleading explanation and matching DNA from the victim's clothing, vaginal samples and nail clippings sustained the finding of guilt. The claim of ineffective legal aid did not justify a retrial. The mitigating circumstances and jail conduct showed a prospect of reform. The death sentence under Section 376A was therefore replaced with imprisonment for the remainder of natural life; the other sentences remained unchanged.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A seven-year-old girl disappeared from a marriage procession in February 2023. Sheru first said that he had sent her away with a relative; the body was recovered under dry grass after his disclosure. The autopsy showed rape and murder. He was convicted under the IPC provisions relating to kidnapping, rape and murder and under POCSO; the trial court imposed the death sentence under Section 376A. In the appeal and death-reference proceedings, he sought a de novo trial on the ground that the assigned counsel had not provided effective legal assistance.

2. Precedents — Considered : The accused invoked Aman Singh v. State of Bihar on competent legal assistance. The Court rejected the request for a retrial after noting that the assigned counsel admittedly had seventeen years of practice, that no supporting material showed that he lacked competence to conduct a criminal trial, and that the accused had not objected to his competence while the evidence was being recorded. On sentence, the Court also followed the direction in Aman Singh to obtain material on aggravating and mitigating circumstances from the State. Gauri Shankar v. State of Punjab and Union of India v. V. Sriharan, (2016) 7 SCC 1, established the High Court's power to replace a death sentence with imprisonment for the remainder of natural life.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 364, 366, 376A, 376AB and 302; POCSO Act Sections 5(m)/6; CrPC Section 366 and procedural retrial powers; Evidence Act Sections 8 and 27.

4. Issues : Did the representation provided at trial require a fresh trial? Were discovery, the accused's conduct and the DNA evidence sufficient to sustain guilt? Did the mitigating material preclude capital punishment and permit imprisonment for the remainder of natural life instead?

5. Ratio / Findings : There was no evidence that the advocate, who had 17 years of practice, lacked competence, and the accused had not objected to his competence while the evidence was being recorded. The discovery of the concealed body, the inconsistent account and the relevant conduct after the offence were considered together with the evidence of when the accused and victim were last seen together. DNA matching Sheru's was found on the victim's clothes, vaginal slide/swab and nail clippings. The medical findings provided further corroboration. The State's socioeconomic and jail reports recorded his limited means, family responsibilities, discipline and conduct indicating reform. Although the offence was brutal, imprisonment for the remainder of natural life remained an available alternative. The High Court substituted that sentence for death under Section 376A while preserving the other convictions.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court rejected the application for a de novo trial and declined to confirm the death sentence in the reference. It set aside the death sentence under Section 376A and imposed life imprisonment for the remainder of the accused's natural life. The fine and the other convictions and sentences were affirmed. The appeal was disposed of with this modification of sentence.

Headnote :- Section 125 CrPC / interim means / disclosure and resignation - The husband admitted his June 2022 appointment with UltraTech Cement but had omitted it from the affidavit filed under Rajnesh v. Neha, (2021) 2 SCC 324. The Court rejected his unsupported oral claim of resignation, as neither his resignation letter nor the company's acceptance had been produced. The salary material indicated Rs 50,000 per month with allowances. On that record, the Court reassessed his means for interim maintenance without finally determining the husband's exact net monthly income, which remained disputed, or precluding further evidence at trial.

Wife's asserted earnings / junior advocate / proof - Registration and practice as an advocate did not themselves establish that the 28-year-old wife actually earned a substantial income sufficient to maintain herself. The husband produced no vakalatnamas or other evidence of substantial practice. The Court declined to deny interim support on conjecture about her earnings. Its observations remained provisional, as evidence had yet to be led.

Quantum / family-consistent sustenance / Supreme Court principles - Chaturbhuj v. Sita Bai, (2008) 2 SCC 316, and Bhagwan Dutt v. Kamla Devi, (1975) 2 SCC 386, were applied to assess support consistent with the family's status, neither luxurious nor penurious. A wife need not be absolutely destitute before claiming maintenance under Section 125. Given the provisional income evidence, the lack of proof of the wife's earnings and the current cost of daily necessities, the Court increased interim maintenance from Rs 4,000 to Rs 10,000 per month with effect from the application date. The Family Court was expressly directed to decide the matter after evidence without being influenced by these interlocutory observations.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Tishi Sharma filed a revision under Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act read with Section 397 CrPC against the interim maintenance order dated 29 August 2023 passed by the Principal Judge, Family Court, Ujjain, in Miscellaneous Judicial Case 476/2022. The order awarded her Rs 4,000 per month, which she considered inadequate. The High Court had requisitioned the Family Court's record on 6 December 2023, and the underlying proceeding had made no further progress while the revision remained pending.

The wife relied on Mohit Sharma's appointment letter dated 10 June 2022, which described him as Territory Manager, Technical and Customer Solutions, Officer at Job Band 11 in UltraTech Cement's Quality and Technical Services function. She asserted that his annual package was Rs 6 lakh, equivalent to Rs 50,000 per month, with a further Rs 20,000 per month in allowances, making a total of Rs 70,000 in her submission. She also said that he had omitted the appointment from the affidavit of assets and liabilities filed under the Rajnesh v. Neha guidelines. The husband acknowledged the appointment but orally asserted that he had left the job because of litigation initiated by her. He claimed that she was about 28 years old, practised as an advocate and had a substantial income, so she needed no support.

The High Court regarded the appointment and its omission from the disclosure affidavit as undisputed. Neither a resignation letter nor the employer's acceptance supported the husband's new claim that he had left the job. He also produced no vakalatnamas or other records showing that the wife had the substantial legal practice he alleged. The salary material showed Rs 50,000 per month with allowances. The Court expressly stated that its observations were preliminary, as the parties had yet to lead evidence. Before modifying the amount, it considered the provisional stage of the matter, the standard of maintenance consistent with the family's status, the cost of daily necessities and the limited scope of its interlocutory findings.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rajnesh v. Neha and Another, (2021) 2 SCC 324, supplied the Supreme Court framework for financial-disclosure affidavits, which the wife invoked and the Court recognized. In applying that framework, the Court noted that the husband had not disclosed his June 2022 employment in his affidavit. When assessing his means for interim maintenance, it rejected his later claim of resignation because no documentary evidence supported it.

Chaturbhuj v. Sita Bai, (2008) 2 SCC 316, and Bhagwan Dutt v. Kamla Devi, (1975) 2 SCC 386, were expressly invoked in the Court's reasoning on the amount of maintenance. The Court drew from them the principle that maintenance should enable a wife to maintain a standard of living consistent with the family's status, neither luxurious nor penurious. The expression "unable to maintain herself" under Section 125 does not require her to be absolutely destitute before claiming maintenance. The Court applied that principle to the husband's employment evidence, the lack of proof that the wife earned a substantial income from practice and the cost of daily necessities. It increased the interim award from Rs 4,000 to Rs 10,000. The Court expressly confined its observations to the interim stage, before evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 125 CrPC governed the wife's underlying maintenance claim and the interim amount. The Court applied the principles concerning her inability to maintain herself and appropriate support without finally deciding the disputed income or precluding further evidence. Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act and Section 397 CrPC were the revision provisions stated in the opening paragraph. The financial affidavit under Rajnesh served to disclose income; it did not replace documentary proof concerning resignation or the spouse's earnings.

4. Issues : (i) Did Rs 4,000 per month remain adequate interim maintenance in light of the husband's acknowledged employment, his omission of it from the affidavit, his undocumented assertion of resignation, and the wife's claim of a higher package and allowance?

(ii) Did the wife's status as a practising advocate alone establish that she currently earned enough to maintain herself, or was evidence of her actual practice and means required?

(iii) What interim amount and effective date were appropriate in light of support consistent with the family's status, the available material and current living costs? How could the Family Court's later assessment after evidence remain unaffected? The Court did not finally determine either party's precise earnings for the trial.

5. Ratio / Findings : The husband admitted the June 2022 appointment but had not disclosed it in his affidavit under Rajnesh. His bare explanation that litigation by his wife had forced him to resign was unsupported by a resignation letter or the employer's acceptance, although he could have produced those documents. The Court regarded this oral assertion as an afterthought and rejected it at this stage. The salary material showed about Rs 50,000 per month with allowances. The wife's specific claim of an additional Rs 20,000 in allowances remained a contention, and the Court expressly stated that its observations were preliminary, before evidence. Her assertion remained distinct from the Court's provisional assessment of income.

The husband's assertion about the wife's income from legal practice also lacked proof. The Court said that a newly registered junior advocate does not necessarily earn a substantial income from the date of registration. It identified certified vakalatnamas as one form of evidence he could have produced to show substantial practice, but he produced none. Its refusal to presume substantial earnings was confined to the facts and remained provisional. The Family Court can determine actual means after both parties lead evidence.

Chaturbhuj and Bhagwan Dutt supplied the standard: support consistent with the status of the matrimonial household, neither luxurious nor penurious, without requiring the claimant to become wholly destitute. Considering the salary material and the unproved competing assertions, together with inflation/price index and the cost of daily necessities, the Court held Rs 4,000 inadequate and fixed Rs 10,000 per month. The enhancement took effect from the date of the Section 125 application, rather than merely from the date of the High Court's order. The Family Court's record had been requisitioned and the case had not progressed. As the matter was still at an initial stage and the parties had yet to lead evidence, the Court expressly directed that its preliminary observations should not influence the eventual decision on the merits after evidence. The amount remained an interim ruling, without finally determining income or entitlement.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the revision by modifying the Family Court's order dated 29 August 2023. It increased interim maintenance from Rs 4,000 to Rs 10,000 per month with effect from the application date. The Family Court was directed not to be influenced or prejudiced by the High Court's observations when the parties later lead evidence in the underlying proceeding.

Headnote :- Double murder appeal — A quarrel over the burning of dung cakes led Indal to shoot Kailashi; he and the others then chased and killed Garsingh. Eyewitness testimony and medical evidence established that the accused deliberately acted together with firearms. This supported Subodh's liability under Section 34; his participation included firing at Garsingh. The testimony of related witnesses was corroborated. The failure of a seizure witness to support the prosecution did not undermine the case. The life sentences were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A fire lit in a dung hill to kill a snake damaged neighbouring dung cakes and caused a quarrel. In October 2007, after the quarrel, Indal Singh fired on Kailashi, and the group chased and surrounded Garsingh, who was shot dead. Indal was convicted on two counts under Section 302 IPC; Subodh and Dhaniram were convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34. Dhaniram's appeal abated following his death. Indal and Subodh challenged their convictions on the grounds of inconsistencies in the witnesses' accounts, the witnesses' relationship with the deceased and absence of intention.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virendra Singh v. State of M.P., Chhota Ahirwar v. State of M.P., (2020) 4 SCC 126, and Sandeep v. State of Haryana guided the Court's assessment of common intention under Section 34. The Court also surveyed authorities on murder and the appreciation of evidence.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 34, 299, 300 and 302; CrPC Section 374.

4. Issues : Did the firearm deaths amount to murder? Did Subodh share Indal's intention in both killings, despite disputes about the precise acts attributed to him and the witnesses' relationship with the deceased?

5. Ratio / Findings : Eyewitnesses Surajmukhi and Ramvilas described Indal's shot at Kailashi. Sikandar, a neighbour, and Uday Singh supported the account of the chase, encirclement and further shots at Garsingh. The firearm injuries were consistent with this evidence. Section 34 imposes constructive liability for acts done in concert. Common intention may form suddenly, but it must exist before the criminal act, and there must be shared intention and participation in its furtherance. A separate fatal blow by each participant need not be proved. It is not enough that different accused independently had the same intention. The group's conduct and continued pursuit established common intention. The failure of a seizure witness to support the prosecution did not nullify the investigator's recovery of the gun or the consistent eyewitness and medical evidence. The defence accounts did not raise a reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the life sentences imposed on Indal and Subodh. Dhaniram's appeal remained abated.

Headnote :- Sessions trial / public prosecutor control / BNSS Sections 248 and 338(2) - Section 248 places the conduct of a Sessions prosecution with the Public Prosecutor. Under Section 338(2), a privately instructed advocate acts under that prosecutor's directions and may, with the Court's permission, file written arguments after the evidence closes. The provision gives no general right to cross-examine witnesses or make oral arguments. Rekha Murarka v. State of West Bengal, (2020) 2 SCC 474, rejected an expanded role for a victim's counsel that was unsupported by the text of the corresponding CrPC provisions. The Court applied that limit to an elected councillor's application to participate at the stage of framing charges in a municipal corruption trial and upheld its refusal.

Complainant status / charge-stage intervention / distinct bail authorities - The councillor's representation prompted an inquiry and an FIR concerning allegedly false records of municipal road works. He argued that, as the original complainant and a representative of residents, he was a victim entitled to assist the prosecution. The Court did not accept that this status could override BNSS Sections 248 and 338(2) or permit oral advocacy or examination of witnesses at the stage of framing charges. Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338, and R. Rathinam v. State, (2000) 2 SCC 391, were distinguished because they concerned cancellation of bail. The revision was dismissed without deciding whether the corruption allegations were true.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vijay Sharma filed Criminal Revision No. 1874/2026 under Sections 438 and 442 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023 (BNSS), challenging the order dated 10 February 2026 passed by the Special Court (Prevention of Corruption Act), Shivpuri, in SC No. 97/2025. The court had refused his I.A. No. 2/2026 under Section 338(2) BNSS to assist the prosecution at the stage of framing charges. He was an elected councillor and was not an accused.

On 21 July 2025, 21 elected councillors of the Municipal Council, Shivpuri, submitted a written representation to the Collector about the condition of roads, works that allegedly did not exist but were recorded as completed, and suspected misuse of municipal funds. The Collector ordered an SDM inquiry, and the SDM submitted a report on 25 July. On the Collector's direction, FIR No. 504/2025 was registered at Kotwali, Shivpuri, against a sub-engineer, an assistant engineer and a construction contractor for offences under BNS Sections 318(4), 316(5), 61(2), 337, 338, 336(3), 340(2) and Prevention of Corruption Act Sections 8 and 12. Following investigation, the charge sheet cited BNS Sections 318(4), 316(5), 61(2), 338, 336(3), 340(2) and PC Act Sections 13(1)(A) and 8. The Court set out these allegations as procedural background; it did not examine the merits of the charges.

The petitioner argued that the trial court had wrongly denied him participation merely because it did not recognize him as a victim. He said that his original representation prompted the FIR and that, as a councillor, he represented residents affected by the alleged misuse of public funds. He cited Puran v. Rambilas and R. Rathinam v. State. The State maintained that only the Public Prosecutor could conduct the Sessions trial. The revision therefore concerned statutory control of the prosecution and the role and stage at which a private lawyer could participate. It was not a separate challenge to the SDM report, charge sheet or investigation.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rekha Murarka v. State of West Bengal and Another, (2020) 2 SCC 474, was introduced by the Bench and quoted on the corresponding CrPC Sections 24, 225 and 301. The Supreme Court considered a request to expand the role of a victim's counsel on the ground that the Public Prosecutor might, deliberately or through oversight, fail to present the case properly. It rejected a broad right for private counsel to make oral arguments and examine witnesses because that role was unsupported by the statutory text, despite the concern about prosecutorial inadequacy. The present Bench applied that principle with BNSS Sections 248 and 338(2). It confined the privately engaged advocate to submitting written arguments under the Public Prosecutor's directions, with the Court's permission, after the evidence closed, and rejected the application made at the stage of framing charges. Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338, and R. Rathinam v. State, (2000) 2 SCC 391, were cited by the petitioner's counsel. The Court described both as concerning cancellation of bail, distinguished that context from the conduct of a Sessions trial and found them unhelpful.

3. Statutes considered : BNSS Section 248 provides that the prosecution in every Sessions Court trial shall be conducted by a Public Prosecutor. BNSS Section 338(1) allows the Public Prosecutor or Assistant Public Prosecutor in charge to appear and plead without written authority. Section 338(2) concerns a private person instructing an advocate to prosecute. The prosecutor in charge continues to conduct the case; the instructed advocate acts under that prosecutor's directions and may, with the Court's permission, submit written arguments after the evidence has closed. Reading these provisions together, the Court excluded an independent right for private counsel to make oral submissions or cross-examine witnesses and held that the application made during charge framing was premature for the specified written-argument role. The Supreme Court excerpt concerned analogous CrPC Sections 24, 225 and 301; the present Court applied the enacted BNSS provisions. BNSS Sections 438 and 442 provided the revisional remedy.

The BNS and Prevention of Corruption Act provisions named in the FIR and charge sheet formed only the background to the municipal-funds prosecution. The Court did not decide their offence ingredients, whether a charge should be framed or the accused's guilt. The alleged public nature of the corruption was not treated as creating a right of private prosecution.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Sections 248 and 338(2) BNSS permitted a privately instructed advocate, acting for the councillor whose representation led to the FIR, to intervene in a Sessions prosecution at the stage of framing charges, make oral submissions or cross-examine witnesses; or whether any permissible role remained under the Public Prosecutor's control and was confined to written arguments after the evidence closed, with the Court's permission.

(ii) Whether the petitioner's claim to be the original complainant and a representative of municipal residents, together with his reliance on bail-cancellation decisions, established illegality, perversity or impropriety in the Special Court's refusal. The Court did not determine whether the corruption accusations were true.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Division Bench first examined the statutory text. Section 248 entrusts the Sessions prosecution to the Public Prosecutor. Section 338(2) preserves that control even when a private person instructs counsel: the advocate must act under the prosecutor's directions and may submit written arguments only with the Court's permission and after the evidence has closed. The Court held that privately engaged counsel could not make oral arguments or cross-examine witnesses under this provision. The application was filed while charges were being framed, before the evidence closed. Its refusal at that stage was not contrary to these provisions. The decision did not exclude a later opportunity to file written arguments, subject to the stated conditions.

The Court examined the petitioner's claim to complainant or victim status in light of Rekha Murarka. There, the Supreme Court rejected an expanded role for private counsel to make oral submissions and examine witnesses merely because of possible shortcomings by the prosecutor, since that role was unsupported by the relevant CrPC text. The corresponding BNSS provisions led the present Bench to the same limited role in a Sessions trial. In the Court's view, the fact that his representation triggered the FIR did not displace the Public Prosecutor's control or alter the timing prescribed by Section 338(2).

Puran and R. Rathinam were distinguished as cases concerning cancellation of bail. The Court did not apply them to the request to assist the prosecution at the stage of framing charges. Considering the statutory timing, supervised scope of participation and cited authority together, it found no illegality, perversity or impropriety in the refusal. The ruling concerns the conduct of and assistance in the trial; it does not decide the validity of the corruption case or the accused persons' liability.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the revision. The Special Court's order dated 10

February 2026 refusing the councillor's application under Section 338(2) remained in force. No private counsel was permitted to make oral arguments, cross-examine witnesses or otherwise intervene at the stage of framing charges under that application. The Court described the statutory possibility of written arguments with its permission after the evidence closed, but did not grant that permission at this stage.

Case Sr. no. (401) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial FIR / divorce petition / counterblast - The wife's later FIR under Section 498-A and the dowry provisions was not quashed merely because the husband had first filed a divorce petition. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, explains that efforts to reconcile and preserve the marriage may account for the time taken to report; civil and criminal proceedings can coexist. The Court applied that reasoning to reject an automatic inference of retaliation while leaving the allegations for trial. Pratibha also states the limits, based on Bhajan Lal, on using extraneous material under Section 482. Those limits prevented the Court from resolving disputed facts from the parallel case.

Civil and criminal findings / separate proof standards / previous judgments - Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, and Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), (2009) 5 SCC 528, explained, through Iqbal Singh Marwah, K.G. Premshanker and M.S. Sheriff, that civil cases require proof on a preponderance of probabilities while criminal cases require proof beyond reasonable doubt. Findings of fact do not bind the other forum merely because the subject matter overlaps. Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon, SLP (Cr.) 9778/2018, decided 2 April 2024, reaffirmed the Constitution Bench reasoning and recognized that proceedings may continue simultaneously, subject to the stated qualifications. Evidence Act Sections 40–43 may make a final judgment relevant, and Section 41 may make a specified judgment conclusive; the Court did not hold that all prior judgments were irrelevant. The broad proposition in Karam Chand giving civil findings primacy was not followed as the governing rule. The divorce case therefore did not determine the criminal accusations.

