Case-note :- 1. Facts : Parimal Singh Gurjar filed an application under Section 482 CrPC concerning Crime 326/2021 at Police Station Civil Line, District Morena. He said the police had registered the case on his complaint under IPC Sections 307, 294 and 34 but had taken no further effective action, including no arrest of the accused. The prayer reproduced in paragraph 3 sought arrest of the absconding accused, completion of investigation in that crime and presentation of a charge sheet before the trial court. The State was represented. The case reached the High Court while investigation remained pending, before a police final report or any guilt determination. The Court considered the proposed arrest direction, the boundary of its inherent power over an ongoing investigation and the separate statutory obligation to complete the investigation without undue delay.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted at length and applied. In the quoted Supreme Court case a High Court had, without giving adequate reasons or hearing the accused persons, directed police to record witnesses, arrest, seize property and file a charge sheet. The Supreme Court held that investigation is a statutory police duty and that courts normally may not dictate its manner or outcome. An investigation need not produce arrest, seizure or prosecution; it may lawfully lead to a finding that no case is made out. Section 482 CrPC is confined to securing the ends of justice, giving effect to an order under the Code or preventing abuse of court process and requires sparing, careful use. The present Court used those principles to decline an arrest direction and to avoid compelling a charge sheet. Within D. Venkatasubramaniam's quoted reasoning, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, construes Section 41 CrPC as discretionary even for cognizable offences: officers must consider whether arrest is necessary during the investigation, mindful of personal liberty, reputation, the allegation and the accused's circumstances, instead of arresting automatically when an FIR is lodged. This principle was directly relevant to the applicant's requested arrest. The quoted Supreme Court passage also relies on Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, for a reasonable opportunity to be heard before a judicial direction for investigation likely to affect a person's reputation; D. Venkatasubramaniam treated the unreasoned order made there without hearing the affected persons as unsustainable. The present Court did not itself issue such an adverse direction or make a separate factual hearing determination about the accused.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC supplied the inherent jurisdiction invoked by the applicant, but the Court held that it could not use that power to supervise and dictate police arrest or filing of a charge sheet on this complaint. The D. Venkatasubramaniam quotation explains its limited statutory purposes and cautious exercise. Section 41 CrPC, discussed through M.C. Abraham within the adopted Supreme Court reasoning, makes arrest without warrant a discretionary police power in specified cognizable situations, subject to a careful assessment of necessity rather than an automatic consequence of an FIR. Section 173(1) CrPC expressly requires every investigation under the relevant chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay. It allows an instruction to finish the inquiry and submit a lawful final report after the officer assesses whether an offence is made out; it does not prescribe closure or charge sheet in advance. IPC Sections 307, 294 and 34 identify the registered allegations and were not interpreted on their merits.

4. Issues : (i) Could the High Court, on the informant's Section 482 application after registration of a cognizable crime, compel police to arrest the persons named in the FIR or predetermine the investigative steps and charge-sheet outcome? The applicant relied on the alleged lack of progress; the countervailing legal issue was the statutory independence and discretion of investigation. (ii) Despite that limit, what relief follows from Section 173(1)'s command that an investigation be completed without unnecessary delay, and can a grievance still be placed before the Superintendent of Police? The Court did not decide whether the alleged offences were proved, whether a particular suspect should ultimately be arrested, or whether the final police report should be a charge sheet or a closure report.

5. Ratio / Findings : On the first issue, the Court expressly declined the requested arrest direction. It adopted D. Venkatasubramaniam's analysis that police must investigate according to law but the High Court ordinarily must not guide the manner of inquiry by imposing arrest, seizure and a charge sheet. M.C. Abraham, quoted within that authority, explains why an officer may arrest in appropriate Section 41 circumstances but is not bound to do so mechanically on registration of a cognizable offence; coercive arrest affects liberty, status and reputation and calls for discretion exercised in light of the investigation. D. Venkatasubramaniam also states that Section 482's inherent power is limited and that sweeping and unreasoned directions about investigation can have serious consequences for persons who have not been heard, drawing on Divine Retreat Centre. The present Court concluded that ordering both arrest and filing a charge sheet would amount to supervising the investigation. It did not hold that police could never arrest or that no case existed.

On the second issue, the Court separately quoted Section 173(1) and applied its requirement that investigation be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer cannot leave an FIR pending indefinitely. The officer must decide, based on the lawful investigation, whether an offence is made out and submit the appropriate final report, whether closure or charge sheet, as early as possible. The Court accordingly directed early completion and necessary steps under law, preserving police discretion on evidence and final outcome rather than ordering a specific arrest or prosecution. It also permitted the applicant to submit an application setting out his grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Morena, to be considered according to law. The Supreme Court's caution about orders affecting suspects who have not been heard forms part of the reasoning in D. Venkatasubramaniam applied here; no such coercive direction was made in this case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has finally disposed of the Section 482 application. No arrest, seizure or charge sheet was ordered. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the pending investigation as early as possible and take steps required by law, including a lawful final report after determining whether an offence was made out. The applicant could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Morena, about any grievance, and that application would be considered according to law. The Court fixed no numerical deadline and made no finding of guilt or of the proper content of the police report.

Parimal Singh Gurjar v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 402/2022, 06/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (608) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR refusal / statutory route - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police's duty to register an FIR upon cognizable information from the procedure to enforce the duty when police fail. It applied All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh, (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari, (2006) 4 SCC 359, to direct aggrieved informants to Magistrate complaint remedies under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC; it distinguished Ramesh Kumari, (2006) 2 SCC 677, and Lallan Chaudhary, (2006) 12 SCC 229, which concerned the police duty rather than the remedy available when police fail to act. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, additionally prescribes written recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and then an application under Section 156(3) before a Magistrate who, on being properly satisfied, may direct FIR registration, proper investigation and monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed that route, including the possible recommendation of a change of investigating officer, while the Magistrate cannot personally investigate. Applying these propositions to a Section 528 BNSS request about police inaction, the High Court declined to direct registration and did not determine the complaint's merits.

Magistrate complaint / exceptional High Court intervention - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, applying Gangadhar and AIIMS Employees' Union, explains that an informant may present a complaint under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC; depending on the initial material and inquiry, a Magistrate may seek police investigation, issue process or dismiss it. Its quoted Article 226 exception concerns rare cases of clearly established mala fide investigation, abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII of the Code, and even then a High Court may insist on observance of the prescribed procedure but cannot dictate how the police investigate. The Court also considered its Division Bench's Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. (W.A. 247/2016, 20 December 2016), which recognises alternative remedies subject to exceptional writ cases under Whirlpool Corporation, (1998) 8 SCC 1, and distinguishes Lalita Kumari, (2014) 2 SCC 1, on FIR duty from writ entitlement. Those writ discussions supplied limits and context; the present matter was under Section 528 BNSS. The application was dismissed with liberty to file before a Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS, without deciding the allegations of misconduct.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Parmal Singh Rawat applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023 (BNSS). His prayer sought a direction to respondents 1 and 2 to take affirmative steps on his representation against respondent 3, Arun Singh Jadoun, a traffic subedar, and respondent 4, Ranveer Singh Yadav, in charge of Traffic Police Station Shivpuri. Counsel asserted that no FIR had been registered despite his complaint. The State responded that police inaction could be pursued before the Magistrate. The Court framed the question as whether a direct application for a police FIR direction could be maintained in this procedural setting, considered the established statutory alternatives and finally dismissed the application with liberty to approach the Magistrate.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee and Others v. Union of India and Others, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted for both the substantive duty to register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence and the distinct remedy when police fail. It accepted the Magistrate complaint route in Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. Its discussion follows All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union (Regd.) v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh, (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari, (2006) 4 SCC 359. Aleque Padamsee treated Ramesh Kumari, (2006) 2 SCC 677, and Lallan Chaudhary, (2006) 12 SCC 229, as addressing the police's required response to cognizable information, rather than contradicting the procedure of making a complaint before the Magistrate; the present Court reproduced and relied on that distinction.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and Others, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted for a limited Article 226 exception in a rare case of clearly established mala fide investigation, abuse and noncompliance with criminal procedure, while prohibiting a court from dictating the investigation's method even there. The cited passage follows Gangadhar and AIIMS Employees' Union: an aggrieved informant may complain under Sections 190 and 200; after Chapter XV inquiry, a Magistrate can direct investigation and report if a prima facie case appears, dismiss the complaint under Section 203 if no offence appears, or take cognizance and issue process. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was applied for sequential recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and, if unsatisfactory, the Magistrate under Section 156(3), who may order registration or proper investigation and monitor it. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed Sakiri Vasu and the Magistrate's discretion to recommend a change of officer, while making clear that the Magistrate cannot personally investigate. The High Court applied these authorities and left the applicant to pursue the proper statutory forum instead of issuing a direct order for FIR registration.

The Court quoted its Division Bench decision Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. and Others (Writ Appeal 247/2016, 20 December 2016): a writ of mandamus for FIR registration may be denied where Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 CrPC have not been pursued, subject to the four established Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, alternative-remedy exceptions. The quoted Shweta holding also distinguishes Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1: its police FIR duty does not decide entitlement to an immediate writ without pursuing the alternative remedies. Whirlpool and Lalita Kumari appear through the quoted High Court precedent.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was the inherent-jurisdiction provision invoked by the applicant in 2025. The Supreme Court and Division Bench precedents quoted the earlier CrPC provisions in Sections 154 (registration), 154(3) (written approach to superior police officers), 156(3) (Magistrate-directed registration/investigation and monitoring), 190 and 200 (Magistrate cognizance and complaint procedure), and 203 (dismissal of complaint if no sufficient basis); these were discussed in their original statutory contexts. In the operative direction the Court itself stated the available complaint route as Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS. Article 226 was discussed through Divine Retreat and Shweta for the limits and possible exceptional writ route; the present application remained a Section 528 BNSS proceeding. No substantive offence section or sanction question was adjudicated.

4. Issues : (i) On the applicant's assertion of an unregistered complaint against traffic officers, did the police's duty to register an FIR on information disclosing a cognizable offence justify a direct High Court direction on this Section 528 BNSS application, or should the applicant use the mechanisms described by the Supreme Court for recourse to superior police officers and the Magistrate? (ii) What distinct complaint remedy could the applicant use before the Magistrate, and did the quoted narrow possibility of extraordinary Article 226 intervention or the general FIR duty alter the disposition on the facts supplied? The Court did not decide the alleged officers' conduct, whether a cognizable offence was actually disclosed, or how a future Magistrate should rule on a complaint.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted Aleque Padamsee's distinction between the police duty and the method of seeking redress for police inaction. Cognizable information must be recorded, but failure to do so does not in ordinary circumstances require the High Court to issue an original registration direction. Aleque Padamsee resolved the apparent tension with Ramesh Kumari by explaining that the latter deals with the police obligation, whereas the former's related line of cases addresses the procedure available to the complainant. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe set out sequential recourse under Section 154(3) and then Section 156(3) CrPC: a Magistrate can order FIR registration and proper investigation after the required initial satisfaction, monitor progress and, where necessary, recommend a new officer, but cannot conduct the police investigation. Divine Retreat and Gangadhar explain the Sections 190/200 complaint route, where the Magistrate examines the material and may direct inquiry, issue process or reject a meritless complaint. The exceptional Article 226 discussion in Divine Retreat does not authorise routine judicial directions about the manner of investigation, and Shweta Bhadauria reserves established exceptions to the alternative-remedy rule while distinguishing Lalita Kumari's substantive police-duty holding. The High Court dismissed the Section 528 application and left the Magistrate remedy open without deciding the matter in advance.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the application. Parmal Singh Rawat retained express liberty, if he wished, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS for redress. The Court did not order registration of an FIR, prescribe action against respondents 3 and 4, direct police investigation, or decide the merits of the representation.

Parmal Singh Rawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 11480/2025, 07/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (609) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act / Section 138 / compromise in revision - A voluntary compromise after conviction and appellate affirmance was verified by the Principal Registrar; the reported payment comprised ₹1,55,000 to the complainant and ₹25,000 said to have been deposited earlier, the latter to be paid if the deposit had not occurred. Applying Damodar S. Prabhu v. Sayed Babalal H., (2010) 5 SCC 663, the Court imposed a compounding cost of 15% of the cheque amount for a compromise in Sessions Court or High Court appeal/revision. The Supreme Court's quoted graduated guideline permits no cost at the first or second Magistrate hearing, 10% for later Magistrate compounding, 15% at Sessions/High Court appeal or revision and 20% at the Supreme Court. Subject to the 15% deposit, the trial and appellate judgments concerning the Section 138 conviction were set aside and the applicant was acquitted. The trial court could issue a release order only after production of the original deposit receipt with an attested copy; release was also subject to his not being required in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Parmanand had been convicted by the Judicial Magistrate First Class, Ratlam, in SC NIA 1401717/2013 on 23 July 2016 for Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. The First Additional Sessions Judge, Ratlam, affirmed in Criminal Appeal 2400149/2015 on 9 September 2021, with a sentence described as one year's rigorous imprisonment and a ₹2,00,000 fine. He did not surrender after the appellate judgment; he was arrested on 17 May 2024 and jailed. On 30 May 2024 he brought this revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC with a delay-condonation application. The respondent did not oppose condonation, which the Court allowed. The parties then moved compromise application IA 12897/2024, reporting ₹1,55,000 paid to complainant Sushil Munat and another ₹25,000 deposited under a lower-court order, for a stated ₹1,80,000 total. They agreed that if the ₹25,000 had not in fact been deposited it would be paid to the complainant. By an order of 4 September 2024 the Court referred them to the Principal Registrar. The applicant appeared before the Registrar by video connection, and the respondent also appeared. The Registrar inquired into voluntariness and reported that the settlement was free of undue influence, force or coercion. Applicant's counsel said he was prepared to pay the 15% compounding cost prescribed at this stage by Damodar S. Prabhu. The Court assessed the compromise and the cost before disposing of the revision.

2. Precedents — Considered : Damodar S. Prabhu v. Sayed Babalal H., (2010) 5 SCC 663, was expressly invoked, quoted and applied. Its graduated compounding guidelines for cheque dishonour cases seek early settlement and attach increasing costs according to the forum and stage: an application at the first or second hearing before the Magistrate may be allowed without cost; a subsequent Magistrate application carries 10% of the cheque amount, deposited with the Legal Services Authority or another designated authority as provided in the guideline; compounding before the Sessions Court or High Court in appeal or revision carries 15%; and an application before the Supreme Court carries 20%. This was a High Court revision after trial and appellate conviction, so the Court applied the 15% tier rather than the no-cost or 10% tiers. The Registrar's verification of voluntary consent supplied a factual safeguard in this case.

3. Statutes considered : Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act was the offence of conviction. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC supplied criminal revisional jurisdiction over the conviction and appellate judgment. The condition applicable at this stage was taken from Damodar S. Prabhu. The ₹2,00,000 fine formed part of the sentence for the Section 138 conviction, distinct from the 15% cheque-amount compounding cost; the order does not state the cheque amount or equate those figures.

4. Issues : After an affirmed Section 138 conviction and delayed revision filed following arrest, had the parties made a genuine voluntary settlement that could support compounding at the High Court revision stage? If so, which cost under the staged guidelines in Damodar S. Prabhu applied, and how should the conviction, acquittal and release direction be framed while ensuring proof of the deposit and addressing the possibly unpaid ₹25,000? The delay application was unopposed and allowed, without any separate contested question of legal principle.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Principal Registrar's inquiry established that both parties voluntarily entered the settlement without pressure, duress or coercion. The Court accepted that verified compromise and allowed IA 12897/2024. It then reproduced Damodar S. Prabhu's graded framework and selected the tier requiring 15% of the cheque amount because compounding arose in a High Court revision after conviction and appeal, not at the first two Magistrate hearings or later before the Magistrate. This was a specific application of the Supreme Court's stage distinction, with proof of deposit still required. The parties' account of payment remained conditional as to ₹25,000: if not deposited earlier, the applicant was to pay it to the complainant. Subject to deposit of the compounding cost in this case, the Court set aside the two judgments of conviction and acquitted the applicant. It conditioned the trial court's release order on seeing the original deposit receipt with an attested copy, preserving verification of compliance rather than assuming payment. The order did not state the cheque amount or quantify the 15% cost, and made no separate determination about refund of the prior fine.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has condoned the delay on the unopposed application and allowed the compromise application. The criminal revision was allowed. Subject to the applicant's deposit of 15% of the cheque amount as compounding fee/cost, the 9 September 2021 appellate judgment and 23 July 2016 trial conviction were set aside and he was acquitted of the charge. He had to produce the receipt before the trial court; the trial court was to issue a release order only after the original receipt and its attested copy were produced. He could be released if not required in another case. If the stated ₹25,000 earlier deposit had not occurred, it remained payable to the complainant.

Parmanand v. Sushil Munat, Cr.R. no. 2771/2024, 11/09/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (610) Prev Next

Headnote :- Related witnesses / oral dying declarations - Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, explained that a related witness may also be interested and, particularly where hostility exists, requires discerning scrutiny as a matter of prudence rather than automatic exclusion; it discussed Basawan Singh, Dalip Singh and Darya Singh. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, and Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, require careful credibility assessment, while allowing intrinsically reliable interested testimony without invariably requiring independent corroboration. Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, and Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, reject discrediting testimony solely on the ground of kinship, distinguish benefit or false-implication motive from natural relationship and require cogent and consistent evidence. The Court tested the wife, mother and father's accounts of Pratipal naming Bhura and found them reliable, while recognising that they had not implicated Munna, whose acquittal was unchallenged. Ambika Prasad v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2000) 2 SCC 646, quoting Anil Singh, supported rejecting an objection based merely on the absence of independent neighbours, provided the other evidence was acceptable.

Dying declaration / fitness and freedom from tutoring - P.V. Radhakrishna v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 6 SCC 443, citing the Constitution Bench in Laxman, and Ravikumar v. State of T.N., (2006) 9 SCC 240, make actual capacity and the recorder's satisfaction central; lack of a particular medical certification is not by itself fatal where fitness is proved, though available medical opinion is a sound safeguard. Here the Naib-Tahsildar obtained Dr Harishchandra's certificates before and after the 3:20 –3:40 p.m. recording, both testified to Pratipal's speech and fitness, and relatives were excluded; no tutoring was shown. The Court accepted Ex. P.6 as voluntary and made by a mentally fit declarant.

Dying declaration / custody, oral support and sufficiency - The recorder sent Ex. P.6 sealed to the CJM at Jhansi; the investigator recovered the sealed envelope there and deposited it with the JMFC at Karera. That chain defeated the delayed-production objection; immediate oral declarations to the wife, mother and father corroborated the written account. The synthesis of Paniben in P.V. Radhakrishna and the decisions in Ravikumar, Laltu Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2019) 15 SCC 344, and Ramilaben Hasmukhbhai Khristi v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 7 SCC 56, permit conviction solely on a true, voluntary declaration made by a competent declarant, but require caution for tutoring, inconsistent or suspicious accounts; corroboration is not an inflexible legal precondition. Ramakant Mishra v. State of U.P., (2015) 8 SCC 299, treats Section 32(1)

Evidence Act as encompassing cause and circumstances of the death transaction, without an absolute rule requiring death within hours or the declarant's specific expectation of death; genuineness remains decisive. The Court applied those tests to Ex. P.6 naming Bhura and relied additionally on the consistent oral statements, not a presumption that every written declaration is truthful.

Section 302 versus Section 304 / deliberate burning - Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, adopting Dhirendra Kumar's contextual factors including provocation, premeditation, prior enmity, force, undue advantage and cruel or unusual manner, was applied to reject the sudden-fight conversion plea. Pouring kerosene and burning Pratipal alive was found cruel and involved undue advantage. Khokan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2021) 3 SCC 365, rejected any automatic proposition that death by septicaemia entails Section 304 Part I, and on its own facts involved an unpremeditated sudden quarrel and a different assault; the Court declined to extend that Exception 4 outcome to this deliberate burning.

Homicide causation / subsequent septicaemia - Dr Yadav attributed death to septicemic shock caused by ante-mortem burns. State of Rajasthan v. Arjun Singh, (2011) 9 SCC 115, Munnawar v. State of U.P., (2010) 5 SCC 451, Antram v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 13 SCC 356, and Jagtar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1999) 2 SCC 174, were materially applied: later infection and speculation that better treatment might have saved the victim do not displace an injury-caused death where the original injuries are ordinarily sufficient and causal connection remains proved. Antram expressly invokes Explanation 2 to Section 299 IPC, which deems the person who inflicted the bodily injury to cause death even if proper remedies could have prevented it. The Court held Bhura's intentional burning to be the cause, affirmed Section 302 and life imprisonment, and dismissed the appeal; Munna's earlier acquittal remained undisturbed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Additional Sessions Judge, Karera, convicted Parmeshwar Das (called Bhura in the witness account) in Sessions Trial 85/2010 on 11 February 2011 under Section 302 IPC, sentencing him to life imprisonment, a ₹500 fine and three months' default rigorous imprisonment. Co-accused Munna, tried under Section 302 or alternatively 302/34, was acquitted; the State did not challenge that acquittal. The prosecution alleged that on 10 December 2009 a dispute concerning opening a door led Bhura to pour kerosene on Pratipal and set him alight. Pratipal was taken to a Jhansi hospital and died on 15 December during treatment. Dr D.K. Yadav recorded ante-mortem burns affecting limbs, abdomen, pelvis, thighs, genitalia and legs and attributed death to septicemic shock from those injuries. Pratipal's wife Meena Bai testified that Bhura took him away and that after hearing cries she found him burning in the street, with Bhura nearby; Pratipal named Bhura to her. His mother Kapoori Bai and father Ram Prasad gave oral dying-declaration accounts; neither the wife nor mother supported the accusation against Munna, and Kallu did not support the prosecution. A Naib-Tahsildar, Subodhmani Sharma, recorded Pratipal's written declaration at Jhansi from 3:20 to 3:40 p.m., with separate medical fitness assessments by Dr Harishchandra before and after recording, and stated he excluded the relatives from the ward. In Ex. P.6 Pratipal described an invitation to a chicken meal, a prior quarrel and Bhura's pouring of kerosene and ignition. The recorder sent the declaration sealed to the CJM Jhansi; the investigating officer later collected the sealed cover and lodged it at the JMFC Karera. Investigation included the scene map but did not seize burnt clothing or the kerosene container. Bhura's Section 374 CrPC appeal challenged fitness, safe custody, belated production and reliability of related oral witnesses; alternatively he sought Section 304 Part I for a supposedly sudden trivial altercation. He also suggested the death from septicemia resulted from medical negligence. The State defended the conviction. These positions remained distinct from the unappealed acquittal of Munna.

2. Precedents — Considered : On related witnesses, Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, quoted the Constitution Bench in State of Bihar v. Basawan Singh to resist an overbroad proposition that a natural witness can never be interested, and discussed Dalip Singh, Darya Singh, Waman and Sarwan Singh: relationship and even interest do not automatically invalidate evidence, but shared hostility may call for a higher degree of discerning scrutiny, including possible corroboration where appropriate, as a prudential assessment rather than universal rule. Its description of a deceased's wife as interested differs from the formulation in Mohd. Rojali Ali, (2019) 19 SCC 567, distinguishing natural kinship from an actual benefit or motive to falsely implicate. Both require scrutiny of the evidence rather than its mechanical exclusion. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, quoted Dalip Singh and Hari Obula Reddy: reliable interested testimony may itself sustain conviction, while suspicious evidence or a proven motive for false implication may require material corroboration. Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, surveyed Dalip Singh, Piara Singh, Hari Obula Reddy and Ramashish Rai and concluded that truthful, cogent testimony from relatives is not discredited by kinship alone, while enmity is capable of motivating offence or false charge. Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, and Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, likewise resist distrust solely because witnesses are close family. Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, with reproduced Dalip Singh and Masalti principles, calls for a factual foundation to assert false implication and cautious appraisal. Mohd. Rojali Ali, drawing on Kalki, Ganapathi and Jayabalan, distinguishes mere relationship from a benefit in the litigation or a hostile motive and tests consistency and inherent probability. Ambika Prasad v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2000) 2 SCC 646, reproduced State of U.P. v. Anil Singh on public reluctance to testify and the absence of any mechanical independent-bystander requirement where examined evidence is otherwise acceptable. The Court accepted the three relatives' specific oral reports of Bhura's act, but not an accusation against acquitted Munna.

P.V. Radhakrishna v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 6 SCC 443, quoted Laxman v. State of Maharashtra and Rambai on mental fitness: the record and the doctor's testimony can prove a conscious, fit declarant, and the recorder's satisfaction about fitness may suffice even without a doctor's formulaic certificate. Ravikumar v. State of T.N., (2006) 9 SCC 240, discussed Section 32(1) Evidence Act as a hearsay exception and required caution about tutoring, imagination, opportunity to identify and mental condition; its discussion of Kanchy Komuramma and Laxman treated available doctor opinion as an important safeguard while not invalidating all otherwise proved declarations lacking a certificate. The Court had stronger direct evidence here: the doctor certified before and after the recording and the officer verified conscious speech and excluded family. P.V. Radhakrishna's Paniben synthesis was quoted again on a declaration as a sole basis: truth, voluntariness, capacity, identification opportunity and freedom from suspicious infirmity must inspire full confidence, with corroboration prudent for a suspect declaration but no absolute corroboration rule. Its quoted catalogue referred to Munnu Raja, Ram Sagar Yadav, Ramawati Devi, K. Ramachandra Reddy, Rasheed Beg, Kake Singh, Ram Manorath, Krishnamurti Laxmipati Naidu, Surajdeo Ojha, Nanhau Ram, Madan Mohan and Mohanlal Gangaram Gehani for particular reliability cautions. Laltu Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2019) 15 SCC 344, applied the same reliable-declaration principle with corroborating witnesses. Ramilaben Hasmukhbhai Khristi v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 7 SCC 56, stressed substance and trustworthiness over technical recording form, though ordinary Executive Magistrate and medical safeguards were described. Ramakant Mishra v. State of U.P., (2015) 8 SCC 299, explained that Section 32(1)'s cause-of-death transaction is broader than a rigid common-law imminent-death conception: written or oral statements and other reliable communication can qualify, with authenticity, fitness and the declarant's state of mind still material; there is no fixed number of hours or days before death. The Court used this group to accept Ex. P.6 and its oral corroboration rather than treating either as automatically sufficient.

Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, quoted Dhirendra Kumar's contextual Section 302/304 factors: setting, weapon source, target, force, participation in fight, previous enmity, provocation, heat of passion, undue advantage and cruelty. The Court applied the cruelty and undue-advantage limits to reject conversion for a kerosene burning. State of Rajasthan v. Arjun Singh, (2011) 9 SCC 115, found death from septicemia after ordinarily fatal gunshot injury compatible with murder; Munnawar v. State of U.P., (2010) 5 SCC 451, rejected speculation that allegedly deficient treatment, rather than serious close-range injuries, caused infection and death. Antram v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 13 SCC 356, quoted State of Haryana v. Pala and Sudershan Kumar and, materially, Explanation 2 to Section 299 IPC: the person who inflicted the bodily injury remains responsible for causing death even if skillful care could have averted death. Jagtar Singh v. State of Punjab, (1999) 2 SCC 174, accepted causation from a fatal head injury despite death 16 days later from infection, with a quoted reminder that Section 300 murder still needs an applicable clause unless an exception applies. Khokan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2021) 3 SCC 365, expressly rejected a categorical rule converting all septicemia deaths into Section 304 Part I and, on its distinct facts of a sudden unpremeditated quarrel without a carried weapon, applied Exception 4; the High Court declined to equate deliberate burning with that case.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the conviction appeal. IPC Section 302 was the affirmed offence; the alternative Section 302/34 charge reflected the original allegation involving Bhura and Munna, but Munna was acquitted and his acquittal unchallenged, so no vicarious guilt was imposed on him here. The proposed Section 304 Part I conversion was tested against Section 300's Exception 4 considerations of sudden fight, lack of premeditation, no undue advantage and no cruel or unusual action; deliberate kerosene burning failed that route. Section 299 Explanation 2 IPC, expressly quoted through Antram, preserves causation from bodily injury even if skilled treatment could have prevented death. Section 32(1) of the Indian Evidence Act permits a deceased person's statements about the cause of death or circumstances of the resulting transaction, while requiring judicial appraisal of capacity, authenticity and reliability; it does not impose a rigid expectation-of-imminent-death timing rule in Indian law. The medical and custody records bore on the weight of the declaration and did not create a new statutory exception.

4. Issues : (i) Was death from septicemic shock proved to result from Pratipal's ante-mortem burns, and were those burns intentionally inflicted by Bhura rather than an accident or self-infliction? (ii) Could the wife, mother and father's oral accounts be relied on despite relationship, the absence of independent bystanders and their lack of support for the case against Munna? (iii) Was Ex. P.6 authentically recorded by the Naib-Tahsildar while Pratipal was conscious, fit and free from tutoring, and did the sealed movement through two courts answer the alleged late-production and custody defect? (iv) What weight may a trustworthy oral or written Section 32(1) declaration bear, including its possible use as the sole basis for conviction? (v) Could a purported sudden quarrel or later septicemia and suggested poor treatment justify Section 304 Part I rather than Section 302, bearing in mind the actual burning and medical cause?

5. Ratio / Findings : The postmortem tied death to septicemic shock following the extensive ante-mortem burns; the Court deferred the homicidal-versus-suicidal question until it had evaluated the circumstances. Meena Bai described Bhura taking Pratipal away, Pratipal's later burning in the street and his immediate attribution to Bhura; Kapoori Bai and Ram Prasad described the same oral attribution. Kallu did not support the case. The relatives did not implicate Munna, which remained a material distinction between the two accused; the Court did not extend the evidence against Bhura to the acquitted co-accused. It weighed their testimony with the cautious interested-witness principles of Raju, Jodhan, Yogesh Singh, Rupinder Singh Sandhu, Shamim, Rizan and Mohd. Rojali Ali. Although those authorities differ in terminology on a relative's interest, none mandates automatic rejection; truthful consistent testimony can be used after scrutiny. Ambika Prasad addressed the limited independent-witness objection, subject to the evidence otherwise being acceptable. The Court found these oral witnesses credible on Bhura's role.

Subodhmani Sharma testified to his contemporaneous recording from 3:20 to 3:40 p.m., Pratipal's account of the meal, earlier disagreement and kerosene ignition, and his sending the written declaration to the CJM sealed. Dr Harishchandra assessed mental fitness before and after, testifying that Pratipal could speak and had been asked questions; relatives were outside the ward. P.V. Radhakrishna and Ravikumar require actual capacity and protection from tutoring rather than a mechanical certificate formula; both the recorder and doctor supplied direct evidence here. No specific tutoring basis was shown. Investigator Kavindra Singh obtained the declaration in sealed custody from the CJM Jhansi and lodged it with JMFC Karera; the envelope bore the recorder's seal. The Court found that the written declaration was voluntary, made by a mentally fit declarant and safely preserved, rejecting the claimed unexplained delay or substitution. The oral accounts named the same assailant and corroborated Ex. P.6.

The Court applied the Section 32(1) authorities to distinguish admissibility and weight: a declaration can alone sustain conviction only if true, voluntary and credible, and made by a competent declarant, with careful scrutiny for possible prompting, identification error, inconsistency or suspicious features; corroboration is a prudential response to risk, not an automatic prerequisite. P.V. Radhakrishna, Laltu Ghosh, Ramilaben and Ramakant Mishra supplied the related principles; the wider scope of statements concerning the transaction resulting in death recognised in Ramakant did not dispense with scrutiny of authenticity. On this record the declaration passed those tests and actually had additional oral support. The Court attributed no statement implicating Munna to the declarant.

The appellant's alternative relied on a trivial sudden dispute, but Lavghanbhai's factors include absence of cruel or unusual conduct and undue advantage. Setting a person on fire with kerosene while he was alive was found gruesome, cruel and outside the proposed Exception 4 mitigation. Septicemia did not itself reduce culpability: medical evidence linked the infection to burns sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Arjun Singh, Munnawar, Antram and Jagtar Singh support assessment of the original injury and causal chain; Explanation 2 to Section 299 precludes avoiding responsibility on speculation that better treatment might have saved the victim. Khokan was distinguished because its Section 304 outcome came from different facts involving a sudden fight and expressly rejected an absolute infection-based conversion rule. The Court held Bhura guilty under Section 302, retained life imprisonment as the statutory minimum and rejected Section 304 Part I.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the criminal appeal. The Additional Sessions Judge, Karera's judgment and sentence of 11 February 2011 in Sessions Trial 85/2010 were affirmed: Parmeshwar Das remained convicted under Section 302 IPC with life imprisonment, ₹500 fine and the stated three-month default rigorous imprisonment. He was already in jail and was directed to undergo the remaining sentence. A copy of the appellate judgment was to be provided free of cost, and the trial record sent back for compliance. The acquittal of co-accused Munna, who was tried along with the appellant in the same trial, had not been appealed by the State and was not disturbed.

Parmeshwar Das v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 360/2011, 26/04/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (611) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 319 CrPC / additional accused - Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 3 SCC 92, was applied: the evidence led at trial must be substantially stronger than a mere probability of involvement and must exceed the prima facie standard required for framing a charge. It must, however, remain short of satisfaction that the evidence, if unrebutted, would lead to conviction. The power concerns a person who could be tried together with the existing accused; it does not permit a premature opinion on guilt. The testimony need not have been tested in cross-examination. The three witnesses whose evidence was recorded implicated Patiram Yadav and Hakim alias Bhura, who were named in the prompt report but omitted from the charge sheet. No perversity was shown, at this stage, in the order summoning them for offences under Sections 302, 307, 147, 148 and 149 IPC. Their guilt was not determined.

Ocular and medical evidence / provisional assessment - Ram Bali v. State of U.P., (2004) 10 SCC 598, holds that speculative alternatives drawn from medical textbooks do not displace credible eyewitness evidence, while recognising the significance of medical evidence that is wholly irreconcilable with it. Umesh Singh v. State of Bihar, (2013) 4 SCC 360, quoting Abdul Sayeed, Bhagirath and Solanki Chimanbhai Ukabhai, requires an independent assessment of eyewitness evidence for consistency, powers of observation and probability. Expert opinion is relevant when it makes the eyewitness account improbable and can discredit that account when it completely excludes the alleged occurrence. Darbara Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 10 SCC 476, applies the same requirement of an extreme contradiction. The applicants alleged that two shots were attributed to the assailants although only one gunshot wound was found, and that another alleged firearm injury had no corresponding medical finding. The Court left the final assessment of these alleged contradictions to the trial court after cross-examination. In the absence of a finding that the medical evidence completely excluded the eyewitness account, these objections did not justify setting aside the Section 319 order.

Polygraph / voluntariness / victim refusal - Selvi v. State of Karnataka, (2010) 7 SCC 263, was applied for its safeguards of reliability and voluntariness against compelled testing and its express holding that a victim of an offence cannot be forced to undergo such techniques. The need to expedite investigation does not justify an intrusion into the victim's mental privacy and dignity. Its discussion of Miranda explained custodial safeguards in the United States and distinguished the Indian position. The applicants' voluntary participation in polygraph tests and their claimed favourable results did not conclusively establish their truthfulness. The complainant's refusal did not justify an adverse inference about his credibility. The High Court's earlier decision in Ram Lakhan reiterated Selvi's holding concerning victims. The revision against the summoning order and non-bailable warrants was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 27 October 2014, Albel Singh Rana reported an attack by an armed group involving Patiram Yadav, his son Hakim alias Bhura and others. The State placed the time of the attack at about 5:34 p.m. According to the report, Hakim son of Sagarsingh Jat died and several persons, including Albel Singh, were seriously injured. Dehati Nalsi was said to have been recorded at 6 p.m., followed by the formal FIR at 7 p.m. Police filed a charge sheet against other persons but not Patiram and Hakim, while keeping the investigation against them pending as described in the order. According to the applicants, the prosecution sought permission for polygraph tests of them and the complainant. The applicants consented by affidavits, while the complainant declined. A Magistrate directed that the applicants undergo the tests. The applicants claimed that the results were favourable to them. After charges were framed against the accused already facing trial, the evidence of Mukesh Rana (PW-1), Raghvendra (PW-3) and Albel Singh (PW-4) was recorded. Albel applied under Section 319 CrPC. On 3 April 2017, the Additional Sessions Judge/Special Judge (Electricity Act)-4, Gwalior, in Sessions Trial 80/2015, summoned Patiram and Hakim as additional accused for offences under IPC Sections 302, 307, 147, 148 and 149 and issued non-bailable arrest warrants. In this revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC, the applicants contended that the roles attributed by the witnesses were inconsistent with the medical findings: two shots were alleged, but only one gunshot wound was found, and another alleged firearm injury to the head had no corresponding medical finding. Paragraph 4 of the order names Sagarsingh in connection with the alleged head injury; paragraph 2 identifies the deceased as Hakim son of Sagarsingh. The applicants also contended that their voluntary participation in the tests and the complainant's refusal showed false implication. The State relied on the witnesses' evidence, the applicants' names in the prompt report and their possible membership of an unlawful assembly sharing a common object. It accepted that Section 319 required stronger evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 3 SCC 92, paragraph 106, supplied the threshold for exercising power under Section 319. The evidence led before the court, which need not have been tested in cross-examination, must be substantially stronger than a mere probability of involvement. It must exceed the prima facie standard required for framing a charge, but remain short of satisfaction that the evidence, if unrebutted, would lead to conviction. The purpose is to try the additional person together with the existing accused where the evidence indicates an offence, without forming an opinion on guilt. The High Court accepted this intermediate standard and found no perversity, at that stage, in summoning the two persons named in the report. It did not determine their final liability.

Ram Bali v. State of U.P., (2004) 10 SCC 598, cautioned that hypothetical opinions or assumptions drawn from textbooks, without proof of their factual premises, do not displace credible and cogent eyewitness testimony. The effect of medical evidence must be considered where the eyewitness account is wholly inconsistent with it. Umesh Singh v. State of Bihar, (2013) 4 SCC 360, reproduced Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P. and its citations to State of Haryana v. Bhagirath and Solanki Chimanbhai Ukabhai. A medical opinion must be tested for logic and probability, and eyewitness evidence must be independently assessed for powers of observation, consistency and credibility. A medical alternative is relevant when it makes the eyewitness account improbable. Medical evidence that completely excludes the alleged manner of injury can discredit the oral account; eyewitness testimony does not invariably prevail over medical evidence. The facts concerning rigor mortis and digestion in the quoted authorities related to those cases, not the present trial. Darbara Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 10 SCC 476, citing Hari Chand and Bhajan Singh, reiterated that only a wholly irreconcilable contradiction may justify rejecting otherwise reliable eyewitness evidence. Here, the Court applied the principle provisionally. Whether the alleged discrepancies concerning gunshot injuries contradicted the witnesses' accounts remained for decision after cross-examination and consideration of the further trial evidence. Without a finding of complete inconsistency, the Section 319 order could not be set aside.

Selvi and Others v. State of Karnataka, (2010) 7 SCC 263, was quoted on protection against compelled investigative techniques. Paragraphs 102–103 explain the reliability and voluntariness rationales of the right against self-incrimination: compelled statements may be false, encourage shortcuts in investigation and infringe dignity and bodily integrity. Its discussion of Miranda v. Arizona concerned custodial warnings in the United States. Selvi expressly distinguished the Indian position: compulsion is not automatically presumed in every custodial statement, but statements are excluded where compulsion is proved. Paragraph 254 directly prohibits the forced administration of the techniques in question to victims, even to expedite investigation, because such testing intrudes into mental privacy and may cause further stigma. The High Court also quoted its earlier decision in Ram Lakhan and Another v. State of M.P. and Others (MCRC 7219/2017, 23 July 2019), which reiterated Selvi's protection of victims. Applying Selvi, it rejected the contention that the applicants' consent established their truthfulness or that the complainant's refusal made his account false.

3. Statutes considered : Section 319 CrPC governed the summoning of additional persons on evidence emerging during trial; its intermediate evidentiary threshold was the central legal test. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC supplied the jurisdiction to review the summoning order and the issue of non-bailable warrants in revision. The revision did not involve an independent retrial on the merits. IPC Sections 302, 307, 147, 148 and 149 concerned the offences, including liability arising from an unlawful assembly, for which the applicants were summoned; they had not been convicted. The Court treated the question of a common object as a matter still to be determined at trial. Article 20(3) of the Constitution and the rationale against self-incrimination appeared in the passages quoted from Selvi. Its prohibition on compelled testing of victims, based on mental privacy, meant that the complainant could not be forced to undergo a polygraph test. The order states that police kept the investigation pending under 'Section 178 Cr.P.C.'.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the evidence of the three trial witnesses met the standard in Hardeep Singh for summoning, under Section 319, two persons who were named in the FIR but omitted from the charge sheet, without forming an opinion on their guilt. (ii) Whether the alleged discrepancy between two shots and one gunshot wound, and the absence of a corresponding medical finding for another alleged injury, completely undermined the eyewitness account at this stage, or required assessment after cross-examination and full consideration of the medical evidence at trial. (iii) Whether the applicants' voluntary participation in polygraph tests established their innocence, or the complainant's refusal justified an adverse inference about his credibility or compelled testing despite Selvi's protection of victims. (iv) Whether perversity had been shown in the trial court's order under Section 319 and its issue of non-bailable warrants, warranting interference in revision. Each summoned person's causal role, common object and guilt remained to be determined.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the stringent but intermediate standard under Section 319 stated in Hardeep Singh. The applicants were named in an early report, and the sworn evidence of PW-1, PW-3 and PW-4 subsequently implicated them. The State relied on their prompt naming; the Section 319 application followed the evidence given by the three witnesses at trial. The Court did not find their guilt proved. It found no demonstrated perversity in summoning them to be tried together with the existing accused on the evidence that had emerged. It separately considered the objection based on medical evidence. Ram Bali, Umesh Singh, quoting Abdul Sayeed, and Darbara Singh establish that eyewitness testimony cannot be rejected merely because an expert suggests an alternative possibility. Medical evidence that wholly excludes the alleged occurrence can, however, discredit that testimony. At the Section 319 stage, no conclusive finding had been made that the alleged injury discrepancies excluded the prosecution account. Cross-examination and full consideration of the trial evidence were still required. The High Court expressly declined to decide finally whether the eyewitness accounts could be reconciled with the medical evidence. It therefore declined to set aside the summoning order on the basis of the alleged contradiction.

On the polygraph contention, the applicants' consent did not create a presumption of truthfulness or establish their innocence. Selvi's requirements of voluntariness and reliability, and its protection of human dignity, guard against using such testing as a shortcut to proof. The complainant, as a victim of the alleged offences, could not be compelled to undergo a technique that intruded into mental privacy. The Court therefore rejected the contention that his refusal made his sworn testimony unreliable. The passage quoted from Ram Lakhan reinforced this protection of victims. Neither the applicants' voluntary testing nor the complainant's refusal established perversity in the Section 319 order.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision. The order dated 3 April 2017, summoning Patiram Yadav and Hakim alias Bhura as additional accused in Sessions Trial 80/2015 for offences under IPC Sections 302, 307, 147, 148 and 149 and issuing non-bailable warrants, remained undisturbed. The trial court was to assess the eyewitness accounts and medical evidence after cross-examination and determine individual culpability and common object on the evidence ultimately adduced. The revision resulted in no conviction or final finding that the polygraph reports proved guilt or innocence.

Patiram Yadav and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, Cr.R. no. 801/2017, 30/01/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (612) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act / company arraignment / Section 141 - Himanshu v. B. Shivamurthy, (2019) 3 SCC 797, applied Aneeta Hada v. Godfather Travels & Tours (P) Ltd., (2012) 5 SCC 661, to the requirement that, where the alleged drawer under Section 138 is a company, commission of the offence by that company and its arraignment as an accused are preconditions to the vicarious liability of its directors or signatory under Section 141. Liability also remains subject to the necessary averments and proof of responsibility. The passage quoted from Himanshu referred to Charanjit Pal Jindal, (2015) 15 SCC 768, as following Aneeta Hada. Ganpat Megha Builders Pvt. Ltd. had not been made an accused, and the applicants had been impleaded only in their capacity as its directors. Their prosecution was therefore quashed. No finding was made on the underlying commercial debt.

Cheque dishonour / demand notice to corporate drawer - Himanshu also applied the proviso to Section 138 and the conditions explained in MSR Leathers v. S. Palaniappan, (2013) 1 SCC 177, and N. Harihara Krishnan v. J. Thomas, (2018) 13 SCC 663. Valid presentation and dishonour of the cheque, a written demand to the drawer within thirty days of receiving the bank's information, and the drawer's failure to pay within fifteen days of receiving the notice are statutory preconditions. The respondent conceded that notice had been sent only to K. Shreekant as the signatory, and not to Ganpat Megha Builders or the applicants. Applying the corporate-drawer holding in Himanshu, the Court held that the absence of notice to the company, together with its omission as an accused, prevented prosecution of these directors. The complaint was quashed against the applicants. The Court did not decide unrelated merits of the complaint or lay down that every director must always receive a separate notice.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Manikchand Petroleum Deori filed a complaint under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act concerning a cheque associated with Ganpat Megha Builders Pvt. Ltd. The order describes the cheque as having been issued in the company's name and proceeds on the basis that the company was the corporate drawer, while the persons prosecuted were its directors. The company had neither been prosecuted nor given notice. Following an earlier remand, the JMFC, Sagar, dismissed the complaint on 24 January 2022 because, despite repeated opportunities, the complainant had not produced the document concerning the company's authorised officer. The Seventh Additional Sessions Judge, Sagar, allowed the complainant's Criminal Revision 71/2022 on 15 February 2023. The applicant directors challenged the restoration of the complaint under Section 482 CrPC. They submitted that the company had not been arraigned as an accused or served with the demand notice under Section 138, and that its directors could therefore not be prosecuted vicariously. Counsel for the respondent conceded that notice had been sent only to K. Shreekant, who had signed the cheque. Neither the company nor the applicant directors had received notice, and the company had not been made an accused in the complaint. Paragraph 2 of the judgment refers to a remand order dated 30 September 2021 while describing a dismissal dated 24 January 2022.

2. Precedents — Considered : Himanshu v. B. Shivamurthy, (2019) 3 SCC 797, was quoted extensively and directly applied. It adopted the three-Judge Bench rule in Aneeta Hada v. Godfather Travels & Tours (P) Ltd., (2012) 5 SCC 661, that commission of the offence by the company is an express condition for vicarious liability under Section 141 and that arraigning the company as an accused is imperative for prosecution of a person responsible for its affairs. The quotation also referred to Charanjit Pal Jindal v. L.N. Metalics, (2015) 15 SCC 768, as following that rule. On the separate statutory requirement of notice, Himanshu considered the proviso to Section 138 through MSR Leathers v. S. Palaniappan, (2013) 1 SCC 177. The cheque must be presented within the relevant six-month period or its period of validity, whichever is earlier. A written demand must be made to the drawer within thirty days of receiving information that the cheque has been returned, and the drawer must have failed to pay within fifteen days of receiving the notice. N. Harihara Krishnan v. J. Thomas, (2018) 13 SCC 663, was quoted within Himanshu on the factual ingredients that a complaint under Section 138 must contain, including the account on which the cheque was drawn, its return unpaid, valid presentation and timely demand to the drawer. In Himanshu, a director had signed for a company, but the notice and complaint were directed against him alone. The Supreme Court held that the absence of both company arraignment and notice to the corporate drawer was fatal. The High Court did more than reproduce that decision: it applied both defects to Ganpat Megha Builders and its directors.

3. Statutes considered : Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act governs cheque dishonour and the mandatory conditions in its proviso, particularly written notice to the drawer and failure to pay within fifteen days of receiving it. The order quoted Himanshu's account of the period for presentation and the thirty-day period for demand. Section 141 imposes responsibility on persons in charge of the company's business when the company commits an offence under Section 138. Vicarious liability requires the company to be made an accused and the necessary averments and proof against the person concerned. Section 482 CrPC was the inherent jurisdiction invoked to challenge the restored complaint. The Court quashed the proceedings only against these applicants. The statutory periods were explained as part of the Supreme Court rule; they were not calculated against cheque or notice dates, which the order did not supply.

4. Issues : (i) Could a complaint under Section 138/141 proceed against the directors when the company on whose behalf the cheque was issued had not been arraigned, despite the earlier remand and revisional restoration? (ii) Did service of the statutory demand on K. Shreekant as signatory, without service on the alleged corporate drawer, satisfy the notice requirement under Section 138 for prosecution of the directors? (iii) Could the Sessions Judge's restoration stand against these applicants in view of those admitted defects? The Court did not decide the debt, the other ingredients relating to the cheque, or whether a differently constituted complaint could satisfy the requirements of limitation and procedure.

5. Ratio / Findings : The respondent's concession established that the company had not been given the statutory notice or made an accused. Under Himanshu and Aneeta Hada, the absence of the company as an accused was fatal to vicarious liability under Section 141. A company's offence cannot be attributed to its directors through that provision while omitting the juristic person whose commission of the offence and arraignment are required. The Court made no separate finding on whether each applicant managed the company's business. The second ground in Himanshu gave separate significance to the absence of notice to the company. An offence under Section 138 by a corporate drawer requires compliance with the proviso, including a written demand to that drawer followed by failure to pay. In the admitted circumstances recorded in the order, notice only to the signatory K. Shreekant did not constitute notice to Ganpat Megha Builders. The Court held that prosecution of the applicant directors was bad in law and quashed the complaint against them.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application. The complaint under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act was quashed against Pavan Kumar and the other applicants, who had been impleaded as directors. The absence of both arraignment of Ganpat Megha Builders Pvt. Ltd. and a demand notice to it was decisive. The order did not decide the criminal liability of the absent company or K. Shreekant in any other proceeding. No finding was made on the commercial merits.

Pavan Kumar and Others v. Manikchand Petroleum Deori and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 3905/2024, 20/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (613) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal-side writ / revisable summons - Urmila Devi v. Yudhvir Singh, (2013) 15 SCC 624, adopted the test in K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195, which drew on Madhu Limaye, V.C. Shukla and Rajendra Kumar Sitaram Pande. If upholding an objection would terminate the prosecution, the order deciding that objection is not merely interlocutory and is not barred from revision by Section 397(2) CrPC. Amar Nath also formed part of the Court's discussion. The JMFC's order taking cognizance of offences under Sections 406 and 120B IPC and issuing summons was therefore revisable under Sections 397 and 401. K.K. Patel also permitted an additional ground to be raised in revision before the Sessions Court. The petitioners' wish to rely on further documents did not, by itself, justify entertaining their Article 226 petition despite that remedy. The writ petition was dismissed with liberty to seek revision.

Pre-trial defence material / exceptional quashing - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, reproduced the categories in R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal concerning exceptional quashing to prevent abuse of process or where no offence is disclosed. It cautioned against weighing disputed evidence and against quashing solely on the informant's alleged mala fides where the allegations disclose a cognizable offence. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, restricts the accused's use of defence documents at the stage of framing charges. Rajiv Thapar v. Madan Lal Kapoor, (2013) 3 SCC 330, prescribes four conditions for exceptional quashing under Section 482 on the basis of defence material: the material must be of sterling and indubitable quality; it must wholly displace the accusation; it must not have been refuted or must be incapable of justifiable refutation; and continuation of the trial must amount to abuse of process and fail to serve the ends of justice. Prashant Bharti v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 9 SCC 293, reiterated that test. Applying these limits to the request to entertain the Article 226 petition despite the remedy of revision, the Court held that FIRs against the complainant's wife did not establish her guilt or the complainant's mala fides. The MSME award did not conclusively exonerate the petitioners. The remaining grounds on merits were left to the revisional court.

Civil and criminal overlap / cognizance - Harmanpreet Singh Ahluwalia v. State of Punjab, (2009) 7 SCC 712, Mohammed Ibrahim v. State of Bihar, (2009) 8 SCC 751, Mahmood Ali v. State of U.P., Usha Chakraborty v. State of W.B., and Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, were cited and applied for the proposition that parallel civil proceedings do not themselves bar criminal proceedings where the conduct involves criminality. A predominantly civil dispute lacking criminal ingredients may, however, warrant quashing. The Council award and the petitioners' failure to pursue the remedy under Section 34 of the Arbitration and Conciliation Act did not establish that the complaint under Sections 406 and 120B was necessarily civil. The Court considered noncompliance with the award only in the context of prima facie cognizance. It did not finally determine guilt, the vicarious liability of company officers or the contention that no demand for return of property had been made.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Pawan Kumar Ahluwalia and the other petitioners challenged, under Article 226, the JMFC, Maihar's order dated 26 February 2024 in RCT 104/2024, taking cognizance of offences under IPC Sections 406 and 120B on Gurjeet Singh's complaint and issuing summons. Counsel accepted that the order was revisable under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC, but sought direct writ intervention on the ground that documents concerning the competing disputes, which were not part of the Magistrate's record, could not be considered in revision. The petitioners described the dispute as civil and contractual, involving MSME proceedings. They denied criminal breach of trust, contended that petitioner 1 had received no demand to return property, relied on the police view that the dispute was civil, and argued that KJS Cement (India) Pvt. Ltd. was the primary actor but had not been made an accused, so its officers could not be held vicariously liable. They relied on Dayle De'souza and several High Court decisions for these contentions. Those authorities were cited by counsel; the Court did not substantively apply them to decide company liability in this order. The petitioners also relied on complaints and FIRs lodged by their company against respondent 1's wife, alleging that the present complaint was retaliatory. On 6 September 2023, the MSME Facilitation Council, Bhopal, had made an award in respondent 1's favour in MSEFC 1152/2020. The petitioners' separate writ petition challenging that award was dismissed on 6 May 2024 with liberty to seek relief under Section 34 of the Arbitration and Conciliation Act. Counsel conceded that they had not pursued that remedy. The Court first considered the availability of revision, then examined the documents relied on to justify bypassing it. It disposed of the writ petition without finally determining the complaint's merits.

2. Precedents — Considered : Urmila Devi v. Yudhvir Singh, (2013) 15 SCC 624, quoted K.K. Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2000) 6 SCC 195, which drew on Madhu Limaye, V.C. Shukla and Rajendra Kumar Sitaram Pande. If acceptance of an objection would terminate the prosecution, an order deciding that objection is not merely interlocutory within Section 397(2). Applying that test, the Court held that the order taking cognizance and issuing summons was revisable. It also cited Madhu Limaye, V.C. Shukla and Amar Nath to that effect. In paragraph 6, the Court referred to K.K. Patel as permitting an additional ground in revision before the Sessions Court. These authorities supported recourse to the statutory remedy rather than direct adjudication under Article 226.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted extensively on the sparing exercise of power under Section 482 CrPC to prevent abuse of process, give effect to an order under the Code or secure the ends of justice, without undertaking a trial or exercising revisional jurisdiction. It reproduced R.P. Kapur's broad categories concerning a legal bar, allegations disclosing no offence, and absence of legal evidence. It also reproduced the seven illustrative categories in Bhajan Lal, including proceedings instituted for manifest private vengeance, while cautioning that an allegation of malice by the informant assumes secondary importance where the conduct alleged discloses a cognizable offence. The quoted discussion distinguished absence of legal evidence, or evidence manifestly inconsistent with the accusation, from disputed evidence requiring assessment at trial. It referred to the difficulty of deciding on incomplete facts and cautioned against stifling a legitimate prosecution through a mini-trial. The Court applied that caution when rejecting the contention that the petitioners' counter-complaints conclusively established mala fides in the present complaint. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, was cited for the rule that an accused has no right to tender defence documents at the stage of framing charges. The Court then referred to the distinct, narrow exception in Rajiv Thapar v. Madan Lal Kapoor, (2013) 3 SCC 330, for quashing under Section 482 on the basis of defence material. Its four conditions require sound and indubitable material of sterling quality; complete displacement of the factual accusation; material that has not been refuted or cannot justifiably be refuted; and continuation of proceedings amounting to abuse of process and failing to serve the ends of justice. All four conditions must be satisfied before quashing without recording evidence. Prashant Bharti v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 9 SCC 293, was cited as reiterating that exceptional test. The Court assessed the proposed documents against these limits to decide whether the petitioners could bypass revision through Article 226. The filing of an FIR against the complainant's wife did not establish her guilt, and the Council award did not exclude the possibility of a criminal offence.

Harmanpreet Singh Ahluwalia v. State of Punjab, (2009) 7 SCC 712; Mohammed Ibrahim v. State of Bihar, (2009) 8 SCC 751; Mahmood Ali v. State of U.P.; Usha Chakraborty v. State of W.B.; and Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, were cited together for the principle governing overlapping civil and criminal proceedings. Both may proceed concurrently where the conduct involves criminality; a complaint concerning a predominantly civil dispute without criminal ingredients may be quashed. The petitioners' counsel cited Dayle De'souza, Vaikundamani, Savitha, Sanjay G. Revankar, Jitha Sanjay, Mansoor Ali and Rajpal in support of their arguments.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was invoked to challenge the Magistrate's order. The petitioners argued that the availability of revision was a self-imposed restraint on writ jurisdiction and that their proposed reliance on documents outside the Magistrate's record justified direct intervention. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provide for criminal revision, while Section 397(2) bars revision against interlocutory orders. An order taking cognizance and issuing summons, where a successful challenge would terminate the proceedings, is not subject to that bar. Section 482 CrPC arose through the Supreme Court authorities on exceptional quashing before trial and the limited use of defence documents. The present proceeding was a writ petition under Article 226, not an application under Section 482. IPC Sections 406 and 120B were the offences of which the Magistrate took cognizance. The Court did not finally determine entrustment, dishonest misappropriation, conspiracy or the liability of company officers. Section 34 of the Arbitration and Conciliation Act was the remedy preserved in the separate challenge to the MSME Council award; it was neither a criminal charge nor an automatic bar to cognizance.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the Magistrate's order issuing summons after taking cognizance was revisable, rather than merely interlocutory within Section 397(2). (ii) Whether the petitioners' proposed reliance on FIRs lodged against the complainant's wife and Council documents, or their allegation of perversity, justified direct intervention under Article 226 despite the remedy of revision, and whether those documents met the strict standard for defence material relied on for exceptional quashing before trial. (iii) Whether the MSME award and civil or contractual litigation conclusively precluded criminal cognizance, or whether the complaint could still disclose criminality at this preliminary stage. The effect of the absence of a demand for return of property under Section 406, the need to make KJS Cement an accused, and the sufficiency of the complaint evidence to prove an offence remained matters for the appropriate forum. They were not finally decided by this order.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that the order issuing summons was revisable. Under Urmila Devi and K.K. Patel, an order is not merely interlocutory for the purposes of Section 397 if upholding the objections would terminate the prosecution. An additional ground could be raised before the Sessions Court in revision. The petitioners contended that documents outside the Magistrate's record required writ intervention. The Court examined the categories of documents offered to support that contention and found no basis to bypass revision. Renu Kumari's cautions against undertaking a mini-trial or treating the informant's alleged malice as conclusive, Debendra Nath Padhi's rule concerning defence documents at the stage of framing charges, and Rajiv Thapar's strict exception for defence material of sterling quality governed that assessment. The petitioners' complaints against respondent 1's wife established that those complaints had been lodged; they did not establish their truth or her guilt, or make the allegation of retaliation indisputable. The Council award showed the existence of a parallel civil remedy but did not conclusively displace the criminal accusation. Prashant Bharti was cited as reiterating Rajiv Thapar. The Court did not find that all four conditions had been satisfied.

On the distinction between civil and criminal proceedings, the Court cited five Supreme Court decisions for the principle that both may proceed simultaneously where the conduct has criminal ingredients, while a dispute that is merely civil may warrant quashing. It noted that the petitioners had not pursued the remedy under Section 34 after dismissal of their writ petition challenging the Council award. It reasoned that noncompliance with the award could support an inference of criminal intent for the purpose of taking cognizance. This reasoning was confined to that preliminary stage; it was not a conviction or a final determination of the ingredients of offences under IPC Sections 406 and 120B. The Court expressly left the other contentions for revision, including the alleged absence of a demand for return of property, the company's omission as an accused and the assessment of the Magistrate's record. The Court considered these matters to decide whether the statutory remedy could be bypassed, without finally deciding the merits left for the revisional court.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. It granted the petitioners liberty, if they wished, to challenge the JMFC's order dated 26 February 2024 taking cognizance and issuing summons before the Sessions Court under Section 397 CrPC. No complaint was quashed, no final finding of guilt was made, and the unexamined grounds on merits were not definitively rejected. This order did not dispose of the separate MSME award or the available remedy under Section 34.

Pawan Kumar Ahluwalia and Others v. Gurjeet Singh and Others, W.P. no. 15273/2024, 08/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (614) Prev Next

Headnote :- Constitutional criminal jurisdiction — Article 226 — FIR quashing — alibi founded on court attendance - An advocate accused of directly participating in an assault in a village at about 10:30 a.m. relied on his attendance in courts at nearby Sagar on the same date. The order-sheets generally recorded no time; in one matter, an 11 a.m. notation appeared below his own signature. Even if his attendance at that hour were accepted, the village was about 10 km away, making his presence at the earlier incident humanly possible. An alibi must be established by cogent evidence showing that presence at the scene was impossible. This disputed defence did not justify quashing in writ proceedings. Factional enmity could explain either false implication or a motive to commit the offence and also required factual examination.

Separate trial — acquittal of co-accused - The petitioner contended that the witnesses' hostility and the acquittal of the co-accused already tried made a trial against him pointless. CBI v. Akhilesh Singh, (2005) 1 SCC 478, was distinguished. In that conspiracy case, no independent evidence connected the respondent after the principal alleged conspirator had been discharged; the present FIR alleged that this petitioner personally participated in the assault. A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, CrA 1306/2021 (31.10.2021, as cited), was applied for the rule that evidence recorded in the co-accused's trial cannot simply be treated as evidence in another accused's case. Their acquittal did not automatically terminate this petitioner's prosecution. The added offence under Section 302 IPC was not compoundable.

Investigation — agency selection and Constitutional limits - Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, were cited for the principles that an accused cannot choose the investigating agency, dictate the manner of investigation or demand a hearing as a matter of course during investigation. The quoted Supreme Court discussion also preserves exceptional constitutional directions where investigation is mala fide or seriously deficient. It cautions that transfer to CBI must be ordered sparingly, not routinely merely because allegations are made against the police. No basis was established for the requested inquiry by a gazetted officer or CBI. Quashing of the FIR and the requested control over investigation were refused. The interim protection against arrest granted on 3 August 2009 was vacated, and the petitioner was directed to surrender on 4 November 2024. If he failed to do so, the trial court was free to issue a warrant.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : FIR No. 103/2009, registered at Police Station Baheriya, Sagar, alleged that advocate Pawan Kumar Kurmi joined an assault on Jai Singh in village Gidwani on 6 May 2009 at about 10:30 a.m. The original allegations concerned IPC Sections 307, 147, 148, 149, 294, 323, 324, 450 and 506. According to the State, Jai Singh later died and Section 302 was added. The petitioner attributed his implication to rival village factions and his representation of one side as counsel. He relied on court order-sheets and affidavits to contend that he had attended court in Sagar that morning. A coordinate Bench had stayed his arrest on 3 August 2009. A charge sheet was filed against the other accused. According to the petitioner, witnesses in their trial had turned hostile, and the co-accused were acquitted. The State reported that the trial matter had been adjourned after being listed on 30 September 2024. In his petition under Article 226, the petitioner sought, among other reliefs, an independent inquiry by a gazetted officer or CBI, protection of his life and liberty against police harassment, and a direction to the SP concerning closure on the basis of the witnesses' statements. The Court addressed the petition as seeking quashing of the FIR or transfer of investigation. The allegations against the petitioner were not tried in the writ proceedings.

2. Precedents — Considered : CBI v. Akhilesh Singh, (2005) 1 SCC 478, was relied on by the petitioner. The Court explained that, in that conspiracy case, the principal accused was alleged to have planned the killing and to have had a motive for it. His discharge had attained finality, and no separate evidence connected the respondent with the supply of weapons or assistance to the assailants. The Supreme Court had approved quashing of the conspiracy-related charges in those circumstances. The present case was distinguished because the petitioner was alleged to have directly participated in the assault. Acquittal of the other accused after the witnesses turned hostile did not place his case on the same footing as the absence of connecting material in Akhilesh Singh. The petitioner also relied on Rashpal Singh v. State of Punjab (P&H High Court, CRM-M-36584/2011), which concerned an amicable settlement. The Court noted that the present offence under Section 302 IPC could not be compounded. A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, CrA 1306/2021 (31 October 2021 as stated in this judgment), was applied for the rule concerning separate trials: prosecution evidence recorded in the trial of one set of accused is not automatically evidence against another accused. The Court rejected the contention that hostile testimony and the co-accused's acquittal, by themselves, required quashing of the FIR against this petitioner.

Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was extensively reproduced and applied on the selection of an investigating agency. It referred to Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt and E. Sivakumar on the absence of an accused's right to choose the agency or manner of investigation, or to be heard as a matter of course before a transfer of investigation. Its discussion of Divine Retreat Centre preserves the High Court's power under Article 226 to issue directions where investigation is shown to be mala fide. Its account of the Constitution Bench decision in Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights explains that an extraordinary direction to CBI must be issued sparingly where credibility, complete justice or fundamental rights require it, rather than merely because allegations have been made against local police. The quoted passage from Romila Thapar also leaves disputed questions about evidence in an ongoing investigation to appropriate remedies at the relevant stages, including bail, discharge and quashing where no legal evidence exists. The Court applied the limit on an accused's choice of agency and found no exceptional ground for the transfer sought here; it did not hold that constitutional transfer powers could never be exercised. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, was then quoted. The passages concerning W.N. Chadha and Rajesh Gandhi explain the absence of an ordinary right of participation or hearing during investigation and of a right to veto the selection of investigators. The discussion of Sri Bhagwan Samardha and Narender G. Goel concerns further investigation under Section 173(8) CrPC, the absence of an obligatory prior hearing for the accused, and the opportunity to test the evidence at trial. The quoted authorities also describe court-directed CBI investigation where the police inquiry was deficient. They were used here to reject the accused's claimed right to control the agency, without eliminating the Court's exceptional supervisory powers. Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior (MP High Court, MCRC 10446/2017, 30 November 2017), was also cited for the absence of an accused's right to determine the course of investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked for quashing and investigation-related relief. The Court declined to determine the disputed alibi or the competing inferences arising from enmity in writ proceedings. The Supreme Court passages it applied nevertheless recognise a narrow constitutional power, dependent on the facts, to correct mala fide investigation or exceptionally direct investigation by another agency. IPC Sections 307, 147, 148, 149, 294, 323, 324, 450 and 506 appeared in the original FIR as allegations forming the background. The State said that Section 302 was added after Jai Singh's death, and the Court expressly treated the offence under that section as non-compoundable. The ingredients of the other IPC offences were not separately construed. Section 173(2) CrPC appeared in the quoted rule concerning investigation, and Section 173(8) in the discussion of further investigation, including after submission of a report. No further investigation was directed in this petition. The references to IPC Sections 120-B, 302 and 109 in Akhilesh Singh concerned the conspiracy charges in that precedent; they were not additional charges in this writ proceeding.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the petitioner's appearance in a Sagar court on 6 May 2009 established an alibi sufficient to quash the FIR under Article 226, despite the allegation of an assault at 10:30 a.m. about 10 km away. (ii) Whether the co-accused's acquittal following hostile testimony, or the decisions concerning conspiracy and settlement relied on by the petitioner, made a separate trial of an alleged direct assailant futile or legally impermissible. (iii) Whether factional enmity permitted the truth of the accusation to be determined in writ proceedings. (iv) Whether the accused had a right to select a gazetted officer or CBI for an independent inquiry, or dictate its course, and whether a basis for exceptional constitutional intervention had been established. The petitioner's actual presence, the witnesses' credibility and ultimate criminal liability remained for determination in appropriate proceedings; they were not finally decided by this order.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that an alibi required cogent evidence showing that presence at the scene was humanly impossible. The order-sheets from different courts recorded no time, apart from an 11 a.m. notation below the petitioner's own signature on a document from a court that was vacant. The Court questioned why he had written that time and referred to the usual handling of files when a court was vacant. Even assuming attendance at 11 a.m., the distance of about 10 km between the village and Sagar made presence at the incident at 10:30 a.m. possible. The Court therefore declined to accept the alibi as a ground for quashing in writ proceedings. It did not determine guilt or finally rule on all the alibi evidence that might be led at trial. The co-accused's acquittal did not determine this petitioner's case. He was specifically alleged to have hit Jai Singh, unlike the respondent in the conspiracy case of Akhilesh Singh. Under A.T. Mydeen, the evidence in the other trial could not be read wholesale in his case. The decision concerning settlement was factually different, and the offence of murder was not compoundable. Enmity could support either false implication or a motive to commit the offence. The competing inference remained a disputed factual question and did not justify quashing.

On the request to control investigation, the Court held that an accused could not demand a change of agency or dictate how the investigation should be conducted. Romila Thapar and Dinubhai supplied those limits, reinforced by Prabal Dogra. The quoted Supreme Court reasoning also recognises relief under Article 226 where investigative powers are shown to have been exercised mala fide, and exceptional transfer to CBI where justice or confidence in the investigation requires it. Those passages do not turn the absence of an accused's choice into an absolute prohibition on judicial intervention. The petitioner's allegations of falsity and factional motive, disputed alibi and reliance on the co-accused's trial evidence did not establish a basis for that intervention. The Court therefore refused to quash the FIR or direct the proposed transfer.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. No FIR, charge or investigation was quashed or transferred. The interim order dated 3 August 2009 protecting the petitioner from arrest was vacated. He was directed to surrender before the trial court on 4 November 2024; if he failed to do so, the trial court was free to issue a warrant of arrest. No independent inquiry or general protective direction was granted. The charge and evidence remained for adjudication by the trial court.

Pawan Kumar Kurmi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 6380/2009, 14/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (615) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail — addition of murder offence after earlier attempted-murder bail - The applicant had been granted bail when the case involved Section 307 IPC. The injured person later died, Section 302 IPC was added, and the trial court took the applicant into custody. He contended that Section 302 was not an aggravated form of the offence under Section 307 and that the earlier High Court bail order had to be cancelled before he could be taken into custody. The Court expressly rejected these contentions and held that the trial court had committed no mistake in taking him into custody on the altered accusation.

Successive regular bail — prior rejection and statement of deceased - In his fifth application under Section 439 CrPC, the applicant relied on his custody since 10 April 2017 and the witnesses' hostility. The order rejecting the previous application on 24 October 2017 had already noted that the deceased's statement under Section 161 CrPC identified the applicant's participation and, in the Court's assessment, fell within the category of a dying declaration after the injured person's death. The applicant showed no change in circumstances. Considering that statement, the Court rejected the renewed application for bail. It made no final trial finding on the statement or the charge.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Crime No. 433/2014 at Police Station Karera, Shivpuri, concerned allegations under Sections 307 and 34 IPC and, later, Sections 302 and 34 IPC. The applicant said that he had received bail from the High Court when the case was initially registered as attempted murder. The injured person later died, a murder offence was added, and the trial court took the applicant into custody. The order records his arrest on 10 April 2017. His preceding application for regular bail, MCRC 10612/2017, had been rejected on 24 October 2017. In this fifth application under Section 439 CrPC, he challenged his custody without prior cancellation of the initial bail order, arguing that Section 302 was not merely an aggravated form of the offence under Section 307. He also submitted that all the witnesses had turned hostile and had not supported the prosecution, and that he had remained in jail. The case diary was before the Court.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court referred to its earlier order dated 24 October 2017 in MCRC 10612/2017 when evaluating the renewed application. The present judgment records that the earlier order had noted the deceased's police statement naming the applicant, notwithstanding the eyewitnesses' hostility.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the successive application for regular bail. Section 161 CrPC was the provision under which the police had recorded the injured person's statement. Following his death, the Court treated that statement as falling within the category of a dying declaration for the limited purpose of assessing bail. Sections 307 and 34 IPC concerned the original accusation of attempted murder with common intention, for which bail had been granted earlier. Sections 302 and 34 IPC concerned the accusation of murder with common intention added after the injured person's death. The Court rejected the proposition that the initial bail order necessarily protected the applicant against custody on the later charge without a separate cancellation order.

4. Issues : (i) Did the earlier High Court bail order for the offence under Section 307 IPC prevent the trial court from taking the applicant into custody after the injured person died and Section 302 IPC was added, unless the initial order was first cancelled? (ii) Did the eyewitnesses' hostility, the period of custody and the renewed application justify bail despite the earlier rejection and the deceased's recorded statement identifying the applicant? The merits of conviction and final proof of the statement were not decided.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected the applicant's contention that Section 302 IPC was not an aggravated form of the offence under Section 307 and that the trial court could not take him into custody without first cancelling the earlier bail order. It held that the trial court had committed no mistake in taking him into custody after the murder offence was added. In considering the renewed request for bail, the Court relied on the assessment in its previous order. Although the eyewitnesses had turned hostile, the deceased's police statement under Section 161 CrPC specifically mentioned the applicant's participation and was treated as a dying declaration after the injured person's death. The applicant did not point to any change in circumstances since the preceding rejection of bail. Together, these considerations led to rejection of the fifth application. The decision is confined to bail and custody at this procedural stage. It does not determine what all the hostile witnesses actually said or finally test the deceased's statement under the rules of evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the fifth application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC. It held that the trial court had committed no mistake in taking the applicant into custody after Section 302 IPC was added. Cancellation of the earlier bail order was not ordered as a prerequisite to custody in this proceeding.

Pawan Rawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 692/2018, 09/01/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (616) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal appeal — sentence already undergone - Completion of the sentence did not render the jail appeal under Section 374 CrPC infructuous. The appeal challenged convictions under Sections 354 and 363 IPC and Sections 7/8 POCSO. Although prison records showed that the appellant had been released after serving his sentence, the Court reviewed the trial evidence on the merits and affirmed the conviction. No further action was required regarding custody.

POCSO — proof of child status - The school director produced the original admission register, marked as Ex. P/6, and a photocopy compared with it was marked as Ex. P/6(c). The objection to the manner of exhibiting the photocopy failed because it had not been raised when the document was marked. Failure to produce the initial admission form did not, by itself, invalidate the register. The Court adopted the June entry as the child's date of birth and found that she was about ten and a half years old at the time of the incident on 29 September 2017. The judgment also records that the certificate, Ex. P/5, stated a date in February of the same year.

Prosecutrix — credibility and alleged tutoring - The child described being taken to the appellant's house and his attempt to remove her clothing. She immediately disclosed the incident to her father and Preeti Ojha. The FIR was lodged within about three hours. The Court assessed their evidence and Ramdulari's account of what the father had told her. It also addressed the omitted detail of the threat, the hostility of the appellant's mother as a witness, the medical evidence of a bruise and the alleged family dispute. Discussion with her father and aunt about what she would state in court was insufficient, without demonstrated false implication, to reject her testimony as tutored.

Investigation — spot map omission - Failure to mark the nearby shop on the spot map did not undermine testimony independently found reliable. The accused received no benefit merely from that defect in the investigation. The Court held that guilt was proved beyond reasonable doubt and affirmed the conviction and sentences.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecution alleged that on 29 September 2017 a young girl went to buy popcorn, where Pawan Sharma met her and forcibly took her to his house. According to the prosecution, he threatened her in connection with marriage, pushed or kicked her and attempted to remove her clothing. She screamed and, according to her, the appellant's mother and sister-in-law came to the house, whereupon he ran away. She soon told her father and neighbour Preeti Ojha about the incident. The FIR was registered at about 16:01 for an incident described as occurring at about 13:10. Crime No. 248/2017 initially cited Sections 354, 363 and 342 IPC and Sections 7/8 POCSO. The police recorded her statement, had her medically examined, collected school records and filed a charge sheet under those provisions. The trial court framed charges against the appellant on 8 December 2017 and heard nine prosecution witnesses. The appellant called no witnesses. On 11 August 2018, the Special Sessions Judge, Shivpuri, convicted him under Sections 354 and 363 IPC and Sections 7/8 POCSO. The sentences were three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,000 under POCSO, and four years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,000 under Section 363, with the specified six months' imprisonment in default. No separate sentence was imposed under Section 354 because the same act attracted overlapping punishment. The order does not state a conviction under Section 342. The appeal was filed from jail under Section 374 CrPC. A prison communication dated 4 August 2021 stated that the appellant had been released on 8 January 2021 after serving his entire jail sentence. The Court nevertheless heard the appeal on its merits. The appellant challenged the age evidence, the omission of the shop from the spot map, the alleged coaching by the child's father and the lack of an independent eyewitness. The State supported the trial court's decision.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court held that completion of the sentence does not render an appeal against conviction infructuous. It also held that an objection to the method of exhibiting a document cannot ordinarily be raised later if it was not made when the document was marked, and that an accused does not automatically benefit from a faulty investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided the route for the appeal against conviction. Section 354 IPC concerned the alleged assault or criminal force affecting the girl's modesty, and Section 363 concerned the alleged taking or kidnapping. Section 342 appeared in the FIR and charges but not among the convictions recited or affirmed. Sections 7 and 8 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012, governed the conviction for sexual assault and the three-year sentence. The girl's status as a child made the age evidence material. The Court examined the school records rather than developing an independent statutory hierarchy for determining age. It recorded and affirmed the trial court's decision to impose no separate sentence under Section 354, to avoid punishing the same act twice. Section 164 CrPC arose because the child had previously given a judicial statement which did not record the threat to kill in connection with marriage. This omission was used in cross-examination; no distinct procedural dispute under that provision was decided. The original charge sheet also included Section 342 IPC, but the appellate judgment made no finding establishing confinement under that section.

4. Issues : (i) Did full service of the custodial sentence extinguish the appellant's right to a decision on the merits of his appeal against conviction? (ii) Was the girl's age established by the original admission register and the compared photocopy, despite the appellant's claim that the original had not been produced, the absence of the admission form and the witness's admission that whitener had been applied? (iii) Was the child's account credible in light of her immediate disclosures, the evidence of relatives and the neighbour, the omission of the threat from her prior statements, the hostility of the appellant's mother as a witness, the alleged coaching, the asserted family hostility and the limited medical support? (iv) Did the investigating officer's failure to mark the popcorn shop on the spot map create a reasonable doubt despite the testimony which the Court otherwise accepted?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first held that service of the sentence did not render the appeal against conviction under Section 374 CrPC infructuous, and it accordingly considered the merits. On age, PW-8, the school director, produced the original Class I admission register, Ex. P/6. The photocopy compared with it was Ex. P/6(c), and he had issued the certificate, Ex. P/5. The witness admitted that an admission form would have been filled in and that whitener had been applied. He denied withholding the form to conceal a different birth entry. Since the original register had been produced, the objection based on its supposed nonproduction was contrary to the record. An objection to the mode of marking the document, if not taken at that time, could not be raised later. The Court held that nonproduction of the admission form was insufficient to discredit the register. It adopted the June birth-date entry and calculated the child's age as about ten and a half years on the date of the incident.

On the occurrence and credibility, PW-2 described being taken from the shop to the appellant's house and his attempt to remove her clothing. The Court relied on her immediate account to her father, PW-3, and Preeti Ojha, PW-6, and on PW-1 Ramdulari's evidence of the father's prompt telephone report. Ramdulari was not an eyewitness; her account corroborated the disclosure rather than providing direct evidence of the assault. The FIR was lodged within roughly three hours. The doctor found a facial bruise and recorded a complaint of chest pain, without an external chest injury. In cross-examination, the child could not explain why the particular threat to kill in connection with her refusal to marry was absent from her statements under Sections 161 and 164 CrPC. She and her father acknowledged discussing what she would say in court. The Court held that discussion with family did not, by itself, establish tutoring or false implication. It found that the alleged family dispute had not been specified or sufficiently supported, although the appellant's mother, PW-5, had referred to some enmity and denied witnessing the event. On the totality of the evidence, the Court concluded that guilt was proved beyond reasonable doubt.

On the map, the investigating officer, PW-9, had not marked the shop from which the child said she had bought popcorn. The Court held that an accused does not gain an advantage from a faulty investigation when otherwise reliable evidence remains. The omission did not undermine the child's testimony, which the Court accepted and which her prompt disclosures supported. This was an assessment of the particular record, rather than a rule that every omission from scene documentation is immaterial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the trial judgment and sentence dated 11 August 2018 in Special Sessions Trial No. 92/2017. Since the prison communication showed that the appellant had already served his entire jail sentence, the High Court directed that no further action was required in the matter. It did not order a new trial or alter the fines, the default term or the trial court's decision to impose no separate sentence under Section 354.

Pawan Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 7611/2018, 31/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (617) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — road-work death — individual contractor responsibility - A motorcyclist died after riding into an open ditch at a culvert diversion which allegedly had no warnings. The contract had passed from TDM Infrastructure to P.D. Agrawal Infrastructure. The subcontract required P.D. Agrawal Infrastructure to take advance precautions for road users' safety and put up traffic signs; site instructions required banners and flags at both ends of the culvert. The applicant claimed to be merely the managing director and relied on authorities against automatic vicarious criminal liability. The power of attorney he had executed described him as a partner. The Court treated him as an owner responsible for executing the work and, on these facts, refused to quash the prosecution. This characterization did not establish a general rule that a person's designation alone creates personal criminal guilt.

Negligent death — direct causation - Sushil Ansal v. State through CBI, (2014) 6 SCC 173, was quoted for the requirement under Section 304A IPC that rashness or negligence must be a direct, immediate and proximate cause of death. In the cinema-fire case, the safety breaches which delayed escape, rather than simply the initial fire, were identified as the operative causa causans. That assessment depends on the circumstances of the occurrence. The Court applied the test to the alleged failure to put up site signs, which caused the road user to ride straight into the ditch, and held that interference under Section 482 was unwarranted.

Non-joinder of company - Citing Sections 190, 193 and 319 CrPC, the Court observed that the company could be arraigned later. It did not itself summon the company or determine the separate preconditions for exercising those powers. The quoted prayer describes cognizance under Section 304/34 IPC, whereas the judgment describes the registered FIR as being under Section 304A/34 IPC. The application was dismissed, and the interim order dated 9 March 2007 was vacated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A culvert on the Sagar–Damoh–Jabalpur Road was being strengthened or widened under a contract originally awarded to TDM Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. and sublet to M/s P.D. Agrawal Infrastructure Ltd. A diversion and open ditch allegedly had no warning signs, banners or flags. Motorcyclist Charan Singh proceeded straight, fell into the ditch and died. Paragraph 2 describes FIR Crime No. 66/2005 at Katangi, Jabalpur, as being under Sections 304A and 34 IPC. The quoted prayer in the applicant's Section 482 petition, however, describes the JMFC's cognizance order dated 29 December 2006 as being under Section 304/34. The applicant sought quashing of the FIR, charge sheet and cognizance order, and his discharge. He asserted that he was the infrastructure company's managing director, that the company alone had executed the work, that no Penal Code provision automatically made him vicariously liable and that the company itself had not been arraigned. The State relied on the cinema-fire negligence decision in Sushil Ansal against him. The case diary contained a power of attorney executed by the applicant which described him as a partner of the infrastructure concern. The subcontract assigned to that concern the duty to take precautions for road users' safety during shoulder and culvert work. Specific site directions required conspicuous signs and flags at both ends. The applicant had obtained anticipatory bail on 6 November 2006, but the Court recorded that he had not appeared before the investigating officer or the trial court. The charge sheet was filed in his absence under Section 299 CrPC, and a perpetual warrant followed on 30 March 2010. Counsel submitted that he later surrendered on 23 October 2018 while the trial court was awaiting the result of this petition. The judgment uses the terms 'company' and 'firm' for the concern and 'partner' for the applicant, without explaining the concern's formal corporate status.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicant cited Maksud Saiyed v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 668; Sunil Bharti Mittal v. CBI, (2015) 4 SCC 609; Sharad Kumar Sanghi v. Sangita Rane, (2015) 12 SCC 781; Shiv Kumar Jatia v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2019) 17 SCC 193; and Ravindranatha Bajpe v. Mangalore SEZ, (2022) 15 SCC 430, as authorities for his objection to attributing a company's crime vicariously to a director absent a statutory basis and personal role. He also cited S. Rajgopal v. State of Haryana (P&H High Court, CRM-M-35036/2019, 2 April 2024).

The State relied on Sushil Ansal v. State through CBI, (2014) 6 SCC 173, which the Court extensively quoted and applied. In the Uphaar cinema-fire prosecution, the Supreme Court identified numerous established breaches of safety duties. They included dysfunctional public-address and emergency lighting systems, missing or blocked exits and passageways, bolted doors and inadequate evacuation assistance. Under Section 304A IPC, the rash or negligent act must directly, immediately and proximately cause death. An event without which the deaths would not have occurred is not necessarily the operative causa causans. In that case, the victims died of asphyxiation because safety breaches prevented their timely escape from smoke. The causal inquiry therefore focused on those impediments rather than simply on where the fire had begun. The Supreme Court emphasized that the immediate causal factor must be identified in the circumstances of each case. It discussed Kurban Hussein, Bhalchandra Waman Pathe, Bhalchandra v. State of Maharashtra and Rustom Sherior Irani as different applications of that principle. Those cases appear within the Sushil Ansal extract; they were not individually analyzed or newly decided by this Bench. The High Court applied the duty-and-causation analogy to the missing road signs: without advance signs and flags at the culvert, the motorcyclist continued into the ditch. The Supreme Court's cinema decision concerned concurrent findings after trial; the present case was a pre-trial review under Section 482 of the allegations and contract materials.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the application to quash the FIR, charge sheet and cognizance order. The judgment describes the registered offence as Section 304A read with Section 34 IPC, but quotes a prayer describing cognizance under Section 304/34 IPC. The Supreme Court discussion it adopted analyzes Section 304A's requirement of a direct, immediate and proximate causal connection to the negligent death. The judgment refers to Section 299 CrPC when recording that the charge sheet was filed in the applicant's absence after he was treated as absconding. The Court mentioned that history and the warrant but did not adjudicate a challenge to that procedure. Sections 190, 193 and 319 CrPC were cited together as possible routes for adding the company as an accused later. Their distinct stages and statutory conditions were not applied to an actual summoning application. The contractual safety clause and site instructions supplied the specific duty alleged; they did not themselves enact a statutory offence.

4. Issues : (i) Could the applicant avoid prosecution for negligent death merely by presenting himself as a salaried managing director rather than an owner personally connected with the road work and its safety precautions? What did the power of attorney and subcontract show for the limited quashing inquiry? (ii) Was the omission of traffic signs and other prescribed warnings sufficiently connected with the road user's fatal fall to warrant trial under the direct-and-proximate-causation principle in Sushil Ansal? (iii) Did the infrastructure concern's absence as an accused necessarily invalidate the applicant's prosecution, or could its arraignment be considered later?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found that the power of attorney in the case diary described the applicant as a partner of P.D. Agrawal Infrastructure Ltd., contrary to his claim of being merely its managing director. It described a partner as an owner, as distinct from a paid managing director. The judgment itself uses the terms 'company' and 'firm' without explaining the corporate form. For the Section 482 inquiry, the Court treated the applicant as an owner responsible for executing the road work. TDM's terms for subletting the work expressly required advance safety precautions and traffic signs for culvert work. Site instructions required banners and flags at both ends. The Court noted that these precautions had not been taken. It also stated that, because the applicant had not participated in the investigation, the police had not collected material about the extent of his liabilities. These were reasons for declining pre-trial quashing on this record; they did not impose personal criminal liability generally on every officer for every corporate omission.

Sushil Ansal supplied the second part of the analysis: to establish a negligent death, a remote condition is insufficient. The accused's rash or negligent breach must be the direct and proximate operative cause. The Court compared the absence of evacuation safeguards which caused fatal smoke exposure with the allegation that missing diversion signs had caused the rider to continue into an open ditch. It concluded that the contractor concern, partially owned by the applicant, had breached its site-safety duties and that the accident resulted from the missing signs. It held that Sushil Ansal covered the case and that interference under Section 482 was unwarranted. This causal conclusion was reached at the quashing stage, without a conviction after trial or a final resolution of the order's differing references to Sections 304A and 304. On non-joinder, the Court stated that the company could be added later under Sections 190, 193 and 319 CrPC. It therefore did not treat the company's initial omission as conclusive.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC. No part of FIR Crime No. 66/2005, the charge sheet or the JMFC's cognizance order dated 29 December 2006 was quashed, and no discharge was ordered. The High Court vacated its interim order dated 9 March 2007.

P.D. Agrawal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 445/2007, 23/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (618) Prev Next

Headnote :- Rape — sole testimony of prosecutrix - Corroboration is not a legal precondition to conviction where the prosecutrix's evidence is credible and inspires confidence. Aslam v. State of U.P., (2014) 13 SCC 350, State of Haryana v. Basti Ram, (2013) 4 SCC 200, and Narendra Kumar v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2012) 7 SCC 171, were considered together. The qualifications stated in those authorities remain applicable: the Court must examine the whole evidence and material improbabilities, may seek assurance where compelling reasons exist, and cannot presume that every allegation is true. The prosecutrix described each participant's role in the assault at night, promptly told her mother-in-law and husband, and reported the matter to the police about fourteen hours later. Her detailed cross-examination did not establish the suggested retaliatory motive concerning ₹3,000. Her husband denied the alleged earlier police custody, and no document supported it. Her account was accepted beyond reasonable doubt.

Evidence — character, injury and burden - The quoted discussion in Narendra Kumar rejects any assumption that a survivor's sexual history establishes consent or destroys credibility. Under the discussion of Sections 53–54 of the Evidence Act, character is irrelevant unless character itself has properly been placed in issue. Lack of external injury alone does not disprove rape. The authority also protects the accused: serious inconsistency or improbability cannot be overlooked, and the prosecution must prove every element beyond reasonable doubt. The examining doctor was unavailable. The medical report recorded no external injury, while the FSL detected human sperm and semen in the petticoat and vaginal samples. There was insufficient material for further semen examination in the specified samples. These findings did not identify an assailant. The Court relied principally on the credible account; its description of a prior sexual history was not elevated into a permissible adverse inference.

Appeal - The acquittal in 2001 had been set aside on the prosecutrix's revision, and the trial had been remanded. Co-accused Ramdeen died while the revision was pending. After further examination of witnesses and the conviction in 2012 under the then-applicable Section 376(2)(g) IPC, the present appeal under Section 374 CrPC was dismissed and the ten-year sentence affirmed. Since actual completion of the sentence was uncertain, the appellant was to serve any remainder if he had not already been released after serving the sentence. If he had, no further custody action was required.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On the night of 5 November 1994, the prosecutrix was visiting her parents-in-law at village Kuleth for Diwali. At about 11 p.m., she went outside to answer the call of nature. She alleged that Petu and Ramdeen caught her, gagged her mouth and raped her in turn, and that Ramdeen warned her against reporting the incident. She had previously complained that Ramdeen had molested her. After returning, she told her mother-in-law. The next morning, without bathing, she went to her husband. A report was lodged at Mahila Thana Gwalior at about 1 p.m. on 6 November, about fourteen hours after the alleged incident. The police station was about 18 km away. The matter was transferred to the police station with territorial jurisdiction, Tighra, as Crime No. 51/1994 under Section 376/34 IPC. Clothes, vaginal slides and swabs were sealed and sent to the FSL. A site memo was prepared, and the two accused were arrested. They were initially charged under Section 376(1); the charge was amended to Section 376(2)(g) in July 1999. Eight prosecution witnesses testified, and the accused called none. The Sessions Court acquitted both accused on 25 July 2001. In the complainant's Criminal Revision No. 413/2001, the High Court set aside the acquittal as to Petu and remanded the case in October 2011. Ramdeen had died during the revision, which abated as to him. Petu surrendered and was initially released on bail. Repeated adjournments when the prosecutrix attended led to cancellation of bail and his arrest in April 2012. Two witnesses concerned with medical examination and investigation were further examined; the prosecutrix and her husband were later further cross-examined. Another witness was not recalled at defence counsel's request, and the doctor who had examined the prosecutrix could not be served. The appellant made a statement under Section 313 CrPC. On 24 December 2012, the trial court convicted Petu under the then-applicable Section 376(2)(g) and sentenced him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default. In this appeal under Section 374 CrPC, he challenged reliance on the prosecutrix's sole testimony without corroboration. The trial court's certificate credited about three years, four months and twenty-two days of custody under Section 428 CrPC. He had remained in jail after conviction without seeking suspension of sentence. The appellate record suggested, but did not establish, that his ten-year term might already have been completed.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aslam v. State of U.P., (2014) 13 SCC 350, was directly quoted for the principle that, on consideration of the prosecution case as a whole, a rape survivor's testimony which inspires confidence may be acted on without requiring formal corroboration. Through its discussion of Rajinder v. State of H.P. and State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh, it emphasized that a victim is not an accomplice and that minor, immaterial differences do not displace otherwise reliable evidence. Assurance may be sought as a matter of prudence in the particular circumstances; it cannot be demanded as an inflexible rule. The authority did not permit uncritical acceptance of every account: probability and reliability remain essential. After reviewing the complainant's account and the other evidence, the Court applied this rule to reject the categorical objection based on lack of corroboration. State of Haryana v. Basti Ram, (2013) 4 SCC 200, was also quoted. Referring to Vijay v. State of M.P. and State of Rajasthan v. Babu Meena, it stated that a rape survivor's sole testimony, if reliable and credible, can sustain a conviction. This reinforced the same principle without introducing a separate factual test. The High Court considered it with the other authorities, rather than treating the absence of a further eyewitness as fatal. Narendra Kumar v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2012) 7 SCC 171, received the longest quotation and supplied important limits. Its paragraphs 20–21 permit conviction on trusted solitary evidence and allow the Court to seek assurance as a matter of prudence where compelling reasons exist. Paragraphs 22–25 require scrutiny of serious inconsistencies, material improvements and inherent improbability, and caution against presuming that every survivor's account is invariably correct. Paragraphs 26–27 reject inferences of consent or untrustworthiness based on sexual history or supposed character and refer to Sections 53 and 54 of the Evidence Act. Paragraphs 28–29 require sensitive but rigorous evaluation, preserve the presumption of innocence and leave the burden of proving each ingredient beyond reasonable doubt on the prosecution. The present Court adopted the combined principle that corroboration is not mandatory, then tested the witness's account and the particular financial motive suggested by the defence. Other cases named within the quotations included Raju, Tameezuddin and Gurmit Singh.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the appeal against conviction, and Section 428 governed credit for the earlier detention certified by the trial court. Section 376(2)(g) IPC was the applicable gang-rape provision under which the appellant was convicted and sentenced to ten years for the 1994 incident. A charge under Section 376(1) had first been framed and was amended in 1999; the initial FIR had cited Section 376/34. The judgment describes these distinct procedural stages without replacing the historical IPC provisions with later amendments. Section 313 CrPC governed the accused's statement on remand. Sections 53 and 54 of the Evidence Act appeared in the quoted analysis of character evidence in Narendra Kumar. The medical report was proved through the prosecutrix because the examiner could not be traced. The FSL report and witness testimony were assessed for their actual evidentiary value, without a newly articulated statutory presumption.

4. Issues : (i) Could the conviction after remand stand on the prosecutrix's own testimony, or did the law require independent corroboration because no separate eyewitness to the isolated assault at night had testified? (ii) Was her account credible on the full record, considering the timing of her disclosures and the FIR, the earlier allegation against Ramdeen, her mother-in-law's and husband's evidence, the lengthy cross-examination, the absence of visible injuries, the unavailable examiner, the FSL limitations and the suggested false-implication motive concerning a debt? (iii) How should the authorities' caution against inferences from sexual history be reconciled with the prosecution's continuing burden to prove every element beyond reasonable doubt? (iv) What order concerning any remaining imprisonment was appropriate given the uncertainty about actual completion of the sentence? The Court was not deciding Ramdeen's guilt afresh after his death and the abatement of the revision as to him.

5. Ratio / Findings : Following Aslam, Basti Ram and Narendra Kumar, the Court held that corroboration was not mandatory if the survivor's evidence was credible and inspired confidence. It did not infer truth merely from the accusation. The incident occurred at night; the FIR was recorded about fourteen hours later, after travel and disclosures to family. The prosecutrix's detailed narrative assigned separate roles to the two accused and was substantially repeated in court. Her mother-in-law described the immediate report that night; a variation in her recollection of the time did not displace the core account. Her husband recounted the disclosure the next morning. The officer who recorded the FIR and the seizure and investigation witnesses explained the procedural chain. The examiner could not be traced, and the medical report did not provide positive identification. It recorded no external injury and gave no definite opinion. The FSL report, Ex. P/9, found human sperm and semen in the petticoat and vaginal slides or swabs, but insufficient material for further semen examination of the specified samples. The Court relied principally on the survivor's accepted testimony; it did not find that the samples had been matched to Petu.

The defence suggested that Ramdeen had spent ₹3,000 to obtain the husband's release from police custody, had demanded repayment and had consequently been falsely accused. The survivor denied this account. Her husband stated that he had never been arrested, and no custody document was produced. The Court found the particular motive unproved and the cross-examination insufficient to undermine the assault narrative. The judgment also made an observation based on chastity about the improbability of fabricating rape for that sum. Its holding remains confined to the credibility assessment; it does not create a presumption that complainants never make false allegations. Narendra Kumar expressly preserves protection against false implication, the need to examine serious contradictions and the prosecution's own burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt. The Court concluded that Petu and Ramdeen had committed the alleged assault, while the operative conviction before it was Petu's; the revision as to Ramdeen had abated on his death. Finding the charge proved beyond reasonable doubt, the Court affirmed the conviction and sentence under Section 376(2)(g).

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the conviction and sentence imposed by the 8th Additional Sessions Judge on 24 December 2012 in Sessions Trial No. 07/1996. It did not establish the appellant's precise release date or grant a fresh suspension of sentence. It directed that, if the ten-year jail term had not been completed, the appellant must serve the remainder. If he had already been released after serving the sentence, nothing further was required. The fine of ₹1,000 and the two-month default term were not varied.

Petu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 296/2013, 14/08/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (619) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty — individualized accusation at charge stage - The wife alleged demands for dowry and her salary after the marriage in 2012, withholding of jewellery, monthly payments to her in-laws, and a later demand for ₹10 lakh for business, accompanied by threats. Eight applicants challenged the charges framed by the JMFC under Section 498A IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. Applicant 3, the elder brother-in-law living in Shivpuri, and applicants 5–8, living in Guna, faced vague collective allegations without individual roles being specified. The alleged newspaper action was attributed to the husband. Applying K. Subba Rao v. State of Telangana (CrA 1045/2018), Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand and Neelu Chopra v. Bharti, (2009) 10 SCC 184, the Court held that family relationship and omnibus allegations alone could not require these five applicants to face trial. Their prosecution in Criminal Case No. 500/2017 was quashed, their charges were set aside, and they were discharged.

Prima facie charge — husband and parents-in-law - The complaint and police statement also contained allegations directly concerning the husband and his parents. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, explains that cases concerning distant relatives do not, by themselves, justify quashing where the complaint, taken as true, discloses a triable case against the husband or parents. Proof of actual cruelty remains a matter for trial. The Court found sufficient prima facie material against applicants 1, 2 and 4 and retained their charges, without finding them guilty. The extract from Arnesh Kumar concerning arrest and misuse was quoted as a caution; it was not made the basis of an arrest order. The revision was allowed for applicants 3 and 5–8 and dismissed for applicants 1, 2 and 4.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Respondent 2 married applicant 4 on 1 May 2012. Her FIR alleged that, at the engagement, her father gave ₹2 lakh, a gold chain, a gold ring and a motorcycle, and that he gave further articles and ₹4 lakh at the marriage. When she reached the matrimonial home, the jewellery earlier provided by her in-laws was taken back on the assertion that it belonged to applicant 8 and would be returned later. She alleged pressure for dowry, opposition to her studies and mental harassment by the applicants. She returned to her parental home to study, joined the police as a Sub-Inspector in 2013 and stated that her father had paid for her training. She alleged that the applicants then pressed her to surrender her salary. She stated that she paid ₹10,000 –15,000 a month to her in-laws, while her vehicle loan required monthly payments of ₹13,000. She attributed demands for money and pressure to live in Shivpuri to her unemployed husband, and alleged threats to defame her socially when she could no longer continue the payments. According to the FIR, the applicants came to her room at Ashok Nagar on 14 February 2017 and demanded ₹10 lakh for business. She alleged that her husband told her he had already made a false police complaint and threatened to defame her through news publication. She also alleged that he later disseminated false news which affected the discharge of her duties. Her statement under Section 161 CrPC substantially repeated the allegations. Crime No. 110/2017 at Kotwali Ashok Nagar led to a charge sheet under Sections 498A and 506 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961. On 26 May 2017, the JMFC framed charges under Section 498A read with Sections 3/4; the charges recited in this order did not include Section 506. Eight applicants brought a revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. Applicants 1 and 2 were the father-in-law and mother-in-law, applicant 3 was the husband's elder brother, and applicant 4 was the husband. Applicants 5–8 were other in-laws, including spouses. The Court identified applicant 3 as a resident of Shivpuri and applicants 5–8 as residents of Guna. Paragraph 4 of the judgment uses 'respondent No. 8' twice, although the remaining text treats her as applicant 8 and the operative order names her.

2. Precedents — Considered : K. Subba Rao v. State of Telangana (Supreme Court, CrA 1045/2018, 21 August 2018) was quoted for restraint in interference at an interlocutory stage, while permitting intervention where abuse of process is shown. It cites State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, and cautions against drawing distant relatives into matrimonial and dowry prosecutions on omnibus allegations without concrete incidents. The Bench applied this principle to the five relatives whose individual conduct had not been particularized. Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, was quoted on the danger of assuming that all relatives participated in a husband's dowry wrongdoing. Its discussion includes the trial burden of proving an attributed overt act beyond reasonable doubt. The present Court applied its caution about individual accusations when reviewing charges; it did not use the trial standard of proof to determine guilt. Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, following Kans Raj, required specific material supporting the role attributed to relatives, particularly those living away from the matrimonial home, rather than general accusations against all of them. It also cautioned that allegations of dowry harassment following an unnatural death should not be weighed mechanically. The present case was not a dowry-death prosecution, so its application here was confined to the inclusion of relatives without sufficient individual allegations. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan (citation in the judgment: 2013 (1) UC 155) was quoted for quashing extremely vague allegations against separately situated relatives in its particular circumstances, including an extraordinary delay in making the complaint. The present Court did not base its own decision on an identical six-year delay.

Arnesh Kumar v. State of Bihar, (2014) 8 SCC 273, was excerpted on concerns about indiscriminate arrests and misuse of Section 498A. The judgment did not apply that decision's directions on arrest compliance to a disputed arrest. The statistics and rhetoric in the extract were contextual, rather than a separate holding in this case. Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2010 SC 3363, was quoted on careful scrutiny of allegations against relatives who live elsewhere and on ending an abusive trial on its particular facts. Neelu Chopra v. Bharti, (2009) 10 SCC 184, required particulars of each person's acts, rather than mere recitation of the statutory section, and was applied to the relatives whose roles had not been specified. These authorities require individual review; they do not provide for automatic discharge of the husband's entire family. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was then quoted and applied to applicants 1, 2 and 4. Where allegations of cruelty by the husband and parents could establish an offence if proved, the existence of a triable case prevents quashing before trial. Taramani distinguished Neelu Chopra, Manoj Mahavir and Geeta Mehrotra on their records and expressly rejected reading them as an inflexible rule. The Bench relied on this distinction to retain the charges against the husband and his parents.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provided revisional jurisdiction over the JMFC's charge order. Section 498A IPC concerned the charge of matrimonial cruelty, accompanied by the dowry provisions in Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961. The FIR and charge sheet included Section 506 IPC, but the impugned charges and operative relief in this revision were stated under Section 498A and Sections 3/4. The order did not purport to decide a separate charge under Section 506. Section 161 CrPC concerned the recorded police statement which was consistent with the complaint. At the stage of framing charges, the judgment examined whether the allegations against each applicant provided prima facie material. It did not determine whether every element of cruelty or each dowry offence had been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The Supreme Court passages on dowry death and arrest law provided cautions; they were not used to decide an uncharged dowry-death offence or a question of arrest.

4. Issues : (i) Did the FIR and Section 161 statement specify the conduct of the elder brother-in-law and four other separately resident relatives sufficiently to sustain the charges dated 26 May 2017? Or were the collective allegations of dowry demands, salary demands and harassment insufficient despite the family relationship? (ii) Were the husband and his parents differently situated because the complaint alleged direct pressure in the matrimonial home, retention of jewellery, demands for payments and the husband's specific later actions, leaving a prima facie case for trial? (iii) What was the precise effect of the revision on each applicant's charges under Section 498A and Sections 3/4? The Court did not decide actual guilt, a question of arrest or the independent ingredients of an unframed charge under Section 506.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applicants 3 and 5–8 were not in the same factual position as the husband and his parents. The elder brother-in-law lived in Shivpuri, and the other four were shown as residents of Guna. The complaint and police statement made vague collective accusations without specifying individual conduct sufficient to require these applicants to face trial. The Court also found no apparent reason, on the allegations, for them to demand the complainant's salary. It attributed the alleged publication of false news to the husband. Guided by K. Subba Rao, Kans Raj, Monju Roy, Chandralekha, Preeti Gupta and Neelu Chopra, it held that prosecution of these five applicants under Section 498A and the Dowry Prohibition Act was unwarranted and set aside their charges. It did not hold that living elsewhere alone creates immunity. The result depended on the absence of a sufficiently specified role on this record. As to the father-in-law and mother-in-law, applicants 1 and 2, the complaint described pressure in the matrimonial home and issues concerning money and jewellery. Applicant 4 was the husband and was specifically accused of repeated demands, harassment and the later threatening action concerning publication of news. The Court relied on Taramani Parakh's distinction between allegations which do not specify distant relatives' roles and a complaint disclosing a triable case against the husband and parents. It found prima facie material for framing charges against these three applicants. Whether the complainant had actually been subjected to cruelty remained a matter for trial. The Court retained the charge order only as to applicants 1, 2 and 4. It did not convert its prima facie finding into a conviction or determine the defence evidence after trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the JMFC Ashok Nagar's charge order dated 26 May 2017 in Criminal Case No. 500/2017 as to applicant 3, Naresh, and applicants 5, Praan Singh Kashyap; 6, Vidya Bai; 7, Inder Singh; and 8, Rani alias Janki Bai. Their prosecution under Section 498A IPC read with Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act was quashed, and they were discharged. The same charges remained against applicant 1, the father-in-law; applicant 2, the mother-in-law; and applicant 4, the husband. The revision succeeded for the five discharged applicants and failed for the other three. The entire matrimonial prosecution was not quashed. Phitorilal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.R. no. 3716/2017, 11/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (620) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 — mandamus to register FIR - The petitioner alleged police inaction on her written complaint dated 17 August 2023 and the communication dated 4 December 2023. The duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence is distinct from the remedy available to an informant when the police fail to act. Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, directs the aggrieved person to the Magistrate by a complaint under Sections 190/200 CrPC. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, describe escalation to the SP under Section 154(3) and recourse to a Magistrate under Section 156(3) for registration or proper investigation. The Magistrate may monitor the investigation but cannot investigate personally. The writ petition was dismissed with liberty to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS, as recorded in the order.

Exceptional Constitutional power - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, preserves the power to issue directions under Article 226 in the rarest of rare cases. The High Court must be convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide and that clear abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII are made out requiring its intervention. Even then, the Court cannot dictate the precise method of investigation. The MP Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria (WA 247/2016, 20 December 2016) permits refusal of a mandamus for FIR registration where remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been exhausted, subject to the recognized alternative-remedy exceptions in Whirlpool. It distinguishes Lalita Kumari's rule requiring registration of cognizable information from an automatic remedy by direct writ petition. The petition was dismissed with liberty to pursue the Magistrate complaint remedy; no factual determination was made on the proposed underlying offence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Phool Bai filed a petition under Article 226 seeking a direction to respondent 2 to take expeditious action against an allegedly erring person pursuant to a communication dated 4 December 2023. She also sought an expeditious decision on her pending written complaint dated 17 August 2023, incidental relief and costs. Her counsel stated that she had approached the authorities for registration of an FIR, but no action had followed. The State opposed writ relief because she could file a complaint before the trial Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, which the order identifies alongside Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. The Court framed the question as whether a writ could compel police registration when complaint and Magistrate remedies were available.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted. It affirms the police duty to register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence, but distinguishes that duty from the remedy for refusal. Sections 190 read with 200 CrPC provide for a complaint to the Magistrate. The decision reconciled the authorities on the duty to register, including Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary, with those addressing the remedy, including AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari. A direction about the police duty did not, by itself, establish that a direct writ petition was the proper remedy for every informant. The present Court adopted this procedural distinction; it did not decide the merits of Phool Bai's undisclosed allegations.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted. Its paragraphs 41–42 preserve intervention under Article 226 in the rarest of rare cases. The High Court must be convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide and that clear abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII are made out requiring its intervention. The quoted passages also prohibit the Court from dictating how officers must investigate. Ordinarily, an informant facing police inaction should use Sections 190/200. Through Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, the passage describes the Magistrate's possible courses after evidence on the complaint: dismissal if no offence is disclosed, cognizance and process if an offence appears prima facie, or a direction for police investigation where appropriate. The Court applied the ordinary-remedy rule and dismissed the petition with liberty to approach the Magistrate.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted. It describes a written application to the SP under Section 154(3), followed by an application under Section 156(3) if the FIR is still not registered or proper investigation is not undertaken. A Magistrate who finds a prima facie case may direct registration or proper investigation and may monitor it. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, was also quoted. Applying Sakiri Vasu, it explains that the Magistrate may recommend a change of investigating officer to the SP where necessary, but cannot investigate personally. It discourages routine petitions under Article 226 which bypass this effective remedy. The present Court treated these procedures as alternative statutory remedies; it did not appoint or change an investigating officer.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. (MP High Court Division Bench, WA 247/2016, 20 December 2016) was quoted and followed. It holds that mandamus to compel compliance with Section 154 may be refused where the informant has not pursued Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200. This is subject to the four alternative-remedy exceptions which the quoted Division Bench passage attributes to Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. It also explains that Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, concerns the police duty to register cognizable information. That duty does not confer an unconditional entitlement to mandamus under Article 226 without pursuing statutory remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 provides the constitutional writ power. Section 154 CrPC concerns registration of information about a cognizable offence, and Section 154(3) provides for approaching the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) permits the Magistrate to direct and supervise investigation within the provision's legal scope. Sections 190 and 200 provide the route for a complaint and cognizance, with inquiry and possible process or dismissal as described in the quoted Supreme Court passages. Section 203 was mentioned there for dismissal where no offence appears. The quoted exception concerning Chapter XII CrPC is confined to the rarest of rare cases where investigative power has been exercised mala fide and clear abuse of power and noncompliance with that Chapter are made out requiring intervention. The order itself identifies Section 223 BNSS, 2023, alongside Section 200 CrPC as the petitioner's available complaint remedy.

4. Issues : Did the informant's allegation that the police had failed to act on her written complaint entitle her, on this record, to an Article 226 direction for FIR registration or a police decision? Or should she pursue the available SP and Magistrate remedies? Despite the ordinary rule, did the law preserve exceptional constitutional power where there was clear mala fide investigation or an applicable exception to the alternative-remedy rule?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the request as one for a writ directing registration of an FIR. Aleque Padamsee establishes the police duty to register cognizable information, but police inaction ordinarily requires the aggrieved person to approach the Magistrate under Sections 190/200; it does not automatically justify writ mandamus. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe describe the route in greater detail: the SP under Section 154(3), then the Magistrate under Section 156(3) for registration or proper investigation, with monitoring subject to a prima facie judicial assessment. The quoted passage from Divine Retreat Centre preserves intervention under Article 226 in the rarest of rare cases. The High Court must be convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide and that clear abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII are made out requiring its intervention. Even then, the Court cannot dictate how the investigation must be conducted. Shweta Bhadauria supplies binding Division Bench guidance that available alternative remedies can bar mandamus unless the exceptions in Whirlpool apply. Lalita Kumari's rule on the duty to register addresses a different question.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. The petitioner was given liberty, if she wished, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS for redress of her grievance. No direction to register an FIR, police inquiry, award of costs or decision on the merits of the alleged misconduct was made.

Phool Bai v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 16013/2024, 02/08/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (621) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 21 — speedy trial and government-witness process - The applicant, seeking regular bail for the seventh time, had been detained since 22 December 2016 on a murder allegation. The High Court had earlier summoned the Vidisha SP because summons and warrants for doctors and police personnel had not been served or returned. On 16 September 2019, the SP promised to remedy the failures. The subsequent trial order-sheets showed repeated failures, unreturned process and examination of only a few witnesses. The SP conceded that neither he nor a gazetted officer had monitored compliance. He could not support his claim that two witnesses had attended on a date when the order-sheet did not record their presence. The lockdown imposed in late March 2020 could not explain the earlier delay. The Court held the prosecution responsible for the stalled trial and ruled that the accused could not be kept in jail indefinitely at its mercy. Bail was granted without deciding guilt.

Bail — COVID-19 conditions - The Supreme Court's orders dated 23 March and 7 April 2020 in In Re Contagion of COVID-19 Virus in Prisons were reproduced on prison decongestion, review by high-powered committees of the categories of prisoners eligible for release, and safe travel or shelter after release. In this case, bail was granted on the independent ground of prosecution-caused delay. The Court required a personal bond of ₹1 lakh. The applicant also had to furnish a surety for the same amount within one month after the lockdown was completely lifted. It also required a medical examination before release, testing if advised, treatment if the test was positive, assisted transit if cleared, and compliance with applicable pandemic directions. The order was to remain effective until the trial concluded, but would cease to have effect on breach of its conditions or a bail jump.

Police accountability - The Court did not initiate contempt proceedings against the SP. It left consideration of possible departmental action against him and the absent official witnesses to the competent authorities. It directed that a copy of the order be placed in the SP's service book and required a compliance report to the Principal Registrar within fifteen days.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Phool Singh was arrested on 22 December 2016 in Crime No. 254/2016 at Lateri Police Station, Vidisha, for alleged offences under Sections 327/34, 506B, 294, 323 and 302/34 IPC. The order records the prosecution allegation that he and the co-accused demanded money from Mukesh to buy liquor. When Mukesh refused, he was allegedly struck on the head with a lathi and died. This was the applicant's seventh application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC, principally on the ground of delay. In an earlier application on that ground, MCRC 37605/2019, the Court had found police failures to execute and return summons, bailable warrants and warrants for doctors and police witnesses. It had called SP Vinayak Verma to explain. In September 2019, he reported that a head constable and court moharrir had failed to enter process in the register, had been suspended and faced a preliminary inquiry. He promised service without further fault and was directed to report progress in the disciplinary proceedings. On that assurance, the previous bail application was dismissed. The trial order-sheets filed with the present application showed further failures to serve or return process and continued absence of official witnesses. Appearing by video conference, the SP disputed several entries, which the Court examined date by date. Process for 19 September 2019 had not been returned. A doctor failed to appear in October despite a bailable warrant, doctors and police witnesses were absent again in December, and later warrants were not returned. Constable Jai Singh eventually testified on 7 March 2020 about a narrow matter in the chain of seizure; other official witnesses remained absent. The nationwide COVID-19 lockdown disrupted a hearing in April, but the Court distinguished that later interruption from the preceding months of police delay. The SP admitted that he had not monitored the case after his undertaking and that his gazetted officer had not complied with the March 2019 police circular. After making baseless assertions about the trial order-sheet and suggesting that closure of the court explained the failure, he apologized and sought permission to withdraw his statement. The Court considered bail before turning to administrative accountability.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court applied Article 21 when examining the actual court process and the applicant's custody. In Re Contagion of COVID-19 Virus in Prisons, Supreme Court suo motu WP(C) 1/2020, orders dated 23 March and 7 April 2020, was quoted and applied to the arrangements for release. Responding to prison overcrowding during COVID-19 and the requirements of Article 21, the order of 23 March directed States and Union Territories to constitute high-powered committees. With representatives of legal services, the home or prison department and prison leadership, these committees were to determine categories eligible for parole or interim bail, considering the seriousness of the offence and other factors. The present High Court granted regular bail because the prosecution had delayed the trial. The Supreme Court's order of 7 April required safe transport home or shelter options for prisoners released during lockdown, with the Union and States arranging measures through their authorities. The High Court applied it by requiring a medical examination, treatment first if infected, and safe transport by the local administration after clearance. Its conditions also required compliance with governmental COVID-19 instructions. The order dated 16 September 2019 in the applicant's earlier bail matter was reproduced as procedural history and as the source of the SP's assurance.

3. Statutes considered : Article 21 of the Constitution protected the detained accused's right to a speedy trial and informed the Supreme Court's orders on prison safety. Section 439 CrPC governed this successive application for regular bail; the ordinary conditions under Sections 437 and 439 were maintained. The underlying IPC Sections 327/34, 506B, 294, 323 and 302/34 described the prosecution's alleged extortion-linked assault, threats, abuse, hurt and homicide. The quoted Supreme Court direction on safe transit mentioned possible measures under the Disaster Management Act, 2005. The police-headquarters circular dated 30 March 2019 was referred to as a monitoring obligation which had not been followed.

4. Issues : (i) Did police failures to serve, execute or return process for government and medical witnesses after a specific undertaking by the SP cause prolonged delay attributable to the prosecution, engaging Article 21? (ii) Given nearly four years in custody and the serious homicide allegation, did that delay justify regular bail without deciding the merits? (iii) What health, surety and transit conditions were required for release during the pandemic, and what consequences would follow a breach? (iv) Did the SP's handling of the matter warrant contempt proceedings or an administrative response? The Court left departmental action to the competent authorities; it did not finally impose disciplinary punishment.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the trial order-sheets rather than accepting the SP's general assurance. One witness had been examined in October 2019 and Constable Jai Singh in March 2020. Nevertheless, process often had not been returned even as unserved, and doctors and police witnesses had repeatedly failed to appear. The SP's claim that two witnesses had attended on 4 December 2019 was unsupported by any record of their presence or their signatures. The issue of fresh arrest warrants was inconsistent with a witness having attended and merely been bound over. The SP could not explain the other absences or how the April lockdown could account for missed dates before it. He admitted that he had not monitored the case after 16 September 2019; nor had the gazetted officer exercised the oversight required by the circular. His eventual apology did not remove the objective delay. The Court noted the applicant's custody since December 2016, the few witnesses examined over an extended period and the prosecution's failure to secure the attendance of its own official witnesses. It held the prosecution responsible for the delay and found indefinite continued custody as an undertrial untenable. It expressly refrained from commenting on the merits of the homicide allegation. The seventh bail application therefore succeeded.

The Supreme Court's prison orders supplied release arrangements and public-health conditions, rather than the decisive justification for bail in this Section 302 case. The applicant had to furnish a personal bond of ₹1 lakh to the available trial court, CJM or remand magistrate. He also had to furnish a surety for the same amount within one month after complete lifting of the lockdown. Before release, the jail had to obtain an examination by a competent doctor and arrange testing if advised. If the test was positive, the applicant was to be sent for treatment. If infection was not suspected or the test was negative, safe travel home was to be arranged. He had to comply with governmental pandemic directions and supply a copy of the bail order to the police station with jurisdiction over his residence. The Court stated that breach of the pandemic directions or any other bail condition, or a bail jump, would cause the order to cease to have effect and result in his return to custody. The general statutory conditions remained applicable until the trial concluded. The Court did not initiate contempt proceedings against the SP. It left consideration of departmental action concerning the SP to the competent authority, and concerning the absent doctor and police witnesses to the Chief Secretary and DGP. A copy of the order had to be placed in the SP's service book, and a report was required within fifteen days.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed the seventh application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC. The SP was not adjudged guilty of contempt. The competent authority was left to consider whether his conduct warranted departmental action; the Chief Secretary and DGP were left to consider such action for the nonappearance of doctor and police witnesses. The Chief Secretary was directed to place the order in SP Vinayak Verma's service book and file a compliance report with the Principal Registrar within fifteen days.

Phool Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 36488/2020, 01/10/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (622) Prev Next

Headnote :- Separate trials — evidentiary autonomy - Applying A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner (Criminal Appeal No. 1306 of 2010, decided 29.10.2021), the Court confined Phulle's appeal to his supplementary trial record; evidence adduced there could not be used for or against Pappu @ Matiuddin, who was tried separately, or vice versa, despite simultaneous hearing of appeals.

Related and interested witnesses — credibility - Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, and Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, were applied to reject kinship as an automatic disqualification. Rizan's discussion of Dalip Singh, Masalti and allied decisions required cautious appraisal where an actual foundation for partisanship exists; Mohd. Rojali Ali distinguished a related witness from one with a motive to secure conviction. The nearby shops, family practice, Basheer's name on Jameel's contemporaneous MLC and the consistent core eyewitness account supported presence and reliability, subject to careful scrutiny in view of the hostility.

Identification — evening light and acquaintance - Ramesh v. State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, was applied for its limited rural visibility principle: known persons are not automatically unidentifiable in meagre evening light. The April hour, gas lantern, shop-front location, prior acquaintance and close-range wound features supported an actual opportunity to identify these assailants.

Motive — rival enmity - State of A.P. v. Dr M.V. Ramana Reddy, (1991) 4 SCC 536, Anil Rai v. State of Bihar, (2001) 7 SCC 318, and Sushil v. State of U.P., 1995 Supp (1) SCC 363, were considered and applied: animosity can motivate the crime or false implication, so reliable direct testimony must be scrutinised, not discarded merely for earlier disputes. Here the pending attempt-to-murder cases explained the compromise demand and, on the Court's assessment of the direct evidence, the subsequent killings.

Firearm proof — non-recovery - Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188, Gulab v. State of U.P. (Criminal Appeal No. 81 of 2021, order dated 09.12.2021), and Krishna Gope v. State of Bihar, (2003) 10 SCC 45, were considered for the proposition that recovery of the actual firearm is not indispensable. Five years passed before Phulle's arrest; the accepted eyewitness accounts and firearm injuries meant that non-recovery of the weapon was insufficient by itself to negate guilt.

Public witnesses — non-examination - Ambika Prasad v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2000) 2 SCC 646, including its reliance on State of U.P. v. Anil Singh, was applied to reject the automatic exclusion of otherwise acceptable testimony for want of independent bystanders. Nearby shopkeepers reportedly declined police statements amid enmity; the Court evaluated the actual witnesses, MLC naming the attendant, scene and medical evidence.

Unlawful assembly — two homicidal shootings - Accepting the direct and medical evidence in Phulle's own trial, the Court upheld Section 148 IPC and two counts under Section 302/149 IPC: the armed group arrived to compel a compromise, Pappu shot Imambaksh, and Phulle shot intervening Jameel. Both deaths were medically found homicidal.

Sentence — concurrent life terms and default - Section 427(2) CrPC governed the subsequent life sentence where an earlier life sentence had been imposed in S.T. No. 125/2008. O.M. Cherian v. State of Kerala, (2015) 2 SCC 501, was considered on concurrence of life terms, and Sharad Hiru Kolambe v. State of Maharashtra, (2018) 18 SCC 718, on the separate consecutive fine-default term. The Court affirmed the conviction and substantive sentence, ordered concurrence with the earlier sentence, and preserved consecutiveness of default imprisonment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 21 April 2008 around 7–7:30 p.m., at a shop near Sarsai Tiraha, Bhander, Imambaksh and his son Jameel sustained fatal firearm injuries. The prosecution alleged that longstanding criminal litigation between the families, including a pending Section 307 IPC proceeding, led Pappu @ Matiuddin, his brother Phulle @ Kabuluddin and three other armed men to arrive at Imambaksh's shop to demand compromise. According to eyewitnesses, Pappu fired twice at Imambaksh before the latter could respond; Phulle fired at Jameel when he came to Imambaksh's aid. Imambaksh was declared dead at Bhander Hospital. Jameel was examined there, referred to Gwalior and died during the journey according to the complainant side. The complainant Alibaksh lodged Crime No. 79/2008; the judgment records the investigating officer's time as 23:50 on 21 April, while Alibaksh in testimony described a report at about 1 a.m. after returning from Gwalior.

The police seized earth and several firearm-related items from the scene, prepared a spot map and inquest papers, recorded witness statements and obtained post-mortems. Pappu was arrested and tried earlier; Phulle was arrested years later and faced a supplementary trial. Co-accused Javeli reportedly absconded during his supplementary trial. The present trial examined, among others, Alibaksh (PW1), Nazeer (PW4), Islam (PW5), the doctors (PW6 and PW7), Rashid @ Mouzu (PW8), Basheer (PW10), Shakeel (PW11) and the investigating officer (PW12); Phulle called four defence witnesses. The trial court convicted Phulle under Section 148 IPC (three years' rigorous imprisonment) and Section 302 read with Section 149 IPC on two counts (life imprisonment and ₹1,000 fine with one month's default imprisonment on each count), with the sentences in this case concurrent. He appealed under Section 374 CrPC from the judgment dated 10 January 2018 in S.T. No. 84/2008 (Supplementary). A different supplementary trial, S.T. No. 125/2008, concerning the death of the accused men's father Jainuddin had produced a judgment on 21 December 2016. Pappu's separate appeal was heard simultaneously but reserved for separate judgment.

The defence alleged that related and inimical witnesses had given contradictory accounts, the shop-front was too dark for reliable identification, the FIR was delayed, the countercase lodged by Pappu over Jainuddin's killing prompted a retaliatory accusation, the relevant weapon was not recovered, and no independent bystander was examined. The prosecution supported the trial findings. The Court expressly restricted its evidentiary assessment to this appellant's record.

2. Precedents — Considered : A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner (Criminal Appeal No. 1306 of 2010, decided 29 October 2021) supplied the threshold evidentiary separation between trials of accused arrested at different times. The Court applied it in paragraph 2: no evidence from Phulle's trial could be read for or against Pappu in his separate appeal, and conversely.

On disputed identification at dusk, the Court quoted Ramesh v. State, (2010) 15 SCC 49. That decision declined to reject identification of a known neighbour by villagers solely because the evening light was poor, recognising adaptation to rural lighting. The Court applied that limited principle together with its own findings on the April hour, gas lantern, close-range wounds, open shop-front and prior acquaintance; it did not treat the precedent as dispensing with an inquiry into the actual opportunity to see.

For the related-witness objection, Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, and Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, were quoted for the absence of an automatic adverse inference from familial relationship and the ordinary weight of immediate family evidence. Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, was quoted at greater length: a false-implication plea requires a foundation; the testimony must be assessed cautiously for cogency and credibility, but kinship or partisanship alone does not require rejection or universal corroboration. Its reproduced discussion referred to Dalip Singh, Guli Chand, Vadivelu Thevar, Rameshwar, Masalti, State of Punjab v. Jagir Singh and Lehna. Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, supplied the conceptual difference between a related witness and a witness interested in obtaining a conviction because of benefit, prior enmity or another motive to falsely implicate. Its quoted passage in turn referred to State of Rajasthan v. Kalki, Amit, Gangabhavani, Ganapathi, Dalip Singh and Jayabalan; these nested references supported the quoted distinction and careful reliability inquiry. The Court used this body of law to assess the witnesses' actual presence and core consistency, particularly Basheer's place in the contemporaneous medical record.

On motive and hostility, State of A.P. v. Dr M.V. Ramana Reddy, (1991) 4 SCC 536, warned that bitter animosity may lead to deliberate false implication or sincere but erroneous inference against rivals. Anil Rai v. State of Bihar, (2001) 7 SCC 318, developed both sides of that risk and required anxious scrutiny of inimical witnesses while permitting otherwise convincing testimony. Sushil v. State of U.P., 1995 Supp (1) SCC 363, similarly treated animosity as both possible offence motive and motive to falsely implicate, with cautious consideration of credible direct evidence. The Court applied these propositions to the pressure for compromise and the competing countercase, accepting the direct account rather than automatically inferring guilt or false implication from the enmity.

For the absent firearm, Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188, was quoted for the narrow proposition that conviction does not require recovery of the weapon used, even where ballistic mismatch makes an actually recovered gun unusable as the murder weapon. Gulab v. State of U.P. (Criminal Appeal No. 81 of 2021, order dated 9 December 2021) was quoted to say that non-recovery need not discredit a gunshot prosecution. Krishna Gope v. State of Bihar, (2003) 10 SCC 45, rejected advantage from an accused's concealment and consequent non-recovery. The Court treated these authorities as answering the non-recovery of Phulle's firearm after the five-year interval before his arrest, against direct and medical proof.

Ambika Prasad v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2000) 2 SCC 646, was quoted on the reluctance of independent witnesses to assist investigations or endure repeated court appearances. Its quotation of State of U.P. v. Anil Singh stated that failure to examine all possible public witnesses or obtain independent corroboration does not alone defeat an otherwise true and acceptable prosecution case. The Court applied that conditional proposition after considering the investigating officer's explanation and the credibility of the witnesses actually heard.

At sentencing, O.M. Cherian v. State of Kerala, (2015) 2 SCC 501, was quoted on the unworkability of a fixed prison term following life imprisonment and the concurrent operation of multiple life sentences in its discussion of Section 31 CrPC. The present Court addressed the separate statutory situation in Section 427(2) CrPC: the earlier life sentence and the subsequent conviction here. It then cited Sharad Hiru Kolambe v. State of Maharashtra, (2018) 18 SCC 718, to preserve consecutive operation of the fine-default term.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 148 and 302 read with 149 IPC defined the rioting/armed-group and constructive homicide convictions under review. The two deaths, group arrival, armed conduct and Phulle's own firing were assessed against the trial record; Sections 147 and the Arms Act Sections 25/27 appear in the investigation and earlier co-accused charge background, without separate appellate determination against Phulle. The pending Section 307 IPC disputes supplied alleged motive, not a charge decided in this appeal. Section 374 CrPC supplied the appeal route. Section 427(2) CrPC governed whether a subsequent term or life sentence for one already undergoing life imprisonment runs concurrently; the Court directed concurrence with the earlier supplementary-trial life sentence. It treated fine-default imprisonment separately and consecutively under Sharad Hiru Kolambe.

4. Issues : (i) Which trial evidence could be considered for Phulle, given that Pappu had been tried separately and his appeal was heard simultaneously? (ii) Were the two deaths homicidal and did the admissible eyewitness, medical and circumstantial record prove Phulle's participation in the armed group and the two Section 302/149 counts beyond reasonable doubt, or did the countercase, asserted discrepancies, timing and alleged FIR delay create doubt? (iii) Did the evening light afford identification, and were close relatives affected by hostility, lack of neutral bystanders and non-recovery of Phulle's gun nevertheless reliable on actual scrutiny? (iv) Given the earlier life sentence in S.T. No. 125/2008, what was the operation of the present substantive imprisonment and its fine-default term?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first excluded cross-use of evidence between the later supplementary trial and Pappu's prior trial under A.T. Mydeen. The two doctors' injury descriptions and post-mortem evidence showed firearm wounds, extensive hemorrhage and homicidal deaths of Jameel and Imambaksh. Dr Parihar had examined the injured Jameel and produced his MLC before post-mortem; Dr Shakya dealt with Imambaksh. Their cross-examination raised matters of wound direction, distance and records, including Dr Shakya's concession that he had not written 'homicidal' in the report. The Court nonetheless found each death homicidal and treated wound blackening and tattooing as supporting shooting at close range. These findings supplied objective support but did not establish that any recovered firearm was Phulle's.

Alibaksh described Pappu's compromise demand, two shots at Imambaksh and Phulle's shot at intervening Jameel. Nazeer, Rashid, Basheer and Shakeel gave supporting accounts. Islam arrived after shots; the Court expressly described him as hearsay rather than an eyewitness to these killings, although he observed the injured and said he saw a separate shooting of Jainuddin. The Court considered lengthy cross-examination about the location, shops, visibility, transport, countercase, timings, seized articles and proposed alternative version of mutual firing. Basheer's shop was near the scene on the spot map and his name appeared as attendant in Jameel's 7:40 p.m. MLC. These particulars supported his presence and prompt transport. The order records differences between Alibaksh's account of FIR timing and the investigating officer's 23:50 registration.

The Court rejected the objection that the light was insufficient on a combined factual assessment: April evening, a gas lantern, a non-isolated shop frontage, close-range wound features and prior familiarity among the parties. Ramesh supported its refusal to infer inability to identify solely from rural evening light. It did not dispense with visibility proof. On kinship, it adopted the Supreme Court distinction between related and truly interested witnesses and examined their natural presence and the central consistency of their accounts. The very enmity supporting the defence's false-implication theory also supplied a motive for pressure to compromise; under Ramana Reddy, Anil Rai and Sushil, both possibilities required caution. The Court credited the direct accounts after that scrutiny. Paragraph 52 refers to a separate judgment on the Jainuddin episode. The present appeal's finding as to the shootings of Imambaksh and Jameel is separately grounded in this trial's evidence.

The appellant's weapon was not recovered after his arrest five years later. Rakesh, Gulab and Krishna Gope allowed the Court to assess guilt without treating non-recovery as decisive; it relied on the eyewitness and wound evidence instead. The officer said he had sought statements from nearby shopkeepers, who refused in view of enmity. Ambika Prasad and the Anil Singh principle quoted in it prevented automatic rejection merely because no independent public witness testified. The Court found that Pappu shot Imambaksh and Phulle shot Jameel in the armed group's compromise-demand episode, upheld Phulle's Section 148 conviction and both Section 302/149 counts, and declined to disturb the life terms, the statutory minimum for murder.

Although neither side argued concurrence, the Court addressed it for complete justice. An earlier life sentence arose from the 21 December 2016 judgment in S.T. No. 125/2008, before the 10 January 2018 judgment under appeal. Section 427(2) CrPC supported concurrent operation of the present substantive sentence with the previous sentence; O.M. Cherian's discussion of life terms informed the treatment. The fine-default sentence was specified to run consecutively under Sharad Hiru Kolambe. The direction for concurrent sentences therefore did not extend to the default term.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court has dismissed the appeal under Section 374 CrPC. The trial court's 10 January 2018 conviction and sentence in S.T. No. 84/2008 (Supplementary) were affirmed: three years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 148 IPC and life imprisonment plus ₹1,000 fine with one month's default rigorous imprisonment on each of two Section 302/149 counts, subject to the trial court's concurrence within this case. The High Court directed the substantive sentence in this case to run concurrently with the sentence imposed on 21 December 2016 in S.T. No. 125/2008 (Supplementary), while the default sentence runs consecutively. Phulle remained in jail to serve the balance. A free copy of the judgment was to be supplied to him and the trial record returned with a copy for compliance.

Phulle v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 2567/2018, 07/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (623) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal appeal — merits before sentence - Nagpal Traders v. Davinder Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 431, was applied when counsel argued only for reduction of the sentence to the period already served: the appellate court first reviewed conviction on the evidence and law rather than deciding the sentence without examining the merits.

POCSO — victim age and proof hierarchy - Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, extended Rule 12(3) of the Juvenile Justice Rules, 2007 from juveniles in conflict with law to child victims. The highest-ranked available documentary category takes precedence—matriculation or equivalent proof, then first-attended school birth record, then specified civic certificate; medical opinion follows only absent those documents. The proved school register and certificate supported an age of about fourteen, preferred over a defence ossification estimate of sixteen to eighteen subject to an approximate margin of error. The prosecutrix's oral birth date differed in month from the school entry; either date made her a child on 23 February 2015.

Child sexual assault — testimony and corroboration - The prosecutrix's account of the attack near a well, her sister's evidence of the encounter immediately before the assault, parental evidence of disclosure, medical findings of penetration within 48 hours and FSL detection of semen and sperm supported conviction. The sister had not witnessed rape, and DNA was not performed to identify the semen donor; the Court treated FSL findings as corroborative without treating them as identifying the semen donor and found guilt beyond reasonable doubt on the combined record.

Age of consent — amended IPC threshold - The trial court had described the fourteen-year-old as below sixteen when addressing consent. The High Court identified the 2013 amendment to IPC Section 375 sixthly, which set eighteen as the relevant threshold, while affirming convictions under IPC Section 376(1) and POCSO Section 4 after proof of the assault and child status.

Sentencing — POCSO Section 42 and parallel IPC minimum - For the February 2015 offence, the High Court reasoned that IPC Section 376(1) carried a ten-year minimum after the 2013 amendment, whereas POCSO Section 4 then carried seven years; the trial court imposed one ten-year Section 4 sentence in light of Section 42. The High Court refused to reduce it to the claimed period of over seven years including remission given the parallel IPC minimum. It mentioned the 2019 increase in POCSO's minimum as a later correction of the mismatch, not as a retroactive provision governing the 2015 conduct.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : According to the prosecution case, on 23 February 2015 around 6 p.m., a schoolgirl and her younger sister took cattle to a well in the locality. The appellant Pinki gave the younger sister ₹40 to share and asked her to stand aside. The prosecutrix said he seized and gagged her, took her to a nearby place, raped her and threatened to kill her if she told her family. She returned and disclosed the incident to her parents. They went to the police the next day, explaining that it had become late and they were afraid. The defence suggested a false case related to a dispute over jointly held land, a joint well and money, which the prosecutrix and her father denied. The sister corroborated the encounter and payment but had not seen the alleged rape. The parents testified to the disclosure. The medical examiner observed hymenal tearing, congestion and slight tenderness and opined that penetration had occurred within 48 hours. Slides and clothing from both persons were sent for forensic analysis; semen and sperm were reported on specified exhibits, without DNA comparison to identify the donor. A school admission register and certificate were produced for age; a defence doctor gave an ossification range of sixteen to eighteen.

Following investigation, the trial court framed IPC Sections 376(1), 506 Part II and POCSO Section 4 charges. It found the prosecutrix fourteen and rape proved, convicted under IPC Section 376(1) and POCSO Section 4, acquitted on the criminal-intimidation charge, and, applying POCSO Section 42, did not award a separate IPC rape sentence. By judgment of 4 August 2016 in S.S.T. No. 16/2015 it imposed ten years' rigorous imprisonment and ₹5,000 fine, with three months' default imprisonment, under POCSO Section 4. Pinki appealed under Section 374 CrPC. Counsel said he had been in jail from 24 February 2015 and claimed more than seven years' custody including remission, asking for the period served rather than contesting the merits. The claim is recorded as counsel's submission, not a verified calculation of elapsed calendar time at the June 2021 judgment date.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nagpal Traders v. Davinder Singh, reported at (2017) 11 SCC 431, was invoked and applied for the order in which the appellate questions must be decided: sentence cannot be determined in a conviction appeal without first examining its merits. The High Court accordingly examined the record on its own initiative after defence counsel declined to argue conviction, evaluated the child-status and assault evidence, and only then considered custody-based reduction.

Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, was quoted in detail on age determination. It held that Rule 12 of the Juvenile Justice Rules, 2007, although framed for a child in conflict with law, provides the method for determining a child victim's age. Its hierarchy takes the highest-ranked available category as conclusive: matriculation or equivalent certificate; if absent, the birth-date entry at the school first attended; if absent, a corporation, municipality or panchayat birth certificate; medical opinion only if these documents are unavailable. The High Court adopted this ordering, preferred the school record produced and proved by PW7 to the ossification estimate offered by DW2, and found the prosecutrix fourteen. Its separate observation that the medical range could extend down to fourteen under an approximate error margin reinforced the result, but the documentary priority was the legal basis.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC was the appeal route. The police charged IPC Sections 376(1) and 506 Part II and POCSO Section 4; the intimidation charge ended in acquittal at trial and was not a conviction affirmed in appeal. POCSO Sections 3/4 concerned penetrative sexual assault and punishment. Section 42 governed the interaction of punishment for overlapping IPC and POCSO offences; the trial court awarded a single Section 4 sentence after convicting under both. IPC Section 375 sixthly was amended in 2013 to set eighteen as the age below which consent is immaterial; the High Court corrected the trial court's below-sixteen formulation. The High Court stated that the minimum for IPC Section 376(1) was ten years, while the then operative Section 4 POCSO minimum was seven; the Court recorded that a 2019 amendment subsequently raised POCSO's minimum to ten and did not apply that later increase as the law governing the February 2015 offence. Section 293(i)(iv)(a) CrPC was referred to for exhibiting the FSL report. Section 7A of the Juvenile Justice Act, 2000 and Rule 12 of the 2007 Rules were reproduced as the age-inquiry framework appropriate to the offence date; the Court noted that the 2015 Juvenile Justice Act came into force later. Jarnail Singh supported applying the juvenility-inquiry framework to proof of the victim's minority.

4. Issues : (i) Could a request confined by counsel to a sentence limited to the period already served be granted without review of the conviction merits? (ii) Did the proved school entry establish that the prosecutrix was a child despite a higher radiological estimate, and how did the applicable hierarchy of age proof work for a victim? (iii) Did her account, the limited corroboration from her sister and parents, the MLC and the FSL findings establish penetrative sexual assault by this appellant beyond reasonable doubt, despite absence of DNA comparison and an asserted property-dispute motive? (iv) What age threshold governed consent under the amended IPC, and what was the interaction of the concurrent IPC and POCSO convictions? (v) Could the ten-year sentence be reduced to the appellant's claimed seven-plus years including remission in light of the applicable minimum sentences and Section 42? The trial court's intimidation acquittal was background, not an appellate finding of guilt on that charge.

5. Ratio / Findings : Nagpal Traders required examination of the merits before deciding the sentence; the High Court therefore examined the merits itself. PW1 described the encounter, separation from her sister, attack and threat and rejected the suggested false implication. PW2 corroborated the appellant's arrival and ₹40 payment but was expressly not an eyewitness to rape. PW3 and PW5 recounted their daughter's disclosure and denied the alleged property-dispute explanation. The examining doctor found a torn hymen, congestion and tenderness and gave a penetration-within-48-hours opinion. The FSL report showed semen and sperm on the prosecutrix's panty and slide and the appellant's underwear and slide. The Court acknowledged that no DNA test identified whether sperm in the prosecutrix's vaginal slide came from the appellant. It used the FSL result to corroborate, without treating it as independently identifying the donor, and accepted the victim's account in conjunction with medical evidence beyond reasonable doubt.

The victim described an April birth date, while the proved school record listed a February date in the same year. The judgment used the school date; the difference of two months did not alter the finding that she was about fourteen on 23 February 2015. DW2's ossification report estimated sixteen to eighteen, but under the Jarnail Singh application of Rule 12(3), school documentary proof has priority over a medical estimate in the applicable hierarchy. The Court also noted a roughly two-year medical error range that could reach fourteen. It concluded that the child-status element was proved. The trial court's consent discussion had used a below-sixteen age formulation; the High Court corrected that IPC Section 375 sixthly had been raised to eighteen in 2013. It affirmed both IPC Section 376(1) and POCSO Section 4 convictions.

Only after affirming conviction did the Court decide the sentence request. The trial court had imposed one ten-year term under Section 4 POCSO and no separate IPC term under Section 42. For the 2015 incident, the Court contrasted the then seven-year POCSO Section 4 minimum with the ten-year IPC Section 376(1) minimum following Amendment Act 13 of 2013. It observed that Amendment Act 25 of 2019 later raised the POCSO minimum to ten. The Court considered the claimed custody with remission below the ten-year term and declined reduction on the basis of the parallel rape conviction and the minimum as it described it. It rejected the sole submission seeking reduction of the sentence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the appeal. The 4 August 2016 judgment and sentence of the POCSO Special Judge at Karera in S.S.T. No. 16/2015 were affirmed: convictions under IPC Section 376(1) and POCSO Section 4, one ten-year rigorous-imprisonment term under POCSO Section 4 with ₹5,000 fine and three months' default imprisonment, and no separate sentence on the IPC count under Section 42. The prior acquittal on IPC Section 506 Part II remained part of the procedural history. Pinki was in jail and directed to undergo the whole trial sentence; a free copy of the appellate judgment was to be supplied to him.

Pinki v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 764/2016, 28/06/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (624) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent power — police arrest discretion - D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was applied to refuse a Section 482 CrPC direction that the police arrest persons named in the applicant's registered FIR. The quoted Supreme Court reasoning, including M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, treats Section 41 arrest as a decision involving discretion and caution during investigation even for a cognizable offence, not an inevitable consequence of the FIR. It rejects judicial specification of arrest, seizure or charge-sheet steps and recognises that a lawful investigation can instead end in a closure report. Its discussion of Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, supplies the caution against drastic investigative orders affecting persons who have not been heard.

Investigation — timely lawful conclusion - Section 173(1) CrPC requires completion without unnecessary delay. The Court directed the officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the appropriate steps under law, leaving the outcome—charge sheet or closure report—and arrest decision to the statutory process. It allowed the applicant to bring any grievance to the Superintendent of Police, who would consider it according to law.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Pinky Mahor stated in an application under Section 482 CrPC that Police Station Maharajpura, District Gwalior had registered Crime No. 470/2021 on her complaint for IPC Sections 376D, 506, 507 and 34. She alleged that the police had taken no further action and had not arrested the accused persons. The prayer reproduced in paragraph 3 asks for a direction to the Maharajpura station officer to arrest respondents 2 and 3 promptly. Paragraph 5 expressly addresses that arrest request. No advocate appeared for the applicant when the matter was heard; the State was represented by its public prosecutor. The question was what direction a High Court could properly issue while a registered FIR remained under police investigation.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reproduced and applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488. There, the Supreme Court set aside an unreasoned High Court direction that effectively instructed police to record statements, arrest, seize property and file a charge sheet, describing investigation as the police's statutory domain. It explained that an investigation need not result in any specified arrest, seizure or prosecution: the police may find either sufficient cause for charge sheet or grounds for a closure report. Section 482 power remains confined to its statutory purposes and must be exercised sparingly, with reasons and care for the consequences of observations. The present Court used that principle to decline the applicant's requested direction for arrest and a direction compelling prosecution, while separately requiring timely lawful conclusion under Section 173(1).

Within that Supreme Court passage, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, was quoted on Section 41 CrPC: a police officer may arrest in the statutory situations without warrant, but need not arrest mechanically as soon as a cognizable allegation is reported; necessity, evidence, offence type, liberty and reputation require cautious judgment during investigation. The present Court adopted this constraint as part of its refusal to command arrest. The passage also quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on giving a reasonable opportunity of hearing to persons likely to be seriously affected by an investigative judicial order. That was a qualification to the Supreme Court's criticism of the order before it. Its discussion of the three purposes for which Section 482 may be invoked and the danger of casual higher-court observations likewise informed the Court's restraint.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 376D, 506, 507 and 34 identify the offences recorded in the FIR as alleged, not guilt or legal ingredients determined here. Section 482 CrPC was the invoked inherent jurisdiction; the Court applied its limited role to prevent an instruction dictating arrest or final prosecution while investigation remained in police hands. Section 41 CrPC, through M.C. Abraham as quoted in D. Venkatasubramaniam, concerns discretionary warrantless arrest subject to the statutory grounds and careful judgment, not an obligation arising from every registered FIR. Section 173(1) CrPC expressly requires investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. The resulting police report may be a charge sheet or closure report depending on the evidence and law.