Section 482 / disputed residence - A process-server's report on service of notice in the divorce case stated that the wife lived with her in-laws in Indore, which the accused themselves disputed. Her actual residence and the competing account that she had taken shelter in Kareli required proof at trial. The Court did not conclusively resolve that factual defence while considering quashing.

Section 498-A IPC / continuing mental cruelty / Kareli connection - Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, recognizes that emotional trauma from abusive conduct and forced separation may continue at the parental home after physical acts at the matrimonial home have ended. Applying that rule, and citing Amar Singh v. Vimla, the Court accepted the complainant's asserted residence in Kareli as a prima facie basis for local investigation. The revisional court's finding that ₹5 lakh had been transferred from Kareli supplied a further connection. Neither the wife's residence nor the applicants' guilt was finally adjudicated.

Quashing / alleged mala fides / complainant's lawyer father - The father's profession as a local advocate did not itself establish that the FIR was false. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, drew on R.P. Kapur and State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal to confine Section 482 review to recognized exceptional grounds, considering whether the allegations taken at face value disclosed an offence and examining appropriate material without conducting a trial within the quashing proceedings. Applying that test, the Court noted that counsel had not explained how the father's profession was connected with fabrication. Alleged mala fides of the informant were secondary where a cognizable offence was disclosed. This did not eliminate the distinct Bhajan Lal category of malicious prosecution where its conditions are established.

FIR / territorial police jurisdiction / transfer - An FIR disclosing a cognizable offence may be lodged at any police station. If that station concludes that it lacks territorial jurisdiction to investigate, it should transfer the FIR to the competent station; receipt of the FIR alone is no ground for quashing. Here, the reasoning on continuing cruelty and the transfer from Kareli also answered the factual jurisdiction challenge. The transfer rule provided an independent answer to an objection based solely on territorial jurisdiction.

Charge / incorrect name / correction - An incorrect name for the wife in a framed charge can be addressed by an application under the charge-correction provision; it does not automatically nullify the charge. No amendment of the charge or issue of prejudice was finally decided. The Section 482 application challenging the FIR and charges was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Tamish Saluja and the other applicants filed Misc. Criminal Case No. 16003/2024 under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR No. 1050/2023 at Police Station Kareli, District Narsinghpur, for Section 498-A read with Section 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961. Charges had been framed, and the applicants' Criminal Revision No. 8/2024 challenging them was dismissed by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Narsinghpur, on 12 March 2024. The application challenged both the FIR and the framed charges; the High Court decided it on 16 May 2024. The order does not reproduce the complete complaint or trial evidence. The alleged matrimonial cruelty and dowry demand remained accusations, not findings of guilt.

The applicants' counsel submitted that the entire cause of action arose in Indore and that the FIR was a retaliatory counterblast to the divorce petition filed by the husband, the first applicant. He said that the complainant wife's father lived in Kareli and practised as an advocate at Narsinghpur, and that the wife did not actually reside in Kareli. Counsel relied on a service report in the divorce proceeding: a notice sent to the father's address had been returned with a statement that she lived with her in-laws in Indore, although the applicants themselves disputed that assertion. They also complained that the framed charge named a different woman. The Court heard the applicants' counsel; the order records no developed argument from the respondents. It addressed each objection at the Section 482 threshold, without adjudicating the parties' disputed evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi and Others, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted by the High Court on a wife's delay in reporting during attempted reconciliation, the principle that a husband's divorce petition does not itself bar or taint later criminal proceedings, and the limit on using extraneous investigative findings to quash a complaint under Section 482. Pratibha drew on the illustrative categories in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal. Applying that reasoning, the High Court held that a wife who waited while trying to save the marriage and reported when the divorce filing ended that hope was not thereby shown to have lodged a counterblast. It did not hold that every late complaint was explained or that all parallel civil and criminal proceedings had to proceed at identical times.

Kishan Singh (Dead) through LRs v. Gurpal Singh and Others, (2010) 8 SCC 775, was quoted on the independence of civil and criminal findings of fact, the standards of a preponderance of probabilities in civil cases and proof beyond reasonable doubt in criminal cases, and the qualification that prior judgments may be relevant under Evidence Act Sections 41–43. The passage discussed Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, for those different standards. It described how Syed Askari and Vishnu Dutt Sharma treated the broad rule in Karam Chand that civil findings prevail over criminal findings as displaced by the Constitution Bench and K.G. Premshanker decisions. The High Court adopted the principle that findings do not automatically bind the other forum, rejecting automatic priority for the divorce case while retaining the statutory relevance exception.

Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), (2009) 5 SCC 528, was separately quoted. Its discussion of K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87, explains that final prior judgments may be relied on only as provided by Evidence Act Sections 40–43. Civil res judicata and CrPC Section 300 have their own conditions, and Section 41 identifies a conclusive class of judgments. The first question is relevance; the second is the judgment's effect in the particular case. Section 43 generally excludes other judgments unless their existence is in issue or another provision makes them relevant. The passage rejects automatic binding force in either direction. It also refers to Iqbal Singh Marwah's distinct discussion of delays in prosecution under Sections 340/343 CrPC and P. Swaroopa Rani's observation that simultaneous proceedings depend on the facts. The present Court used the rule that findings do not automatically bind across forums; it did not make a new ruling under Section 340 or decide the admissibility of a particular divorce decree.

Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon and Another, Supreme Court SLP (Cr.) No. 9778/2018, decided 2

April 2024, was then quoted on Karam Chand, K.G. Premshanker, Vishnu Dutt Sharma, Satish Chander Ahuja and Iqbal Singh Marwah. It treats the Constitution Bench explanation in Iqbal Singh Marwah of M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, as settling that each forum decides on its own evidence and that conflicting outcomes do not themselves make one forum's finding binding. M.S. Sheriff favoured precedence for criminal proceedings where appropriate, but expressly rejected an inflexible sequencing rule and allowed for special circumstances. Within Prem Raj, Satish Chander Ahuja was cited for the absence of a bar on a civil court considering evidence led in criminal proceedings; that does not mean the findings automatically bind. The High Court invoked these authorities to reinforce independent assessment, without staying the divorce case or deciding a separate prosecution issue under Section 476/340.

Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted on the mental component of Section 498-A cruelty: trauma from cruelty, verbal abuse and being driven away may persist at the parental shelter even without fresh physical violence there. The Court applied it to the alleged shelter in Kareli and the territorial jurisdiction to investigate. Amar Singh v. Vimla, MP High Court Criminal Revision No. 2376/2020, decided 22 June 2021, was cited for the proposition that compelling a wife to live at her parental home amounts to cruelty. The High Court treated it as supportive authority, not as proof that these applicants committed the offence.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar and Others, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted extensively after consideration of R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, and Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335. The test preserves exceptional inherent jurisdiction to prevent abuse and secure justice, including cases of a legal bar, failure of the allegations taken at face value to disclose an offence, manifest absence of legal evidence and established malicious prosecution. It warns against evaluating witness reliability or conducting a trial on incomplete facts within quashing proceedings. The nested quotation names State of Karnataka v. M. Devendrappa, State of M.P. v. Awadh Kishore Gupta and State of Orissa v. Saroj Kumar Sahoo as reiterating the position, without separately analysing their facts. The High Court applied the limits concerning face-value allegations and mala fides to reject a claim based only on the complainant's father's profession. It did not abolish the properly established mala fide category in Bhajan Lal.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the High Court's inherent jurisdiction to quash the FIR and framed charges for abuse of process or failure to disclose an offence. The Court assessed the allegations at the threshold, declined to resolve residence and other factual disputes, and preserved the trial court's function. Section 498-A read with Section 34 IPC and Sections 3–4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were the FIR offences. The Court explained only the physical and continuing mental dimensions of Section 498-A cruelty relevant to the connection with Kareli. It did not decide all offence ingredients, common intention, proof of demand or guilt.

Evidence Act, 1872, Sections 40–43 were discussed through the Supreme Court quotations on the relevance of a prior judgment and the limited conclusiveness under Section 41. The different civil and criminal standards explain why findings do not automatically bind across forums. CrPC Section 300, civil res judicata, and Sections 340, 341 and 343 appear within Syed Askari's quoted doctrinal discussion; they were not independently applied to this FIR. The husband's divorce petition was procedural context, not a civil determination of the criminal allegations.

The Court stated that any station may receive a cognizable FIR and must transfer it if it concludes territorial investigation belongs elsewhere. It referred to Section 216 for correction of a misnamed wife in a framed charge.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the divorce petition's earlier filing, the time of the FIR and the couple's civil dispute made the Kareli criminal case a retaliatory counterblast requiring quashing, or whether reconciliation and separate civil/criminal processes prevented that inference.

(ii) Whether civil and criminal findings automatically bind one another, in light of distinct burdens and Evidence Act Sections 40–43's qualified relevance and conclusiveness rules.

(iii) Whether a divorce proceeding's returned service report conclusively disproved the wife's claimed Kareli residence at the Section 482 stage.

(iv) Whether Section 498-A mental cruelty could continue where the wife allegedly sheltered with parents at Kareli, and whether the alleged location plus the revisional court's ₹5 lakh transfer finding supported local police investigation.

(v) Whether the complainant's father's practice as an advocate at Narsinghpur established mala fides despite the allegations disclosing a cognizable offence when taken at face value; and whether an objection based only on the receiving station's territorial jurisdiction invalidated the FIR or required transfer if necessary.

(vi) Whether the allegedly incorrect name for the wife in the charge required quashing of the charges or an application for correction under the charge-alteration provision.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied Pratibha to the claim that the FIR was a counterblast to the divorce petition. A complainant may delay lodging an FIR while attempting marital reconciliation and report after the husband's divorce petition ends the hope of restoring the marriage; that chronology alone did not establish bad faith. Civil and criminal proceedings may arise from the same facts without the civil case bringing the criminal case to an end. The Court did not make a final factual finding about all the reasons for this wife's delay in reporting, but found no basis for quashing on the ground advanced by the applicants.

The Court separately invoked Kishan Singh, Syed Askari and Prem Raj. Findings of fact in one forum do not automatically bind the other because the civil and criminal standards of proof and evidentiary records differ. The quoted authorities permit limited relevance of final judgments under Sections 40–43, subject to Section 41's special rule of conclusiveness and an assessment of their effect in each case. The categorical proposition in Karam Chand that civil findings bind criminal courts was not treated as controlling. The Constitution Bench decisions in M.S. Sheriff and Iqbal Singh Marwah permit independent adjudication, and precedence for criminal proceedings is not inflexible. No particular final civil finding or objection to admissibility was decided here.

The process-server's report in the divorce case stated that the wife lived with her in-laws in Indore, although the applicants themselves denied that assertion. Her actual residence could be proved only at trial. The Court therefore declined to try those disputed facts under Section 482 on the basis of this inconsistent report. It proceeded on the complaint's asserted Kareli residence only for the preliminary territorial inquiry.

Under Rupali Devi, Section 498-A cruelty may include continuing mental trauma at the wife's parental shelter even after physical acts at the matrimonial home have ceased. The High Court also cited Amar Singh. If she lived in Kareli as claimed, the continuing effect connected the offence with that locality. The revisional court's finding that ₹5 lakh had been transferred from Kareli provided a second connection. This answered the applicants' territorial objection at the FIR stage without finally proving either the offence or the wife's residence.

No explanation linked the father's local legal practice to a false FIR. Following Renu Kumari, R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal, the Court considered the FIR's allegations and declined to treat an unexplained assertion of motive as a ground for quashing where a cognizable offence appeared. Alleged mala fides of the informant were secondary in that setting; the cited categories continued to permit quashing for properly established exceptional abuse. Separately, an FIR may be lodged at any police station. If the receiving station concludes that it lacks territorial jurisdiction to investigate, it must transfer the FIR; initial receipt alone is not a ground for quashing.

The Court did not correct the actual charge itself, resolve a prejudice argument or adjudicate ultimate guilt. Having rejected every quashing ground, it found no case for inherent interference.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. FIR No. 1050/2023 at Kareli and the challenged charges were not quashed, and the earlier dismissal of the revision was not disturbed. The Court made no order staying or deciding the divorce case, determining the wife's residence, amending the name in the charge, transferring the FIR or finally deciding whether the cruelty and dowry allegations were true. The applicants remained free to seek correction of the charge under the provision identified by the Court.

Case Sr. no. (402) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 125 CrPC / final quantum / salary deductions - In cross-revisions challenging a final Family Court award of ₹5,000 monthly to the wife and ₹4,000 to the child, the husband produced salary slips for the first time. Only mandatory deductions could reduce the take-home pay assessed for maintenance; voluntary provident-fund contributions, mess, club, insurance and similar deductions chosen by the husband could not. The January 2021 gross salary of ₹31,942, less ₹1,757 for mandatory provident fund and ₹42 for house rent, yielded ₹30,143, rather than the ₹20,000 asserted by the husband. The August 2017 and January 2021 deduction tables were examined. The Court used the corrected income to assess maintenance for each beneficiary separately.

Minor child / independent needs / enhancement - A daughter's maintenance must account for schooling, uniform, nutritious food, clothing and normal diet. The Court considered the husband's monthly mess recovery of ₹3,547 and found the child's award of ₹4,000 low. Guided by Rajnesh v. Neha, Criminal Appeal 730/2020, decided 4 November 2020, on means, status and inflation, it enhanced the daughter's award to ₹7,500 monthly. The comparison was based on the evidence in this case and did not establish a universal formula.

Wife / literacy versus actual income - The husband asserted that the wife was literate and could support herself, but did not claim that she actually earned. Literacy and possible earning capacity alone did not disqualify her. Rajnesh v. Neha rejects education or potential self-support as a complete answer to maintenance and excludes the wife's parental means when assessing how much the husband must pay; the able-bodied husband's actual resources and the spouses' standard of living remained material. Her award of ₹5,000 was increased to ₹7,500 monthly. The Court did not find that she was employed or unable to work because of a specified child-care responsibility.

Section 125 / social-justice interpretation / Rajnesh factors - Sanjeev Kapoor v. Chandana Kapoor, (2020) 13 SCC 172, quoted Badshah v. Urmila Badshah Godse, (2014) 1 SCC 188, in support of a purposive interpretation of the continuing duty under Section 125 toward wife, child and parents in its social context. The High Court applied that perspective alongside the factors identified in Rajnesh: actual income, reasonable expenses, legally dependent persons, liabilities, status and inflation. It enhanced both final awards without deciding the distinct facts concerning wife status discussed in Badshah.

Cross-revisions / effective date / relief - The Family Court's order of 28 January 2017 was affirmed subject to enhancement. The Court made each increased monthly sum of ₹7,500 payable from its order of 17 March 2021, noting that the husband had sought time to argue only on 9 March 2021. It did not direct payment of the increase from the 2015 application. The husband's Revision 283/2017 was dismissed, and the wife and child's Revision 545/2017 was allowed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Amit Nimodiya and Bharti Nimodiya married at Kota on 4 February 2010 and had a child. On 7 May 2015, the wife and child applied for maintenance under Section 125 CrPC in the Family Court at Sheopur. They alleged that the husband, a supervisor in an Aditya Birla Group cement factory, earned approximately ₹50,000 monthly, drank and beat the wife, demanded a car and ₹5 lakh with his family, and drove her to her parental home when she wanted to visit her ill father. These were their allegations. The husband denied demanding dowry, said that she was literate and could maintain herself and the child, asserted monthly take-home pay of roughly ₹20,000 and other responsibilities, and referred to her criminal complaints. After recording evidence, the Principal Judge found sufficient reason for separate residence and, on 28 January 2017, awarded ₹5,000 monthly to the wife and ₹4,000 to the child. No salary slip had been filed, so the Judge estimated his income at ₹30,000, while noting his admission of roughly ₹20,000 and the parties' status.

The husband challenged that final order as excessive in Criminal Revision 283/2017; the wife and daughter sought enhancement in Criminal Revision 545/2017. The High Court heard the revisions together. On 17 March 2021, it allowed the husband's I.A. 8974/2021 to place on record salary slips necessary to decide the income issue. The August 2017 slip showed income of ₹28,204 and deductions of ₹6,684. Its deduction table listed mandatory provident fund of ₹1,586, voluntary provident fund of ₹1,586, house rent recovery of ₹42 and other deductions including mess recovery of ₹715, club charges of ₹100, cable charges of ₹65, mediclaim of ₹1,888, mobile charges of ₹13, LIC of ₹552 and canteen charges of ₹137. The January 2021 slip showed gross income of ₹31,942. Its deduction table listed provident fund of ₹1,757, voluntary provident fund of ₹1,904, house rent of ₹42, mess recovery of ₹3,547, club charges of ₹100, cable charges of ₹146, mobile charges of ₹60, LIC of ₹552 and canteen charges of ₹30. The Court treated only ordinary provident fund and house rent recovery as mandatory in these slips, calculating the monthly income available for maintenance as ₹31,942 - ₹1,757 - ₹42 = ₹30,143.

The Judge compared the husband's subsidised mess food expense with the daughter's allowance of ₹4,000 and considered her schooling, uniform, nutrition and clothing. The husband's objection based on the wife's literacy was rejected because the husband had not established her actual earnings. Each allowance was enhanced to ₹7,500 monthly from the date of the High Court's order.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sanjeev Kapoor v. Chandana Kapoor and Others, (2020) 13 SCC 172, was quoted on Section 125 as a continuing social-justice obligation toward wives, children and parents and on interpreting that legislation in its social context. It reproduced Badshah v. Urmila Badshah Godse and Another, (2014) 1 SCC 188, on purposive interpretation that advances dignity, equality and support for vulnerable claimants, rather than a mechanically adversarial approach. The quotation includes wider reasoning about gender justice, statutory adaptation and wife status. The High Court applied its approach to support obligations in determining maintenance, without deciding a separate dispute over whether Bharti qualified as a wife. It applied those authorities to the social-justice proposition.

Rajnesh v. Neha and Another, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal 730/2020, order of 4 November 2020, was explained by the Court: the wife's parents' finances do not determine the amount the husband must pay; education or potential self-support does not by itself defeat maintenance. The spouses' status, the payer's capacity and actual income, reasonable personal expenses, legally dependent family members, liabilities, inflation and cost of living must inform an amount suited to the facts. The High Court applied these factors to the proved salary slips, the absence of established earnings by the wife, and the daughter's education and daily needs. It did not hold that every literate claimant receives a fixed fraction of gross pay or that liabilities are categorically irrelevant.

The trial court's finding on separate residence was recited; the High Court did not make a new determination of the underlying dowry allegations. The effective date of the enhancement was chosen on the basis of the recorded litigation conduct.

3. Statutes considered : Section 125 CrPC governed the final obligation of the husband and father toward the wife and minor daughter, whom the Family Court had found entitled to maintenance. Each beneficiary's needs and the payer's means were assessed separately. The High Court considered the provision's purpose of providing support and the evidentiary value of actual income, distinguished mandatory from voluntary payroll deductions, and considered financial capacity, status and living costs. It did not decide a marital-disqualification controversy under Section 125(4) on final evidence or an application for interim maintenance. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provided the basis for the two revisions, in which the late salary records were admitted and the amounts modified; no general test for admitting evidence in revision was announced. No overlapping maintenance order under another statute required an offset in this case.

4. Issues : (i) On the new salary slips, what income was available for assessment of final maintenance under Section 125: could voluntary deductions reduce it, and were the Family Court's awards to the wife and child excessive or too low?

(ii) Did the wife's literacy, without proof of earnings, disqualify her, and how did Section 125's social-justice purpose and the status, means, dependants and inflation factors in Rajnesh affect the separate final amounts for her and the child?

(iii) From what date would the increase take effect in the two cross-revisions, and how would the husband's challenge and the wife and child's enhancement request be disposed of? The Court did not retry the cruelty allegations or decide a separate statutory offset.

5. Ratio / Findings : The salary slips filed for the first time in revision displaced reliance on the husband's assertion of a low net salary. The Court stated that only mandatory and statutory deductions should reduce the take-home salary assessed for maintenance; voluntary deductions should not. In the detailed slips, it treated ordinary provident fund and house rent of ₹42 as mandatory, excluding additional voluntary provident fund and optional benefits and recoveries. From the January 2021 gross salary of ₹31,942, the Court subtracted ₹1,757 and ₹42, leaving ₹30,143. The August 2017 slip, showing income of ₹28,204 and deductions of ₹6,684, provided a historical comparison. The Court did not assess the future value of voluntary savings as separate property or decide a tax deduction absent from these figures.