4. Issues : (i) Could the applicant obtain a Section 482 order directing police to arrest the persons she named and effectively require the filing of a charge sheet simply because a cognizable FIR had been registered and she complained of inaction? (ii) What duty to finish an investigation promptly could the Court enforce under Section 173(1) while preserving the police's discretion about arrest and the final report? (iii) What further avenue was left if the applicant continued to have a grievance?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court expressly denied the arrest prayer. D. Venkatasubramaniam, incorporating M.C. Abraham, made clear that Section 41 permits arrest when the statutory grounds and the officer's assessment during investigation warrant it, but does not command a mechanical arrest for every reported cognizable offence. Even a judicial direction couched as proper investigation can unlawfully dictate particular police acts and assume that a charge sheet must follow. The quoted Supreme Court decision stressed the police's domain, the possibility of a lawful closure report, the limits of Section 482 and the need to avoid prejudicial directions affecting persons not heard. The present Court characterized an arrest and charge-sheet command as supervision of the ongoing investigation and refused it.

The Court then applied the distinct obligation in Section 173(1). The officer could not leave the investigation pending unnecessarily. He had to reach a lawful conclusion on whether an offence was made out and file the appropriate final report. It accordingly directed the officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the necessary legal steps. It also stated that the applicant could approach the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior if she had a grievance, with the SP to look into it according to law. Thus the direction addressed timeliness and statutory performance, while leaving the investigative choice itself open.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has finally disposed of the Section 482 application. The Court refused to direct arrest of the accused or compel a charge sheet. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the pending investigation as early as possible and take necessary steps required by law, including the appropriate final report, without a fixed deadline. Pinky Mahor could submit a grievance to the Gwalior Superintendent of Police for consideration according to law.

Pinky Mahor v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 49904/2021, 18/11/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (625) Prev Next

Headnote :- Quashing — prima facie livelihood dispossession allegation - In an IPC Section 306/34 case, the Court refused Section 482 CrPC quashing where the State's account was that the deceased's mother held a government patta for seasonal cultivation of pond catchment land and the applicants, lacking authority, forcibly dispossessed the family by threats. The handwriting report authenticated the suicide note and the Court treated loss of the right to cultivate the land lawfully as capable of depriving the deceased of his livelihood.

Quashing — other possible accused omitted - M/s Suvarna Cooperative Bank Ltd. v. State of Karnataka (Criminal Appeal No. 1535 of 2021, decided 09.12.2021) was quoted and applied: proceedings against persons charge-sheeted on a prima facie case are not invalid simply because other possible participants were not arraigned or charge-sheeted. Section 319 CrPC leaves a trial-stage route if evidence supports adding others.

FIR — explained interval after immediate dehati nalishi - The initial report followed the suicide by one day. The suicide note and comparison material went to a handwriting expert in August 2019, the expert reported in January 2021 that the note was in the deceased's handwriting, and the formal FIR was registered in March 2021. The Court held that, in this sequence, the interval did not prejudice the applicants and did not justify quashing.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramniwas died by hanging on 29 December 2018. His brother Sunil Sahu gave a Dehati Nalishi on 30 December: the family cultivated land in the catchment area of a pond that was seasonally submerged, had lost a mustard crop during heavy rain and said village residents forcibly cultivated the land afterward. The State's position was that the deceased's mother had a government patta allowing cultivation when the land was not under water, and that the applicants dispossessed the family by threatening them. The applicants disputed the family's entitlement and said it was an encroachment on government land. The suicide note, reproduced in the order, complained of land being taken, ongoing threats and the family's plight and named several people. The police obtained handwriting comparisons, including material from the deceased's brother and father to test for fabrication. An expert reported on 30 January 2021 that the note was in the deceased's handwriting. A formal FIR, Crime No. 31/2021 at Police Station Sehrai, Ashoknagar, was registered on 3 March 2021 under IPC Section 306 read with 34. Police later filed a charge sheet and the JMFC at Mungawali took cognizance.

The applicants sought to quash the FIR, charge sheet and proceedings under Section 482 CrPC. They argued that no abetment offence emerged even accepting the allegations, that the formal FIR came too late, and that the authorities had dealt inconsistently with possible co-accused. Counsel asserted that 38 persons were named in the FIR and 32 were charge-sheeted; the order also refers to cognizance against 35 persons and to three remaining outside the proceedings. The State answered that the patta supplied lawful possession, threats and forcible displacement affected livelihood, the note was authenticated after cautious investigation, and prosecution of those charge-sheeted was not invalid merely because others had not been included.

2. Precedents — Considered : M/s Suvarna Cooperative Bank Ltd. v. State of Karnataka and Another (Criminal Appeal No. 1535 of 2021, judgment dated 9 December 2021) was the materially considered Supreme Court authority. The High Court quoted its rejection of a quashing order that had treated a charge sheet against some investigated persons as incomplete merely because other suspected participants were missing. The Supreme Court held that a person charge-sheeted after investigation on a prima facie case cannot obtain quashing just because possible accomplices were not arraigned; if trial evidence warrants, Section 319 CrPC may allow the court to add others. The cited case concerned alleged banking offences under IPC Sections 408 and 409, while this application concerned alleged abetment of suicide. The High Court applied the procedural principle concerning persons not arraigned as accused, not the banking merits, to reject the applicants' argument about persons not charge-sheeted or not brought within cognizance.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC supplied the inherent quashing jurisdiction invoked against the FIR, police report and subsequent proceedings. IPC Section 306 read with Section 34 described the alleged abetment of suicide and joint liability; the Court assessed whether the asserted lawful lease, dispossession, threats, note and investigative material permitted the prosecution to proceed at a prima facie stage. Section 319 CrPC, as explained in Suvarna Cooperative Bank, offers a possible trial-stage mechanism to add persons not originally charge-sheeted if evidence supports it.

4. Issues : (i) On the pleaded and investigated material, did the alleged government lease to the deceased's mother and forcible displacement with threats permit the Section 306/34 prosecution to proceed, despite the applicants' assertion of encroachment? (ii) Could the proceedings against these applicants be quashed solely because other persons named or suspected were not charge-sheeted or cognizance had not been taken against all of them? (iii) Did the interval between the death, immediate Dehati Nalishi, handwriting expert's report and formal FIR cause prejudicial delay warranting quashing?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the State's description of a patta to the deceased's mother for cultivation of seasonally available catchment land as supporting lawful possession for this stage. The applicants did not claim authority to dispossess the family. On that premise, forcibly taking the cultivated land could deprive the deceased of livelihood. The note's handwriting had been attributed to him after comparison designed to exclude fabrication. Together, these matters supported the investigating officer’s conclusion that a prima facie cognizable offence was disclosed and defeated the assertion that the allegations necessarily disclosed no Section 306 case.

The Court then applied Suvarna Cooperative Bank. The investigation and prima facie case against the applicants do not become invalid merely because six persons reportedly were not charge-sheeted or three reportedly were not proceeded against when cognizance was taken. If trial evidence implicates other persons, Section 319 supplies the distinct statutory possibility identified in the Supreme Court ruling.

The timing objection failed on the actual sequence. The brother's Dehati Nalishi followed the 29 December 2018 death on 30 December. The police sent the note and comparison material through a draft dated 7 August 2019; the expert reported on 30 January 2021, and the formal FIR was registered on 3 March 2021 once the investigator accepted the note as genuine and the possession/displacement circumstances as supporting a cognizable case. The Court found no prejudice from the formal registration interval.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the Section 482 application. The Court declined to quash Crime No. 31/2021, the charge sheet or resulting proceedings concerning IPC Section 306/34. The criminal case remained before the competent court for ordinary adjudication.

Pitta and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 53221/2021, 23/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (626) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal-side writ — no predetermined arrest or charge sheet - In an Article 226 petition following registration of an FIR for IPC Sections 406, 420, 494, 498-A and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3–4, the Court declined to direct arrest simply because no suspect had been arrested. It applied the investigative restraint in D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488: the judiciary should not dictate arrests, seizures or charge-sheet filing and the police may lawfully find either grounds for prosecution or for a closure report. The quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explained Section 41 CrPC's cautious discretionary arrest power; the quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, highlighted notice before severe directions affecting persons who have not been heard. Though the cited Supreme Court case addressed Section 482, the High Court applied its principle against dictating investigative steps in this Article 226 proceeding.

Investigation — Section 173(1) timeliness - An officer cannot leave the investigation of a registered case pending unnecessarily. The Court directed completion as early as possible, determination whether an offence was made out and the appropriate final police report—charge sheet or closure—without selecting the outcome or setting a calendar deadline. A grievance to the Superintendent of Police remained available for consideration according to law.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Pooja Jadon filed a writ petition under Article 226 after her complaint led to a police FIR under IPC Sections 406, 420, 494 and 498-A and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The petitioner said the police had neither arrested the accused persons nor concluded the investigation. She sought legal action, fair and impartial investigation, protection of fundamental rights and other just relief. Her counsel argued the complaint of inaction; the State appeared through its government advocate. The Court had to decide whether it could order a specific arrest or prosecution while the FIR investigation remained pending and what limited direction could address the time taken.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reproduced and applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488. In that case the Supreme Court set aside an order directing the police, without adequate reasons, to take particular investigative steps including arrest, seizure and filing a charge sheet. Police have a statutory duty to investigate but discretion to choose lawful investigative measures and may conclude either that a charge sheet is justified or that a closure report is appropriate. The Supreme Court emphasized restrained use of inherent power, reasoned orders and the potential consequences of casual observations. Although that decision analysed the High Court's Section 482 CrPC jurisdiction, the present High Court applied its central warning against supervising investigation to refuse comparable arrest and charge-sheet commands in an Article 226 writ.

D. Venkatasubramaniam quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on Section 41 CrPC: a cognizable accusation permits arrest within statutory grounds but does not oblige a mechanical arrest immediately on registration; an investigator assesses the necessity of arrest during investigation, with careful regard to liberty, reputation, the offence and the accused's situation. That rule directly supported refusal of the requested arrest. It also quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on a reasonable hearing before judicial orders with drastic consequences for affected persons.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was the writ jurisdiction actually invoked. The FIR's IPC Sections 406, 420, 494 and 498-A and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4 were background allegations, not interpreted or held proved. Section 41 CrPC, discussed in the incorporated Supreme Court authority, governs discretionary warrantless arrest subject to its statutory circumstances and careful judgment. Section 173(1) CrPC supplied the express and independently applied duty: each investigation must be completed without unnecessary delay, with the appropriate police report on completion. Section 482 CrPC appears in the cited Supreme Court decision, whose reasoning on judicial restraint in investigation the Court applied by analogy; it was not the petition's jurisdictional basis.

4. Issues : (i) Did Article 226 permit a command to arrest the persons named in the registered matrimonial and dowry FIR or to ensure filing of a charge sheet because investigation had not yet ended? (ii) Could the Court require a timely conclusion under Section 173(1) while leaving the police to decide, on the evidence, whether to submit a charge sheet or closure report? (iii) What recourse did the petitioner retain for a future grievance?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected the requested arrest direction. By applying D. Venkatasubramaniam and the quoted M.C. Abraham passage, it treated the registration of a cognizable FIR as the beginning of a police inquiry, not a mandate for arrest. Arrest is a serious discretionary step affecting liberty and reputation; investigative evidence may or may not warrant it. Likewise, an order prescribing a charge sheet would prejudge the result and supervise the police in a domain committed to their lawful investigation.

The Court then quoted Section 173(1) and applied a distinct, narrower duty: the investigator must not keep the case indefinitely pending, must reach a conclusion on whether an offence is made out and file the appropriate final report without unnecessary delay. The direction to finish as early as possible and take steps required by law left arrest, evidentiary choices and charge-sheet versus closure to police judgment under the statute. Any grievance could be brought to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior for lawful consideration.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has finally disposed of the Article 226 petition. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take necessary lawful steps, submitting the appropriate final report without unnecessary delay. The petitioner was left free to approach the Gwalior Superintendent of Police if aggrieved, for consideration in accordance with law.

Pooja Jadon v. State of M.P. and Others, W.P. no. 2589/2020, 24/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (627) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR non-registration — statutory complaint route - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, accepted the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence under Section 154 CrPC but distinguished that duty from a complainant's route when police fail: a Magistrate complaint under Sections 190 and 200. The quoted decision separated the registration question addressed by Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary from the remedy considered in AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explained escalation under Section 154(3) and Magistrate power under Section 156(3) to direct registration and monitor proper investigation; Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, followed that route in place of an ordinary Article 226 petition. The Court dismissed the direct petition and left recourse under Sections 156(3), 200 and 202 CrPC.

Constitutional investigation control — rare exception - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was considered for its qualified Article 226 power in a clear and rare case of mala fides, abuse and Chapter XII non-compliance; even then the court may require observance of the prescribed procedure but cannot dictate investigative methods. The High Court's Division Bench ruling in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. (W.A. 247/2016, 20.12.2016) held that failure to use alternative remedies ordinarily justified refusal of direct mandamus, subject to the recognised Whirlpool exceptions, and separated Lalita Kumari's police-registration duty from entitlement to bypass those remedies. The present order found no basis to depart from the ordinary Magistrate course.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Poojabai filed Miscellaneous Petition No. 2919 of 2024 in the Jabalpur Bench. The petition sought acceptance of the petition, an impartial inquiry into her complaint and a direction to register an offence against the persons named in her complaint, with other appropriate relief. Counsel said the complaint pointed to a cognizable offence but police had not registered an FIR. The Court framed the issue in paragraph 3 as whether it could direct registration in exercise of Article 226, notwithstanding the Article 227 filing description. The State appeared through a Deputy Advocate General. The petition ultimately turned on the proper remedy for a person complaining of police inaction, not an adjudication of the complaint's truth.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India and Others, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted extensively. It acknowledged the police duty to register a cognizable offence when disclosed by information but separated that obligation from the remedy when police fail to act. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC provide access to a Magistrate complaint. The quoted reasoning explained that Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi), reiterated in Lallan Chaudhary, concerned police action on cognizable information, while AIIMS Employees' Union v. Union of India, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari dealt with the complainant's remedial course.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, supplied a qualification to ordinary restraint: Article 226 intervention may be justified at an aggrieved person's instance in a clear and rare case of mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII CrPC. Even then the High Court cannot prescribe how police investigate; it can insist upon observance of the Code's procedure. The quoted decision also adopted Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre's explanation of a complaint under Sections 190 and 200, in which a Magistrate may inquire, direct police investigation, dismiss under Section 203 or issue process if warranted.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted on the statutory remedies to be pursued in sequence: Section 154(3) written application to the Superintendent of Police after station-level non-registration; if ineffective, Section 156(3) application to the Magistrate, who may direct FIR registration, proper investigation and monitor it. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, followed Sakiri Vasu and stressed that the ordinary complainant should use the Magistrate rather than Article 226. It recognized that, on prima facie satisfaction, the Magistrate can direct a proper investigation, potentially recommend a change of investigating officer, and monitor without personally investigating. The Court applied these authorities in dismissing the petition while preserving the Magistrate avenue.

The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench's Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. and Others (Writ Appeal No. 247/2016, decided 20 December 2016) was quoted as binding guidance from the Division Bench. It said direct mandamus to perform Section 154 duty may be denied for failure to use Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200, unless the four recognised exceptions from Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks apply. It further distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P. on the police's mandatory registration duty from a person's entitlement to immediate writ mandamus without alternative remedy. Whirlpool and Lalita Kumari were referred to within that Division Bench formulation.

3. Statutes considered : The petition's opening says Article 227; the legal question and quoted writ authorities address Article 226. Section 154 CrPC concerns registration of cognizable information and Section 154(3) written recourse to the police superior. Sections 156(3), 190 and 200 supply Magistrate routes for a failure to register or act on a complaint; the final liberty additionally names Section 202. Under the quoted Gangadhar analysis, the Magistrate's inquiry and possible Section 203 dismissal or issuance of process depend on the evidence and procedural stage. Chapter XII CrPC frames the police-investigation obligations and the rare Divine Retreat Centre qualification.

4. Issues : (i) With a complaint said to disclose a cognizable offence and no police FIR, was direct constitutional relief directing registration the proper course? (ii) How do the mandatory police registration duty and the statutory remedies of superior-officer review, Magistrate-directed investigation and private complaint relate? (iii) In what exceptional investigative circumstances may an Article 226 court intervene notwithstanding ordinary alternative remedies, and was one shown here?

5. Ratio / Findings : Aleque Padamsee established the key distinction: the police ought to register cognizable information, yet an informant whose complaint is ignored normally uses the Magistrate complaint route instead of obtaining an immediate writ command. Sakiri Vasu supplied the Section 154(3) superior-officer step and a Section 156(3) application; Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe reinforced the Magistrate's ability to secure and monitor proper investigation on prima facie satisfaction without taking over police duties. Shweta Bhadauria applied the alternative-remedy principle in Madhya Pradesh and preserved recognised writ exceptions, separating police duty under Lalita Kumari from the availability of a direct mandamus. The Court followed the course prescribed by the Division Bench and the Supreme Court, giving liberty to use Magistrate remedies.

Divine Retreat Centre did not impose an absolute bar on Article 226 intervention in an investigation. It permits rare intervention on a clear case of mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII, but forbids a court from specifying the police's investigative methods even then. The record summarized in this order was the petitioner's assertion that her cognizable complaint had not produced an FIR.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the miscellaneous petition. Poojabai was given liberty, if she wished, to approach the competent Magistrate under Sections 156(3), 200 and 202 CrPC for redress of her grievance.

Poojabai v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.P. no. 2919/2024, 28/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (628) Prev Next

Headnote :- Anticipatory bail — accurate state assistance in a remote hearing - With the physical case diary available only to Government counsel during video conferencing, the Court had to rely on counsel's description. He repeatedly identified a notarized instrument as an agreement to sell but read its title as 'Written Sale Deed' when pressed. The Court held an accurate account of the allegations and document in the case diary especially important in that setting, criticized the lapse and accepted the prosecutor's unconditional apology after he said he misunderstood the queries.

Anticipatory bail — sale deed distinguished from agreement - The actual title of the instrument materially affected the Section 438 assessment: the applicants had consented to the mother's notarized sale deed in favour of the complainant for an alleged consideration of ₹9.4 lakh, although counsel had described an agreement to sell; the Court observed the registration requirement for a sale deed of property above ₹100 and apparent stamp-duty evasion. A subsequent notarized deed in favour of the mother's daughter without consideration made the defence's asserted loan-document explanation unpersuasive at this stage. In the totality, pre-arrest bail was refused in the case alleging offences under IPC Sections 420 and 120-B.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants sought first anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC in Crime No. 499/2021 at Madhoganj Police Station, Gwalior, for alleged IPC Sections 420 and 120-B offences. The prosecution alleged that the mother of applicant No. 1 executed a notarized document involving inherited property in favour of the complainant for ₹9.4 lakh, with the applicants standing as consenters, and then executed another notarized document in favour of her daughter Sonam without consideration. The complainant asserted cheating and loss of the payment. The order under challenge described notarized sale deeds, but counsel initially described the first document as an agreement to sell. The State prosecutor repeatedly answered that it was a notarized agreement to sell until the Court required him to read the instrument's title, which he identified as 'Written Sale Deed.' The hearing took place by video conference, with the physical case diary held by Government counsel rather than available for the judge's direct inspection.

The applicants' counsel argued that a loan document had been intended and that the purported sale deed was procured by fraud on the mother and applicants. The Court examined that claim against the later instrument in favour of Sonam. The prosecutor eventually offered an unconditional apology for inadequate assistance, saying he had misunderstood the Court's questions. The issue was whether this limited bail record warranted pre-arrest protection and how accurately the State was required to present the decisive document.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reasoned from the nature of the two instruments, the recorded allegations, the distinction between sale and agreement, and the responsibilities of State counsel in the remote hearing.

3. Statutes considered : Section 438 CrPC supplied the anticipatory-bail jurisdiction. IPC Sections 420 and 120-B were the registered allegations of cheating and conspiracy, not findings after trial. The Court stated that a sale deed concerning property valued above ₹100 requires registration and treated mere notarization as material to its assessment. It also described apparent evasion of stamp duty while observing that stamp duty is payable by the purchaser.

4. Issues : (i) What document did the mother actually execute in favour of the complainant, and could a Section 438 court accept counsel's 'agreement to sell' characterization when the instrument was titled a sale deed? (ii) What obligation of accurate assistance rested on the Public Prosecutor where video conferencing left the physical case diary with Government counsel? (iii) Did the alleged ₹9.4 lakh first transaction, consent by applicants, subsequent deed to Sonam without consideration and asserted loan-document defence justify anticipatory bail? (iv) What practical response to counsel's incorrect description was appropriate after his apology?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court established the document's actual title by requiring counsel to read it aloud. An agreement to sell and a sale deed carry substantially different legal consequences; the judgment states that a sale deed for property worth more than ₹100 must be registered. Here the applicants had admittedly consented to the mother's notarized deed to the complainant. The Court remarked on apparent stamp-duty evasion and asked whether the mother had actually accepted ₹9.4 lakh, but did not resolve that contested payment conclusively. It then considered the prosecution's allegation of a later notarized deed in favour of her daughter Sonam without consideration. If the first instrument had merely been an unintended loan document procured by fraud, the Court found no plausible explanation in counsel's submission for executing the later deed in favour of Sonam. In the totality it found no fit case for pre-arrest bail.

The video-conference setting was also material. Because only counsel physically possessed the case diary, the Court could not check the document during the hearing and depended on a faithful account. It found the prosecutor had failed his duty to state the allegations and nature of the document correctly, noting either inability to understand or possible deliberate suppression. Both State and applicant counsel had used the agreement description. After the prosecutor said he misunderstood and apologized unconditionally, the Court accepted the apology and expressed the hope that he would understand the duties attached to the Advocate General's office.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the first application for anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC. The State prosecutor's unconditional apology for inadequate assistance was accepted.

Poonam Bhadoriya and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 64007/2021, 17/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (629) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR non-registration — police duty and complainant's remedy - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was considered for the distinction between Section 154 CrPC's police duty on cognizable information and the complainant's remedy under Sections 190 and 200 where the police fail to act. The quoted discussion separated Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary on the registration duty from AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari on the remedy available. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, supplied the sequence of recourse to the superior police officer under Section 154(3) and the Magistrate under Section 156(3). Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, emphasized Magistrate-directed and monitored investigation upon prima facie satisfaction instead of routine Article 226 recourse. The petitioner received liberty under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS, 2023, the latter expressly named by the Court.

Article 226 — limited investigation exception - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was considered for the High Court's qualified power of intervention under Article 226 in the rarest of rare cases. The High Court must be convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide and that a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is made out requiring its intervention. Even then, it cannot direct the police's methods of investigation. The High Court's Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. (W.A. 247/2016, 20.12.2016) stated the ordinary alternative-remedy rule subject to recognised Whirlpool exceptions and distinguished Lalita Kumari's registration duty from writ entitlement. The direct request for a senior officer and investigation was dismissed while a Magistrate complaint route remained open.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Poonam Malviya filed Writ Petition No. 13104 of 2024 under Article 226 in the Jabalpur Bench. She asked the Court to call for the record, have respondent No. 3 take the matter in hand and have a senior officer investigate according to law, direct other respondents to investigate lawfully, and grant related relief and costs. Her counsel said she had approached the authorities for registration of an FIR but no action had been taken. The State submitted that a writ for registration of an FIR was not maintainable because the petitioner had an efficacious remedy before the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, identified in its submission with Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. The legal controversy was the forum and remedy for a complaint on which no FIR had been registered and a request for investigation by a senior officer.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India and Others, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted to distinguish two questions. Police ought to register an FIR when facts brought to them disclose a cognizable offence; a person aggrieved by non-registration must use the statutory complaint mechanism, especially Sections 190 and 200 CrPC, rather than infer direct writ relief from the police duty. The quoted precedent discussed AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari as concerning the remedy available, and the view in Ramesh Kumari, reiterated in Lallan Chaudhary, as concerning police registration.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted for the narrow residual power under Article 226 in the rarest of rare cases. The High Court must be convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide and that a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is made out requiring its intervention. Even there a court may insist on lawful Code procedure but cannot specify the police's methods of investigation. Its reproduced Gangadhar passage explained that a Magistrate can inquire into a complaint, direct police investigation, dismiss if no offence appears or issue process on a prima facie case.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, supplied the practical steps: first a written approach to the Superintendent under Section 154(3) following police-station non-registration, then a Section 156(3) application to the Magistrate if necessary; the Magistrate may direct registration and a proper investigation, and may monitor that investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, followed Sakiri Vasu and cautioned against routine High Court writs, while recognizing a Magistrate's power, on prima facie satisfaction, to direct and monitor an investigation and to recommend a change of investigating officer if necessary, without personally investigating. The Court used this route to decline the requested writ. The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench's Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. (W.A. 247/2016, decided 20 December 2016) further stated that unused Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 remedies ordinarily defeat a direct registration mandamus, subject to what the quoted Division Bench passage described as the four exceptions in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., which concerns the police's duty, from an informant's entitlement to bypass alternative remedies. Whirlpool and Lalita Kumari entered through that quoted Division Bench treatment.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was the jurisdiction invoked. The judgment discusses CrPC Section 154 for the police's registration duty; Section 154(3) provides a written superior-officer step, Section 156(3) a Magistrate's capacity to direct registration or proper investigation, and Sections 190 and 200 the complaint and cognizance pathway discussed in Aleque and Divine Retreat Centre. Chapter XII concerns investigation and its prescribed process. The State submission and operative order expressly identify Section 223 of BNSS, 2023 alongside Section 200 CrPC as the complaint route stated in the order.

4. Issues : (i) Could Poonam Malviya obtain an Article 226 direction to register an FIR and have a senior officer investigate based on her assertion that authorities had not acted? (ii) Which police-superior and Magistrate routes were available for alleged non-registration, and how did these differ from the police's own duty to register cognizable information? (iii) What exceptional Article 226 circumstances might justify intervention despite those routes, and were they established by this order's record?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court took from Aleque Padamsee the separation of a police obligation from judicial remedial choice. Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 CrPC offered a structured path: a written application to the superior police officer or recourse to the Magistrate for investigation or through a complaint. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe explained that the Magistrate may, on an adequate prima facie basis, secure registration or proper investigation and monitor its progress, and can recommend a change of investigating officer if necessary without conducting an investigation personally. The State raised the Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS complaint route, which the final order expressly retained. The Court did not order the direct registration or transfer-to-senior-officer relief.

Divine Retreat Centre preserves a narrow power to issue directions under Article 226 in the rarest of rare cases. The High Court must be convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide and that a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is made out requiring its intervention. Even then, it cannot dictate the methods of investigation. Shweta Bhadauria supplied the local alternative-remedy rule and its recognised exceptions, while distinguishing Lalita Kumari's substantive police duty. The order quoted these qualifications and dismissed the petition with liberty to pursue the Magistrate complaint route.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. Poonam Malviya was expressly at liberty, if she wished, to approach the competent Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS, 2023 for redress.

Poonam Malviya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 13104/2024, 17/08/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (630) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 — exceptional investigation control - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was expressly quoted. At the instance of an aggrieved person, the High Court may intervene under Article 226 if convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide. This power is confined to the rarest of rare cases where a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII CrPC is made out requiring its intervention. Even then, the High Court may insist on observance of the procedure prescribed by the Code but cannot direct how the police investigate. The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench's Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. (W.A. 247/2016) preserved recognized Whirlpool exceptions to the ordinary alternative-remedy rule, while distinguishing Lalita Kumari's police-registration duty from entitlement to immediate writ relief. The petition alleged failure to register an offence against the petitioner's husband.

FIR non-registration — magistrate complaint remedy - The Court adopted Shweta Bhadauria's statement that direct mandamus under Section 154 CrPC can ordinarily be denied where the informant has not used Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200. Divine Retreat Centre's quoted discussion of Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre explained the Magistrate's complaint inquiry, possible Chapter XII investigation, dismissal under Section 203 or issue of process where the complaint or recorded evidence prima facie discloses an offence. On that basis the writ was dismissed with liberty to file a criminal complaint before the competent court.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Poonam Sharma petitioned under Article 226 following a complaint dated 17 April 2021 about an alleged offence against her husband. She asserted that the police had taken no action and requested a direction to the Kailaras police station officer in Morena to register an offence. The prayer also asked a superior authority to initiate and conclude departmental action against that station house officer and another respondent to file a complaint case against him under IPC Section 166-A(c), together with other relief and costs. The hearing was by video conference. The State argued that Supreme Court and Madhya Pradesh precedent required the alternative Magistrate route instead of a registration writ. The Court framed the question as whether an Article 226 FIR-registration petition was tenable and dismissed the petition with liberty to pursue the criminal complaint remedy.

2. Precedents — Considered : Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and Others, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was the principal Supreme Court authority quoted by the judge. Its paragraph 41 recognizes a narrow Article 226 power at the instance of an aggrieved person if the High Court is convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide. The power is confined to the rarest of rare cases where a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII CrPC is made out requiring its intervention. The High Court may insist on lawful procedure but cannot instruct the police how to investigate. Its paragraph 42 quotes Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra on Sections 190 and 200: a Magistrate can receive and inquire into a complaint, direct a police investigation and report if appropriate, dismiss under Section 203 if no offence appears or issue process on prima facie material. That quoted passage also mentions AIIMS Employees' Union as supporting the complaint route. The Court quoted Divine Retreat Centre on the ordinary remedy for non-registration and the exceptional power of writ intervention.

The Court then quoted its Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. and Others, Writ Appeal No. 247/2016. It said an informant's failure to use Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 CrPC may justify denying mandamus to perform the police's Section 154 duty, subject to what the quoted Division Bench passage described as the four recognized exceptions in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P. on the police's mandatory registration duty from a right to bypass available remedies by writ. The present judge adopted that distinction and left a complaint remedy. Whirlpool and Lalita Kumari appear within the quoted Division Bench rule.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked for the requested registration and ancillary directions. Section 154 CrPC was the underlying police-registration duty, while Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 were identified in the Division Bench authority as alternative recourse; the quoted Gangadhar passage further describes a Magistrate's Section 203 dismissal and Chapter XII investigative route. IPC Section 166-A(c) appeared in the petitioner's prayer against the station officer. The final order grants liberty to file a criminal complaint before a competent court.

4. Issues : The Court expressly asked whether Article 226 was the appropriate vehicle for an FIR-registration direction after Poonam Sharma's complaint allegedly drew no action. That required considering the usual statutory complaint route and the limited exceptional public-law intervention recognized by Divine Retreat Centre.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court quoted Divine Retreat Centre for the proposition that, at the instance of an aggrieved person, the High Court may intervene under Article 226 if convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide. This power is confined to the rarest of rare cases where a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is made out requiring its intervention. Even then, the High Court may insist on the prescribed Code procedure but cannot dictate the methods of investigation. The order recorded the petitioner's allegation that police had not acted. The Division Bench's Shweta Bhadauria then supplied the ordinary remedy rule: performance of Section 154 duty can be pursued through Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 before a court exercises direct registration mandamus, subject to recognized exceptions. The quoted authority carefully separated Lalita Kumari's police duty from the writ-remedy issue. Because an efficacious criminal complaint was available, the Court dismissed this petition with liberty to take it to the competent court.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition, with liberty to Poonam Sharma to file a criminal complaint before the competent court.

Poonam Sharma v. State of M.P. and Others, W.P. no. 9800/2021, 03/06/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (631) Prev Next

Headnote :- Multiple FIRs — same transaction across successive days - The alleged obstruction of electricity employees and threats to their lives during anti-theft repairs on 2 May 2008 were connected to their 3 May inspection detecting an unauthorized direct LT-line connection. The Court treated them as one transaction; separate FIRs were not required or permissible on its assessment, and the trial court could consider the first day's conduct when framing charges.

Cognizance — Section 195(1)(a)(i) CrPC complaint bar - For IPC Section 186, which falls within the listed Sections 172–188, a written complaint from the concerned public servant or his administratively superior public servant is the statutory condition for cognizance. There was no such qualifying written complaint in the police case. The Court therefore set aside the Section 186 charge added under Section 216 CrPC while leaving the prosecution's other charges for trial.

Distinct offences — Section 353 unaffected by Section 186 complaint defect - Durgacharan Naik v. State of Orissa, AIR 1966 SC 1775, was quoted and applied: Section 186 concerns voluntary obstruction, whereas IPC Section 353 additionally requires assault or criminal force to a public servant on duty; Section 353 is a distinct cognizable offence and falls outside Section 195's bar even where facts substantially overlap. Durgacharan Naik discussed Basir-ul-Haq v. State of West Bengal, AIR 1953 SC 293, and the earlier Satish Chandra Chakravarti decision for the proposition that an offence not requiring the special complaint can proceed separately. The High Court retained Sections 353 and 506 Part II IPC and Section 135 Electricity Act for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 2 May 2008 electricity-board employees allegedly undertook repairs in Ramgarh, Ward No. 3 to prevent theft. The complaint said that Pooran Singh Jatav obstructed them in the discharge of their duties and threatened employee Narayan Prasad's life, saying that he would either have him killed or implicate him falsely under the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act. During a further inspection on 3 May, the team allegedly found the applicant drawing electricity directly from an LT line; a panchnama was prepared and wires seized. Narayan Prasad lodged an FIR that day covering obstruction, threats and theft. Police filed a charge sheet after investigation. The trial court initially framed a charge under Section 135 of the Electricity Act, 2003; on 17 December 2015 it used Section 216 CrPC to alter the charges and add charges under IPC Sections 186, 353 and 506 Part II in Special Sessions Trial No. 623/2011. The order prints 'Electricity Act, 20013' and '203' at different places while itself indicating 2003.

Under Section 482 CrPC the applicant challenged the alteration. He argued the incidents occurred on different days and needed separate FIRs, so the first-day allegations could not be charged in this case. He further invoked Section 195(1)(a)(i) CrPC: without a written complaint by the public servant concerned or an administratively superior servant, the Court could not take cognizance of an offence under Section 186 IPC. He relied on a coordinate-bench decision, Ashok and Others v. State, 1987 Cr LJ 1950. His submission also referred to 'Section 195 of IPC' in one passage and 'Section 153' in another. The State answered that the two dates formed one transaction and Section 353 was distinct from Section 186 notwithstanding overlapping facts.

2. Precedents — Considered : Durgacharan Naik and Others v. State of Orissa, AIR 1966 SC 1775, was the controlling Supreme Court precedent expressly quoted and applied by the High Court. It rejected the argument that an invalid Section 186 prosecution for want of a Section 195 complaint necessarily invalidates Section 353 on substantially the same facts. Section 186 requires voluntary obstruction of a public servant's functions; Section 353 requires assault or criminal force while the public servant is discharging official duties and is a distinct cognizable offence. The quoted judgment also distinguished their locations in the IPC and explained that Section 195 does not bar trial of a distinct offence outside its ambit. The High Court used that rule to remove Section 186 while retaining Section 353 for trial, not to pronounce that force had already been established.

Durgacharan Naik's quoted reasoning discussed the Calcutta Full Bench's Satish Chandra Chakravarti v. Ram Dayal De, 24 Cal WN 982, and its approval in the Supreme Court's Basir-ul-Haq v. State of West Bengal, 1953 SCR 836, AIR 1953 SC 293. The principle illustrated was that where the same report or statement discloses genuinely distinct offences and only one attracts a special complaint or sanction condition, the other may be independently pursued. Those decisions were incorporated in the quotation as support for distinct-offence treatment.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the challenge route; Section 216 empowered the trial court to alter or add charges. Section 195(1)(a)(i) CrPC bars cognizance of IPC Sections 172–188 and specified attempt, abetment or conspiracy without the written complaint of the concerned public servant or a public servant to whom that servant is administratively subordinate. IPC Section 186 concerns voluntary obstruction of official functions and was within that range; absent the qualifying complaint, the charge could not stand. IPC Section 353 concerns assault or criminal force to a public servant in discharge of duty and is distinct, so the specific Section 195 bar did not apply merely because the factual basis overlapped. Section 506 Part II alleged aggravated intimidation. Section 135 of the Electricity Act, 2003 concerned the alleged direct unauthorized electricity connection and likewise remained for trial.

4. Issues : (i) Did the obstruction and threats on 2 May and electricity-theft detection on 3 May constitute one transaction for FIR and charge purposes, or did the gap in date require a separate FIR and exclude the first incident? (ii) Did the absence of a written public-servant complaint make cognizance and a Section 186 charge impermissible under Section 195(1)(a)(i)? (iii) If so, did that bar also remove a distinct Section 353 charge, or the retained Section 506 Part II and Electricity Act charges, merely because the facts overlapped?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court linked the two dates through the same anti-theft activity: repair work to prevent theft allegedly met obstruction and threats on 2 May, followed by inspection and alleged direct-line theft on 3 May. It considered the conduct one transaction and rejected the argument that separate FIRs were required. On that basis the trial court could consider the first day’s conduct when framing charges.

The written-complaint objection succeeded as to Section 186. The Court reproduced Section 195(1)(a)(i), identified the Section 186 obstruction allegation within the barred IPC range and found no complaint from the concerned or superior public servant. The trial court should neither have taken cognizance of that offence on this police case nor framed its charge. It then applied Durgacharan Naik's ingredients distinction: obstruction under Section 186 and assault or criminal force under Section 353 are not the same offence, and the latter is not listed by Section 195. Overlapping facts alone cannot expand the complaint requirement to Section 353. The Court therefore left the Section 353 charge for trial. It also preserved Section 506 Part II and Electricity Act Section 135 as stated in its final order. The Section 195 defect was neither cured for Section 186 nor allowed to collapse the other charges.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the Section 482 application. The order of 17 December 2015 was modified only to set aside the IPC Section 186 charge. Special Sessions Trial No. 623/2011 could continue on IPC Sections 353 and 506 Part II and Electricity Act Section 135.

Pooran Singh Jatav v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 4309/2016, 08/12/2016, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (632) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 — investigation cannot be predetermined - D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted and applied to a complainant's demand for arrest and early charge-sheet filing in a registered IPC Section 420 matter. That decision rejected unreasoned judicial directions requiring specific police acts and recognised that an investigation may lawfully culminate in a closure report. The passage quoting M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explained that arrest under Section 41 CrPC is discretionary, must not be mechanical and requires due regard for personal liberty. The discussion of Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, within the reproduced passage cautioned against serious orders affecting persons who had not been heard. The High Court declined to direct arrest or the filing of a charge sheet.

Section 173(1) — timely investigation and open outcome - The Court required the officer to conclude Crime No. 852/2021 as early as possible, take lawful steps and submit a final report without unnecessary delay after determining whether an offence was made out. The report may be a closure report or a charge sheet, depending on the investigation. The applicant could approach the Gwalior Superintendent of Police with any grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Pradeep Chouhan made a complaint on which Police Station Murar, Gwalior registered Crime No. 852/2021 for an alleged IPC Section 420 cheating offence. Chouhan claimed that after registration the police took no further action and had not arrested the persons he accused. He filed an application under Section 482 CrPC seeking a fair and impartial investigation and a direction to file a charge sheet in the appropriate court as early as possible. The High Court addressed the demand for arrest made in his submission and the requested direction to file a charge sheet. It then considered the distinct statutory requirement that a pending investigation be completed without unnecessary delay. The public prosecutor represented the State.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was the central Supreme Court decision expressly reproduced. It set aside an unreasoned High Court order directing the police to record statements, make arrests, seize property and file a charge sheet. The quoted passage explained that police investigation is a statutory responsibility: an investigation may lawfully result in either a charge sheet or a closure report, and Section 482 cannot be used casually to control the manner of investigation or make observations with far-reaching consequences. In Chouhan's case, that principle was applied to refuse directions to arrest or file a charge sheet, while directing prompt completion under Section 173(1).

The reproduced passage from D. Venkatasubramaniam quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649. Section 41 CrPC gives an investigating officer authority to arrest in defined situations, with discretion to decide whether arrest is necessary in light of the investigation; neither the report of a cognizable offence nor an allegation of seriousness makes arrest automatic. Arrest affects personal liberty and reputation and requires careful consideration of the circumstances. D. Venkatasubramaniam also relied on Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, to criticise drastic High Court directions issued without hearing the persons they affected. Its account of the purposes of Section 482—giving effect to an order under the Code, preventing abuse of process or securing justice—further qualified the jurisdiction.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 420 was the offence alleged in the registered FIR. Section 482 CrPC was the provision under which the applicant invoked the Court's inherent power, subject to the quoted Supreme Court authority's caution against directing police to arrest or file a predetermined report. Section 41 CrPC was discussed through M.C. Abraham as conferring discretion to arrest without a warrant within statutory conditions. Section 173(1) CrPC expressly requires each investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay, so the officer must conclude the process and file the appropriate police report, which may be a closure report or a charge sheet.

4. Issues : (i) Could a complainant use Section 482 to obtain a High Court order requiring the police to arrest the persons named in an existing cheating FIR and file a charge sheet before the outcome of the investigation was known? (ii) Despite the limits on directing particular investigative steps and prescribing the result, could the Court insist that the investigation be completed promptly under Section 173(1)? (iii) What avenue for further grievance remained?

5. Ratio / Findings : On the first issue, the Court applied the Supreme Court's distinction between judicial power and the police's investigative judgment. The registration of Crime No. 852/2021 did not oblige the police to arrest every named person. Under the quoted M.C. Abraham rule, the officer decides whether and when lawful arrest is necessary. The investigation may end in a charge sheet or a closure report, depending on the evidence. Directing arrest and the filing of a charge sheet would dictate both the method and the result of the investigation. The Court therefore refused those aspects of Chouhan's prayer.

On the second issue, the Court reproduced Section 173(1): an investigation must be completed without unnecessary delay. It required the officer to reach a lawful conclusion on whether any offence was made out and submit the appropriate final report as early as possible. This did not mean that a charge sheet was inevitable; the order expressly allowed a closure report as the other possible outcome. It permitted Chouhan to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior if aggrieved, with any application to be considered according to law.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court finally disposed of the Section 482 application. It directed the investigating officer to complete the pending investigation in Crime No. 852/2021 as early as possible under Section 173(1), take necessary lawful steps and submit a final report without unnecessary delay. Chouhan could make a grievance application to the Gwalior Superintendent of Police.

Pradeep Chouhan v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 52832/2021, 07/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (633) Prev Next

Headnote :- Evidence — accused's injury and prosecution genesis - A left-ulna chip fracture did not establish that the prosecution had concealed a counter-assault during the occurrence. The appellant was arrested six days after the 23 October 2004 incident. No immediate complaint, treatment record or explanation for his six-day absence connected the fracture to the same event; an intervening cause remained possible. The testimony of the injured Govind and Shivrani was accepted, supported by medical evidence of incised wounds and other testimony, including that of a witness who was not related to the appellant.

Attempt to murder — intention, overt act and injury severity - State of M.P. v. Harjeet Singh, (2019) 20 SCC 524, was considered for the test of intention or knowledge and its discussion of R. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 9 SCC 27, State of M.P. v. Mohan, (2013) 14 SCC 116, Jage Ram v. State of Haryana, (2015) 11 SCC 366, and State of M.P. v. Kanha, (2019) 3 SCC 605. Under that test, an act towards murder with the required state of mind, inferred from the weapon, blows, parts of the body and surrounding circumstances, need not cause a fatal or grievous injury, or an injury to a vital part. Kanha was also quoted directly, and State of M.P. v. Saleem, (2005) 5 SCC 554, was separately quoted for the distinction between the act and its result; Saleem referred to Balram Bama Patil, Girija Shankar, R. Prakash and Sarju Prasad in support. The Court found it unsound for the trial court to acquit under Section 307 solely because the injuries were not life-threatening, particularly given the wounds to the head, neck and chest.

Appellate limit — unappealed acquittal - The State had filed no appeal against the Section 307 acquittal on two counts. Despite disapproving its reasoning, the High Court declined, after more than nineteen years from the incident, to issue a show-cause notice proposing to set it aside. It affirmed only the Section 324 conviction on the appeal before it.

Sentence — time served request - The time elapsed since 2004 did not persuade the Court to reduce the one-year term of rigorous imprisonment under Section 324 in view of the repeated injuries inflicted with a sharp weapon to the victims' head, neck, chest and arm. The sentence and fine were affirmed; bail and security bonds were cancelled and surrender was required by 15 February 2024, failing which a warrant would issue.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 23 October 2004 a dispute arose after Shivrani's cattle entered another field. The prosecution alleged that Pradeep Jain abused her, struck Govind twice on the head and back of the neck and injured his left ear pinna, then struck Shivrani's wrist and elbow as she intervened. The judgment variously calls the implement a 'Sabbal' and a 'tabbal'; the medical witness described injuries consistent with a hard sharp-edged weapon. FIR, medical examination, arrest and investigation followed. A charge sheet alleged IPC Sections 307 and 447 and Arms Act Section 25; the trial court framed two Section 307 counts. The prosecution examined the injured witnesses Govind and Shivrani, Gaya Prasad, Hari Shankar and medical witnesses among others. The trial court acquitted Jain of Section 307 on both counts but convicted him under Section 324 IPC, imposing one year's rigorous imprisonment and a ₹2,000 fine, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default, by judgment of 4 June 2008 in Sessions Trial No. 81/2005. The sentencing table at the beginning of the judgment gives Section 324 without specifying the number of counts, while later paragraphs describe two counts.

Jain appealed under Section 374 CrPC. His principal challenge on the merits was that he too had suffered a left-hand fracture during the encounter and that the prosecution had concealed the true origin of the incident. He relied on a pre-MLC prepared on 29 October 2004 and an X-ray showing a chip fracture of his left ulna. The State opposed the appeal. It also conceded that it had not appealed his acquittal under Section 307. Counsel later sought to reduce the Section 324 sentence to the period already undergone because the case concerned a 2004 incident. The High Court assessed the injured witnesses' testimony, the medical findings, the timing of Jain's injury, the correctness of the trial court's Section 307 reasoning, the procedural status of that acquittal and the sentence.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of M.P. v. Harjeet Singh, (2019) 20 SCC 524, was quoted in detail on IPC Section 307. It identified the actor's intention or knowledge of a possible fatal consequence and an overt act giving effect to that state of mind as central; the actual wound is evidence of intention, but a fatal or grievous injury is not indispensable. The excerpt reproduced R. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 9 SCC 27, which distinguished the act from its result and accepted that a first blow to a vital temporal region could support intention despite other blows to non-vital parts; State of M.P. v. Mohan, (2013) 14 SCC 116, on the absence of a requirement that the injury be to a vital part; Jage Ram v. State of Haryana, (2015) 11 SCC 366, on proof of intention and an act, with contextual indicators including the weapon, words, motive, part of the body targeted and severity; and State of M.P. v. Kanha, (2019) 3 SCC 605, on the absence of a requirement of grievous or life-threatening hurt. The High Court used that body of law to reject the trial court's reason for acquittal under Section 307, without entering a conviction under that provision.

Kanha was separately quoted in paragraph 17, emphasising that intention may be inferred from the wound and surrounding circumstances, including the weapon and blows. State of M.P. v. Saleem, (2005) 5 SCC 554, was quoted at length in paragraph 18. It explained that Section 307 criminalises an act done with murderous intention or knowledge without requiring an injury capable of causing death, the cutting of a vital organ or hurt more serious than simple hurt; intention coupled with an overt act may suffice, and the attempt need not be the penultimate act. The passage from Saleem cited State of Maharashtra v. Balram Bama Patil, (1983) 2 SCC 28, Girija Shankar v. State of U.P., (2004) 3 SCC 793, R. Prakash and Sarju Prasad v. State of Bihar, AIR 1965 SC 843, for convergent principles. The present Court compared the rules with the repeated blows to Govind's head and neck and Shivrani's chest, expressly disapproving the trial court's reasoning based on injury severity while leaving the acquittal undisturbed for procedural reasons and because of the time elapsed.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC was the provision under which Jain appealed against his conviction. IPC Section 324 governed the conviction for causing hurt with a sharp weapon under review and its one-year term of rigorous imprisonment, fine and imprisonment in default. IPC Section 307, under which the trial court had acquitted Jain on two counts, requires an act accompanied by intention or knowledge and circumstances such that, if death were caused by the act, it would be murder. The actual injury and its severity may help establish intention, but life-threatening hurt is not a statutory prerequisite. The State did not appeal the Section 307 acquittal, and the High Court did not replace it with a conviction. IPC Section 447 and Arms Act Section 25 appeared in the investigation and charge-sheet narrative but were not separately disposed of in the appellate operative order.

4. Issues : (i) Did Jain's left-ulna chip fracture establish that the prosecution had suppressed an assault on him during the same incident, given that his pre-MLC was prepared six days after the occurrence? (ii) Were the injured witnesses' testimony and medical record sufficient to sustain the conviction under Section 324 despite that alternative account? (iii) Was the trial court legally correct in holding that nonfatal injury alone ruled out Section 307, and what course was open to the High Court regarding that acquittal in the accused's appeal against conviction when the State had filed no appeal against acquittal and nineteen years had passed? (iv) Did the long interval justify reducing the affirmed custodial term to the period already undergone? The Court discussed the law under Section 307 while leaving the unappealed acquittal in place.

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr M.K. Jain recorded incised wounds to Shivrani's right upper arm and chest and Govind's ear pinna, posterior skull and neck; the ear was cut. The two injured witnesses identified Jain as their assailant, and the medical descriptions supported an assault with a hard sharp-edged implement. Gaya Prasad supported the prosecution and was not related to the appellant; Hari Shankar also supported it but acknowledged that Shivrani was his mother and Govind his brother. Jain's pre-MLC was prepared on 29 October, six days after the alleged 23 October assault; an X-ray showed a chip fracture of his left ulna. With no contemporaneous complaint, treatment record or explanation for his avoiding the police, a separate intervening cause of the chip fracture could not be excluded. The Court thus rejected the contention that the prosecution had concealed the origin of the occurrence and accepted the injured witnesses' testimony, sustaining the conviction under Section 324. The trial court had acquitted Jain under Section 307 because it considered the victims' injuries insufficient to cause death; paragraph 13 of the appellate judgment refers to 'injuries sustained by the appellant' in recounting that reasoning, but the surrounding discussion and medical evidence concern Govind and Shivrani. Harjeet Singh, Kanha and Saleem established that intention or knowledge, coupled with an overt act and assessed in the circumstances, governs the application of Section 307; an actual life-threatening or grievous wound is not essential. Repeated injuries to Govind's head, neck and ear and Shivrani's chest made the trial court's reasoning legally unsatisfactory. Yet the State conceded that it had not challenged the acquittal, and the Court declined, after more than nineteen years, to issue a show-cause notice to reconsider it. It expressly affirmed the Section 324 conviction 'under compulsion' without approving the Section 307 reasoning.

The sentencing request failed separately. Although the appeal was decided long after the 2004 assault, the Court weighed the weapon, repeated wounds and sensitive parts of both victims' bodies and found no reason to reduce the jail term to the period already undergone. It left the trial court's sentence intact and required Jain to surrender, cancelling his existing bonds.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the appeal. The Section 324 conviction and sentence imposed by the judgment of 4 June 2008—one year's rigorous imprisonment, a ₹2,000 fine and two months' rigorous imprisonment in default—were affirmed. The trial court's acquittal under Section 307 on two counts remained in place, although the High Court disapproved its reasoning and declined to issue a show-cause notice after nineteen years. Bail and security bonds were cancelled. Jain was directed to surrender before the trial court by 15 February 2024; if he failed, the trial court was to issue a warrant to secure service of the sentence. The record and a copy of the judgment were to be returned for compliance.

Pradeep Jain v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1251/2008, 17/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (634) Prev Next

Headnote :- Maintenance / Section 125(3) CrPC / offer conditioned on wife living with husband - The statutory proviso calls for an actual offer to maintain the wife on condition that she live with the husband and permits the Magistrate to consider her grounds for refusal; maintenance may be ordered despite the offer if there is just ground for doing so. The husband's bare assertion in his reply was not accepted as an offer: he conceded through counsel that he had filed no specific application, had not put the offer to the wife in cross-examination and had not stated it specifically in his evidence. His challenge to the ₹3,000 monthly award failed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Principal Judge, Family Court, Vidisha, by order dated 21.11.2024 in MJCR No. 13/2023 awarded Baby Shivhare monthly maintenance of ₹3,000. Pradeep Kumar challenged that order by filing Criminal Revision No. 6279 of 2024 under Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act read with Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. His only ground was that he was willing to keep the respondent with him and that she was therefore not entitled to maintenance. Counsel fairly conceded that the husband had not moved an application before the Family Court offering to keep and maintain the wife and child. The High Court noted an assertion in his reply but no specific offer in an application, evidence or cross-examination.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court relied on the quoted statutory proviso and the procedural record rather than a judicial authority.

3. Statutes considered : The further proviso to Section 125(3) CrPC concerns an offer by the person liable for maintenance to maintain his wife on condition that she live with him. If she refuses, the Magistrate may consider her stated grounds and make an order notwithstanding the offer if satisfied that there is just ground for doing so. Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act, 1984 and Sections 397 and 401 CrPC were the provisions under which revision was sought.

4. Issues : Did the husband's assertion in his reply that he was willing to keep the wife with him defeat the Family Court's maintenance award under the Section 125(3) proviso, when he had not made a specific offer to maintain her on that condition through an application, his evidence or her cross-examination? The adequacy of ₹3,000 was considered only briefly as a possible ground for interference.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court reproduced the proviso: a conditional offer permits consideration of the wife's reasons for refusing to live with the husband, and maintenance may still be ordered where there is just ground for the refusal. Counsel for the husband conceded that no application offering to keep the wife and child had been made before the Family Court. The Court found that the stand taken in the written reply did not constitute an offer on the record. It identified the steps by which a specific offer could have been placed before the Court: specifically asking the wife about it in cross-examination, stating it in the husband's own evidence or filing a specific application. As he had taken none of these steps, his sole argument did not establish that the wife was not entitled to maintenance. The Court also found that ₹3,000 per month could not be regarded as excessive on this record. Its ruling concerns failure to establish an actual offer, not an automatic duty for a wife to cohabit.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Pradeep Kumar's revision, finding no ground to interfere with the Family Court's order dated 21.11.2024. The ₹3,000 monthly maintenance award in favour of Baby Shivhare remained undisturbed.

Pradeep Kumar v. Baby Shivhare, Cr.R. no. 6279/2024, 06/05/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (635) Prev Next

Headnote :- Charge — material-founded grave suspicion - M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI, (2020) 2 SCC 768, drawing on P. Vijayan, distinguished mere suspicion from grave suspicion. It allowed limited sifting of prosecution material and consideration of broad probabilities, but barred a roving inquiry into the merits or examination of defence material under Section 227 CrPC. Its passage cited Sudershan Chakkar and Debendra Nath Padhi. Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, likewise required judicial application of mind and some supporting material. It distinguished the possibility that the accused had committed an offence, sufficient at the stage of framing charges, from proof beyond reasonable doubt, required for conviction. Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, whose quoted passage referred to Ramesh Singh and Dipakbhai Jagdishchandra Patel, required an assessment of whether the facts, taken at face value, disclosed the ingredients of the offence and a strong suspicion founded on material capable of becoming evidence at trial. The High Court applied these limits to refuse to find, at the stage of framing charges, that the prosecutrix's account was false.

Sexual assault allegation — delayed disclosure at charge - The prosecutrix's later written rape complaint and initial statement that she had left voluntarily were relied on in seeking discharge. Her explanation of fear and a threat to her child, together with the truth of the allegation of repeated forced intercourse, required assessment at trial; delay alone could not justify discharge.

Criminal revision — challenge to charge order - State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, supplied the limit on scrutiny of a charge under Section 397: whether the material gives rise to strong suspicion, not whether final guilt is established. Counsel conceded that there was material for charges under Sections 366, 344, 323 and 365 IPC. The Court found no jurisdictional error in framing those charges together with charges under Sections 376(2)(n), 376(2)(f) and 506 Part II, and dismissed the revision. All allegations remained for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicant Pradeep Kushwah was described as related to the prosecutrix through her husband's sister. According to her written complaint, on 25 August 2019 he said he would take her to her parental home because of harassment by her husband but took her to Rajkot, kept her in a rented room and repeatedly forced sexual intercourse. She also alleged that he took and sold her mangalsutra and anklets. Her husband filed a missing-person report. She said she escaped on 9 November 2019, reached Agra, used another person's telephone to contact her husband, and was taken to a police station. She initially said she had gone voluntarily, later attributing that account to fear of the applicant and alleging his continuing threat to kill her child if she did not return. The judgment reports that incriminating articles and the applicant's blood sample were sent for DNA testing; the report had not arrived.

The Sixth Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, by order of 16 February 2021 in Sessions Trial No. 59/2021 framed charges under IPC Sections 366, 344, 323, 365, 376(2)(n), 376(2)(f) and 506 Part II. The applicant invoked Sections 397 and 401 CrPC in Criminal Revision No. 1113/2021. He argued that her initial statement after recovery that she had left voluntarily, and her later rape complaint allegedly made only after deliberation, undermined the allegation sufficiently to prevent the framing of a rape charge. Counsel conceded that there was otherwise enough material for charges under Sections 366, 344, 323 and 365. The High Court heard counsel and considered the restricted scope of scrutiny at the stage of framing charges and in revision.

2. Precedents — Considered : M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. Central Bureau of Investigation, Bengaluru, (2020) 2 SCC 768, was quoted for a structured test for discharge under Section 227 CrPC. The distinction stated in P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398, cited in the reproduced passage, allows discharge where two views are possible and one of them gives rise only to suspicion rather than grave suspicion. A trial judge must independently sift the prosecution statements and documents, consider the broad probabilities and basic infirmities of the case, and ask whether, even if fully accepted, the material could show that the accused committed the offence; the judge is not a prosecution 'post office.' Yet this limited scrutiny cannot become a roving inquiry into the merits, assess the material's probative value as if tested in cross-examination, or use the accused's proposed defence documents. Paragraph 18 of the quoted decision invoked State of J&K v. Sudershan Chakkar, (1995) 4 SCC 181, and State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, on the prosecution record and the absence of an accused's right to adduce defence documents at the stage of framing charges. The High Court used these limits to leave the assessment of the prosecutrix's credibility and the applicant's alternative inference to the trial.

Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, was quoted separately: material which permits an opinion that the accused might have committed the offence can justify framing a charge, whereas conviction requires proof beyond reasonable doubt. The judge must apply a judicial mind to the different categories of accused and find some material for a prima facie conclusion; unsupported suspicion alone is insufficient. This reinforced the requirement that a charge be based on material, without prematurely resolving credibility. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, was also quoted: the court may sift and weigh the material only to determine whether the facts, taken at face value, disclose the ingredients of the offence and give rise to grave suspicion; meticulous testing of veracity and assessment of the defence belong to trial. Its passage invoked State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39, on strong suspicion as a ground for trial, and Dipakbhai Jagdishchandra Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 16 SCC 547, on material capable of being translated into evidence at trial, without requiring assurance of conviction.

State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, was separately cited on the scope of revision under Section 397 where a charge has already been framed. The court asks whether the material leads to strong suspicion and could prove guilt if tested at trial, not whether the accused is certainly guilty. The High Court applied that procedural distinction, found no jurisdictional error and dismissed the revision.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC were the provisions under which the applicant sought criminal revision of the charge order. Section 227 CrPC was discussed through the Supreme Court passage concerning discharge; the quoted Section 228 framework concerns framing charges when sufficient ground appears. The court was required to assess grave suspicion based on material at the stage of framing charges, rather than proof beyond reasonable doubt or a roving inquiry into credibility. IPC Sections 366, 344, 323 and 365 were the charges relating to abduction, confinement and hurt for which counsel conceded prima facie material; Sections 376(2)(n) and 376(2)(f) were the rape charges challenged by relying on the delayed complaint and the statement made on recovery; Section 506 Part II concerned the alleged threat. The order retained all listed charges.

4. Issues : (i) Could the court, when revising an order framing charges, decide that the prosecutrix's delayed rape complaint was false because she initially said after recovery that she left voluntarily? (ii) Did the charge-stage material, including her allegation of forced intercourse and her stated explanation of fear, meet the limited grave-suspicion test despite the challenged credibility and outstanding DNA report? (iii) Had the applicant shown a jurisdictional error requiring interference with the Sessions Judge's charges, especially given the express concession as to Sections 366, 344, 323 and 365?

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court held that credibility and reliability cannot be finally determined at the stage of framing charges. Through M.E. Shivalingamurthy, Soma Chakravarty and Shiv Charan Bansal, it identified a duty to apply the judicial mind: to sift the prosecution record to determine whether the facts, taken at face value, disclose the ingredients of the offence and create grave suspicion. Discharge may follow where two views are possible and one of them gives rise only to suspicion rather than grave suspicion, or where even full acceptance of the prosecution material cannot show that the accused committed the offence. It also rejected a detailed inquiry into competing versions, the probable defence or probative weight at this stage. The Supreme Court's strong-suspicion test does not lower the trial standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt. Fatehkaran Mehdu stated the same distinction in the context of a Section 397 challenge to a charge already framed.

Here the prosecutrix's account alleged that the applicant deceptively took her to Rajkot, kept her there and repeatedly forced intercourse; the applicant relied on her initial statement that she had left voluntarily and the delay before her written rape accusation. Whether her claim of fear at recovery was genuine, whether her later version was fabricated after deliberation, and whether the delay had a plausible explanation were matters for evidence and cross-examination. The Court stated that delay itself could not justify discharge and that plausibly explained delay may still permit conviction after trial. The DNA result was reported only as pending. Counsel conceded that there was sufficient material for framing charges in respect of the four non-rape offences. The Court found no jurisdictional error in retaining the entire listed charge order, including the contested rape and threat charges.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision. The order of 16 February 2021 in Sessions Trial No. 59/2021 framing charges under IPC Sections 366, 344, 323, 365, 376(2)(n), 376(2)(f) and 506 Part II was left undisturbed.

Pradeep Kushwah v. State of M.P. and Others, Cr.R. no. 1113/2021, 27/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (636) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abetment of suicide — instigation through coercive course of conduct - Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, relying on Ramesh Kumar, (2001) 9 SCC 618, treats instigation as goading or urging a person to act. Explicit words are unnecessary if a continued course of conduct reasonably incites the consequence, while a spontaneous word uttered in anger without that intention is insufficient. The alleged pressure on the deceased to have unwanted sexual relations with the applicant, leave her husband and marry him, backed by threats of public exposure, was treated as prima facie active instigation or aid, unlike a bare extramarital relationship.

Abetment of suicide — mens rea, proximate act and ordinary discord - Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, required a clear mental element and positive instigation or intentional aid, distinguishing a hypersensitive response to ordinary discord. State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, required careful assessment of whether the alleged cruelty caused the suicide. Amlendu Pal v. State of W.B., (2010) 1 SCC 707, required direct or indirect incitement and positive action proximate to the suicide, and explained the routes of abetment under Section 107, including intentional aid. The High Court applied these standards for conviction provisionally to the alleged coercive threats and declined to classify the deceased as hypersensitive.

Inherent powers — uncontroverted offence ingredients - A Section 482 CrPC applicant seeking to quash a Section 306 FIR must show that the uncontroverted allegations do not disclose the offence. The alleged conduct beyond the relationship itself supplied a prima facie basis; the applicant's denial and retaliatory-implication account were not resolved on the merits. The application was dismissed.

Witnesses — delayed statements and relationship - Mere delay in recording the statements of family witnesses under Section 161 CrPC does not automatically justify rejecting their evidence outright. The prosecution can explain the delay, which is to be assessed with the testimony. A witness's relationship to the deceased does not, by itself, establish that the witness is interested or discredit the evidence. Neither delay nor kinship warranted quashing on this record, with credibility left for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The police registered Crime No. 281/2021 at Ambah Police Station, Morena, under Section 306 IPC following a married woman's death by hanging on 31 March 2021. The FIR alleged that Pradeep Sakhawar pressed her to speak with him against her wishes, to leave her husband and marry him, and to have physical relations with him. When she refused, he allegedly threatened public defamation by disclosing their illicit relationship. The police allegation linked the pressure and threat to her suicide.

Sakhawar applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR. He denied the allegations, argued that she could have reported any harassment to the police instead of ending her life, questioned the credibility of the related family witnesses and objected to the delay in recording their statements. He also asserted that he had been falsely implicated because the family had been convicted of murdering Malkhan, to whom he was related. He cited the High Court's Ramsingh Yadav v. State of M.P., 2018 (4) Crimes 230 (M.P.). The State opposed the application, submitting that the alleged demands and threat amounted to abetment.

2. Precedents — Considered : Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Government of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, was quoted for the meaning of instigation under Sections 107 and 306 IPC. The passage relied on Ramesh Kumar, (2001) 9 SCC 618, a decision of a three-judge Bench: to instigate is to goad, provoke, urge or encourage an act. Specific words suggesting suicide are not indispensable, but reasonable certainty of inciting the consequence must be discernible. A continued course of conduct creating a situation with no apparent option may support an inference of instigation, unlike a word uttered in anger without an intention that the consequence should follow. The Court applied this distinction to the alleged repeated sexual coercion and pressure to leave the husband and marry the applicant, together with the threat of public exposure, at the prima facie stage of considering quashing.

Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of Andhra Pradesh, (2010) 1 SCC 750, was reproduced in summary form. It requires a mental process of instigation or intentional aid, clear mens rea and a positive, active or direct act leading to suicide. A conviction should not rest on a victim's hypersensitive reaction to commonplace domestic discord that would not be expected to produce the same result in a similarly placed person. The High Court used it to assess whether the alleged demands and threats went beyond ordinary discord, finding a prima facie case rather than entering a conviction. State of West Bengal v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, was quoted on the need for careful assessment at trial of whether cruelty actually induced suicide, with the same caution against treating ordinary petulance as abetment because of a victim's unusual sensitivity. The present Court expressly rejected treating this alleged coercion as merely a hypersensitive response for the purposes of quashing.

Amlendu Pal alias Jhantu v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 1 SCC 707, stated the requirement of direct or indirect incitement, an active part in instigation or facilitation and positive action proximate to the occurrence; harassment alone, without that link, is not enough for conviction. The quoted analysis located the modes of abetment in the clauses of Section 107 and explained intentional aid under clause Thirdly and Explanation 2 as facilitating an act before or at its commission. Section 109 was mentioned in the quoted passage as providing punishment where the abetted act follows from the abetment. The High Court compared those standards with the alleged pressure and threat and found that, if the allegations were accepted at face value, an active role could be inferred. Ramsingh Yadav was cited by the applicant's counsel.

3. Statutes considered : Section 306 IPC was the offence in the FIR: suicide coupled with abetment by the accused, with intentional instigation or aid and the relevant causal connection at issue. Section 107 IPC, analysed in the reproduced Amlendu Pal passage, defines abetment through instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid; clause Thirdly and Explanation 2 explain purposeful facilitation. Section 109 IPC was mentioned in that precedent's quotation, not independently applied to charge Sakhawar. Section 482 CrPC was the provision under which the applicant invoked the Court's inherent power; the Court asked whether the uncontroverted allegations could disclose the ingredients of Section 306 and refrained from a final credibility determination. Section 161 CrPC governed the police statements whose recording was said to have been delayed; the Court preserved the prosecution's opportunity to explain the delay.

4. Issues : (i) Did the FIR's uncontroverted allegations of unwanted sexual demands, insistence that the deceased leave her husband and marry Sakhawar, and threats of public disclosure make out a prima facie case of active instigation or aid of her suicide, or did they amount merely to an extramarital relationship and harassment without the ingredients of Section 306? (ii) Did his denial and claim of retaliatory implication justify quashing at this stage? (iii) Did the delayed recording of related family witnesses' Section 161 statements or their kinship render the prosecution allegations legally unusable at the threshold?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court set out the principles stated in four Supreme Court decisions on Section 306. Chitresh Kumar Chopra and the passage from Ramesh Kumar address affirmative instigation, including a continued course of coercive conduct, while excluding a chance word uttered in anger without an intended consequence. Gangula Mohan Reddy requires clear mens rea and a positive act, and cautions against treating ordinary discord as abetment because of a victim's hypersensitivity. Orilal Jaiswal requires care in determining whether cruelty actually induced the suicide. Amlendu Pal requires direct or indirect incitement, proximity and active instigation or facilitation, and explains the statutory modes under Section 107. These are demanding tests for establishing guilt, but the question in the present Section 482 application was whether the allegations, if uncontroverted, could meet them. The High Court did not equate extramarital involvement itself with abetment. It treated the additional alleged pressure for unwanted intercourse and remarriage under threat of public defamation as coercion beyond ordinary discord, found prima facie that the applicant had played an active role in instigating or aiding the suicide, and declined to describe the deceased's response as merely hypersensitive.

Sakhawar's claim of retaliatory implication in connection with Malkhan's murder and his assertion that the deceased could have complained to the police did not warrant quashing an FIR that, on its face, disclosed a possible offence. He sought rejection of the family witnesses' accounts on factual grounds without a trial. The Court separately held that delay in recording Section 161 statements does not by itself justify discarding the witnesses' evidence; the prosecution may explain the delay, and the fact-finder can then assess that explanation. Relationship does not itself make a witness interested or render the testimony unreliable. Neither objection justified quashing at this stage.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application to quash Crime No. 281/2021, Ambah Police Station, for the offence under Section 306 IPC. The FIR and proceedings remained in force.

Pradeep Sakhawar v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 35848/2021, 25/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (637) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation — independent parallel police enquiry - Deepak alias Preetam Verma v. State of M.P., MCRC 12592/2018, decided 11 September 2018, held that Section 36 CrPC does not authorise a separate enquiry running alongside the investigation of an FIR. The Supreme Court affirmed that conclusion in Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P., SLP (Criminal) No. 1345/2019, order dated 18 January 2022: neither Section 36 nor the cited circular authorised that process. Although the circular was lawful, it did not validate the officers' procedure, which was inconsistent with it. The applicant's claimed exoneration in Additional S.P. Kamal Maurya's parallel report therefore lacked the legal status he attributed to it.

Trial witness — relevance under Section 311 - The proposed testimony would present the officer's opinion arising from that impermissible enquiry rather than legally relevant evidence of innocence. Summoning him would improperly lend legitimacy to the report and serve no purpose. The refusal under Section 311 was affirmed on this ground, which differed from the trial court's reported emphasis on the four-year pendency, the co-accused's custody and early disposal.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Special Judge under the MPDVPK Act at Shivpuri was trying S.T. No. 10/2020. While the underlying investigation was pending, the then Superintendent of Police, Shivpuri, allegedly ordered Additional Superintendent Kamal Maurya to conduct a separate enquiry. Pradeep Sharma said Maurya had found the prosecution witnesses' allegations false and had exonerated him. Sharma asked the Special Judge to summon Maurya under Section 311 CrPC. The court refused on 7 November 2024. As the applicant described its reasons, the trial had been pending four years, co-accused Veerendra and Devendra had spent more than two years in jail, and the High Court had directed expeditious completion. Sharma brought Criminal Revision No. 5719/2024 under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. He argued that a speedy-trial instruction could not replace a merits decision on a material witness application. The State opposed the revision. The High Court instead examined the legality of the underlying parallel enquiry and the relevance of its author's proposed testimony.

2. Precedents — Considered : Deepak alias Preetam Verma and Another v. State of M.P. and Another, MCRC No. 12592/2018, High Court order of 11 September 2018, held that a separate parallel enquiry under Section 36 CrPC while the FIR investigation continues is impermissible. The present Court applied that ruling to determine the legal status of Maurya's enquiry; it did not treat the ruling as a factual finding about the current FIR.

Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P. and Others, Supreme Court order dated 18 January 2022 in SLP (Criminal) No. 1345/2019, affirmed Deepak's treatment of Section 36. The reproduced paragraphs 9–12 and 14 explained that neither Section 36 nor police circulars provided for an independent enquiry running concurrently with the regular investigation of the FIR referred to there. The State's circular of 26 June 2010, issued under the instructions of the Inspector General, was consistent with Section 36, but the officers' method of conducting an independent enquiry was inconsistent with that circular and the prescribed procedure. The Supreme Court found no ground to interfere under Article 136 and approved the High Court's conclusion that the separate enquiry was not contemplated by law. The present Court applied this authoritative limit to Maurya's asserted exoneration: his testimony would tend to lend legitimacy to a forbidden parallel report, and his personal opinion would not be legally relevant evidence of innocence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 36 CrPC concerns police officers superior in rank to the officer in charge of a police station and their exercise of powers within their jurisdiction; as explained in the cited Supreme Court decision, it does not itself provide for a separate enquiry alongside an existing FIR investigation. Section 311 CrPC was the provision under which the applicant sought to summon the Additional S.P. The High Court rejected the proposed examination because it would only endorse an unlawful parallel report and place an irrelevant opinion before the trial court. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC were the provisions under which criminal revision was sought against the Special Judge's rejection order.

4. Issues : (i) Could the Superintendent of Police order a separate independent enquiry under Section 36 CrPC at the same time as the FIR investigation, and could its asserted exoneration be treated as a lawful source of proof? (ii) Was Additional S.P. Maurya a useful and legally relevant Section 311 witness merely because he had authored that separate report? (iii) Should the refusal be set aside because the trial court had emphasised delay and the custody of two co-accused instead of analysing the witness's relevance?