The Court considered the January mess deduction of ₹3,547 for the husband's food and held that the daughter's original allowance of ₹4,000 was low when education, uniform, nutrition, clothes and ordinary food were taken into account. The daughter had an independent entitlement, and her award was raised to ₹7,500. The husband's objection based on the wife's literacy failed: education does not establish sufficient present earnings, and he did not claim that she actually earned. The employed, able-bodied husband owed support to his wife and child commensurate with his means and their status. The wife's award also rose from ₹5,000 to ₹7,500. These figures were not dictated by an arithmetic formula alone.

The reasoning in Badshah, quoted through Sanjeev Kapoor, reinforced a purposive reading of the continuing obligation under Section 125 in its social context. Rajnesh supplied the specific factors for determining the amount: actual income and capacity to pay, reasonable expenses, legally dependent persons and liabilities, standard of living, inflation and cost of living. The Court weighed the salary slips and the child's concrete expenses and declined to equate the wife's literacy with earnings. It did not treat the Family Court's earlier income estimate as conclusive new proof or make a final appellate determination of the original accusations of dowry violence.

In deciding when the enhancement would take effect, the Court noted from the order sheets that the husband had sought time to argue only on 9 March 2021. The High Court expressly directed payment of the enhanced amounts from its own order of 17 March 2021. The increase therefore operated prospectively from that order, rather than from the 2015 application or the 2017 Family Court judgment; the original awards remained affirmed subject to that modification. The reasoning was confined to the recorded procedural history and did not establish a rule denying maintenance from the application date in other cases.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the husband's criminal revision and allowed the wife and daughter's criminal revision. The order of the Principal Judge, Family Court, Sheopur, dated 28 January 2017 in Miscellaneous Case 1300076/2015 was affirmed subject to increasing the wife's monthly award from ₹5,000 and the daughter's from ₹4,000 to ₹7,500 each. The increased amounts were payable from the date of the High Court's order. The judgment made no separate offset, granted no retrospective increase from 7 May 2015, and made no ruling on the criminal allegations against the husband.

Headnote :- Section 319 CrPC / evidentiary threshold / review of additional-accused summons - Ajay Khemariya and Rinku Jain were named in a promptly lodged FIR but omitted from the charge sheet after the police accepted an account that they had attended a seminar. Following the complainant's evidence in court, the JMFC added them as accused. Jogendra Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2015) 9 SCC 244, places Section 319 on a higher evidentiary footing than the ordinary prima facie assessment for discharge under Section 227. A newly added accused cannot undo the summons merely by seeking discharge on that lower assessment, although an improper summons may be challenged through an available remedy. Michael Machado v. CBI, (2000) 3 SCC 262, requires reasonable satisfaction from the evidence that another person committed an offence for which that person could be tried with the existing accused; mere doubt is insufficient. The High Court found sufficient material in the specific FIR, the complainant's evidence, injuries and supporting witnesses, without making a final finding of guilt.

Section 319 / judicial discretion / fresh-trial cost - Michael Machado further explains that the power to proceed against another person is discretionary and must be exercised in the interests of criminal justice. The court must consider the stage reached, the amount of evidence, the requirement under Section 319(4) to begin afresh and re-examine witnesses, and a reasonable prospect of conviction. The High Court reproduced that caution and declined to interfere with summoning on this record. It held that sufficient material was available to summon the applicants, while confining its evidentiary observations to the Section 319 stage.

Section 319 / prior notice / omitted police-report suspect - Anju Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2013) 6 SCC 384, expressly states that a person placed in the second column of a police report, or not named as an accused, may be summoned under Section 319 without a hearing before summons. The High Court rejected the applicants' demand for a show-cause notice while recognising a later remedy against unlawful summoning. The extended discussion in Anju Chaudhary of Section 154 and the stage before an FIR, including W.N. Chadha and Samaj Parivartan, formed the quoted context; no independent FIR issue arose in this case.

Section 319 / examination-in-chief / defence in fresh trial - Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 3 SCC 92, treats a witness's completed examination-in-chief as evidence from which the court may assess complicity without waiting for cross-examination. It rejects a compulsory mini-trial before addition because Section 319(4) provides a fresh trial with full rights of cross-examination and defence. The High Court applied that rule to reject the applicants' objection to the timing of summons. The quoted discussion in Hardeep Singh of Section 193 and inquiry did not alter the basis for the present exercise of power at trial.

Section 319 / competing alibi and medical opinion / limited finding - The applicants' account before the police that they were at Hotel Sunrise lacked documentary support for an invitation, attendance, publication and the asserted correspondent role; the supporting statements were untested. The doctor said that the knife injury could be self-inflicted, but the MLC, the specific and prompt FIR, Chhotu and Virendra's accounts, and a cross-FIR indicating that some incident had occurred provided material for summoning. Neither FIR's truth nor the alibi was finally determined. The Section 482 petition failed, and the trial court must decide guilt independently.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Kamaljeet Singh Gill, who was engaged in property business in Priyadarshini Colony, alleged an assault connected with an adjoining plot. At about 12:30 p.m. on 9 February 2013, he reported an incident at about 11:30 a.m. involving Ajay Khemariya, co-accused Gabbar Singh Parihar, Rinku Jain and others. He attributed a knife blow to his left hand/forearm to Ajay, fists and blows to Rinku, and a lathi assault to Gabbar, along with abuse, threats and a demand to hand over the plot. Virendra Kashyap and Chhotu Rajak allegedly intervened. Crime No. 102/2013 was registered for IPC Sections 294, 323, 324, 506B and 34. These were allegations, not findings of guilt. The MLC recorded a dressed, muscle-deep incised wound measuring 6 cm by 1 cm at the left mid-forearm; abrasions and contusions involving the knee, forehead, tongue and cheek; complaints of pain at the eye, lower back and teeth; and injuries less than 24 hours old. In response to a specific query, the doctor opined that the first injury could be self-inflicted. This was a possibility, not a conclusive account of how the injury occurred.

During investigation, Chhotu attributed the knife wound to Ajay and facial blows to Rinku. Virendra described intervening in an assault and relayed the complainant's identification of Ajay and Rinku; this was distinct from directly observing each blow. On 20 February 2013, Rinku applied to the SDO(P), stating that he was a Jagran correspondent and that he and Ajay had covered a police seminar on 'Sensitive Working Culture for Women' at Hotel Sunrise on 9 February, with other invitees. The police recorded statements from persons who said that the seminar ran from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. and that the applicants attended throughout. Relying on that alibi account, the police filed a charge sheet against Gabbar alone. The Court noted that the SDO(P) application was not accompanied by any newspaper publication, invitation or attendance document establishing the applicants' claimed presence. The application did not specify Ajay's own claimed correspondent affiliation.

After Gill testified before the JMFC, he applied under Section 319 CrPC to add Ajay and Rinku as accused. On 21 May 2015, the JMFC relied on his FIR, police statement and court evidence, described prima facie involvement and issued bailable warrants. The Additional Sessions Judge/Special Judge dismissed Criminal Revision No. 136/2015 on 30 November 2015, holding that cross-examination need not precede action under Section 319. In MCRC No. 693/2016, the applicants invoked Section 482 against both orders. They sought a test requiring evidence sufficient for conviction, completion of cross-examination, notice before summons, and acceptance of their Hotel Sunrise alibi and the doctor's possible self-infliction opinion. The respondents opposed, submitting that no advance hearing was prescribed and that the competing defence had to be considered at trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jogendra Yadav and Others v. State of Bihar and Another, (2015) 9 SCC 244, was invoked by the applicants in support of a prior hearing, but the quoted Supreme Court passage concerns the relationship between Sections 319 and 227. It states that addition under Section 319 rests on a higher evidentiary footing than the mere prima facie assessment for discharge. Permitting the same court later to undo the addition by discharging the accused under Section 227 on that lower assessment would defeat the earlier exercise. The passage preserves a summoned person's legal remedy against an illegal or improper order under Section 319. The High Court considered that remedy alongside Anju Chaudhary in rejecting a prior hearing. The cited passage establishes neither the advance notice sought by the applicants nor a final adjudication of guilt.

Anju Chaudhary v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Another, (2013) 6 SCC 384, was quoted at length, with its paragraphs 30–34 reproduced. Its discussion of the duty under Section 154 CrPC, fair investigation and the usual absence of a hearing for a suspect before registration of an FIR included citations to State of U.P. v. Bhagwant Kishore Joshi, AIR 1964 SC 221, Union of India v. W.N. Chadha, 1993 Supp (4) SCC 260, and Samaj Parivartan Samuday v. State of Karnataka, (2012) 7 SCC 407. The directly relevant paragraph 34 of Anju Chaudhary states that, even after a police report under Section 173(2), a person placed in column two or not named as an accused may be summoned under Section 319 without a hearing at that stage. The High Court expressly applied that proposition, together with the availability of a later legal remedy, to reject the show-cause notice sought by Ajay and Rinku.

Brindavan Das and Others v. State of West Bengal, (2009) 3 SCC 329, was cited by counsel to urge great care and an evaluation of whether the evidence was sufficient to convict before summoning. The High Court did not reproduce, distinguish or analyse its ratio. Instead, it quoted Michael Machado v. Central Bureau of Investigation and Another, (2000) 3 SCC 262. Michael Machado requires reasonable satisfaction from evidence in an inquiry or trial that a person not yet arraigned has committed an offence for which that person could be tried with the existing accused; mere doubt about involvement is insufficient. Even when both elements are met, the word 'may' leaves the court with discretion. It must consider the overall circumstances, the stage reached, the amount of evidence, and the need under Section 319(4) to restart proceedings and re-examine witnesses. Where substantial trial work would have to be repeated, a reasonable prospect of conviction matters. The High Court used these principles to assess the prompt report, individual roles, medical findings, supporting witnesses and defence. It did not find guilt before trial or hold that every named suspect must be added.

Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab and Others, (2014) 3 SCC 92, was quoted on examination-in-chief. In paragraphs 89–92, the Constitution Bench explains that recorded examination-in-chief is evidence, although it may be rebutted. The court may act under Section 319 without awaiting cross-examination, recording reasons for its satisfaction, and need not conduct a miniature trial into the proposed accused's overt act. The quoted passages refer to Mohd. Shafi v. Mohd. Rafiq, (2007) 14 SCC 544, and Harbhajan Singh, (2009) 13 SCC 608, as part of the Supreme Court's explanation; the High Court did not independently revisit those holdings. Hardeep Singh stressed that an added accused participates in a fresh trial under Section 319(4), with rights to cross-examine, lead defence evidence and argue. Requiring that person to cross-examine before being joined would therefore be incoherent. The quoted conclusions in paragraphs 117.1–117.3 separately discuss Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2014) 3 SCC 306, on cognizance under Section 193 after committal without waiting for Section 319 evidence, and the scope of inquiry and corroborative material under Sections 200–202 and 398. Those passages provided context in the quotation, rather than a separate route under Section 193 in this Magistrate's trial. The High Court applied the examination-in-chief holding to reject a categorical requirement of prior cross-examination.

3. Statutes considered : Section 319 CrPC was the central power to proceed against a person not already arraigned as an accused when evidence emerging in an inquiry or trial indicated an offence for which that person could be tried with the existing accused. Subsection (4) requires proceedings concerning the added person to begin afresh and witnesses to be re-examined, allowing full participation in the defence. Section 227 appeared through Jogendra Yadav as the comparison with the lower prima facie assessment for discharge; no discharge application was before the Court in this Magistrate's case. Section 482 provided the High Court's inherent jurisdiction to examine the JMFC and revisional orders, without determining guilt or accepting an unproved alibi. The earlier criminal revision challenged the summons of May 2015. Sections 154, 156(3), 173(2), 193, 200–202, 299 and 398 CrPC appeared within the quoted Supreme Court passages as descriptions of other stages and examples; their general operation was not separately adjudicated on these facts. IPC Sections 294, 323, 324, 506B and 34 were the alleged offences registered by the police; their ingredients were not independently interpreted.

4. Issues : (i) What evidentiary threshold and exercise of discretion permitted adding Ajay and Rinku under Section 319 despite their omission by the police: was mere suspicion enough, did conviction already have to be established, and what weight should be given to the fresh trial required and the competing material?

(ii) Were the applicants entitled to show-cause notice and a hearing before the Section 319 order, or did their remedies arise after it?

(iii) Must Gill's examination-in-chief first be tested in cross-examination before it can support Section 319, and how are the added accused's trial rights protected?

(iv) Did the seminar alibi presented to the police and the doctor's opinion that the injury could be self-inflicted make the existing evidence inadequate for addition or justify interference under Section 482, and what remained for the trial court? There was no final finding of innocence or guilt, determination of the rival FIRs' truth, or separate ruling on cognizance under Section 193.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court treated Section 319 as a special power exercised during trial, rather than a mechanism for automatic summons. The higher evidentiary footing than discharge described in Jogendra Yadav, and the two-part reasonable satisfaction, discretion and fresh-trial considerations in Michael Machado, explained why suspicion alone was insufficient. The Court identified support on this record: the main FIR lodged within about an hour, distinct alleged roles involving a knife wound and fists, MLC injuries including a forearm cut, and Chhotu and Virendra's accounts. Gill's testimony in court brought the suspects omitted by the police into the evidence before the trial court. The High Court held that sufficient material existed for summoning and expressly confined its observations to the Section 319 stage. It did not hold that the prosecution had already proved guilt beyond reasonable doubt or that the additional accused had to undergo a completed trial before Section 319 could be used. The need to restart evidence on each addition, emphasised in Michael Machado, remained relevant to discretion; the record here justified leaving the JMFC's exercise of power intact.

On notice, paragraph 34 of Anju Chaudhary directly answered the demand for a prior hearing: summoning under Section 319 of a person omitted from, or placed in column two of, the police report did not require such a hearing. The surrounding discussion of the stage before an FIR did not turn this trial application, made after the police report, into a Section 154 case. The High Court also noted that an aggrieved summoned person could pursue the legal remedy against an improper exercise of power. It therefore rejected the objection while preserving later procedural protection.

On the timing of witness evidence, Hardeep Singh treated completed examination-in-chief as evidence capable of supporting the court's reasoned satisfaction under Section 319 before cross-examination. No mini-trial was required before addition. The newly added person could cross-examine witnesses in fresh proceedings under subsection (4), produce defence material and address the court. The High Court therefore rejected the contention that Gill had to be cross-examined first; it did not hold that untested evidence was immune from later challenge. The quoted discussion of Section 193 and examples of inquiry remained part of the Supreme Court's explanatory context.

The claim that the applicants were at Hotel Sunrise was supported by statements recorded by the police, but lacked documentary confirmation of an invitation, Ajay's journalist role, Rinku's claimed role, a subsequent publication or both men's continuous attendance. Those statements had not been tested in cross-examination. The High Court held that the alibi required cogent evidence at trial and could not be accepted as decisive in this Section 482 challenge. The MLC doctor's opinion that the forearm injury could be self-inflicted did not conclusively disprove the knife allegation; that possibility and the actual manner of injury required evidence at trial. The cross-FIR attributed an altercation to the other side but supported only the limited inference that some incident had occurred. The Court accepted neither narrative as true. All comments on the evidence were expressly confined to whether Section 319 could be invoked, and the trial judge was directed to assess the complete trial record without being prejudiced by them.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the applicants' Section 482 petition. It left intact the JMFC's order of 21 May 2015 summoning Ajay and Rinku with bailable warrants and the revision dismissal of 30 November 2015. Proceedings under Section 319 against the additional accused could continue with their rights to a fresh trial and defence. The alibi and competing account of the injury remained to be proved or tested at trial. The observations on available material were confined to that stage and could not prejudice the trial court's ultimate findings. No conviction, final acquittal, separate damages or costs order was made.

Headnote :- Section 498-A quashing — The wife's FIR was lodged after the husband's divorce petition, but alleged repeated dowry demands, physical and mental abuse, and expulsion from the marital home. Delay while seeking reconciliation did not justify treating it as a counterblast. The parents-in-law's claimed separate residence was a disputed defence. Civil matrimonial litigation did not control the criminal proceedings, and compelling the wife to stay at her parental home was itself alleged to amount to cruelty. The petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The wife married in 2014. She alleged that her husband and parents-in-law had demanded ₹20 lakh in addition to marriage gifts, beaten and threatened her, and driven her out of the matrimonial home in November 2019. She returned to her parental home. The husband had initiated restitution proceedings, which were later withdrawn, and filed for divorce in December 2021. She complained in May 2022. The parents-in-law sought quashing of the allegations under IPC Sections 498-A/506/34 and the Dowry Prohibition Act, describing the FIR as retaliatory. They claimed that they lived separately in Indore while the wife lived with her husband in Mumbai.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, rejected quashing merely for delay following failed reconciliation and divorce filing. Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam, Iqbal Singh Marwah and Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon addressed independent civil and criminal adjudication and limited relevance of prior judgments. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, addressed continued mental cruelty after ouster.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 498-A, 506 and 34; Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3–4; CrPC Section 482; Hindu Marriage Act Sections 9 and 13; Evidence Act Sections 40–43 in cited authorities.

4. Issues : Did filing after divorce show a malicious counterblast? Were specific allegations against parents-in-law negated by claimed separate residence? Did enforced stay at parental home support cruelty?

5. Ratio / Findings : At the quashing stage, the FIR's specific allegations of dowry demand and abuse were taken at face value. An abused spouse may delay reporting while trying to preserve the marriage; the divorce petition and the timing of the later FIR did not establish falsity. Matrimonial and criminal proceedings are independent. Findings in matrimonial proceedings are generally not binding in determining criminal liability, subject to the statutory rules on relevance. Claimed residence in another city was a disputed defence to be established by evidence. The alleged ouster because the dowry demand had not been met, and the compelled stay at the parental home, could cause continuing mental cruelty under Rupali Devi.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application, leaving the prosecution to continue.

Indu Parashar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 55217/2023, 27/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Train robbery — A passenger lost ₹97,000 and suffered a facial abrasion after confronting a pickpocket; one companion was apprehended at the station. The complainant had seen Insaf in jail before trial. In the absence of an independent incriminating recovery, that prior exposure made his later identification in court unsafe, and his appeal was allowed. No test identification parade was held, but its absence did not by itself invalidate credible identification of the remaining accused. The Court treated Banti's unexplained possession of ₹4,376 as possession of looted cash despite a mismatch in denominations. The remaining convictions under Sections 394/397 IPC and the seven-year terms were upheld.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Jitendra Rawat (PW2) was travelling in a general coach with ₹97,000. He caught a person removing money from his pocket. The person's companions intervened, and a knife was pointed near his left eye. Balkrishna was apprehended at Ruthiayi; the police later arrested Insaf, Narendra Meena and Banti alias Girraj. Banti produced ₹4,376. PW2 identified the appellants in court, but admitted that he had met Balkrishna and seen Insaf in jail before trial. He also said that he had seen Banti at the time of the incident. Medical evidence recorded a facial abrasion. The trial court convicted all four under IPC Sections 394/397 and imposed seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹25,000. The three appeals were heard together.

2. Precedents — Considered : S.K. Umar Ahmed Shaikh v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 5 SCC 103, held that showing suspects to witnesses beforehand deprived later identification of probative value; this was applied to Insaf. Sheo Shankar Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 3 SCC 654, and Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2014) 12 SCC 133, explain that identification in court is substantive evidence. A TIP ordinarily provides corroboration, but is neither mandatory nor a right of the accused. State of Rajasthan v. Daud Khan, (2016) 2 SCC 607, and Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, explain that the reliability and corroboration of dock identification depend on the facts. Suraj Pal v. State of Haryana, (1995) 2 SCC 64, explains the purpose of early identification of unknown suspects. Dara Singh v. Republic of India, (2011) 2 SCC 490, states that first-time dock identification of strangers generally calls for independent corroboration. The extended Supreme Court passages themselves refer to Malkhansingh, Dana Yadav and other identification cases. Those citations occur within the quoted reasoning.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 394/397 (conviction), and Sections 379, 392, 120-B (investigation/charge sheet); CrPC Section 374 (appeals), Section 162 (within cited TIP authorities); Evidence Act Section 9 (within cited identification authorities).

4. Issues : Could Insaf's dock identification be relied on after prior exposure to the complainant? Did failure to hold a TIP defeat identification of the others? Was Banti's partial cash recovery probative despite different denominations from the complainant's account? Should the robbery convictions and sentences stand?

5. Ratio / Findings : PW2 had seen Insaf in jail before identifying him in court, and no incriminating article was recovered from him. His identity and guilt were therefore not proved beyond reasonable doubt. A TIP provides investigative corroboration; it is not substantive evidence or a mandatory condition for the admissibility of identification in court. The Court accepted the other identifications on the particular evidence. Balkrishna was apprehended at the scene. As to Banti, the Court accepted the seizure evidence and reasoned that stolen cash could have been spent or exchanged. It inferred that his unexplained possession of ₹4,376 was linked to the robbery despite the complainant's account of ₹1,000 denominations. The Court considered the train robbery sufficiently serious to retain the seven-year term.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed Insaf's criminal appeal, acquitted him and discharged his bail bonds. It dismissed the connected criminal appeals and affirmed the convictions and sentences of Narendra Meena, Balkrishna alias Rahul and Banti alias Girraj. Narendra Meena was directed to surrender. The appellants already in jail were directed to serve their sentences.

Case Sr. no. (406) Prev Next

Headnote :- Quashing under BNSS Section 528 — The wife alleged that her uncle-in-law repeatedly touched her intimately and threatened her to compel her to enter into an illicit relationship. The accused relied on his prior police complaint and the absence of this allegation from the parallel cruelty, maintenance and domestic violence proceedings. The allegations in the FIR disclosed offences under IPC Sections 354, 354-A and 506. The differences between the accounts in those proceedings and the alleged mala fides required evidence and an explanation from the complainant. The High Court declined to conduct a mini-trial and dismissed the quashing application.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Respondent 2 married in February 2024. Her uncle-in-law, Insaf, allegedly entered her room when she was alone about a month later, promised to secure employment for her, and touched her waist, breasts and body. She said that he repeated this conduct during his visits and, on 9 May, threatened to spoil her life unless she entered into an illicit relationship with him. After she told her husband and mother-in-law, she was allegedly ousted from the matrimonial home. FIR Crime 274/2024 alleged offences under IPC Sections 354, 354-A and 506; RCT 766/2024 followed. Insaf sought quashing under BNSS Section 528, relying on his 10 May complaint to the Superintendent of Police, a later representation, and the absence of allegations of sexual touching from a separate dowry FIR and the maintenance and domestic violence proceedings.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure (P) Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, set out the limits of the inquiry when quashing an FIR: the allegations must be taken at face value, without assessing their reliability or conducting a mini-trial. A series of Supreme Court cases listed in paragraph 8, including XYZ v. State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander and CBI v. Arvind Khanna, reinforced the test of whether the uncontroverted allegations disclose an offence. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, held that the informant's alleged mala fides are of secondary importance where a cognizable offence is disclosed, and reproduced the quashing categories in R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal. The applicant cited Naresh Aneja v. State of U.P. (2025) on mens rea. The Court recorded that submission but declined to interfere in view of the limited scope of the quashing jurisdiction, leaving the allegations and the complainant's explanation to be examined at trial.

3. Statutes considered : BNSS Section 528 (inherent jurisdiction); IPC Sections 354, 354-A, 506 and 498-A (distinction from separate cruelty allegations); BNS Sections 85, 115(2), 3(5) in the parallel FIR; Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3–4; Protection of Women from Domestic Violence Act Section 12; CrPC Section 482 in cited precedent.

4. Issues : Could a police representation made in anticipation of false implication, together with omissions in related matrimonial filings, justify quashing the sexual harassment FIR? Did the FIR disclose intentional conduct and cognizable offences? Could the High Court assess the complainant's credibility without evidence at trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FIR specifically described repeated intimate touching and a threat to compel an illicit relationship, all within three months of the marriage. Cruelty and outraging modesty concern different wrongs. The complainant might explain, during cross-examination, why she had not made allegations of sexual misconduct in the other proceedings. The accused's prior complaints and allegation of a malicious motive did not permit the Court to decide competing factual accounts under BNSS Section 528. The Court applied the Supreme Court's standard of restraint in quashing proceedings and declined to conduct a mini-trial. It made no final finding of guilt or credibility.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application for quashing FIR Crime 274/2024 and RCT 766/2024; the criminal proceedings continue.

Insaf v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 12477/2025, 29/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — The wife sought prosecution of her husband and his relatives for dowry cruelty, and of her husband under the Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Marriage) Act, 2019. She alleged oral triple talaq, recurring demands, assaults and expulsion. The husband denied oral triple talaq and relied on a notice described as talaq-e-bain. Section 2(c) concerns the instantaneous and irrevocable effect of the divorce and extends beyond talaq-e-biddat to similar forms of talaq; the notice itself claimed that the divorce had already taken effect. These disputes, and the omissions in the maintenance pleadings, could not be adjudicated in a quashing application. The petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant married applicant 1 in December 2016 and alleged that he and his relatives demanded a car and ₹2 lakh, abused or assaulted her, and harassed her over the birth of a daughter. After earlier police complaints and reconciliation, she returned to the matrimonial home. She alleged further assault, her ouster on 7 May 2023, an assault by relatives on 16 June, and oral talaq-e-biddat pronounced by her husband in her mother's presence. A subsequent notice described the divorce as talaq-e-bain and claimed that it had already taken effect from 27 June 2023. The applicants sought quashing of a charge sheet and RCT 13490/2023 under IPC Sections 498-A/34, Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4 and Section 4 of the 2019 Muslim Women Act. They disputed oral triple talaq and relied on omissions from the maintenance pleadings and an earlier acquittal following a compromise.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, cautioned against a roving inquiry under Section 482. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. 709/2021, set out the limits on detailed appraisal of evidence at the quashing stage. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognised a narrow exception permitting consideration of defence documents that are public documents or whose veracity is undisputed. Paragraph 24 lists further Supreme Court decisions stating the same general principle. The quoted authorities also refer to Bhajan Lal and other decisions.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 482 and 125; IPC Sections 498-A, 34 and 294 (the latter in a prior compromised case); Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3–4; Muslim Women (Protection of Rights on Marriage) Act, 2019, Sections 2(c) and 4.

4. Issues : Did the allegation of oral triple talaq and a notice described as talaq-e-bain disclose a possible offence under the 2019 Act? Could inconsistencies and omissions in the allegations be resolved in favour of the accused under Section 482? Did the specific and repeated allegations of cruelty warrant trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court did not finally decide whether oral triple talaq had occurred or the precise operation of talaq-e-bain. It held that Section 2(c) includes talaq-e-biddat and any similar form of divorce pronounced by a Muslim husband that has an instantaneous and irrevocable effect. Whatever the notice was called, it claimed that the divorce had already become operative and irrevocable, while the wife separately alleged oral talaq-e-biddat. The Court noted the handwritten alteration of the date and counsel's submission about the Iddat period, but read the notice as asserting an instantaneous and irrevocable divorce. The earlier complaints, compromised prosecution and renewed allegations provided a detailed account of continuing alleged dowry cruelty. The disputed defence assertions and omissions in the Section 125 application required evidence. Taken at face value, the allegations disclosed offences.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the quashing application; the charge sheet and RCT 13490/2023 continue.

Irfan Khan and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 52076/2023, 03/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Criminal medical negligence and police inaction — A father attributed his daughter's death following caesarean surgery to connivance between the doctors and her husband's family, alleging dowry demands and hostility towards a female child. Applying Jacob Mathew, the High Court required a report from a Committee of Experts on medical negligence before criminal proceedings could be initiated against the doctors. It declined to direct registration of an FIR on an allegation of negligence alone. As regards the husband and parents-in-law, the applicant was directed to pursue the complaint remedy before the Magistrate. The application under Section 528 BNSS was dismissed with that liberty, without a finding on the merits of the allegations against the relatives.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicant said that his pregnant daughter died following caesarean surgery. She had allegedly told her mother that her husband and his parents demanded a Scorpio because her father had sold farmland, and that they opposed having a female child after an ultrasound. The father alleged that the relatives had connived with two doctors running a nursing home and ultrasound lab to perform an unnecessary operation. He complained that the police had taken no action. He invoked BNSS Section 528 seeking criminal proceedings against the doctors (respondents 3–4), her husband and her parents-in-law (respondents 5–7). The Court treated the relief sought as a direction to register an FIR.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jacob Mathew v. State of Punjab, (2005) 6 SCC 1, set out the standard of gross negligence required for criminal liability and the safeguard of an independent opinion from a competent medical expert before proceeding against a doctor. Kusum Sharma v. Batra Hospital, (2010) 3 SCC 480; Martin F. D'Souza v. Mohd. Ishfaq, (2009) 3 SCC 1; Malay Kumar Ganguly v. Dr. Sukumar Mukherjee, (2009) 9 SCC 221; S.K. Jhunjhunwala v. Dhanwanti Kaur, (2019) 2 SCC 282; and Kalyani Rajan v. Indraprastha Apollo Hospital (2023) reinforced the principles of reasonable professional care, gross negligence and examination by medical experts before proceedings. The order directly reproduced Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171; Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542; Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409; and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, on recourse to the Magistrate where the police fail to act. The High Court's Division Bench ruling in Shweta Bhadauria applied the principle of an alternative remedy, subject to the four Whirlpool exceptions referred to in the quoted holding.

3. Statutes considered : BNSS Sections 528 and 223; CrPC Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 in quoted authorities; IPC Section 304-A in Jacob Mathew's reproduced criminal-negligence test; Article 226 of the Constitution in cited writ cases. The order does not identify a specific charged offence against any respondent.

4. Issues : May the police be directed to prosecute doctors for alleged negligent surgery without an independent expert opinion? Is Section 528 an appropriate remedy for compelling registration of an FIR against the husband and parents-in-law when the police have taken no action?

5. Ratio / Findings : An adverse outcome does not establish criminal medical negligence. Under Jacob Mathew, the professional conduct must amount to gross negligence to attract criminal liability, and action against the doctors should be supported by an independent opinion from a competent medical expert. The Court held that no direction to register an FIR against respondents 3–4 could be given unless a Committee of Experts reported medical negligence on their part. The request concerning the family members arose from the police's failure to register an FIR. For that grievance, the cited Supreme Court decisions direct the informant to pursue the complaint or investigation remedy before the Magistrate. The Court did not decide whether a dowry offence or any collusion had occurred, and did not assess medical causation.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application against the doctors and relatives. The applicant has liberty, if he so desires, to approach the Magistrate under CrPC Section 200/BNSS Section 223 in respect of respondents 5–7.

Headnote :- Murder by unlawful assembly — A family feud culminated in an armed ambush of relatives travelling to court. Lakhan and 12-year-old Sonu were killed and mutilated, and Rambabu sustained gunshot injuries. The evidence of related witnesses required scrutiny, but their natural presence, the prompt FIR, the injured witness's testimony and the medical and ballistic evidence sustained the essential account. The recovery of a concealed severed head following prior disclosures by three accused was admissible despite the objection that the hill was accessible and that the recovery was joint. Minor differences in the acts attributed to individual accused and the failure of the alibis did not displace the proved common object. The convictions of the thirteen appellants under IPC Sections 302/149 and 307/149, and their concurrent sentences, were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 12 April 2006, relatives travelling to a court hearing were ambushed near Umarma following an earlier killing in a feud between the families. Lakhan and 12-year-old Sonu were shot and attacked with sharp weapons; Lakhan's head was taken away and Sonu's fingers were severed. Rambabu survived with pellet injuries. The FIR named the armed group, and the post-mortems established homicidal deaths. Separate disclosures by Teerath, Hemraj and Jagdish led the police to Lakhan's head, wrapped in a bag in the hill forest, which was recovered on 20 May 2006. The trial court acquitted six others but convicted the 13 appellants on two counts of murder and one count of attempted murder with Section 149, as well as rioting. Five consolidated appeals challenged witness bias, contradictions, gaps in the forensic evidence, recovery, attribution of individual acts and the rejection of alibis.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Maharashtra v. Bharat Fakira Dhiwar, (2002) 1 SCC 622; Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1; and Kishore Bhadke v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2017 SC 279, supported the admissibility under Evidence Act Section 27 of discoveries of concealed objects at places accessible to others, and of a joint recovery following separate disclosures made in quick succession. Suresh Chandra Bahri and Bakshish Singh addressed motive arising from animosity. Mohd. Ishaque and Vijendra Singh supported reliance on injured and related witnesses after careful scrutiny. Bhagwan Jagannath Markad, (2016) 10 SCC 537, and Mahendran, (2019) 5 SCC 67, explained common object under Section 149 and liability without proof of a blow by each member. Motiram Padu Joshi, Rohtas and Sukhdev Yadav addressed prompt FIRs, omissions of individual roles and ordinary discrepancies. Krishna Gope addressed non-recovery of a weapon. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan rejected automatic rejection of the whole testimony merely because one part was false. Vijay Pal, Sk. Sattar and Binay Kumar Singh addressed alibi after the prosecution has proved presence at the scene. The quoted passages also refer to further authorities.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 141 (definition of unlawful assembly); Sections 147, 148, 302/149 and 307/149 (convictions), with Sections 341, 201 and 109 among investigation charges; Arms Act Sections 25/27, 25B and 30 in initial charges; Evidence Act Sections 25 and 27 (discovery) and Section 11 (alibi); CrPC Sections 174, 175 and 293 (investigation and FSL report).

4. Issues : Was the recovery of a concealed head admissible despite the objection that the hill was accessible and the recovery followed three disclosures? Could the evidence of related witnesses with prior enmity, together with a prompt FIR, establish participation despite variations in individual roles and the acquittal of some named persons? Did the conduct of at least five armed attackers establish a common object to murder and attempt murder? Did the alleged school alibis or the absence of blood on the weapons create reasonable doubt?

5. Ratio / Findings : The head, kept in a plastic bag in the forest, was not ordinarily visible. Accessibility to the public did not, by itself, invalidate a discovery; the Court also noted that this hill forest was not easily accessible to the general public. The three disclosure statements preceded the joint recovery. The Court examined the acts attributed to each appellant and the group's conduct, which were corroborated by the post-mortem and injury evidence. A fragment found at the scene fitted Teerath's gun, a fired cartridge matched that gun, and nitrate was found in the seized barrels. The pellets recovered from Rambabu were consistent with the firearms. The witnesses were naturally present while travelling to court, Rambabu was an injured witness, and the FIR was prompt. Prior enmity required scrutiny but also explained the motive of revenge. In an assault by a large group, minor variations in the descriptions of particular blows, and the absence of blood on weapons seized weeks later, did not negate the common object. Raghuvir was named in the FIR's list of accused, although his detailed role was omitted; an FIR need not describe every act. The defence witnesses concerning the school alibis did not reliably establish absence at the time of the attack. Failure to prove an alibi was not, by itself, treated as proof of the prosecution case. The Court found that all 13 appellants were members of the assembly acting in pursuit of the object of killing Lakhan and Sonu and attacking Rambabu.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed all five appeals. It affirmed the convictions of Jagdish, Hemraj, Radheshyam, Satish, Randhir, Pritam, Jitendra, Ghasilal, Ramdayal, Rameshwar, Kamlesh, Raghuvir and Teerath, together with the sentences of life imprisonment and a ₹1,000 fine on each of the two Section 302/149 counts, seven years and a ₹700 fine under Section 307/149, and one year and a ₹500 fine under Sections 147/148, with default terms and concurrent substantive sentences. The appellants on bail were directed to surrender; those in jail were to serve the remainder of their sentences.

Headnote :- Kidnapping for ransom and false prosecution — The three appellants, convicted in a case concerning an alleged forest abduction and a ₹10 lakh ransom, were acquitted. The appellants were not named in the initial report or telephone information. Govind, the first person released, was not promptly examined, and the ransom story emerged in a later statement. Forged memoranda, conflicting accounts of release and cash unconnected to the alleged ransom defeated the prosecution under Sections 364-A and 412. Framing a charge under Section 412 against Jagdish on the day of judgment, after final arguments had been heard, also caused prejudice. The Court ordered proceedings for giving false evidence, a refund with interest and compensation under Article 21 of ₹1 lakh to Jagdish and ₹3 lakh each to Harnam and Harkanth.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Govind Singh, his son Vijay and Bablu were said to have been abducted in a forest after a religious gathering in February 2009. Govind allegedly returned after two days; the prosecution claimed that he then paid ₹10 lakh to secure the release of the other two. Harnam, a known forest-department worker, and Harkanth were convicted under IPC Section 364-A read with the MPDVPK Act and sentenced to life imprisonment. Jagdish was convicted under Section 412 after the alleged seizure of ₹1.90 lakh. The trial court itself described Harkanth's memoranda as forged. A charge under Section 412 was first framed against Jagdish on 11 March 2010, after final arguments had been heard on 5 March. Judgment was delivered on the same day as the charge was framed. The three appeals challenged the account of abduction and ransom, the identifications, the link between the cash and the alleged offence, and the fairness of the trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : M.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs (2021) was cited for the rule that evidence from a separately tried absconder's case could not be read in these appeals. Dayal Singh v. State, AIR 2012 SC 3046, addressed designedly defective investigation. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India and State (NCT of Delhi) v. Pankaj Chaudhary addressed false evidence and the need to consider whether a court complaint was expedient in the interests of justice. Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253, and Amarsang Nathaji v. Hardik Harshadbhai Patel, (2017) 1 SCC 11, held that a preliminary inquiry under Section 340 was optional where there was a sufficient prima facie record. No prior hearing was mandatory for the persons against whom prosecution was proposed, but their trial rights remained intact. Ankush Maruti Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 15 SCC 470, supported the right to fair investigation under Articles 20–21. Rudul Sah and the other constitutional-compensation authorities, including Hardeep Singh v. State of M.P. and Inhuman Conditions in 1382 Prisons, supported public-law relief for grave violations of rights. The Court distinguished an ordinary acquittal from deliberate false prosecution.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 364-A and 412; MPDVPK Act Sections 11/13; Evidence Act Sections 25–27 and 145; CrPC Sections 161, 195(1)(b), 299, 340 and 341, and Section 357 within cited compensation law; Constitution Articles 20 and 21.

4. Issues : Were abduction, ransom demand/payment and the participation of Harnam and Harkanth proved? Did Jagdish's alleged cash recovery establish receipt of property connected to dacoity or ransom under Section 412, and was the late addition of that charge fair? Did fabricated evidence require a complaint under Section 340? Did deliberate false implication and years of detention justify constitutional compensation and restoration of the seized money?

5. Ratio / Findings : The earliest FIR omitted the appellants' names, and the first telephone report named others. Although Govind was available on 26 February, he was not examined until 6 March. The prosecution did not prove the source of the supposed ₹10 lakh demand, the source of the money, or the place or method of payment; the alleged lenders were unidentified. Bablu said that he and Vijay had escaped, which contradicted the later account of payment followed by release. The ransom assertion first appeared in a supplementary statement dated 21 April, more than 45 days after their return. The alleged signatures on currency notes were not mentioned in the contemporaneous seizure memos, and the witnesses disagreed on the denominations. Harkanth's police memoranda had already been found to be fabricated, and Jagdish's confession could not independently prove the crime. Neither the ₹25,000 nor the ₹1.90 lakh was shown to be part of the ransom, and framing the new charge under Section 412 on the day of judgment prejudiced Jagdish. The Court found that the entire case had been concocted and that all three appellants had been deliberately falsely implicated. It formed the opinion that prosecution for giving false evidence was expedient, without a further preliminary inquiry or a hearing before the complaint was made. That direction did not itself determine the guilt of the persons against whom prosecution was proposed. Compensation was awarded because of the proved false implication for oblique motives and the resulting incarceration, rather than the acquittal alone.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has allowed all the appeals and set aside the convictions. Harnam and Harkanth were to be released if not required in another case; Jagdish's bail bonds were discharged. The trial court was directed to initiate proceedings for giving false evidence against Govind (PW1), Vijay (PW2), Bablu (PW3), Charan Lal Uike (PW10) and Dilip Singh Yadav (PW11). ₹25,000 was to be refunded to Bhagwan Singh/Harkanth and ₹1.90 lakh to Jagdish, with 7.5% interest, subject to any appeal. Govind, to whom the money had earlier been released by an interim order, was directed to redeposit ₹1.90 lakh within three months of the judgment, with 7.5% interest from 24 April 2009 until actual redeposit. The State was directed to pay ₹1 lakh to Jagdish and ₹3 lakh each to Harnam and Harkanth within three months, with 7% interest if payment was late, and to recover the compensation in equal shares from the five identified witnesses/officers. The Superintendent of Police, Shivpuri, was directed to submit the compensation receipt to the Principal Registrar within four months of the judgment.