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court identified the legality of the separate enquiry as the primary issue. Deepak alias Preetam Verma had held that a Section 36 enquiry running independently in parallel with the regular FIR investigation was not maintainable. Surendra Singh Gaur affirmed that neither the powers of superior police officers nor the cited administrative circular authorised such a separate process. In that precedent the circular itself was lawful; the officers' departure from it was the defect. The Court in the present case applied the distinction to the alleged enquiry by Maurya, conducted on the Superintendent's order while the investigation was pending, and held it impermissible.

The purpose of calling Maurya was to rely on his asserted exoneration. Examining him under Section 311 would therefore confer apparent legitimacy on a report prepared through the impermissible parallel enquiry. The Court also treated his proposed opinion that the witnesses' allegations were false as legally irrelevant to establishing innocence. It therefore held that summoning him would serve no purpose and that the trial judge's refusal was correct on this independent ground concerning the merits of the application. The applicant's argument that mere haste could not replace a decision on the merits did not lead to reversal; the High Court expressly affirmed the earlier order on different grounds.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision. The Special Judge's order dated 7 November 2024 rejecting the Section 311 application to summon Additional S.P. Kamal Maurya in S.T. No. 10/2020 was affirmed, expressly for the High Court's different reasons concerning the invalid parallel enquiry and the irrelevance of the officer's opinion.

Pradeep Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 5719/2024, 18/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (638) Prev Next

Headnote :- Homicidal death — medical proof - The post-mortem evidence of P.W. 10 described a close-range pellet wound in the lower abdomen, blackening, a wad, 29 pellets, and damage to vessels and tissue. It established homicidal death caused by a firearm. Absence of a .315 bullet and holes in upper garments did not contradict the lower-body injury; FSL found shot marks with lead on trousers and lead/nitrate on underwear.

Hostile and sole witness — dependable portions - Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli, (2011) 11 SCC 111, Radha Mohan Singh, (2006) 2 SCC 450, and Arjun, (2017) 3 SCC 247, required careful scrutiny of the reliable portions of hostile witnesses' evidence, rather than rejection of their entire testimony; Arjun reproduced Paramjeet Singh and allied authorities. Raghuvir and Sonu did not support the appellant's identification but corroborated the hotel shooting and hospital journey. Their denial of Omprakash's presence did not displace his promptly recorded Dehati Nalishi, scene and hospital participation, identification of a known assailant, and the evidence about cooking and the scene that supported visibility.

Delayed further cross-examination — ocular and medical distance - Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2015) 3 SCC 220, criticised long postponements that allow prevarication and required fair and prompt examination of witnesses; Khujji v. State of M.P., (1991) 3 SCC 627, evaluated a whole deposition despite a later attempted retreat. Omprakash's single 2012 answer placing the shot at 30 feet, over three years after his evidence was fully recorded in 2009, conflicted with close-range medical signs and the eight-foot shop; the Court treated the answer as an unreliable attempt to depart from his earlier evidence, rather than a contradiction that undermined the eyewitness account.

Defective investigation — witness clothing - Visveswaran v. State, (2003) 6 SCC 73, required greater caution in evaluating the evidence, rather than automatic acquittal; Ganga Singh v. State of M.P., (2013) 7 SCC 278, recognised entitlement to acquittal if investigative defects cast reasonable doubt on the remaining prosecution evidence; Abu Thakir v. State of T.N., (2010) 5 SCC 91, quoting K. Yarappa Reddy, required independent scrutiny of the testimony of witnesses to the occurrence. Non-seizure of the transport witnesses' bloodstained clothes did not defeat their credible accounts.

Arms Act — difference between seized firearm and firearm inspected for sanction - The investigating officer and seizure memo concerned a .12-bore katta, but the armourer, FSL and Arms Act sanction concerned a .315-bore exhibit. The Court inferred exhibit substitution, found the sanction invalid and set aside the Section 27 conviction, calling for departmental attention. Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188, treated a mismatch between a recovered firearm and the ballistic evidence as a case without reliable recovery. It did not make recovery indispensable for a murder conviction. Gulab v. State of U.P., Criminal Appeal 81/2021, 9 December 2021, considered Sukhwant Singh's linkage concern but followed Gurucharan Singh and Jugraj Singh in rejecting an inflexible requirement to examine a ballistic expert where direct evidence and injuries are persuasive. The firearm flaw did not undo the separate Section 302 proof.

Independent witnesses — public reluctance and scrutiny - Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, Nagarjit Ahir v. State of Bihar, (2005) 10 SCC 369, and Sadhu Saran Singh v. State of U.P., (2016) 4 SCC 357, did not make independent market witnesses indispensable when the witness actually examined is trustworthy; the evidence of related witnesses requires careful scrutiny. The officer reported non-cooperation, and the Court relied on its specific assessment of Omprakash, not a presumption of reliability.

Motive — relevance without rigid requirement - The prior water-service altercation, two slaps and threat furnished a possible motive. Bikau Pandey, (2003) 12 SCC 616, Hari Shanker, (1996) 9 SCC 40, and Molu, (1976) 4 SCC 362, establish that failure to prove motive cannot, by itself, defeat credible direct evidence. State of U.P. v. Babu Ram, (2000) 4 SCC 515, preserves motive's relevance in every case while recognising the difficulty of proving exactly how the offender's motive developed, with Nathuni Yadav and Jeet Singh cited. The Court rejected the motive objection on the supported facts.

Inquest — apparent cause, not assailant names - Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, Sk. Ayub v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 9 SCC 521, and Brahm Swaroop v. State of U.P., (2011) 6 SCC 288, explain that the report under Section 174 is not substantive evidence. Its object is to record the apparent cause of death, injuries and their likely mechanism; it need not name the culprit. Brahm Swaroop's Radha Mohan Singh passage requires confronting the author about an alleged discrepancy. Omprakash's failure to name Pradeep in the Lash Panchnama did not itself establish an ante-timed FIR.

Sentence and relief — distinct counts - Section 428 records showed 323 undertrial days and custody from 1 June 2012, about eleven years rather than the asserted fourteen. The minimum sentence of life imprisonment under Section 302 was affirmed, with a ₹5,000 fine and one year of rigorous imprisonment in default. The conviction under Section 27 of the Arms Act, its three-year term and ₹1,000 fine, with six months of imprisonment in default, were set aside. The appeal was partly allowed, and the appellant was to serve the remaining murder sentence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 22 June 2008 Pradeep Singh allegedly came to Omprakash Shivhare's Laziz Tiffin Center at about 4 p.m. and slapped employee Anand Rai over a delay in serving water. Omprakash, the proprietor and a relative by marriage of Anand, was then away in Gwalior. Around 7 p.m. Anand told him of the encounter. Omprakash said he questioned Pradeep, who slapped him, was separated by neighbours and threatened to return. Around 8 p.m. Pradeep allegedly came with three or four companions and shot Anand in the hotel while Anand was preparing food. Omprakash, his brother Raghuvir and Sonu took the wounded man to J.A. Hospital, where doctors declared him dead. Omprakash made a Dehati Nalishi at hospital at about 9 p.m.; the investigator corroborated writing it there. The order's witness narrative once says Pradeep returned at "8 A.M." while the FIR, surrounding account and judgment treat the fatal event as around 8 p.m.

Police registered an FIR, made an inquest and spot map, seized bloodstained and plain earth, arrested Pradeep and purportedly seized a katta on his memorandum. Articles went to the FSL and an Arms Act prosecution sanction was obtained. The charge sheet alleged IPC Sections 302/34 and Arms Act Sections 25 and 27, with investigation continuing against companions. The Sessions Judge actually framed charges under Section 302 and Section 25(1-B)(a) read with Sections 3 and 27 of the Arms Act. Fourteen prosecution witnesses and two defence witnesses testified. On 1 June 2012 the First Additional Sessions Judge, Dabra, in S.T. No. 326/2008 convicted Pradeep under Section 302, sentencing him to life imprisonment and ₹5,000 fine with one year rigorous imprisonment in default, and under Section 27 Arms Act, sentencing him to three years rigorous imprisonment and ₹1,000 fine with six months rigorous imprisonment in default; terms were concurrent. In his Section 374 CrPC appeal, Pradeep contested Omprakash's reliability and opportunity, hostile witnesses, absence of independent witnesses and motive, the missing witness-clothing seizure, medical distance, firearm bore and chain, upper-garment holes, inquest omission and custody length. The State maintained the direct account and disputed his claimed fourteen years of jail time.

2. Precedents — Considered : For hostile witnesses, Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 11 SCC 111, was quoted for use of dependable parts for prosecution or defence after careful scrutiny. It reproduced C. Muniappan's caution that trivial omissions or contradictions do not erase the remaining credible evidence. Radha Mohan Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 2 SCC 450, independently said a hostile prosecution witness's account is not washed off the record. Arjun v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2017) 3 SCC 247, allowed corroborative portions despite hostility and reproduced Paramjeet Singh's approach of considering the evidence as a whole with caution and ordinarily looking for corroboration, as well as Mahesh, Rajendra, Govindappa, Mrinal Das and Khachar Dipu. The High Court applied this group to the parts of Raghuvir and Sonu confirming the number of intruders, shooting inside the hotel and immediate hospital transport, while rejecting the argument that their denials of the appellant's identity and Omprakash's presence automatically required rejection of Omprakash's account.

Visveswaran v. State represented by S.D.M., (2003) 6 SCC 73, said a defective investigation calls for extra caution but not acquittal solely for the defect. Ganga Singh v. State of M.P., (2013) 7 SCC 278, stressed that proof beyond reasonable doubt remains necessary: defects causing reasonable doubt still entitle an accused to acquittal, but defects alone cannot undo adequate independent proof. Abu Thakir v. State of T.N., (2010) 5 SCC 91, quoted State of Karnataka v. K. Yarappa Reddy for independent scrutiny of occurrence witnesses even when investigation is irregular or suspicious. The Court applied these qualified rules to police failure to seize any transport witness's bloodstained clothing.

Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2015) 3 SCC 220, was quoted extensively on serious harm from postponing cross-examination for months or years, the possibility of pressure and prevarication, the importance of completing it promptly, and the fair-trial interests of prosecution, defence, victim and society. Khujji v. State of M.P., (1991) 3 SCC 627, examined an eyewitness's entire deposition notwithstanding a later cross-examination effort to retract identification after a month; the witness's opportunity to observe, disclosed by his own evidence, and independent circumstances supported the earlier account. Applying these to Omprakash, the High Court treated his single answer in 2012 about a 30-foot firing distance, after his evidence had been fully recorded in 2009 and repeated Section 311 applications, as an unreliable attempt to depart from his earlier account, in view of the close-range medical evidence, the eight-foot shop and the evidence that the shooting took place inside it.

Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188, held that a firearm mismatch can mean no reliable recovery of the actual weapon, which is not an indispensable condition of murder conviction. Gulab v. State of U.P., Criminal Appeal No. 81/2021, judgment of 9 December 2021, considered the absence of recovered weapon and ballistic evidence against credible eyewitness testimony. Gulab explained Sukhwant Singh's concern where both a firearm and crime cartridge are recovered but their expert comparison is inexplicably omitted; it adopted Gurucharan Singh's fact-dependent qualification of Mohinder Singh, rejecting an inflexible ballistic-expert rule when the direct testimony and the injuries are clearly consistent; it also described Jugraj Singh's acceptance of persuasive surrounding circumstances without ballistic examination. The High Court applied these principles to uphold the murder conviction on the independent proof supporting it despite unreliable weapon recovery, while refusing to save the Arms Act sanction based on a different exhibit.

Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, considered both cautious scrutiny of related witnesses, with Salim Sahab and Masalti in its quotation, and the fact that independent bystanders often do not testify; trustworthy eyewitness evidence need not be discarded for their absence. Nagarjit Ahir v. State of Bihar, (2005) 10 SCC 369, rejected a universal demand that all people in a crowd testify, on its facts stressing several credible injured witnesses. Sadhu Saran Singh v. State of U.P., (2016) 4 SCC 357, recognised reluctance of the public to enter criminal trials and retained credible testimony despite no independent witness. The Court had independently evaluated Omprakash's prompt report, presence and opportunity to observe the incident and credited the officer's account that bystanders would not give statements.

Bikau Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2003) 12 SCC 616, and Hari Shanker v. State of U.P., (1996) 9 SCC 40, say an unproved motive cannot alone defeat credible direct testimony. State of U.P. v. Babu Ram, (2000) 4 SCC 515, explains the limits of the proposition that motive is irrelevant in cases based on eyewitness testimony: motive is relevant in all criminal cases, although the exact development of an offender's mind is difficult to prove and failure to establish the precise motive need not defeat an otherwise proved case. Babu Ram quoted State of H.P. v. Jeet Singh and cited Nathuni Yadav on that difficulty. Molu v. State of Haryana, (1976) 4 SCC 362, regarded motive as less decisive after credible ocular evidence. The Court noted the water-service quarrel, slaps and threat and relied principally on its acceptance of Omprakash's direct account.

Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, held that Section 174's inquest report is not substantive evidence of identity; it establishes apparent cause and injuries and may test inquest witnesses. Sk. Ayub v. State of Maharashtra, (1998) 9 SCC 521, held that there was no legal duty to name the accused in an inquest panchnama. Brahm Swaroop v. State of U.P., (2011) 6 SCC 288, treated inquest omissions as insufficient by themselves to prove an ante-timed FIR, and quoted Radha Mohan Singh on putting an alleged discrepancy to the author for explanation before reliance on it. The High Court applied these authorities to Omprakash's failure to name Pradeep in the Lash Panchnama.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 302 governed the intentional homicide conviction and minimum sentence of life imprisonment, which the appellate court affirmed after evaluating identification and medical proof. The charge sheet referred to Section 34 and continuing investigation of companions, but the recorded trial conviction and this appeal concerned Pradeep's own Section 302 act. Arms Act Sections 25, 3 and 27 appeared in the charge and sanction narrative. The operative trial conviction under Section 27 depended on legally relevant firearm proof and prosecution sanction. The .12-bore item documented by the seizure officer was not the .315-bore item examined by the armourer and FSL and inspected for sanction, making that sanction invalid for the seized weapon. Section 174 CrPC limited the object of inquest to apparent cause rather than identity. Section 311 CrPC appeared in the procedural history of recalling Omprakash for further cross-examination. Section 374 supplied the conviction appeal. The certificate issued under Section 428 was used to check the argument about the period of custody.

4. Issues : (i) Was Anand Rai's death homicidal, and did the medical and clothing evidence fit the claimed lower-abdominal shot? (ii) Could Omprakash's sole identifying account be accepted when Sonu and Raghuvir turned hostile on identity and his presence, and were the evidence about visibility and his prompt hospital report credible? (iii) Did non-seizure of bloodstained witness clothing, absence of market witnesses and the late 30-foot-distance answer create reasonable doubt? (iv) What was the effect on the Arms Act count of the difference between the .12-bore seizure record and the .315-bore armourer, FSL and sanction records, and could the murder count survive without reliable recovery? (v) Did a prior confrontation supply motive, and what weight would its absence have against direct proof? (vi) Did the omission of the accused's identity from the Section 174 inquest report show that the FIR was ante-timed? (vii) Did the actual custody record permit reduction of the murder life term? The decision produced different outcomes for the murder and Arms Act counts.

5. Ratio / Findings : The post-mortem evidence of P.W. 10 documented an ante-mortem lower-abdominal pellet entry wound with blackening, downward track, wad and 29 pellets and vascular and muscle damage; homicide was established. The order lists J.N. Soni as P.W. 10 in paragraph 6 but calls the post-mortem doctor J.N. Joshi in paragraphs 13–15. The absence of a .315 bullet, relied on by the defence, supported concern about the claimed firearm exhibit; it did not disprove the pellet wound. The FSL documented gunshot residues or marks in trousers and underwear at the appropriate lower-body level, defeating reliance on unmarked shirt and vest.

Raghuvir and Sonu did not support Pradeep's identification and offered parts favourable to the defence, but confirmed a group entering the hotel, shooting Anand while he cooked, and removing him to hospital. Applying Rameshbhai, Radha Mohan Singh and Arjun, the Court used those dependable portions but refused to treat their hostile denial of Omprakash's presence as overriding his whole account. Omprakash knew Pradeep, described the earlier slaps and threat, and made the hospital Dehati Nalishi within about an hour; the investigator confirmed writing it. He identified the body, provided instructions for preparation of the spot map and participated in material seizures. His hotel was the scene, his phone contact and journey were consistent with presence, and even defence witness Neeraj placed him on the hospital journey, though denying his presence at the firing. Cooking inside the shop, blood inside and no evidence of load shedding supported sufficient light to recognise a known man; the witness did not attempt to identify or over-implicate unknown companions. The Court credited him after scrutiny.

The police failure to take any of the three transport witnesses' bloodstained clothes was a defect. Under Visveswaran, Ganga Singh and Abu Thakir it required careful evaluation and could matter if it created reasonable doubt; it did not do so in light of the specific accounts found reliable in this case. The doctor described blackening and a shot from about 1 –1½ feet. The claimed 30-foot shot and 70–75-foot viewing position emerged only from one answer in Omprakash's 2012 further cross-examination after repeated recall efforts, three years after his evidence was fully recorded in 2009. Invoking Vinod Kumar and Khujji, the Court regarded it as an attempt to retreat; it considered the eight-foot shop, the blood found inside it and all the accounts placing the shooting inside, and did not treat the later answer as a reliable medical contradiction. It also rejected the independent-bystander objection after the investigating officer said market witnesses were unwilling, while the scrutinised identifying testimony remained credible.

The firearm evidence had a different defect. The seizure memo and investigating officer identified a .12-bore katta; he said he did not dispatch it. The armourer and FSL described a .315-bore firearm, and the Arms Act sanction was granted after inspection of that other bore. The Court inferred substitution by someone in the prosecution agency, called for departmental attention and held the sanction invalid; the Section 27 conviction could not stand. It treated the offence weapon as not reliably recovered. Rakesh and Gulab explained why recovery of the offence weapon was not indispensable to a murder conviction supported by independently credible eyewitness evidence, even without a conclusive ballistic link. The water-service dispute, two slaps and threat supplied possible motive; Babu Ram recognised that motive remains relevant, although its precise development in the offender's mind may be difficult to prove. The asserted absence of motive did not defeat credible eyewitness proof. Given the limited purpose of an inquest under Section 174, Omprakash's failure to name the appellant in the Lash Panchnama did not establish that the FIR was ante-timed; his prompt Dehati Nalishi was supported separately.

The custody argument failed factually and legally. The Section 428 certificate showed arrest on 8 July 2008, release on bail on 29 May 2009 after 323 undertrial days, and custody from the 1 June 2012 conviction, for about eleven years at decision rather than the claimed more than fourteen. The minimum life-imprisonment sentence under Section 302 could not be reduced on the asserted custody period. The Court affirmed the finding of guilt for murder beyond reasonable doubt while reversing only the Section 27 count, preserving the difference between an unreliable firearm exhibit and credible independent proof of the shooting.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the appeal. Pradeep's Section 302 IPC conviction, life imprisonment and ₹5,000 fine with one year rigorous imprisonment in default were affirmed. His Section 27 Arms Act conviction and its term of three years of rigorous imprisonment and ₹1,000 fine with six months rigorous imprisonment in default were set aside because of the invalid sanction and firearm chain. The original concurrent-sentence direction consequently left the murder sentence to be served; the appellant remained in jail and was directed to undergo its remainder. A free copy of the appellate judgment was to be given to him immediately and the trial record returned with a copy for information and compliance.

Pradeep Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 465/2012, 22/08/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (639) Prev Next

Headnote :- Anticipatory bail — applicant-specific disposition - In Crime No. 215/2021, counsel withdrew applicant 1 Pradeep Singh's Section 438 request after acknowledging his blow caused a nasal fracture, and it was dismissed as withdrawn. Applicant 2 Nitesh Singh disputed the alleged demand and the allegation that he had caused grievous injury, offered to cooperate and was granted conditional anticipatory bail after the Court considered the State's separate same-day assault allegation and the pandemic context, without a merits finding.

COVID-19 and bail — prison decongestion context - In Re: Contagion of COVID 19 Virus in Prisons, Supreme Court suo motu WP(C) No. 1/2020, order of 23 March 2020, directed States and Union Territories to constitute High Powered Committees to identify categories of prisoners for parole or interim bail. The direction addressed Article 21 concerns arising from overcrowding and required consideration of the circumstances of the offences. The High Court considered the second wave in Nitesh's individual pre-arrest application.

Bail conditions — appearance and expiry - Nitesh had to appear before the investigating officer by 8 September 2021, furnish a ₹1,00,000 personal bond, undertake compliance with COVID-19 instructions, and observe the other Section 438 conditions. The order was to remain in force until the conclusion of trial. It would automatically lose effect if he failed to appear by the deadline, jumped bail or violated a condition.

Victim notice — bail intimation - Following Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, the Court directed intimation of Nitesh's bail grant to the complainant.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Pradeep Singh and Nitesh Singh were apprehending arrest in Crime No. 215/2021 at Gohad Chouraha Police Station, Bhind. The initial IPC sections listed were 327, 323, 294 and 506 read with 34; State counsel said Section 329 had also been added. In seeking withdrawal of Pradeep's request, counsel proceeded on the basis that his blow had fractured the injured person's nasal bone. Nitesh contested the alleged ₹200 liquor demand and said he caused no grievous injury. He described a neighbour dispute, his age as about twenty, the potential harm of incarceration to his career and willingness to cooperate. He asserted that he would neither abscond nor tamper with the prosecution case. These were application-stage contentions, not trial findings.

The State and complainant opposed Nitesh's relief, citing a separate earlier incident on the same day in which he allegedly assaulted the complainant's elder brother. A complaint lodged by Saurabh Bhadoriya had led to Crime No. 213/2021 under IPC Sections 323, 294 and 506. The Court had a case diary and heard the complainant's counsel by video conferencing. Counsel withdrew Pradeep's application, which was dismissed as withdrawn. The Court then addressed Nitesh separately in light of the deteriorating prison situation during the second wave of COVID-19.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Re: Contagion of COVID 19 Virus in Prisons, Supreme Court suo motu WP(C) No. 1/2020, order dated 23 March 2020, was reproduced at length. Confronted with prison overcrowding and the threat of COVID-19 spread, the Supreme Court invoked Article 21 and directed each State or Union Territory to constitute a High Powered Committee comprising the chair of the State Legal Services Committee, the Principal Secretary for Home/Prisons and the Director General of Prisons. The committee was to identify categories of prisoners for parole or interim bail and the appropriate periods for release, considering offence nature and severity, sentence length and other relevant factors. The quoted example concerned offences with prescribed punishment of up to seven years; category choice was left to the committee. The High Court used the public-health context during the second wave in its own Section 438 assessment of Nitesh, who was seeking protection before arrest.

Aparna Bhat and Others v. State of M.P., Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, judgment dated 18 March 2021, was expressly invoked only to direct intimation of the bail grant to the complainant. The complainant's counsel had already appeared and opposed relief, yet the communication direction was added.

3. Statutes considered : Section 438 CrPC governed the first anticipatory-bail application and the usual conditions that the Court continued to apply. IPC Sections 327, 323, 294 and 506/34 were the Crime No. 215/2021 offences initially recited; the State reported addition of Section 329. The separate Crime No. 213/2021 against Nitesh was said to allege IPC Sections 323, 294 and 506; it was not tried or disposed of here. Article 21 was part of the Supreme Court prison decongestion order quoted as pandemic context.

4. Issues : (i) What disposition applied to Pradeep's anticipatory-bail request after counsel withdrew it in light of the attributed nasal fracture? (ii) Could Nitesh receive pre-arrest protection despite the contested liquor-demand allegation, the State's report that an offence under Section 329 had been added, and the separate same-day crime alleged against him, with second-wave prison conditions considered? (iii) What appearance, bond, public-health and continuing conduct terms would govern any protection, and when would it lapse? (iv) What complainant notice followed the grant under the authority cited by the Court?

5. Ratio / Findings : Pradeep's lawyer sought withdrawal because the blow attributed to him had fractured the injured person's nasal bone. The Court dismissed only his application as withdrawn. For Nitesh the Court recorded his denial of the liquor-demand and grievous-injury characterisation, his age and cooperation assurances, and the State and complainant's objection based on an alleged assault earlier that day and a distinct FIR. It considered both those allegations and the deteriorating COVID-19 second-wave situation. The quoted Supreme Court prison order furnished an Article 21 decongestion consideration but concerned committee assessment of prisoners for parole or interim bail; the High Court made a discretionary, applicant-specific Section 438 order without declaring guilt or innocence.

The protection was conditional. Nitesh had to appear before the investigating officer by 8 September 2021 and furnish a ₹1,00,000 personal bond to that officer's satisfaction, together with an undertaking to follow governmental and local COVID-19 instructions. Other Section 438 conditions remained. Though stated to continue through the conclusion of trial, it would automatically lose effect if Nitesh jumped bail, breached a condition or failed to appear by the specified date. The Court cited Aparna Bhat for a further direction to send intimation of the grant to the complainant.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed applicant 1 Pradeep Singh's application for anticipatory bail as withdrawn and allowed applicant 2 Nitesh Singh's application for anticipatory bail.

Pradeep Singh and Others v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 41715/2021, 01/09/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (640) Prev Next

Headnote :- Maintenance / separate residence / cruelty and restitution proceedings - The wife's pleaded dowry demand and cruelty, the husband's failure to explain why he did not prosecute his transferred Section 9 Hindu Marriage Act petition, his failure to produce his pay slip and his reference to a divorce petition when asked whether he would take her back supported a sufficient reason to live apart; the desertion defence failed on this record.

Section 125(3) CrPC / conditional offer to maintain - The husband's statement in a reply that he would keep the wife did not establish an effective offer that would defeat maintenance in circumstances where he filed no specific application, abandoned restitution proceedings and stated in cross-examination that he sought divorce.

Maintenance / financial disclosure / Rajnesh v. Neha, (2021) 2 SCC 324 - The Supreme Court's guidelines on affidavits of disclosure were applied to the husband's refusal to produce his pay slip despite a direction to do so. Using his ₹82,872 monthly admission and tax information showing ₹12,35,123 annual gross income, the Court estimated compulsory deductions at 10% because exact figures were unavailable and arrived at about ₹92,634 monthly take-home income.

Maintenance / voluntary EMI / quantum - A ₹13,600 instalment repaying the husband's ₹6,20,000 bank loan was not a statutory salary deduction and did not reduce the income used for this award. Considering his position as an Assistant Engineer and the standard of living the wife would have enjoyed in her matrimonial home, the final Section 125 allowance was increased from ₹8,000 to ₹30,000 monthly, with credit for interim maintenance paid.

Maintenance / effective date / Rajnesh v. Neha, (2021) 2 SCC 324 - The Family Court gave no reason to start the award on its order date. The trial record showed delay principally attributable to the husband and disclosed no exceptional circumstance justifying postponement of the wife's entitlement. The enhanced award commenced on her application date, 19.08.2019, with arrears due in three months.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Pragati Rashinkar (Dixit) filed a Section 125 CrPC application on 19.08.2019 before the Family Court at Gwalior, alleging dowry demand and cruelty and seeking maintenance from Rohan Dixit. The Additional Principal Judge's order of 24.08.2024 in MJCR No. 20155/2019 granted her ₹8,000 monthly only from the order date. She brought Criminal Revision No. 4888/2024 for higher maintenance and commencement from the application. Rohan brought Criminal Revision No. 6325/2024 to set the award aside, claiming she was educated, had worked part-time as a lecturer, and had left without sufficient reason. He had earlier pursued restitution under Section 9 Hindu Marriage Act at Korba; after transfer by the Supreme Court to Gwalior, he did not appear and that petition was dismissed for nonprosecution on 21.12.2021. He invoked an asserted willingness to keep her, but in cross-examination answered the question whether he would take her back by pointing to his divorce petition. The Family Court had directed production of his pay slip; he did not produce it. His disclosure affidavit gave monthly income as ₹82,872 and claimed a ₹13,600 EMI on a ₹6,20,000 SBI loan. Income-tax information produced by the wife showed 2022–23 gross income of ₹12,35,123. She also said he retained her educational certificates, preventing work; he disputed possession after previously promising their return during reconciliation. The maintenance record showed that ex parte proceedings were repeatedly set aside, interim payments were irregular, cross-examination was deferred and settlement discussions were unsuccessful. These two cross-revisions were decided together.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rajnesh v. Neha, (2021) 2 SCC 324 was invoked by the wife and expressly quoted and applied by the Court. Its paragraph 72 requires applicable affidavits of assets and liabilities from parties in maintenance proceedings, a timely reply and disclosure by the respondent, limits on adjournments, and permits a court faced with wilful delay or missing information to proceed on the available record or use appropriate procedural means to obtain income material. The quoted directions also address interrogatories, document production, Evidence Act Sections 106 and 165, amended affidavits upon changed circumstances, irresponsible pleadings, exceptions for EWS and BPL parties and casual labourers, as well as prompt interim decisions. The High Court specifically used the disclosure duty and the missing pay slip to justify estimation on the basis of the husband's affidavit and the income-tax information. The Court also applied Rajnesh's principle that maintenance is ordinarily awarded from the application date rather than the order date; absence of any Family Court reason and the husband's delay defeated a later start. Kaushalya v. Mukesh Jain, (2020) 17 SCC 822 appears within the Rajnesh quotation in connection with wilful disclosure delay.

3. Statutes considered : Section 125 CrPC governed the wife's claim and the assessment of separate residence, amount and commencement. The husband invoked the further proviso to Section 125(3) on an offer to maintain on a cohabitation condition; the Court rejected the asserted offer on the record and the wife's separate residence was supported by cruelty allegations and his conduct. The abandoned restitution proceeding was under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955; it had not resulted in a subsisting decree. The Rajnesh quotation refers to constitutional Articles 136 and 142 as the Supreme Court's basis for uniform guidelines; Order 11 and Order 10 CPC, Evidence Act Sections 106 and 165, and Section 340 CrPC as possible procedural tools. The application for production of certificates is described as one under Section 91 CrPC; an earlier source passage prints CPC, while paragraph 25 uses CrPC; the Court's operative direction rests on the reconciliation admission.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the wife had sufficient reason to live separately in light of her cruelty allegations, the husband's abandoned restitution petition, his reply and cross-examination positions, and his desertion plea. (ii) Whether his asserted willingness to take her back constituted an effective cohabitation-conditioned maintenance offer. (iii) What income could fairly be found when a directed pay slip was withheld, the Rajnesh affidavit disclosed income, tax information showed a higher gross figure, and a voluntary EMI was claimed. (iv) Whether ₹8,000 monthly should be enhanced and whether final maintenance should begin on the application date given the procedural history. (v) What ancillary certificate-return direction and payment adjustments were required.

5. Ratio / Findings : The husband's Section 9 petition had been actively pursued at Korba but, once transferred to Gwalior, was dismissed because he did not prosecute it. The Court rejected his later explanation based on the Section 498-A case because he had not formally withdrawn restitution on that ground. It considered the wife's dowry and cruelty account, his refusal to produce the salary document despite direction, and his statement about a divorce petition when directly asked whether he would take her back. Together these circumstances defeated his contention that she lacked reason to live apart; a bare reply asserting willingness to keep her did not overcome the actual conduct. Under the quoted Rajnesh disclosure framework, parties must give financial information; his failure to produce the pay slip meant that the Court could not calculate the precise compulsory deductions. His affidavit admitted ₹82,872 monthly, while 2022–23 tax material gave ₹12,35,123 gross. The Court explicitly estimated statutory deductions at 10% (₹1,23,512), producing ₹11,11,611 net annual and about ₹92,634 monthly. The ₹13,600 EMI was repayment of an amount he had voluntarily borrowed and already received. The Court did not treat it as a compulsory salary deduction. Considering the standard of living the wife would have enjoyed in her matrimonial home and the husband's income as an Assistant Engineer, the Court raised maintenance to ₹30,000. Rajnesh required application-date commencement unless a reason justified otherwise. The Family Court gave none; the chronology showed repeated husband-side delay, ex parte proceedings set aside on payment of costs, irregular interim payments, deferred evidence and unsuccessful settlement discussions, so the Court found no exceptional circumstance to defer commencement. On educational certificates, his recorded reconciliation statement to return them supported a specific remedial direction.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed Pragati's criminal revision and dismissed Rohan's criminal revision. The Family Court's 24.08.2024 order was modified: Pragati receives ₹30,000 per month from the filing date, 19.08.2019, rather than ₹8,000 from the order date. Interim maintenance actually paid is adjustable. Arrears are payable within three months of the High Court order. Rohan must return her original educational certificates within one month, or must himself obtain and hand over duplicates within two months.

Pragati Rashinkar (Dixit) v. Rohan Dixit, Cr.R. no. 4888/2024 & 6325/2024, 24/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (641) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act / Section 141 / nonsignatory directors - Sunita Palita v. Panchami Stone Quarry, (2022) 10 SCC 152, and National Small Industries Corporation Ltd. v. Harmeet Singh Paintal, (2010) 3 SCC 330, required averments in the complaint that directors other than a Managing or Joint Managing Director were in charge of and responsible for the conduct of the company's business at the relevant time. Standard Chartered Bank v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 6 SCC 62, and Gunmala Sales (P) Ltd. v. Anu Mehta, (2015) 1 SCC 103, allowed process on a sufficient basic averment when the complaint was read as a whole. The complaint here specifically alleged the applicants' daily operation of the business and sharing of profit and loss; their actual role remained for trial.

Section 482 CrPC / director's defence / sterling material - Gunmala Sales permitted exceptional quashing despite a basic Section 141 averment on incontrovertible material or wholly acceptable circumstances showing that requiring the director to stand trial would be an abuse of process; a mere demand for further particulars of the director's role or a disputed defence did not suffice. The internal notarized MoU and bank requests did not establish a basis for quashing; no actual change of the bank mandate was shown. The cheques were not dishonoured because of stop-payment instructions. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, was applied by analogy to the limits on an accused's participation before cognizance. Cognizance stood.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Mohit Builders and Associates Private Limited was formed with Mohit Rai, Anurag Baderia and Prateek Agrawal as directors. The two applicants invoked a notarized memorandum of understanding under which, they said, Rai alone managed daily operations while they were promised a share of the units to be available on completion of the project. They said that, as differences with Rai developed, the three directors jointly wrote to IDBI Bank on 06.12.2019 requesting an account mandate requiring any two signatures, and they later asked the bank to stop a cheque series. Rai nevertheless issued seven company cheques dated 02.07.2020 for materials allegedly supplied by Pagaria Marbles and Ceramic Firm. They were dishonoured; the complainant served a Section 138 NI Act notice on the company, the applicants and Rai. The applicants' 14.08.2020 reply disputed their responsibility and suggested Rai may have purchased personally. They also lodged a 2021 police FIR against Rai. Other IPC complaint proceedings by the respondent remained separate. The respondent's complaint under Sections 138 and 142 NI Act against the company, Rai and the two applicants led the JMFC, Jabalpur to take cognizance on 18.02.2021. In M.Cr.C. No. 2230/2024 the two directors sought Section 482 CrPC quashing of that complaint and cognizance order. The complaint's paragraphs 4 and 5, reproduced in the order, alleged that the applicants, with Rai, operated the firm through daily contact, jointly shared profit and loss, and gave a false denial in their notice reply. These were complaint allegations.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sunita Palita v. Panchami Stone Quarry, (2022) 10 SCC 152, was used for the requirement that the complaint sufficiently plead that a nonsignatory director was in charge of and responsible for the conduct of the company's business, with the Managing/Joint Managing Director distinction. National Small Industries Corporation Ltd. v. Harmeet Singh Paintal, (2010) 3 SCC 330, required the complaint to spell out how and in what manner the director had that role. Standard Chartered Bank v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 6 SCC 62, was quoted at length on reading the complaint as a whole, sufficient basic averment, later proof of role, and the exceptional possibility of quashing upon incontrovertible defence material. Its extract discussed Gunmala Sales (P) Ltd. v. Anu Mehta, (2015) 1 SCC 103, and also referred to S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, (2005) 8 SCC 89, and T.N. News Print & Papers Ltd. v. D. Karunakar, (2016) 6 SCC 78. The High Court separately reproduced Gunmala paragraph 31 and the differentiated conclusions in paragraph 34: a basic averment concerning the relevant time supports process; exceptionally, clear, unimpeachable material may show a director could not have been responsible and that trial would be abusive; Section 482 must be exercised cautiously without a roving inquiry or mini-trial. The Court applied that distinction to reject these applicants' contested private documents, expressly preserving trial determination. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, was cited on considering prosecution material at the charge stage and was applied by analogy to the absence of a right for the accused to participate before cognizance in a complaint case. Aparna A. Shah, Alka Khandu Avhad and K.K. Ahuja appeared as applicants' cited cases. Gunmala's embedded discussion of Anita Malhotra concerned proof of an earlier resignation in that precedent.

3. Statutes considered : Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 governed the dishonoured-cheque complaint, statutory notice and cognizance under challenge; Section 142 was cited as the complaint provision. Section 141 governed vicarious responsibility of those in charge of and responsible to a company for the conduct of its business at the relevant time; the applicants' status as directors alone did not establish vicarious liability. Section 482 CrPC governed the High Court's limited exercise of inherent jurisdiction to quash complaint proceedings for abuse of process, based on the complaint and, exceptionally, incontrovertible material. Section 156(3) and Section 200 CrPC concerned the respondent's separate IPC complaint procedure. The applicants' police FIR invoked IPC Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 406 as background, not as charges finally adjudicated here.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the respondent's Section 138/141 complaint made sufficiently specific relevant-time allegations that the applicant directors controlled the company's business, rather than merely naming them as directors. (ii) Whether their MoU, bank mandate and stop-payment requests, and dispute or FIR against Rai were incontrovertible exculpatory circumstances permitting Section 482 quashing of the complaint and 18.02.2021 cognizance order. (iii) Whether the actual nature of their role could be conclusively decided at this pretrial stage.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first distinguished the pleading requirements for nonsignatory directors from those for Managing or Joint Managing Directors and reviewed Sunita Palita and National Small Industries Corporation on the pleading foundation. Standard Chartered Bank's treatment of Gunmala and the direct Gunmala extract explained that a sufficient relevant-time averment ordinarily permits process while exceptionally unimpeachable circumstances may establish abuse without a mini-trial. The complaint did more than name the applicants: the reproduced paragraphs alleged daily contact, joint operation and sharing of the firm's profit and loss, and disputed the applicants' notice reply. The High Court treated those as a specific alleged role at the threshold, not as proved facts. It then tested the defence against the narrow quashing standard. The complainant was not a party to the internal MoU, which was merely notarized and had not been lodged with the Registrar of Companies. The document required proof, and the Court could not take judicial notice of it. The 06.12.2019 bank request did not establish that the bank actually changed the account's mode of operation. The Court also found that the cheques were not dishonoured because of stop-payment instructions, weakening reliance on those instructions. Its discussion of the applicants' investment and equal profit share formed part of this provisional assessment. Following Debendra Nath Padhi by analogy, it declined to resolve the disputed defence at the cognizance threshold. With material facts remaining for evidence, the applicants had not demonstrated a basis to quash. The trial court was expressly told to decide their actual role independently, without influence from these observations.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The respondent's Section 138 NI Act complaint and the JMFC's cognizance order of 18.02.2021 were not quashed. The trial court must decide whether the applicants were sleeping directors or responsible for daily business on the evidence at trial, uninfluenced by the High Court's threshold observations.

Prateek Agrawal and Others v. Pagaria Marbles and Ceramic Firm, M.Cr.C. no. 2230/2024, 13/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (642) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bigamy / cognizance threshold - The Court applied K. Neelaveni v State represented by Inspector of Police, (2010) 11 SCC 607, for the limited proposition that an allegation of a second marriage while the first marriage subsists can support cognizance under IPC section 494/BNS section 82 without proof of the actual Saptapadi rites at that stage. The husband denied marrying the woman with whom he lived, while the wife asserted that they had married.

Non-cognizable report / complaint - The Court referred to the Explanation to CrPC section 2(d), under which a police report on a non-cognizable offence is deemed to be a complaint and the reporting officer is treated as the complainant. It distinguished registration of an FIR from the court's taking cognizance. The order made no determination under CrPC section 155(2) and left the police free to proceed with or close the investigation.

Minor child / able-bodied father / ancillary support - The Court invoked Rajnesh v Neha, (2021) 2 SCC 324, to hold that an able-bodied parent cannot avoid maintaining his child by choosing to earn a meagre amount. The husband admitted paternity, stated that his monthly income was ₹13,000 and offered to pay at least ₹6,000 per month. The Court directed him to deposit ₹6,000 in the child's bank account by the second day of each month. It reserved liberty to seek enhancement and stated that default would be treated as contempt. The spouse's separate statutory remedies were also reserved. This was an ancillary order in the habeas proceeding, without an adjudication under section 125.

Habeas corpus / adult choice - The missing husband appeared voluntarily and said that he wished to live with another woman rather than the petitioner. The Court dismissed the Article 226 petition and left him free to choose his place of residence, subject to law. He was required to furnish a ₹1 lakh personal bond with one surety in the like amount and to comply with the continuing cooperation and contact obligations.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Radha Prajapati filed Writ Petition 31612/2026 under Article 226 seeking a writ of habeas corpus, alleging that her husband was missing. At an earlier in-camera proceeding on 14 August 2026, the investigating officer displayed a video apparently showing the husband with his father and grandfather. In the video, the grandfather was berating an informer who had disclosed the husband's address. The adult husband appeared at the hearing on 18 August and identified himself and his relatives in the video. He said that he had left with the daughter of his wife's aunt, whom he described as his wife's cousin. They stayed in Bhopal and Rajkot, then travelled to Panvel and Goa before returning. He acknowledged switching off their phones to prevent the police from tracing their location and later living in a rented room in Jaipur. He said that he earned ₹13,000 per month delivering food, while the woman did stitching work. He had used another person's Aadhaar to obtain a new SIM and returned to court after his aunt told him that family members were in difficulty. The police described his return as voluntary. He admitted having a physical relationship with the woman but denied marrying her; the petitioner asserted that they had married. A missing-person report concerning the woman had also been investigated, and she had been placed in a One Stop Centre before her statement was recorded before the SDM. The husband did not wish to resume cohabitation with the petitioner but acknowledged their minor child. While deciding the habeas corpus petition, the Court considered the legal threshold for cognizance of bigamy, the treatment of a police report concerning a non-cognizable offence, and child maintenance.

2. Precedents — Considered : K. Neelaveni v State represented by Inspector of Police and others, 2010:INSC:160 : (2010) 11 SCC 607, was used to distinguish allegations sufficient for taking cognizance from proof of the actual performance of marriage rituals such as Saptapadi. The Court stated that an allegation that a husband had married a second woman while his first marriage subsisted could permit cognizance under IPC section 494/BNS section 82 without proof of the ritual at that preliminary stage. Rajnesh v Neha, 2020:INSC:631 : (2021) 2 SCC 324, was applied to the responsibility of an able-bodied parent to maintain a minor child. The Bench considered the father's admission of paternity and his stated modest employment income. It held that his choice to earn a meagre amount did not relieve him of that responsibility. The amount fixed in this case was consistent with his offer.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 provided the habeas corpus jurisdiction to locate and hear the missing adult. After he appeared and chose his place of residence, the petition was dismissed subject to cooperation conditions. IPC section 494 and BNS section 82 were cited as the bigamy provisions in the discussion of cognizance. The Explanation to CrPC section 2(d) was invoked to treat a police report concerning a non-cognizable offence as a complaint and the reporting officer as the complainant. The judgment also refers to “Section 2(h) of BNS” as an equivalent. Maintenance for the child was ordered in the Article 226 proceeding with reference to Rajnesh; no claim under Section 125 CrPC or the corresponding BNSS provision was adjudicated. The petitioner's other matrimonial and maintenance remedies were expressly left open.

4. Issues : Whether the husband remained missing or was unlawfully detained so as to require further habeas corpus relief after his voluntary appearance before the Court, and whether he could be compelled to live with the petitioner. Whether, despite the husband's denial, the wife's allegation of a second marriage required proof of the performance of Saptapadi at the stage of taking cognizance of bigamy. Relatedly, how a police report concerning a non-cognizable offence could be treated procedurally without determining in advance whether investigation should proceed or cognizance be taken. Whether a father who admitted having a minor child, but chose a low-paid job and to live elsewhere, remained obliged to provide meaningful support for the child in this proceeding, and what directions could be made while leaving separate matrimonial claims open.

5. Ratio / Findings : The adult husband appeared before the Court and admitted that he had deliberately made it difficult for the police to trace him, including by switching off phones and obtaining a new SIM using another person's Aadhaar. The video and his own account showed that he was no longer missing in circumstances suggesting unexplained detention. His wish not to live with the petitioner was respected, subject to law. The Bench noted the conflicting accounts of the alleged second marriage. Applying K. Neelaveni, it distinguished taking cognizance on prima facie allegations, without immediate proof of the marriage rituals, from finally proving the marriage. The Court added that a police report concerning a non-cognizable offence could be treated as a complaint under the cited CrPC definition.

The husband acknowledged paternity and stated that he earned ₹13,000 per month delivering food. The Bench considered his voluntary choices, his capacity as an able-bodied person and the principle in Rajnesh. It held that his present modest salary was not decisive of his obligation to maintain the child. The Bench also referred to his well-placed relatives. As he had offered to deposit at least ₹6,000 per month, the Court directed him to pay that amount into an account opened for the child by the second day of each month, with liberty to seek enhancement. The wife remained free to pursue other statutory matrimonial or maintenance remedies.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the writ petition after the husband appeared. Before leaving for a place of his choice, he was required to execute a ₹1 lakh personal bond with one surety in the like amount before the investigating officer and undertake to appear whenever summoned. He was also required to provide his mobile number, keep it operational, answer police calls and receive the child's bank account details. The petitioner was directed to open an account for the child and communicate its details; the husband was to deposit ₹6,000 in it by the second day of every month. The Court stated that default would be treated as contempt and reserved the child's liberty to seek enhancement. It left the police free to continue or close the investigation as permitted by law and left the petitioner's matrimonial and maintenance remedies open. The case diary was returned. The Court did not direct the husband to reside with his wife, finally determine the allegation of bigamy or record a conviction.

Radha Prajapati v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 31612/2026, 18/08/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (643) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal procedure — Section 319 CrPC — summoning additional accused — extraordinary power and evidentiary threshold - The power under Section 319 is discretionary and must be exercised sparingly, on strong and cogent evidence emerging before the court. Hardeep Singh requires evidence substantially stronger than a mere probability of complicity or the prima facie case sufficient to frame a charge, without requiring a final opinion on guilt. The material must be assessed separately for each proposed accused. The Court upheld the order summoning Pawan Pandey and set it aside as to Radhe and Vivek Pandey.

Additional accused — false alibi material in anticipatory-bail application — deponent's sworn support affidavit - Pawan Pandey specifically stated on oath that the existing accused's application under Section 438 was her first bail application. That application was supported by an allegedly false certificate showing that she was in hospital at the time of the incident. The Court inferred knowledge from his specific statement on oath and rejected his reliance on the narrow wording of the affidavit. It applied the Supreme Court's explanation that an affidavit is a solemn declaration and not an empty formality.

Additional accused — alleged conspiracy to fabricate medical certificate — mere presence at police station - CCTV footage or other evidence placing Radhe and Vivek at the police station with the existing accused did not satisfy the requirement of strong evidence under Section 319 when there was no evidence linking them to preparation of the certificate. Conspiracy could not be presumed merely from that association. The order summoning them was therefore set aside.

Section 319 CrPC — evidence and stage — examination-in-chief before cross-examination - Hardeep Singh permits a witness's examination-in-chief to be considered under Section 319 without waiting for cross-examination. Acting on the complainant's recorded examination-in-chief was not premature merely because cross-examination had not taken place. The separate test of evidentiary strength continued to govern the decision whether to summon each applicant.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This criminal revision under Sections 397/401 read with Section 482 CrPC challenged the order dated 31 January 2022 passed by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Dabra, in Sessions Trial No. 104/2021. That order allowed the complainant's application under Section 319 and summoned three persons as additional accused. Crime No. 455/2017 had initially named Dharmendra Pandey, Ragini Pandey and two others under Sections 324, 323, 294, 341, 506 and 34 IPC; Sections 323 and 307 were later added after receipt of the medical report. The prosecution alleged that a certificate from Civil Hospital, Dabra, falsely showed Ragini as admitted to the hospital at the time of the incident, enabling her to plead an alibi in her anticipatory-bail application. The judgment recounted an inquiry linking the certificate to the existing accused and Dr Virendra Gaur. Police-station CCTV footage placed Ragini elsewhere, an unrelated patient's OPD visit was allegedly used, and a handwriting report identified the writing as the doctor's. The judgment also recorded that Ragini's special leave petition was dismissed with time to surrender, but that she then failed to surrender for a prolonged period. These allegations and inquiry conclusions formed the background to the revision. The question was whether the three additional persons could be summoned, rather than final proof of the certificate's falsity or their guilt.

After a charge sheet was filed against Ragini, Dharmendra, the doctor and others, the complainant, Mukesh Parashar, gave evidence in examination-in-chief and applied under Section 319 to have the present applicants summoned. Applicant 2, Pawan Pandey, had filed an affidavit supporting Ragini's application under Section 438 before the trial court and the High Court, declaring that it was her first bail application. He stated that he was her relative and had engaged counsel. He argued that he had not sworn to the accuracy of the factual assertions in the application or the annexed hospital record. Applicants 1 and 3, Radhe alias Radheshyam Pandey and Vivek Pandey, were said to have been at the police station with the existing accused on 4 June 2017. The complainant and the State contended that their presence suggested involvement in preparing the certificate. All three applicants argued that the complainant's examination-in-chief could not support action under Section 319 before cross-examination. The State and the complainant opposed their objections.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab and others, AIR 2014 SC 1400, was relied on by the applicants and applied by the High Court. Paragraphs 98–99 describe Section 319 as an extraordinary power to be exercised sparingly. It requires strong and cogent evidence exceeding both a mere probability of complicity and the prima facie case sufficient to frame a charge, without a final opinion on guilt. The High Court adopted that threshold and assessed the material against Pawan separately from the material against Radhe and Vivek. It also quoted paragraph 110 of Hardeep Singh on the stage at which the power may be exercised and the meaning of "evidence". Examination-in-chief recorded before the court can be sufficient without waiting for cross-examination; material from an inquiry may corroborate evidence recorded in court in the circumstances explained in that passage. The High Court applied the rule to reject the timing objection while retaining the stringent test of sufficiency for each applicant. The quoted discussion in Hardeep Singh referred to Dharam Pal on the distinct power under Section 193 after committal.

New Okhla Industrial Development Authority v. Ravindra Kumar Singhvi (dead) through legal representatives, Civil Appeal No. 382/2012, decided 15 February 2022, was quoted and applied to explain the solemn nature of an affidavit. The quoted paragraphs 17–18 state that a sworn statement made before a person authorised to administer an oath is more than a sheet of paper. That passage reproduced M. Veerabhadra Rao v. Tek Chand, 1984 (Supp) SCC 571, on an affidavit, its oath or affirmation, and the statutory definitions in the Oaths Act and the General Clauses Act. The High Court relied on those passages to reject Pawan's contention that the narrow wording of his affidavit made it inconsequential. The judgment also records the dismissal of Ragini's special leave petition as part of the procedural history.

3. Statutes considered : Section 319 CrPC was the decisive provision. The Court considered its extraordinary power to summon a person who was not already an accused, the strength of evidence required, and whether examination-in-chief could suffice before cross-examination. The High Court quoted the Supreme Court's discussion of inquiry and trial under Section 319 and the fresh proceeding contemplated by Section 319(4). Section 193 and the inquiry provisions appeared in the quoted passage from Hardeep Singh; they were not independently decided in this revision. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provided the revisional jurisdiction, read with Section 482 as stated in the application. Sections 438 and 439(2) CrPC arose in the earlier anticipatory-bail application and the application for cancellation. The original FIR's IPC Sections 324, 323, 294, 341, 506 and 34, and the later addition of Section 307, formed the prosecution background. The revision did not separately determine the ingredients of those offences. The Supreme Court passage explaining the solemn nature of an affidavit referred to Section 3(2) of the Oaths Act, 1969 and Section 3(3) of the General Clauses Act, 1897.

4. Issues : (1) Did the material before the trial court meet the stringent requirement under Section 319 for summoning each of Pawan Pandey, Radhe alias Radheshyam Pandey and Vivek Pandey? In particular, could Pawan's sworn statement that Ragini's anticipatory-bail application was her first support an inference that he knowingly participated in filing an application supported by a false hospital certificate? Could the other applicants' presence at the police station support an inference of conspiracy? (2) Could the trial judge act under Section 319 on the complainant's examination-in-chief before cross-examination? The revision did not finally determine the proposed accused's criminal responsibility at trial or the underlying dispute concerning bail and the certificate.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying Hardeep Singh, the Court held that Section 319 is not a means of adding anyone who might be guilty. Strong and cogent evidence recorded before the court must establish more than the prima facie case sufficient to frame a charge, but the judge must not form a final opinion on guilt. In Pawan's case, the Court considered his specific statement on oath that this was the first bail application, his role as a relative who had engaged counsel, and the disputed application with its annexed alibi certificate. It reasoned that he could have made that specific declaration only after examining the application. The absence of a general verification of every factual assertion did not make his supporting affidavit inconsequential. Relying on New Okhla's discussion of affidavits as solemn declarations, the Court treated the affidavit as material supporting an inference of knowing involvement for the limited purpose of summoning him. The Court's conclusion about Pawan's knowledge formed part of its Section 319 assessment; it was neither a final conviction nor a general rule that such knowledge was conclusively established in every case.

For Radhe and Vivek, the material and allegations showed their presence at the police station with Ragini and Dharmendra, but no further link to preparation of the false medical certificate was pointed out. The Court declined to presume a conspiracy merely from their presence and found that the Section 319 requirement was not met as to either of them. It assessed the material against each proposed accused separately. These summoning decisions did not finally determine the existing accused's guilt or acquit Radhe and Vivek.

Finally, the Court rejected the argument that the complainant's examination-in-chief was not "evidence" until cross-examination. Hardeep Singh expressly permits exercise of the Section 319 power at that stage. The quoted passage explains the distinction between inquiry and trial and the statutory procedure protecting the newly summoned person. The absence of cross-examination did not by itself invalidate the trial court's order. The order nevertheless failed as to the two applicants against whom the requisite individual evidence was lacking.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal revision in part. It affirmed the trial court's order dated 31 January 2022 under Section 319 as to applicant 2, Pawan Pandey, and set it aside as to applicant 1, Radhe alias Radheshyam Pandey, and applicant 3, Vivek Pandey. Pawan alone therefore remained summoned under the challenged order.

Radhe and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 467/2022, 22/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (644) Prev Next

Headnote :- Evidence — circumstantial murder case — complete chain and standard of proof - The prosecution must firmly establish circumstances consistent only with guilt and excluding every reasonable hypothesis of innocence. The possibility that the accused "may be guilty", or even grave suspicion, is insufficient. The Bench applied the Supreme Court authorities from Sharad Birdhichand Sarda to Padala Veera Reddy, Ramreddy Rajesh Khanna Reddy, Balwinder Singh, Sunil Clifford Daniel and Satish Nirankari. It emphasised the quality and reliability of the complete chain of circumstances rather than the number of witnesses. On this record, it found the chain sufficient. An unsuccessful defence cannot fill a gap in the prosecution case.

Evidence — extra-judicial confession — caution, corroboration and application - An extra-judicial confession is ordinarily a weak piece of evidence and must inspire confidence. Supporting evidence is important, but corroboration is not required in every case. Raju (PW-1) testified that the appellant had personally admitted killing his wife. The Court regarded his account as supported by the body and the medical evidence concerning the cause of death, and rejected the challenge based on Chandrapal and Sahadevan. Raju's direct account, the hearsay accounts of others and the medical proof of homicidal injury served distinct evidentiary purposes.

Evidence — alibi — conditional burden and prosecution's continuing onus - Once the prosecution proves presence and participation by reliable evidence, an accused pleading alibi must establish the claimed absence convincingly enough to exclude his presence. The Bench rejected the appellant's defence account after accepting the prosecution evidence. Having stated that the prosecution had proved its case, the Bench further observed that the appellant had failed to discharge the burden of proving how, by whom and why his wife was murdered.

Evidence — hostile witnesses — surviving probative material and absence of eyewitness - The fact that several witnesses turn hostile does not automatically deprive the remaining reliable testimony of probative value. Despite the absence of an eyewitness, the Court assessed Raju's direct account, the report, the scene evidence and the doctor's evidence, and affirmed the conviction under Section 302 IPC. Every essential link still had to be proved beyond reasonable doubt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal under Section 374 CrPC challenged the judgment dated 10 January 2012 passed by the Second Additional Sessions Judge (FTC), Ganjbasoda, in Sessions Trial No. 119/2009. The appellant, Radhe, had been convicted under Section 302 IPC of murdering his wife, Shardabai, and sentenced to life imprisonment with a fine of Rs 1,000 and a default stipulation.

According to the prosecution, village chowkidar Mohan (PW-3) received information through Devraj that Radhe had killed his wife. On reaching Radhe's house in Rampura, the police found Shardabai's bloodstained body in the kitchen. The prosecution also attributed to Radhe a statement that he had killed her with an axe during a dispute concerning his sister's share in the land. A dehati nalishi and an FIR were recorded. The police prepared the scene and body documents, seized bloodstained and control soil and a hair braid, arrested Radhe, recovered an allegedly bloodstained axe pursuant to a memorandum, and sent the seized items to the RFSL. The prosecution examined twelve witnesses, and Radhe examined his sister, Sakhi Bai, as DW-1. No witness claimed to have seen the killing itself. Several prosecution witnesses did not support the prosecution case in full. Raju (PW-1), however, stated that Radhe had told him he had killed his wife and was standing outside when the villagers assembled. Pritam (PW-2) recounted what he had heard from another person. Mohan described the information passed to the police and the body he had seen, while the investigating officer described the report, visit to the scene, seizures and investigation. Dr Prashant Kumar Jain (PW-11) described several incised wounds on the neck and a contusion near the eye. He attributed death to asphyxia following a cut to the trachea; the autopsy was conducted on 24 November 2008. The appellant argued that the case rested on circumstantial evidence, the chain of circumstances and motive were not established, and the witnesses were hearsay or hostile witnesses. He also relied on his father-in-law's evidence and Sakhi Bai's account to support an alternative explanation or alibi, and challenged the trial court's assessment of the bloodstained clothing. The State supported the conviction. The High Court evaluated the trial evidence and these contentions in appeal.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, supplied the five conditions quoted and applied by the Bench. The proved circumstances must be conclusive, point only to guilt, exclude reasonable explanations consistent with innocence and form a complete chain. The distinction between “may” and “must” be guilty is material. Padala Veera Reddy v. State of A.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 706, restated the need for cogently proved circumstances pointing unerringly to guilt and cumulatively permitting no reasonable conclusion other than guilt. Ramreddy Rajesh Khanna Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 172, emphasised that grave suspicion cannot replace reliable and clinching proof. Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 259, required every link to be proved beyond reasonable doubt and cautioned against allowing suspicion or emotional considerations to replace proof. The Bench applied these authorities together.

Sunil Clifford Daniel v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 205, quoted Sharad at length, maintained the prosecution's continuing burden and cautioned that an untenable defence cannot cure a serious gap in the prosecution case. Satish Nirankari v. State of Rajasthan, (2017) 8 SCC 497, restated the requirements of full proof and conclusive circumstances which exclude, to a moral certainty, the guilt of anyone other than the accused. The Bench held that the quality and reliability of the proved circumstances, rather than their quantity, governed the assessment, and found the prosecution evidence adequate in this case.

The appellant relied on Chandrapal (Earlier MP) v. State of Chhattisgarh, and Sahadevan v. State of Tamil Nadu, Criminal Appeal No. 1405/2008, concerning the weakness of extra-judicial confession. The High Court stated that such evidence requires caution and credible support, but that corroboration is not required in every case. It found Raju's account sufficiently supported by the scene and medical evidence on this record. On alibi, the appellant cited Shivaji Chintappa Patil v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeal No. 1348/2013, decided 2 March 2021, and Kallu alias Laxminarayan v. State of MP, Criminal Appeal No. 1677/2010, decided 7 November 2019. The Bench stated the accused's conditional burden after the prosecution had proved his presence. It also referred to Supreme Court decisions concerning the absence of eyewitnesses.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC was the only provision under which the conviction was affirmed. The appeal principally concerned the evidentiary basis of the murder finding, rather than a distinction between Section 302 and a lesser form of homicide. Section 374 CrPC provided the appeal against conviction and sentence. The judgment examined circumstantial evidence. The dehati nalishi, FIR, seizure and memorandum formed part of the record.

4. Issues : (1) Did the prosecution establish a complete, reliable circumstantial chain beyond reasonable doubt despite no eyewitness, several hostile witnesses and asserted weaknesses in motive and other proof? (2) Could the alleged statement to Raju be relied on as an extra-judicial confession, and what role did corroborative scene and medical facts play? (3) Did the appellant's suggested alibi or his sister's account raise a reasonable alternative after the Court evaluated the prosecution proof? (4) Did hostility of several prosecution witnesses require rejection of their evidence and acquittal, or could reliable surviving parts be considered?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench assembled and explained the Supreme Court rules requiring proof of each circumstance and a complete chain inconsistent with innocence. It treated suspicion, even grave suspicion, as inadequate. It then concluded that the accepted portions of oral testimony, information to police, discovery of the body at Radhe's house and medical findings were qualitatively reliable and adequate to sustain the conviction. The finding rests on the links actually identified.

On confession, Raju stated that Radhe had told him directly that he had killed Shardabai. The Court distinguished the need for caution with a weak piece of evidence from a rule that would exclude extra-judicial confession altogether or invariably require corroboration. It regarded the injuries described by the doctor and the body and scene circumstances as sufficient support in this case, and rejected the appellant's contention. Pritam's account from an unidentified source was hearsay. The doctor's opinion established the cause and manner of death.

On alibi, the Court stated that the prosecution must first establish the accused's presence and participation. Only then must an accused who asserts that he was elsewhere prove that absence with convincing certainty. The Bench accepted the contrary prosecution evidence, found Sakhi Bai's account unreliable and rejected the suggested alibi. In paragraph 25, after stating that the prosecution had proved its case, the Bench further stated that the burden lay on the appellant to prove how the crime was committed, who had murdered his wife and why she was murdered. It found that he had failed to establish those facts and that Sakhi Bai's evidence did not establish them either. The earlier passage quoted from Sunil Clifford Daniel maintained the prosecution's continuing burden and stated that defects in the defence could not cure deficiencies in the prosecution case.

Finally, the Bench held that the absence of an eyewitness and the fact that several witnesses had turned hostile did not automatically require acquittal. It assessed the remaining testimony alongside the alleged confession, the body and the medical evidence concerning the cause of death, emphasising the quality rather than the number of witnesses.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the judgment dated 10 January 2012 convicting Radhe under Section 302 IPC and sentencing him to life imprisonment with a fine of Rs 1,000 and the stated default stipulation. If he was on bail, his bail and surety bonds were cancelled and he was directed to surrender forthwith. If he failed to surrender, the trial court was to take steps to return him to custody to serve the remaining sentence. Copies were directed to the jail authorities and the trial court, and the lower court record was to be returned for compliance and the necessary register entries.

Radhe v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 259/2012, 13/07/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (645) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal procedure — Section 319 CrPC — strong trial evidence and uncharged FIR-named person - Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, as quoted in Sagar v. State of U.P. (Criminal Appeal 397/2022, 10 March 2022), requires strong and cogent evidence exceeding the prima facie standard at the charge stage, but falling short of satisfaction that the evidence, if unrebutted, would lead to conviction. Sartaj Singh v. State of Haryana, (2021) 5 SCC 337, permits reliance on an injured witness's examination-in-chief without awaiting cross-examination. It also permits summoning a person named in the FIR but not charge-sheeted by the police. A person judicially discharged stands on a different footing and is subject to the Section 398 procedure. Kamlesh's direct account of the assault supported summoning this applicant; his guilt remained to be decided.

Investigation — Section 36 CrPC — independent parallel senior-officer inquiry - Section 36 did not authorise a separate inquiry while the investigation was pending. The Bench applied Deepak alias Preetam Verma v. State of M.P. (MCRC 12592/2018, 11 September 2018). The result in that case was affirmed by the Supreme Court's order in Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P. (SLP (Crl.) 1345/2019, 18 January 2022), which examined the circular and found the parallel inquiry impermissible. The police decision not to charge-sheet the applicant, based on that inquiry, mobile location and treatment unsupported by documents, did not bar a later summons founded on trial evidence.

Evidence — alibi at Section 319 stage — phone location and affirmative records - A device's location does not conclusively establish its holder's location, and there were no contemporaneous medical records showing treatment elsewhere. The Court distinguished Brijendra Singh v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2017 SC 2839, where the duty log, certificate, prescriptions and medical evidence provided substantially stronger proof of absence. Rejection of the alibi while reviewing the summons did not prevent the applicant from proving his absence at trial. The trial court was required to decide that issue independently.

Evidence — injured witness and medical consistency — weapon side and scalp wound - The witness's later statement that the blunt side of a Farsa struck his head, considered with the lacerated scalp injury, did not require rejection of the Section 319 application. Applying Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy v. State of A.P., (2014) 12 SCC 457, the Bench left the precise effect of the alleged improvement and the manner in which the injury was caused for trial. It could not simply be presumed that the weapon's edge was sharp or that an earlier paralytic stroke, whose affected part was unspecified, had caused total incapacity.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Radheshyam Kushwah sought revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC against the order dated 19 July 2019 passed by the Fourth Additional Sessions Judge, Morena, in Sessions Trial 84/2018, summoning him as an additional accused under Section 319 CrPC. The prosecution arose from a dispute on 28 June 2017 over a public way and revenue demarcation near his house. In the FIR lodged that evening, the complainant, Neelam Dandotiya, alleged that Radheshyam and Raju carried Farsas, while Laxman, Sudama, Pradeep and Khachera carried other implements. She alleged that Radheshyam and Raju struck her father-in-law, Kamlesh, on the head. Her husband, Kapil, and brother-in-law, Sahdev, were allegedly injured when they intervened; the complainant and her mother-in-law were also allegedly assaulted. The complainant repeated the central allegation in her statement under Section 161. These are prosecution allegations.

During investigation, a Deputy Superintendent of Police conducted a separate inquiry. On the basis of mobile location and witness accounts, it concluded that Radheshyam was at Jaura Khurd receiving treatment after paralysis and was absent from the scene. The investigating officer reportedly also checked the phone location and witnesses, then sought permission to charge-sheet the others without him. He was not charge-sheeted. The judgment records no contemporaneous prescription, hospital admission entry or discharge paper confirming treatment at the time of the incident. At trial, injured Kamlesh (PW-1) attributed a Farsa blow on the head to the applicant and specified that the blunt side had been used. The pre-MLC recorded a lacerated wound on the right parietal region of the skull. The applicant challenged the summons on the ground of an alleged contradiction with the FIR and police statement, relied on the police alibi inquiry and Brijendra Singh, and contended that paralysis made the assault impossible. The State and the complainant opposed the revision. The complainant's counsel challenged the separate inquiry under Section 36 and the sufficiency of mobile location and treatment unsupported by records.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted Sagar v. State of U.P. and another, Criminal Appeal 397/2022, decided 10 March 2022, which reproduced paragraphs 105–106 of the Constitution Bench decision in Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab and others, (2014) 3 SCC 92. Section 319 is an exceptional and discretionary power requiring strong and cogent trial evidence. The evidence must exceed the prima facie standard for framing a charge, but fall short of satisfaction that, if unrebutted, it would lead to conviction. Cross-examination need not be completed first. The Bench applied the standard stated in Sagar and Hardeep to Kamlesh's trial account.

Sartaj Singh v. State of Haryana, (2021) 5 SCC 337, was quoted and adopted on timing and the position of a person named in the FIR but omitted from the charge-sheet. Its quotation from Hardeep distinguishes a person judicially discharged, for whom Sections 300(5) and 398 CrPC govern recourse, from one investigated but not charge-sheeted. It also explains that a first informant's repetition in examination-in-chief of the account given in the FIR does not, merely because it is repeated, defeat an application under Section 319. The present applicant had been omitted by the police, rather than discharged by a court. Injured Kamlesh's trial evidence could therefore be assessed for summoning without waiting for cross-examination.

Deepak alias Preetam Verma and another v. State of M.P. and another, MCRC 12592/2018, order dated 11 September 2018, was this Court's earlier decision holding that a superior officer could not conduct a parallel inquiry under Section 36 while investigation was pending. In Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P. and others, SLP (Criminal) 1345/2019, decided 18 January 2022, the Supreme Court examined the Code and the state circular, found no authority for the separate parallel inquiry and declined to interfere under Article 136. The Bench applied that procedural ruling when assessing reliance on the separate inquiry in this case, together with the evidentiary weaknesses in the claimed alibi.

The applicant relied on Brijendra Singh and others v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2017 SC 2839, for consideration of an alibi verified by the police at a Section 319 hearing. The Bench did not reject that possibility as a general rule. It distinguished the duty certificate and log, medical prescription, doctor's evidence and medicines slip supporting absence in Brijendra Singh from the undocumented treatment and inconclusive phone location in this case. On the discrepancy between the weapon and the injury, the Court considered Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy v. State of A.P., (2014) 12 SCC 457. Uncertainty about which side of an axe was used did not necessarily justify discarding the injured witness's account. The Court also referred to Modi's medical jurisprudence on scalp wounds. These authorities supported leaving the alleged variation and medical consistency for appraisal at trial, rather than setting aside the summons at this preliminary stage.

3. Statutes considered : Section 319 CrPC supplied the trial court's power to summon an additional accused on evidence emerging during trial and governed the central issue. The judgment distinguished its threshold from the ordinary standard for framing a charge; no charge against the applicant was finally adjudicated. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provided the High Court's revisional jurisdiction over the order of 19 July 2019. Section 36 CrPC concerned superior police powers, but the Bench held that it did not authorise an independent inquiry alongside the pending investigation. Section 161 CrPC concerned the complainant's police statement and the alleged omission about use of the Farsa's blunt side. The quoted distinction in Hardeep and Sartaj refers to Sections 300(5) and 398 CrPC for a person previously discharged. That qualification was not applied as the procedure governing this applicant.

4. Issues : (1) Could the injured witness's examination-in-chief, accusing an FIR-named person omitted from the charge-sheet, meet Section 319's elevated but preliminary threshold without awaiting cross-examination? This included the difference between police omission and judicial discharge. (2) Did a senior officer's separate Section 36 inquiry during an ongoing investigation legally or factually prevent summoning, when the investigating officer said he had checked its phone-location and treatment leads? (3) Was the asserted alibi sufficiently supported to defeat summons at this stage, in light of Brijendra Singh, and would its rejection foreclose an alibi at trial? (4) Did the difference between the FIR's weapon allegation and the injured witness's specification of the Farsa's blunt side, viewed with the lacerated scalp wound and asserted paralysis, make the trial evidence too unreliable to summon? The revision tested the additional-accused order, not final culpability or proof of the medical mechanism.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench treated Section 319 as an exceptional power exercisable during trial, requiring strong and cogent evidence above the ordinary prima facie standard at the charge stage. Sagar and Hardeep supplied that threshold. Sartaj confirmed that examination-in-chief may suffice before cross-examination and that the police decision not to charge-sheet a person does not protect him from being summoned. The Bench referred to Kamlesh's trial evidence attributing an active role with a Farsa to the applicant, as well as the earlier central allegation in the FIR and statements recorded during investigation. It also described the applicant as the mastermind of the public-way dispute. The applicant had not been judicially discharged, so the quoted qualification concerning Section 398 did not govern his case.

On police procedure, the Court held that the superior officer's separate inquiry under Section 36 was impermissible while investigation remained pending, consistently with Deepak and the Supreme Court's order in Surendra Singh Gaur. Even accepting the investigating officer's claim of independent verification, the mobile location established the location of the device, not conclusively that of its holder, at Jaura Khurd. The account of treatment rested on witnesses whose reliability could not be conclusively assessed without cross-examination, and the police had collected no documentary treatment record. The Court distinguished the several affirmative records supporting the alibi in Brijendra Singh and rejected the claimed absence for the purposes of this revision. It expressly preserved the applicant's opportunity to prove alibi at trial by cogent and reliable evidence. The trial court was not to treat these provisional observations as a final finding.

On the scalp injury, the Court noted that Neelam had lodged the FIR and Kamlesh was the injured witness. His statement at trial that the blunt side of a Farsa had been used was not automatically fatal to the application merely because the initial report had not specified an edge. Drawing on Putchalapalli Naresh Reddy and the medical observations, the Bench declined to treat the lacerated wound as necessarily contradicting his account. It did not decide precisely which side had struck or finally accept his testimony. It also declined to infer total physical incapacity from an earlier paralytic stroke when the affected part of the body was unspecified. The weight of the alleged improvement, injury and defence remained for trial. Considering the trial testimony, inadequately supported alibi, impermissible parallel inquiry and weapon discrepancy that did not require rejection at this stage, the Bench found no error in the Section 319 summons. That preliminary decision could not predetermine conviction.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the order dated 19 July 2019 passed by the Fourth Additional Sessions Judge, Morena, in Sessions Trial 84/2018, summoning Radheshyam Kushwah as an additional accused under Section 319 CrPC, and dismissed the criminal revision. It expressly reiterated that its observations concerned only the limited scope of revisional interference at the summons stage. The trial court was to decide the case on the material produced before it, without influence or prejudice from the High Court's observations, including those concerning the proposed alibi.