Headnote :- Partial quashing of dowry cruelty case — The wife alleged a demand for ₹10 lakh and a car before marriage, entrustment of jewellery to four in-laws living in the same household, renewed demands and desertion. The FIR was lodged after her husband's divorce notice, but was within limitation and alleged continuing mental cruelty; neither the delay nor the timing established that it was a counterblast. Specific allegations of entrustment and non-return disclosed a prima facie case under IPC Section 406 against applicants 1–4, and the cruelty allegations also required trial. The sister-in-law and her husband, who lived separately, were linked only by assurances and general remarks made by telephone. The FIR, charge sheet and charges were quashed against those two applicants alone.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant, a software engineer, married Kuldeep Parashar in March 2020. She alleged that applicants 1–4, who lived together in Lalitpur, insisted on ₹10 lakh and a large car, retained her ornaments for safekeeping with a promise to return them, and continued to press the car demand. Her husband allegedly abused her in Bangalore, locked her out and moved out with the household articles on 28 June 2020; she stayed with her parents. FIR 394/2021 was lodged on 22 May 2021 under IPC Sections 498-A, 506 and 406 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3–4, after a divorce notice had been served in March. The accused invoked Section 482 to challenge the FIR, charge sheet, criminal case 559/2021 and the charges framed. Applicants 5–6, the married sister-in-law Priyanka Vajpayi and her husband Prashant, lived separately in Kanpur and allegedly assured her that the jewellery would be returned and made general remarks about a car and divorce by telephone.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, explained how mental cruelty persists after a woman is driven from her matrimonial home over dowry demands. Skoda Auto Volkswagen, Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid addressed why delay alone does not justify quashing an FIR. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, rejected the inference that a complaint was a counterblast merely because it followed a divorce petition after efforts at reconciliation. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, distinguished triable allegations against close relatives from the mere naming of distant relatives; its quoted passage referred to Kans Raj and Kailash Chandra Agrawal. The applicants relied on Kans Raj, Monju Roy, Chandralekha, Geeta Mehrotra and Preeti Gupta to challenge the omnibus allegations. The concerns addressed in those authorities were applied to applicants 5–6, rather than to the specific account against applicants 1–4. State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu and Soma Chakravarty were cited by the complainant on the sufficiency of grave suspicion at the stage of framing charges.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Sections 482 and 468 (three-year cognizance limitation discussed); IPC Sections 498-A, 506/506-II and 406; Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3–4; Hindu Marriage Act Section 13 (husband's divorce petition).

4. Issues : Did the FIR's timing after desertion and the divorce notice bar or discredit the prosecution? Were the allegations sufficiently specific to disclose prima facie cruelty and breach of trust against the four relatives living in the same household? Did the same material support prosecution of the sister-in-law and her husband, who lived separately?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FIR was lodged within the period discussed for taking cognizance; delay alone could not determine the truth of the allegations. A woman may try to preserve her marriage before reporting abuse, and separation caused by dowry demands can result in continuing mental cruelty at her parental home. Lodging the FIR after the divorce notice did not itself establish a malicious counterblast. Applicants 1–4 faced specific allegations of demands and of entrustment and non-return of ornaments during a short period of cohabitation. In that setting, the absence of exact dates for every act was not fatal at the threshold; the cruelty allegations and the offence under Section 406 required trial. Applicants 5–6 lived separately. They were not alleged to have received or retained the jewellery, and their alleged assurances and general response by telephone did not identify specific conduct sufficient to support the charged offences. The Court made no final finding of guilt against applicants 1–4.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has refused to quash the proceedings against Jagdish Parashar, Abhilasha Parashar, Anand Parashar and Anya alias Priyanka; their prosecution continues. FIR 394/2021, criminal case 559/2021 and the charges framed on 11 May 2022 were quashed insofar as Prashant Vajpayi and Priyanka Vajpayi were concerned.

Jagdish Parashar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 40633/2021, 15/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Cross-case homicide and private defence — Eight men armed with lathis intercepted two brothers on their way to court, causing Rajendra's death from a splenic injury and inflicting 14 injuries on Narendra. Rajendra's dehati nalishi and police statement became admissible as dying declarations. A counter-case alleged that Narendra had shot Roop Singh, but each case had to be decided on its own evidence; that injury alone did not establish that these appellants had acted in private defence. Their coordinated multiple blows proved a common object and ruled out reduction to culpable homicide on the ground of a sudden fight. The convictions under IPC Sections 148, 302/149 and 307/149 and the concurrent sentences were affirmed; the counter-appeal was reserved for a separate judgment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 19 December 2001, Rajendra and his brother Narendra, who was carrying a 12-bore gun, were on their way to court. Eight named appellants allegedly stopped them near the Dudhi river and struck them with lathis. Rajendra reported the attack in a dehati nalishi and a police statement, then died on 22 December; the post-mortem attributed his death to hypovolemic shock resulting from a splenic injury. Narendra had 14 injuries and Rajendra nine. The trial court convicted Jagdish Prasad, Komal, Vijay Singh, Roop Singh, Ghanshyam, Mohan Singh, Rishi Kumar and Arjun Singh of rioting, murder and attempted murder, the latter two offences read with Section 149. A cross-case registered as Crime 148/2001 alleged that Narendra had shot Roop Singh in the same encounter and resulted in a separate conviction and appeal; the three present appeals concerned only the eight appellants' convictions.

2. Precedents — Considered : A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs, Cr.A. 1306/2021, supported deciding cross-cases separately on their own evidence while hearing them together. Pradeep Bisoi v. State of Odisha, (2019) 11 SCC 500, held that a deceased person's account recorded under Section 161 was admissible as a dying declaration under Evidence Act Section 32(1), read with CrPC Section 162(2). In its extensive discussion, the Court considered Supreme Court law on murder and sudden fight under Section 300, including Arjun v. State of Chhattisgarh (2017), and on common object under Section 149. James Martin v. State of Kerala, (2004) 2 SCC 203, explained that private defence must be assessed on the facts of each case and that an accused's unexplained injury does not invariably defeat the prosecution; Lakshmi Singh was discussed within that authority. Baldev Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 12 SCC 473, addressed when omissions in a statement under Section 161 are material.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 148, 302/149 and 307/149 (convictions), Section 300 Exception 4 and Section 304 Part II (proposed reduction), private-defence provisions including Sections 102 and 105 in cited discussion; original FIR also invoked Sections 147, 341, 294, 323 and 506B. Evidence Act Section 32(1); CrPC Sections 161, 162(2) and 374.

4. Issues : Could the deceased's dehati nalishi and police statement prove the attack as dying declarations? Did the gunshot injury to Roop Singh in the counter-case establish that the eight appellants had acted in private defence, or require rejection of the prosecution case because that injury was unexplained? Was this a sudden fight warranting conviction under Section 304 Part II, and did the armed group share a common object under Section 149 despite the absence of an individual assignment of each blow?

5. Ratio / Findings : Rajendra's statements described the transaction that caused his death and named the eight attackers; the restriction in Section 162 did not exclude a dying declaration admissible under Section 32(1). The injured witness Narendra gave a consistent account supported by the medical evidence and the recovered lathis, notwithstanding a hostile eyewitness. The counter FIR established that the scene was the same, but evidence from that case could not be imported wholesale into these appeals. The Court found that the appellants were the aggressors: eight men arrived armed with lathis, intercepted two men and inflicted 23 injuries. It did not decide the separate cross-appeal and observed that the single gunshot might have been fired in self-defence. Even if the appellants' plea of private defence were accepted, the repeated blows exceeded the permissible force. The organised assault was not a sudden, unpremeditated fight, and the fatal splenic injury was attributable to the attack; the proposed reduction to Section 304 Part II was rejected. The appellants' conduct, weapons and concerted attack proved the unlawful assembly's common object to kill/attempt to kill. Roop Singh's unexplained gunshot injury did not automatically discredit the prosecution in this case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the three appeals. It affirmed life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000 under IPC Sections 302/149, seven years' imprisonment and a fine of ₹500 under Sections 307/149, and three years' imprisonment and a fine of ₹500 under Section 148, with the stated default terms and concurrent substantive sentences. Jagdish Prasad was directed to serve the balance of his sentence in jail. The seven appellants on bail were directed to surrender forthwith before the trial court to serve their remaining sentences, failing which the trial court could issue arrest warrants. Narendra's counter-case appeal, CRA 2301/2005, was to be decided separately.

Headnote :- Anticipatory bail in gang-rape prosecution — Although the police initially filed a closure report after a long investigation, the Magistrate rejected it and took cognizance; the High Court had already upheld that subsequent order. The applicant could not rely on the rejected police opinion, particularly in view of the alleged evasion of arrest when officers went to the house where he had taken shelter. The Court criticised the undue favour shown by the police and drew the DGP's attention to recurring uninterpretable Y-chromosome results, without determining their laboratory cause or treating the DNA material as conclusive proof of guilt. The risk of pressure on witnesses supported refusal of pre-arrest bail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Jagdish Prasad Dixit apprehended arrest in Crime 256/2019 under IPC Sections 376-D, 294, 506 and 34. Referring to the five years that had elapsed, he claimed to have cooperated with the police and supplied a blood sample. The police submitted a closure report stating that he had been falsely implicated. In April 2024, an earlier Magistrate's order directing the police to file a charge sheet was set aside under Abhinandan Jha. The Magistrate then reconsidered and rejected the closure report and took cognizance; the High Court dismissed the applicant's challenge to that order in July. The State reported that a co-accused had been arrested, proclamation and attachment proceedings were underway, and officers had found the house where Dixit had taken shelter locked. A worker later said that Dixit had been taken to a railway station. Dixit applied for anticipatory bail under BNSS Section 482/CrPC Section 438, as stated in the order.

2. Precedents — Considered : Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117, governed the earlier decision setting aside the direction to the police to file a charge sheet; the later cognizance order, made after independent reconsideration of the closure report, remained upheld. Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was cited for the proposition that the accused cannot control the investigation. The Court quoted its earlier order in Hariom alias Chhotu Raikwar (MCRC 45232/2021, 7 February 2022), which reproduced a DGP affidavit and inquiry concerning procurement at the Sagar DNA laboratory and contaminated kits. That material provided background for drawing the DGP's attention to the issue; it did not establish that this applicant's sample had been mishandled. Earlier orders in the same litigation concerning the closure report and cognizance were also considered.

3. Statutes considered : BNSS Section 482/CrPC Section 438 (pre-arrest bail, as cited in the order); IPC Sections 376-D, 294, 506 and 34; CrPC Sections 82–83 (proclamation and attachment); Prevention of Corruption Act Section 7(a)(b) appears within the quoted earlier DGP inquiry, not as a charge in this case.

4. Issues : Could the police opinion in the closure report support pre-arrest bail after the report had been judicially rejected and cognizance taken? What weight should be given to the subsequent avoidance of arrest and the risk to witnesses? Did the report of low, uninterpretable Y-chromosomes settle the allegation, or did it require separate administrative attention?

5. Ratio / Findings : The initial unlawful direction to file a charge sheet had been corrected, but the subsequent independent rejection of the closure report and the taking of cognizance remained upheld. The Court found that the police had unduly accommodated the applicant despite his availability, and noted the allegations that he had escaped from a place of shelter when officers came. In view of the serious gang-rape accusation and the possibility of pressure on witnesses, anticipatory bail was unwarranted. The Court observed that reports of low, uninterpretable Y-chromosomes recurred across cases and drew the DGP's attention to the issue. It raised questions about possible equipment or analyst problems, without establishing either cause or making any conclusive forensic finding or finding of guilt against this applicant.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the application for anticipatory bail. The DGP's attention was invited to recurring uninterpretable Y-chromosome results; no separate operative direction against laboratory staff was made in this order.

Case Sr. no. (414) Prev Next

Headnote :- POCSO age proof and Section 311 CrPC — The trial court convicted Jagdish of repeated rape and aggravated penetrative sexual assault and Bhanwarlal of kidnapping/abduction. To find that the prosecutrix was under 18, it relied on the parents' evidence and assumed two-year gaps between their five children. A Class VIII progress report showing her date of birth as 2 April 1997 was included in the charge sheet, but no Headmaster or teacher proved it. Where a material witness is essential to a just decision, the court must exercise its power under Section 311 despite the prosecution's omission. The convictions were set aside and the case remanded for evidence of the school record, a fresh age finding and a fresh judgment within six months.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant reported his daughter missing on 14 May 2014; she was later recovered. Jagdish Singh and Bhanwarlal were prosecuted for kidnapping/abduction, with rape and POCSO charges against Jagdish. The trial court sentenced Jagdish to three and five years' imprisonment on the kidnapping/abduction counts and ten years' imprisonment on the rape and aggravated POCSO counts; Bhanwarlal received three and five years' imprisonment. The defence disputed proof that the prosecutrix was under 18 and relied on statements describing a voluntary departure and relationship. The prosecution had filed a photocopy of her Class VIII progress report showing her date of birth as 2 April 1997, but did not call its custodian or obtain ossification evidence. The trial court instead relied on the parents' testimony and assumed two-year gaps between their five children.

2. Precedents — Considered : Natasha Singh v. CBI, (2013) 5 SCC 741, explained the wide power under Section 311 to summon witnesses essential to a just decision at any stage of the trial. The power must be exercised judiciously, with an opportunity to rebut the evidence and without unfair prejudice. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 3 SCC 374, distinguished the discretionary first limb of Section 311 from the mandatory second limb where the evidence is essential to a just decision. Additional fair-trial cases appear as authorities within the quotation from Natasha Singh.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 363/34, 366/34 and repeated-rape provision cited at charge as Section 376(2)(n); POCSO Act Sections 5(l) and 6; CrPC Sections 161, 311 and 374; Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Rules, 2007, Rule 12, as used for age-document priority.

4. Issues : Could the prosecutrix's minority be determined from her parents' testimony and assumed intervals between siblings without proving an available school document? Should the trial court have summoned the school custodian under Section 311? What relief followed from the failure to resolve a fact foundational to the charged offences?

5. Ratio / Findings : The photocopy recorded a potentially decisive date, but it had not been formally proved by a teacher or Headmaster. Documents of the kinds specified in Rule 12, when available, should be tested before reliance is placed on oral age estimates; the assumed two-year gaps between siblings lacked a scientific basis. The court had the power, and where the evidence was essential, the duty under Section 311 to summon the custodian, even though the investigating officer and prosecutor had failed to list that witness. The convictions were set aside for a fresh finding on age. If the school records conclusively prove age, parental testimony may serve as corroboration; if documentary proof of age fails, the trial court may assess the father's evidence, including the "back to back" inference. The appellate court did not finally determine the prosecutrix's age or the consent defence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has set aside the trial judgment and sentences. The case was remanded for examination of the teacher/Headmaster, a fresh determination of age and a fresh judgment within six months of receipt of the record. Bhanwarlal's appellate bail bonds were discharged. He was directed to appear before the trial court on 3 January 2022, failing which his trial bail bonds would automatically stand cancelled and the trial court was to issue an arrest warrant. Jagdish was to remain in custody pending the fresh judgment.

Jagdish Singh and Another v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 898/2017, 13/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Case Sr. no. (415) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers — FIR quashing during investigation — face-value test and limits of inquiry - The Court observed that where the complaint alleges specific acts constituting a prima facie criminal case, Section 482 CrPC does not permit a premature roving inquiry into the truth of disputed allegations or an assessment of the kind undertaken at trial. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, and State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, were applied to require restraint before investigation is complete. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, referring to Bhajan Lal, required the power to be exercised sparingly. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, and M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, recognised that quashing remains permissible where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. 709/2021, prohibited resolving disputed facts through a mini-trial. The Court grouped Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha as supporting the same restrained approach.

Inherent powers — defence material — public-document exception - Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was considered for the limited exception permitting consideration of a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. It did not authorise accepting the husband's prior complaint or the applicants' disputed plea of separate residence as proved. Their Samagra IDs and the husband's disclosed address supported only a prima facie observation; the pleas that they lived separately and had no access were left for trial.

Matrimonial complaint — delay and asserted counterblast - Applying Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, the Court held that filing the FIR after a matrimonial petition and a prior police complaint did not, by reason of timing alone, establish mala fides. A wife's delay while attempting to preserve the marriage cannot automatically be treated as an afterthought; civil matrimonial proceedings do not themselves end criminal proceedings.

Cruelty allegations against relatives — particularity at quashing stage - Allegations that named relatives demanded additional dowry and participated in abuse, instigation or assault on identified dates were sufficiently specific to resist quashing as vague or omnibus. The dismissal expressed no final finding of guilt or truth of the disputed defence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant stated that she married Deepnarayan Pandey on 11 July 2016 and moved between her parental and matrimonial homes; she said the marital relationship proceeded without difficulty until 2020. Her complaint alleged that on 10 June 2021 her husband and his elder brothers, applicants 1 and 2, and applicant 2's wife, applicant 3, demanded a further ₹1,00,000 and a motorcycle. She said the husband abused and beat her when she explained that her parents could not comply; the male applicants allegedly insulted her and instigated him to oust her, while applicant 3 also assaulted her. She claimed to have continued living there because of two young children. She further alleged that on 19 July 2023 the husband and applicant 3 abused, assaulted and threatened her, and the male applicants joined in abuse and instigation. She then contacted her parents, went with her brother, and thereafter resided at her parental home while, according to her, the children remained with the husband. She alleged continuing demands and threats against her return. An FIR, Crime No. 889/2023, was registered on 11 September 2023 at Police Station Rampur Naikain, Sidhi, for Sections 498-A, 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The three relatives, rather than the husband, brought MCrC No. 17374/2024 under Section 482 CrPC to quash that FIR and consequential proceedings as against them. Their counsel relied on the husband's police complaint of 20 July 2023 and the husband's petition for judicial separation under Section 10 of the Hindu Marriage Act, contending that the later FIR was a false counterblast. They later submitted that, although they lived in the same colony, they occupied a different house. The Court recorded Samagra IDs referring to Ward 13, Anuppur, and the husband's complaint also stating a Ward 13 address. These were competing assertions, not findings on the merits of the alleged offences.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted and applied to caution against a roving inquiry and premature quashing while serious accusations still require investigation; the quoted Supreme Court decision itself concerned allegations of blackmail and a disputed settlement. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, was quoted for the error of assessment before investigation is complete. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, quoted State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, for the recognised quashing categories together with the caution that the power must be exercised sparingly and cannot be used to test the reliability of the FIR at this stage. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was quoted for the ordinary exclusion of disputed defence material and the limited exception concerning public or undisputed documents; Yin Cheng Hsiung, Harshendra Kumar D. and Bhajan Lal appeared within that quotation. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, was quoted on quashing where allegations taken at face value disclose no offence or a legal bar applies, and on restraint against prematurely bringing a legitimate prosecution to an end. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, reiterated that an FIR or uncontroverted material disclosing no offence may be quashed. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, was quoted to disapprove minute assessment of disputed defence facts in inherent jurisdiction. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. 709/2021, order dated 30 June 2021, was quoted against a meticulous trial-like evaluation and for the limited detail expected of an FIR. The Judge then identified Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, as laying down similar law. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted and applied to the contention concerning a counterblast and delay: time spent seeking reconciliation and the existence of a matrimonial civil case cannot alone justify quashing a subsequent criminal FIR; the High Court must assess the allegations without deciding disputed extraneous matters.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided for the High Court’s inherent jurisdiction and the limits on deciding facts at this stage. The FIR alleged Sections 498-A (matrimonial cruelty), 294 (obscene acts or words), 323 (hurt), 506 (criminal intimidation) and 34 (common intention) IPC, and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961. The Court did not finally determine the separate ingredients of each offence; it assessed the pleaded participation and refused to stop investigation. Section 10 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955, governed the husband's civil judicial-separation petition, whose filing was relevant to the applicants' counterblast argument but supplied no bar to criminal investigation. No later BNS or BNSS provision was applied in the order.