Radheshyam Kushwah v. State of M.P. and Ors., Cr.R. no. 3816/2019, 06/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (646) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal procedure — Sections 145–146 CrPC — preventive possession jurisdiction - Section 145 addresses a dispute likely to cause a breach of the peace through a provisional inquiry into actual possession, rather than title or the ultimate right to possession. Section 146 permits emergency attachment pending determination by a competent court. The Bench relied on M. Siddiq (Ram Janmabhumi Temple Case) v. Mahant Suresh Das, (2020) 1 SCC 1, for this distinction and the primacy of the civil court. That decision's discussion of Bhinka, R.H. Bhutani, Shanti Kumar Panda, Surinder Pal Kaur and Deo Kuer explains the temporary nature of the Magistrate's orders and their non-binding effect on a competent civil court. Here, both the police and the revisional court acknowledged joint possession, rather than exclusive possession of a defined portion.

Criminal procedure — Section 145 and civil proceedings — same property and adequate protective relief - Ram Sumer Puri Mahant v. State of U.P., (1985) 1 SCC 427, cautions against parallel criminal proceedings concerning possession where civil litigation over the same property provides effective protection. Amresh Tiwari v. Lalta Prasad Dubey, (2000) 4 SCC 440, clarifies that a final civil adjudication of possession need not already have taken place. It distinguishes Jhummamal, where a concluded Section 145 order preceded the civil suit, and expressly rejects a universal bar merely because a civil suit has been filed. Here, several suits concerning title, a Will and a deed, together with a partition matter, concerned the same land, and the respondents' application for a civil injunction had been rejected. The criminal process could not be used to obtain substantially the same protection.

Criminal procedure — Section 146(1) — emergency crop attachment - After initially refusing attachment, the SDM attached the standing mustard and wheat on a renewed request without recording a finding of emergency. The parties could seek protective orders in the civil proceedings concerning the same property. The Bench held that the attachment suffered from material illegality and quashed both the SDM's order and the revisional order.

Property dispute — co-sharers — joint possession and exclusive-possession exception - Each co-sharer is treated as being in possession of undivided joint land. Ordinarily, one co-sharer cannot obtain an injunction restraining another unless exclusive possession of a separately held portion is established. While possession remains joint, partition is the normal remedy. The Court applied that principle in rejecting the criminal attachment of the co-sharers' crop, which operated as a restraint resembling an injunction, without deciding their final rights.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Raghuraj Singh and the other applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to challenge the order dated 31 March 2022 passed by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Gohad, Bhind, dismissing their revision against the SDM's order of 22 March 2022 attaching the standing crop under Section 146(1) CrPC. The police had filed Istagasa 2/2021 on 15 March under Sections 145 and 146, alleging a possible breach of the peace over numerous survey and khasra parcels in Mouza Lodhe Ki Pali. The police account described the applicants and respondents 2 and 3 as joint landholders in joint possession and cultivation, with standing mustard and wheat crops. It alleged that applicants 1–4 and others might harvest the crop by force. The competing shares, actual cultivation and risk were matters alleged in the preventive proceedings, not final findings on title.

The SDM initially rejected the application for attachment under Section 146 on 15 March and called for a Patwari report. The presiding officer was on leave on 16 March. A revenue-inspector report was received on 17 March, and the case was adjourned on 21 March. On 22 March, respondents 2 and 3 renewed their request for attachment of the crop. The applicants objected to the Patwari report and sought a fresh report. The respondents contended that a breach of the peace was possible, the entire land was disputed and no partition had taken place. The SDM ordered attachment of the standing crop and entrusted it to the local Kotwar. The revision was dismissed. The revisional court accepted joint ownership and possession but stated that it was unclear which part either side physically possessed. It discussed civil suits concerning declaration of shares, a Will dated 20 September 2016 and a sale deed dated 22 October 2007, and regarded the Will made by father Ramnath as a cause of the family dispute.

The applicants contended that one joint co-owner could not be restrained without proof of exclusive possession. They relied on their suit for title and shares, the respondents' challenges to the Will and sale deed, a partition application under Section 178 of the M.P. Land Revenue Code, and the rejection on 13 November 2017 of respondents 2 and 3's application under Order XXXIX Rules 1–2 CPC in Civil Suit 208-A/2015. They argued that the proceedings under Sections 145 and 146 had been used to obtain protection which the civil court had refused. The respondents supported the orders. The Court treated the joint status of the land and its overlap with the pending civil litigation as undisputed.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ram Sumer Puri Mahant v. State of U.P., (1985) 1 SCC 427, was quoted directly. A suit for possession and injunction concerning the very property had been decided and was under appeal. The Supreme Court held that parallel proceedings under Section 145 and attachment were unnecessary where the civil court could grant protective interim orders. It emphasised that civil adjudication binds the criminal forum and that duplicative litigation wastes resources. The High Court applied the principle where an effective civil forum was available; it did not treat the mere filing of any suit as sufficient.

M. Siddiq (Ram Janmabhumi Temple Case) v. Mahant Suresh Das, (2020) 1 SCC 1, was reproduced at length. It describes Section 145 as preventive, provisional and concerned with possession, attachment under Section 146 as an emergency measure, and the competent civil court as the forum for determining title and entitlement. Within the reproduced passage, M. Siddiq considered Bhinka v. Charan Singh on the temporary Magistrate's order ending with civil adjudication; R.H. Bhutani v. Mani J. Desai on actual possession; Shanti Kumar Panda v. Shakuntala Devi, (2004) 1 SCC 438, on the summary process, custodia legis and the civil court's power exceptionally to depart from the Magistrate's order even at the interim stage; Surinder Pal Kaur v. Satpal, (2015) 13 SCC 25, on the non-binding effect of Section 145 observations; and Deo Kuer v. Sheoprasad Singh on property held by the court under attachment.

The reproduced passage from M. Siddiq considered Amresh Tiwari v. Lalta Prasad Dubey, (2000) 4 SCC 440. It explained that a prior final civil finding is unnecessary where the civil court is already considering possession of the same property and can protect it. It distinguished Jhummamal v. State of M.P., (1988) 4 SCC 452, which concerned a concluded Section 145 order followed by a civil suit. Amresh also expressly cautioned that filing any civil suit does not automatically terminate proceedings under Section 145: the civil litigation must concern possession or title to the same property, with protective relief available. The High Court separately quoted Amresh in paragraph 14 and applied that qualified test to the pending suits and rejected injunction application in this case.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 145 and 146 CrPC governed the police Istagasa, the Magistrate's limited preventive jurisdiction over a threatened breach of the peace concerning possession of land, and emergency attachment of the standing crop. Section 146(1) supplied the impugned interim power, but no finding of emergency had been recorded. The applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC after their Sessions revision failed, and the High Court exercised that jurisdiction to quash both orders for material illegality. Order XXXIX Rules 1–2 CPC governed the respondents' earlier application for an interim injunction, which had been rejected. Section 178 of the M.P. Land Revenue Code was cited in relation to an asserted partition application; its text was not construed. The declaratory suits and challenges to the Will and sale deed were civil proceedings relevant to the overlap, rather than criminal charges.

4. Issues : (1) Could Sections 145–146 CrPC be used to attach a standing crop amid an acknowledged joint co-sharer possession dispute, without a finding that any side held an exclusive defined part? (2) What is the preventive Magistrate's limited role as to actual possession and breach of peace as compared with the competent civil court's authority over title, possession and interim protection? (3) When do pending civil suits on the same property, a partition application and an available injunction or receiver remedy make parallel Section 145 proceedings inappropriate, given the qualifications in Ram Sumer, Amresh and M. Siddiq? (4) Did the SDM's Section 146 attachment satisfy the emergency condition after it had initially refused attachment and the respondents had failed to obtain civil interim injunction? (5) Was the revision court's refusal to interfere sustainable under these circumstances?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court proceeded on the undisputed joint interests and joint possession. Ordinarily, every co-sharer is treated as possessing the undivided land; an injunction restraining another co-sharer requires proof of exclusive possession of a defined part. While the parties remained in joint possession, partition was the proper means of separating their shares. The revisional court's uncertainty about which part belonged to each party did not by itself justify taking the crop out of their possession under Section 146. This conclusion concerned the provisional criminal restraint and left civil title undecided.

Ram Sumer and the Court's direct quotation from M. Siddiq explained why parallel proceedings under Section 145 should be avoided when the civil court was examining title or possession of the same parcels and could grant protective orders. Amresh clarified that a completed civil adjudication was unnecessary. Jhummamal concerned a different chronology and did not establish that any later civil suit nullifies a final Magistrate's order. The pending suits for declarations concerning shares, the Will and the deed, together with the partition application, provided a competent forum. The respondents had sought and been refused an interim injunction in Civil Suit 208-A/2015. Attachment of the crop through criminal proceedings could not be used as a shortcut to substantially the same protection. The conclusion rested on litigation concerning the same property and the availability of civil relief, rather than the mere existence of unrelated litigation.

The SDM initially refused attachment under Section 146 but later ordered it on the respondents' renewed request, without a finding of emergency. Section 145 serves a preventive purpose, and urgent provisional custody under Section 146 does not determine civil rights. The absence of an emergency finding, the joint-possession premise, the pending civil proceedings and the earlier refusal of a civil injunction together made the crop attachment materially illegal. The Court quashed both the SDM's order and the revisional order. It did not determine ownership of the produce.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application under Section 482. It quashed the order dated 31 March 2022 passed by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Gohad, Bhind, dismissing the revision, and the order dated 22 March 2022 passed by the SDM, Gohad, attaching the standing crop and placing it with the Kotwar. The parties remained free to seek suitable interim and final relief in the pending civil proceedings.

Raghuraj Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 17494/2022, 27/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (647) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal procedure — Sections 227 and 91 CrPC — defence documents at charge stage - The record under Section 227 comprises the prosecution's case materials. When charges are framed, the accused cannot introduce external exculpatory material to prove innocence. State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, rejected the contrary approach in Satish Mehra. It held that the necessity or desirability of a document under Section 91 must be assessed by reference to the stage of the proceedings and the party seeking its production. An accused's production of defence material ordinarily awaits trial. The police report submitted to the Additional Advocate General in a separate bail proceeding formed no part of the charge-sheet or case diary in the present case. It could be used, if appropriate, at the defence stage, but could not compel discharge from Section 333 IPC at the charge stage.

Criminal procedure — Sections 226–227 CrPC — grave suspicion and limited sifting - M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI, (2020) 2 SCC 768, drawing on P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398, permits limited sifting of the prosecution material. Discharge is permissible where that material gives rise only to mere suspicion or, taken at face value, cannot support the offence. The judge is not a post office but cannot conduct a roving enquiry or assess probative value. The accused's defence falls outside the record under Section 227, as the quoted decision in State of J&K v. Sudershan Chakkar also states. The prosecution's medical material recording a linear finger fracture supported a charge under Section 333 at this preliminary stage.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Raghuraj Singh Raghuvanshi and the other applicants challenged the order dated 23 July 2022 passed by the Sessions Judge, Ashoknagar, in Sessions Trial 50/2022 (Registration 38/2022). That order framed charges under Sections 294, 186, 332, 333, 353 and 506 Part II IPC. The complainant Yashvant Rathore's report alleged an assault on a Municipal Officer, the tearing of three official files and disturbance of the office. His mobile phone was also said to be missing. Crime 71/2022 initially involved Sections 353, 332, 186, 427 and 506 read with Section 34 IPC. Following medical examination, the prosecution recorded a linear fracture of the injured officer's left ring finger and added Section 333, alleging grievous hurt to a public servant. These were allegations and reported medical material before trial.

According to the order's narration, the applicants had sought and obtained bail on the basis of medical material. They then invoked Sections 226/227 CrPC to seek discharge specifically from Section 333, rather than from every accusation. In revision, they argued that the Sessions Judge should have relied on a police station report dated 21 May 2022, submitted to the Additional Advocate General in MCRC 21089/2022, a separate High Court proceeding. They said that the report recorded no fracture. It was undisputed that the document was absent from the charge-sheet and case diary. The High Court heard the applicants' counsel and examined the legality of the framing of charges.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, was directly quoted and applied. It reads the "record of the case" in Section 227 together with Section 209 as referring to the prosecution materials sent on committal. An accused has no right to file defence evidence when charge or cognizance is considered. It rejected the constitutional argument that supposedly unimpeachable defence material must be introduced at that early stage and disapproved Satish Mehra v. Delhi Administration, (1996) 9 SCC 766, on that point. Its analysis of Section 91 explains that summoning a necessary or desirable document depends on the stage of the proceedings and the party making the request. A police officer may seek material at a relevant stage, but an accused ordinarily cannot use Section 91 during proceedings under Section 227 to prove a defence that is not yet relevant. The Bench applied that rule to the separate SHO report without declaring that the document could never be used at trial.

M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. Central Bureau of Investigation, Bengaluru, (2020) 2 SCC 768, was also quoted and applied. It drew together the principles in P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398, and earlier decisions. A judge may sift the prosecution material and consider its broad probabilities to decide whether sufficient ground exists for proceeding. Mere suspicion, as distinct from grave suspicion supported by material, permits discharge; the evidence, accepted at face value, must be capable of showing the offence. The judge is not a mere post office for prosecution allegations, but cannot conduct a roving inquiry, determine probative weight or assess competing defence evidence. The quoted passage also cites State of J&K v. Sudershan Chakkar, (1995) 4 SCC 181, and Padhi to reiterate the exclusion of defence material at this stage. Those authorities formed part of Shivalingamurthy's stated framework; their facts were not separately adjudicated by the High Court.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provided the basis for the revision. Sections 226/227 governed the applicants' application to avoid the charge under Section 333 IPC. The quoted Padhi passage construed the "record of the case" in Section 227 by reference to Sections 209 and 173 CrPC and explained the power under Section 91 to summon documents according to the procedural stage. The judgment refers to Section 239 when quoting the rejected argument in Padhi; that provision was not independently applied to this Sessions trial. The IPC charges framed were under Sections 294, 186, 332, 333, 353 and 506 Part II. The initially registered case also referred to Sections 427 and 34. The contested accusation under Section 333 depended, in this case, on a fracture recorded in the prosecution's medical material.

4. Issues : (1) Could the applicants obtain discharge from Section 333 IPC by relying on the police station's purported no-fracture report to the Additional Advocate General when that report was outside the charge-sheet and case diary? (2) Could Section 91 CrPC be used to introduce or summon such defence material at the charge stage under Section 227? (3) What degree of sifting of the prosecution material was required and permitted when deciding discharge or framing a charge, particularly where medical evidence of a fracture was disputed, without turning the hearing into a trial? (4) Did the Sessions Judge commit a jurisdictional error amenable to revision by framing a charge under Section 333 along with the other charges, notwithstanding the possibility of conviction for a lesser offence at trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench treated the separate SHO report dated 21 May 2022 as falling outside the prosecution's case record. Padhi's construction of Sections 209 and 227 excluded it from consideration at the charge hearing, even though the applicants asserted that it contradicted the report of a fracture. Section 91 did not provide an indirect means of introducing defence documents at a stage when the accused's defence was not yet to be adjudicated.

On the standard for framing a charge, the Bench adopted Shivalingamurthy's complete statement of principles. The judge must exercise independent judgment and may sift the prosecution material to determine whether it supports grave suspicion rather than bare conjecture. Prosecution evidence that cannot show the offence even if accepted does not justify a trial. At the same time, the judge may not weigh competing evidence, resolve a medical conflict through a roving inquiry, or decide credibility and probative value. In the present case, the prosecution's medical material reported a linear fracture of the ring finger, which had led to the addition of Section 333. The contrary report from outside the case record could be considered, if at all, at a later stage. The High Court therefore found no jurisdictional error in refusing discharge on that basis and affirming the charges framed.

The Court added that the applicants had not sought complete discharge and that a person tried for a graver offence may be convicted of a lesser offence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision and affirmed the order dated 23 July 2022 passed by the Sessions Judge, Ashoknagar, in Sessions Trial 50/2022 (Registration 38/2022), framing charges under Sections 294, 186, 332, 333, 353 and 506 Part II IPC. It refused to use the separate SHO report to discharge the applicants from Section 333 at the charge stage. The applicants' defence and the medical issue remained to be adjudicated on proper evidence at trial.

Raghuraj Singh Raghuvanshi and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 2979/2022, 23/08/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (648) Prev Next

Headnote :- Homicide — Sections 299–300 thirdly IPC — intended injury and objective sufficiency - The Court surveyed Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465. Under that decision, the prosecution must prove the existence and nature of the bodily injury, the intention to inflict the injury actually found, and the sufficiency of that injury in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A separate intention to kill is not essential under clause Thirdly. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeal Nos. 1078–1079/2005, distinguishes offences punishable under Section 302, Section 304 Part I and Part II according to the statutory requirements of intention or knowledge and the applicable exceptions. Anda, Mahesh Balmiki, Pulicherla Nagaraju, Sangapagu Anjaiah, Kanhaiyalal and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao set out related principles for assessing injury and intention in the circumstances of each case; Dhirajbhai addressed Exception 4. In the present case, the medical evidence established homicidal strangulation, and the two appellants' convictions under Section 302/34 were affirmed.

Kidnapping for ransom — Section 364A IPC — distinct statutory components - Shaik Ahmed v. State of Telangana, Criminal Appeal 533/2021, decided 28.06.2021, was extensively reproduced. It requires proof of abduction or detention; a threat of death or hurt, reasonable apprehension of such harm, or actual harm under the statutory alternatives; and the purpose of coercing action or obtaining ransom. Describing an abduction as being for ransom does not dispense with these distinct requirements. The statutory use of conjunctions and alternatives must be respected. Shaik Ahmed confines the observation in Arvind Singh concerning a child of tender age to its factual context: no legal presumption dispenses with proof of the threat or harm component. Its discussion distinguishes Malleshi's ruling on communication of a ransom demand and explains Anil alias Raju, Suman Sood, Vishwanath Gupta and Vikram Singh on the ingredients of the offence. The Bench relied on the child's disappearance with the two appellants, evidence of a Rs 5 lakh ransom call, his death and the corroborating circumstances to affirm their convictions under Section 364A/34.

Evidence — last-seen theory — time gap and corroboration - Ramreddy Rajeshkhanna Reddy, (2006) 10 SCC 172, Hatti Singh, State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, and Bodhraj, (2002) 8 SCC 45, emphasise a short interval and corroboration before last-seen evidence can support a strong inference excluding the involvement of others. The Court accepted the accounts of witnesses who saw the boy with Raghuveer and Shailendra, although his body was discovered roughly two weeks later. The Court considered that evidence together with the other circumstances.

Evidence — circumstantial chain — party-specific proof - The Bench treated the medical finding of strangulation, the reported ransom demand, the last-seen witnesses' evidence, the concealed body and the seizures made pursuant to the two appellants' memoranda as a complete chain of circumstances. It held that the alleged discrepancies in the witness and forensic evidence were not fatal. It affirmed their convictions under Sections 120-B, 364A/34, 302/34, 201/34 IPC and Section 13 MPDVPK Act. The evidence was insufficient against Shankar, Surendra and Kampoter, whose acquittals were upheld in the State's appeal.

Witnesses — hostile testimony — dependable part retained - Khujji v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1991 SC 1853, was applied to Sonu (PW/4). A witness's adverse or hostile testimony during delayed cross-examination does not erase the entire deposition; the portion found dependable after careful scrutiny may be used. The Court accepted Sonu's earlier evidence supporting the last-seen account together with the evidence of the other witnesses. It attributed the delay in cross-examination to the accused appellants' tactics.

Unlawful assembly — Sections 141 and 149 IPC — common object and acquitted persons - Dani Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203, requires a shared common object of the kind specified by statute; mere presence is insufficient, although proof of a separate overt act is not always necessary. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, requires a clear finding that the common object was unlawful. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 18, explains that separate charges under Sections 143/147 are not invariably required alongside Section 149. The Bench reproduced those tests but rejected the State's appeal against the three acquitted persons for insufficient evidence. It affirmed the other two appellants' convictions as recorded with Section 34 and did not enter a fresh conviction under Section 149.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This common judgment disposed of Raghuveer Savita's Criminal Appeal 625/2009, Shailendra Sharma alias Sonu's Criminal Appeal 713/2009 and the State's Criminal Appeal 1046/2014, arising from Special Case 91/2006 (Dacoity). The two convicted men challenged the convictions recorded on 7 September 2009 by the Special Judge (MPDVPK Act), Morena, under Sections 120-B, 364A/34, 302/34 and 201/34 IPC and Section 13 of the Madhya Pradesh Dakaiti Aur Vyapharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam, 1981. Their principal sentences included 14 years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 120-B and life imprisonment under each of Sections 364A/34 and 302/34, together with the listed lesser terms and fines. The sentences were directed to run concurrently. The State appealed against the acquittals of Shankar Singh Gurjar, Surendra Singh and Kampoter Singh Gurjar alias Pappu. The original charges included alternatives framed under Sections 120-B and 149; the operative convictions set out by the High Court used Section 34 for the substantive offences.

According to the prosecution, ten-year-old Shubham alias Shailu, son of Neeraj Sharma, failed to return after leaving for tuition/skating on 23 June 2006. His grandfather, Moharman Lal, lodged a missing report that evening. The judgment states that an FIR under Section 365 IPC was registered on 1 July after the boy remained missing. On 7 July, a foul smell led the police to a house associated with Shankar Singh Gurjar that was locked from outside. The boy's decomposed body was found in a plastic bag in a lavatory wall compartment sealed with bricks and cement. His family identified him, and Dr J.N. Soni's post-mortem opinion attributed his death to strangulation. The prosecution alleged that Raghuveer and Shailendra, former tenants who had returned shortly before the incident, knew of the grandfather's retirement payment and abducted the child for ransom. Moharman Lal referred to a demand of Rs 5 lakh. The judgment attributes receipt of the call to him in one paragraph and to his daughter-in-law Manoj in another.

Bafatan, Ameena and Sonu were said to have seen the boy with the two appellants on the day he disappeared. The police seized a cycle, sandals, skating shoes, a key and construction-related articles pursuant to memoranda attributed to the appellants, and sent materials for scientific examination. The defence challenged the omission of names from the first missing report, contradictions in the witnesses' evidence, delayed reporting, alleged inconsistencies in the forensic descriptions of the rope and lock, the failure to examine certain independent witnesses and the ransom-call recipient, and the absence of the ingredients of Section 364A or the MPDVPK Act. In his later cross-examination, Sonu denied the incident. The State maintained that the combined evidence proved the appellants' guilt and that the three acquitted persons shared the conspiracy/common object. These were the parties' opposing contentions. The High Court examined homicidal death, abduction, ransom, concealment and joint liability. The judgment is dated 05.10.2021.

2. Precedents — Considered : On homicide, Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was quoted for the four inquiries under Section 300 Thirdly: the existence and nature of the bodily injury, the intention to inflict that very injury, and its objective sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The last inquiry does not require a separate intention to cause death. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeal Nos. 1078–1079 of 2005, explained the distinction between Sections 299, 300 and 304 and the different roles of intention and knowledge. Anda v. State of Rajasthan explained the sufficiency of an intentionally caused injury. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, cautioned against mechanically reducing the offence merely because a single blow was inflicted. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, identified a non-exhaustive set of circumstances from which intention may be inferred. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, and State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, likewise focused on the weapon, the part of the body targeted, the force used and the circumstances. Kanhaiyalal reproduced Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram on single-blow cases and Exception 4. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, quoted State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh to distinguish the intention to inflict the particular injury from knowledge of its seriousness. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, was quoted on all the requirements of Exception 4: absence of premeditation, a sudden mutual fight, heat of passion, and absence of undue advantage or a cruel/unusual manner of acting. The Court set out this broad doctrinal survey before finding homicidal strangulation and affirming the murder convictions. It did not analyse the facts of the present case as involving a single blow or a sudden fight.

On kidnapping for ransom, Shaik Ahmed v. State of Telangana, Criminal Appeal 533/2021, decided 28 June 2021, was quoted at length. It reads Section 364A's conjunctive and disjunctive language as requiring abduction/detention and the relevant threat, apprehension or harm, linked to coercing action or obtaining ransom. It rejects a presumption that the kidnapping of a child of tender age automatically proves the threat/harm component. Its treatment of Arvind Singh v. State of Maharashtra explains that the observation about an inherent threat in the particular facts of that child-ransom case did not dispense with proof of a statutory component. Shaik Ahmed distinguished Malleshi v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 8 SCC 95, as a case concerning communication of the ransom demand, rather than a decision examining all the ingredients. It drew on Anil alias Raju Namdev Patil v. Administration of Daman & Diu, (2006) 13 SCC 36, Suman Sood v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 5 SCC 634 (individual proof and acquittal), Vishwanath Gupta v. State of Uttaranchal, (2007) 11 SCC 633 (abduction, threat/demand and death at different places), and Vikram Singh alias Vicky v. Union of India, (2015) 9 SCC 502 (three components). The tax/excise examples concerning conjunctions within the Shaik Ahmed quotation served as interpretive analogies; they were not adopted as separate criminal-law holdings on the present facts. The High Court also referred to Omprakash Shrivastava v. State, 2007 Cri LJ 696 (Del), on communication of a ransom demand. It ultimately affirmed the Section 364A convictions on the reported call, last-seen evidence, death and other circumstances, without expressly applying each ingredient identified in Shaik Ahmed to the record.

On Section 149, Dani Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203, explained the need for a shared unlawful object and the possibility that the object may evolve. Mere presence is insufficient, while proof of an overt act by every member is not invariably required. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 18, concerned the relationship between charges under Sections 143, 147 and 149. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, required a clear finding, supported by the evidence, identifying the unlawful common object. The High Court recited these tests and then declined to disturb the three acquittals for insufficient proof. It neither made a fresh finding of an unlawful assembly nor used Section 149 as the basis of the two appellants' operative convictions.

On last-seen evidence, Ramreddy Rajeshkhanna Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 172, Hatti Singh v. State of Haryana, State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, and Bodhraj v. State of Jammu and Kashmir, (2002) 8 SCC 45, were reproduced on the need for proximity between the last sighting and death, the risk of an intervening actor during a long interval, and corroboration. Ramreddy's references to Anil Kumar Singh and Reddy Sampath Kumar appeared within the quoted discussion and were not individually analysed in the present case. Khujji alias Surendra Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 1991 SC 1853, was applied to hold that Sonu's subsequent hostile testimony did not erase all his evidence; only the portion found dependable after scrutiny could be used.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 299, 300 (especially clause Thirdly and the quoted Exception 4), 302 and 304 IPC provided the framework for the homicide discussion. The medical opinion established homicidal strangulation, and the actual conviction recorded was under Section 302 read with Section 34. Section 364A IPC concerns kidnapping/abduction or detention accompanied by the statutory threat/apprehension/harm and the purpose of coercing action or obtaining ransom. Section 365 was the initially registered offence and also appeared in the statutory discussion. Sections 120-B, 201 and 34 IPC formed part of the affirmed convictions. The judgment quotes Section 201's requirements concerning concealment and describes the body hidden behind a brick wall. Sections 141 and 149 concern unlawful assembly and common object, which the Court examined when considering the State's allegations while upholding the acquittals; the operative convictions of the other two accused were recorded with Section 34. The quoted Mahadev Sharma passage mentions Sections 143, 147 and 148 in the context of charges, rather than as separate offences adjudicated in the present case. Section 374 CrPC provided the convicted men's right of appeal. The conviction under Section 13 of the MPDVPK Adhiniyam, 1981, with a reference in the text to Section 11, was affirmed on the Court's statement that the locality from which the abduction took place was notified. The original description of the charges mentions Section 149 alternatives and combinations with the special statute.

4. Issues : (1) Was the child's death homicidal, and did the prosecution's circumstantial evidence establish beyond reasonable doubt that the two convicted appellants participated in the abduction, ransom demand, murder, conspiracy and concealment? This included the interval relevant to the last-seen evidence, the non-examination of the ransom-call recipient, alleged inconsistencies in the witness and forensic evidence, and the defence's contention that the chain was incomplete. (2) What ingredients had to be proved under Section 364A, especially the coercive threat/harm component explained in Shaik Ahmed, and did the Court consider the ransom evidence sufficient in this case? (3) Could the dependable portion of Sonu's earlier evidence be used after he denied the incident in later cross-examination? (4) Did the evidence establish the common object required by Section 149 or otherwise justify reversing the acquittals of the three co-accused, as sought by the State? (5) What relief followed in the three connected appeals, including the direction concerning custody?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the family's identification of the boy's decomposed body and Dr Soni's finding of fatal strangulation. In discussing Sections 299–300, it adopted the broad distinction between intention and knowledge and the Virsa Singh test: the particular injury must be intended and must be objectively sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. It also quoted further Supreme Court illustrations concerning single injuries. The finding of murder formed part of the Court's conclusion that the complete chain of circumstances proved the two appellants' participation.

On participation, the Bench accepted Bafatan's, Ameena's and Sonu's accounts of seeing the child with Raghuveer and Shailendra, together with the family's account of a ransom demand linked to the grandfather's recent retirement. It cited the Supreme Court's caution that last-seen evidence is strongest when the interval before discovery excludes the involvement of an intervening actor, and that corroboration is desirable. The boy disappeared on 23 June, and his body was found on 7 July. The Bench considered the last-seen testimony together with the hidden body, recoveries made pursuant to the memoranda and the scientific material, and found a complete chain of circumstances. The judgment initially states that the FIR was registered on 1 July after the missing report, but later states that it was registered after discovery of the body. The Court rejected the delay objection without resolving that internal discrepancy. It rejected the alleged contradictions as immaterial. It also rejected the objections concerning the non-examination of independent persons and Manoj, the disputed identity of the rope sent for examination and the differing accounts of pressure marks on the lock. In its reasoning, the strangulation opinion and the recovery of the concealed body were more material.

The Court quoted Shaik Ahmed's careful reading of the three components of Section 364A, including the qualification that the victim's tender age does not dispense with proof of threat or harm. On the facts, it found the Rs 5 lakh telephone demand, abduction, fatal strangulation and corroborating circumstances sufficient to uphold the convictions under Section 364A/34. Paragraphs 50 and 61 of the judgment attribute receipt of the ransom call to different persons. The Court held that Manoj's non-examination was not fatal in the context of the wider chain of circumstances.

Khujji permitted careful use of a reliable portion of Sonu's testimony despite his later denial. The Bench attributed the delay in cross-examination to the accused appellants and agreed with the trial court's reliance on his earlier evidence together with that of the other witnesses. As to concealment of the corpse, the Court described the walling up of the lavatory compartment and affirmed the conviction under Section 201/34 along with the other counts. It did not separately discuss, ingredient by ingredient, each accused's intention to screen the offender. It likewise stated that the site was notified under the MPDVPK Act and affirmed the Section 13 conviction, without advancing a new interpretation of that Act.

Finally, the discussion of Section 149 required an assembly of five or more persons and proof of a common unlawful object; presence alone was insufficient. The State alleged that Shankar, Surendra and Kampoter had participated, but the High Court found the evidence insufficient against those three accused and upheld their acquittals. That finding concerned those accused: the prosecution's chain of circumstances was insufficient to establish their guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeals filed by Raghuveer Savita and Shailendra Sharma alias Sonu. Their trial convictions and concurrent sentences under Sections 120-B, 364A/34, 302/34 and 201/34 IPC and Section 13 MPDVPK Act were affirmed. In view of the jail report that both men were on parole, the trial court was directed to take steps to secure their custody so that they could serve the remainder of their sentences. The State's criminal appeal was rejected, leaving intact the acquittals of Shankar Singh Gurjar, Surendra Singh and Kampoter Singh Gurjar alias Pappu. The trial record was directed to be returned with the judgment.

Raghuveer Savita and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., Cr.A. no. 625/2009 & 713/2009 & 1046/2014, 05/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (649) Prev Next

Headnote :- Evidence — dying declaration — mental and physical fitness; medical endorsement - Laxman v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 6 SCC 710, rejects an inflexible requirement of a medical certificate and disapproves the broader contrary formulation in Paparambaka Rosamma. The person recording the declaration must be satisfied of the declarant's capacity. Govindappa v. State of Karnataka, (2010) 6 SCC 533, treats medical certification as a rule of caution, while Jagbir Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2019) 8 SCC 779, retains the requirement of mental and physical fitness. In the present case, the treating doctor examined Sonkali and certified her fitness, and the Naib-Tahsildar independently found her responsive. Writing the certificate in the duty room after examining her did not invalidate it. The Court considered the serious burns and treatment; no sedation was proved.

Evidence — three dying declarations — consistency, omission and recording times - The Dehati Nalishi, police statement and Naib-Tahsildar's declaration consistently identified Raghuvir as the person who poured kerosene on Sonkali and set her on fire. Omission of the suggested motive from the third statement did not contradict that central account because no question about the quarrel had been asked. On the particular testimony, the Court accepted a difference of 10–15 minutes between watches as explaining the apparently simultaneous recording. It rejected the husband's suicide account as a reason for discarding the declarations. Ravikumar v. State of T.N., (2006) 9 SCC 240, Laltu Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2019) 15 SCC 344, and Kalawati v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 4 SCC 37, require scrutiny of fitness, truthfulness, voluntariness and material inconsistency.

Evidence — Section 32(1) Evidence Act — victim's complaint and Section 161 statement - A complaint made before investigation by a person who later dies, and a police statement concerning the cause of death, may be used as evidence under Section 32(1), subject to assessment of genuineness. Pradeep Bisoi v. State of Orissa, (2019) 11 SCC 500, concerned the Section 161 statement of a person who later died. Munnu Raja v. State of M.P., (1976) 3 SCC 104, distinguished an FIR given before investigation, while Jai Prakash v. State of Haryana, 1999 Cri LJ 837, addressed an initial police complaint subsequently treated as a dying declaration. Given the police witness's explanation, the recorded time and the two other declarations, the Court did not infer fabrication merely from the FIR number on Ex. P.4.

Evidence — dying declaration as sole basis — corroboration a matter of prudence - Ravikumar, Laltu Ghosh and Kalawati reject a mandatory requirement of corroboration once a declaration is found truthful and voluntary after careful scrutiny of capacity, the opportunity to identify, tutoring and infirmities. The principles collected in Kalawati caution that a suspicious or infirm declaration may require corroboration or have to be rejected, and that multiple statements must be compared. The Bench found the three consistent accusations reliable, together with the supporting medical evidence and evidence of their recording. It also considered the later recovery and conduct, without treating those supporting circumstances as a statutory condition of admissibility or conviction.

Evidence — alibi — positive proof and prosecution's continuing burden - Jitender Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2012) 6 SCC 204, Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, and Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, with Binay Kumar Singh quoted in it, require positive proof of absence once the prosecution evidence places the accused at the scene. Failure to prove an alibi cannot itself establish guilt. The husband's assertion that Raghuvir had accompanied him to work was unsupported by an employer or another defence witness. The Court rejected the alibi after accepting the victim's statements and the physical circumstances, while retaining the prosecution's burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt.

Evidence — post-occurrence conduct — abscondence of limited weight - Sujit Biswas v. State of Assam, (2013) 12 SCC 406, discussing Bipin Kumar Mondal and Matru, holds that even an innocent person may evade arrest out of fear. Such conduct is only a minor circumstance to be assessed in context. Raghuvir's absence until his arrest three days after the burning was considered with the accepted declarations, the failed alibi and the recovery of a kerosene container and matchbox pursuant to his memorandum. The conviction did not rest on flight alone.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Raghuvir appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 26 July 2010 passed by the Sessions Judge, Morena, in Sessions Trial 143/2009, convicting him of Sonkali's murder under Section 302 IPC and sentencing him to life imprisonment. He was Sonkali's younger brother-in-law; her husband, Shobharam, was his brother. The marriage was described as having taken place about twelve years earlier, with a later gauna; two daughters had died. According to Sonkali's statements, Raghuvir reproached her for the family's misfortune and for Rs 10,000 allegedly taken by her father. She said that at about 8 p.m. on 7 February 2009, while Shobharam was away at work, Raghuvir abused her. When she objected, he poured kerosene on her and set her on fire. She said that her neighbour Banwari extinguished the flames and that her husband took her to hospital. These were her allegations recorded while she was injured, requiring assessment as evidence rather than being independent eyewitness findings.

Hospital information led Sub-Inspector V.V.S. Kushwaha to record Sonkali's Dehati Nalishi, Ex. P.3, followed by her statement under Section 161 CrPC, Ex. P.4. Naib-Tahsildar L.K. Mishra separately recorded a question-and-answer declaration, Ex. P.5, with Dr D.K. Soni's fitness endorsements before and after its recording. The initial examination recorded deep burns over the face, neck, chest, back, arms and thighs, affecting about 50 percent of the body, a smell of kerosene on the clothing and body, and a serious general condition. Sonkali died at about 5 a.m. the next morning. The post-mortem recorded about 70 percent ante-mortem burns and death from shock due to extensive burns. The Court first established death from burns, leaving their accidental, suicidal or homicidal origin for consideration on the merits.

Shobharam brought his wife to hospital but later testified that he had been told she had attempted suicide. He claimed that she had previously tried to jump into a well, could not speak, and that Raghuvir had accompanied him to work. He was treated as hostile concerning the accusation, although the Court accepted his evidence that she was injured in the house and that he took her to hospital. Raghuvir called no defence witness. The police arrested him on 10 February and reported the seizure, pursuant to his memorandum, of a kerosene container holding about 50 grams and a matchbox. The container had not been found during the initial inspection of the scene. The judgment states that articles were sent for forensic examination, but the FSL report had not been received. The prosecution gave up Banwari despite having cited and summoned him.

In appeal, the defence attacked the three statements as fabricated or unreliable. It relied on the FIR number on Ex. P.4 despite the stated registration time, the omission of the alleged quarrel from Ex. P.5, the apparently identical clock times for two later statements, and the writing of the doctor's endorsement in a duty room. It also alleged that the burns prevented speech and that the Naib-Tahsildar had not read the declaration back. It relied further on Shobharam's suicide account and alibi testimony and on Banwari's non-examination. The Court analysed the evidentiary objections.

2. Precedents — Considered : Laxman v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 6 SCC 710, was applied to the challenge to the doctor's fitness certificate. It rejected Paparambaka Rosamma v. State of A.P.'s categorical distrust of a Magistrate's satisfaction in the absence of an express medical endorsement of mental fitness, affirmed Koli Chunilal Savji v. State of Gujarat, and referred to Harjit Kaur v. State of Punjab on the placement of an endorsement. The governing rule requires the recorder to be satisfied from the declarant's condition and answers; a medical certificate is a valuable precaution rather than a rigid legal precondition. Govindappa v. State of Karnataka, (2010) 6 SCC 533, likewise treats certification as cautionary and permits other evidence that the declaration was made voluntarily and truthfully. Jagbir Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2019) 8 SCC 779, retains the recorder's responsibility to ensure mental and physical fitness. Here, the treating doctor examined Sonkali and certified her fitness, while the Naib-Tahsildar described her responsive condition. Writing the certificate in the duty room after examination was found harmless on the actual evidence; the finding did not rest on examination being unnecessary.

Ravikumar v. State of T.N., (2006) 9 SCC 240, explains the hearsay exception in Section 32(1) of the Evidence Act for statements concerning the cause of death or the transaction resulting in it. It requires scrutiny of fitness, the opportunity to observe and identify, truthfulness and absence of tutoring or prompting, and rejects a categorical requirement of corroboration for a reliable declaration. It cites Paniben, Uka Ram, Laxman, P.V. Radhakrishna, Sanjay and Muthu Kutty as supporting authorities. Laltu Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2019) 15 SCC 344, warns against expecting an injured victim to give minute details mechanically and permits an independently reliable declaration to sustain a conviction. The quotation also cautions against unsupported allegations that public officers fabricated the declaration. Kalawati v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 4 SCC 37, sets out fuller safeguards, drawing on Paniben and other cases. Corroboration is not automatically required, but suspicious or infirm declarations require appropriate support or cannot sustain guilt. Consciousness, voluntariness, the ability to identify, tutoring, consistency and the relationship between multiple statements must be examined, without treating brevity as fatal. The Bench applied those principles in accepting the three statements' consistent attribution of the burning, their medical and official support, and the absence of proved tutoring.

Pradeep Bisoi alias Ranjit Bisoi v. State of Orissa, (2019) 11 SCC 500, was cited for the admissibility under Section 32 of the Evidence Act of a police statement made by a person who later dies, provided that it relates to the cause of death or the transaction. Munnu Raja v. State of M.P., (1976) 3 SCC 104, distinguished an FIR made by an injured person before investigation began from a statement made to an officer already acting as investigator. Jai Prakash v. State of Haryana, 1999 Cri LJ 837, rejected the objection that a complaint recorded by the police from a person who later died was necessarily untrustworthy because a Magistrate had not separately recorded it or a doctor had not endorsed it as a formal dying declaration. In that case, treatment and subsequent capacity, the sequence of transmission and registration, and cross-examination supported the record. The Bench used these authorities in considering Ex. P.3 and Ex. P.4, while separately examining the FIR-number objection.

Jitender Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2012) 6 SCC 204, and Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, require positive evidence of an alibi strong enough to exclude presence. Sk. Sattar expressly retains the prosecution's burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt despite an unproved alibi. Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, reproduced Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar: alibi is a fact relevant under Section 11 of the Evidence Act because it is inconsistent with presence, rather than a general or special IPC exception. The prosecution must first prove presence and participation; the accused may then produce strong evidence of absence or evidence raising a reasonable doubt. Mukesh also traced Gurpreet Singh, Sk. Sattar, Jitender Kumar and Vijay Pal. After accepting the victim's accusations, the Court applied that framework and found only Shobharam's unsupported assertion that Raghuvir had worked elsewhere. No employer or other positive defence evidence was produced. Sujit Biswas v. State of Assam, (2013) 12 SCC 406, drew on Bipin Kumar Mondal and Matru to explain that flight may be an innocent person's act of self-protection and is at most a minor circumstance, whose weight depends on the other evidence. The Bench treated Raghuvir's absence after the incident in that contextual manner, although it described the absence as supporting a guilty mind when considered alongside independent evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC governed the conviction and the minimum sentence of life imprisonment. Section 374 CrPC provided the route of appeal. Section 32(1) of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, governed the statements of the person who later died concerning the cause of death or the transaction. The police statement was originally recorded under Section 161 CrPC, and the judgment applied the evidentiary exception in Section 32 to assess it after death. The governing section is in the Evidence Act. The initial Dehati Nalishi served as the source of the complaint/FIR. Munnu Raja and Jai Prakash distinguish a complaint recorded before investigation from a later investigative statement. Section 11 of the Evidence Act, discussed through Mukesh and Binay Kumar Singh, treats an alibi as a relevant fact inconsistent with presence. An unproved alibi does not lessen the prosecution's burden under Section 302. The seizure of the container and matchbox pursuant to the memorandum was discussed as supporting evidence.

4. Issues : (1) Did Sonkali die from burns, and did the evidence establish that Raghuvir intentionally caused them, rather than their being accidental or suicidal? (2) Was Sonkali fit to make the three statements, were they voluntary and genuine, and were they sufficiently consistent to identify the assailant despite the severe burns, the location of the doctor's endorsement, the alleged failure to read the declaration back, the absence of motive from Ex. P.5 and the apparently overlapping recording times? (3) Could the initial Dehati Nalishi and Sonkali's Section 161 statement be considered under Section 32(1) after her death, and did the FIR number on Ex. P.4 establish fabrication or ante-timing on this record? (4) Did Shobharam's testimony establish that Raghuvir was away at work, and what effect did an unproved alibi have on the prosecution's burden? (5) What limited weight could be given to the appellant's absence until arrest, the recovery pursuant to his memorandum and the prosecution's failure to examine Banwari? (6) Did the cumulative admissible evidence sustain a conviction for murder and life imprisonment?

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr Soni recorded extensive deep burns and a smell of kerosene. The post-mortem attributed death to shock from extensive ante-mortem burns. The two estimates—about 50 percent at the initial examination and about 70 percent at post-mortem—were recorded at different stages. The Court found fatal burn injury but expressly deferred its origin until it had evaluated the other evidence. It then accepted the deceased's direct attribution to Raghuvir in the hospital complaint, police statement and Naib-Tahsildar's declaration. All three accounts identified the critical act of pouring kerosene and setting her on fire. The omission of a monetary motive from the third document was explained by the absence of a question about motive; the Bench did not infer a contradictory version. The reasoning concerned the material account common to the three statements.

As to capacity, the treating doctor had examined Sonkali, administered antibiotics, topical treatment and IV fluid, certified consciousness, and testified that he checked her condition before endorsing the declaration. The Naib-Tahsildar obtained the endorsement and said that she was fit while he recorded her answers. The Court rejected the inference that writing an endorsement in the doctor's duty room meant that it had been issued without examination. It considered her serious condition and the post-mortem doctor's evidence that congestion might cause difficulty in speaking but did not necessarily prevent it. No sedative was shown to have been administered, and the Court rejected the speculative objection that she was drowsy. Under Laxman, Govindappa and Jagbir, actual capacity and responsible assessment by the recorder mattered more than the form of the doctor's certificate. The Court found no circumstance supporting the allegation of tutoring. Shobharam had brought her to hospital, yet she named his younger brother. Applying Ravikumar, Laltu Ghosh and Kalawati, it treated truthfulness, voluntariness and careful scrutiny as essential, while corroboration remained a matter of prudence rather than an invariable requirement.

On chronology and form, the Bench accepted the investigating officer's explanation for the crime number on Ex. P.4 and reasoned that a person fabricating the record might not have entered an earlier time. It noted that Sonkali's condition was declining and that the three statements were taken in quick succession. It accepted differences between the witnesses' watches as a plausible explanation for the apparent overlap of about 10–15 minutes between the police and Naib-Tahsildar's records. These were case-specific credibility findings. The Naib-Tahsildar's document was identified as Ex. P.5. Pradeep Bisoi, Munnu Raja and Jai Prakash supported consideration of the deceased's police statement and initial complaint under Section 32(1), subject to the Court's assessment of genuineness.

Shobharam's hostile testimony established that his wife was burnt at home and that he took her to hospital, but his suicide account and assertion that Raghuvir accompanied him to work did not displace the accepted declarations. The Court noted that Raghuvir produced no employer, co-worker or other positive witness to support an alibi and did not return with Shobharam after news of the injury. Following Jitender Kumar, Sk. Sattar and Mukesh, the Bench held that the alibi was not proved, while expressly retaining the prosecution's independent burden. Its inference concerning suicide was supported by the absence of the kerosene container during the initial inspection, compared with its later reported seizure pursuant to Raghuvir's memorandum. The FSL report was unavailable. The prosecution had listed and summoned Banwari but gave him up. The Bench held that his non-examination was not fatal in view of the three statements, while expressly acknowledging that the accused's failure to examine him could not itself establish guilt.

Raghuvir was arrested on 10 February, three days after the incident, and was absent at the inquest. Relying on Sujit Biswas, the Court treated abscondence as a minor circumstance capable of supporting a case otherwise established, rather than a determinative link. With the three declarations found reliable, the rejected alibi, the physical recovery and that conduct of limited weight, it held that intentional homicide under Section 302 was proved beyond reasonable doubt. Life imprisonment was the statutory minimum for the sustained murder conviction, and the sentence was therefore not reduced.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. It affirmed the conviction under Section 302 IPC and the life sentence imposed by the Sessions Judge, Morena, on 26 July 2010 in Sessions Trial 143/2009. Raghuvir, who was already in jail, was directed to serve the remaining sentence. The Court directed that a copy be supplied to him free of cost and that the trial record be returned for information and compliance.

Raghuvir v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 667/2010, 11/01/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (650) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail — dictated withdrawal — reconsideration before finalisation - An order dismissing a bail application under Section 439 CrPC as withdrawn at counsel's request had been dictated in open court. The High Court recorded that it had not yet been typed or signed. Counsel retracted the withdrawal request before finalisation and was heard again. The Court applied Kushalbhai Ratanbhai Rohit v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 9 SCC 124, on Section 362 CrPC, including its discussion of Surendra Singh v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 194, concerning alteration of a draft before formal delivery. It entertained the renewed submission and granted conditional bail. The ruling concerned the unfinished procedural state of the order.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Raghvendra Singh Rawat filed his first application under Section 439 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, after being arrested on 18 December 2021 in Crime No. 1031/2021 at Police Station Dabra City, District Gwalior. The registered offences were under Sections 382, 392 and 34 IPC, Sections 11 and 13 of the MPDVPK Act, and Sections 25 and 27 of the Arms Act. According to the prosecution account recounted by counsel, two or three unidentified persons took about Rs 30,000–40,000 from a shop at gunpoint. The applicant disputed the alleged seizure from him of a photocopy of the complainant's Aadhaar card, pointed to the absence of a test identification parade, and relied on the expected delay in trial and absence of a risk of flight or tampering. The State opposed bail and relied on his criminal history. These were rival submissions, rather than findings at trial.

As the State alleged five other registered cases, the Court asked whether the applicant would accept stringent conditions. Counsel initially sought withdrawal with liberty to renew the request after the charge-sheet was filed. The Court dictated an order of dismissal as withdrawn in open court. Before it was typed or signed, counsel said that a technical glitch had caused him to misunderstand the Court's query and sought to retract the withdrawal. The Court expressed displeasure at the intervening conduct concerning another listed bail application, but heard counsel again at 1:30 p.m. Counsel then accepted stringent conditions and volunteered a contribution towards the Covid-19 response. The Court noted that it had initially been inclined to grant bail and had dictated dismissal as withdrawn only because counsel requested it. The question was whether that unfinished dictated order prevented continuation of the bail hearing. The Court then considered bail conditions without deciding guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kushalbhai Ratanbhai Rohit and Others v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 9 SCC 124, was invoked and applied in paragraph 11. The High Court relied on its discussion of Section 362 CrPC to change the earlier dictated disposition before signing. The quoted Supreme Court passage distinguishes an unsigned and unsealed judgment from a final judgment and recognises a limited ability to alter it before finalisation. That proposition was applied to this record: withdrawal had been dictated, but the Court stated that the order had not yet been typed or signed, and counsel retracted the request before that stage. Paragraph 11 later uses "typed and dictated," whereas paragraph 8 says that the order had not been typed or signed. The conclusion was confined to the clearly stated absence of a signature, without resolving that difference in wording.

The passage quoted from Kushalbhai discusses Surendra Singh and Others v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 194. That reasoning identifies formal delivery as the point at which even a signed draft becomes an operative judgment and recognises that a judge may change the draft until delivery. The High Court used that discussion within Kushalbhai to explain why a judicial decision remains open to correction before it crystallises, applying it to the bail order in the circumstances described above. The passage also refers to Amodini Dasee, Emperor v. Pragmadho Singh, State of Bombay v. Geoffrey Manners & Co., and Sangam Lal as authorities recited within the Supreme Court quotation.

Aparna Bhat and Others v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, was cited in paragraph 15 only to direct intimation of the bail grant to the complainant.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC provided jurisdiction for the applicant's first regular-bail application. Section 362 CrPC raised the question of finality considered through Kushalbhai. The Court treated the earlier dictated but unsigned withdrawal order as capable of alteration before it became a completed order. The IPC, MPDVPK Act and Arms Act provisions listed in the registration described the accusation and seriousness of the alleged robbery; their ingredients were neither construed nor proved in these proceedings.

4. Issues : (i) Did counsel's initial request to withdraw the bail application, followed by an order dictated in open court but not typed or signed, prevent the Court from entertaining the retraction and continuing the same hearing, in light of Section 362 CrPC and the Supreme Court's analysis of finality?

(ii) If the hearing could continue, what bail order and conditions should follow in the applicant's circumstances, including the prosecution's criminal-history objection and counsel's willingness to accept stringent conditions? The order considered detention and imposed conditions without deciding identity, recovery or guilt.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the dictated withdrawal from a signed final order. Although it criticised counsel's conduct when he sought to retract the withdrawal, it heard him again that afternoon. Relying on Kushalbhai and the Surendra Singh discussion reproduced in it, the Court concluded that the order could still be changed before signing in the procedural circumstances recorded. It therefore accepted retraction of the withdrawal request and decided the Section 439 application. The holding concerned the unfinished state of that disposition.

On bail, the Court recorded its earlier inclination to release the applicant, counsel's acceptance of stringent terms and the period of detention. It expressly refrained from commenting on the merits. Counsel offered the Rs 15,000 contribution, which became a condition of this order rather than being derived from a reasoned general statutory rule. The monthly reporting requirement and bond likewise formed part of the individual disposition. Aparna Bhat was applied only for intimation to the complainant.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for regular bail subject to deposit of Rs 15,000 in the High Court Registry for upgrading the Civil Dispensary on the court premises for the Covid-19 response. The applicant was also required to furnish a personal bond of Rs 1,00,000 with one surety in the like amount to the satisfaction of the Trial Court/Committal Court and to appear before the concerned court on the dates fixed. He was directed to appear before the SHO, Police Station Dabra City, District Gwalior, on the 1st of every month during the trial. The order would lose effect in the event of bail jump or failure to appear before the police station as directed. Intimation of the grant of bail was to be sent to the complainant.

Raghvendra Singh Rawat v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 1464/2022, 12/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (651) Prev Next

Headnote :- Seized motorcycle / interim custody / stolen owner - The claimant had reported his motorcycle stolen and was not an accused in the separate truck-robbery case in which miscreants had used it with a changed registration number. The Special Judge refused custody solely because the vehicle was material evidence in the robbery and theft cases. Applying Sunderbhai Ambalal Desai v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 10 SCC 283, the High Court held that Section 451 CrPC requires prompt and judicious orders to prevent deterioration of property in police custody. A proper panchnama, detailed description and photographs can preserve its evidentiary character. The quoted Supreme Court passage calls for return of seized vehicles on suitable bond, guarantee and security where appropriate, with production when required. It also discusses unclaimed and insured vehicles, which were not the facts of this case. The applicant's prior theft FIR was undisputed; he was neither alleged to have participated in the robbery nor accused in it. Mere evidentiary use of his stolen vehicle did not justify keeping it indefinitely. The Court directed interim delivery on supurdaginama, subject to documents showing registered ownership, a bank guarantee of Rs 30,000, undertakings not to change its colour or alter it and to produce it when directed, and non-alienation until both trials concluded. Those were protective conditions, rather than an adjudication of title or guilt in either FIR. Paras 2–8.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This application under Section 482 CrPC challenged the order dated 30 July 2020 passed by the Special Judge, MPDVPK Act, Bhind, dismissing a request under Sections 451 and 457 CrPC for interim custody of a motorcycle. The order described Crime 336/2019 at Mehgaon, Bhind, as an investigation into the looting of a truck. Its introductory paragraph mentioned Sections 394, 420, 482, 483, 488 and 489 IPC and Sections 11/13 of the MPDVPK Act. Miscreants allegedly used a motorcycle displaying registration UP 76 K 8164. On seizure, its correct registration was found to be MP 30 MK 4055, and it was identified as the subject of the claimant's earlier theft FIR, Crime 260/2019, registered on 29 June 2019 under Section 379 IPC. The claimant said that it had been stolen from him on 28 June 2019. The trial court retained the motorcycle because it was evidence in the truck case. For the interim-custody decision, the High Court accepted that the claimant had lodged the theft report and was not accused in the robbery case; the State did not dispute those matters.

The applicant relied on Sunderbhai Ambalal Desai v. State of Gujarat and argued that retaining the motorcycle with the police served no useful purpose when he was himself the victim of theft. The State relied on the vehicle's relevance to two registered offences. The issue was whether evidentiary use alone justified refusing interim possession to an apparently innocent owner, and what safeguards were needed to preserve the vehicle for both cases.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sunderbhai Ambalal Desai v. State of Gujarat, (2002) 10 SCC 283, was specifically relied on by the applicant and quoted by the Court in paragraph 6. Paragraph 7 of the quotation requires expeditious and judicious exercise of the power under Section 451. It identifies four linked purposes: preventing loss to the owner through disuse or misappropriation; relieving the police and courts of continued storage; enabling a properly prepared panchnama to serve as evidence instead of production of the article, with a detailed record of its nature where necessary; and reducing opportunities for tampering by promptly recording evidence. In the present case, the order required verification of the proper claimant and safeguards for trial evidence.

The same quotation reproduces the Supreme Court's discussion of vehicles in paragraphs 15–18. It addresses deterioration of vehicles kept at police stations and recognises disputes about delivery to the person from whom a vehicle was seized, its true owner or another claimant. It calls for immediate and appropriate Magistrate's orders on bond, guarantee and security for return when required. Suitable photographs and a detailed panchnama should be prepared before delivery. The quoted discussion of unclaimed vehicles, notice to an insurance company and possible auction within six months concerns a different situation: this motorcycle was actively claimed and was not ordered to be auctioned. In paragraph 7, the High Court applied the reasoning concerning prompt release and preservation of evidence. It required documentary proof of ownership and substantial security.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 451 and 457 CrPC governed the application to the Special Judge for interim custody of the property. Section 482 CrPC was invoked to challenge the refusal. The quoted Supreme Court analysis focuses expressly on Section 451 and the judicious, expeditious handling of property produced before the court or held in its custody. The introductory IPC and MPDVPK Act references identify the two criminal cases and the evidentiary setting; they do not record a finding that the applicant committed those offences. Crime 260/2019 concerned the owner's own theft report, while Crime 336/2019 was the separate case in which the stolen vehicle was allegedly used. Both cases remained relevant to the non-alienation condition. No confiscation provision, forfeiture statute or final-disposal ruling was adjudicated.

4. Issues : (i) Could the trial court refuse interim custody merely because the seized motorcycle was evidence in a robbery prosecution and also the subject of a theft FIR, despite the undisputed theft report lodged by an applicant who was not accused in the robbery?

(ii) How does Sunderbhai reconcile prompt return and prevention of deterioration with preservation and later production of physical evidence?

(iii) What proof, guarantee, preservation undertaking and non-alienation terms did the High Court impose, and what was left for the court below to verify before physical delivery?

5. Ratio / Findings : The respondent did not dispute that the applicant had reported the theft of motorcycle MP 30 MK 4055. He was not accused in Crime 336/2019 and was, in the Court's description, himself a victim of theft. The Special Judge's bare reliance on the vehicle's evidentiary significance in two prosecutions did not explain why it had to remain in police custody rather than be delivered subject to effective safeguards. Following Sunderbhai, the High Court held that no useful purpose would be served by withholding interim custody in those circumstances. The holding was a conditional application to an identified claimant.

The Court required the applicant to file documents in the trial court showing that he was the registered owner and to furnish a bank guarantee of Rs 30,000 as security. He had to undertake not to change the motorcycle's colour or alter it, and to produce it whenever the trial court directed. He was also prohibited from alienating it until the trials arising from both Crime 260/2019 and Crime 336/2019 concluded. These requirements preserved the ability to identify and produce the property while avoiding needless storage and deterioration. The guarantee amount was a condition of this case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the application under Section 482 by directing interim release of the motorcycle to the applicant on supurdaginama notwithstanding the earlier refusal, once the court below was satisfied that the specified proof, bank guarantee of Rs 30,000 and undertakings had been furnished. Production when ordered and non-alienation until both trials concluded remained operative safeguards.

Raghvendra Singh v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 12765/2021, 22/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (652) Prev Next

Headnote :- The Court observed that —

Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, Sections 118, 138 and 139 — debt and statutory presumption — Once execution of a signed cheque is proved or admitted, a rebuttable presumption arises that it was issued for consideration and in discharge of a legally enforceable liability. Mere denial is insufficient; the accused may rely on a probable defence arising from the entire record. The complainant's failure to file an income-tax return or disclose the loan in it does not, by itself, establish a lack of funds or negate the debt. Financial capacity and the transaction are assessed with the other evidence. Here, the payee explained that he had Rs 4 lakh of his own and had borrowed Rs 6 lakh from his father. The accused's changing account failed to rebut the presumption.

Signed cheque — entries completed by another — The mere fact that the payee or another person filled in the remaining particulars of a cheque does not, by itself, absolve its drawer. Applying Bir Singh v. Mukesh Kumar, the Court distinguished an assertion about handwriting in the other entries from proof that the drawer had not signed the instrument or had not voluntarily issued it. In the circumstances, the unsupported account of theft did not displace the statutory presumption.

Disputed signature and alleged theft — The accused's earlier notice referred to completion of the other entries but did not deny her signature. She specifically denied the signature only in her defence evidence. Her accounts of the place of theft and her acquaintance with the complainant conflicted. She lodged no theft FIR and did not seek expert comparison, although the complainant attempted to obtain it. Her admission that the cheque signature resembled the bank specimen, together with its return because the account was blocked rather than for a signature mismatch, supported rejection of the belated defence.

Criminal revision — Concurrent factual findings on execution and liability were not reopened merely to reappreciate the evidence. Following Bir Singh on the limited revisional role in the absence of perversity or jurisdictional error, the Court affirmed the trial and appellate findings that the transaction was proved and the presumption had not been rebutted.

Sentence and compensation — Suganthi Suresh Kumar cautions that imposing a merely nominal sentence for an unpaid dishonoured cheque defeats Section 138's object. The trial court had imposed admonition and awarded compensation of Rs 12,69,000. The complainant had not challenged that leniency. The High Court therefore declined to enhance the punishment but directed that the compensation carry interest at 9% per annum from 23 January 2018 until payment. The original compensation had included interest at 9% through the trial judgment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Piyush Dutt Sharma alleged in his complaint that Ragini Gupta borrowed Rs 10 lakh in June 2013, promised repayment within six months and delivered Andhra Bank cheque No. 119954 dated 28 January 2014. He presented it through Axis Bank on 3 February 2014. It was returned on 4 February because the account was blocked. His later statutory demand notice was returned with an endorsement that the addressee had left the premises. Ragini denied the loan and alleged that Piyush and Pankaj had taken her cheque from her husband's shop, prompting her to instruct the bank to block the account. She and her husband testified for the defence. On 23 January 2018, the JMFC convicted her under Section 138 NI Act, imposed admonition and awarded Rs 12,69,000 compensation. The compensation included interest at 9% through the judgment date. The 14th Additional Sessions Judge dismissed her Criminal Appeal No. 83/2018 on 12 October 2018. She then brought this revision under Sections 397/401 CrPC.

The revisionist disputed her signature and the existence of an enforceable loan. She contended that the complainant had not established his income or disclosed the alleged advance in income-tax returns, that she did not know him, that a cheque whose other entries were not in her handwriting could not bind her, and that she had received no demand notice. The complainant relied on the statutory presumption, his explanation that he had Rs 4 lakh of his own and had borrowed Rs 6 lakh from his father, the bank's reason for return, the absence of a theft FIR, and the accused's own registered notice, Ex. P7, sent through her advocate in October 2014. Ex. P7 described him as her husband's family friend and a frequent visitor. It stated that a cheque was missing from her computer-table drawer and accused him of completing its other entries, but did not deny her signature. In her evidence, she instead alleged theft from her husband's shop, denied knowing him, sought to disown the notice and her advocate, and specifically denied the cheque signature for the first time. The complainant then applied under Section 45 Evidence Act for expert comparison. The accused opposed the application, and the Magistrate rejected it. She had made no application for expert comparison herself. She acknowledged that the disputed signature resembled her specimen with the bank. The High Court weighed these circumstances in the cheque case; it did not adjudicate the allegations as separate crimes.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bir Singh v. Mukesh Kumar, Criminal Appeal Nos. 230–231/2019, was expressly quoted and applied twice. In its discussion of a signed blank cheque, it distinguished subsequent completion of the unfilled particulars from a material alteration. Voluntary signature and delivery, and evidence of the circumstances in which the cheque was issued, were central to the statutory inference. It also held that the mere absence of a cheque or receipt for the underlying loan did not automatically defeat a Section 138 complaint. The present Court applied that reasoning after finding that the record supported the signature and loan. It rejected the contention based on different handwriting in the remaining entries. Bir Singh was also cited on the limited revisional role where the trial and appellate courts have made concurrent factual findings: in the absence of perversity or jurisdictional error, the revisional court does not retry the evidence.

Kishan Rao v. Shankargouda, (2018) 8 SCC 165, was quoted on the operation of Section 139 once execution is proved and the insufficiency of a bare denial. The quoted passage explained and adopted the principles in Kumar Exports v. Sharma Carpets, (2009) 2 SCC 513. Sections 118 and 139 create rebuttable presumptions of consideration and debt. The accused may rely on direct evidence or surrounding circumstances that make the absence of consideration or debt reasonably probable; direct proof of a negative is not invariably required. In Kishan Rao itself, the stolen-cheque defence had failed on the evidence. The present Court used these authorities to assess whether Ragini's inconsistent account of theft and denial of signature supplied a probable rebuttal, and found that it did not. T.P. Murugan v. Bhojan, (2018) 8 SCC 469, was quoted on the same rebuttable Section 139 presumption and the rejection, for lack of credibility, of a long-unexplained account that cheques had been given as security. It reinforced the need for cogent circumstances. The pronote and seven-year delay in that case were not facts of the present case.

John K. John v. Tom Varghese, JT 2007 (13) SC 222, was quoted as an example where an unusually large undocumented, interest-free advance and the complainant's conduct could support rebuttal. Suganthi Suresh Kumar v. Jagdeeshan, (2002) 2 SCC 420, was quoted for the concern that an unpaid dishonoured cheque should not attract a token punishment that defeats Section 138's legislative object. Its caution informed the sentencing discussion, although this Court left the unchallenged admonition in place and maintained compensation with further interest.

Sadhna Pandey (Smt.) v. P.C. Jain, a coordinate Bench decision, was quoted on the evidentiary relevance of a bank memo giving a reason other than signature mismatch where denial of the signature was belated. That extract in turn discussed the Supreme Court decision in L.C. Goyal v. Suresh Joshi and other High Court decisions. The present Court relied on this reasoning when assessing the cheque and the bank's blocked-account reason. The authorities within the extract were considered only for the point reproduced, without independent analysis of their other holdings. John K. Abraham v. Simon C. Abraham, (2014) 2 SCC 236, K. Subramani v. K. Damodara Naidu, (2015) 1 SCC 99, Krishna Janardhan Bhat v. Dattatraya G. Hegde, AIR 2008 SC 1325, and two MP High Court decisions were cited by the revisionist in submissions.

3. Statutes considered : Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act supplied the offence and the demand-notice context. Sections 118 and 139 governed the rebuttable presumptions of consideration and legally enforceable debt or liability upon proof of execution. Section 20 was referred to when the Court rejected the proposition that another person's completion of the remaining cheque entries alone exonerated the drawer. Section 45 of the Evidence Act provided for the proposed handwriting-expert examination. The Court noted the complainant's unsuccessful application and the accused's failure to seek that comparison herself. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC were the basis of the revision after the unsuccessful conviction appeal. The quoted Bir Singh passage referred to Section 482 when describing revisional restraint; this petition was brought under Sections 397 and 401. Section 315 CrPC provided for the accused's own defence testimony. Income-tax reporting was an evidentiary contention, rather than a statutory prerequisite under the NI Act. Possible revenue action for tax non-compliance was expressly kept separate from adjudication of the cheque debt.

4. Issues : (1) After evaluation of the cheque, signature and transaction, did Sections 118 and 139 require an inference of legally enforceable liability, and could the accused rebut it by relying on the alleged absence of recorded or disclosed income of the complainant? (2) Did the assertions that the cheque was stolen or that someone else filled in its other particulars make it unreliable, given that the accused's prior notice did not deny her signature, her account had changed, and the bank returned it because the account was blocked? What was the significance of the attempted expert examination and the absence of a theft FIR? (3) Could a criminal revision disturb concurrent trial and appellate findings on those facts without perversity or jurisdictional error? (4) Did the lenient admonition and compensation require interference, and what interest was payable after the trial judgment? The returned demand notice was a factual contention addressed in light of the accused's own later registered communication.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found that the accused's admission about the resemblance of her signature, the bank's failure to object to the signature, her October 2014 notice referring only to other entries, her admitted acquaintance with the complainant, and his explanation of the source of Rs 10 lakh supported execution of the cheque and the debt. It applied the rebuttable Section 139 presumption, as explained in Kishan Rao and Kumar Exports, and assessed whether the defence made the absence of liability reasonably probable. Failure to file a tax return or disclose income could attract tax-law consequences, but did not by itself establish that no funds or loan existed. The complainant had been cross-examined on his means and had explained that he contributed Rs 4 lakh and borrowed Rs 6 lakh from his father.

The alleged theft defence was inconsistent about where the cheque disappeared and whether Piyush was known to the family. Ragini's Ex. P7 notice described the cheque as missing from her computer-table drawer and the complainant as a family friend. Her testimony placed it in her husband's shop and denied acquaintance with him. She also disowned the notice and counsel despite having engaged that lawyer. Ex. P7 alleged that someone else completed the other entries, but did not deny her signature; she specifically denied the signature only in her evidence. She lodged no theft FIR and did not seek handwriting comparison, whereas the complainant sought it after that late denial. The bank memo recorded a blocked account rather than a signature mismatch, and she admitted that the signature resembled her bank specimen. Together, these circumstances supported rejection of the defence. The bank's return reason and the absence of an expert report were evidentiary circumstances in this case. Applying Bir Singh, the Court held that completion of particulars by someone other than the drawer did not alone defeat liability on the proved signed cheque.

The Court also found that, after the complainant's demand notice was returned, the accused had sent a registered notice to his counsel. It rejected her attempt to deny sending Ex. P7 through an advocate whom she acknowledged engaging. The Court concluded that the transaction and legally recoverable liability were established and that the concurrent conviction findings disclosed no error warranting revisional intervention. Bir Singh supplied the principle that evidence should not be reweighed in the absence of perversity or jurisdictional defect. The revision was dismissed; it was not treated as a fresh factual appeal.

On sentence, Suganthi Suresh Kumar cautioned against nominal punishment for an unpaid cheque. The complainant, however, had not challenged the trial court's admonition. The Court left that punishment and the Rs 12,69,000 compensation intact. It separately directed that the compensation carry interest at 9% per annum from 23 January 2018 until actual payment. The trial compensation already included interest at 9% on the cheque amount through that date.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision and affirmed the Sessions appellate judgment of 12 October 2018 and the JMFC judgment of 23 January 2018, including Ragini Gupta's Section 138 conviction, admonition and compensation of Rs 12,69,000. It directed that the compensation additionally carry interest at 9% per annum from the trial judgment date, 23 January 2018, until actual payment. There was no remand, acquittal, enhancement of imprisonment or independent adjudication of tax liability.

Ragini Gupta v. Piyush Dutt Sharma, Cr.R. no. 5263/2018, 07/03/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (653) Prev Next

Headnote :- The court observed that adults may choose to live together without interference. A sufficiently specific complaint identifying criminal acts and alleged offenders calls for lawful police action in the light of Lata Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 475. In an Article 226 petition seeking protection against relatives and others, the couple relied on an Arya Samaj Mandir certificate. Applying the Supreme Court's order in Secretary, Madhya Bharat Arya Pratinidhi Sabha v. State of M.P., SLP (Civil) No. 5315/2022, the High Court held that the Mandir had no authority to issue a marriage certificate. It did not accept the document as competent certification of the marriage. The complaint sent by post identified no threat, date, name or offence. The Court therefore granted neither an unconditional protective declaration nor a blanket bar on coercive action. It instead directed the Superintendent of Police, Morena, to take necessary action if the petitioners submitted a complaint specifying instances of offences and naming the offenders. Any existing FIR was expressly left unaffected. The right of adults to choose their life together was preserved without deciding the validity of the alleged marriage or granting immunity from lawful investigation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rahul and another petitioner approached the Madhya Pradesh High Court, Gwalior Bench, under Article 226 in Writ Petition No. 13785/2022. They claimed to be adults who had married in an Arya Samaj Mandir and faced threats from respondent No. 4, the second petitioner's family or other persons. They sought police protection and an order preventing coercive action on allegedly false complaints. They also sought a declaration that the threats and interference with their married life were unlawful, an order restraining such conduct, costs and other suitable relief. Their counsel relied on the Arya Marriage Validation Act, 1937, and their freedom as adults to live as they wished. The State disputed the Mandir's authority to issue a marriage certificate.

The petitioners relied on a certificate recording an alleged marriage on 31 May 2022. Their complaint, sent by registered post on 14 June 2022, gave no concrete instance of a threat, date, telephone number or name of an alleged offender. The Court treated this general complaint as an attempt to lay a foundation for the writ, rather than as proof of a specific offence. The petitioners claimed to be above 23 and 20 years of age respectively. The Court considered the certificate and the unsupported threat allegations separately from the adults' freedom to choose their life together.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Supreme Court's order dated 4 April 2022 in Secretary, Madhya Bharat Arya Pratinidhi Sabha v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, SLP (Civil) No. 5315/2022, was expressly applied. The High Court recorded that the Supreme Court permitted Arya Samaj Mandirs to perform marriages strictly in accordance with Annexure P/5 to that SLP. The reproduced conditions required compliance with the Hindu Marriage Act, proof of age, voluntary consent, a joint application with witnesses, integrity of documents, Vedic

Saptapadi, reporting to the Sabha, photographs, a marriage register and preservation of files. On the question before it, the High Court held that permission to perform marriages did not confer authority on a Mandir to issue a marriage certificate. Lata Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 475, was invoked in the operative direction concerning protection of consenting adults from unlawful interference.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the writ jurisdiction for the requested police-protection remedy. The petitioners invoked the Arya Marriage Validation Act, 1937. The Court stated that marriages between Arya Samajists are not invalid under that Act, but noted that the petitioners had not claimed to be Arya Samajists. Annexure P/5, reproduced by the High Court, required compliance with the Hindu Marriage Act and laid down detailed procedural conditions. The Court stated that a marriage certificate could be issued by the competent authority under the Special Marriage Act and rejected the Mandir certificate as competent certification. No penal provision or charge was adjudicated. Any possible existing FIR was expressly left unaffected.