4. Issues : (i) Whether an FIR that attributed a further dowry demand and dated acts of abuse, assault or instigation to each of the three relatives could be quashed at the investigation stage as vague or insufficient. (ii) Whether the husband's earlier police complaint, his Section 10 matrimonial petition and the interval before the FIR established that the complaint was false and retaliatory, and whether that question could be decided under Section 482. (iii) Whether Samagra IDs and the claim that the applicants resided in another house permitted the High Court to decide residence or access as a defence without trial. The merits of the criminal charges and actual credibility of witnesses were not issues finally decided.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first set out the Supreme Court authorities distinguishing examination of allegations at face value from a roving inquiry into their truth. XYZ and S. Martin cautioned against premature intervention before investigation was complete; Ajay Kumar Das and its Bhajan Lal quotation demanded circumspection; Gourishetty Mahesh and M. Srikanth preserved quashing for allegations that, accepted in full, disclose no offence or meet a recognised bar. CBI v. Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh reinforced that minute weighing of a contested defence belongs to trial, while Mohd. Akram Siddiqui acknowledged a limited exception for reliable public or undisputed material. Applying these principles, the husband's police complaint could not be accepted as a true answer to the wife's allegations solely because it predated the FIR. Nor did the timing after his Section 10 petition prove that her report was a counterblast. Pratibha explained that efforts to preserve a marriage may account for a later complaint, and that civil matrimonial proceedings do not displace the independent criminal process. The Judge stated that a wife's decision to report after the possibility of reconciliation appeared to have ended cannot automatically be treated as an afterthought. The FIR alleged dates and concrete roles for the three applicants: a demand for money and a motorcycle, abuse and instigation by the two brothers-in-law, and assault or abusive conduct by the female applicant. These particulars defeated the claim that the allegations were purely general or omnibus at this preliminary stage. The Samagra IDs showed addresses in Ward 13, Anuppur; the husband's complaint also described a Ward 13 address. The Court made the qualified observation that, prima facie, they appeared to live in the same premises and left separate residence and lack of access to be proved by the applicants. Neither that observation nor refusal to quash establishes guilt, confirms every charged statutory ingredient, or prevents a trial court from evaluating the defence on evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the relatives' Section 482 application. FIR Crime No. 889/2023 and its consequential proceedings were not quashed as against the three applicants. The order did not award costs, grant conditional relief or decide the criminal case on its merits; the applicants' separate-residence defence remains to be established in the proper proceeding.

Madhusunan Pandey and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 17374/2024, 01/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Inherent jurisdiction — evidence appreciation at the quashing stage — oral account and peeli chitthi - The Court observed that the witnesses' statements repeating the allegations of an additional dowry demand could not be disbelieved under Section 482 CrPC merely because the accused said a seized Peeli Chitthi did not concern the engaged couple. The credibility of the invitation and the oral testimony was disputed and had to be determined by the trial court after recording evidence. It could not be decided by the High Court through a mini-trial. M/s Neeharika Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra and Others was quoted and applied to preserve that distinction.

Quashing standards — face-value allegations and recognised exceptions - Neeharika's discussion of R.P. Kapur, Bhajan Lal, Golconda Lingaswamy, Zandu Pharmaceutical Works, Sanapareddy Maheedhar Seshagiri, Arun Gulab Gawali and Satvinder Kaur was considered for the restricted intervention standard: a legal bar, allegations disclosing no offence, a manifest absence of evidence or recognised abuse can justify quashing, whereas a disputed contradiction or a prediction of acquittal cannot. The quoted material also mentions Kurukshetra University and State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan on premature interference. Here the High Court found the alleged conditional demands for cash, a car and gold, followed by cancellation of the marriage, sufficient for a prima facie Section 4 Dowry Prohibition Act case. The prosecution and trial were permitted to proceed, with evidentiary findings reserved.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant stated that his daughter's engagement to applicant 4, said to hold a government job, took place on 16 June 2017 at Pavai Mata Temple. According to the FIR, an initial arrangement included ₹5,00,000, a Bullet motorcycle and household articles. The complainant described a God Bharai ceremony on 26 June 2017, exchanges of rings, clothes and ornaments, and payments of ₹51,000 and ₹2,100 to the other family. He said a proposed wedding date of 5 July 2018 was communicated through a Peeli Chitthi sent on 16 January 2018, but the applicants refused it and insisted on a Swift car, ten tolas of gold ornaments for the bride and ₹5,00,000 in cash, warning that applicant 4 would marry someone else otherwise. The complainant alleged that, when he could not meet the later demands, the marriage was broken and his daughter and family suffered social embarrassment. FIR Crime No. 54/2018 was registered at Police Station Gormi, District Bhind on 22 February 2018. The four applicants faced a pending prosecution under Section 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act in RCT No. 290/2018 before the JMFC at Mehgaon. They petitioned the High Court under Section 482 CrPC to quash both the FIR and the pending proceedings. Their counsel accepted that witness statements repeated the FIR allegations but argued that the seized Peeli Chitthi, part of the charge-sheet, did not relate to applicant 4 and the complainant's daughter. Relying on that alleged contradiction, they urged the Court to disbelieve the oral accounts. The State opposed appraisal of the evidence under Section 482 and submitted that interference is available where even fully accepted allegations disclose no offence. The High Court identified the alleged conflict between the invitation and the testimony as the sole ground advanced; it recorded that the applicants did not say they remained ready to marry the complainant's daughter. These are the parties' positions, not final proof of the dowry demand.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicants invoked M/s Neeharika Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra and Others. The Judge reproduced substantial portions of that Supreme Court decision, especially its discussion of Section 482 CrPC and Article 226 standards, and applied its restraint against testing evidence reliability in the present quashing petition. Neeharika quoted R.P. Kapur for three recognised classes of intervention: an express legal bar; allegations that on their face fail to constitute the offence; and no legal evidence or evidence manifestly inconsistent with the charge. Its critical qualification is that this differs from evidence which may or may not support the accusation after credibility assessment. Neeharika cited Kurukshetra University for sparing use and the impropriety of stopping investigation before it begins, and reproduced Bhajan Lal's illustrative categories including absence of an offence or cognizable offence, an express bar, inherent absurdity and demonstrable malicious prosecution; those categories are not a licence to decide contested proof. The quoted discussion of Golconda Lingaswamy explained the inherent jurisdiction's purposes—giving effect to Code orders, preventing abuse and securing justice—while distinguishing clear absence of evidence from contested reliability and warning against forecasting conviction. Zandu Pharmaceutical Works reiterated that the FIR or complaint is read as a whole and incomplete evidence is not weighed to stifle a legitimate prosecution. Sanapareddy Maheedhar Seshagiri emphasised societal interest in allowing investigation or trial when the complaint discloses a crime, subject to a genuine legal bar or abuse. Arun Gulab Gawali rejected quashing based simply on a predicted acquittal, including a complainant's apparent retreat, and identified investigation and the State's public interest in prosecution; the distinctive complainant-retreat facts were within Neeharika's quotation, not facts decided in this case. Neeharika also referred to State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan for reluctance to interfere prematurely and quoted Satvinder Kaur for the face-value FIR test and the normal course of allowing investigation. Satvinder Kaur's discussion of territorial police jurisdiction and Sections 156(2) and 178(c) CrPC was reproduced within the longer quotation but was not an issue in Mahavir Singh. The quoted Supreme Court passages also referred to Janata Dal, Raghubir Saran, State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha, Pratibha Rani, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Pepsi Foods, G. Sagar Suri and Ajay Mitra. The Court applied Neeharika to hold that it could not choose between the disputed Peeli Chitthi and the witnesses' accounts at this procedural stage.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, preserved the High Court's inherent power to prevent abuse and secure justice; the order concerned its limits in quashing an FIR and an existing trial. Section 4 of the Dowry

Prohibition Act, 1961, was the charge identified in the pending prosecution for alleged demands connected with a proposed marriage. The Judge did not finally construe its ingredients, decide the admissibility or weight of the Peeli Chitthi, or adjudicate guilt. Article 226, Section 561-A of the earlier Code, and CrPC Sections 155(2), 156(1), 156(2), 178(c), 227 and 320 appeared in the Supreme Court passages quoted through Neeharika to explain general quashing or other contexts; the present petition was decided under Section 482 and did not turn on territorial jurisdiction, discharge, compounding or an Article 226 prayer.

4. Issues : (i) Whether witness statements supporting the FIR could be rejected at the quashing stage because the seized Peeli Chitthi was said not to name or concern the proposed couple. (ii) Whether the FIR's allegation of additional conditional demands and cancellation of a proposed marriage disclosed a prima facie Section 4 Dowry Prohibition Act case so that the FIR and RCT prosecution should continue. The Court did not resolve the actual addressees or evidentiary value of the invitation, witness credibility, ultimate statutory liability, or any separate issue about territorial jurisdiction.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the contention that the invitation contradicted the oral statements as a request to weigh the evidence. Although the Peeli Chitthi was said to be seized with the charge-sheet, the asserted inference that it concerned another couple did not automatically disprove the complainant's allegation that the proposed marriage was broken because the complainant could not meet the additional demand. Neeharika's review distinguished assessment of whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence from an inquiry into credibility, which belongs to the trial court. It also recognised exceptional intervention to prevent abuse. Its quoted R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal framework left intervention possible for a clear legal bar, non-disclosure of an offence on accepted allegations, manifest impossibility or established abuse; Golconda Lingaswamy and Zandu Pharmaceutical Works warned that disputed probabilities and uncertain evidence cannot be used to predict acquittal, while Sanapareddy and Satvinder Kaur stressed restraint where the allegations disclose a crime. Arun Gulab Gawali illustrated the risk of prematurely terminating a prosecution on assumptions about later proof. The High Court applied that common rule to hold that it could not determine whether the witnesses' account or the Peeli Chitthi should be believed or discarded. That choice must follow recording of evidence before the trial court. The petitioners had not argued that they remained ready to conduct the marriage, and the FIR alleged a prima facie dowry demand and cancellation when the demand was not met. Consequently the Court found no basis to quash the prosecution. This determination was confined to the preliminary question arising on these facts; it did not authenticate the document, decide every element of the charge, or pronounce on guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC. FIR Crime No. 54/2018 registered at Police Station Gormi, District Bhind, and further proceedings in RCT No. 290/2018 before the JMFC, Mehgaon, were not quashed. The order imposed no conditions or costs and left the competing oral and documentary proof for the trial court.

Headnote :- Prevention of Corruption Act — sanction — retired public servant and temporal operation of 2018 amendment - The Court observed that the amended Section 19 sanction requirement did not apply retrospectively to this corruption case registered in 2013, despite the applicant's retirement in 2016 and the Special Judge's rejection of the closure report in 2021. The Principal Bench decision in Kavindra Kiyawat v. State of M.P., which considered Katti Nagaseshanna v. State of Andhra Pradesh, provided the basis for holding that the amendment was not retrospective and rejecting the sanction objection at the anticipatory-bail stage. The result concerns the temporal position of this case and does not remove the amended protection where it prospectively applies.

Investigation — scope beyond initial FIR - Applying Kavindra Kiyawat, the Court considered that an FIR need not set out every fact and an investigator may examine additional allegations or persons revealed in enquiry or investigation. The applicant's objection that he had answered the first two allegations and had not been heard on later matters did not restrict the EOW's investigation to the initial complaint. The order left merits and evidentiary sufficiency for the appropriate proceedings.

Anticipatory bail — cognizance after closure report — warrant and summons submission - The applicant invoked Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal to challenge direct issuance of an arrest warrant. The Court held that the choice between a warrant and summons made no material difference to this bail request: even if summons were issued, he would have to appear and seek regular bail. Taking the case diary, prima facie allegations and seriousness of the corruption accusation together, the Court refused pre-arrest bail. This was a case-specific disposition, not a broad approval of every direct warrant after cognizance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Mahendra Kumar Dubey, a former Assistant Director in the Farmer Welfare and Agriculture Development Department, said he retired in 2016. He sought anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC in Crime No. 28/2013 at Police Station EOW, Bhopal, Unit Gwalior, involving Section 420 IPC and Sections 7, 13(1)(c), 13(1)(d) and 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988; the order also records his submission that Section 120-B IPC appeared in the registered allegations. According to his counsel, he had answered two original allegations but investigators later considered additional matters without giving him a hearing. One concerned his residence in Gwalior while posted at Bhind, daily travel to the office and receipt of House Rent Allowance. Other material described alleged improper sanction of grants to persons in respect of land that had fallen in a submergence area. The EOW submitted a closure report. The Special Judge rejected it and took cognizance by order dated 29 January 2021, issuing an arrest warrant; the applicant said this order was separately under challenge. In seeking pre-arrest protection, he argued that the court should have issued summons and that the 2018 amendment to Section 19 of the Prevention of Corruption Act required sanction because he had retired and cognizance was taken in 2021. The EOW responded that an FIR is not exhaustive and investigation can extend to newly discovered facts without a suspect's prior hearing. The High Court read the case diary and the cognizance order. It recorded the investigating officer's view that the allegations against the applicant were prima facie established, a DPO opinion said to agree, a contrary view of the Assistant Inspector General (Crime) on the quality and sufficiency of the documents, and the investigating officer's final treatment of the travel allegation, which left the related HRA claim unexamined.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kavindra Kiyawat v. State of M.P. through Special Police Department and Others, W.P. No. 27734/2019, order dated 21 September 2020, was the Principal Bench decision the Judge used on both the 2018 amendment and the scope of investigation. Its quoted paragraph 25 discussed Katti Nagaseshanna v. State of Andhra Pradesh, Criminal Petition No. 9044/2018, order dated 16 November 2018, where the Telangana High Court reasoned that extending sanction to retired public servants imposed a new prosecutorial obligation and should not retrospectively undo prior prosecutions. The present Court adopted Kavindra Kiyawat's conclusion that the amendment was not retrospective and applied it to the crime registered in 2013, notwithstanding later cognizance. Kavindra Kiyawat's quoted paragraph 45 also stated that the FIR is not an encyclopedia and later discovered persons or facts may be investigated; the Judge included that principle in considering the applicant's complaint about added allegations. Counsel cited the Supreme Court's Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal and Others, (2007) 12 SCC 1, for issuing summons instead of an immediate arrest warrant. The Court disposed of this submission at the bail stage by reasoning that summons too would require the applicant to appear and seek regular bail.

3. Statutes considered : Section 438 CrPC provided the jurisdiction to grant anticipatory bail. Sections 420 and 120-B IPC appeared in the recorded accusations or the applicant's account; the corruption case concerned Sections 7 and 13(1)(c), 13(1)(d), 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. The material legal dispute concerned Section 19 of that Act as amended by the Prevention of Corruption (Amendment) Act, 2018, particularly its extension of sanction protection to a person who has ceased to hold the relevant public office. The Court treated the amendment as nonretrospective in the 2013 case. It did not decide whether the underlying corruption offences were proved, the exact scope of a different sanction provision, or the separate challenge to the cognizance order.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the 2018 Section 19 sanction amendment applied to a retired public servant when the corruption crime began in 2013 but the closure report was rejected and cognizance taken in 2021. (ii) Whether investigators were restricted to the first two FIR allegations or had to hear the suspect before examining additional matters discovered during investigation. (iii) Whether the direct arrest warrant instead of summons altered the anticipatory-bail assessment, given a separate challenge to the cognizance order. (iv) Whether the case diary, prima facie corruption allegations and surrounding circumstances justified protection against arrest. The Court did not finally determine the merits of the prosecution or the separate cognizance challenge.

5. Ratio / Findings : On sanction, the Court followed Kavindra Kiyawat and its discussion of Katti Nagaseshanna: the 2018 change extending Section 19 to retired public servants imposed a new obligation and could not retrospectively govern the already registered 2013 case merely because the Special Judge acted in 2021. The applicant's 2016 retirement therefore did not establish the claimed sanction defect in this procedural setting. On investigation, the Judge quoted Kavindra Kiyawat that an FIR is not an encyclopedia; the EOW's investigation is not confined to the allegations initially answered by the suspect merely because further matters or persons come to light after registration. The case diary and the Special Judge's order described competing official assessments. One officer considered allegations prima facie established, the DPO was recorded as broadly agreeing that the allegations against this applicant were prima facie established, but not those against the other co-accused, and another official referred to poor documents and insufficient evidence. The investigator declined to pursue the applicant's travel between Gwalior and Bhind as such, while the allegation that he received HRA for that period had not been examined; the Judge also noted a grant-sanction allegation concerning submerged land. Those matters were considered in the bail context, not finally resolved as offences. Counsel's reliance on Inder Mohan Goswami to oppose immediate warrant issuance did not persuade the Court that anticipatory bail was warranted: it observed that a summons would still require him to appear and apply for regular bail. The merits of that separate cognizance challenge were not decided. Given the seriousness of the alleged corruption and the case diary as assessed at this stage, the Court declined pre-arrest protection. It did not formulate a general rule that corruption allegations automatically defeat anticipatory bail or that procedural objections to warrants can never be material.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the first application for anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC.

Mahendra Kumar Dubey v. Economic Offences Wing, Unit Gwalior, M.Cr.C. no. 14254/2021, 31/03/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- Public distribution system / prosecution threshold - Clause 14(3) of the M.P. Public Distribution System (Control) Order, 2015 was read as making prosecution mandatory where stock variation exceeds ten per cent, without prohibiting prosecution below that level. The absence of a finding that the alleged shortage crossed ten per cent did not itself compel quashing under Section 482 CrPC. State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, was invoked for the limited point that a statutory regulatory regime does not, without a provision excluding it, prevent recourse to criminal proceedings; the Court did not determine the shortage percentage or guilt.

Essential Commodities Act / FIR informant - Applying Jagdish Kushwah v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 2643/2011 (19 January 2017), the Court held that the Collector was not the only person who could set the police in motion on disclosure of a cognizable Essential Commodities Act offence. The earlier decision declined to add the word 'only' to the 2009 Control Order in conflict with Section 10-A of the Act; that reasoning defeated the Collector-only objection raised under the 2015 regime.

Defective investigation / cognizance - H.N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi, AIR 1955 SC 196, distinguishes an investigative illegality from a jurisdictional defect in cognizance or trial. Once the charge-sheet was filed, the alleged lack of investigative competence did not automatically nullify the proceedings; this rule remains subject to the Supreme Court's qualifications concerning early correction of a breach of a mandatory requirement and a demonstrated miscarriage of justice.

Investigation / accused's pre-audience - A suspect has no general entitlement to have a show-cause reply adjudicated or to be heard before registration of an FIR. Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v.

State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, were applied to reject an accused's asserted right to choose the investigating agency, control its methods or routinely demand a hearing before investigation. The stated rule does not determine any later evidentiary defence or a properly supported claim of mala fide investigation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants were the manager of Sewa Sahakari Samiti, Pipariya and the salesman at the fair price shop operated by that society. According to the complaint, the Naib Tahsildar and Junior Supply Officer initially found the shop closed. The salesman was called, and a physical inspection followed. The inspecting officials reported that the stock register was not produced, the notice board was absent, and physical stock was short by 42 kilograms of rice and 536 kilograms of gram. On the SDO (Revenue)'s written communication dated 13 May 2022, submitted by the Junior Supply Officer, Police Station Isagarh, District Ashoknagar registered Crime No. 179/2022 under Sections 3 and 7 of the Essential Commodities Act for alleged breaches of Clauses 10(3), 10(4), 11(1), 11(3), 11(9), 13(1), 13(2), 15(4) and 18 of the M.P. Public Distribution System (Control) Order, 2015. These inspection allegations were the basis of the accusation, not findings of guilt by the High Court.