4. Issues : (1) Could the petitioners rely on an Arya Samaj Mandir certificate as authoritative proof of marriage for the protection writ, in view of the Supreme Court's conditions and the limited scope of the Arya Marriage Validation Act invoked? (2) Did their registered-post complaint establish identifiable threats justifying the requested blanket protective and non-coercion orders? (3) Independently of proof of a legally certified marriage, what protection could adults receive to exercise their freedom to live together, and how should that protection interact with any pre-existing FIR? These questions concerned writ relief and police action.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the adults' autonomy from their reliance on the Mandir certificate as evidence of marriage. The Supreme Court order permitted marriage ceremonies subject to the recorded conditions, but did not authorise the Mandir to issue a marriage certificate. The High Court therefore did not treat the purported certificate as competent certification or declare the couple's marriage valid.

The alleged threat lacked particulars. The complaint was sent about two weeks after the alleged ceremony, but gave no instance of a threat, name, date, telephone number or specific offence. The Court regarded the complaint as imaginary and as an attempt to lay a foundation for the writ. It refused the unconditional relief sought on that material.

The Court accepted the general principle that two adults may choose how to live and that others have no right to interfere with their life. It directed that, if the petitioners complained to the Superintendent of Police, Morena, specifying instances of an offence and naming the offenders, the Superintendent must take necessary action under the law in the light of Lata Singh. The direction was conditional on such a complaint. Any FIR already lodged was expressly left unaffected; the adult-choice principle was not used to quash or suspend a case against either petitioner.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the petition with a direction to the Superintendent of Police, Morena, to take necessary action if the petitioners submitted a sufficiently specific complaint identifying criminal acts and alleged offenders. It declined to treat the Arya Samaj Mandir document as a marriage certificate and did not grant the broad declaration, blanket non-coercion order or unconditional police protection sought. Any existing FIR remained unaffected. No costs, finding of criminal guilt or final declaration of marriage validity was recorded.

Rahul and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, W.P. no. 13785/2022, 22/06/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (654) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal order / recall / counsel default and Bar Council - The applicant sought recall under Section 482 of the High Court's final order dated 13 May 2024. He alleged that his former counsel had received papers and fees, failed to file a reply and concealed that failure. He had complained to the State Bar Council. Rafiq v. Munshilal, (1981) 2 SCC 788, establishes that a party who has done all that can reasonably be expected should not suffer because of an advocate's default. State of Punjab v. Davinder Pal Singh Bhullar, (2011) 14 SCC 770, distinguishes the Section 362 CrPC bar on altering or reviewing a signed final judgment from recall of an order that is a nullity for want of jurisdiction or breach of natural justice. The applicant seeking recall must establish absence of fault. Here, the alleged failure to file depended on disputed assertions about delivery of documents and instructions to counsel.

Deciding those allegations would effectively determine professional misconduct, a matter within the Bar Council's disciplinary jurisdiction under R. Muthukrishnan v. Registrar General, (2019) 16 SCC 407. The complaint was pending before that body, and the former advocate had not been impleaded. The Court declined to make even a provisional finding that would prejudice that process. It dismissed the recall application with liberty to revive it after counsel's guilt is established by the Bar Council. Paras 2–17.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rahul Jain applied under Section 482 CrPC in MCRC 22950/2024 for recall of the High Court's order dated 13 May 2024 in MCRC 19092/2023, which involved Neha Jain and others. The substantive disposition of the earlier order is not reproduced in this judgment, and the merits of that proceeding were not decided in this order. Rahul said that counsel's Vakalatnama had been filed on 19 August 2023. He alleged that, on visiting Jabalpur on 1 February 2024, he gave counsel the documents and signed papers needed for a reply, but was repeatedly told that a return had been filed when none was on record. He also alleged that he had paid counsel's fee, yet even the fee payable on the Vakalatnama had not been paid. He filed a complaint with the State Bar Council on 27 May 2024. As reproduced in the judgment, the complaint described the initial engagement and assurances, alleged non-filing and lack of notice of hearing, access to the 13 May order, and later efforts to obtain a copy. These remained the applicant's allegations, rather than judicially established facts. Paragraph 5 separately quoted the application's allegations of a breach of natural justice. The former advocate was not made a party to the recall application.

The applicant relied on Rafiq for relief from an advocate's mistake and on Davinder Pal Singh Bhullar for the distinction between prohibited review and permissible recall of a nullity. The Court framed the question as whether its earlier order should be recalled. It reproduced both Supreme Court rules and considered whether it could determine the alleged default while the misconduct complaint was before the Bar Council. It dismissed the application with conditional liberty to revive it.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rafiq v. Munshilal, 1981:INSC:95 : (1981) 2 SCC 788, was cited by the applicant and quoted in paragraph 8. In that case, a represented party who had chosen and briefed counsel and paid the fees was not required to monitor counsel's attendance at the High Court. The Supreme Court restored an appeal dismissed because counsel was absent and directed that costs be recovered from the advocate. In paragraph 9, the present Court accepted the general principle that a litigant should not suffer because of counsel's mistake.

State of Punjab v. Davinder Pal Singh Bhullar, 2011:INSC:839 : (2011) 14 SCC 770, was relied on for maintainability and extensively quoted in paragraph 10. Its paragraphs 44–45 and 47–49 state the finality rule: once a final criminal judgment is signed, the court is functus officio. Section 362 bars substantive alteration or review, except to correct a clerical or arithmetical error or where the law expressly authorises it. Section 482 cannot be used to do what the Code prohibits. Paragraph 46 permits a distinct power of recall where the apparent judgment is a nullity for want of jurisdiction, breach of natural justice or denial of a hearing, or an abuse of process with the same effect. The person seeking recall must establish absence of fault. The passage cites Hari Singh Mann, Chhanni, Moti Lal and M.M. Manikantan Nair on finality; Chitawan, Deepak Thanwardas Balwani, Habu, Swarth Mahto, Makkapati Nagaswara Sastri, Asit Kumar Kar and Vishnu Agarwal on exceptional recall; and K.V. Rajendran and Sooraj Devi on review authority. Those cases were part of the quoted doctrinal discussion. The High Court did not reject the possibility of recall for a breach of natural justice. It found that the necessary premise concerning misconduct and the applicant's absence of fault had not been established on this record.

R. Muthukrishnan v. Registrar General, High Court of Judicature at Madras, 2019:INSC:99 : (2019) 16 SCC 407, was invoked by the Court in paragraph 11 on the Bar Council's exclusive jurisdiction over an advocate's professional misconduct. The applicant's complaint was already before the State Bar Council. A finding that he had delivered particular documents and that counsel had disregarded his instructions would effectively prejudge that complaint. In paragraphs 12–16, the Court declined to make even a prima facie finding. The former advocate was not a party to the proceeding. The conditional disposition rested on these disputed allegations and the pending complaint.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to seek recall of the earlier High Court order. Section 362 CrPC, as quoted from Davinder Pal Singh Bhullar, prohibits a criminal court from altering or reviewing a signed final judgment or order disposing of a case, except to correct a clerical or arithmetical error or under an express statutory exception. Inherent jurisdiction does not override that bar. The distinction is between changing a valid final decision and recalling an order that is void for the specified jurisdictional defect or breach of audi alteram partem. This application alleged a breach of natural justice arising from counsel's omissions. The Court declined to determine that disputed premise because the misconduct complaint was before the State Bar Council and the former advocate had not been impleaded. It relied on R. Muthukrishnan for the Bar Council's disciplinary jurisdiction.

4. Issues : (i) When can Section 482 support recall of a signed criminal order despite the Section 362 finality bar, and what must an applicant establish to invoke the nullity/natural-justice exception?

(ii) Does Rafiq's protection for an innocent client warrant immediate relief merely on allegations that former counsel failed to file a reply after receiving documents, or must those disputed facts first be established?

(iii) Can the High Court give even a provisional finding on the advocate's professional conduct while a State Bar Council complaint is pending and the advocate is not before the Court?

(iv) What present relief and later route did the Court actually allow?

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court accepted the Rafiq principle that a litigant who had done what was expected should not be penalised for counsel's default. Under Davinder Pal Singh Bhullar, substantive review of a signed final criminal order is prohibited. Exceptional recall concerns a genuine nullity caused by denial of a hearing or another recognised foundational defect, and the applicant must establish absence of fault. Here, the alleged denial of an effective hearing depended on disputed assertions that Rahul had provided the relevant documents and instructions and that former counsel had falsely assured him that a reply was filed. Even a prima facie determination would affect the disciplinary complaint. Applying R. Muthukrishnan, the Court held that professional misconduct was within the Bar Council's domain. The former counsel's absence was an additional reason to refrain from ruling on the accusation.

The words 'after the guilt of earlier counsel is established in the Bar Council' in paragraph 17 state the condition for revival in this particular order. The Court had accepted the Rafiq principle that a litigant should not suffer for counsel's mistake. The decision turned on an unresolved factual premise and the respective institutions' competence. Section 362 continued to bar mere reconsideration of the merits.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 recall application with express liberty to revive it after the former counsel's guilt is established before the State Bar Council. Revival remained open on that stated condition, while the original final order remained operative.

Rahul Jain v. Neha Jain and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 22950/2024, 31/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (655) Prev Next

Headnote :- Food safety / manufacturer impleadment / seller proof - In a pan masala prosecution, the seller applied under Section 78 of the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006, to add the manufacturer as a co-accused. The Chief Judicial Magistrate refused because the seller had produced no bill showing purchase from that manufacturer. On the Section 482 challenge, the High Court required prima facie material showing that the article seized from the seller had been purchased from the named manufacturer in the same condition in which it was seized. Merely naming the manufacturer or asserting that it was equally responsible did not establish its criminal liability. Counsel identified no perversity in the Magistrate's order, and the application was dismissed. Paras 1–6.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rahul Jain, a pan masala seller facing prosecution under unspecified provisions of the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006, challenged the order dated 22 January 2024 passed by the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Harda, in RCT 176/2020. The Magistrate had rejected his Section 78 application to implead the manufacturer as a co-accused. The applicant argued that, as an ordinary seller, he should not alone face liability because the manufacturer was equally responsible. The Magistrate relied on the absence of a purchase bill linking the seized article to that manufacturer. The matter concerned the threshold for adding another accused to a pending food prosecution; it did not determine adulteration or finally attribute liability.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court set out its reasoning on the Section 78 application in paragraphs 4–6. The High Court's account of the rejected trial order was confined to its stated ground for refusal.

3. Statutes considered : Section 78 of the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006, was the applicant's stated basis for seeking to add the manufacturer as a co-accused. The Court required prima facie evidence linking the seized article to its purchase from the named entity in the same condition. Section 482 CrPC was invoked to challenge the Magistrate's refusal, but the applicant could identify no perversity in that order. The prosecution was described only as arising under various provisions of the Food Safety Act. No separate issue concerning laboratory analysis, limitation, a written warranty or the final burden at trial was decided.

4. Issues : (i) Was the assertion that the applicant was an ordinary seller and that the named manufacturer was equally responsible sufficient to add the manufacturer as a co-accused under Section 78 without preliminary proof that the seized article had been purchased from it in the same condition?

(ii) Did the Magistrate act perversely in refusing the application where no bill had been furnished and no alternative prima facie linkage was identified in the High Court order?

(iii) What does the High Court's dismissal decide and leave open about the seller's and manufacturer's substantive criminal liability?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court upheld the Magistrate's refusal based on the missing purchase bill and stated the general threshold in paragraph 5. Before an industry named as the manufacturer can be prosecuted, there must be sufficient prima facie material indicating its criminal liability, including evidence that the seized article was purchased from it in the same condition in which it was seized from the seller. The Court expressed that threshold in terms of sufficient prima facie material. In this record, the missing proof identified was a purchase bill, and counsel showed no perversity in the order. The seller's general assertion that the manufacturer was equally responsible did not supply the missing evidentiary link.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application challenging the Chief Judicial Magistrate's refusal. The manufacturer was not added as a co-accused on the application before the Court. So far as the order disclosed, RCT 176/2020 remained pending. The order did not dispose of the underlying food-safety prosecution or seizure, or determine guilt.

Rahul Jain v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 7719/2024, 27/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (656) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers / FIR alleging sexual offences - The complaint and the Section 161 account alleged intercourse on a promise of marriage from 2014, including an incident on 20 September 2016. The complainant, whose age at the FIR was recorded as more than 18, gave a different account in her Section 164 CrPC statement. She said that the report had been procured under pressure, that the applicant had committed no offence or wrong against her, and that she wished to marry him. The State acknowledged that account and that her father's statement did not refer to earlier sexual abuse. On the material in this case diary, the High Court held that continuation of the FIR under Section 376 IPC and POCSO Sections 5(b)(i), 6 would be an abuse of process. It quashed the FIR under Section 482 CrPC without determining the validity of the asserted marriage.

Adult choice / Lata Singh v. State of U.P.; AIR 2006 SC 2522 - The Supreme Court's rule that adults may choose whom to marry and must not face threats or harassment on that account was invoked in assessing the complainant's stated wish and the asserted coercion behind the report.

Quashing threshold / State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal; 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335 - The Court reproduced the Supreme Court's illustrative, non-exhaustive grounds for intervention to prevent abuse of process. These include cases in which the allegations and supporting material disclose no offence or the proceedings are mala fide. It applied the abuse-of-process principle to the prosecutrix's judicial statement and her father's account.

Section 482 restraint / Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460 - The Court invoked the Supreme Court's caution that quashing requires circumspection, a prima facie review of the case record and basic ingredients, and no meticulous weighing of evidence or premature assessment of conviction. Its conclusion was confined to the material and concessions recorded in this case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rahul Jatav sought quashing of Crime No. 732/2016 at Police Station Karera, District Shivpuri, under Section 482 CrPC. The FIR alleged offences under Section 376 IPC and Sections 5(b)(i) and 6 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012. On 20 September 2016, the prosecutrix, accompanied by her father Ghasiram Jatav, reported her age as about 18 years and two months. She alleged that, while she was at school about two years earlier, Rahul had repeatedly called her to his house and had intercourse with her on a promise to marry her once she turned 18. Her Section 161 account identified 22 March 2014 as the date of the first intercourse and described later occasions, including an incident on 20 September 2016 at Kua Teela Road, followed by his refusal to marry. These were allegations. Her father's Section 161 statement described their acquaintance and his earlier willingness to arrange their marriage after she attained 18. He said that the applicant and his father later refused his request after the reported September incident.

In her judicial statement under Section 164 CrPC, reproduced in the order, the prosecutrix gave a different account. She said that she loved Rahul and wanted to marry him, had not been allowed to speak with him, and had been pressured into lodging the report. She alleged no offence or wrongdoing by him and did not seek action against him. Counsel for Rahul and for the prosecutrix relied on that account and contended that her father had procured the FIR through coercion. They also stated that the two had married according to Hindu rites on 13 October 2016 and supplied photographs. After consulting the case diary, the State acknowledged the Section 164 account and noted that the father's statement did not say that she had reported sexual abuse before 20 September 2016.

2. Precedents — Considered : Lata Singh v. State of U.P. and another, AIR 2006 SC 2522, was quoted for the principle that a major may choose a spouse and that family disapproval, including of inter-caste or inter-religious marriage, cannot justify threats, violence, harassment, or criminal-process abuse. The Supreme Court had directed police protection and action against such harassment. The High Court used the adult-choice principle in assessing the prosecutrix's expressed wish and the claimed pressure behind the FIR.

State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, supplied illustrative, non-exhaustive categories for intervention under Article 226 or Section 482 to prevent abuse of process and secure justice. The quoted categories include cases where the allegations taken at face value disclose no offence; where the uncontroverted allegations and supporting material disclose no offence; where the allegations are inherently improbable; where an express legal bar applies; and where the proceedings are manifestly mala fide. The High Court applied the abuse-of-process principle when considering the case diary and the prosecutrix's judicial statement.

Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander and another, (2012) 9 SCC 460, was quoted at length on the distinction between revisional and inherent jurisdiction and the caution required in quashing. The reproduced principles require a prima facie assessment of uncontroverted allegations and the basic ingredients of the offence, with sparing intervention. They prohibit meticulous appraisal of evidence or prediction of conviction, and reliance on external defence material to decide whether to quash a charge. They also require a balance between individual liberty and the complainant's right to prosecution.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the High Court's inherent jurisdiction to quash the FIR to prevent abuse of process. During the investigation, statements were recorded under Sections 161 and 164 CrPC. The latter was the complainant's judicial account and was central to the decision; her father's Section 161 account was also considered. Section 376 IPC and POCSO Sections 5(b)(i) and 6 were the offences named in the FIR. Sections 156(1), 155(2), 173(2), 228 and 397 CrPC and Article 226 appeared in the quoted Supreme Court passages on quashing.

4. Issues : (1) Should the FIR and ensuing proceedings continue when the prosecution's Section 161 account alleged intercourse on a false promise of marriage, including conduct said to have begun before the complainant was 18, but her Section 164 judicial statement disavowed wrongdoing and described coercion in lodging the report? (2) How did the Supreme Court's adult-choice principle and the restrained Section 482 standards for preventing abuse of process apply to this record? The validity of the asserted October marriage, and a separate statutory determination of child status or the elements of aggravated penetrative sexual assault, were not decided.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the police diary and placed decisive weight on the prosecutrix's Section 164 statement that she loved the applicant, wished to marry him, had been pressured into lodging the FIR and alleged no offence. State counsel fairly acknowledged that account and that her father's Section 161 statement did not mention her reporting sexual abuse before 20 September 2016. The Court inferred that the earlier allegations had been made under coercion, as she had stated, and concluded that continuing criminal proceedings against this applicant would be an abuse of law. It also treated her as a major at the time relevant to her stated choice of spouse and applied Lata Singh's autonomy principle. The quoted Bhajan Lal categories provided the framework for preventing abuse of process, while Amit Kapoor required caution against a mini-trial or routine quashing. The reasoning was confined to these particular statements and the State's concession. The Court expressly refrained from commenting on the marriage.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 petition. Crime No. 732/2016 at Police Station Karera, District Shivpuri, for Section 376 IPC and POCSO Sections 5(b)(i) and 6 was quashed. Rahul Jatav v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 12804/2016, 24/11/2016, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (657) Prev Next

Headnote :- Regular bail / undertrial on COVID parole / custody - The applicant obtained bail on his third Section 439 petition on the stated ground that he had spent six months in actual custody. He had, however, been released on pandemic parole from 19 May to 16 August 2021 and had not disclosed it. Under Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, AIR 1980 SC 785, custody for Section 439 requires physical control or physical presence before the court coupled with submission to its jurisdiction. Sunil Fulchand Shah v. Union of India, (2000) 3 SCC 409, treated parole under COFEPOSA as constructive custody, countable towards preventive detention according to that enactment and the terms of release. The High Court distinguished that setting from this undertrial's parole. State of Haryana v. Mohinder Singh, (2000) 3 SCC 394, distinguishes parole from furlough and bail. Kanaksinh Mohansinh Mangrola, (2006) 9 SCC 540, concerned temporary bail, rather than parole. The contrary local decision in Budh Singh Baghel was held per incuriam for overlooking that distinction and Section 31-A(4) of the Prisoners Act. The Court held the Section 439 application filed during parole unmaintainable without surrender. It recalled the bail granted on 30 July 2021, permitted renewal after surrender and directed disclosure of parole status in future Section 439 applications. Its discussion of sentence credit expressly used the convict provisions as guidance, rather than as rules directly applicable to undertrials. Paras 1–31.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rahul Kumar was an undertrial in Crime 438/2020 at Police Station Gwalior for offences under IPC Sections 406 and 420. Two bail applications had been rejected. He filed his third Section 439 CrPC application, MCRC 35888/2021, on 15 July 2021, relying principally on about six months in actual custody. The High Court granted bail on that understanding on 30 July 2021. He had, however, been released on COVID pandemic parole on 19 May 2021, effective until 16 August 2021. The bail petition did not disclose that release. While the parole remained unexpired, he brought the omission to the Court's notice in this application under Section 482, MCRC 38747/2021. The Court examined whether an undertrial on that parole could seek regular bail without first surrendering, what detention period was being claimed and the consequence for the earlier grant.

The applicant argued that judicial or State control over a parolee was sufficient custody, relying on decisions concerning temporary bail and preventive detention. The State contended that actual custody was indispensable. The issues concerned Section 439 maintainability, nondisclosure and recall. The Court did not treat a parolee as free of all legal control. It held that constructive control did not fulfil the particular Section 439 custody requirement in these circumstances.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Re: Contagion of COVID-19 Virus in Prisons, Suo Motu W.P.(C) 1/2020, provided the Supreme Court's pandemic decongestion setting for the applicant's temporary release. In paragraphs 6 and 10, the High Court considered the effect of that release on a later ordinary Section 439 application. The lawfulness of the pandemic release itself was not in issue.

Sunil Fulchand Shah v. Union of India, (2000) 3 SCC 409, was relied on by the applicant. In paragraph 13, the Court quoted paragraph 30 of that decision: a COFEPOSA detenu temporarily released under Section 12 generally remains in constructive State custody, and the detention period continues to run unless the release order, rules or instructions exclude that period. The Court reproduced COFEPOSA Section 12 in full in paragraph 14 and observed in paragraph 15 that it contained no exclusion of parole from the calculation of preventive detention. In paragraph 21, it also quoted paragraphs 24–27 on the different control and legal character of bail and parole. The quotation addresses release outside Section 12 and the applicable conditions. The High Court did not treat constructive custody under that detention regime as fulfilling the Section 439 requirement for this undertrial.

State of Haryana v. Mohinder Singh, (2000) 3 SCC 394, was quoted in paragraphs 18 and 20. Under the Haryana temporary-release statute, parole did not count towards a convicted prisoner's sentence, whereas furlough did. Paragraph 10 of that authority also distinguishes bail, furlough and parole. The High Court relied on that distinction and Section 31-A(4) of the Prisoners Act, 1900. It expressly stated in paragraph 11 that the Prisoners Act provision and MP Prisoners Leave Rules, 1989, directly governed convicted prisoners, rather than undertrials, and used them as guidance for the undertrial question. In paragraph 17, the Court broadly stated that parole could not count towards detention. That statement followed its comparison of the statutory settings. It had distinguished Sunil's quoted COFEPOSA counting rule as governed by that preventive-detention regime.

Niranjan Singh v. Prabhakar Rajaram Kharote, AIR 1980 SC 785, quoted in paragraph 23, supplies the operative Section 439 concept: custody means physical control or at least physical presence before the court coupled with submission to its jurisdiction and orders, as distinct from anticipatory bail. Kanaksinh Mohansinh Mangrola v. State of Gujarat, (2006) 9 SCC 540, was invoked in relation to an applicant already on temporary bail. The temporary-bail submission was recorded in paragraph 19, and the Court distinguished it in paragraph 22 because temporary bail differs from administrative parole. The coordinate Bench decision in Budh Singh Baghel v. State of M.P., MCRC 18164/2020 (23 July 2020), had allowed a Section 439 application without surrender during parole, relying on Kanaksinh. In paragraphs 24–25, the present Court respectfully held that decision per incuriam for overlooking the interim-bail/parole distinction and Section 31-A(4). State of Haryana v. Dinesh Kumar, (2008) 3 SCC 222, was also cited by the applicant in submissions. The State referred to a further coordinate Bench order in MCRC 1837/2021, without an elaborated account of its reasoning.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC was the regular-bail power invoked in the third application. The Court required custody in the Niranjan Singh sense and did not equate conditional release on parole with that procedural state. Section 482 CrPC was used in this application to bring the omitted circumstance before the High Court and recall the bail order because the earlier application was unmaintainable. Sections 406/420 IPC identified the pending accusations only. Section 31-A(4) of the Prisoners Act, 1900, as reproduced, excludes temporary-release periods from a convicted prisoner's sentence. The 1989 MP Prisoners Leave Rules also concern convicts. Neither applies directly to Rahul as an undertrial, as the Court expressly noted. COFEPOSA Section 12 governs the distinct preventive-detenu release regime considered in Sunil Fulchand Shah, including bonds, surrender and counting according to the terms of release. The Haryana statutory setting in Mohinder Singh is different again. The High Court reasoned by comparison about parole, interim bail, constructive control and detention credit. Its operative decision concerned Section 439 maintainability during this undertrial's pandemic parole.

4. Issues : (i) Could an undertrial temporarily released on pandemic parole be regarded as in the custody necessary to maintain a fresh Section 439 regular-bail application without surrender?

(ii) Should constructive State or judicial control, preventive detention credit, a convicted prisoner's parole rule, or a temporary-bail decision determine the undertrial's Section 439 position?

(iii) What significance did omission of ongoing parole have when the prior bail grant rested on a mistaken six-month actual-custody premise, and what declaration should future applicants make?

(iv) Did Budh Singh Baghel remain a sound local precedent after the parole versus interim-bail distinction was considered?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished legal control during parole from the actual custody, or submission by physical presence, required under Section 439. It rejected the attempt to apply Sunil Fulchand Shah's COFEPOSA detention-counting conclusion to an undertrial's pandemic parole: that conclusion was governed by the specific preventive statute and terms of release. Section 31-A(4) and the 1989 Rules directly concern convicts and were used only as guidance. Mohinder Singh illustrated the different consequences of different forms of release. Kanaksinh concerned interim bail and therefore did not support a Section 439 application made during parole. Niranjan Singh supplied the relevant custody requirement. The Court accordingly held that the applicant was not in Section 439 custody without surrender before the trial court. It held the contrary coordinate Bench decision per incuriam because it had overlooked the distinction and the statute.

The parole was in force when MCRC 35888/2021 was filed and remained so at the present hearing. The applicant's silence had led the Court, on the third bail application, to treat him as having spent six months in actual detention. That was a material misapprehension. Because the application was unmaintainable, the bail order dated 30 July was recalled. The applicant was given liberty to renew his bail prayer after surrender; the merits of that renewed prayer were not decided. The Court also directed future Section 439 applicants to declare affirmatively that they are not on parole. Its conclusion concerned the Section 439 custody requirement and expressly distinguished convicts from undertrials. It did not determine how every lawful parole period should be counted under all detention statutes.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court recalled its bail order dated 30 July 2021 in MCRC 35888/2021 and held the third bail application, filed during parole, unmaintainable. It allowed the applicant to revive his bail prayer after surrender before the trial court and required applicants filing Section 439 petitions to declare that they are not on parole.

Rahul Kumar v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 38747/2021, 09/08/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (658) Prev Next

Headnote :- Rape trial / late DNA test / Section 311 fairness - After defence evidence had closed in a rape trial, an FSL report showing human sperm and semen on the prosecutrix's undergarments led the Sessions Court to order comparison with the accused's DNA. Section 53A CrPC authorises medical examination of an accused and collection of material for DNA profiling. Krishan Kumar Malik v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 130, emphasised DNA testing in such cases. Siva Vallabhaneni v. State of Karnataka, (2015) 2 SCC 90, rejected a categorical objection to later examination, while leaving any delay-based benefit open for trial. A local Raja Burman direction required comparison where sperm was found on victim samples. Rajaram Prasad Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2013) 14 SCC 461, requires Section 311 evidence to be essential to a just decision and germane to the issues, with an opportunity to rebut it and no serious prejudice. Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110, distinguishes correction of an oversight from filling a genuine lacuna. Applying these standards, the High Court found the DNA order necessary for adjudication. Its timing, before final arguments, did not by itself make it an impermissible attempt to fill a lacuna. The revision was dismissed. Paras 1–14.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rahul Pandey faced Sessions Trial 545/2017 for offences under IPC Sections 376, 376-A, 376(2)(n), 506 and 454. After defence evidence had closed and the case was due for final arguments, the Sixth Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, noticed an FSL report, Exhibit B, showing human sperm and semen on the prosecutrix's undergarments. By order dated 3 March 2021, the Sessions Court directed DNA comparison with the accused, referring to the coordinate Bench directions in Raja Burman. Rahul challenged that order in a revision under Section 397 CrPC. He argued that Section 311 could not be used at that late stage to fill a lacuna in the prosecution case. The High Court considered the provision for examining the accused, the DNA authorities and Section 311's fair-trial limits, and dismissed the revision.

The Court addressed two related but distinct propositions. First, Section 53A does not confine DNA examination to an early stage of investigation. Second, the trial court's Section 311 power to obtain essential evidence is subject to fairness, but an earlier omission does not by itself make the exercise an impermissible attempt to fill a 'lacuna'.

2. Precedents — Considered : Krishan Kumar Malik v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 130, quoted in paragraph 6, observes that, after Section 53A's insertion in 2006, the prosecution should resort to DNA analysis in rape cases of the kind before it. Failure to compare semen on the victim's clothing with the accused may have evidentiary consequences. The High Court used the decision to explain the value of testing, rather than to find that a comparison had already proved the accusation. Siva Vallabhaneni v. State of Karnataka, (2015) 2 SCC 90, quoted in paragraph 7, rejected the argument that Section 53A examination must take place immediately after arrest and cannot be sought later following an earlier examination, which State counsel described as serving a different purpose. The accused must cooperate, while any disadvantage from delayed testing may be urged at trial. In paragraph 8, the High Court adopted the absence of a categorical timing bar. The present order was made later still, at trial, and was also assessed under Section 311. Siva Vallabhaneni left any entitlement to a benefit from delay to be urged at trial.

Rajaram Prasad Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2013) 14 SCC 461, quoted in paragraph 9, sets out fourteen numbered principles under Section 311 read with Section 138 of the Evidence Act. A court asks whether further evidence is needed for a just decision and exercises its wide power judiciously to find the truth and avoid an incomplete record. Not every correction of an omission amounts to filling a prohibited lacuna. Serious prejudice and miscarriage of justice remain limits. The evidence must be germane, and the parties must have an opportunity to rebut it. The court must not use the power to disguise a change in the nature of the case or arbitrarily repair the prosecution case. Fair trial concerns the accused, the victim and society. The High Court applied the essentiality requirement to the existing positive FSL material. It rejected the view that correcting the earlier omission necessarily filled a prohibited lacuna.

Rajendra Prasad v. Narcotic Cell, (1999) 6 SCC 110, quoted in paragraph 10, explains that a prosecutorial oversight in presenting relevant material differs from a substantive lacuna that the court must leave unfilled. The quotation also mentions Section 165 of the Evidence Act as a judicial power to ascertain the truth. The local coordinate Bench decision in Raja Burman @ Rahu v. State of M.P., MCRC 6476/2016 (4 May 2016), quoted in paragraph 11, directed comparison of suspect samples with DNA from slides or clothing where the FSL confirmed human sperm in Section 376 cases. Its other limbs addressed pregnancy and foetal scenarios. The present decision applied the clothing-and-semen limb; it did not make separate present-case holdings on the pregnancy, foetal-testing or death-during-pregnancy limbs.

3. Statutes considered : Section 53A CrPC, reproduced in paragraph 5, concerns medical examination of a person arrested on a charge of rape or attempted rape where reasonable grounds exist to believe that examination will provide evidence. It specifies the authorised medical practitioner and police request, reasonable force, a prompt report describing DNA-profile material, reasons and timing, and forwarding through the investigating officer to the Magistrate. The High Court relied on that examination and DNA purpose and on Siva Vallabhaneni's treatment of timing. Section 311 CrPC supplied the disputed trial-stage power to obtain evidence essential to a just decision. The accused's objection that the case had reached final arguments did not make its use automatically impermissible. Section 397 was the route for revision. Sections 138 and 165 of the Evidence Act appeared in the quoted Supreme Court discussions of cross-examination and judicial control of evidence. The IPC charges identified the trial; their ingredients were not adjudicated.

4. Issues : (i) Does Section 53A permit DNA comparison with semen on the prosecutrix's clothing at a stage later than arrest or investigation, including after defence evidence has closed? Does delay necessarily invalidate that examination?

(ii) Did the trial judge identify an evidentiary step arising from Exhibit B that was genuinely essential to a just decision, or use Section 311 merely to fill a prejudicial lacuna in the prosecution case?

(iii) What procedural fairness and rebuttal considerations govern the late evidence, and what was the limited consequence of revision dismissal?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FSL report disclosed human sperm and semen on the relevant clothing, and the trial court considered comparison with the accused's DNA necessary for a just decision. Krishan Kumar Malik supported the evidentiary importance of that comparison. Siva Vallabhaneni rejected a rigid view that Section 53A operates only immediately after arrest; delay may bear on the value or fairness of the examination at trial. Raja Burman's first limb addressed semen-positive victim clothing. On the separate Section 311 objection, Rajaram Prasad Yadav supplied the requirements of essentiality, germane evidence, avoidance of miscarriage of justice and an opportunity to rebut. Rajendra Prasad supplied the distinction between oversight and a genuine lacuna. Together, these principles explained why late acquisition of relevant scientific evidence was not automatically an impermissible repair of the prosecution case. The High Court found no jurisdictional error in this order and dismissed the revision.

The quoted Section 311 principles require a fair opportunity for the accused to confront or rebut the DNA evidence. The Section 53A timing discussion preserves the possibility that delay may prejudice the accused; it does not rule out such a contention. The operative finding concerned the propriety of directing this comparison on the identified FSL record at this stage of the proceedings.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision. The Sessions Court's 3 March 2021 direction to conduct a DNA comparison remained in force.

Rahul Pandey v. State of M.P. and Ors., Cr.R. no. 1020/2021, 06/04/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (659) Prev Next

Headnote :- DNA examination / omission during investigation - In a challenge under Section 482 CrPC to a POCSO Special Court's order permitting the prosecution to conduct a DNA test, the High Court rejected the contention that the police failure to obtain the test during investigation deprived the trial court of power to permit it later. With the prosecutrix appearing to have turned hostile and scientific evidence potentially material, the Court upheld permission for a just decision. The order quotes Section 53 CrPC and expressly relies on Section 53-A in its concluding analysis, describing DNA examination as imperative or mandatory in this case. The decision concerned permission to obtain evidence, rather than a DNA result or final proof of guilt.

Hostile witness / Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat; (2019) 17 SCC 523 - The Supreme Court decision, quoted and applied, establishes that a complainant's hostile testimony does not by itself require acquittal where dependable medical, forensic, identification and other evidence proves the offence. That case considered serological and corroborating evidence on its own facts, including expert opinion under Section 45 of the Evidence Act. The High Court applied the principle in support of obtaining scientific evidence in the present case.

Trial evidence / Sections 91 and 311 CrPC - The Court read the provisions concerning production of material and material witnesses as empowering the trial court to secure material necessary or desirable for an investigation, inquiry or trial. It may also summon or recall a witness whose evidence is essential to a just decision. The earlier investigative omission did not deprive the trial court of jurisdiction to permit the requested DNA examination during this POCSO trial.

Avoidance of examination / adverse inference - The Court observed that the petitioner was avoiding the DNA test and that this situation might lead to an adverse inference. It dismissed the Section 482 application because no jurisdictional error was shown in the order granting permission.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rahul Saket invoked Section 482 CrPC to challenge the order dated 23 September 2023 passed by the Special Court under the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act at Sirmour, District Rewa. The Special Court had allowed the prosecution's application for permission to conduct a DNA test. Rahul's counsel argued that, because the police had not conducted the test during investigation, the trial court lacked jurisdiction to permit it later. State counsel submitted that the police could conduct further investigation with the trial court's permission and relied on Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi to support the continuing value of scientific evidence even when the prosecutrix turns hostile. The High Court recorded that the prosecutrix appeared to have turned hostile and that the prosecution sought the test thereafter. It also observed that the petitioner was avoiding examination. The application concerned permission to gather evidence, rather than the charged conduct or guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 523, was the Supreme Court authority applied. Its quoted paragraphs 10–12 reject automatic acquittal merely because the prosecutrix turns hostile or fails to identify the accused in court, where other dependable evidence proves the assault. The Supreme Court considered the presumption of innocence alongside the victim's rights and the public interest in a trial directed to the truth. On its facts, the medical report, test identification, semen on clothing, vaginal smear and swab, and the serologist's expert opinion under Section 45 of the Evidence Act supported identification. The quoted passage expressly recognises that different evidentiary circumstances could lead to a different result. The High Court applied the principle to obtaining scientific evidence after hostile testimony. Hemudan itself concerned available serology and corroboration. References to Zahira Habibullah Sheikh, Mahila Vinod Kumari and Iqbal occurred within the reproduced Supreme Court reasoning.

The Court also stated that its view was fortified by Parveen alias Dilla and another v. State of Haryana, Punjab and Haryana High Court Criminal Revision No. 1268/2019, decided 10 June 2019.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the High Court application. The order reproduced Section 53 CrPC, concerning a registered medical practitioner's reasonably necessary examination of an arrested accused at the request of a police officer not below the rank of sub-inspector where the stated evidentiary grounds exist. It includes the female-practitioner safeguard for examination of a woman. Paragraphs 11 and 12 expressly invoked Section 53-A CrPC in the sexual-offence examination and DNA-testing analysis. Section 91 CrPC, also quoted, permits a court or police officer to require production of a document or thing considered necessary or desirable for an investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding, subject to the stated statutory limits. Section 311 CrPC permits summoning, examination or recall at any stage and requires it where the evidence appears essential to a just decision. The Court relied on those provisions as powers to obtain material evidence during trial. Section 45 of the Evidence Act arose in Hemudan's discussion of its serologist report, not a present test result. The POCSO Act identified the Special Court and the prosecution context.

4. Issues : (1) Whether police failure to obtain a DNA test during investigation removed the POCSO trial court's jurisdiction to permit the prosecution to undertake it later, after the prosecutrix turned hostile. (2) Whether the potential utility of scientific evidence and the court's statutory trial powers justified retaining the permission order despite the petitioner's objection.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court rejected the contention that the investigative omission barred the trial court from granting permission. After referring to Section 53 CrPC, it relied on Section 53-A in concluding that the prosecution's DNA examination was imperative or mandatory in this case. It also quoted Sections 91 and 311 to explain that the trial court could secure documents or witnesses at any stage where necessary for a just decision. Hemudan showed that hostile testimony does not preclude proof through independent scientific evidence; the conviction in that case rested on the combined evidence on its record. Applying that principle to the prosecution's request, the High Court held that the police failure to obtain the test earlier did not remove the trial court's power to permit it. The Court also observed that Rahul was avoiding the test, which might lead to an adverse inference. These conclusions concerned the request for DNA examination in this procedural setting.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court found no jurisdictional error in the Special Court's order allowing the prosecution's application for a DNA test. It dismissed Rahul Saket's application under Section 482. The permission to conduct the test during trial remained in force.

Rahul Saket v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 13203/2024, 21/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (660) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder — Section 300 thirdly / intended injury - Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was applied for its four-stage test. The prosecution must prove the bodily injury, its nature, and the intention to inflict that particular injury. It must then establish objectively that the injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death; a further intention to kill is unnecessary. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra explained the progression from Sections 299 to 300 and 304 and the distinction between intention and knowledge. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cr LJ 171, explained the sufficiency inquiry by reference to the weapon and the site of injury. The Court accepted the eyewitness account of the axe injury to Uday Singh's head and the medical opinion that his death was homicidal. It affirmed the five convictions for murder under Sections 302/149 IPC.

Single blow / Exception 4 - Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319; Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444; Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799; State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639; and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, were considered in assessing intention from the facts. A single blow does not automatically reduce murder to a lesser offence; the weapon, vital site, force and circumstances matter. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, requires all the conditions of Exception 4 to be satisfied, including the absence of undue advantage or cruel or unusual conduct. Despite injuries to both sides, the Court found the fatal head attack intentional and upheld the convictions under Section 302/149.

Unlawful assembly / common object - Dani Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203, explains that a common object may emerge or change during an assembly, but requires awareness and concurrence rather than mere presence. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, requires a clear finding of an unlawful common object. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 18, explains the elements of unlawful assembly and rioting implicit in a Section 149 charge. Applying Sections 142 and 149 IPC, the Court held that the successive arrival of armed participants did not negate the proved common object. The convictions in both cases were affirmed.

Free fight / cross-cases - State of Bihar v. Ishwar Chand Rai, (2008) 3 PLJR 60, discussing Gajanand v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 695, and Dharman v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 324, explained the distinction between a free fight and an assault in furtherance of a common object. The discussion describes a pitched battle in which both groups set out to fight. On this record, reciprocal injuries and cross-cases did not establish such a free fight without a common object. The Court sustained Section 149 liability on the proved assaults.

Private defence / accused injuries - Banwar Singh v. State of M.P., (2008) 16 SCC 657, discusses Onkarnath Singh v. State of U.P., (1975) 3 SCC 276, and State of M.P. v. Ramesh, (2005) 9 SCC 705. The discussion recognises the evidentiary significance of unexplained injuries to the accused but rejects an automatic presumption of private defence. The Court acknowledged injuries to both sides, accepted the prosecution accounts supported by medical evidence, and dismissed both appeals arising from the cross-cases.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The common judgment disposed of Criminal Appeals Nos. 1025 and 1030 of 2010 under Section 374 CrPC. They arose from separate cross-cases tried by the Third Additional Sessions Judge, Bhind, after a clash on 12 January 2010 at about 8:30 p.m. The accounts differed as to the location and who began the incident. In the first case, following an earlier altercation involving Devendra and Gajendra, the complainant's side alleged that Uday and Ajmer came armed, Ajmer struck Bhan Singh, and Jitendra, Omkar, Rahul and Ranveer took part in assaults on Kunwar and Vedram. In the cross-case, Jitendra's side alleged that Bhan and Vishwanath came to his field, Vishwanath struck Uday Singh's head with an axe, and other members of that group arrived with lathis and an axe and assaulted Jitendra's relatives. Uday died. These were opposing prosecution accounts in connected proceedings, rather than an agreed account of the incident.

In Session Trial 167/2010, the court convicted Ajmer and Omkar under Section 324 IPC; Rahul, Ranveer and Jitendra under Section 324/149; Rahul, Ranveer and Jitendra under Section 323; and Ajmer and Omkar under Section 323/149. For the Section 324 counts, it imposed three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 200 each. For the Section 323 counts, it imposed one year's rigorous imprisonment. The sentences were concurrent. They were acquitted under Sections 452, 294 and 506-B. Jitendra's appeal later abated following his death on 5 December 2017. In Session Trial 55/2010, Bhan, Vedram, Devendra, Indraveer and Vishwanath were convicted under Section 302/149 and sentenced to life imprisonment with fines of Rs 1,000 each. They were also convicted under Sections 148, 324/149 and 323/149 and sentenced to three years, three years and one year respectively. Those sentences were concurrent. They were acquitted under Section 506 Part II.

The appellants challenged the witnesses as interested and inconsistent. They relied on inadequately explained injuries to the accused, the cross-case and their claimed right of private defence. The second group also alleged poor lighting and a free fight inconsistent with Section 149 liability. Dr R.L. Sharma described sharp and blunt injuries to people on both sides, including sharp head wounds to Uday, Ajmer, Omkar, Bhan and Pushpa. Dr Ajay Gupta attributed Uday's homicidal death to head injury and its complications. Ranveer attributed the head blow to Vishwanath and other blows to named participants. The Court found that his evidence was supported by Jitendra, Ajmer and Omkar and had withstood cross-examination. The State supported both trial judgments.

2. Precedents — Considered : On homicide, Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, supplied the four requirements of Section 300 Thirdly. The bodily injury and its nature must be proved objectively, followed by the intention to inflict that particular injury. The final inquiry is whether the injury was objectively sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The Court reproduced the distinction between intending the injury and intending death and used it as the governing framework. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra (Criminal Appeals 1078–1079 of 2005) described the progression from Section 299 to Section 300. Where an exception applies or murder is not made out, Section 304 Parts I and II apply according to intention or knowledge. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cr LJ 171, explained that the intended injury's sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature may be judged from the weapon, the part of the body or both. The Court applied these principles to the sharp fatal head injury and the medical evidence.

Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejects a mechanical rule that a single blow cannot amount to murder; the weapon, vital site, manner and circumstances govern the assessment. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, identifies contextual factors for inferring intention in a group clash and cautions against mechanically treating murder as an offence under Section 304, or the reverse. In Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, intention was inferred from the use of a crowbar, the selection of the skull as the site of assault and the fractures caused. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, reiterates the single-blow principle while discussing Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram. Those three authorities occur within the quoted discussion. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, likewise rejects a mechanical reduction because there was only one injury and quotes the Virsa Singh distinction through Vedanayagam. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, sets out the cumulative conditions of Exception 4: no premeditation, a sudden mutual fight with the deceased in the heat of passion, and no undue advantage or cruel or unusual manner. These authorities provided the framework for the Court's application of the law in affirming the trial result.

On common object, Dani Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203, explains that mere presence is insufficient. An unlawful object may form, be adopted, change or cease as members join, and individual knowledge may differ. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 18, explains that Section 149 may be charged without separate charges under Sections 143 or 147 when their necessary ingredients are included. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, requires the court to identify an unlawful common object and supporting evidence before applying Section 149. The Court adopted this framework and held that successive arrival did not exclude membership. State of Bihar v. Ishwar Chand Rai, (2008) 3 PLJR 60, a Patna High Court decision, was quoted on free fight. Its discussion reproduced the Supreme Court's definition in Gajanand v. State of U.P., AIR 1954 SC 695, of a pitched battle in which both sides set out to fight. It also discussed Dharman v. State of Punjab, AIR 1957 SC 324, concerning armed contending groups. The present Court considered those principles but found a common object on its facts.

On private defence, Banwar Singh v. State of M.P., (2008) 16 SCC 657, was quoted for its discussion of Onkarnath Singh v. State of U.P., (1975) 3 SCC 276, and State of M.P. v. Ramesh, (2005) 9 SCC 705. Those decisions treat unexplained injuries to an accused as relevant to credibility in the circumstances of the case and as potentially supporting private defence. They reject an automatic presumption of that defence. Ramesh also explains that defence of person or property is circumscribed by Sections 96–101 IPC. Defensive force extending to death requires reasonable grounds to fear death or grievous hurt. The Court acknowledged injuries to both sides and rejected the appeals on the assault evidence it accepted.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 299 and 300 IPC distinguish culpable homicide from murder. Clause Thirdly of Section 300, read with Section 302, governed the analysis of the intended injury and its sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Exception 4 to Section 300 and Section 304 Parts I and II were discussed in considering possible distinctions, but the convictions were not altered. Sections 141, 142 and 149 govern an unlawful common object, knowing membership and constructive liability; Section 148 concerns rioting while armed. Sections 323 and 324 provided the conviction categories for hurt and hurt by dangerous weapons. Sections 96–101 were discussed in the private-defence quotation, particularly the limits of the right and the conditions for force extending to death. Section 374 CrPC provided the appellate route. The acquittals under Sections 452, 294 and 506-B/Part II formed part of the procedural background.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the fatal head injuries and the proved manner of assault supported murder under Section 300/302, or called for a lesser offence in light of the altercation and injuries on both sides. (ii) Whether five or more persons acting with an unlawful common object could be held under Section 149 despite reaching the scene successively, or whether the encounter should be treated as a free fight requiring individual liability. (iii) Whether injuries to the accused, competing FIRs, allegedly interested witnesses and poor night lighting undermined the prosecution evidence or established private defence. (iv) Whether the convictions for the separate hurt offences in the cross-case should be disturbed. The earlier abatement of Jitendra's individual appeal was recorded, not redecided.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court set out the distinction between Sections 299 and 300 and Virsa Singh's test under Section 300 Thirdly. It also considered the authorities rejecting an automatic reduction because of a single blow and explaining Exception 4. Dr Gupta found Uday's death homicidal, resulting from head injury and its complications. Dr Sharma documented two sharp head injuries while Uday was unconscious. The postmortem evidence identified sharp and blunt injuries and described the injuries as sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. Ranveer attributed the axe injury to Vishwanath, and his evidence was supported by Jitendra, Ajmer and Omkar. The Court concluded that the fatal injuries were inflicted with the intention to commit murder. It affirmed the convictions of Bhan, Vedram, Devendra, Indraveer and Vishwanath under Section 302/149.

For Section 149, the Court stated the minimum group size, the unlawful common object and the awareness required of a member. It stressed the assembly's conduct rather than requiring a separate overt act from each member, and considered the distinction concerning a free fight. As assessed by the Court, the evidence showed armed participants inflicting sharp and blunt injuries in the connected incidents. The Court held that neither the absence of substantial prior enmity nor the participants' successive arrival provided a defence. Under Section 142, a person aware of the facts making an assembly unlawful may intentionally join it. The Court found that the acts were committed in furtherance of the common object and affirmed Section 149 liability in both cases. The trial court's individual Section 323/324 conviction categories and the Section 148 convictions also remained in force.

The medical record confirmed injuries on both sides, and the Court took their existence into account. It quoted authority requiring assessment of unexplained injuries to the accused in their context and a genuine need for defence, rather than an automatic presumption of private defence. It rejected the appellants' competing accounts, including the asserted free fight, alleged poor lighting and challenge to the witnesses as interested, because it accepted the injured eyewitness evidence and its medical support. The convictions for hurt by dangerous weapons and simple hurt in the cross-case were affirmed on the evidence of the corresponding assaults and injuries.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed the trial judgments and concurrent sentences. Jitendra Singh's appeal had already abated after his death. The bail bonds of appellants on bail were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender immediately to serve their remaining sentences. Appellants in custody were to be informed through the Jail Superintendent. The trial record was directed to be returned.

Rahul Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Bhan Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1025/2010 & 1030/2010, 25/03/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (661) Prev Next

Headnote :- Complaint cognizance / counterblast FIR / no mini trial - The accused challenged the Magistrate's order taking cognizance of alleged gunfire, assault and Arms Act offences, describing the private complaint as a counterblast to their earlier FIR. They described their own FIR but did not produce the complainant side's earlier FIR. The complaint alleged a separate incident after a visit to the police station. Neeharika Infrastructure v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, requires the allegations to be considered at face value and prohibits a mini trial of their reliability at the quashing stage. The other cited Supreme Court decisions reinforce that threshold. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, with R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal, explains that an informant's alleged mala fides are secondary when the complaint discloses an offence. Old enmity could motivate either a false accusation or an actual attack and had to be adjudicated after evidence. The High Court declined to interfere under Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS and dismissed the application. Paras 1–13.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rahul Singh Sikarwar and others challenged the Magistrate's order dated 3 September 2024 taking cognizance in Complaint Case 224/2023. The Additional Sessions Judge, Ambah, had affirmed it on 28 December 2024 in Criminal Revision 114/2019. The complaint alleged offences under IPC Sections 307, 323, 294, 506-B and 34 and Arms Act Sections 25 and 27. The applicants stated that they had lodged an FIR on 6 June 2023 against Dileep Tomar and others concerning abuse, stone throwing and assaults arising from old enmity. They described the complaint as retaliatory and false. Counsel conceded that the complainant side's FIR had not been placed before the High Court. As narrated in paragraph 3, the private complaint alleged a later episode after the complainant party returned from the police station. The applicants allegedly abused them, climbed onto a roof with a rifle and instigated Rahul to fire two shots, which missed. The police allegedly refused to register a second FIR, leading to the complaint proceedings.

The application invoked Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS after cognizance had been taken and the revision dismissed. The central question was whether the accused's allegations that the complaint was a false counterblast justified examining its merits before trial. The Court applied two related principles: it could not conduct a mini trial of allegations considered at face value, and motive or enmity had to be assessed separately.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, 2021:INSC:253 : (2021) 19 SCC 401, was quoted at paragraph 7. The quoted principles recognise the police's statutory role in investigation, make quashing exceptional and require caution by the High Court. The Court should not test the reliability or genuineness of allegations, examine their merits during investigation, or require an FIR to contain every detail as an encyclopaedia would. It nevertheless retains jurisdiction where the report or complaint, taken at face value, discloses no offence or another R.P. Kapur/Bhajan Lal ground is established. The present challenge concerned a Magistrate's complaint proceeding after cognizance, rather than an ongoing police investigation alone. The Court applied the requirement to consider the complaint's allegations at face value without trying their truth. The quoted 'rarest of rare' standard is expressly distinguished from that used in death-penalty sentencing.

Paragraph 8 lists XYZ v. State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha. The Court treated these decisions collectively. Paragraph 9 reiterates that the Court cannot conduct a mini trial to determine the truth of the allegations.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, 2008:INSC:278 : (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted at length at paragraph 10. The passage explains Section 482's purposes of securing justice and preventing abuse, the R.P. Kapur categories and Bhajan Lal's illustrative grounds for quashing. An informant's alleged mala fides do not alone defeat a prosecution where an offence is disclosed; the material collected and evidence at trial determine the result. The passage distinguishes the absence of legal evidence or a manifest legal bar from questions about the reliability of evidence that require adjudication. The references to Janata Dal, Raghubir Saran, Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma, Rupan Deol Bajaj, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Satvinder Kaur, Rajesh Bajaj, M. Devendrappa, Awadh Kishore Gupta and Saroj Kumar Sahoo occur within Renu Kumari's supporting discussion. At paragraph 11, the High Court applied the qualification concerning mala fides: old enmity may lead either to false implication or to commission of an offence, and its effect cannot be determined without a trial.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC and Section 528 BNSS were cited together as the route for invoking inherent powers. Those powers did not permit a full evidentiary appeal. The revision had already failed in the Sessions Court, and the High Court considered the current challenge within the limits governing quashing. IPC Sections 307, 323, 294, 506-B and 34 and Arms Act Sections 25 and 27 identify the offences of which the Magistrate took cognizance. The question was whether the disputed assertion that the complaint was a counterblast, together with denial of its allegations, justified quashing at the threshold. The Neeharika quotation mentions police powers under Chapter XIV, and the Renu Kumari quotation reproduces the Section 156(1)/155(2) categories. The operative proceeding concerned the private complaint; it was not a judicial direction to investigate the FIR.

4. Issues : (i) May the High Court, on a Section 482/528 attack on cognizance, choose between rival factual accounts of the FIR and a later complaint by deciding credibility or truth before trial?

(ii) Does the applicants' earlier FIR and assertion of retaliatory motive by themselves establish abuse of process where the complaint alleges a separate gunfire episode and cognizable offences?

(iii) How does the inability to examine the complainant-side FIR, which applicants did not put on record, affect the asserted counterblast premise, and what relief followed?

5. Ratio / Findings : For the threshold inquiry, the Court considered at face value the private complaint's allegations of rooftop rifle shots, assault and threats, leaving proof for trial. The accused's own FIR, their denial and their claim of retaliation did not permit a mini trial of the rival accounts. The complainant side's FIR had not even been produced. Neeharika Infrastructure and the other cited decisions require caution. They recognise exceptional quashing where uncontroverted allegations fail to disclose an offence, while prohibiting a determination of factual reliability at this stage. The Court found no ground to interfere with cognizance on the argument presented.

Renu Kumari provides the qualification concerning motive. Enmity may explain a false accusation, but it may equally provide a motive to commit the charged act. The Court therefore left the disputed prior relationship and occurrence to evidence before the trial court. The quoted Bhajan Lal categories include a manifestly malicious prosecution, as well as a failure to disclose an offence at face value or a clear legal bar. In this case, the bare allegation of hostility did not justify deciding the disputed facts before trial. The holding was confined to dismissing the attempt to end this complaint proceeding on disputed counterblast allegations.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS application. The Magistrate's cognizance order dated 3 September 2024, as affirmed in revision, remained undisturbed.

Rahul Singh Sikarwar and Ors. v. Dileep Singh, M.Cr.C. no. 5587/2025, 11/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (662) Prev Next

Headnote :- Police enquiry / Article 226 mandamus / alternative remedy - Raj Mathur sought an enquiry report within one month and a decision on his representation. The High Court framed the issue as the maintainability of a writ seeking FIR registration or police action. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, explains that ordinary police inaction is addressed by a complaint to the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. It recognises exceptional Article 226 intervention where investigation power is exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII is made out. Even then, the Court may insist on lawful procedure but cannot dictate how the police investigate. The local Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria/Reeta Bais permits refusal of mandamus where Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to Whirlpool's recognised exceptions. It distinguishes Lalita Kumari's police-registration duty from entitlement to a writ. The State cited Sakiri Vasu and Aleque Padamsee as further authorities on statutory remedies. The High Court dismissed the writ because an efficacious criminal complaint remedy was available, expressly preserving liberty to approach the competent court. Paras 1–6.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Raj Mathur filed Writ Petition 27427/2021 under Article 226. His quoted prayer sought directions to respondents 2 and 3 to conduct an enquiry within one month and submit its report to the High Court. He also sought a decision on his representation, Annexure P/3, and communication of the enquiry report. The State objected on the basis of the remedies before the Magistrate and the Supreme Court and local precedents. The Court dismissed the writ with liberty to file a criminal complaint.

2. Precedents — Considered : The State cited Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, at paragraph 2 in support of the statutory remedies available for police inaction.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, is directly quoted at paragraph 4. Its paragraph 41 recognises rare Article 226 intervention where investigation power is exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII is made out. Even then, courts may insist on compliance with lawful procedure but cannot dictate how the police investigate. Paragraph 42 states that the ordinary remedy for police failure to act lies under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC, citing Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre. That reproduced passage explains the Magistrate's options after examining a complaint. Where a prima facie case warrants further action, the Magistrate may direct investigation or take cognizance and issue process; where no offence is disclosed, the complaint may be dismissed under Section 203. The passage also refers to AIIMS Employees' Union. The High Court relied on Divine Retreat's limits in declining the writ.

The local Division Bench decision in W.A. 247/2016, described as Smt. Reeta Bais / Shweta Bhadauria, is quoted immediately thereafter. It states that mandamus enforcing Section 154 may be denied where the informant has not used Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 CrPC, unless the four exceptions recognised in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, apply. It distinguishes Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, which concerns the statutory police duty, from entitlement to a writ despite alternative remedies. The High Court applied the alternative-remedy principle and preserved liberty to file a complaint. The denial of a writ does not negate the duty to register cognizable information or exclude exceptional Article 226 jurisdiction.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was invoked for mandamus from the High Court. Section 154 CrPC imposes the registration duty discussed by the local Division Bench, and Section 154(3) provides recourse to superior police officers. Section 156(3) provides recourse to the Magistrate for investigation. Sections 190 and 200 permit a complaint before the competent Magistrate and its examination. The quoted Gangadhar explanation describes dismissal under Section 203 or, where warranted, investigation, cognizance and process. Chapter XII governs investigation. Exceptional writ intervention may insist on lawful process where investigation power is exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with that Chapter is made out, without dictating police methods. The prayer sought an enquiry report, whereas the Court framed the issue as FIR registration. The final order expressly preserved the criminal complaint remedy.

4. Issues : (i) Was direct Article 226 relief compelling police enquiry/response or FIR action warranted despite the Code's superior-police and Magistrate complaint avenues?

(ii) How do Divine Retreat Centre's clear mala fide/Chapter XII exception and Shweta Bhadauria's Whirlpool qualification limit the alternative-remedy principle?

(iii) What route remained open to the petitioner when the High Court declined the writ without investigating the complaint merits?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that the statutory remedy of a criminal complaint before the competent Magistrate was efficacious in this case. The quoted Divine Retreat Centre passages explain that ordinary police inaction is addressed through the Magistrate rather than writ control of investigative work. They preserve rare Article 226 intervention where investigation power is exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII is made out. Shweta Bhadauria identifies the associated alternatives under Sections 154(3) and 156(3), subject to the recognised exceptions to the alternative-remedy principle. The Court declined the requested police enquiry/FIR-related intervention and left the criminal complaint remedy open.

Lalita Kumari's registration duty, mentioned in the local quotation, does not automatically entitle every informant to a writ of mandamus when an FIR is not registered. Nor is Article 226 categorically unavailable: Divine Retreat preserves narrow intervention for mala fide exercise of investigation power and clear abuse and noncompliance with the statutory process. The request for an enquiry and the Court's formulation of the issue as FIR registration remain distinct in the record.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the writ petition with express liberty for Raj Mathur to file a criminal complaint before the competent court. The underlying allegation remained open for consideration through the statutory procedure, if invoked.

Raj Mathur v. State of M.P. and Ors., W.P. no. 27427/2021, 15/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (663) Prev Next

Headnote :- CIVIL share decree / demolition FIR / mala fides - The applicants relied on a 1999 sale deed and earlier civil proceedings to seek quashing of a 2020 FIR. The FIR alleged that they disconnected electricity, damaged an occupied house and threatened its resident. The civil appellate decree reproduced in the judgment recognised the transfer only of an undivided 1.95-acre share and permitted possession after partition. No partition was shown. A purchaser of an undivided share steps into the seller's shoes and cannot rely on civil title to take forcible possession of a specific parcel or demolish the complainant's house. The Court therefore rejected the contention that a civil dispute had merely been given a criminal form. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, with R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal, explains that an informant's alleged mala fides are secondary when the report discloses a cognizable offence and do not by themselves warrant quashing at the threshold. The applicants invoked Ahmad Ali Quraishi and Bhajan Lal, but the Court rejected their premise because of the decree's limited effect. It dismissed the Section 482 application; the demolition and guilt remained matters to be proved. Paras 1–18.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Raja Pandey and others applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime 621/2020, registered at Churhat, Sidhi, on 12 September 2020. Complainant Balmik Vishwakarma alleged that, on 26 June 2020 while he was bathing at home, the applicants disconnected electricity, abused him and demanded that he vacate. He alleged that they demolished the roof, damaged household articles with sticks and threatened to kill him if he remained. The applicants relied on a sale deed dated 24 May 1999 concerning khasra 334 and a kachcha house, and on a civil title suit filed by the complainant and others. The suit was dismissed at first instance on 18 November 2011. Civil Appeal RCA 103-A/2014 was partially allowed on 23 August 2016. Its operative decree recognised the undivided interests of the co-sharers. It made the sale binding on the parties only to the extent of the seller's undivided 1.95-acre share and conditioned the purchaser's possession on partition. The applicants did not claim to have initiated partition proceedings after the decree.

The applicants argued that the FIR improperly converted an already resolved civil dispute into a criminal case and had been lodged maliciously. The State and complainant opposed the application. The High Court considered these as two questions, examined the actual decree instead of accepting the claim of an unrestricted right of ownership, and refused to quash the FIR.

2. Precedents — Considered : At paragraph 4, the applicants invoked Ahmad Ali Quraishi v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2020:INSC:112 : (2020) 13 SCC 435, against converting a civil dispute into a criminal case. They also invoked Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, on the ground of ulterior motive.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, 2008:INSC:278 : (2008) 12 SCC 346, is reproduced extensively at paragraph 12. It explains Section 482's purposes of preventing abuse and securing justice, and R.P. Kapur's categories of a legal bar, failure to disclose an offence at face value and absence of legal evidence. It distinguishes a case with no legal evidence from one in which the reliability of evidence requires assessment by the trial court. The passage quotes Bhajan Lal's seven illustrative grounds for quashing, including manifest mala fides, while cautioning against stifling a legitimate prosecution. It states that the informant's motive becomes secondary where an offence is disclosed, and that the material collected and evidence at trial determine the result. The High Court applied that principle at paragraph 13 and related it to the limited civil decree at paragraphs 14–15.

3. Statutes considered : The applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR and consequential proceedings. The alleged disconnection of electricity, abuse, destruction and threats formed the criminal allegations. The civil decree concerned undivided title and possession after partition; it did not determine criminal guilt. Sections 156(1) and 155(2), together with examples of a statutory bar, appear within the quoted Bhajan Lal categories. The civil suit and appeal were examined to test the applicants' asserted right to the specific occupied land.

4. Issues : (i) Did a sale deed and a partially allowed civil title appeal establish an immediate right to occupy a particular house site when the transfer covered only an undivided 1.95-acre share and the decree conditioned possession on partition?

(ii) Could alleged unilateral demolition, damage, abusive demands to vacate and threats be treated as a merely civil claim so that the FIR should be quashed?

(iii) Did the accusation of ulterior motive, without a proved right to the precise parcel or another exceptional quashing ground, warrant Section 482 intervention?

5. Ratio / Findings : The civil appellate decree did not give the applicants possession of the particular house. It made the old sale binding only to the extent of an undivided share and stated that the purchaser could obtain possession after partition. A co-sharer may transfer an undivided interest, but that transfer does not entitle the purchaser to seize a specific part before partition. No partition proceeding was shown. The Court therefore rejected the contention that the FIR alleging forcible roof demolition and intimidation merely gave a civil dispute a criminal form. The criminal issue concerned the alleged conduct, rather than simply the validity of the 1999 conveyance.

Renu Kumari's principle also answered the allegation of malice. Where the report discloses cognizable destructive and threatening conduct, alleged ill will does not by itself justify ending the criminal proceedings. The applicants' civil decree did not establish the claimed entitlement to the particular parcel. The Court rejected their contention that the FIR resulted from ulterior motive. Motive is not invariably irrelevant: the quoted Bhajan Lal categories include manifest malicious abuse. In this case, reliance on civil litigation and the sale of an undivided share did not establish that ground.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application and refused to quash FIR Crime 621/2020 and consequential proceedings. The criminal investigation/proceedings were left to continue in the ordinary course.

Raja Pandey and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 44847/2020, 20/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (664) Prev Next

Headnote :- Preventive proceedings / crop seizure / judicial order - The Court held that, once Section 145 CrPC proceedings had been registered and notice issued, the SDM could not direct seizure or appoint a receiver through an ex parte administrative endorsement or letters outside the judicial order sheets. An urgent application required a judicial order, and an order under Section 146 required an opportunity for the opposite party to present its case. In the absence of such an order, the Court quashed the crop seizure and administrative directions and directed return of the harvested crop under the SDM's supervision.

Section 145 / parallel civil litigation / possession - Ram Sumer Puri Mahant v. State of U.P., (1985) 1 SCC 427, was applied to the impropriety of parallel preventive proceedings when a civil court considering possession of the same property can grant protective interim relief and its adjudication binds the Magistrate. Mahar Jahan v. State of Delhi, (2004) 13 SCC 421, reinforced that the Section 145 result remains subject to the civil court's determination and that the civil court may grant interim protection. Here, the earlier civil adjudications, pending second appeal and status-quo direction made the fresh, unfinished Section 145 proceeding an improper duplication. The Court quashed it.

Civil seisin / non-joinder / protective relief - Mahant Ram Saran Dass v. Harish Mohan, (2001) 10 SCC 758, was considered and applied with the authorities on parallel proceedings. On its facts, the Section 145 applicant's absence from the pending civil suit did not justify a second forum: the civil court was already seized of the property, had imposed interim restraints and could grant appropriate relief. The respondents' contention that some persons were not parties did not justify the fresh proceeding here, given the available civil remedies.

Earlier final preventive order / later civil suit / qualification - Amresh Tiwari v. Lalta Prasad Dubey, (2000) 4 SCC 440, was applied to explain the limits of the Ram Sumer principle. Jhummamal concerned a concluded Section 145 order followed by a civil suit; the later suit did not automatically nullify that order. Where civil litigation and a protective order precede an undecided Section 145 proceeding, parallel proceedings should not continue if the civil court can determine title or possession of the same property and grant interim protection. Mere pendency of a civil suit is not a categorical bar in every circumstance. The Court quashed the fresh proceeding and imposed Rs. 20,000 costs on respondents 1–5 after finding that it had been initiated arbitrarily and with mala fide intention on this record.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajabeti Sakhwar and others applied under Section 482 CrPC concerning Case No. 121/145x21 before the SDM, Mehgaon, Bhind, involving rival claims to possession of survey lands at Gormi. The police had filed Istgasa No. 01/21, apprehending a breach of the peace because of the competing claims, and had seized 26 bags of harvested mustard and a green trolley. The applicants asserted that they had harvested the crop and that it had been taken without a judicial custody order. The private respondents relied on occupancy-tenancy entries and disputed the applicants' title and claim to the crop.

Respondents 1–5 had filed a civil suit for declaration, injunction and invalidation of a 1992 sale deed. The suit was dismissed on 22 December 2006, and their first appeal was dismissed on 6 December 2010. Their Second Appeal No. 158/2011 remained pending, with a status-quo order dated 16 January 2013 and a later refusal to modify it. The parties disputed the effect of that stay, later registration and revenue records. The respondents also relied on another civil suit in which interim injunction had been refused, an appeal that was not pressed, and criminal complaints or FIRs concerning the land. Earlier Section 145 proceedings had been dropped on 23 May 2014 in light of the civil decisions. One FIR had been quashed, while the challenge to a different FIR had failed.

The fresh SDM order sheets recorded notice on 18 March 2021, the applicants' reply and objection on 22 March, a direction for a possession report, adjournments and later abeyance. They contained no interim judicial order for seizure, appointment of a receiver or disposal of the crop. An endorsement on the private respondents' application dated 20 March nevertheless directed police seizure. The SDM also sent administrative directions about custody and recovery of mustard, including a letter dated 24 March permitting entry into premises and use of police force if required. Respondents 1–5 sought dismissal of the Section 482 application, relying on their civil and revenue position and asserting that the absence of some persons from the appeal defeated the applicants' challenge.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ram Sumer Puri Mahant v. State of U.P., (1985) 1 SCC 427, was quoted and relied upon. Possession of the same property had been litigated and adjudicated in a civil suit, with an appeal pending. The Supreme Court found little justification for initiating parallel Section 145 proceedings and attachment because the civil decree bound the criminal forum and injunction or receivership could be sought in the civil appeal. The High Court applied that principle to the present fresh proceeding, subject to the qualifications concerning civil litigation discussed below.

Mahar Jahan v. State of Delhi, (2004) 13 SCC 421, was quoted for the principle that a Section 145 result remains subject to the civil court's decision where possession of, or entitlement to, the same property is before it. Criminal proceedings had continued for a decade in that case. The Supreme Court preferred adjudication by the civil court with suitable interim arrangements there. The High Court treated this authority as reinforcing the availability of protection through the pending civil proceedings here.

Mahant Ram Saran Dass v. Harish Mohan, (2001) 10 SCC 758, was quoted concerning a civil suit under Section 92 CPC in which interim injunction and restrictions were already in force. The Supreme Court set aside the Magistrate's Section 145 proceedings and receiver order because relief could be sought from the civil court. It expressly stated that the preventive applicant's absence as a defendant in the civil suit did not alter the conclusion in those circumstances. The High Court relied on this authority with the others, despite the respondents' contention that some persons were not parties to the second appeal.

Amresh Tiwari v. Lalta Prasad Dubey, (2000) 4 SCC 440, was quoted and applied to explain the limits of the principle. It states that Ram Sumer addresses duplicative litigation where the civil court can protect possession and does not require a prior civil finding. It distinguishes Jhummamal v. State of M.P., where a civil suit filed after a concluded Section 145 order did not automatically undo that order. In Amresh Tiwari, the civil suit and status-quo order preceded an unfinished Section 145 proceeding. The quoted judgment expressly rejects a universal rule that a civil suit always excludes Section 145. The suit must concern possession or title of the same property, and protective relief must be available from the civil court. The High Court applied this qualified principle. Jhummamal was considered through Amresh Tiwari's explanation. The respondents' counsel cited Raghunath Singh v. Pragobai, ILR (2012) MP 2285; Mahant Ramratandas v. Mahant Narayandas, 1988 (II) MPWN 45 SN; and Rameshchandra v. Jankilal, 1987 (II) MPWN 183 SN, for the proposition that a civil suit does not invariably end Section 145 proceedings.

3. Statutes considered : Section 145 CrPC governed the preventive proceeding based on an asserted likelihood of breach of the peace over possession.

The Court considered whether it could continue while civil title and possession of the same property were before the civil courts. Section 146 CrPC concerned interim attachment or receivership. The Court required an opportunity for the other side and a judicial order in the recorded proceeding, rather than administrative crop-seizure directions. Section 482 CrPC supplied the invoked jurisdiction to quash the pending proceeding and unlawful ancillary acts. Order 39 Rules 1 and 2 CPC arose in the rival civil litigation, while Order 39 Rule 2-A was identified as a possible civil enforcement remedy. IPC provisions and the separate FIRs formed procedural background only.

4. Issues : (1) Could the SDM, after registering Section 145 proceedings and issuing notice, direct seizure or custody of the harvested crop by endorsement or administrative letter, without an order on the judicial record and an opportunity contemplated for Section 146 action? (2) Should a newly initiated, unfinished Section 145 proceeding over the same land continue while the parties' civil litigation concerning title and possession remained pending in second appeal with a status-quo order and accessible protective relief? (3) Did the respondents' non-party contention or the principle that a civil suit does not invariably bar Section 145 alter that conclusion on this sequence of proceedings? (4) What relief followed from the unlawful seizure and the Court's finding that the fresh process was arbitrary and mala fide?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the SDM record supplied after argument. It recorded notice, reply and adjournments, but contained no judicial order authorising a receiver, attachment or seizure of the crop. The endorsement dated 20 March on one party's application and the letters directing custody or police recovery were administrative actions taken without hearing the applicants. State counsel could not justify them. Once Section 145 proceedings had begun, an urgent application had to be taken up in those proceedings and decided by an order recorded in the order sheets. A Section 146 order required an opportunity for the opposite party to present its case. By using administrative directions, the SDM exceeded the jurisdiction being exercised. The Court refused to approve the letters and set aside the seizure directions and police seizure memo.