The applicants stated that an SDO show-cause notice dated 9 May 2022 had been answered by denying all contraventions. They sought quashing of the FIR and ensuing proceedings under Section 482 CrPC. Their submissions were that the relevant Clause 14 threshold required a shortage exceeding ten per cent of monthly allocation for prosecution, yet no such percentage was found; that the SDO should have considered their defence and heard them before an FIR; and that only a report from the Collector could sustain a prosecution under the Control Order. The police had also filed a charge-sheet. The Court heard counsel for the applicants and considered the asserted exclusivity of the Collector's recommendation, the consequences of the completed investigation, the claimed pre-FIR hearing right and the ten-per-cent argument. The order identifies the applicants by their roles and in the cause title, but does not separately determine their individual culpability.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jagdish Kushwah v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 2643/2011, order dated 19 January 2017 (Gwalior Bench), was used to answer the Collector-only objection. In construing Clause 11.5 of the earlier M.P. PDS (Control) Order, 2009, that decision reasoned that adding 'only' before the Collector would restrict the cognizable character given by Section 10-A of the Essential Commodities Act. It thus allowed the police to register an FIR on another person's complaint if that complaint discloses a cognizable offence. The present Court treated this interpretive reasoning as dispositive of the exclusivity argument advanced in the prosecution under the 2015 Order. The earlier decision concerned the 2009 Control Order; the current charges were under the 2015 Control Order.

H.N. Rishbud v. State of Delhi, AIR 1955 SC 196, was quoted at length. The Supreme Court distinguished defects in the collection of evidence by an investigating officer from provisions governing a court's competence to take cognizance or try a case. An invalid investigation is not, by itself, a jurisdictional nullity once a police report is before a competent court. At the conclusion of trial, an investigative illegality warrants interference only on a showing of miscarriage of justice. The quotation also explains that a breach of a mandatory investigative requirement brought before the court sufficiently early should be considered and, where appropriate, cured through suitable further investigation; an early objection bears on prejudice. The High Court used the authority to reject the claimed investigative-competence ground after filing of the charge-sheet, without finding that this investigation was in fact illegal or purporting to displace the Supreme Court's prejudice qualification.

Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was relied upon regarding the suspect's lack of a right to be heard before investigation or to control it. The cited passage traces the rule that an accused cannot demand a particular investigating agency or dictate how investigation is conducted. It recognizes that a constitutional court may intervene under Article 226 on a substantiated case of mala fide investigation, while extraordinary transfer to the CBI demands caution and exceptional grounds. The discussion also distinguishes the investigation stage from the later opportunities to seek bail, discharge or quashing on a proper record. Within the Romila Thapar passage, Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India support the accused's inability to select an agency or dictate investigative method; E. Sivakumar v. Union of India concerns absence of a routine accused hearing before a CBI-investigation order; Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala identifies limits on changing an agency in inherent jurisdiction and the distinct constitutional response to proven mala fides; and State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights cautions that constitutional transfer to the CBI is exceptional. Those authorities explain Romila Thapar's reasoning as reproduced, rather than additional agency-transfer disputes decided on these applicants' facts. The present Court applied the ordinary no-pre-audience rule to the applicants' objection that their reply was not considered before registration of the FIR; it made no finding of established mala fides or ruling on a CBI transfer.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, was then quoted on the same procedural issue. Its discussion of Union of India v. W.N. Chadha, 1993 Supp (4) SCC 260, explains that police collection of material before the final report ordinarily requires no prior audi alteram partem hearing of a proposed accused, and that the accused has no general participation right over investigative method, subject to specific statutory situations. The passage also discusses CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, (1996) 11 SCC 253, on absence of a natural-justice right to select the agency; Sri Bhagwan Samardha Sreepada Vallabha Venkata Vishwanandha Maharaj v. State of A.P., (1999) 5 SCC 740, on no obligatory accused hearing before a further-investigation direction; and Narender G. Goel v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 6 SCC 65, on later trial opportunities to contest collected evidence. These are principles discussed within the Supreme Court passage, rather than separate factual issues tried by the High Court in this case. The High Court used Dinubhai, together with Romila Thapar and its own Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, M.Cr.C. No. 10446/2017 (30 November 2017), to reject pre-FIR participation as of right.

State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, was invoked when construing the prosecution threshold. The quoted Supreme Court passage rejected an argument that remedies under the M.P. Cooperative Societies Act exclusively displaced criminal law, particularly in a case involving Prevention of Corruption Act charges. The present Court drew the narrower analogy that the 2015 PDS Control Order's mandatory-prosecution rule did not itself prohibit recourse to penal law in other cases. The Supreme Court did not decide this particular PDS clause or the applicants' stock position.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC furnished the inherent jurisdiction in which the applicants sought quashing of the FIR and consequential proceedings. Sections 3 and 7 of the Essential Commodities Act provided the alleged penal basis for contravention of the applicable control order. Section 10-A of that Act, in the Jagdish Kushwah reasoning adopted here, made the offence cognizable and undermined an interpretation limiting police reporting to one specified official. The FIR alleged breaches of the 2015 PDS Control Order's listed Clauses 10, 11, 13, 15 and 18; their individual ingredients were not resolved by this order. The order's quotation of the earlier 2009 Control Order concerns precedent, not the instrument named in the current FIR. Section 173(2) CrPC appears in the quoted Supreme Court discussion of a final police report, Section 190 in the discussion of cognizance, and Section 173(8) in the discussion of further investigation and an accused's participation; they are relevant to the procedural reasoning rather than separate charges. Article 226 is discussed within Romila Thapar as a possible exceptional constitutional remedy for mala fide investigation, without being invoked for relief in this Section 482 proceeding.

4. Issues : First, did the 2015 PDS Control Order require an exclusive recommendation or report by the Collector before police could register and investigate a cognizable Essential Commodities Act complaint initiated by the SDO's communication? Second, did the alleged lack of investigative competence remain a defect fatal to the proceedings after filing of the charge-sheet? Third, did the applicants acquire a right to have their response to an administrative show-cause notice considered, or a right to be heard, before the criminal FIR was registered? Fourth, did the absence of a recorded finding of stock shortage above ten per cent preclude prosecution under the Control Order and compel quashing? The Court addressed these legal objections to quashing, not the ultimate truth of the shortage allegations, compliance with each charged clause, or guilt of either applicant.

5. Ratio / Findings : On the reporting issue, the Court considered the Collector-only contention settled by Jagdish Kushwah. Reading the earlier order to permit an FIR exclusively on the Collector's complaint would require inserting 'only' and would curtail the Act's cognizable-offence provision. The Court applied that reasoning to reject the applicants' attempt to invalidate the FIR and charge-sheet merely because the communication originated from the SDO and was submitted through the Junior Supply Officer. It did not find that the Collector had made a report or hold that any complainant could prove the underlying offence by mere assertion.

On the alleged defect concerning the investigator's competence, the Court relied on H.N. Rishbud's separation between the legality of an investigation and the court's competence over a later proceeding. A charge-sheet had already been filed. Accordingly, the applicants' allegation about who could investigate did not automatically nullify the ensuing criminal process or furnish a quashing ground in the circumstances described. The test in the quoted Supreme Court passage allows correction of a breach of a mandatory investigative requirement raised at an early stage and recognizes the consequence of proved miscarriage of justice; the High Court identified neither a proven illegality nor such prejudice here.

On pre-audience, the Court expressly stated that an accused or suspect has no right of pre-audience before registration of an FIR. Romila Thapar and Dinubhai explained why investigation is a process of collecting material and why a prospective accused cannot ordinarily demand prior notice, select the investigating agency or control its method in the absence of a specific legal obligation. The applicants' answer to the administrative notice and their denial of the alleged contraventions did not, on that reasoning, require a prior criminal-investigation hearing. This finding did not assess the truth of their administrative reply or foreclose ordinary later procedural remedies.

On the threshold, the Court read the provision it identified as Clause 14(3) of the 2015 Order to make prosecution compulsory when variation is more than ten per cent. It rejected the converse inference that prosecution is forbidden at any lower percentage: the provision did not exclude penal law in those circumstances. The cited Rameshwar passage supported the proposition that a regulatory mechanism does not necessarily oust the criminal process. Consequently, the lack of an above-threshold finding was not a sufficient Section 482 ground to terminate the case. The Court did not calculate the alleged shortage as a percentage of monthly allocation and did not decide whether a particular charged control-order condition was proved.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC seeking quashing of Crime No. 179/2022 at Police Station Isagarh, District Ashoknagar, for alleged offences under Sections 3 and 7 of the Essential Commodities Act, together with subsequent proceedings. The FIR and filed charge-sheet were left undisturbed by this order. No applicant-specific exoneration, remand, corrective investigation direction, costs or final determination of guilt was granted.

Headnote :- Investigation / Section 36 CrPC / parallel enquiry - A superior officer's statutory powers do not permit a separate fact-finding enquiry to proceed in parallel with the investigating officer's pending FIR investigation. Deepak @ Preetam Verma v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 12592/2018 (11 September 2018), was applied as affirmed by the Supreme Court in Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P., SLP (Criminal) No. 1345/2019 (18 January 2022). The Supreme Court recognized that the State circular itself conformed to Section 36, while condemning the officers' independent parallel process. The resulting SDO(P) report purporting to find the FIR false was a nullity: it was not to be included in the case diary or final report, and, if already placed on record, was to be disregarded for all purposes. The lawful investigation of the FIR was to be completed under Section 173(1), without the Court predetermining whether a charge-sheet or a closure report would be filed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecutrix lodged an FIR on 7 September 2021 alleging offences under Sections 376 and 450 IPC against the petitioner. The police investigation was still pending when the Superintendent of Police, Bhind instructed the Sub-Divisional Officer (Police), Lahar, District Bhind to make a separate enquiry. On 13 January 2022 that officer submitted a report concluding that the prosecutrix's FIR was false. The petitioner relied on this conclusion in a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution. He sought a direction requiring the police to file a final or closure report before the competent court within one month, and a direction against police interference with his life and liberty while the matter remained pending. These were his submissions and requested reliefs, not judicial findings that the accusation was false.

The State opposed the petition on the ground that an independent enquiry conducted alongside an FIR investigation was not authorised by Section 36 CrPC. It submitted that the Superintendent's direction could not give legal effect to the SDO(P)'s report and that the investigating officer could not use it. The High Court heard both sides, considered the legality and consequence of the parallel process, and later addressed the petitioner's invocation of the Section 173(1) duty to investigate without unnecessary delay. It observed that the petitioner's approach to senior officers for a parallel enquiry had itself caused hurdles in the investigation. The order did not examine the prosecutrix's evidence or determine whether the alleged offences were made out.

2. Precedents — Considered : Deepak @ Preetam Verma and another v. State of M.P. and another, M.Cr.C. No. 12592/2018, order dated 11 September 2018, was the High Court authority for the proposition that Section 36 CrPC cannot be used to maintain an independent parallel enquiry while an FIR investigation proceeds. The present Court applied that legal rule directly to the enquiry ordered by the Bhind Superintendent and conducted by the SDO(P); it did not treat the report's favourable conclusion for the petitioner as a substitute for investigation.

The Supreme Court order dated 18 January 2022 in Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P. and others, SLP (Criminal) No. 1345/2019, was reproduced in substance in paragraph 5. The petitioners in that matter challenged adverse observations about how officers had conducted an enquiry parallel to the investigating officer's FIR investigation. The Supreme Court found that neither Section 36 nor the cited circular provided for a simultaneous independent enquiry. It distinguished the State circular of 26 June 2010, which was consistent with Section 36, from the officers' procedure, which departed from that circular and the statutory scheme. After considering the High Court's treatment of the independent enquiry and the officers' conduct, it found no Article 136 ground for interference and dismissed the petitions. The present Court treated this affirmance as confirming the rule already stated in Deepak and as precluding reliance on the SDO(P)'s later parallel-enquiry report. The Supreme Court order addressed the lawfulness of the parallel procedure, not the truth or falsity of the separate FIR involved in this case.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was the jurisdiction invoked for the petitioner's requested directions to the police. Section 36 CrPC, governing powers exercisable by superior police officers, was central to whether a separate superior-officer enquiry could coexist with an investigating officer's ongoing FIR investigation. The Court, through Deepak and the Supreme Court affirmance, rejected such an independent parallel use of Section 36 and gave the resulting report no investigative status. Section 173(1) CrPC requires completion of every investigation without unnecessary delay; the Court directed the investigating officer to finish and submit the lawful final report, whether charge-sheet or closure report, in accordance with it. Sections 376 and 450 IPC described the offences alleged in the FIR but their ingredients were not interpreted or resolved. Article 136 appears as the procedural basis on which the Supreme Court declined interference in the cited SLP; it was not an independent source of relief to this petitioner. The State circular mentioned in the Supreme Court extract was not reproduced in full in the present order.

4. Issues : First, could the Superintendent of Police direct an SDO(P) to conduct an independent enquiry under Section 36 CrPC while the investigating officer was already investigating the prosecutrix's FIR, and could the petitioner use that officer's favourable report to require a closure report? Second, if the enquiry was impermissible, what should happen to its report in the police case diary and final report? Third, should the investigating officer nonetheless complete the underlying investigation without unnecessary delay under Section 173(1), and could the Court prescribe its substantive conclusion? The case concerned control of investigative procedure, not an adjudication of the rape allegation or any final exoneration of the petitioner.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted Deepak's interpretation of Section 36 and the Supreme Court's affirmation in Surendra Singh Gaur. Section 36 does not itself authorise an additional independent enquiry to decide the merits of an FIR while its statutory investigation proceeds. The Supreme Court distinguished the circular from the procedure adopted: the cited State circular conformed to the statutory power; the officers' use of a purported parallel process did not. Accordingly, the Superintendent's instruction to the SDO(P) could not validate the enquiry. The Court expressed disapproval that the Bhind Superintendent had again ordered such a procedure despite the existing judicial pronouncement.

The SDO(P)'s report of 13 January 2022 declaring the FIR false was therefore a nullity for the criminal investigation. The investigating officer was not obliged or permitted to rely on it as an investigative input; the Court directed that it not be put in the police case diary and, if already on record, not be considered for any purpose or included in the final report. This exclusion arose from the process by which the report was made, not an independent judicial determination that its factual conclusion was either right or wrong. Consequently, the report could not support the petitioner's desired judicial direction to file a closure report.

As to delay, the Court noted the petitioner's own steps in seeking senior-officer parallel enquiry, but nevertheless required the investigating officer to complete the valid investigation under Section 173(1). It left the form of the lawful final report open: the officer could file a final report, charge-sheet or closure report according to the investigation. The Court did not compel a one-month deadline, decide the evidence underlying Sections 376 or 450 IPC, or convert the SDO(P)'s assessment into a finding binding on the police or the prosecutrix.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Article 226 petition with express directions concerning the ongoing investigation. The investigating officer was to exclude the SDO(P)'s 13 January 2022 report from the case diary, disregard it entirely if already taken on record, and keep it out of the final police report. The officer was directed to conclude the investigation and file the appropriate report under Section 173(1) CrPC. The requested order compelling a closure report within one month was not granted. The order did not grant a separate operative injunction on the petitioner's general life-and-liberty prayer or finally decide guilt or innocence.

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / relatives / omnibus allegations - In a Section 482 CrPC challenge, applicants 3–7, the husband's brothers and sisters-in-law, could not be required to face trial on the general accusations in the FIR and the corresponding Section 161 statement, which identified no individual act or specific material against them. Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, Monju Roy v. State of West Bengal, (2015) 13 SCC 693, and Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, 2013 (1) UC 155, were applied in assessing each applicant's alleged role. The FIR and proceedings were quashed only as to those five applicants; proceedings against the husband and mother-in-law continued.

Cruelty / husband and mother-in-law / triable allegations - Particular allegations that the husband demanded Rs 10 lakh, assaulted and expelled the wife, and that the mother-in-law beat and taunted her for insufficient dowry disclosed a case for trial. Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260, was applied to avoid adjudicating veracity in Section 482 jurisdiction. Proceedings against applicants 1 and 2 continued, without a final finding of guilt.

Section 482 / divorce litigation / alleged counterblast - A criminal complaint following a divorce petition is not ipso facto a retaliatory false case. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, required attention to the FIR allegations rather than extraneous chronology; civil and criminal proceedings remain independent. The coordinate-bench decision in Amit Kumar Shrivastava was distinguished because it involved particular Family Court admissions discrediting the cruelty account, rather than merely the sequence of the divorce petition and FIR.

Section 498-A IPC / continuing cruelty / limitation - Applying Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, the Court reasoned that dowry-driven ouster may continue to inflict mental cruelty while the wife is compelled to live at her parental home, notwithstanding cessation of physical assault. On the pleaded facts the offence was treated as continuing with a fresh cause of action each day, defeating the asserted time bar; the truth of the underlying allegations remained for trial.

FIR / delay / quashing - Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, and Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, were applied to hold that elapsed time alone neither invalidates a delayed FIR nor warrants quashing. Whether reconciliation efforts and other circumstances provide a plausible explanation for the delay, and how the delay affects credibility, must be determined by the trial court after evidence is recorded.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant said that she married applicant 1, Mahendra Nagpure, on 14 April 2017. According to her FIR of 10 December 2021, after approximately one month of proper treatment the husband and several members of his family began to taunt and harass her for bringing insufficient dowry. She specifically accused her husband and mother-in-law, applicant 2 Ishwari Bai Nagpure, of beating her and pressing for Rs 10 lakh. She said she returned to her parental home and told her family, continued hoping that the husband would change, and was harassed by him even when he visited her parental village, Chikhala. The FIR further referred to their young daughter, her visit to the One Stop Centre, Balaghat on 29 November 2021 in hope of settlement, the husband's nonattendance there, and an alleged July 2021 visit by his family to Chikhala threatening that she should not return to the matrimonial home at Ladsada without the money. The husband had initiated divorce proceedings and sent notice. The complainant nevertheless said she wished to live with him if properly treated. These were allegations, not findings of the truth of the marital dispute. Crime No. 177/2021 was registered at Police Station Hatta, District Balaghat, for Sections 498-A, 294, 323 and 506/34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act.

Seven applicants sought Section 482 CrPC quashing. Besides the husband and mother-in-law, applicants 3 and 4 were younger brothers-in-law, applicant 5 was the wife of applicant 3, and applicants 6 and 7 were sisters-in-law. The husband's relatives relied on the general character of accusations against them. Counsel also said the FIR followed a Section 13 Hindu Marriage Act divorce petition and was a counterblast; argued that the case was out of time in light of separation and that the FIR was delayed; and invoked decisions concerning over-implication of matrimonial relatives. Although the application expressly challenged the FIR rather than also naming later proceedings, counsel sought consequential quashing of proceedings resting upon it. The Court assessed each applicant's role and the distinct objections, and ultimately granted relief only to applicants 3–7.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ravikant Dubey v. State of M.P., 2014 Cr.L.R. (M.P.) 162, was quoted only for a short point about maintainability of a quashing petition even at an advanced trial stage; the present Court did not develop a separate stage-based holding. Counsel invoked Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., (2012) 10 SCC 741, and Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, (2010) 7 SCC 667, to urge particularised allegations against relatives and caution against over-implication. The order does not quote or separately analyse their precise ratio, and those authorities were relied on by counsel in support of those submissions.

Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, was quoted for the danger of implicating every in-law or relation merely because of family connection. Its passage, arising in dowry-death litigation, cautioned that overt acts attributed to persons other than the husband require proof and conjecture cannot establish guilt. The Court used that caution at the present quashing stage to demand a sufficiently identified role, without deciding whether these applicants were guilty under the standard of proof applicable at trial. Monju Roy v. State of West Bengal, (2015) 13 SCC 693, also quoted Kans Raj and distinguished allegations against a husband and close parents from the mere naming of distant relations without tangible role-specific material. Its quoted discussion refers to Raja Lal Singh v. State of Jharkhand and the danger of widening the net, and calls for a pragmatic assessment that neither automatically exonerates everyone nor implicates all relatives. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, 2013 (1) UC 155, was applied for quashing where extremely general allegations, absence of a specific role and surrounding circumstances made continuation against certain relatives an abuse of process. Together these authorities informed the partial quashing of applicants 3–7 on the Court's comparison of the FIR and Section 161 statement.

Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260, was quoted in considering applicant 2. Its discussion of Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, cautioned against summoning distant relatives without role material. Its separate quashing discussion recognized that a court need not try rival factual versions where harassment by husband or parents on the face of a complaint presents triable issues. The present Court used that distinction to leave the mother-in-law's case for trial because the FIR attributed beating and dowry taunts specifically to her. The quoted Taramani passage lists other quashing authorities, including K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa, without developing independent tests from each in the present order.