As to continuing Section 145 proceedings, the earlier civil suit and first appeal had been decided, the second appeal remained pending, a civil status-quo order existed, and the respondents could seek interim or enforcement relief in that forum. The earlier Section 145 proceeding had itself been dropped because of the civil proceedings. Ram Sumer Puri Mahant and Mahar Jahan establish the impropriety of duplicate possession proceedings, subordinate to the civil decision, where the civil court can decide and protect the same property. Mahant Ram Saran Dass shows that the preventive applicant's absence from the civil suit did not justify separate Magistrate proceedings in that case's circumstances. Amresh Tiwari supplies the qualification: later civil litigation does not by itself annul a concluded Section 145 order, and a civil suit is not invariably a bar. Here, the civil proceedings and protective order preceded the fresh, undecided preventive case. Applying those authorities, the Court found no basis to multiply proceedings or use Section 145 and informal police action to take the crop.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application. It quashed the police seizure memo dated 18 March 2021, Case No. 121/145x21 under Section 145 and the SDM's administrative proceedings, including the impugned March crop directions. The police and SDM were directed to return to the applicants all seized mustard or crop given to a receiver. The SDM was to ensure return in proper condition within five days and personally bear the cost if any quantity was missing or the quality had diminished. He was directed to report compliance to the Principal Registrar by 14 July 2021. Respondents 1–5 were ordered to deposit Rs. 20,000 costs within seven days. In default, the Principal Registrar was directed to initiate lawful recovery of the costs and register contempt proceedings.

Rajabeti Sakhwar and Ors. v. Darshanlal Sakhwar and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 18242/2021, 07/07/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (665) Prev Next

Headnote :- Anticipatory bail / defence audio / reliability - The unverified pen-drive conversation did not support the mother-in-law's allegation that the deceased's family had demanded money to settle the case. The purported speaker had not been authenticated, doctoring had not been excluded, the recording was untested, and its content did not establish the alleged demand. The Court declined to rely on it at the Section 438 CrPC stage.

Dowry cruelty / in-law implication / pre-arrest bail - Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was considered for the principle that allegations of taunts or torture by in-laws cannot simply be regarded as disclosing no case against them so as to justify quashing proceedings. In refusing anticipatory bail here, the Court considered the residence documents predating marriage and an unproved certificate alongside material placing the applicant at the matrimonial home and the deceased's specific lifetime complaint. It also noted that other relatives had not been implicated. At this interim stage, the Court did not accept the defences of separate residence and indiscriminate implication. It considered the seriousness of a death within four years of marriage, while preserving the trial court's independent assessment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajani Awasthy filed her second application for anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC. Her earlier application, M.Cr.C. No. 19432/2021, had been dismissed for non-prosecution on 4 May 2021. She apprehended arrest in Crime No. 31/2021 at Khajuraho police station, Chhatarpur, for alleged offences under IPC Sections 498A, 304B and 34 and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. She was Parvati's mother-in-law. According to the prosecution, Parvati married her son Niranjan on 28 April 2017 and died by hanging on 20 January 2021 after harassment by both over a demand of Rs. 5 lakh.

The applicant maintained that she lived with her husband at Dhawad, separately from Parvati and Niranjan at Khajuraho. She produced a duplicate ration card, a Samagra ID and a Gram Panchayat certificate. She stated that she had tested positive for Covid and alleged false implication after Parvati's family supposedly demanded Rs. 10 lakh. A pen drive purportedly contained a call between Parvati's brother Rammu and the applicant's other son, Rajesh. Counsel relied on general bail and liberty authorities and argued that separate residence and the alleged settlement demand justified protection. The State disputed separate residence, relying on the applicant's husband's account that she opened the room where Parvati was found. It also relied on Parvati's written police complaint dated 12 September 2020, which named the applicant and Niranjan and alleged dowry harassment and beating.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court invoked Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, in its reasoning. The Court stated that allegations that a father-in-law and mother-in-law tortured a daughter-in-law through taunts could not be regarded as disclosing no case against them so as to justify quashing the proceedings. The High Court relied on that principle while rejecting the defence of indiscriminate implication in this anticipatory-bail application. It also relied on Parvati's lifetime written complaint specifically naming the applicant and Niranjan.

Dolatram v. State of Haryana, (1995) 1 SCC 349, Siddharam Satlingappa Mhetre v. State of Maharashtra, (2011) 1 SCC 694, and Arnab Manorajan Goswami v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 2 SCC 427, appeared in the applicant's submissions concerning bail and liberty.

3. Statutes considered : Section 438 CrPC governed the application for pre-arrest protection. At this interim stage, the Court considered the nature and gravity of the accusations and the material relied on by both sides. IPC Sections 498A, 304B and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4 identified the alleged cruelty, dowry-death and dowry-demand prosecution. These CrPC and IPC provisions governed the 2021 proceeding.

4. Issues : (1) Did the applicant's older residence documents and Panchayat certificate sufficiently establish that she lived separately from Parvati, in the face of the account of her presence at the Khajuraho home and the deceased's lifetime complaint? (2) Could the unverified audio recording support an inference that Parvati's family had demanded payment to compromise and that the applicant was falsely implicated? (3) Given the specific accusations, the cited Supreme Court threshold principle and the gravity of a death within four years of marriage, should the applicant receive anticipatory bail, and what limits should be placed on the order's observations?

5. Ratio / Findings : The duplicate ration card was issued in 2014 and the Samagra ID in 2013, both before Parvati's marriage in 2017. They did not establish that the applicant lived separately at the relevant time. The Panchayat certificate could not be relied on unless proved at trial. The applicant's husband's information to the police placed her at the Khajuraho house when Parvati was found, contradicting the categorical claim of separate residence. For the interim assessment, the Court also relied on Parvati's written complaint of September 2020, which specifically named the applicant and Niranjan and alleged beatings and dowry demands.

The Court therefore did not accept separate residence on the material presented.

The pen-drive conversation had not been shown to contain Parvati's brother's voice or to be free from doctoring, and it had not been tested in a laboratory. The Court also found that its content did not establish the alleged Rs. 10 lakh demand for a compromise. It was therefore unsafe to rely on it at this stage to infer false implication. The applicant's other children and husband had not been implicated, which undermined her claim that the entire family had been indiscriminately implicated. In considering Taramani Parakh's principle concerning substantive allegations of in-law cruelty, the Court attached significance to the specific lifetime complaint and the other material. It separately considered the nature and gravity of the dowry-death accusation and the death within four years of marriage. It found no fit case for anticipatory bail.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the second application for anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC.

Rajani Awasthy v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 27025/2021, 16/06/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (666) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR quashing / personal mala fides / necessary parties - Allegations that police officers engineered a case or coerced a compromise could not be examined without joining those officers as parties. State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222, requires a person accused of mala fides to be joined by name and given an opportunity to answer. Federation of Railway Officers Association v. Union of India, AIR 2003 SC 1344, requires clear rather than vague allegations and joinder of the person concerned. J.N. Banavalikar v. Municipal Corporation of Delhi, AIR 1996 SC 326, and A.I.S.B. Officers Federation v. Union of India, JT 1996 (8) SC 550, apply the same requirement to allegations of malice in fact. Om Prakash Chautala v. Kanwar Bhan, (2014) 5 SCC 417, reinforces the prohibition against adverse remarks or consequences without hearing the person affected. Since the SHO and other personnel had not been joined, the alleged detention of the applicant's daughter was left unexamined; it was not found false.

Section 482 / motive / facial cognizable offence - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was applied for the principle that an informant's alleged mala fides are secondary where the FIR, taken at face value, discloses a cognizable offence. Established abuse may nevertheless fall within the categories in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, subject to cautious exercise of the power. Enmity may explain false implication or provide a motive to commit an offence. The earlier case and Helpline chronology did not by themselves negate the later FIR's allegations of assault, threats and caste abuse. Their truth remained a matter for evidence.

Quashing standards / face-value review / no mini-trial - Renu Kumari's account of Bhajan Lal and R.P. Kapur permits intervention for a legal bar, absence of an offence on accepted allegations, absence of a cognizable case, manifest improbability or sufficiently apparent malicious proceedings. It cautions against weighing disputed proof. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. 709/2021, were considered for the limits on a roving inquiry or minute assessment before trial. Kunwar Singh also states that an FIR need not be an encyclopedia. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, confirms that quashing remains available if the allegations accepted in full disclose no offence. The Court found that this FIR disclosed offences at the threshold and refused to terminate the prosecution at that stage.

Quashing / defence documents / narrow exception - Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was considered for the ordinary rule against assessing the accused's defence or testing the veracity of disputed documents in Section 482 proceedings. In an appropriate case, a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute may be considered. The Court dismissed the petition while expressly leaving the evidence and guilt to the trial court.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajaram Namdeo and another applicant sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 97/2024 at Devendra Nagar police station, Panna, and its investigation. The prayer described the offences as IPC Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 and SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act Sections 3(1)(da), 3(1)(gha) and 3(2)

(va). According to the applicants, Rajaram's daughter Raksha alias Rakhi had earlier complained of defamation by named persons. On 28 November 2022, the JMFC directed registration under Section 156(3) CrPC, leading to Crime No. 450/2022 under IPC Sections 469, 471 and 34. The applicants alleged that those persons and the police then pressured her family to compromise. A CM Helpline complaint made at 3:11 p.m. on 19 February 2024 stated that the SHO and four officers had forcibly taken Rakhi to the station to procure a compromise. It sought her release without signatures being obtained. These assertions were the applicants' account.

At 7:21 p.m. that day, a later FIR was registered on Kunwar Bahadur Choudhary's complaint about an incident at approximately 11 a.m. He alleged that applicant Rampyare and his brother-in-law Rajaram abused him for supporting Munnilal. Rajaram allegedly struck him with his fists and threw him down, while Rampyare kicked his abdomen. The two allegedly humiliated him by referring to his caste and made a death threat. He named two persons who intervened. The applicants described the timing and background as police-instigated retaliation and relied on Bhajan Lal to seek quashing. The Court heard their counsel and later recorded the State's submission that a charge sheet had already been filed. It considered the allegations within the limited scope of Section 482.

2. Precedents — Considered : On joinder and natural justice, State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222, was quoted for the requirement to join by name a person accused of bias or mala fides and afford an opportunity to answer before an inquiry. Federation of Railway Officers Association v. Union of India, AIR 2003 SC 1344, was quoted for clear, specific allegations rather than vague assertions and for joining the allegedly involved Minister. J.N. Banavalikar v. Municipal Corporation of Delhi, AIR 1996 SC 326, declined allegations of malice in fact where the allegedly favoured person and the alleged decision-maker were absent. A.I.S.B. Officers Federation v. Union of India, JT 1996 (8) SC 550, was quoted to the same effect where the directors and chairman accused of mala fides were not respondents. Om Prakash Chautala v. Kanwar Bhan, (2014) 5 SCC 417, was quoted at length. It applies P.P. Sharma and explains that serious adverse judicial remarks and consequences against a non-party violate the opportunity to be heard. The High Court applied these authorities to the SHO and officers who had not been joined, and declined to inquire into the alleged taking of Rakhi.

On malice and Section 482, Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was extensively quoted and relied upon. It describes Section 482 as preserving inherent power to give effect to Code orders, prevent abuse and secure justice, to be exercised cautiously rather than as an appeal or revision. Drawing on R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, the passage identifies a legal bar, absence of an offence on accepted facts and clear absence of legal evidence. It distinguishes absence of evidence from assessment of disputed evidence. It reproduces the illustrative categories in Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335: no prima facie offence; no cognizable disclosure justifying police investigation without the required Magistrate's order; uncontroverted material disclosing no offence; a non-cognizable allegation without the necessary order; inherent absurdity; an express legal bar or a specific efficacious remedy; and manifestly mala fide prosecution for private vengeance. These categories do not permit a routine mini trial. Where an offence is disclosed, the informant's alleged mala fides alone are secondary to investigation and proof. The High Court applied that principle to the retaliation account and the FIR's allegations taken at face value. Although the applicants invoked Bhajan Lal, the Court considered it within this qualified framework and did not infer malice merely from the sequence of filing.

XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted against a roving inquiry into disputed allegations and an allegedly coerced settlement before investigation was complete. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, warns against premature assessment before investigation is complete. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, quotes Bhajan Lal's requirement of sparing exercise of the power and prohibits testing the FIR's genuineness as a court deciding facts. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, preserves the power to prevent abusive prosecution and intervene in legal-bar or no-offence cases, while rejecting early closure through assessment of evidentiary reliability. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, disapproves minute findings on disputed facts and the defence in a quashing petition. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. No. 709/2021, decided on 30 June 2021, likewise prohibits scrutiny as at trial and states that an FIR need not be an encyclopedia. The High Court set out these authorities together as limits on detailed evidentiary assessment, while preserving the inquiry into allegations taken at face value.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was quoted for the ordinary rule against assessing the defence or testing document veracity at the quashing stage. In an appropriate case, however, a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute may be considered. The passage cites Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. for that exception. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, was quoted for quashing where the FIR allegations, accepted in full, or uncontroverted supporting material disclose no offence. Paragraph 27 states that a similar view was taken in Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682.

3. Statutes considered : The applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to quash the later FIR and investigation. The Court applied the provision's limited review of allegations at face value to prevent abuse, rather than trying disputed facts. Section 156(3) CrPC concerned the earlier JMFC order and the origin of Crime No. 450/2022; the Court did not determine the validity of that investigation. The later FIR alleged IPC Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 and SC/ST Act Sections 3(1)(da), 3(1)(gha) and 3(2)(va), as described in the prayer.

4. Issues : (1) Could the Court examine accusations that particular police personnel had coerced Rakhi and engineered the new FIR when none of those officers was a respondent? (2) Did the earlier FIR, alleged compromise pressure, Helpline complaint and timing make the later FIR malicious enough for quashing despite facial allegations of assault, threats and caste-based humiliation? (3) Under Section 482, was the FIR facially incapable of disclosing an offence or subject to a legal bar, or would accepting the applicants' account require a premature inquiry into contested investigation and defence evidence? (4) Did any narrow exception for undisputed or public defence documents change that threshold assessment? These questions concerned continuation of criminal process.

5. Ratio / Findings : The allegations against the SHO and other officers could not be examined in their absence. Under P.P. Sharma and the associated natural-justice authorities, an identified person accused of personal malice must be joined and heard before adverse findings are made; vague allegations are insufficient. Om Prakash Chautala also cautions against remarks with reputational or practical consequences for non-parties. Since the applicants had joined none of the officers accused, the Court expressly declined to assess whether Rakhi had been taken to the station as alleged.

The Court stated that enmity may provide a motive either for false implication or for commission of an offence. Under Renu Kumari, the informant's alleged mala fides are secondary if the FIR discloses a cognizable offence, while the carefully limited abuse categories remain available. The daughter's earlier police case and the sequence of the Helpline complaint and later FIR did not displace Kunwar Bahadur's allegations without resolving disputed facts. Those allegations were that the applicants abused and assaulted him, humiliated him by reference to caste and threatened him in the presence of witnesses.

The Supreme Court authorities required consideration of the allegations at face value for the legal inquiry, without deciding whether the complainant or defence would be believed at trial. The quoted Bhajan Lal and R.P. Kapur categories preserve intervention where no offence is disclosed, a legal bar exists or abuse is established. M. Srikanth reaffirms quashing where even accepted allegations disclose no offence. XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Gourishetty Mahesh, Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh warn against a roving inquiry or minute assessment of disputed material before trial; Kunwar Singh also states that an FIR need not be an encyclopedia. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui recognises the limited exception for public documents or documents whose veracity is undisputed. The Court found that the later FIR's allegations, taken at face value, could disclose offences and refused to end the case at that stage. The State submitted that a charge sheet had been filed. The Court maintained its limited review and directed the trial court to decide on its own evidence, unaffected by these threshold observations.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application to quash Crime No. 97/2024 and the related proceedings. The State reported that a charge sheet had been filed. The trial court was directed to decide strictly on the evidence placed before it, without being influenced or prejudiced by the High Court's limited quashing-stage findings.

Rajaram Namdeo and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 22656/2024, 04/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (667) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 / recruitment impersonation / face-value review - CBI v. K.M. Sharan, (2008) 4 SCC 471, was quoted and applied on the cautious exercise of inherent jurisdiction. Where the FIR's allegations, accepted at face value, disclose an offence, investigation normally proceeds. R.P. Kapur and State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal permit intervention in recognised cases involving no offence, a legal bar or abuse, but the High Court cannot assess disputed defence evidence as a trial court would. K.M. Sharan's discussion of State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha distinguishes absence of a cognizable offence from disclosure of an offence requiring investigation. Here, the applicant argued that his agricultural occupation made him incapable of solving an electrician recruitment examination. That assertion could not be resolved under Section 482 against the recorded discrepancies in photograph, ID and retina between the examination taker and the candidate at verification. The request to quash the FIR failed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajat Kumar Singh applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 129/2021 at Morwa police station, Singrauli, for alleged offences under IPC Sections 419, 420, 120-B, 467, 468, 471 and 34. According to the prosecution case stated in the order, he had appeared as a proxy or 'solver' in another person's place in Northern Coalfields Limited's written recruitment examination for an electrician post. Counsel argued that Rajat was an agriculturist with no knowledge of electricity and therefore could not plausibly have appeared as such a proxy.

The judgment records that the candidate for whom Rajat was alleged to have appeared passed the written examination. At interview and document verification, the authorities found that the examination taker's photograph, identity proof and eye-retina did not match those of the person presenting as the candidate. The High Court heard the applicant and considered whether his factual defence justified quashing the FIR at the threshold.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted Central Bureau of Investigation v. K.M. Sharan, (2008) 4 SCC 471, at length and applied its Section 482 principles to Rajat's assertion. K.M. Sharan describes inherent jurisdiction as broad but exceptional, preserving the power to give effect to Code orders, prevent abuse and secure justice without stifling a legitimate prosecution. Its discussion of Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal, (2007) 12 SCC 1, states those three functions and cautions against exercising the power on incomplete or hazy facts. Its discussion of R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, identifies an apparent legal bar, allegations disclosing no offence even if accepted, or an evident lack of legal evidence as grounds for possible intervention. These qualified principles did not permit a decision on a disputed factual defence at this stage.

K.M. Sharan quoted State of Bihar v. J.A.C. Saldanha, (1980) 1 SCC 554, against ending an unfinished investigation on findings drawn from affidavits about seriously disputed facts. It discussed the separate concurring and main opinions in State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha, (1982) 1 SCC 561. Where the information discloses no cognizable offence, investigation may be stopped; where an offence is disclosed, investigation ordinarily continues to collect proof. The discussion protects personal liberty against baseless investigation while recognising society's interest in investigating alleged crime. K.M. Sharan also cited Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia v. Sambhajirao Chandrojirao Angre, (1988) 1 SCC 692, for the prima facie test of uncontroverted allegations and consideration of special features showing an oblique prosecution. State of Bihar v. Murad Ali Khan, (1988) 4 SCC 655, cautions against predicting at the quashing stage whether complaint allegations will be proved.

State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, was reproduced within K.M. Sharan for illustrative, non-exhaustive categories under Article 226 or Section 482: no prima facie offence on accepted allegations; no cognizable disclosure without the necessary Magistrate's order; uncontroverted material disclosing no offence; investigation of a non-cognizable matter without authorisation; inherently absurd allegations; an express legal bar or a specified efficacious remedy; and manifest malicious prosecution for private vengeance. In K.M. Sharan itself, the no-offence ground failed in light of allegations of conspiracy and false evidence, because truth and reliability could not be resolved before trial. The High Court applied that caution in declining to decide whether Rajat's occupation disproved his alleged role as a proxy.

The K.M. Sharan passage also contains Janata Dal v. H.S. Chowdhary, (1992) 4 SCC 305, and CBI v. Ravi Shankar Srivastava, (2006) 7 SCC 188, on caution and sound principles in exercising wide inherent power. State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy, (1977) 2 SCC 699, and Zandu Pharmaceutical Works v. Mohd. Sharaful Haque, (2005) 1 SCC 122, address prevention of genuine abuse and quashing where accepted allegations disclose no offence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the request for quashing, with its three recognised purposes and cautious review at the threshold. The FIR listed IPC Sections 419 (personation cheating), 420, 120-B, 467, 468, 471 and 34 in relation to alleged recruitment impersonation. The Court did not determine whether Rajat had actually taken the examination. The distinction between disclosure and absence of a cognizable offence, in the quoted Supreme Court authorities, concerned whether criminal investigation could proceed. The 2023 proceeding was considered under CrPC and IPC.

4. Issues : (1) On a Section 482 petition to quash this recruitment-examination FIR, could the High Court accept the applicant's assertion of an agricultural occupation and lack of electrician knowledge as proof that he could not be the alleged proxy? (2) Did the stated identity and biometric discrepancies, read with the proxy accusation at face value, leave a case fit for investigation and evidentiary assessment rather than establish a no-offence or legal-bar category?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court stated that Section 482 does not permit a roving inquiry or assessment of disputed evidence. Quashing may be justified where the allegations, accepted in full, make out no offence, subject to cautious exercise of inherent power. Through K.M. Sharan, it explained that the power remains available in genuine cases involving a legal bar, absence of an offence or abuse. Where an alleged offence is disclosed at the threshold, investigation should proceed and factual reliability must be tested in the proper forum.

On the stated facts, a candidate passed the written examination, but the examination taker's photograph, ID and eye-retina differed from those of the person appearing at interview and verification. The allegation that Rajat appeared as a solver was not displaced merely by his assertion that he farmed and lacked electrical expertise. Deciding his competence, identity or the evidentiary weight of the discrepancies would require the factual inquiry unavailable at this stage. The Court found no ground to interfere with the FIR. This was a threshold decision, leaving guilt undecided.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC and refused to quash Crime No. 129/2021.

Rajat Kumar Singh v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 12341/2023, 06/04/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (668) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation / arrest discretion / limits of mandamus - D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was applied to hold that the High Court should not direct arrests or predetermine the filing of a charge sheet after registration of an FIR. Its quotation of M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explains that arrest under Section 41 CrPC is a police discretion to be exercised cautiously, rather than an automatic consequence of an allegation of a cognizable offence. D. Venkatasubramaniam also recognises that investigation may lead to a prosecution report or closure. Its discussion of Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, cautions against coercive judicial directions affecting persons who are not before the court without hearing them. The Court declined to supervise the manner or predetermine the outcome of the investigation under IPC Sections 420/34.

Investigation / Section 173(1) / no unnecessary delay - The refusal to direct arrest did not permit investigation to remain pending indefinitely. Section 173(1) CrPC required completion without unnecessary delay and a lawful final report, whether a charge sheet or closure report, according to the material. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law. The petitioner could raise a grievance with the Superintendent of Police.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajeev Jain filed a writ petition under Article 226 seeking mandamus for further action and a time limit fixed by the Court after police registered an FIR on his complaint under IPC Sections 420 and 34. He submitted that the accused had not been arrested and the investigation had not been completed. The question before the High Court concerned the directions a complainant could obtain about arrest and completion of investigation.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively and applied. The Supreme Court reviewed an order directing the police to record statements, arrest, seize property, safeguard assets and file a charge sheet within a time frame. It explained that investigation is the police's statutory duty and domain. The High Court cannot mechanically prescribe those steps or a predetermined result without reasons; investigation may lead either to a charge sheet or to a finding that no case is made out. The Court applied that principle here in refusing to direct arrest or filing of a charge sheet, while separately enforcing the duty to avoid unnecessary delay.

The D. Venkatasubramaniam passage quotes M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649. It explains that Section 41 CrPC permits a police officer to arrest without a warrant in the specified circumstances involving a cognizable offence, but does not require immediate arrest of every person named in an FIR. The need for arrest depends on the investigation, the nature of the offence and the person accused. Because arrest affects liberty and reputation, the power must be exercised cautiously. The Court applied this discretionary-arrest principle in declining to order arrest.

The same passage relies on Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, for a reasonable opportunity of hearing before a judicial order severely affects persons who are not before the court, particularly where it sets criminal law in motion or prejudices reputation. D. Venkatasubramaniam disapproved arrest and seizure directions against appellants who had not been notified and warned of the serious consequences of uncalled-for observations by higher courts. The High Court quoted this discussion as part of the restraint against directing police action. The Supreme Court passage also states the three limited purposes of inherent power under Section 482 CrPC; the present petition, however, invoked Article 226.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked for mandamus. Section 41 CrPC, through the cited Supreme Court authority, concerns discretionary arrest without a warrant in cognizable investigations; registration of an FIR alone does not compel arrest. Section 173(1) CrPC was directly quoted for the requirement that every investigation under the Chapter be completed without unnecessary delay. The Court applied it to require a prompt lawful conclusion and final report, whether closure or a charge sheet according to the evidence. Section 482 CrPC arose in the quoted Supreme Court discussion of inherent jurisdiction; it was not the provision Rajeev invoked. IPC Sections 420 and 34 identified the registered allegations.

4. Issues : (1) Did Rajeev's status as complainant and the existence of a registered FIR entitle him to a writ commanding immediate arrest of the accused or a particular charge-sheet outcome? (2) Could the court nevertheless require the investigating officer to finish an ongoing investigation without unnecessary delay under Section 173(1), leaving its evidence-based result and lawful investigative steps to the officer?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court refused to direct arrest. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam, it held that directing arrest and filing of a charge sheet would amount to supervision of police investigation, which the writ court could not undertake on this request. M.C. Abraham's explanation of Section 41 treats arrest as a discretion requiring caution, rather than a mechanical consequence of a report of a cognizable offence. D. Venkatasubramaniam also recognises that the final report may be a closure report.

The Court distinguished the statutory duty to complete investigation from control over how it is conducted. It reproduced Section 173(1)'s requirement of completion without unnecessary delay. The officer could not leave the FIR unresolved, but had to determine as early as practicable whether the evidence disclosed an offence and file the appropriate final report. The Court therefore required prompt completion and lawful steps, while leaving the officer to reach the result warranted by the material rather than predetermining arrest or prosecution.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the writ petition. It granted no mandamus directing arrest or filing of a charge sheet. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the pending investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law, including submission of the appropriate final report without unnecessary delay. Rajeev could submit a grievance application to the Superintendent of Police, Ashoknagar, for consideration in accordance with law.

Rajeev Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 15521/2022, 14/07/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (669) Prev Next

Headnote :- Rape / marriage promise / misconception at inception - Naim Ahamed v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2023) 15 SCC 385, and Dr. Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 18 SCC 191, were applied to distinguish a promise that was false from the outset and made to obtain intercourse from a genuine promise that was later unfulfilled. Under Section 90 IPC, the misconception must cause the woman's consent, and the person doing the act must know or have reason to believe that she consented because of that misconception. A mere breach of promise does not automatically constitute rape. On the facts of this case, the Court relied on the complainant's subsisting marriage to the petitioner's brother, her knowledge of that impediment, the continuing relationship and the later complaint to conclude that her consent was not caused by a misconception arising from the alleged promise of marriage.

Subsisting marriage / cause of consent / comparable Supreme Court case - XXX Appellant v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2024:INSC:181, concerned a married complainant whose alleged promise of marriage did not precede the relationship and whose divorce came later. The Supreme Court applied Naim Ahamed and quashed the FIR in that case. The High Court compared those circumstances with the complainant's undissolved marriage and the birth of a child from the relationship in the present case. DNA established the petitioner's paternity, but did not itself establish whether any specific sexual act was consensual. The Court quashed the FIR and the consequent charge sheet on its reasoning under Section 90.

Consent / Sections 90 and 375 IPC / statutory limits - Naim Ahamed also explained that misconception under Section 90 must be considered alongside Section 375's separate circumstances in which consent is absent or legally ineffective. Fear, mistaken belief that the man is the woman's husband, incapacity, minority and inability to communicate may independently be relevant. Explanation 2 requires an unequivocal voluntary agreement, and mere non-resistance is insufficient. The discussion of Section 114A Evidence Act concerned a presumption applicable in specified rape trials; the Court did not apply that presumption to decide this writ. The Court found no allegation of a threat before the relationship and examined the alleged promise of marriage.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajendra Aporiya filed a writ petition under Article 226 seeking quashing of Crime No. 0008/2024 registered at Mahila Thana, Morena, under IPC Sections 376(2)(n), 323 and 506, together with the charge sheet and resulting proceedings. Respondent 4, the complainant, had married Dharamveer Jatav, the petitioner's elder brother, on 25 April 2012 and had two children. In the FIR, she alleged that her husband harassed her and that the petitioner, her younger brother-in-law, offered support and promised to live with her and marry her. She alleged that, on one occasion, he came to her home, gagged her and raped her. She further alleged continuing sexual relations, pregnancy, the birth of a daughter on 28 June 2022, his later refusal to marry her, assault and threats when she pressed for marriage, and fear because he had obtained a job in the police department. These are her allegations. She expressed willingness to undergo a DNA test.

The petitioner contended that, even if the allegations were accepted at face value, the later relationship was consensual. He argued that the assurance of marriage could not create a misconception under Section 90 IPC because the complainant remained married to his brother and knew that another lawful marriage could not take place while that marriage subsisted. He also relied on a later statement under Section 164 CrPC in which, according to his submission, she said that she had signed the original application at her husband's instance, that its contents were incorrect, that she wished to withdraw it, and that police pressure had led her to repeat its contents and sign the account. The State and the complainant opposed quashing. The complainant maintained that an intentionally false representation of marriage had induced the physical relationship.

The DNA report established that she was the child's biological mother and the petitioner was the biological father. The Court treated the sexual relationship as established and then considered whether the alleged intercourse amounted to rape for want of legally effective consent.

2. Precedents — Considered : Naim Ahamed v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2023) 15 SCC 385 (2023:INSC:85), was extensively quoted and applied. The Supreme Court set out Sections 90 and 375 IPC and distinguished the ordinary burden of proving guilt beyond reasonable doubt from the presumption of non-consent under Section 114A Evidence Act, which applies in specified rape trials when its conditions are met and the woman states in evidence that she did not consent. It explained that the inquiry into misconception of fact under Section 90 must be considered alongside the wider circumstances described in Section 375, Thirdly, Fourthly and Fifthly. Those circumstances concern consent obtained through fear of death or hurt, mistaken belief that the man is the woman's husband, and incapacity through intoxication or unsoundness of mind. The other circumstances in Section 375 and Explanation 2 also remain relevant. The Supreme Court emphasised that the application of a legal principle depends on the legal evidence and surrounding circumstances. It distinguished an intentionally false promise made at the outset to obtain intercourse from a serious promise that was later broken because of unforeseen circumstances or circumstances beyond the accused's control. Every later failure to marry cannot be treated as a lie from the outset. In that case, the woman was married with three children when the relationship began, continued the relationship for years, had a child, learned that the accused was also married, obtained a divorce much later and then complained. On those proved facts, the Supreme Court set aside the rape conviction while leaving intact the accepted direction for compensation for the child.

Dr. Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 18 SCC 191, was directly quoted and applied. It states the same distinction independently: the Court must examine whether the assurance of marriage was never sincerely intended and was used to obtain sexual intercourse, whether consent arose solely from that deception, whether a genuine intention was frustrated later, or whether the relationship arose from independent affection. The quoted passage explains that an acknowledged consensual relationship does not become rape merely because the promise of marriage is not fulfilled. The High Court applied this distinction to the alleged promise in the present case.

XXX Appellant v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2024:INSC:181, was directly quoted. The Supreme Court found that the relationship had begun without an initial promise of marriage, that the woman remained married on the relevant dates despite her claim of an earlier divorce, and that the divorce decree came later. It discussed her maturity and continuing relationship, applied Naim Ahamed, and quashed the FIR and consequential proceedings in that case. The present Court relied on the comparable, known impediment arising from a subsisting marriage and on the application of Naim Ahamed. In the present case, the complainant alleged an initial forced encounter and her marriage remained undissolved.

The Court also reproduced this High Court's decision in Nishant Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh, W.P. No. 18064/2022, order of 7 October 2023. That decision had applied Naim Ahamed and Dhruvaram Sonar to quash a prosecution based on a promise of marriage which it found apparently malicious, after examining the relationship, marriages, property dispute and other circumstances of that case.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 375 defines rape through specified sexual acts committed in seven circumstances, including against the woman's will, without her consent, with consent obtained through specified fear or a mistaken belief that the man is her husband, incapacity, minority, and inability to communicate consent. Explanation 2 requires an unequivocal voluntary agreement communicated for the specific act; mere failure to resist physically does not, by itself, signify agreement. IPC Section 90 renders consent ineffective when it is caused by fear of injury or misconception of fact and the person doing the act knows or has reason to believe that it was given for that reason. The Court chiefly examined the alleged promise of marriage under these provisions. Section 376(2)(n), concerning repeated rape, was the charged provision; the FIR also named Sections 323 and 506. The Court found no allegation that a threat before the relationship had induced intercourse, and distinguished the later threats alleged when the petitioner refused to marry.

The discussion of Section 114A Evidence Act quoted from Naim Ahamed concerned the mandatory presumption of absence of consent in specified rape prosecutions where intercourse is proved, consent is in issue and the woman states in her evidence before the court that she did not consent. Section 164 CrPC provided the procedure for the reported later statement but was not independently interpreted. The order referred to the existing first marriage as an impediment.

4. Issues : (1) With the sexual relationship and paternity scientifically established, did the complainant's allegations disclose intercourse without legally effective consent under Section 375, having regard both to the alleged initial use of force and to the continuing acts? (2) Did a promise to marry made while her marriage to the petitioner's brother remained undissolved cause consent through a misconception of fact within Section 90, or did the alleged sequence and her knowledge of the impediment defeat that contention on the facts of this case? (3) Did the Supreme Court's distinction between a promise that was false from the outset and a later breach of promise permit quashing of the FIR, charge sheet and related proceedings?

5. Ratio / Findings : The DNA result established that the petitioner was the child's biological father and thus established a sexual relationship, but did not itself establish consent. The Court reproduced the circumstances described in Section 375 and the test of fear or misconception under Section 90. It treated the principal question as whether the assurance of marriage had rendered consent legally ineffective. The order stated that no threat to life or limb was alleged before the relationship; the threats in the FIR were alleged to have arisen when the complainant later insisted on marriage. In addressing the FIR's allegation of an initial forced encounter, the Court also stated that the later repeated relations and the birth of the child affected its assessment of the contention that intercourse was against her will.

Applying Naim Ahamed and Dhruvaram Sonar, the Court examined whether the promise was false from the outset and had induced consent, rather than merely remaining unfulfilled later. It relied on the complainant's continuing marriage to the petitioner's brother, her knowledge that another lawful marriage could not take place while that marriage subsisted, the continuing relationship, the child born on 28 June 2022 and the first written complaint dated 21 September 2023. Appellant provided a comparison based on its particular facts, in which the impediment to marriage and the absence of an initial promise defeated the alleged misconception. On the facts before it, the High Court concluded that the continuing physical relationship had not resulted from a misconception arising from the proposed marriage, and quashed the prosecution.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the writ petition. It quashed Crime No. 0008/2024 registered at Mahila Thana, Morena, for offences under IPC Sections 376(2)(n), 323 and 506, together with the charge sheet already filed and the criminal proceedings arising from it.

Rajendra Aporiya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 33661/2024, 10/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (670) Prev Next

Headnote :- Illegal sand extraction / compounding / independent IPC offence - Jayant v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal Nos. 824–825/2020 (3 December 2020), was applied: when an offence is compounded on payment under Section 23A MMDR Act, subsection (2) bars further proceedings for the MMDR Act or rule offence so compounded, but does not terminate proceedings for distinct IPC offences, including Sections 379 and 414. Banti v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. 37312/2020, had explained the penalty, royalty and environmental controls under the M.P. Sand Rules, 2019. The discussion also drew on State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, concerning the absence of a general statutory bar to prosecution under the IPC. An offer to pay the Rule 20 penalty and the deposit of royalty could not, by themselves, entitle the applicant to bail or absolve him of the surviving IPC allegations.

Bail parity / earlier order / show-cause notice - The Sessions Court had granted co-accused Parshuram anticipatory bail after a penalty deposit without considering the earlier High Court decisions on mining and bail. In examining that order, the High Court also applied Jayant's distinction concerning independent IPC offences. The earlier grant did not require Rajendra's release on his second application under Section 439. The High Court refused him bail and separately issued notice to Parshuram to show cause why the earlier order should not be set aside, directing registration of a separate case. It did not cancel Parshuram's anticipatory bail in this order; he was to be heard in the separate proceeding.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajendra Gurjar's second application under Section 439 CrPC sought regular bail following his arrest on 8 October 2020 in Crime No. 138/2020 registered at Sirol police station, Gwalior. The offences alleged were under IPC Sections 379 and 414 and Section 4/21 of the mining enactment referred to in the order. His first application had been dismissed as withdrawn on 4 November 2020. The case diary was not available to the High Court at this hearing. Counsel stated that Rajendra did not know whether the department had issued an electronic transit pass (e-TP) and therefore could not produce one.

Counsel relied on the Third Additional Sessions Judge's order dated 9 October 2020 in BA No. 2436/2020, granting anticipatory bail to co-accused Parshuram Baghel because the penalty under Rule 20 of the M.P. Sand (Mining, Transportation, Storage and Trading) Rules, 2019 had been paid. Rajendra offered to pay the same penalty. The High Court examined whether payment under the regulatory provisions removed independent criminal liability and whether the co-accused's earlier order supported bail. It separately considered whether Parshuram should be called upon to show cause against the proposed setting aside of his bail order.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jayant and others v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal Nos. 824–825 of 2020, Supreme Court order of 3 December 2020, was directly quoted and applied. The passage distinguishes compounding under Section 23A(1) MMDR Act and the bar under Section 23A(2) against further proceedings for the MMDR Act or rule offence so compounded from the continuing prosecution of independent IPC offences, expressly including Sections 379 and 414. Payment therefore does not confer immunity from all criminal proceedings. The Court applied Jayant to reject Rajendra's argument based on payment of a penalty and to question the legal basis of Parshuram's anticipatory-bail order.

Banti v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 37312/2020, High Court order of 5 October 2020, was quoted as an earlier decision. It explained that Rules 6 and 7 of the Sand Rules, 2019 regulate quantity and base price, that Rule 12(2)–(4) concerns environmental clearance, water and air consent, and permissible quantity, and that payment of a penalty or royalty under Rule 20 satisfies, at most, a regulatory or civil liability. The Rules did not prohibit action under the IPC or another statute. In the same discussion, State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, was considered on the analogous question of the relationship between a special statute and general criminal law: the M.P. Cooperative Societies Act did not exclude criminal proceedings in the absence of a bar to prosecution for general offences, particularly charges under the Prevention of Corruption Act. The present judgment applied that reasoning on the absence of a statutory bar, while Jayant defined the more specific limit on MMDR compounding.

Rajiv Sharma v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 35538/2020, High Court order of 7 October 2020, was also extensively quoted. It condemned the possible harm caused by illegal sand extraction to river beds, the environment and revenue, and rejected the contention that non-bailable offences triable by a Magistrate confer an automatic right to bail regardless of their gravity. In that case, it also explained that the sixty-day period under Section 437(6) CrPC begins on the first date fixed for evidence, and does not begin before the trial reaches that stage. The Magistrate may record reasons for refusing release even after that period. These propositions formed part of the quotation and informed the Court's assessment that the Sessions order had overlooked relevant mining and bail decisions. Rajendra's counsel did not advance a separate claim under Section 437(6) in the present application.

The Sessions Court's order in favour of Parshuram Baghel was an earlier co-accused bail order, not a binding Supreme Court precedent. The High Court stated that it had not considered Banti or Rajiv Sharma and, having also applied Jayant, directed issuance of notice and registration of a separate case to consider setting the order aside.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed Rajendra's application for regular bail; the earlier co-accused order concerned anticipatory bail at a distinct procedural stage. IPC Sections 379 and 414 were the independent theft and stolen-property offences identified in Jayant as surviving MMDR compounding. The order referred to the mining offence under Section 4/21 of the 'Khanan Adhiniyam' and discussed the MMDR Act and Rules. Section 23A(1) MMDR Act permits compounding on payment of a penalty, while subsection (2) bars proceedings for the offence so compounded under that Act or its rules; it does not extinguish separate IPC liability. Rule 20 of the M.P. Sand (Mining, Transportation, Storage and Trading) Rules, 2019 was the basis of the offer to pay a penalty. The Court also referred to royalty under Rule 30 in its conclusion. The Rules 6, 7 and 12 discussed in Banti concerned permissible sand quantity, price, environmental clearance, and water and air permissions.

4. Issues : (1) Did willingness to pay the penalty under the Sand Rules, 2019, or actual payment by a co-accused, bar independent criminal proceedings under the IPC and warrant regular bail? (2) Did the co-accused's anticipatory-bail order based on payment of a penalty provide a persuasive claim to parity despite the cited High Court decisions and the Supreme Court's distinction concerning independent IPC offences? (3) What directions were made concerning that earlier grant, and did they amount to its immediate cancellation?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied the distinction in Banti between regulatory or civil liability and criminal liability, together with Jayant's more specific rule under Section 23A. Valid compounding would bar further proceedings for the particular MMDR Act or rule offence compounded, but the IPC allegations of theft and the offence under Section 414 could still be prosecuted. Payment of royalty or a penalty therefore did not, by itself, answer the criminal allegations or establish entitlement to regular bail. On its assessment of the record, the applicant's statement that he did not know whether an e-TP had been issued provided no ground for release. The Court dismissed the bail application. The co-accused's earlier anticipatory-bail order was based on payment of a penalty without considering Banti or Rajiv Sharma. In examining that order, the High Court also applied Jayant. It did not treat the earlier order as requiring Rajendra's release. Nor did it immediately set that order aside: it directed a show-cause notice to Parshuram and registration of a separate case to consider that question, with service through the Superintendent of Police and listing on 21 December 2020.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Rajendra's second application for regular bail. It directed the office to register a separate case and issue a show-cause notice to Parshuram Baghel through the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, asking why his anticipatory-bail order dated 9 October 2020 should not be set aside. The separate case was to be listed on 21 December 2020.

Rajendra Gurjar v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 46296/2020, 07/12/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (671) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / ouster / continued mental impact - The Court considered the principle in Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, that a woman compelled to leave her matrimonial home because of dowry demands or cruelty may suffer mental cruelty from that exclusion. The complainant specifically alleged that her father-in-law and mother-in-law had beaten and expelled her in 2021 and, when she returned in 2024, abused her, refused her entry, taunted her inability to conceive, announced that they would remarry their son and threatened to burn her. These specific allegations were sufficient to withstand quashing at the threshold.

Quashing / civil matrimonial remedy / FIR chronology - Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was applied: attempts to reconcile may explain delay in reporting after expulsion, and a civil divorce petition does not, by itself, bring criminal proceedings to an end. The High Court must examine the complaint's allegations without conducting a mini-trial on extraneous civil or investigation material. Here, the cruelty FIR preceded the husband's petition for divorce under Section 13; the wife's wish to seek restitution under Section 9 did not establish that her FIR was false. The further authorities cited on Section 482 supported the same stated limit: the allegations must be taken at face value, without a mini-trial. The application under Section 528 BNSS was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajendra Kumar Gupta and Jyoti Gupta, respectively the father-in-law and mother-in-law of respondent 2, applied under Section 528 BNSS, 2023 to quash Crime No. 17/2024 registered at Mahila Thana, Datia. The FIR cited BNS Sections 85, 115(2), 351(3) and 3(5). The complainant stated that she had married their son Priyesh on 3 February 2016. She alleged that dowry gifts had been given, that her husband and in-laws repeatedly harassed her physically and mentally over the alleged inadequacy of dowry, that they taunted her inability to conceive, and that they pressured her to leave or be divorced. According to the FIR, all three beat her and expelled her on 3 November 2021, after which she returned to her parental home in Datia. She alleged that, when she visited the matrimonial home on 30 May 2024, the applicants refused her entry, threw out her belongings, abused her as infertile, said that they would remarry their son and threatened to burn her. She also described her family's attempts at reconciliation and alleged that her husband made a further demand for Rs. 2 lakh on 18 October 2024.

The applicants contended that the husband's pending divorce petition under Section 13 Hindu Marriage Act made the FIR a counterblast. During arguments, however, their counsel accepted that the FIR had been lodged on 30 October 2024, before the divorce petition was filed on 5 November 2024. They relied on the unsuccessful reconciliation at Mahila Thana and argued that the complainant's application for restitution under Section 9 was inconsistent with her allegations of abuse. The Court examined these submissions in light of the specific allegations in the FIR.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was considered in the Court's own analysis. It states that a woman compelled to leave her matrimonial home because of dowry demands or cruelty may suffer mental cruelty from that exclusion. The present Court considered that principle in relation to the alleged expulsion and the in-laws' later refusal to allow re-entry, infertility taunts and threats. The authority was used to assess whether the allegations were sufficient at the quashing stage.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted at length and applied. The Supreme Court rejected an adverse inference based on the interval of several months between forced departure and the FIR, because family members were attempting to restore the marriage. It held that a divorce petition in a civil court does not, by itself, terminate independent criminal proceedings, even where they arise from overlapping facts. It also disapproved quashing based on extraneous investigation findings instead of examining whether the complaint or FIR disclosed a cognizable offence. The present High Court applied this principle to reject the divorce-based counterblast argument, which also failed on the admitted chronology, and the contention that a request for restitution established that the complaint was false. The reference to Bhajan Lal's illustrations formed part of the legal context quoted from Pratibha.

In paragraph 9 the Court stated the no-roving-inquiry rule and cited XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. No. 709/2021, order of 30 June 2021; Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682. The Court cited these authorities for the single threshold proposition that quashing is available when the uncontroverted allegations, accepted as true, disclose no offence; the disputed truth of those allegations cannot be tried in an application invoking inherent powers.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS, 2023 was expressly invoked for inherent jurisdiction in this 2025 application. The order also refers to Section 482 CrPC in the quotation from an older precedent and in its own discussion of the limitation against conducting a mini-trial. BNS Sections 85 (matrimonial cruelty), 115(2) (hurt), 351(3) (criminal intimidation) and 3(5) (common intention) were the offences cited in the FIR. The Court considered whether the alleged acts, taken together, were sufficient at the quashing stage; it did not finally interpret each ingredient separately. Hindu Marriage Act Sections 13 and 9 arose respectively in the husband's divorce petition and the complainant's asserted remedy of restitution.

4. Issues : (1) Did the FIR allege sufficiently specific conduct by these in-laws, including expulsion, later exclusion, taunts and threats, to withstand quashing in the exercise of inherent powers? (2) Did the husband's divorce case, attempts at reconciliation or the complainant's pursuit of restitution establish that the FIR was retaliatory or inherently false, particularly in light of the actual filing sequence? (3) Could the Court decide the disputed truth of the allegations by assessing civil and reconciliation material in a mini-trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court identified specific allegations against each applicant: their alleged participation with the husband in the 2021 expulsion, and their own alleged abuse, refusal of entry, throwing out of belongings, infertility taunts and threat to kill the complainant when she returned in 2024. Rupali Devi supported consideration of the forced separation and its mental impact at this stage. The counterblast argument failed on the admitted dates: the FIR had been lodged six days before the husband's divorce petition. Pratibha also established that a civil divorce case is not, by itself, a ground to quash an independent cruelty prosecution, and that family attempts at reconciliation may explain an interval after departure from the matrimonial home. A wife's wish to restore the marriage can coexist with allegations of past cruelty; the asserted request under Section 9 therefore did not, by itself, establish that the allegations were false. The Court could not conduct a roving inquiry or mini-trial to determine what the reconciliation record or the parties' competing accounts ultimately proved. Taking the specific FIR allegations at face value, it found no ground for interference and left their evidentiary assessment to the criminal proceedings.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 528 BNSS seeking quashing of Crime No. 17/2024. The FIR and the ensuing proceedings were not quashed.

Rajendra Kumar Gupta and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 3205/2025, 29/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (672) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers — Section 482 CrPC — investigation control - A complainant sought arrest and further police action after registration of an FIR alleging offences under the IPC, POCSO Act and SC/ST Act. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the High Court declined to direct arrest or filing of a charge-sheet. Investigation is a statutory police function; the steps taken and the eventual report depend on the evidence. A coercive judicial direction prescribing those steps would improperly supervise the investigation. The Supreme Court passage also cautioned against unreasoned directions and adverse orders made without hearing the affected persons, drawing on Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542.

Arrest — Section 41 CrPC — necessity and caution - D. Venkatasubramaniam reproduced M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649: registration of an FIR concerning a cognizable offence does not make arrest automatic. The investigating officer assesses the need for arrest and exercises discretion cautiously because arrest affects liberty and reputation. The High Court applied that principle in refusing the complainant's request for a direction to arrest.

Investigation — Section 173(1) CrPC — prompt completion - The Court also applied the statutory requirement to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. It directed the investigating officer to conclude it as early as possible and take the steps required by law. The petitioner could approach the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior with a grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rajendri Parihar (Mirdha) filed a petition under Section 482 CrPC in the Madhya Pradesh High Court at Gwalior. According to counsel, her complaint had led to registration of Crime No. 14 of 2021 at Police Station Girwai, Gwalior, for offences under IPC Sections 376, 323, 506 and 34, POCSO Act Sections 5 and 6, and Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act Sections 3(1)(w)(ii) and 3(2)(v). Counsel asserted that the police had taken no further action and had not arrested the accused persons.

The Court heard the petitioner's counsel and considered the request for a direction to arrest in light of the police's statutory investigative role and the Supreme Court's caution against coercive High Court directions. It declined to prescribe arrest or filing of a charge-sheet, and separately considered the duty to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. The petition was disposed of with a direction for early completion and liberty to bring a grievance to the Superintendent of Police.

The written prayer sought expeditious and proper investigation, with prompt submission of the resulting report to the court. Counsel also pressed for arrest of the accused. The Court addressed that request separately from the statutory duty to complete the investigation in a timely manner.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court expressly quoted D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, at length. That judgment concerned a High Court order making witness statements, arrest, seizure and filing of a charge-sheet obligatory, although an investigation could lawfully lead to different conclusions. The Supreme Court explained that investigation is a police duty ordinarily within the police's domain. A court should not prescribe the direction of the investigation, the evidentiary steps or a coercive outcome without grounds justifying intervention within its jurisdiction. It also criticised the absence of reasons, the failure to hear affected persons and casual judicial observations capable of influencing proceedings. The present High Court applied the central principle against judicial supervision of investigation in refusing the arrest request.

In D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Supreme Court reproduced M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC. The specified grounds permit arrest without a warrant; they do not require immediate arrest of every accused after registration of an FIR. The need for arrest may be assessed as the investigation develops, and its effect on liberty and reputation requires caution. The present Court relied on that reasoning, incorporated in D. Venkatasubramaniam, to decline a direction to arrest during the pending investigation.

D. Venkatasubramaniam also reproduced Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on the opportunity to be heard before a judicial investigation order carrying serious consequences for the affected person. In D. Venkatasubramaniam, the failure to hear those affected was an independent ground for setting aside the order under appeal. The present Court quoted that reasoning as part of the caution against compelled arrest.

3. Statutes considered : The petition was filed under Section 482 CrPC. The Court declined to exercise that power to prescribe arrest or the final conclusion of the investigation. Section 41 CrPC appeared in the substantially reproduced Supreme Court explanation of discretion to arrest without a warrant in the specified circumstances. Section 173(1) CrPC was quoted and directly applied: investigation must be completed without unnecessary delay. The officer must reach a lawful conclusion and take appropriate steps, without a judicially predetermined outcome.

4. Issues : First, could a complainant invoke Section 482 CrPC to require the police to arrest persons named in an FIR and thereby influence the methods and outcome of a pending investigation? The issue concerned the distinction between the police's lawful discretion and a coercive High Court direction. Second, after the Court declined to prescribe investigative steps, could the officer leave the case pending indefinitely, or did Section 173(1) require completion without unnecessary delay?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that it could not direct the police to arrest the accused. D. Venkatasubramaniam establishes that a court ordinarily may not supervise investigation by requiring arrest and filing of a charge-sheet. The police must decide the appropriate steps on the evidence and may conclude either that a case for prosecution is made out or that it is not. The reasoning on arrest in M.C. Abraham, incorporated in that precedent, explains why registration of an FIR alleging a cognizable offence does not itself require immediate arrest under Section 41.

The Court then applied the express mandate of Section 173(1). An investigating officer cannot leave a registered case pending without taking the necessary steps and reaching a conclusion. The Court directed completion as early as possible and the steps required by law, leaving the investigator to determine whether an offence was made out and what report the evidence justified. The duty to complete investigation promptly justified this limited intervention; the manner and merits of the investigation remained open.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the application under Section 482. It declined to direct arrest or prescribe the outcome of the investigation. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible in accordance with Section 173(1) CrPC and take the steps required by law. If a grievance remained, Parihar could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, who was to consider it according to law.

Rajendri Parihar (Mirdha) v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 40869/2021, 16/08/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (674) Prev Next

Headnote :- Evidence — co-accused's statement — Section 27 Evidence Act - In a second application for regular bail arising from an alleged robbery, the investigating officer accepted that a co-accused's statement merely naming the applicant was not admissible as substantive evidence against him. No recovery had been made from the applicant and no test identification parade had been held. On the record then produced, the Court found no substantive admissible material justifying his continued custody.

Identification — test identification parade — investigative delay - The earlier refusal of bail had noted that no identification parade had been held. Although the police had known since December 2021 that the applicant was detained in another jail and had secured his production, they sent the request to the Tahsildar for a parade only one day before the April hearing. Framing of charges did not, by itself, supply the missing identification. The prolonged inaction was material to reconsideration of bail.

Investigation — Section 299 CrPC filing — accused subsequently produced - The SHO's reliance on an earlier charge-sheet described as filed under Section 299 CrPC did not answer the need to investigate identification after the applicant was produced on a warrant sought by the police. The officer conceded that further investigation had been necessary. The Court assessed the failure in light of the warrant history, the earlier bail order and the submission of the case diary.

Bail — successive application — uncured evidence gap - On the second application under Section 439 CrPC, the Court granted conditional bail because the earlier concern about identification remained unresolved and the State identified no independent admissible evidence or recovery. In view of the applicant's residence outside the State and recorded criminal history, it required cash surety of Rs. 1,50,000 and attendance, subject to the stated consequences of default.

Police accountability — DGP training direction - After finding persistent inaction and a lack of understanding of production warrants, identification and evidentiary sufficiency, the Court directed at least six months' training for the SHO concerned and required the DGP to submit a compliance report within 15 days. It also directed that the complainant be informed of the bail grant in light of Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 329 of 2021, decided 18.03.2021.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecution arose from Crime No. 494 of 2012 registered at Police Station Dehat, District Bhind, alleging an offence under Section 392 IPC, Sections 25 and 27 of the Arms Act and Sections 11 and 13 of the MPDVPK Act, as abbreviated in the judgment. Rajveer Singh Jatav was detained in another criminal case in a different jail. The SHO stated that he had learned of that custody in December 2021 during a drive to execute pending warrants. The police then sought a production warrant, on execution of which Jatav was brought before the trial court. The judgment records 14 February 2022 as the date of arrest in the present crime. An earlier charge-sheet had been filed under Section 299 CrPC while he was unavailable.

The High Court had rejected the first application for regular bail, MCRC No. 10793 of 2022, on 8 March 2022, noting the long interval before production and the absence of a test identification parade and supplementary charge-sheet. In the second application under Section 439 CrPC, counsel submitted that charges had since been framed, but that there was still no evidence against Jatav beyond a co-accused's disclosure under Section 27 naming him. The State initially explained that a letter requesting a parade had been sent to the Tahsildar. On further questioning, it emerged that the letter had been sent only the previous day, 24 April 2022. The SHO was called to explain why no prompt steps had followed the first bail order.

The SHO initially suggested that the matter had only recently come to his attention and that the earlier filing under Section 299 dispensed with the need for a supplementary report. On questioning, he acknowledged his knowledge of Jatav's whereabouts since December 2021, the police application for the production warrant and its execution, and submission of the case diary with his report in the Sessions bail proceeding. He also acknowledged the inadmissibility of a co-accused's statement merely naming Jatav and the need for further investigation of identification after production. The Court regarded his inaction and answers as serious deficiencies. On the bail merits, it also considered Jatav's residence in Rajasthan, three registered criminal cases, and the absence of any recovery or independent admissible evidence identified on this record.

2. Precedents — Considered : At its conclusion, the order directly referred to Aparna Bhat and others v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 329 of 2021, decided on 18 March 2021. The High Court invoked that judgment in directing that intimation of the bail grant be sent to the complainant. Aparna Bhat was invoked for complainant notification. The earlier order dismissing Jatav's first application, MCRC No. 10793 of 2022 dated 8 March 2022, recorded the unresolved concerns about identification and the incomplete police report; it was not a separate Supreme Court precedent.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the second application for regular bail. The SHO referred to Section 299 CrPC in explaining the earlier charge-sheet filed while the applicant was absent. The Court did not regard that filing as an answer to the need for further investigation after the police secured his production. Section 27 of the Evidence Act arose in the applicant's account of the co-accused's disclosure. The officer acknowledged that information merely naming another accused did not furnish admissible substantive evidence against that person on this record. Section 392 IPC, Sections 25 and 27 of the Arms Act, and Sections 11 and 13 of the MPDVPK Act were the offences alleged. The cash-surety and appearance requirements were conditions imposed in this bail order.

4. Issues : First, had the State produced substantive admissible material linking Jatav to the alleged offence when the only identified inculpatory material was a co-accused's disclosure of his name and no recovery had been made? Second, what bearing did the absence of a test identification parade have on renewed bail consideration, given the first bail refusal, the framing of charges, and the police's knowledge of Jatav's whereabouts and role in securing his production? Third, could the SHO rely on the earlier filing under Section 299 to excuse the failure to investigate identification after the applicant was produced before the trial court? Fourth, did the officer's conduct justify specific directions for DGP supervision and training, and could bail be granted on strict conditions despite residence outside the State and criminal history?

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court questioned the SHO after the State disclosed that the letter requesting a parade had been sent only one day before the hearing. His explanation that the matter had only recently come to his attention was inconsistent with his knowledge of Jatav's custody since December 2021, the police application for a production warrant, Jatav's production, his submission of the case diary to the Sessions court, and the March order noting the outstanding parade. He accepted that identification required further investigation after the applicant's production and that the co-accused's mere disclosure of Jatav's name was not admissible as substantive evidence against him. The Court found that the police had failed to take a material investigative step and that the officer misunderstood both the production-warrant process and the insufficiency of a confessional statement merely naming another person. The earlier filing under Section 299 during the applicant's absence had not supplied the missing identification or recovery.

On the limited record available at the bail stage, the Court found no substantive admissible evidence against Jatav and no recovery of property from him. Framing of charges did not remove that evidential deficiency, and the Court allowed the renewed application. It noted the 2012 occurrence, the long delay before production and the applicant's custody in another case, but considered continued detention unjustified on the evidence before it. To address the risks of non-appearance and non-compliance arising from his residence in Dholpur, Rajasthan and three registered criminal cases, it required substantial cash surety and regular attendance. The order was to remain effective until the end of the trial, but would lapse upon a bail jump. It further provided that a single default in appearance or registration of a new offence would automatically end the order and forfeit the cash surety without reference to the court. Separately, the Court found that the SHO's repeated evasive or uninformed answers required immediate training in law and investigation. It also referred to its broader observation that the police had been filing charge-sheets on confessional statements without collecting substantive material; the specific remedial direction arose from this officer's identified failures. The DGP was directed to arrange training for at least six months at a police training school of his choice and to submit a report to the Principal Registrar within 15 days.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed the second application for regular bail. It directed the DGP, Madhya Pradesh to send SHO Rambabu Singh Yadav for at least six months' training at a police training school selected by the DGP and to submit a compliance report to the Principal Registrar within 15 days.

Rajveer Singh Jatav v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 18696/2022, 25/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (675) Prev Next

Headnote :- Related eyewitness / scrutiny - Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, requires careful scrutiny of an interested or chance witness. Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, and State of U.P. v. Kishanpal, (2008) 16 SCC 73, address related and interested witnesses and the risk of false implication. Raju requires careful appraisal, particularly where there is enmity, rather than treating relationship and interest as categorically separate. The Court rejected Guman De's assertion that she saw the assault because she admitted arriving later. It accepted Badami's natural presence and her account, corroborated by independent witnesses Dharam Singh and Dayanand; a claimed land dispute did not discredit them.

Ocular / medical inconsistency - Bhajan Singh v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 421, and CBI v. Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC 1, require consideration of medical evidence that makes an eyewitness account improbable; medical evidence that completely excludes the account may justify rejecting it. The latter decision quoted Yogesh Singh and other authorities for this qualified rule. The absence of a separate injury on the back corresponding to Kailash's alleged lathi blow did not completely exclude the witnessed joint assault. Multiple blunt head wounds and skull fractures were proved, an accidental fall was medically ruled out, and the roughly five-hour interval before the FIR was explained by lack of transport.

Common intention / fatal blow - Under Section 34 IPC, a participant in a criminal act done in furtherance of proved common intention is liable for the act even if another participant inflicted the fatal injury. The Court found that, after Badu's dispute, Kailash came armed with a lathi and assaulted Pappu alongside Rakesh, who carried a luhangi. The absence of a specifically attributed fatal head blow by Kailash did not reduce his liability under Section 302/34.

Weapon recovery / direct proof - Goverdhan v. State of Chhattisgarh (Cr.A. 116/2011, 9 January 2025) quoted Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188, for the rule that recovery of the actual weapon is not indispensable if direct eyewitness evidence is trustworthy and medically supported. Goverdhan also quoted Karamjit Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2003) 5 SCC 291, against mechanically distrusting police witnesses. The Court treated the absence of bloodstains on the lathi and of FSL support as a failure to prove its link to the offence, but the independent evidence of the assault sustained the conviction.

Murder / disposition - Severe, repeated head trauma, fractures and haemorrhage supported the finding of homicidal death and the Court's inference of intention to cause death in the proved joint attack. Kailash's Section 302/34 conviction and life sentence were affirmed. Rakesh's appeal abated on his death; Badu had died during trial. Kailash's bail was cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately. A warrant was permitted if he failed to surrender within one month.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal under Section 374(2) CrPC challenged the judgment dated 25 October 2013 of the Third Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri, in Sessions Trial 252/2011. At a community dinner in Badagaon on 7 September 2011, Pappu asked Badu why he had left. An abusive exchange followed. According to the prosecution, Rakesh, Badu's son, and Kailash arrived, Rakesh with a luhangi and Kailash with a lathi, and the three assaulted Pappu. His wife Badami lodged the FIR, initially under the provisions concerning assault, restraint and threats, with Section 34 IPC. Pappu died during treatment the following day; Section 302 was added. The police seized a lathi attributed to Kailash and a luhangi attributed to Rakesh.

Badu died during trial. The trial court acquitted Rakesh and Kailash of the restraint and threat charges but convicted them under Section 302/34, imposing rigorous life imprisonment, a fine of Rs 5,000 each and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. During the appeal, Rakesh's death on 2 October 2016 was verified and his appeal abated; only Kailash's appeal remained for decision. Kailash disputed his responsibility for the fatal injury because eyewitnesses described his lathi blow on Pappu's back, but the medical reports showed no back injury, while death resulted from head trauma. He relied on alleged enmity, the possibility of a fall while intoxicated and the absence of a forensic link to the seized lathi. The State relied on four claimed eyewitnesses, severe blunt head trauma and liability under Section 34. The Court later excluded Guman De's claim to have witnessed the assault and relied on the other three.

Dr P.K. Dubey found several fresh head lacerations and contusions caused by hard blunt force, with no signs of intoxication noted. Postmortem surgeon Dr Nikhil Agarwal found several head wounds, extensive fractures and intracranial haemorrhage. He attributed death to cardiorespiratory failure from head injury and rejected the suggested fall from a bicycle. Dharam Singh, Badami and Dayanand described a joint assault. Dharam's initial description of Rakesh's weapon as a farsa was corrected to luhangi in cross-examination; Badami and Dayanand attributed a lathi blow on the back to Kailash. Guman De, Pappu's mother, claimed to be an eyewitness but admitted in cross-examination that she arrived after Badami informed her. The Court accordingly rejected her claim to have directly observed the assault.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, requires particularly careful scrutiny of an interested witness and scrutiny of a chance witness's explanation of disputed presence. The evidence must have a ring of truth and be credible. Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, addresses related and interested witnesses, questioning a categorical distinction based on relationship alone and requiring careful appraisal of the risk of false implication, especially where there is enmity. It describes meticulous scrutiny as a rule of prudence rather than a statutory bar or an automatic requirement of corroboration. State of U.P. v. Kishanpal, (2008) 16 SCC 73, was also considered on the need for careful scrutiny and the rule that relationship alone does not justify rejecting credible evidence. The Court did not accept Guman De as having observed the event. Badami's presence with her husband at the dinner was natural, and independent witnesses Dharam and Dayanand corroborated her account; no reason for false implication by them was shown.

Bhajan Singh v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 421, explains that medical evidence rendering eyewitness testimony improbable is a factor to weigh, whereas complete exclusion of that account can justify rejecting it. CBI v. Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC 1, quoted Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh and other decisions for the qualified primacy of credible direct evidence, while also recognising cases of total medical incompatibility. The Court in the present case found the absence of a back injury insufficient to exclude the witnessed attack by several men. It considered the multiple injuries and the practical difficulty of pinpointing every blow as the victim moved. The cited authorities were applied to this discrepancy; they did not establish that medical evidence can never displace eyewitness testimony.

Goverdhan v. State of Chhattisgarh, Criminal Appeal 116/2011 decided 9 January 2025, was invoked for the proposition that non-recovery of the weapon is not fatal where reliable direct testimony independently proves the offence. It quoted Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188, which dealt with a ballistic mismatch. That decision explained that the disputed gun recovery could be treated as no recovery of the actual weapon, without displacing credible eyewitness and medical evidence. Goverdhan also quoted Karamjit Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2003) 5 SCC 291, which rejects categorical suspicion of police recovery testimony merely for lack of public corroboration. The Court found the particular lathi's link to the offence unproved in the absence of bloodstains and an FSL report, but applied the principle that recovery was not indispensable in view of the remaining evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC supplied the murder charge and life sentence. Section 34 IPC made each participant liable for a criminal act done in furtherance of the common intention of all, without requiring every participant personally to inflict the ultimately fatal wound. Section 374(2) CrPC furnished the appellate route. Sections 341 and 506 Part II IPC were the charges of which the two trial appellants were acquitted. Section 294 IPC was included in the initial FIR and charge-sheet and was charged against Badu.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Badami's relationship to the deceased or the alleged enmity made her account unreliable, and whether Dharam, Dayanand and Guman De could properly be treated as eyewitnesses. (ii) Whether the lack of a recorded back wound medically contradicted the allegation of Kailash's lathi assault, and whether Pappu's head injuries could instead have resulted from a fall while intoxicated. (iii) Whether the absence of bloodstains and forensic testing on the seized lathi left the prosecution without essential proof. (iv) Whether Kailash could be convicted of murder under Section 302/34 when the fatal head blow was not individually attributed to him.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected Guman De's claim to have directly observed the assault after her admission that she came later. It scrutinised Badami's evidence as that of a related witness, found her presence alongside Pappu at the dinner natural, and accepted her account as consistent with those of independent witnesses Dharam and Dayanand. No reason was shown why the latter two would falsely implicate Kailash. An asserted land dispute did not, without more, displace their eyewitness evidence. The FIR named Kailash and was lodged within about five hours despite a journey of roughly 12 kilometres; the witnesses explained that a tractor or other conveyance had not been readily available.

The medical and postmortem records established multiple blunt head wounds, extensive cranial fractures and internal bleeding. The doctors rejected the explanation of a fall, and no sign of drinking was found in the initial examination. The Court recognised that no external back injury corresponded exactly to the lathi blow described by Badami and Dayanand. Applying Bhajan Singh and CBI v. Mohd. Parvez, it asked whether that absence wholly ruled out their account. It held that it did not, given the assault by several persons, the victim's movement and the consistency of the central account with the injuries.

The seizure memo for Kailash's lathi recorded no blood; no FSL report was produced, and some seizure witnesses were hostile. The Court held that, at most, the link between the seized lathi and the offence remained unproved. Goverdhan and Rakesh v. State of U.P. permitted conviction on independently reliable eyewitness and medical evidence without recovery of the weapon. Kailash's participation was therefore assessed on the evidence of the three accepted eyewitnesses rather than on an asserted laboratory result.

After Badu's quarrel, Rakesh and Kailash came armed and together assaulted Pappu. The Court inferred common intention from their concerted arrival and participation. Under Section 34, Kailash could be held responsible for the fatal head injury caused in that joint act even though his own blow was described as landing on the back. The severe, repeated head injuries, skull fractures and haemorrhage supported the inference of intention to cause death and the Court's finding of murder. It rejected the attempt to confine Kailash's responsibility to the blow on the back where no injury was recorded. These were final appellate findings on the proved record.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed Rakesh's individual appeal as abated upon verification of his death; Badu had died during trial. Kailash's appeal was dismissed, and his Section 302/34 conviction and rigorous life sentence, with the fine and default term, were affirmed. His bail bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court. If he failed to surrender within one month, the trial court was free to issue an arrest warrant. The trial record and a copy of the judgment were ordered to be sent back for compliance.

Rakesh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1059/2013, 16/07/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (676) Prev Next

Headnote :- POCSO victim age / document sequence - Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, applied the evidentiary order in Rule 12 of the Juvenile Justice Rules 2007 to a child victim: an available matriculation record, then the first school's date-of-birth entry, then a civic birth record, with medical opinion used only in the absence of those documentary records. The headmaster proved a government school admission register and certificate recording the date of birth as 3 February 1999, before the incident on 25 October 2015. The ossification test corroborated minority.

School record / medical margin - State of Chhattisgarh v. Lekhram, (2006) 5 SCC 736, recognises the admissibility of school registers under Section 35 Evidence Act while allowing assessment of their evidentiary weight. Murugan v. State of T.N., (2011) 6 SCC 111, emphasises records created before litigation, the source of their information and possible corroboration. Mukarrab v. State of U.P., (2017) 2 SCC 210, treats radiological estimates as useful but non-conclusive because of individual variation. The Court accepted the school entry, supported by medical evidence, despite the father's admission that he had estimated age at admission. It declined to add the two-year margin sought by the defence automatically.

Minor's consent / sexual offence proof - The prosecutrix described travelling via Jhansi to Hyderabad and being raped by Rakesh. The Court treated the material medical finding, on which the doctor had not been questioned, as corroborative. Having found the prosecutrix under eighteen, it held that apparently voluntary travel or failure to raise an alarm did not make consent material under Section 375 sixthly IPC and Section 4 POCSO. It affirmed the convictions under Sections 363, 366 and 376(1) IPC and Section 4 POCSO.

Sentence / governing 2015 minimum - The Court affirmed seven years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 4 POCSO, finding that the minimum for that provision and Section 376(1) IPC at the time of the offence was seven years. The trial court had imposed no separate term under Section 376(1) in view of the POCSO sentence. The appeal was dismissed; the separate SC/ST Act acquittal was not disturbed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh appealed under Section 374(2) CrPC against the judgment dated 4 October 2016 of the Special Judge (SC/ST Act), Shivpuri, in Sessions Trial 14/2016. He was convicted under Sections 363, 366 and 376(1) IPC and Section 4 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012. The court imposed rigorous imprisonment of three years under Section 363, five years under Section 366 and seven years under Section 4 POCSO, with fines of Rs 2,000, Rs 3,000 and Rs 5,000 and default terms of forty days, two months and six months respectively. It imposed no separate term under Section 376(1) because of the POCSO sentence. He had been acquitted of the charged Section 3(2)(v) SC/ST Act offence.

The mother, Laxmi, said that on 25 October 2015 she and her husband went to the fields, leaving the prosecutrix and a son at home. On returning, they learned that the girl had gone to the market around 11 am and had not returned. A report was lodged the next day at Bhaunti police station. The girl was recovered on 1 November, was medically examined and gave a statement under Section 164 CrPC. School date-of-birth documents and forensic samples were collected, and the charge-sheet followed. At trial, the prosecutrix said that Rakesh's sister-in-law, Bharti, persuaded her to go to the market. Rakesh then took her by train through Jhansi to Hyderabad and raped her at a friend's house. She also described subsequent pressure by his associates, before her recovery by the police, to make a statement as they wished. The examining doctor found a torn hymen but no external injuries.

Rakesh argued that the prosecutrix had travelled with him for days without raising an alarm and had consented. He disputed her minority because her father, Badri, said that he had estimated her age when admitting her to school. Rakesh sought a two-year margin which, he argued, would make her an adult. The State relied on the school-recorded date of birth, 3 February 1999, and the statutory irrelevance of a child's apparent consent.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, held that Rule 12 of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Rules 2007, although designed to determine the age of a child accused of an offence, supplies the basis for determining a child victim's age. The quoted hierarchy prefers a matriculation or equivalent certificate, then the first school's date-of-birth certificate, then a civic birth certificate, and resorts to medical opinion in their absence. The Court in the present case applied that order of documentary evidence in accepting the school admission register and certificate proved by the headmaster.