On the counterblast contention, counsel cited Amit Kumar Shrivastava v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 10842/2014 (25 January 2019). The Court distinguished it: that coordinate-bench order had noted admissions by the complainant and her father before the Family Court which, in that case, were treated as demolishing the cruelty allegation. The present case showed no comparable admissions establishing that no harassment occurred. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was affirmatively applied. The Supreme Court had disapproved a quashing order founded on extraneous matters such as the interval before an FIR and the existence of divorce proceedings, explaining that reconciliation efforts may precede complaint and that pending civil litigation does not itself terminate an independent criminal case. It confined the quashing inquiry to whether the FIR or complaint discloses a prima facie offence, rather than defence material or a presumed motive.

Kamlesh Kalra v. Shilpika Kalra, Criminal Appeal No. 416/2020 (24 April 2020), was invoked by counsel for a time-bar argument following a long separation. The present Court did not reproduce its full reasoning; it addressed the different allegation of expulsion and persisting harm. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was central: the quoted Supreme Court reasoning explains that cruelty in Section 498-A includes mental suffering, and that the psychological distress of being driven from the matrimonial home and fearing return may persist at the parental home after physical acts stop. The present Court extended this reasoning to the allegation that the complainant was forced to stay with her parents for insufficient dowry and treated such pleaded cruelty as continuous for the limitation objection. It also relied on Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla, Criminal Revision No. 2376/2020 (22 June 2021), for the proposition that compelling a married woman to remain in her parental home can constitute cruelty. This was an application on the alleged facts, not proof of every alleged incident.

Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, supplied the broader FIR-delay principle. The Supreme Court recognized the advantages of prompt reporting but said no fixed statutory time exists for lodging an FIR; delay may arise for genuine reasons and its presence is not per se illegality, just as promptness does not guarantee truth. Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, was cited for the specific proposition that delay in registration by itself does not justify quashing. The Judge used both to reserve the plausibility and evidentiary effect of any explanation for trial rather than dismiss the prosecution solely on elapsed time.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent jurisdiction for partial or complete quashing of the FIR and ensuing criminal proceedings. Section 161 CrPC identified the complainant's investigative statement, which the Court found added no individualised allegations against applicants 3–7 beyond the FIR; it was not treated as a final credibility finding. Section 498-A IPC was considered for physical and mental matrimonial cruelty, including the claimed continuing impact of dowry-driven expulsion. Sections 294, 323 and 506 read with Section 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were the offences alleged in the FIR and addressed in the applicant-wise disposition; the order did not independently analyse each offence's elements. Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act described the husband's divorce petition, whose filing was not itself a legal defence to criminal proceedings. The applicants' limitation objection was determined by characterising the alleged cruelty as continuous; the order did not identify and construe a particular CrPC limitation provision or calculate a date-specific limitation period.

4. Issues : First, could an FIR and subsequent proceedings continue against five other relatives when the FIR and Section 161 statement made only general and collective accusations, without an incident or overt act attributable to each? Second, did the separately stated allegations of dowry demand, beating, harassment and expulsion against the husband and mother-in-law require their prosecution to continue at the face-value Section 482 stage? Third, could the filing of a divorce petition before the FIR, without comparable evidence that the cruelty allegations were false, itself establish a counterblast and justify quashing? Fourth, did the alleged dowry-driven expulsion and continuing mental consequences while the complainant lived with her parents answer the asserted limitation bar, notwithstanding cessation of physical acts? Fifth, was FIR delay alone a ground to quash, or did its explanation and impact require trial evidence? The Court did not adjudicate the ultimate truth of the complainant's story, the credibility of every witness, or each charged offence as if conducting a trial.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first separated the applicants by relationship and pleaded role. Applicants 3–7 were brothers-in-law and sisters-in-law or related in-laws against whom the FIR made generic accusations of taunts and harassment. The complainant's Section 161 statement followed the same line rather than giving specific acts. Relying on the caution in Kans Raj, Monju Roy and Chandralekha, the Court held that the prosecution of these five on omnibus allegations would impose the ordeal of trial without adequate individualised material. It quashed Crime No. 177/2021 and resulting proceedings only in their favour. This did not discredit the distinct accusations against the husband or mother-in-law.

For applicant 2, the FIR went beyond mere relationship: it said that the mother-in-law beat the complainant on account of dowry demands and taunted her for bringing less. Taramani Parakh supported the rule that a court exercising Section 482 power does not decide whether triable harassment allegations are ultimately true. For applicant 1, the Court identified allegations of a Rs 10 lakh demand, physical and mental harassment, habitual assault and expulsion from the home. These particularised allegations sufficed to allow the charged prosecution against both to proceed. No evidentiary finding of guilt was made.

The contention that the later FIR was retaliatory because it followed the husband's divorce petition was rejected. Pratibha required the Court to examine the uncontroverted FIR allegations and avoid an inquiry into the accused's defence or reliance on the mere sequence of events. It recognized that reconciliation may explain an interval before complaint and that divorce proceedings are legally independent of criminal prosecution. The Court explained why Amit Kumar Shrivastava was different: specific admissions recorded in the Family Court there were treated as negating cruelty. No equivalent material in this record permitted a conclusion that the present allegations were false merely because the husband had filed a Section 13 petition.

On limitation, the Court addressed whether a woman allegedly compelled to live in her parental home because of insufficient dowry could continue to suffer Section 498-A mental cruelty after leaving the matrimonial home. Rupali Devi's account of persisting trauma, supplemented by Amar Singh, supplied the reason. Accepting the allegation for this procedural purpose, the Court held that dowry-driven exclusion and compelled residence with parents constituted a continuing offence giving a fresh cause of action each day; hence the FIR could not be quashed as time-barred. This was not a ruling that every old matrimonial allegation automatically continues indefinitely, nor a final finding that expulsion occurred. The Kamlesh Kalra citation did not resolve the distinct pleaded continuing-cruelty issue.

The separate objection of delayed FIR also failed as a ground for quashing merely because of delay. Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid establish that delay does not by itself make an FIR illegal or justify rejecting the prosecution's account. The complainant's narrative included hope of compromise and approach to the One Stop Centre. Whether that or other evidence provides a plausible explanation, and what weight should be given to the delay, remain questions for the trial court after evidence is recorded. The Court accordingly left the husband's and mother-in-law's prosecution undisturbed rather than assess the merits through a Section 482 mini-trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for applicant 3 Jitendra @ Jeetlal Nagpure, applicant 4 Krishn Kumar Nagpure, applicant 5 Roshni Nagpure, applicant 6 Nisha Nagpure and applicant 7 Ritu Lilhare. The FIR in Crime No. 177/2021 at Police Station Hatta, District Balaghat, and criminal proceedings arising from it were quashed as to those five persons for the charged IPC and Dowry Prohibition Act provisions. The application was dismissed as to applicant 1 Mahendra Nagpure and applicant 2 Ishwari Bai Nagpure; their prosecution for those offences was permitted to continue. The judgment thereby quashed the consequential criminal proceedings against the successful applicants even though counsel said the application had originally omitted an express prayer for it. It imposed no further conditions, costs or trial timetable and did not acquit anyone or decide guilt.

Mahendra Nagpure and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 18576/2022, 13/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

Headnote :- POCSO Sections 7–8 / breast touching with sexual intent — The child testified that the appellant caught her hand, touched her body and breast, and tried to lead her to a vacant area. Halima Khan saw him taking the child away and intervened by throwing a brick. The school register and Class II mark sheet established that the child was about eight years and seven months old at the occurrence; the doctor recorded abrasions. On this evidence and the quoted definition in Section 7, which covers physical contact without penetration, the High Court held that touching a child's breast with sexual intent is sexual assault. It affirmed conviction under Section 8 POCSO and Section 354 IPC. The Court rejected the asserted false implication and unreliability of related witnesses on the evidence it reviewed.

Section 8 POCSO / statutory range / custody already served — The applicable Section 8 range identified in the judgment was three to five years' imprisonment with liability to fine. The four-year rigorous-imprisonment term was reduced to the period already undergone, comprising more than three years and seven months of actual imprisonment following conviction on 23 November 2015, as well as four days in custody during trial. The one-year Section 354 IPC sentence was maintained. The appeal was partially allowed only as to the POCSO imprisonment; release was directed if the appellant was not required in another offence. This case-specific reduction did not go below the statutory minimum or disturb the convictions.

Precedents — The decision rested on the testimony, corroborating evidence and the text of Sections 7 and 8.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal arose from the judgment and sentence of the 5th Additional Sessions Judge, Morena, in Special Sessions Trial No. 67/2014 dated 23 November 2015. The trial court convicted Mahendra under Section 354 IPC and Section 8 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012. It imposed one year's rigorous imprisonment, Rs 1,000 fine and three months' default imprisonment for Section 354, and four years' rigorous imprisonment, Rs 2,000 fine and six months' default imprisonment for Section 8. The record in the appeal described an incident on 12 October 2014 at about 3 p.m. when a young child was playing outside her house in the locality. The child said the appellant, whom she knew, caught her hand, touched her body and breast, tried to take her inside the wire fencing toward a vacant place, and threw her against thorns. She said a woman on a roof threw a brick toward him; he fled and local people apprehended him. Her mother reported the incident, leading to Crime No. 312/2014 and a later charge-sheet under Section 354 IPC and Sections 7–8 POCSO. The reference to Section 4(a) POCSO at initial registration did not become the conviction under review.

The prosecution examined the child (PW-1), her mother (PW-2), brother (PW-3), eyewitness Halima Khan (PW-4), Rahis Khan (PW-5), the school-record witness Wali Mohammad (PW-6), investigating officer Ashok Verma (PW-7), and examining doctor Dr L.R. Khisaniya (PW-8). The child described breast touching and immediate disclosure to her mother; her mother had not personally witnessed the act. Halima stated she saw the appellant gag the child's mouth and take her toward an empty area, threw a brick and raised the alarm. PW-6 proved the school admission register and Class II mark sheet, both recording the child’s birth date and establishing that she was about eight years and seven months old at the incident. PW-8 documented small abrasions on the cheeks and lower lip and an abrasion across the neck. The appellant called no defence witness. Counsel challenged the witnesses as interested or related and alleged false implication; alternatively, counsel sought a sentence confined to custody served. The State opposed leniency.

2. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC supplied the criminal appeal route against conviction and sentence. Section 7 POCSO defines sexual assault: with sexual intent touching the vagina, penis, anus or breast of a child, making the child touch such a body part of another person, or another act with sexual intent involving physical contact without penetration. The Court quoted and applied the breast-touching limb; it did not find penetration or analyse a penetrative offence. Section 8 POCSO was the provision of conviction and punishment, which the Court stated prescribed a minimum of three years and maximum of five years, together with liability to fine, on the law it applied. Section 354 IPC was a concurrent conviction and sentence maintained in the appeal. Section 164 CrPC was mentioned only because the child's statement had been recorded; the order did not develop a rule on Section 164 procedure or the evidentiary status of that statement. The school documents were used to establish the child's birth date. The initial police registration's Section 4(a) reference does not change the charged and adjudicated Sections 7–8 offence.

3. Issues : Did the testimony and surrounding evidence prove touching of a child's breast with sexual intent, bringing the act within Section 7 and sustaining conviction under Section 8 POCSO along with Section 354 IPC despite the claimed unreliability or false implication? If the convictions stood, could the four-year Section 8 prison term be reduced to the period already undergone where actual custody exceeded the identified statutory three-year minimum? How would that modification affect the separate Section 354 sentence and release direction? The Court did not decide a general rule on mandatory corroboration of child testimony, a penetrative-assault allegation, or an entitlement to a below-minimum POCSO sentence.

4. Ratio / Findings : The Judge reviewed the child's specific account that the known appellant grasped her hand, touched her breast and attempted to take her away. Her immediate report to her mother, Halima's intervention when she saw the attempted movement to an empty place, the school records showing the child's age and the recorded abrasions were assessed with that account. Halima's testimony supported the attempted taking of the child and the intervention that interrupted it; it did not provide an eyewitness account of every physical contact described by the child. The mother's evidence included the child's prompt account rather than a claim that the mother had watched the incident. The Judge found the witnesses' evidence sufficient and did not accept the allegation that their relationship or interest established false implication. Quoting Section 7, the Court held that touching a child's breast with sexual intent falls within the non-penetrative sexual-assault definition. It affirmed guilt under Section 8 POCSO and Section 354 IPC.

On sentence, the appellant had remained jailed from the 23 November 2015 conviction after bail was refused and had also spent four days in custody during trial. At the 9 August 2019 decision he had completed more than three years and seven months' actual imprisonment. The Court expressly identified the Section 8 minimum of three years and maximum of five years. Because actual custody had already passed the minimum, it reduced the original four-year rigorous-imprisonment term for Section 8 to the period undergone. It kept the Section 354 sentence in place. The stated reasoning was tied to this custody record and did not authorise a sentence below the minimum or reopen the finding of guilt. The judgment did not separately vary the recorded fines or default stipulations; its expressed modification concerned the Section 8 imprisonment.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partially allowed the appeal. The trial judgment and convictions under Section 354 IPC and Section 8 POCSO were affirmed. The four-year rigorous-imprisonment sentence under Section 8 was reduced to time already undergone, more than three years and seven months, while the Section 354 sentence was maintained. The Court directed the jailed appellant's immediate release if he was not required in another offence. No acquittal, new trial or other condition was ordered; the judgment did not expressly modify the fines or default terms.

Headnote :- Sole eyewitness / related witness / murder conviction — A witness's relationship to the victim is no ground by itself to discard her testimony; the testimony of a single competent and honest witness may suffice if it is of sterling quality, with quality rather than number controlling. The Court cited Sukhdeep Singh v. State of U.P., (2010) 2 SCC 177, Ram Bilas Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2002) 2 SCC 131, and Ashok Kumar Pandey v. State of Delhi, (2002) 4 SCC 76, for the related-witness principle and applied Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793, for a reliable single eyewitness and prudential corroboration. Applying the caution in Karunakaran v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1976) 1 SCC 434, and the analogous facts in Jagdish Prasad v. State of M.P., AIR 1994 SC 1251, the Court closely examined Poonam's account after she exculpated Bhanu, whom she had earlier placed at the incident. Her conflicting explanations for being there, altered claim concerning her mother's presence, and her account of being kicked and falling without a corresponding injury affected truthfulness rather than mere memory. The mother could not supply independent eyewitness corroboration given her initial account indicating that she had not witnessed the incident. No reliable independent support cured the defects, so the Section 302 IPC conviction was set aside. The decision does not prescribe corroboration for every related or sole eyewitness.

Forensic human-blood evidence / continuity and cross-examination — Though the FSL report recorded human blood on the seized jeans and jacket, the investigating officer did not testify about safe custody or sealed transfer. Transmission and laboratory documents were marked in evidence only after prosecution evidence closed; the appellant had no chance to cross-examine him on continuity and seal integrity. The Court declined to give the report disproportionate corroborative weight. It also found the stated eve-teasing history too indefinite to establish a murder motive by itself. With the eyewitness account unreliable and no sufficient corroboration, the appeal was allowed, the life sentence and conviction were set aside, release ordered, and any deposited fine directed to be refunded.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 4 December 2014 around 6 p.m., Pooja was fatally struck near her home at Mandi Bamora. Her younger sister Poonam alias Chandni (PW-1) alleged that Mahendra and companions abused and restrained them, kicked her, and that Mahendra repeatedly struck Pooja with an axe around the neck. She reported alleged prior eve-teasing and told her family; a Dehati Nalishi, Ex. P/1, was recorded that evening at 7:10 p.m. Police registered an FIR, investigated, seized articles, obtained a post-mortem and forensic documents, and filed a charge-sheet. Three people stood trial for Sections 294, 323 (with Section 34), and 302 (with Section 34) IPC. The Second Additional Sessions Judge, Camp Kurwai, Vidisha, in Sessions Trial No. 80/2015 on 18 October 2019 convicted only Mahendra under Section 302 IPC, imposing life imprisonment, a Rs 1,000 fine and six months' additional imprisonment in default. The other tried persons were not convicted. This judgment addressed Mahendra's jail appeal through legal aid; although his appeal petition stated no grounds, counsel challenged credibility and the lack of independent corroboration at the final hearing.

The prosecution relied on Poonam as its sole direct eyewitness. Her trial narrative placed herself and Pooja returning from school and shopping, but in cross-examination she said that she did not attend school that day or accompany Pooja for shopping and was travelling alone on an errand. The prompt Dehati Nalishi described her relating the incident to her parents and relatives, whereas she later said her mother had been present. She said Mahendra kicked and felled her; her MLC, Ex. P/13, and Dr B.L. Nagesh (PW-5) showed no detected injury. During cross-examination she also denied Bhanu's presence though her examination-in-chief had placed him with Mahendra and others. The mother, Meenabai (PW-3), described herself at trial as an eyewitness, although her police statement indicated that she had been absent from the scene and knew of the incident only from others; the father Khuman Singh (PW-2) too was said to have exculpated one accused. The defence also challenged seizure evidence, including a hostile seizure witness. The State urged that Poonam's direct testimony and a positive forensic result proved repeated axe blows and warranted affirmance. These are the parties' positions and disputed evidence, distinct from the appellate Court's findings.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court cited Sukhdeep Singh v. State of U.P., (2010) 2 SCC 177; Ram Bilas Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2002) 2 SCC 131; and Ashok Kumar Pandey v. State of Delhi, (2002) 4 SCC 76, for the proposition that a witness's relationship to the victim is irrelevant if her testimony inspires confidence and is free of material contradictions. The Court cited those decisions for that principle without separately discussing their facts or distinct ratios. It then quoted Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade v. State of Maharashtra, (1973) 2 SCC 793, for the rule that even one competent, honest eyewitness of sterling quality can establish guilt; corroboration is ordinarily sought as prudence and the quality of evidence matters more than the count of witnesses. The Court applied this standard by examining whether Poonam's presence, consistency and reliability warranted reliance without other support. Neither her relationship to the victim nor the fact that she was the sole eyewitness was treated as fatal by itself.

Karunakaran v. State of Tamil Nadu, (1976) 1 SCC 434, was explained as a caution where a sole eyewitness's account is rejected for a co-accused: relying on the uncorroborated testimony of the same person to convict another demands close scrutiny, especially where the witness's earliest FIR account and later testimony diverge. The Court applied that concern because Poonam initially placed Bhanu among the assailants but later denied his presence without explanation. The judgment did not purport to establish an absolute rule that any co-accused acquittal automatically acquits all. Counsel invoked Jagdish Prasad v. State of M.P., AIR 1994 SC 1251. The Court expressly discussed its rule that an uncorroborated single witness may suffice only if entirely reliable, while doubtful evidence calls for sufficient corroboration; in that decision the sole eyewitness named several accused yet deliberately omitted one at trial, making his testimony unsafe and leading to acquittal. The present Court applied that analogy to Poonam's changed account concerning Bhanu and the further weaknesses in her natural presence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC was the murder conviction and life sentence under appellate review. Sections 294, 323 (alternatively 323/34), and 302 (alternatively 302/34) formed part of the trial accusation against three persons, but the appellate judgment did not separately construe their ingredients or decide a fresh common-intention issue. The Court assessed whether admissible and reliable prosecution proof sustained the appellant's Section 302 conviction beyond reasonable doubt; it cited no particular Evidence Act section for the sole-witness rule, recovery, forensic admissibility or chain of custody. The Dehati Nalishi, MLC, seizure memo, transmission papers and FSL report were evidence considered, not independently interpreted statutory provisions. The appeal was a criminal appeal from conviction, but the judgment did not identify a specific appellate provision.

4. Issues : First, could the Section 302 conviction rest on the only direct eyewitness, the victim's sister, where her accounts of school, shopping, route, mother's presence, her own assault and Bhanu's role materially shifted? The contest was between the State's reliance on direct evidence and the defence's insistence that the contradictions affected natural presence and truthfulness, beyond ordinary lapses of memory. Second, could the mother’s later claim to be an eyewitness and other evidence reliably corroborate Poonam’s account, which was no longer of sterling quality, when no other bystander was produced despite the incident having occurred beside a public road in an inhabited locality? Third, what probative support could be drawn from a positive human-blood FSL report when the investigating officer did not prove safe custody and sealed transit and the transmission documents were marked after the defence lost an opportunity to cross-examine him? Fourth, did an indefinite eve-teasing history independently provide a sufficiently reliable motive to complete proof? The Court did not determine who actually killed Pooja, declare the FSL result fabricated, or decide the culpability of an acquitted co-accused in this appeal.