State of Chhattisgarh v. Lekhram, (2006) 5 SCC 736, held that a school register maintained by officials in the discharge of public duty is admissible under Section 35 Evidence Act, but an entry is not automatically conclusive; evidence about its source and corroboration may support its weight. Murugan v. State of T.N., (2011) 6 SCC 111, explained that admissible records made ante litem motam can be reliable, while allowing a court to examine who supplied the date and whether corroboration is needed. These qualifications addressed the objection based on the father's estimate of age at admission. In the circumstances of this case, the Court treated the register, made long before the case arose, as decisive and said that an ossification assessment supported it. Mukarrab v. State of U.P., (2017) 2 SCC 210, warned against blind reliance on radiological examination, whose developmental markers vary and cannot determine age precisely. The Court quoted it while declining to displace the school document by automatically allowing a two-year margin.

3. Statutes considered : Section 4 POCSO Act punished the charged penetrative sexual assault, with the seven-year minimum identified by the Court for the 2015 offence. Under Section 375 sixthly IPC, consent was immaterial where the girl was below eighteen for the charged rape under Section 376(1), whose relevant minimum the Court also identified as seven years. Sections 363 and 366 IPC governed the kidnapping and abduction-related convictions affirmed with the sexual offence. Section 35 Evidence Act was considered in relation to the school admission entry made in the discharge of public duty. Rule 12 of the Juvenile Justice Rules 2007, applied through Jarnail Singh, supplied the priority of age evidence. Section 164 CrPC governed the statement recorded during investigation, and Section 374(2) provided for the appeal. The SC/ST Act charge resulted in acquittal at trial, which was not reversed.

4. Issues : Whether the prosecutrix was under eighteen on 25 October 2015 despite the father's estimate of age at school admission and the requested two-year adjustment; how the documentary record and ossification evidence should be weighed under the cited Supreme Court decisions; whether her travel and failure to raise an alarm could amount to legally effective consent once minority was established; whether her account of sexual assault and the medical findings supported the convictions; and whether the relevant statutory minimum permitted interference with the seven-year POCSO sentence.

5. Ratio / Findings : Headmaster Ramesh Singh Bhadoriya proved the government school's admission register (Ex P/13) and certificate (Ex P/14), recording birth on 3 February 1999. He explained that the certificate was based on the register. The father had assessed age at admission. Applying Jarnail Singh's preference for available documentary records and Lekhram and Murugan on the evidentiary value of earlier school entries, the Court found the record reliable in this case. It described the ossification test as corroboration. Mukarrab showed that medical age estimates are not exact, so the Court declined to add two years automatically in the appellant's favour. It found the girl to have been aged about sixteen years and eight months on 25 October 2015.

The prosecutrix identified Rakesh as the person who took her from the market through Jhansi to Hyderabad and raped her there. The Court treated the doctor's material finding, on which the doctor had not been questioned, as corroboration despite the absence of external injuries. It held that minority defeated the consent defence: travelling with him for that period or not calling for help could not make consent legally effective. It therefore affirmed the four convictions.

The Court identified seven years as the minimum then applicable under Section 4 POCSO and Section 376(1) IPC. It affirmed the POCSO term and found no basis to alter the other sentences. It noted that the trial court had imposed no separate term under Section 376 in view of the Section 4 sentence.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the conviction and sentence dated 4 October 2016. The terms of three years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 363, five years under Section 366 and seven years under Section 4 POCSO, with the stated fines and default terms, stood affirmed. No separate term was awarded under Section 376(1). Rakesh was in jail and was directed to undergo the remaining sentence.

Rakesh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1128/2016, 21/09/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (677) Prev Next

Headnote :- Witness credibility / unproved FIR contradiction - Defence counsel had not formally confronted Dev Singh with his earlier FIR account, so the Court did not treat that account as a proved contradiction. In cross-examination, however, he admitted that he went to the well without noticing the bloodied body and first learned of the death from Komal. This was materially inconsistent with his testimony that he discovered the body on waking. The sole witness to the alleged incriminating nighttime circumstance was found unreliable on that independent ground.

Discovery / forensic nexus - The officer described the recovery of a hidden axe following Rakesh's disclosure, but Dev Singh described an axe lying openly nearby, and another seizure witness did not support the prosecution. The Court found that seizure pursuant to the disclosure had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt. The presence of group A blood on both the axe and the deceased's clothes could not identify the accused or overcome the failure to prove the recovery.

Investigation records / reasonable doubt - The arrest documents and those relating to seizure of the blanket and cot bore unexplained overwriting of times, inconsistent with the claimed sequence of events at the spot. The officer did not record the statement of Awadhesh, who had slept close to the deceased, and cited no case-diary entry supporting his claim that Awadhesh had refused to give a statement. The exorcism-related motive advanced by the officer had no witness evidence to support it. Together with Rakesh's continued presence when the police arrived, these defects prevented the circumstances from forming a complete chain, despite medical proof of homicide. The Section 302 IPC conviction and life sentence were set aside. Rakesh was acquitted and ordered to be released if not required in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 21 April 2008 of the Additional Sessions Judge, Karera, in Sessions Trial 98/2006. He had been convicted of murder under Section 302 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment with a fine of Rs 1,000 and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The prosecution said that on 24 March 2006 he, Awadhesh and Komal accompanied their maternal uncle, Premnarayan, to the home of Dev Singh, a grocer. They intended to take Rakesh to Survaya for exorcism-related treatment. The visitors slept outside on cots; Dev Singh was inside. In his FIR, Dev Singh reported that around 3 am, after a dog barked, he saw Rakesh with an axe near the sleeping place and told him to return to bed. Early on 25 March, Premnarayan was found dead on a cot with sharp injuries and a bloodied blanket and mattress. Dev Singh suspected Rakesh. The police arrested him, claimed to have recovered an axe following his disclosure, seized bedding and teeth, and sent articles to the FSL. The trial court convicted him.

Rakesh challenged the chain of circumstances and the axe seizure despite the reported group A blood match. The State defended the judgment. The prosecution examined Khemraj, Dev Singh, Komal, Sitaram, investigating officer Ravi Bhadoriya and Dr Pradeep Sharma; Rakesh called Govind Das in defence. Khemraj witnessed the formalities concerning the body and bedding but was not cross-examined. Komal described the overnight visit and discovery of the body but did not know who had killed Premnarayan. Nothing incriminating emerged from his examination after he was declared hostile. Sitaram, a witness to seizure of the bedding, the arrest and seizure of the axe, did not support the prosecution. The appeal turned on Dev Singh's changing accounts of what he had seen and the officer's documents; there was no direct eyewitness to the killing.

2. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC was the murder charge and conviction under appeal. Section 374 CrPC supplied appellate jurisdiction. The alleged disclosure and recovery of an axe were examined as an evidentiary circumstance. The Court applied the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt to whether the appellant had committed the offence and to the cumulative circumstantial case.

3. Issues : Whether the medical evidence established homicidal death; whether Dev Singh was reliable concerning the nighttime axe and morning discovery despite his material admissions in cross-examination; whether an axe was reliably recovered following Rakesh's disclosure and whether the group A result could connect him to the killing; whether the alterations to arrest and seizure times, failure to record Awadhesh's statement, absence of independent proof of motive and Rakesh's presence when the police arrived left the chain of circumstances incomplete. The Court distinguished proof of the violent death from proof that this appellant caused it.

4. Ratio / Findings : Dr Sharma documented three sharp-force wounds to the neck and lip, including an injury to a large vessel, and an abrasion; death resulted from haemorrhagic shock. His cross-examination allowed for the use of one or more sharp weapons but did not undermine the finding of homicide. Komal corroborated only the visitors' presence and discovery of the body; he identified no killer. The Court directly analysed the depositions, exhibits, medical evidence and FSL evidence.

Dev Singh's examination-in-chief suggested that he encountered Rakesh carrying an axe at night and, on waking, saw Premnarayan already dead. In cross-examination, he said that he first walked to a well, where Komal told him about the death, and that until then he had not known of it. The Court considered this improbable if he had passed the occupied cots and bloodied body. It expressly declined to treat differences between the FIR and his testimony as formally proved contradictions because he had not been confronted with the FIR. His independent admissions in court were nevertheless sufficient to discredit his account of the sequence of discovery. There was no direct eyewitness account of the killing.

The investigating officer said that the accused disclosed that he had hidden an axe in a closet made of stones and that it was seized there. Dev Singh, cited as a seizure witness, said that the axe was lying nearby in the open and did not describe any stone closet. Sitaram did not support the seizure. The Court found no reliable recovery from a hidden place at the accused's instance. It therefore declined to use the FSL finding of group A blood on the axe and clothing as a circumstance against him. A matching blood group, without proof of the axe's source and recovery, did not identify the person who used it.

The timing documents created further doubt. Dev Singh's account and the officer's estimate of arrival placed the police at the spot by about 8 am, when Dev Singh said that Rakesh was arrested. The arrest memo bore an overwritten time, apparently changing 12 to 11, while the alleged disclosure and axe seizure were timed at 11:20 and 11:40 am. The bedding seizure memo also bore an altered time without initials. The Court inferred that the paperwork had been prepared at the police station and required the prosecution to explain the alterations; no explanation resolved the doubt. The officer did not record the statement of Awadhesh, despite his having slept there. His claim that this relative was unwilling to give a statement was unsupported by the case diary. The suggestion that anger over exorcism supplied a motive came from the officer, not Dev Singh or another witness capable of proving it; the proposed exorciser had not been investigated. Rakesh was still at the scene when the police arrived. Taken together, these circumstances failed to prove beyond reasonable doubt that he had caused the death.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal. The conviction under Section 302 dated 21 April 2008 and the life sentence were set aside, and Rakesh was acquitted. He was in jail and was directed to be released immediately unless required in another matter. The trial record was ordered to be returned with the judgment for compliance.

Rakesh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 449/2008, 13/09/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (678) Prev Next

Headnote :- Dying declaration — fitness and recorder - Under Laxman v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 6 SCC 710 (Constitution Bench), reiterated in Surendra Bangali v. State of Jharkhand (Cr.A. 1078/2010, 4 February 2021), a doctor's formal certificate of fitness is a rule of caution. The essential requirements are reliable proof of the declarant's fitness and a voluntary, truthful account. State of Haryana v. Harpal Singh, (1978) 4 SCC 465, permits reliance on coherent communication despite physical distress. Here, the treating doctor himself recorded Lakhan's later declaration. The Court accepted his fitness endorsement and oral evidence, and the postmortem evidence did not establish inability to speak. Recording by an Executive Magistrate was not mandatory in the urgent circumstances.

Dying declarations — successive statements - The Court assessed together Lakhan's detailed FIR, lodged while he was alive and later relevant to the cause of his death under Section 32(1) Evidence Act, and his shorter question-and-answer declaration recorded by the doctor. Jagbir Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2019) 8 SCC 779, requires scrutiny of material consistency, fitness, voluntariness and surrounding evidence when declarations differ; minor differences do not automatically invalidate them. The doctor's record contained four assailants' names because he had not asked about additional participants. The FIR named nine, and eyewitness testimony independently supported the convictions of the six participants. Vikas v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 2 SCC 516, explains that necessity underlies Section 32(1), while reliability must still be assessed. The absence of a notation that the doctor's document had been read over, and an attesting witness turning hostile, did not invalidate the statements on this record.

Witness omissions / delayed examination - Shyamlal Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2012) 7 SCC 646, and Menoka Malik v. State of W.B., (2019) 18 SCC 721, distinguish material contradictions from trivial variations. Pista's improvement about particular weapons did not undermine the account of the assault itself. State of M.P. v. Man Singh, (2003) 10 SCC 414, rejects an automatic adverse inference against a witness not named as an eyewitness in the FIR. Malkhan and Raghuvar were named as helping take Lakhan to the police, and their accounts of seeing the incident from a distance were accepted. V.K. Mishra v. State of Uttarakhand, (2015) 9 SCC 588; Ganeshlal v. State of Maharashtra, (1992) 3 SCC 106; and Banti v. State of M.P., (2004) 1 SCC 414, require assessment of delayed examination under Section 161 in its context. The defence had not asked the investigating officer to explain the delay in recording Pista's statement.

Related witnesses / independent witnesses - Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129; Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701; Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52; Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195; Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475; Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271; and Ashok Kumar Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2008) 12 SCC 173, were considered. They require careful appraisal of related witnesses' testimony rather than its mechanical rejection. Non-examination of public witnesses does not invariably justify an adverse inference. The Court found Pista, Malkhan and Raghuvar credible, with no foundation for the allegation that they had an interest in falsely implicating the accused.

Medical proof / weapon - Krishnan v. State, (2003) 7 SCC 56, and Thaman Kumar v. State (UT of Chandigarh), (2003) 6 SCC 380, require a distinction between genuine incompatibility with medical evidence and minor variation before credible eyewitness evidence is displaced. The absence of dragging abrasions did not outweigh the account of farsa blows to the head and leg and the evidence of fatal haemorrhage. Nankaunoo v. State of U.P., (2016) 3 SCC 317, was considered on the limited value of the weapon recovery. No blood was found on the farsa seized two and a half months later, but that was not decisive because the direct evidence stood independently.

Common object / partial acquittal - Charan Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 4 SCC 205, distinguishes common object under Section 149 from common intention under Section 34, which requires prior concert. Here, the collective restraint and assault supported liability without proof that every member had inflicted a lethal blow. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749, holds that falsus in uno is not a mandatory rule. Acquittal of three alleged instigators did not require rejection of the separable evidence against the six convicted participants.

Alibi / motive - Jitender Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2012) 6 SCC 204; Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1; and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, require an alibi sufficiently specific to exclude presence once the prosecution has proved participation. The vague account that the accused were doing labour work elsewhere failed. Under Bikau Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2003) 12 SCC 616, and Saddik v. State of Gujarat, (2016) 10 SCC 663, absence of proved motive is immaterial where reliable direct evidence establishes participation.

Unused Section 161 statements - Section 173(5) CrPC requires the statements of witnesses whom the prosecution proposes to examine. It did not require the prosecution to file the statements of two persons from the school whom it did not intend to call. The accused could seek necessary material under Section 91 and call a person as a defence witness. The appeal was dismissed. The surviving appellants' convictions under Sections 147, 148 and 302/149 IPC and their life sentences were affirmed; the deceased appellant's appeal had abated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This appeal under Section 374 CrPC challenged the Additional Sessions Judge, Karera's judgment dated 25 June 2004 in Sessions Trial 265/2001. On 18 July 2001, while Lakhan was grazing cattle with his wife Pista, Santosh, Nawab and Dhirendra allegedly pressed him to compromise an old matter. After he refused, a larger group came to the field. Lakhan lodged a detailed FIR at 2:15 p.m. while still alive. He attributed to Rakesh a farsa blow to the forehead and another severing the lower left leg, to Gudda blows with a luhangi, and to Shivraj, Raju, Santu and Rameshwar restraint or dragging. Pista and Ashok were allegedly threatened when they tried to intervene. The police sent Lakhan for treatment with a request to record his declaration. Dr Vinod Chaurasia examined and treated him, then recorded a question-and-answer declaration naming four persons. Lakhan died on the way to the district hospital. Later in the investigation, the prosecution seized a farsa from Rakesh and a luhangi from Gudda.

Dr Govind Singh's postmortem identified traumatic leg amputation, a deep frontal head wound with skull and brain injury, rib and lung injuries and other sharp and blunt trauma, and attributed homicidal death to shock and haemorrhage from multiple injuries. The trial court convicted the appellants under Sections 147, 148 and 302/149 IPC, imposing three years' rigorous imprisonment for the rioting counts and life imprisonment plus Rs 1,000 fine for the murder count, concurrently, but acquitted Santosh, Nawab and Dhirendra. Gudda, appellant 3, died on 30 June 2016 and his appeal had been dismissed as abated.

The surviving appellants disputed Lakhan's ability to speak and relied on differences between his FIR and the doctor's declaration. They challenged the doctor's fitness endorsement and the absence of an Executive Magistrate. They questioned Pista's alleged improvements and delayed police statement, the failure to name other witnesses expressly as eyewitnesses in the FIR, the witnesses' relationships and the absence of independent school witnesses. They also relied on the absence of blood on the seized farsa, the difference between the field and well descriptions, missing dragging abrasions and the absence of motive after a compromise. They disputed the effect of the three acquittals and whether all the remaining appellants shared a common object to murder. Four appellants called Raghunath to support their alibi. The State defended the trial judgment.

2. Precedents — Considered : Laxman v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 6 SCC 710, a Constitution Bench decision, was the central authority on mental fitness and recording a dying declaration. A medical certificate is a rule of caution. What matters is the recorder's satisfaction that the declarant was fit and the court's confidence that the account was voluntary, truthful and free from tutoring or imagination. Laxman rejected the overly broad contrary requirement stated in Paparambaka Rosamma and affirmed Koli Chunilal Savji. Surendra Bangali v. State of Jharkhand, Criminal Appeal 1078/2010, decided 4 February 2021, reiterated Laxman's rule that evidentiary value depends on the facts of the case. State of Haryana v. Harpal Singh, (1978) 4 SCC 465, illustrated that coherent speech may be accepted despite a deteriorating physical condition. The Court applied these principles to the two doctors' evidence, the police recorder's account and Dr Chaurasia's direct observation. The small writing used for the subsequent fitness endorsement did not displace that substantive proof. Recording by an Executive Magistrate was not required in these urgent circumstances.

Jagbir Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2019) 8 SCC 779, explained how to assess multiple dying declarations. A credible declaration may by itself sustain conviction, but where several accounts exist, the court must scrutinise material inconsistencies, surrounding evidence, mental fitness and voluntariness rather than automatically accept or discard them all. The Court applied this approach to Lakhan's detailed FIR and the doctor's shorter questioning. The doctor had not asked whether there were other assailants, and other eyewitness evidence was available. Vikas v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 2 SCC 516, explained why Section 32(1) Evidence Act admits such statements without oath or cross-examination; reliability still had to be assessed. Shyamlal Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2012) 7 SCC 646, distinguished material contradictions from ordinary omissions. Menoka Malik v. State of W.B., (2019) 18 SCC 721, held that embellishment does not require rejection of all the evidence if its reliable parts can be separated. State of M.P. v. Man Singh, (2003) 10 SCC 414, rejects an invariable adverse inference merely because a witness is not named as an eyewitness in the FIR. The Court applied these rules to Pista's improvement about weapons, Malkhan and Raghuvar's observations from a distance, and the field and well descriptions. V.K. Mishra v. State of Uttarakhand, (2015) 9 SCC 588, Ganeshlal v. State of Maharashtra, (1992) 3 SCC 106, and Banti v. State of M.P., (2004) 1 SCC 414, assessed delay in examination under Section 161 in context, including whether the investigating officer had been asked to explain it. Here, the officer was not asked to explain the delay in recording Pista's statement, and delay alone did not invalidate her account.

On related and interested witnesses, Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, and Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, were considered for the distinction between kinship and an interest in securing a false conviction, and the need for careful scrutiny. Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, and Ashok Kumar Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2008) 12 SCC 173, also recognise that public witnesses may be reluctant to testify. Their absence does not invariably justify an adverse inference against relatives whose evidence is otherwise credible. The Court examined Pista, Malkhan and Raghuvar's evidence and found no proven motive to falsely implicate the appellants in place of the actual assailants.

Nankaunoo v. State of U.P., (2016) 3 SCC 317, was considered on the limited effect of a missing weapon or a recovery yielding no useful evidence where reliable direct evidence exists. The time before Rakesh's arrest also gave him an opportunity to clean the weapon. Krishnan v. State, (2003) 7 SCC 56, and Thaman Kumar v. State (UT of Chandigarh), (2003) 6 SCC 380, distinguish medical impossibility from minor variation. Hypothetical medical possibilities do not automatically displace credible eyewitness evidence. The Court applied these rules to the absence of distinct dragging abrasions and the pattern of wounds, while accepting the postmortem evidence of fatal injuries.

Bikau Pandey v. State of Bihar, (2003) 12 SCC 616, and Saddik v. State of Gujarat, (2016) 10 SCC 663, explain that absent or uncertain motive does not defeat trustworthy direct evidence. The Court did not rely on motive to prove the assault. Charan Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 4 SCC 205, explains common object under Section 149. Unlike common intention under Section 34, it does not always require prior concert or an individual overt act, but membership, the shared object and the offence's connection with it must be established. The Court inferred the object from the collective holding, assault and dragging. Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749, holds that falsus in uno falsus in omnibus is not a mandatory rule. The Court separated the failed accusations against three acquitted alleged instigators from the evidence against the six convicted participants.

Jitender Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2012) 6 SCC 204, Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, supplied the test for alibi. Alibi is a rule of relevance under Section 11 Evidence Act, not an exception under the IPC. The prosecution must first prove participation. The defence evidence must then be specific and strong enough to exclude presence or raise a reasonable doubt about it. Raghunath's vague assertion that the accused were doing labour work elsewhere failed against the accepted direct evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 32(1) Evidence Act permits statements by a person who has died about the cause or circumstances of death. An FIR initially recorded as an ordinary complaint may qualify if it has that connection; fitness and reliability remain factual safeguards. Section 11 Evidence Act makes a genuine alibi relevant. Sections 141, 147, 148 and 149 IPC governed unlawful assembly, armed rioting and constructive liability; Section 302 governed murder and the life sentence. Section 374 CrPC provided the appeal. The Court read Section 173(5) CrPC as requiring documents on which the prosecution proposes to rely and Section 161 statements of persons whom it proposes to call, rather than everyone interviewed. Section 91 provided a means to seek other material necessary for the defence, alongside the option of calling a defence witness. The charge sheet had mentioned Section 3(2)(v) SC/ST Act.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Lakhan's grave injuries prevented him from speaking when lodging his FIR and making the later declaration, and whether the doctor's record was unreliable because of the form of the fitness note, the missing read-over notation or the absence of an Executive Magistrate. (ii) Whether the four names in one declaration and nine in the other, and their other differences, were material contradictions, and whether eyewitnesses provided independent support. (iii) Whether Pista's improvements and delayed police statement, the failure to describe Malkhan and Raghuvar as eyewitnesses in the FIR, the witnesses' kinship and the absence of independent witnesses undermined credibility. (iv) Whether the medical injuries, absence of dragging abrasions and recovery of a farsa yielding no useful evidence contradicted the assault. (v) Whether absence of proved motive and acquittal of three alleged instigators negated the remaining evidence or the common object under Section 149. (vi) Whether the police had to file the statements of two persons from the school who were not cited as witnesses, and whether the alibi raised a doubt about the accused's presence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The postmortem and clinical findings established homicidal death from shock and haemorrhage following severe injuries to the brain and lung and amputation of the leg. The postmortem doctor accepted that speaking would be difficult but expressly rejected the claim that Lakhan could not speak; only part of the frontal brain was damaged. The officer who recorded the detailed FIR repeatedly said that Lakhan spoke normally. Dr Chaurasia described him as conscious, fit and responsive after first aid. Once Lakhan died of those injuries, the Court treated his FIR as a declaration about the cause of death and also accepted the doctor's subsequent record. Under Laxman, a formal fitness certificate was not indispensable. The doctor's explanation for writing the subsequent endorsement in small script was accepted, and prompt recording without waiting for a Magistrate was appropriate to Lakhan's condition. The FIR recorded that it had been read over. Although the doctor's document contained no such notation, he was not questioned about that omission in cross-examination. The Court found no suggestion of tutoring.

Lakhan gave a fuller account in the FIR than in the doctor's limited question-and-answer record. The doctor asked for the assailants' names but did not ask whether anyone else had taken part, while also attending to Lakhan's grave injuries. The Court held that the four names in the shorter record did not contradict the nine-name FIR about the central attack or displace the evidence of witnesses who saw other participants. Ashok's refusal to support the prosecution did not by itself invalidate the independent record made by the doctor. Pista's presence was natural and supported by the FIR and her accompanying Lakhan to the police station. Her uncertainty about who lodged it was assessed in light of her shock at her husband's condition. Her later account of particular weapons in the hands of four accused was an improvement, but their presence and collective acts were supported by other evidence. Malkhan and Raghuvar were mentioned as bringing Lakhan to the station. Their accounts of hearing cries and watching from a distance were not disqualified because the FIR had named Pista and Ashok as direct witnesses. Pista's Section 161 statement was delayed, but the officer was not asked to explain the delay. After assessing these weaknesses, the Court accepted the three eyewitnesses.

The medical evidence corresponded with farsa cuts to the head and leg and other sharp and blunt injuries. The slight difference between the field and well descriptions did not change the scene, since the well stood in the field. Under Krishnan and Thaman Kumar, the absence of distinct dragging abrasions did not establish medical impossibility so as to defeat the accepted eyewitness account of the assault. Rakesh's farsa was seized after his arrest more than two months later. The absence of detected blood and the objections to sealing did not displace the direct evidence, even if little weight were given to the recovery. Once the direct evidence of the assault was accepted, the alleged old compromise and absence of a proved motive lost significance. The Court distinguished kinship from an interest in securing a false conviction and declined to draw an automatic adverse inference from non-examination of independent persons from the school.

The prosecution did not intend to rely on or call two persons from the school who had told the investigator that they knew nothing of the occurrence. Section 173(5) did not require their Section 161 statements to be forwarded merely because they had been recorded. The defence could seek necessary material under Section 91 or call a person as its own witness. The alibi of four accused rested on a witness who did not identify their employer or place of work. His suggestion that death resulted from a spade injury was inconsistent with the multiple wounds and leg amputation. The alibi did not raise a reasonable doubt about their proved participation.

The Court found Rakesh and Gudda responsible for the farsa and luhangi attacks as narrated. Shivraj, Raju, Santu and Rameshwar joined the group action and held or dragged Lakhan. The Court inferred a common object from their arrival and coordinated conduct and upheld the Section 149 convictions. Acquittal of Santosh, Nawab and Dhirendra did not require the Court, by applying falsus in uno, to reject the separable evidence against the six participants. It found guilt under Section 302/149 proved beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the convictions and concurrent sentences under Sections 147, 148 and 302/149 IPC, including life imprisonment and fine for murder. Gudda's individual appeal had already abated on his death. The bail bonds of the appellants on bail were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve the remaining sentence.

Rakesh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 450/2004, 10/08/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (679) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR registration / writ remedy - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police duty under Section 154 CrPC when information discloses a cognizable offence from the remedy for refusal: the informant may proceed before a Magistrate under Sections 190/200. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognised rare Article 226 intervention where investigative power was exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and Chapter XII noncompliance justified interference. Even then, the High Court could not prescribe how the police should investigate. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, explained the routes under Sections 154(3) and 156(3), including the Magistrate's power to order registration or proper investigation and to monitor it without personally investigating. Applying Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016 (20 December 2016), the Court declined the ordinary mandamus request because statutory remedies were available. The Division Bench had preserved the recognised Whirlpool exceptions and distinguished Lalita Kumari's holding on police duty from entitlement to a writ.

Magistrate complaint / liberty - The petitioner may approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS, as applicable.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh Dard Vanshi filed Writ Petition 30505/2024 under Article 226, seeking a mandamus directing Police Station City Kotwali, Umariya, to register an FIR and conduct an inquiry on his complaint dated 25 January 2024. Counsel said that the police had taken no action. The State submitted that the petitioner had an efficacious remedy before the Magistrate under Section 200

CrPC, referred to in the judgment alongside Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, holds that the police must register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence, but distinguishes that duty from the procedure available when the police fail to act. Its discussion of All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre and related decisions identified a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190/200 as the remedy. The quoted discussion distinguished Ramesh Kumari's proposition concerning police duty from a general entitlement to mandamus. The present Court adopted that remedial distinction. The separate distinction concerning Lalita Kumari appears in the later Division Bench ruling discussed below.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognises exceptional writ directions where investigative power is exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and Chapter XII noncompliance requires intervention. Even in such a case, the High Court cannot prescribe the investigative steps. It also quoted Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre on a private complaint: the Magistrate can inquire, order investigation where warranted, dismiss a complaint that discloses no offence, or take cognizance and issue process where a prima facie case appears. The present Court considered this exceptional power while applying the ordinary statutory-remedy rule.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explains that an informant may first approach the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), then move the Magistrate under Section 156(3) for FIR registration or proper investigation. The Magistrate can monitor the investigation but cannot personally conduct it. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, followed that route and rejected routine Article 226 petitions in such cases. It observed that, upon prima facie satisfaction, a Magistrate may secure an investigation and recommend a change of investigating officer. The Court invoked both decisions in directing this petitioner to the statutory remedies.

The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., Writ Appeal 247/2016, decided 20 December 2016, held that the availability of alternative remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 ordinarily justifies denial of mandamus for FIR registration, subject to the four exceptional alternative-remedy situations referred to in its quotation of Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, which addresses the police duty to register information, from the question whether an informant can obtain a writ without pursuing those remedies. The present Court applied that binding Division Bench ruling. Whirlpool and Lalita Kumari were considered through the Division Bench's quotation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 confers writ jurisdiction. The Court ordinarily declined to exercise that jurisdiction where adequate, specific remedies were available for police non-registration, while acknowledging exceptional intervention. Section 154 CrPC concerns registration of information disclosing a cognizable offence, and subsection (3) provides recourse to the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) permits a Magistrate to order investigation; Sections 190 and 200 govern cognizance and a private complaint. The Court mentioned Section 223 BNSS as the corresponding complaint route in its final liberty.

4. Issues : Whether a complaint of police inaction after a written representation, by itself, entitled the petitioner to an Article 226 mandamus compelling FIR registration and inquiry, or whether he should use the police-superior and Magistrate remedies. A related question was whether the duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence itself resolved writ maintainability.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the police's statutory registration duty and the complainant's remedy as different questions. It reproduced Supreme Court authority on the complaint and Section 156(3) remedies and on the limits of High Court control over investigative methods. Shweta Bhadauria supplied the Division Bench rule that a writ for registration may be declined when these remedies have not been used, while preserving exceptional cases. Applying that rule, the Court declined mandamus and left the underlying grievance to the competent Magistrate.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the writ petition, expressly leaving the petitioner at liberty, if he wished, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS for redress.

Rakesh Dard Vanshi v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 30505/2024, 14/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (680) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent quashing / alleged mala fides / face-value offence - Renu Kumari v Sanjay Kumar, 2008:INSC:278 : (2008) 12 SCC 346, was applied under BNSS section 528 to assess the FIR's allegations without trying the evidence. Its quoted R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal categories preserve quashing for legal bars, absence of offence ingredients, inherently improbable cases or manifestly abusive mala fides. An allegation of bad motive against the informant, standing alone, does not nullify a disclosed cognizable offence. The husband's earlier police complaint about access to the child and alleged impropriety by his wife did not, by itself, justify disbelieving her FIR allegations of assault and death threats during divorce and guardianship litigation. No custody order entitled him to take their son forcibly. The Court refused to quash Crime 29/2024 and the pending JMFC case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Misc. Criminal Case 1729/2025, Rakesh Jatav sought quashing under BNSS section 528 of FIR Crime 29/2024, registered at Guna Mahila Police Station under BNS sections 85, 115(2) and 351, and RCT 2190/2024 pending before the JMFC, Guna. Respondent 2 had been his wife since 16 December 2012 and had moved with their son, Suryansh, to Guna in March 2024. Her FIR alleged that he arrived while her friend Aashu Parmar was visiting, demanded custody of the son, quarrelled, struck her with his fists and threatened her while leaving. It also alleged a confrontation outside a court on 23 September 2024, pressure to withdraw proceedings, and threats to kill and defame her, which could compel her to leave her job. Rakesh relied on his complaint dated 13 September 2024 to the Inspector General, asserting that she had removed the son from his home, blocked contact, used abusive language and associated with a GRP constable. He relied on the pending divorce proceedings and the dispute under sections 7 and 8 of the Guardian and Wards Act, contending that the FIR was retaliatory. The judgment describes the guardianship application as apparently filed on 11 September 2024. Its concluding analysis refers to an initial FIR incident in February 2024, while the earlier FIR summary uses the approximate formulation “one month back”.

2. Precedents — Considered : Renu Kumari v Sanjay Kumar, 2008:INSC:278 : (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted at length and applied to the husband's asserted counter-complaint. It describes the inherent jurisdiction preserved by CrPC section 482, invoked here through BNSS section 528, as a power to be exercised sparingly to give effect to orders, prevent abuse and secure justice. At the quashing stage, the High Court can test whether the FIR, taken at face value, discloses an offence. It should not ordinarily decide disputed witness credibility, the probability of conviction or factual issues reserved for trial. Renu Kumari reproduced R.P. Kapur v State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, on a legal bar, absence of offence ingredients on the face of the allegations and lack of legal evidence. It distinguished the absence of evidence from a case where the weight of existing evidence could be debated. It also set out the illustrative categories in State of Haryana v Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, including a manifestly malicious proceeding, but cautioned that the categories are not an exhaustive or automatic rule. A report alleging a cognizable offence is not quashed merely because the informant is accused of bad motive; properly supported abuse can still matter. The Court in the present case applied that balance, found cognizable allegations on the face of the FIR and did not accept Rakesh's earlier complaint as conclusive proof of fabrication.

3. Statutes considered : BNSS section 528 supplied the High Court's inherent jurisdiction to quash and was applied with the tests under its predecessor, CrPC section 482, stated in Renu Kumari. BNS sections 85 (the marital-cruelty charge), 115(2) (hurt) and 351 (criminal intimidation) were cited as the FIR offences. The Court held that the alleged physical assault and threats disclosed a cognizable offence. The proceedings under sections 7 and 8 of the Guardian and Wards Act and the divorce case formed the background to the competing child-custody claims; no order in the husband's favour entitled him to take the child forcibly.

4. Issues : Whether the applicant's prior complaint to the police and allegation of his wife's retaliatory motive demonstrated an abuse of process that overcame her FIR's allegations when taken at face value. Whether the pending divorce and guardianship case, in the absence of a custody order for him, made the alleged custody confrontation, fist assault and threats legally non-cognizable or allowed immediate quashing of the FIR and JMFC proceedings.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying Renu Kumari, the Bench recognised that exceptional quashing was available for a manifest legal defect or abuse, but declined to assess the competing marital narratives in the petition. The complaint made to the Inspector General on 13 September 2024 did not, by itself, justify disbelieving the wife's later account. Her FIR described the husband demanding the son, quarrelling, striking her and threatening her at home and during the court-related dispute. The ongoing divorce and custody litigation explained the setting but did not authorise force; the applicant had no favourable custody order. The Court found cognizable criminal allegations on the face of the FIR and therefore no ground to exercise its inherent power to interfere.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under BNSS section 528. Crime 29/2024 and RCT 2190/2024 before the JMFC, Guna, remained pending.

Rakesh Jatav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 1729/2025, 29/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (682) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial chain / proof - Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, requires the circumstances to be fully proved and conclusive, consistent only with guilt, and to form a complete chain excluding any reasonable conclusion consistent with innocence. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196; Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1; and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, reiterate that suspicion cannot replace proof and that an essential missing link breaks the chain. The Court considered together the driver's departure in a loaded truck, identification of his body near Guna, Rakesh's apprehension while unloading that truck at an abandoned factory, discovery at his instance and the blood evidence. On that cumulative assessment, it affirmed the convictions for murder with common intention, robbery and concealment.

Section 27 discovery / public place - Anter Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2004) 10 SCC 657, limits proof of information given by an accused in police custody to the portion distinctly related to a relevant fact discovered as a result, including the place where the object was found and the accused's knowledge of it. Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1, explains that accessibility of the place does not, by itself, negate the accused's knowledge of concealed material. The Court accepted the recovery of bloodstained clothes and a durrie from Amola Ghati at Rakesh's instance despite a witness's confusion about his name and the absence of separate identification of the clothes. This test does not make the rest of a police confession admissible.

Conduct / Section 8 - State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600, distinguishes evidence of pointing out a place and other conduct from mere statements subject to Section 162 CrPC or Section 27 Evidence Act. The Court considered Rakesh's knowledge of the place of recovery, his presence while unloading the missing truck and his attempted flight as parts of the cumulative chain. The quoted rule does not make the entire narrative of a custodial confession admissible.

Police recovery / witness assessment - Baldev Singh v. State of Haryana, (2015) 17 SCC 554, permits reliance on trustworthy police testimony after careful scrutiny, without an invariable requirement for corroboration by civilian witnesses. Ashok Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2010) 12 SCC 350, and Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2012) 7 SCC 646, require testimony to be read as a whole rather than assessed by isolating a mistaken name or date. The Court accepted the officer's account of recovery and rejected the objections based on isolated portions of Motilal's evidence about the name and Vijay Pratap Singh's evidence about the chronology.

Forensic limits / relief - Human blood was found on the recovered clothes and samples from the truck seats. Group O was reported on a recovered pant and some material from the seats, and group B on other seat covers. The Court considered the reports as corroborative links. It dismissed the appeal and affirmed the concurrent sentences of life imprisonment, six years' imprisonment and seven years' imprisonment under Sections 302/34, 201 and 392 IPC, respectively. Rakesh remained in custody.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This appeal under Section 374 CrPC challenged the judgment dated 27 December 2006 passed by the Additional Sessions Judge/Special Judge, Guna in Sessions Trial

345/2000. Rakesh Kumar Sharma was convicted under Sections 302/34, 201 and 392 IPC and sentenced, respectively, to life imprisonment, six years' rigorous imprisonment and seven years' rigorous imprisonment, with a fine of Rs 1,000 on each count. The sentences were to run concurrently. He was released on bail in the appeal in April 2009 but subsequently failed to appear, and a warrant was issued in December 2009. A later assertion that he had died was unsupported and was not accepted. He was arrested in December 2019 after remaining absent for roughly ten years. Co-accused Rajkumar had died during the trial.

Truck UP 51 B 4395 was loaded with cloth in Surat for transportation to Kanpur. On 28 April 2000, its driver Bhagwandas told the owner that he would leave the following morning with the cleaner. On 2 May, the Guna police found a severely injured, partly decomposed, unidentified male body near Vilonia and recorded a merg. The postmortem disclosed homicidal injuries. A police team in Kanpur district received information about a suspicious truck in an abandoned factory. On 3 May, the team found four persons unloading cloth bundles from that truck. They ran on seeing the police, and shots were fired at the officers, who apprehended Rakesh and Rajkumar. The police recorded their accounts, seized the truck and cargo, and sent the information to Guna. After the previously buried body was exhumed, Bhagwandas's nephew Radheshyam and Vijay Pratap Singh identified it. The Guna police later recovered bloodstained clothing and a durrie from Amola Ghati at Rakesh's instance. Blood was collected from portions of the truck's cleaner-side seat and adjoining material.

Rakesh challenged the completeness of the circumstantial chain, identification of the recovered clothes, contradictions in the witnesses' evidence and the recovery made by the police officer from an allegedly open place. He disputed whether the clothing had been proved to belong to Bhagwandas. He also relied on an apparent statement by Vijay Pratap Singh that he had learned of the death earlier than the chronology permitted. The State supported the trial findings.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, supplied the five conditions for conviction on circumstantial evidence: each incriminating circumstance must be fully established; the established facts must be consistent only with guilt; the circumstances must be conclusive and exclude other hypotheses; and, taken together, they must form a complete chain leaving no reasonable explanation consistent with innocence. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, warned that strong suspicion is not proof. Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, reiterated that the absence of an essential link breaks the chain and that a false or weak defence cannot fill a gap in the prosecution case.

Anter Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2004) 10 SCC 657, explained Section 27 Evidence Act. The fact discovered includes the object, its location and the accused's knowledge of it, but its relevance must be independently established. The information must be supplied by an accused in police custody and must actually lead to discovery. Only the portion distinctly related to the fact discovered is provable. A disclosure ordinarily supplies only one link in the chain. Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1, quoted earlier authority for the limited proposition that an object hidden in a public or accessible place may still be within the accused's peculiar knowledge. The Court applied these principles to the Amola Ghati articles while acknowledging the absence of separate identification of their ownership.

State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600, explained Section 8 Evidence Act: the act of pointing out concealed material may be relevant conduct even where the accompanying statement to the police is subject to the limits of Section 162 CrPC or Section 27 Evidence Act. Baldev Singh v. State of Haryana, (2015) 17 SCC 554, was considered for the admissibility and possible sufficiency of reliable police testimony after careful scrutiny, without an invariable requirement for independent corroboration. The Court used it to assess the officer's evidence of recovery after one panch witness failed to support the prosecution and another confused a name.

Ashok Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2010) 12 SCC 350, and Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2012) 7 SCC 646, require testimony to be read as a whole. Material or serious variations affecting its core must be distinguished from an isolated line in an otherwise coherent account. The Court relied on those decisions to reject the alleged chronological contradiction in Vijay Pratap Singh's deposition and read Motilal's mistaken identification of the appellant as ‘Raju’ in context.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC concerned the jointly committed homicide; Section 392 concerned robbery of the loaded truck; and Section 201 concerned disposal or concealment of the body and bloodstained articles. Section 397 was charged but was not among the convictions upheld in the order. Section 27 Evidence Act limited proof of information given by an accused in police custody to the portion distinctly related to the discovery. Section 8 Evidence Act concerned relevant conduct, including pointing out a place, and the judgment quoted the distinction between conduct and statements. Section 162 CrPC appeared in the qualification quoted from Navjot Sandhu. Section 374 CrPC supplied appellate jurisdiction.

4. Issues : Whether homicidal death and the subsequent identification of the unknown body as Bhagwandas were proved; whether the truck's journey, the apprehension of the accused while unloading its cargo, the Amola Ghati recovery, blood results and the accused's conduct formed a complete chain consistent only with Rakesh's guilt for murder, robbery and concealment; whether accessibility of the recovery site, inconsistencies in the panch witnesses' evidence or the absence of clothing identification broke a material link; and whether isolated mistakes about a date or name rendered the testimony unreliable. The appeal also required consideration of the sentence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The medical report showed a violent homicidal death, though the condition of the body required formal identification. Radheshyam's testimony that he had identified and received his uncle's exhumed body was unchallenged and was supported by Vijay Pratap Singh and the identification memo. The witness connected with the truck owners, whose evidence on this point was likewise not challenged in cross-examination, identified Bhagwandas as the driver of the particular loaded truck departing Surat. The Kanpur police found Rakesh and Rajkumar unloading cloth from that truck in the abandoned factory and recorded their flight when the officers arrived.

The Court found that Rakesh led the Guna police officer to bloodstained clothing and a durrie at Amola Ghati. Motilal referred to the person who made the disclosure as ‘Raju’ in part of his evidence, but had also misnamed the appellant at the outset. The Court read his evidence in that context and together with the officer's testimony about the memorandum and seizure, while noting that another seizure witness had not supported the prosecution. Under Anter Singh, discovery of the place and the accused's knowledge of it constituted a relevant link. Possible accessibility of the place did not, by itself, establish that others knew where the articles lay. The prosecution had not had the articles identified as Bhagwandas's.

The unchallenged FSL reports disclosed human blood on the recovered articles and material from the truck seats. Group O was reported on one pant and certain seat and foam samples; group B was found on two other seat covers. The results supported a connection between the recovered articles and the truck. The Court considered these results together with the identified body, timing, possession of the truck and cargo, knowledge of the place of recovery and conduct, and found the chain complete beyond reasonable doubt. It rejected the argument based on a single line suggesting that Vijay Pratap Singh had heard of the murder on 2 May before the unknown body was reported, and declined to discard his otherwise supported identification on that basis. It affirmed the findings of joint murder, robbery and concealment.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the judgment of 27 December 2006. It upheld Rakesh Kumar's life imprisonment under Section 302/34, six years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 201 and seven years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 392, together with the fines and the direction that the sentences run concurrently. He was in jail and was directed to serve the remaining term. A copy of the judgment was to be supplied to him free of cost, and the trial record was to be returned.

Rakesh Kumar Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 237/2007, 17/02/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (683) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence / murder of cleaner — Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116; Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196; Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1; and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, require a fully proved chain of circumstances excluding any reasonable conclusion consistent with innocence. Suspicion cannot supply a missing link. The identified body of Pandit @ Punnu @ Vinod bore homicidal injuries. Rakesh was apprehended while unloading the deceased transport crew's truck and 130 bundles of cloth at a closed factory, and did not explain his possession of them. The trial court had found the clothing seizure unproved, so the associated FSL report did not supply a proved link. The Court affirmed the convictions for the cleaner's murder and concealment under Sections 302/34 and 201 IPC.

Conduct / statement boundary — State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600, distinguishes relevant conduct under Section 8 Evidence Act from mere statements to the police, which are subject to Section 162 CrPC and the limited rule governing discovery. The Court considered the observed acts of possession, unloading and flight, together with the related conduct.

Witness contradiction — Ashok Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2010) 12 SCC 350, and Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2012) 7 SCC 646, require testimony to be read as a whole. A police witness's isolated reference to the driver as 'Habib' did not displace the independent evidence identifying Bhagwandas as the truck's driver or identifying the body of Pandit, the cleaner who had been separately killed.

Concurrent substantive sentences / consecutive default — The Court considered Sections 31 and 427 CrPC and the decisions in O.M. Cherian v. State of Kerala, (2015) 2 SCC 501, and Sharad Hiru Kolambe v. State of Maharashtra, (2018) 18 SCC 718. Two deaths in a single transaction had led to separate trials because the bodies were left in different police jurisdictions. The Court directed that the substantive terms of life imprisonment and six years' imprisonment in the cleaner's case run concurrently with the sentences in Criminal Appeal 237/2007. Imprisonment in default of payment of the fines was to run consecutively. The appeal was dismissed on the merits of the convictions but partly allowed on the question of how the sentences were to run.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh Kumar Sharma appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 27 December 2006 passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Guna in Sessions Trial 246/2000. He had been convicted under Sections 302/34 and 201 IPC for the death of Pandit @ Punnu @ Vinod and sentenced to life imprisonment and six years' rigorous imprisonment, with a fine of Rs 1,000 and ten months' rigorous imprisonment in default on each count. Co-accused Rajkumar died during the trial. The killing of the truck driver Bhagwandas was the subject of a separate trial and Criminal Appeal 237/2007; the two appeals were heard together. Rakesh was granted bail during this appeal but failed to appear for about ten years. He was arrested in December 2019 after an unsupported assertion that he had died.

On 2 May 2000, the police found an unidentified naked body near Pagara culvert in the Dharnavada police area, Guna. Dr S.K. Jain found blunt trauma to the skull, a cut across the neck and two deep abdominal stab wounds, all ante-mortem. Haemorrhage and multiple injuries caused death. Balram identified the body as Pandit's. Vijay Pratap Singh, who was related to the owners of truck UP 51 B 4395, said that its driver Bhagwandas had reported loading cloth in Surat for a journey to Kanpur. On 3 May, the police found that truck in a closed factory in Kanpur, where four persons were unloading bundles. They fled on seeing the police, and shots were fired. The officers apprehended Rakesh and Rajkumar and seized the truck and 130 cloth bundles. Driver Bhagwandas's body was found in the Cantt police area of Guna, and cleaner Pandit's body in Dharnavada, leading to separate FIRs and charge sheets. The police asserted that Rakesh had disclosed the location of a kurta and torn pajama. A seizure witness said that the clothes lay in a place open to the public and that he had seen no one other than the police. The trial court found the seizure unproved and the associated FSL result ineffective.

Rakesh argued that the circumstances did not form a complete chain proving guilt beyond reasonable doubt. He also relied on the use of 'Habib', instead of Bhagwandas, as the driver's name in the account of the investigation. The State defended the conviction. Although no request for concurrent sentences was made, the Court considered how the sentences were to run in view of the separate appeal concerning the driver.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, supplied the five requirements for circumstantial proof: the circumstances must be fully established and conclusive; the established facts must be consistent only with guilt and exclude other reasonable hypotheses; and the circumstances must form a complete chain excluding any reasonable conclusion consistent with innocence. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, reinforced the distinction between suspicion and proof and the consequence of a missing essential link. The Court applied that framework to the medical evidence of death, identification of the body, the truck's journey, the arrest at the factory and unexplained possession of the cargo.

State (NCT of Delhi) v. Navjot Sandhu, (2005) 11 SCC 600, explained relevant conduct under Section 8 Evidence Act and distinguished it from statements to the police that are subject to Section 162 CrPC or provable only to the limited extent permitted by Section 27 Evidence Act. The present judgment invoked that decision while considering Rakesh's conduct and the information he was said to have given about the body. Ashok Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2010) 12 SCC 350, and Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., (2012) 7 SCC 646, require testimony to be read in its full context rather than rejected on the basis of an isolated line. The Court relied on them to reject the objection based on the officer's use of the wrong name for the driver.

O.M. Cherian v. State of Kerala, (2015) 2 SCC 501, explained the operation of Section 31 CrPC where a life sentence and a fixed term, or two life sentences, are imposed. A fixed term cannot begin after a life sentence has been served, and two life sentences must run concurrently. The Court relied on that decision, together with Section 427(2) CrPC, to direct concurrent running of the sentences imposed in the separate prosecutions for the two deaths. Sharad Hiru Kolambe v. State of Maharashtra, (2018) 18 SCC 718, supplied the distinct rule that imprisonment in default of payment of fines runs consecutively. The Court expressly preserved that consequence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC concerned the jointly committed murder, and Section 201 IPC concerned concealment or disposal. Sections 392 and 397 IPC appeared in the charge-sheet history but were not among the convictions in the cleaner's trial. Section 374 CrPC supplied appellate jurisdiction. Section 8 Evidence Act concerned relevant conduct; Section 27 Evidence Act and Section 162 CrPC arose in the quoted distinction between conduct and statements. Section 31 CrPC concerns multiple sentences for offences at one trial. Section 427(1) generally provides that a subsequent sentence runs consecutively unless the Court directs otherwise. Under Section 427(2), a term of imprisonment or life sentence imposed on a subsequent conviction runs concurrently with a life sentence already being served. Imprisonment in default of payment of fines was treated separately.

4. Issues : Whether Pandit's death was homicidal and his identity proved; whether the circumstances formed a complete chain linking Rakesh to the killing beyond reasonable doubt despite the rejected clothing recovery and the error in the driver's name; what evidentiary weight could be given to observed conduct and reported statements to the police; and whether the substantive terms of life imprisonment and six years' imprisonment in this separate prosecution for the cleaner's death should run concurrently with the sentences in the companion appeal concerning the driver, including how the terms for default in payment of fines were to run.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor was not cross-examined, and the fatal wounds established homicidal death. Balram identified the body as Pandit's. Vijay Pratap Singh identified Bhagwandas as the driver of the loaded truck due to travel from Surat to Kanpur. The police directly observed Rakesh and Rajkumar at the closed factory unloading cloth from that truck and apprehended them after the group fled and fired shots. Rakesh gave no explanation for his possession of the truck and cargo. The Court considered these circumstances together, including the separate locations of the two bodies and the identification of Pandit, and concluded that the chain established guilt beyond reasonable doubt. It noted that the clothing seizure had been rejected and that the FSL report consequently had no evidentiary value.

Reading the police witness's testimony as a whole, the Court found that the solitary reference to ‘Habib’ did not displace the identification of Bhagwandas by the witness connected with the truck owners and Balram's identification of Pandit.

The Court affirmed the life and six-year terms and the fines as imposed, but considered how those sentences were to run in relation to the driver's case. Both victims were killed in one transaction. Their bodies were left in different police station jurisdictions, leading to separate trials. Under Section 427(2), and relying on O.M. Cherian, the Court directed that the substantive sentences in this case run concurrently with those in Criminal Appeal 237/2007, although counsel had made no such request. It expressly directed that the terms of imprisonment for default in payment of fines run consecutively under Sharad Hiru Kolambe.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the conviction and sentence dated 27 December 2006 in Sessions Trial 246/2000 on merits. The appeal was partly allowed only to direct that the substantive terms of life imprisonment and six years' imprisonment in this case run concurrently with the sentences in the companion case concerning the driver. The two terms of imprisonment for default in payment of fines were to run consecutively as directed. Rakesh was in jail and was to serve his remaining sentence. He was to receive a copy of the judgment free of cost, and the trial record was to be returned.

Rakesh Kumar Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 240/2007, 17/02/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (684) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abetment of suicide / instigation and intention - Sections 306 and 107 IPC require intentional instigation, conspiracy or aid, with an active or direct act. Ordinary anger, discord or a lawful demand for repayment cannot, by themselves, suffice. Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, permits an inference of instigation from a continuing course of conduct that leaves a person with no apparent option. Sanju v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, M. Mohan v. State, (2011) 3 SCC 626, S.S. Chheena v. Vijay Kumar Mahajan, (2010) 12 SCC 190, and Gurcharan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2017) 1 SCC 433, emphasise mens rea and positive incitement. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, distinguishes the three modes of abetment under Section 107. The Court applied these tests only provisionally to the allegations that the loan had been repaid but the lenders continued to demand excessive amounts, that a false case had been instituted against the deceased, and that the lenders prevented him from working.

Harassment / causal limits - State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, cautions against treating a hypersensitive response to ordinary friction as abetment. Amalendu Pal v. State of W.B., (2010) 1 SCC 707, requires direct or indirect incitement and positive action proximate to the suicide, rather than a general allegation of harassment. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, explains that instigation depends on intention and the circumstances of the case, without a rigid formula. The Court distinguished a legitimate demand for repayment from the alleged continuing pressure for excessive amounts. It read the suicide note together with the witness statements and found prima facie material showing an overt act.

Inherent-power quashing / tentative view - Praveen Pradhan, (2012) 9 SCC 734, and Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, were relied on for the limited assessment under Section 482 CrPC. At that stage, the Court does not evaluate the evidence as at trial, but considers whether the prosecution material provisionally supports the alleged offence, including an inference of instigation from the circumstances. The FIR and the subsequent charge-sheet under Sections 306/34 IPC were left intact.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh Rathore and the other applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime 497/2016, registered at Narwar police station, Shivpuri, for abetment of suicide under Sections 306/34 IPC. First informant Pawan Jatav stated that his brother Jitendra telephoned him after their father Narayan said that he was heavily in debt and intended to jump from a bridge. Pawan went to the bridge and learned that someone had jumped. Their father was taken to hospital and declared dead. The police recorded witness statements and recovered a suicide note from the deceased's clothing. The statements alleged that loans taken from the applicants and another person had been repaid, but the applicants continued to press Narayan for more money. The Court's account of the note referred to harassment by the lenders, a false case and obstruction of his attendance at duty during the preceding month.

The applicants argued that a demand for repayment of a debt could not amount to abetment. They also disputed whether full repayment had been proved and cited several Supreme Court and Madhya Pradesh decisions. The State relied on the statements and the note, submitted that the charge sheet had already been filed, and opposed termination of the prosecution.

2. Precedents — Considered : Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, defined instigation as goading, provoking, inciting or encouraging. Express words urging suicide are not always necessary, but the conduct must permit a reasonably certain inference of incitement. A continuing course of conduct may create a situation in which the person sees no apparent option, whereas words uttered in anger without intending the consequence do not amount to instigation. The Court applied this distinction to the alleged sustained demands, rather than a single request for repayment. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, distinguished the abettor's intention from the victim's act, recognised all three modes under Section 107 and rejected a rigid formula for inferring instigation from the circumstances, particularly at the tentative stage of quashing. The Court adopted that approach, which depends on the facts of each case.

Sanju @ Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, explained the three modes under Section 107—instigation, conspiracy and intentional aid—and the requirement of mens rea in incitement. Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, and M. Mohan v. State represented by the Deputy Superintendent of Police, (2011) 3 SCC 626, required clear mens rea and a positive, active or direct act intended to push the deceased towards suicide. An adverse event or distress alone is insufficient. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, elaborated the three modes of abetment under Section 107 and the connection with the act abetted. The Court set out these principles together before considering whether the alleged conduct went beyond an ordinary demand for repayment.

State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, urged caution in deciding whether cruelty had actually induced suicide, especially where the response was to ordinary social or domestic friction. Amalendu Pal @ Jhantu v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 1 SCC 707, required proof of direct or indirect incitement and positive action proximate to the death for conviction, rather than an unsupported general allegation of harassment. S.S. Chheena v. Vijay Kumar Mahajan, (2010) 12 SCC 190, reiterated the requirements of intention and positive action, and explained why differences in individual sensitivity preclude a universal formula. Gurcharan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2017) 1 SCC 433, reiterated the requirements of clear mens rea and an active act. The Court considered these safeguards and found that the alleged sequence of events could satisfy the prima facie threshold.

Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, explained that, at the stage of issuing process or considering quashing, the record is not evaluated as proof at trial. The Court may form a tentative view, and a continuing course of conduct may support an inference of instigation. The Court followed that limited approach in refusing to quash the proceedings.

3. Statutes considered : Section 306 IPC punishes abetment of suicide. Section 107 defines abetment by instigation, conspiracy accompanied by a consequential act or illegal omission, or intentional aid. The decision chiefly concerned instigation and intentional conduct. Section 34 IPC appeared as the charging provision concerning common intention. Section 482 CrPC supplied the power invoked for quashing.

4. Issues : Taking the prosecution allegations at face value, whether the lenders' conduct amounted merely to a legitimate demand for repayment or could constitute intentional instigation of suicide in view of the alleged repayment, continuing pressure for excessive amounts, a false case and obstruction of work. Relatedly, whether the recovered note and witness accounts supplied sufficient prima facie material for the prosecution under Sections 306/34 to continue despite the petition under Section 482, without deciding the contested facts or guilt.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court quoted Sections 306 and 107 and examined the Supreme Court authorities on intention, a positive act, reasonable inferences from continuing conduct, and the need for caution before treating general harassment or a hypersensitive response as abetment. It recognised the applicants' premise that merely asking for money legitimately due does not, by itself, amount to instigation. The allegations in the record were materially different. The witnesses stated that the debt had been repaid, but the applicants continued to press Narayan for additional money. The note was said to refer to harassment by the lenders, a false case and a month-long restriction on attending duty. Considered together at this limited stage, these matters could disclose a continuing course of coercion that led him to see no option but to end his life. The Court therefore found a prima facie case warranting prosecution under Sections 306/34.

Praveen Pradhan and Amit Kapur defined the limits of review: the Court was not required to resolve the applicants' factual dispute about repayment or evaluate witness credibility as at trial in deciding this petition. The Court noted that the charge sheet had been filed, but expressly stated that it did not know whether charges had been framed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition under Section 482. FIR Crime 497/2016 and the charge sheet already filed under Sections 306/34 IPC were not quashed, and the prosecution could continue.

Rakesh Rathore and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 2887/2017, 27/11/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (685) Prev Next

Headnote :- SC/ST Act / public view - Hitesh Verma v. State of Uttarakhand, (2020) 10 SCC 710, applied Swaran Singh v. State, (2008) 8 SCC 435, to distinguish a public place from a place within public view. A private place may satisfy the latter requirement when members of the public witness the caste insult, but an incident inside a room where the victim is alone does not. In his own statement under Section 161 CrPC, the complainant said that he was alone in his drawing room when he received the alleged caste abuse and threats by telephone. The offences under Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) of the SC/ST Act were quashed in this case.

Section 294 IPC / public place and annoyance - The alleged obscene words spoken during the same call were not uttered in or near a public place, and the complainant did not allege annoyance to others.

Non-cognizable Section 506 IPC / deemed complaint - Under the Explanation to Section 2(d) CrPC, a police report that discloses a non-cognizable offence after investigation is deemed to be a complaint, and the officer making the report is deemed to be the complainant. The Court preserved the allegation of intimidation under Section 506 notwithstanding the quashing of the other counts and directed that the charge sheet be treated as a complaint for that offence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh Sharma sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime 280/2024, registered at Civil Lines police station, Morena, under Sections 294 and 506 IPC and Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. Narendra Jatav, the complainant, who belonged to a Scheduled Caste, alleged that Rakesh telephoned him on 7 May 2024, used filthy and caste-related language, and threatened to kill and beat him and prevent him from working in the village. In his statement under Section 161, Narendra said that he had lived with his family in Morena for about twenty years while frequently visiting Silaytha, where his wife was Sarpanch and he assisted her. He described a dispute with Shyamsunder on 6 May about arrangements for an election party. The following evening, he was resting alone in his drawing room in Morena when Rakesh allegedly called at 6:09 pm. The conversation lasted one minute and forty-eight seconds. A written complaint made on 13 May led to the FIR.

Rakesh argued that the admitted private setting did not satisfy the SC/ST Act's requirement of public view, that the ingredients of Section 294 were absent, and that the remaining allegation under Section 506 was non-cognizable. The State and the other respondents opposed quashing.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hitesh Verma v. State of Uttarakhand, (2020) 10 SCC 710, supplied the test under Section 3(1)(r): intentional insult or intimidation with intent to humiliate a member of a Scheduled Caste or Scheduled Tribe on account of that status, in a place within public view. It also distinguished a civil or personal dispute from humiliation attributable to caste.

Hitesh Verma quoted Swaran Singh v. State, (2008) 8 SCC 435, on the distinction between a 'public place' and a private place 'within public view'. A gate or visible lawn may be within public view. Even an insult inside a building may satisfy the requirement if members of the public, rather than merely relatives or friends, are present. A private exchange inside a room without such an audience does not. Since Narendra stated that he was alone in his drawing room, the Court found that the required setting was absent.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 3(1)(r) and 3(1)(s) of the SC/ST Act concerned intentional caste-based insult or abuse in the prescribed setting within public view. The Court rejected those counts together because the alleged abuse occurred by telephone while the complainant was alone in his room. Section 294 IPC concerned obscene acts or words in or near a public place causing annoyance to others; the Court found both the public-place and annoyance requirements absent on the allegations made. Section 506 IPC concerned the remaining allegation of criminal intimidation, which the judgment treated as non-cognizable without deciding the truth of the threat or identifying the precise part and punishment. Section 2(d) CrPC and its Explanation deem a police report disclosing a non-cognizable offence after investigation to be a complaint, and the reporting officer to be the complainant. Section 161 governed the complainant's statement during investigation, and Section 482 supplied the power invoked for quashing.

4. Issues : Whether the alleged caste-related abuse during a telephone call received by the complainant while alone at home satisfied the SC/ST Act's requirement of public view, and the consequence for the three cited offences under that Act. Whether the setting and the allegations satisfied the distinct requirements of a public place and annoyance under Section 294 IPC. Finally, whether the entire prosecution had to be quashed because the surviving allegation under Section 506 IPC was non-cognizable, or whether Section 2(d) CrPC permitted it to proceed as a complaint after investigation.

5. Ratio / Findings : Taking Narendra's statement under Section 161 at face value, the Court found that he received the call while alone in his drawing room. Applying Hitesh Verma and Swaran Singh, the requirement of public view was not satisfied merely by the victim's caste status. No member of the public was present there to hear the alleged insult. The Court held that no prima facie offence under Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) was made out and quashed those allegations under the Act.

The Court separately held that the private drawing room was not a public place for Section 294 IPC and that the complainant had not alleged annoyance to others. It stated in paragraphs 12 and 13 that no offence under Section 294 was made out. Paragraph 15 expressly referred to Section 294 as having been quashed along with the SC/ST Act offences, although the final quashing sentence in paragraph 16 listed only the SC/ST Act counts.

The applicant's objection that Section 506 was non-cognizable did not bring the case to an end. Under the Explanation to Section 2(d), a police report disclosing a non-cognizable offence after investigation is treated as a complaint, and the officer making it is treated as the complainant. The Court held that the surviving allegation of intimidation could proceed through that route: once the charge sheet was filed, it could be treated as a complaint, with the investigating officer as complainant.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the application under Section 482. The final order expressly quashed Crime 280/2024 in respect of Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) of the SC/ST Act. The reasons held that no offence under Section 294 IPC was made out, and paragraph 15 expressly treated that offence as quashed, although it was not repeated in the final quashing sentence. The charge sheet was to be treated as a complaint for the remaining allegation under Section 506 IPC, with the investigating officer deemed to be the complainant under Section 2(d) CrPC.

Rakesh Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 21469/2024, 07/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (686) Prev Next

Headnote :- Multiple FIRs / different offence ambit - State of Rajasthan v. Surendra Singh Rathore (Supreme Court, 19 February 2025, SLP(Crl.) 16358/2024) reviewed the rule in T.T. Antony v. State of Kerala, (2001) 6 SCC 181, against successive investigation of the same cognizable offence. It also considered the qualifications recognised in Anju Chaudhary v. State of U.P., Kari Choudhary v. Sita Devi, (2002) 1 SCC 714, Upkar Singh v. Ved Prakash, Babubhai, and Nirmal Singh Kahlon concerning a different ambit, rival versions, a larger conspiracy and newly discovered material. The Court applied the qualification concerning a different ambit. FIR 280/2024 concerned abuse or threats directed at Narendra Jatav. FIR 306/2024, based on a recording he forwarded, additionally alleged incitement between communities under Section 505 IPC, which was absent from the first FIR. The later investigation was not quashed as an impermissible second FIR merely because both reports arose from the same conversation.

Section 505(1)(c) IPC / making versus circulation - The provision applies to a person who makes, publishes or circulates a statement with intent to incite, or which is likely to incite, a class or community to commit an offence against another. Although Narendra, rather than the applicant, forwarded the clip, the Court held that Rakesh's alleged making of the remark directed at the community could prima facie satisfy the provision.

Section 294 IPC / place and annoyance - The alleged obscene words spoken during the private call were not uttered in or near a public place, and no annoyance to others was alleged. The count under Section 294 in FIR 306/2024 was quashed.

Investigation under Section 505 was to continue, and the interim protection was vacated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh Sharma sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime 306/2024, registered at Kotwali police station, Morena, under Sections 294 and 505 IPC. The complainant described himself as a member of the Kirar/Kshatriya community in Silaytha and alleged that he received an audio clip on WhatsApp at about 7 pm on 7 May 2024. The clip reportedly contained Rakesh's obscene abuse directed at Sarpanch Narendra Singh Semil (Jatav), and a reference to members of the Yadav/Kirar community as ‘Keet’ or insects. The complainant said that several community members possessed the clip and that the words hurt their sentiments and could agitate the community. In his statement under Section 161 CrPC, the complainant said that Narendra had sent him the clip. Narendra stated that he had forwarded it after a dispute and telephone exchange with the applicant.

Narendra had separately lodged Crime 280/2024 at Civil Lines police station concerning the same telephone exchange, alleging personal caste-related abuse and threats. That matter was the subject of a companion application under Section 482, MCRC 21469/2024. Rakesh argued that the Kotwali FIR repeated the same incident and was impermissible as a second FIR. He also contended that he had not circulated the clip; Narendra himself had forwarded it. The State and the complainant opposed quashing. The Court considered whether the two FIRs concerned the same offence and whether the distinct allegations under Sections 294 and 505 could survive. An interim order dated 28 May 2024 was in force before the application was decided.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Rajasthan v. Surendra Singh Rathore, decided by the Supreme Court on 19 February 2025 in SLP(Crl.) 16358/2024, was quoted at length and applied. It begins with the rule in T.T. Antony v. State of Kerala, (2001) 6 SCC 181: once information concerning a cognizable occurrence has been recorded, a repetitive FIR and fresh investigation into the same connected offence or transaction may amount to abuse of the powers under Sections 154 and 156 CrPC. Section 173(8), however, permits further investigation, and a counter-case stands on a different footing.

In the reasoning quoted from Surendra Singh Rathore, Anju Chaudhary v. State of U.P. distinguished a genuinely separate incident or a later crime outside the ambit of the first FIR. Kari Choudhary v. Sita Devi, (2002) 1 SCC 714, recognised a rival version and cautioned against quashing, on a purely technical ground, proceedings concerning the police's discovery of the real culprits. Upkar Singh v. Ved Prakash preserved the counter-complainant's right to present an independent version and explained why T.T. Antony did not bar it. The quoted passage referred to Ram Lal Narang v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1979) 2 SCC 322, on further information and conspiracy. Babubhai supplied the factual test of sameness, distinguishing repetition of the same transaction from different incidents or counterclaims. Nirmal Singh Kahlon v. State of Punjab permitted a later FIR based on newly discovered, distinct factual foundations or a wider conspiracy. The High Court applied the qualification concerning a different ambit: incitement between communities under Section 505 was absent from the earlier FIR concerning personal abuse.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 154, 156 and 173(8) CrPC appeared in the Supreme Court's quoted explanation of initial and further investigation. Section 482 CrPC supplied jurisdiction to consider quashing. Section 505(1)(c) IPC was the relevant provision concerning public mischief: making, publishing or circulating a statement with intent to incite, or which is likely to incite, one class or community to commit an offence against another. Section 294 IPC required obscene words in or near a public place causing annoyance to others. That count was quashed because the required setting and allegations of annoyance were absent. The SC/ST Act counts formed part of the background of the first FIR; they were not charges in the present FIR. Section 161 CrPC governed the police statements identifying who had forwarded the clip.

4. Issues : Whether the second FIR concerning the same telephone exchange was barred as a repetition of Crime 280/2024 or concerned an offence under Section 505 of materially different scope. Whether the fact that the applicant had not circulated the clip on WhatsApp defeated the allegation under Section 505 when that provision also applies to the maker of a statement likely to incite members of one community to commit an offence against another. Whether the obscene words spoken by telephone satisfied the separate public-place and annoyance requirements of Section 294 after the recipient later forwarded a recording.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying the exceptions to the second-FIR rule discussed in Surendra Singh Rathore, the Court acknowledged that both reports arose from the same exchange. The first concerned alleged personal caste abuse and threats to Narendra; Section 505 had not been registered in that FIR. The present case concerned words allegedly directed at the Yadav/Kirar community and their potential to incite offences between communities. That offence was outside the ambit of the earlier FIR. The later investigation under Section 505 was therefore not barred merely because the facts were shared.

The statements under Section 161 attributed forwarding of the clip to Narendra rather than Rakesh. The Court nevertheless relied on the alternative words 'makes, publishes or circulates' in Section 505. It found that the alleged maker's statement was prima facie likely to incite one class or community to commit an offence against another. It did not require him to have personally posted the audio.

The alleged filthy abuse directed at Narendra during the telephone exchange was not spoken in or near a public place, and no annoyance to others at that time was alleged. The recipient's subsequent forwarding of the clip did not supply those missing requirements under Section 294. The Court quashed that part of Crime 306/2024 while permitting the police to proceed under Section 505.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the application under Section 482. The offence under Section 294 IPC in Crime 306/2024 was quashed, and the police were directed to continue the investigation under Section 505 IPC. The interim order dated 28 May 2024 was vacated.

Rakesh Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 21473/2024, 07/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (687) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 498-A IPC / continuing cruelty - Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, explains that being driven out of the matrimonial home and the fear of returning can cause mental trauma that continues at the parental home, even after the physical abuse has ceased. Applying that principle and its decision in Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla (Criminal Revision 2376/2020, 22 June 2021), the Court treated the alleged expulsion for failure to meet the demand for Rs 5 lakh and a motorcycle, followed by a further demand at the wife's parental home, as prima facie cruelty.

Relatives / specific role at quashing - Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, refers to Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, and Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207. Merely naming a distant relative in a dowry case is insufficient without specific material. Where particular allegations raise triable issues, the Court does not choose between the rival versions in proceedings under Section 482 CrPC. The elder brother-in-law, though residing separately, was specifically alleged to have joined the later demand and threat at the wife's parental home. The reconciliation records he relied on also showed his participation in family negotiations. Direct allegations against the husband and parents remained. The charge sheet for Sections 498-A, 506/34 IPC and Sections 3–4 Dowry Prohibition Act was not quashed.

Divorce petition / report timing - Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, held that a wife's delay in reporting while settlement was being attempted, and the husband's subsequent filing of a divorce petition, do not by themselves make an FIR a counterblast. Civil and criminal proceedings are independent, and extraneous findings cannot replace a prima facie assessment of the FIR. The husband filed for divorce on 15 December 2021, and the wife made her report on 30 June 2022. That sequence did not, at this stage, discredit her explanation that she had hoped for reconciliation. The Section 482 application was dismissed, leaving the allegations to be tried.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh Singh Jadon, the husband; Hawaldar Singh, the father-in-law; Munni Devi, the mother-in-law; and Raghvendra Singh Jadon, the elder brother-in-law, applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime 187/2022 at Mahila Thana, Gwalior, and the consequential proceedings for Sections 498-A, 506/34 IPC and Sections 3–4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The wife alleged that she had married Rakesh on 11 July 2013 and that substantial cash, ornaments and household gifts had been given. She was initially treated cordially, but the applicants later demanded Rs 5 lakh and a motorcycle. According to the FIR, failure to meet the demand led to physical beating, mental harassment and her expulsion, with a direction not to return until the demand was met and a threat that she would be killed if she tried to return. She alleged that all four applicants later visited her parents' home at Gwalior, repeated the demand and told her family not to send her back until it was met. She had initially tolerated the treatment in the hope that matters would improve. Her parents tried to persuade the applicants before she made the report on 30 June 2022.

Rakesh filed a divorce petition on 15 December 2021. The applicants submitted that the FIR had been lodged after receipt of notice of that petition and was a retaliatory counterblast. Raghvendra claimed that he had lived separately in Gwalior since 2009, worked in private employment and had children studying in schools there. The applicants relied on his request for a fair investigation and produced the reconciliation records of 13 and 30 June 2022. The State and the wife opposed quashing. They relied on the specific allegation of a visit to the parental home at Gwalior and on the reconciliation records showing that Raghvendra had represented the husband and parents. A charge sheet had been filed against all four applicants, and RCT 4396/2022 was pending. The Court separately considered the applicants in their respective groups, rather than proceeding only on the family relationship.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was applied to the mental trauma that continues after cruelty forces a wife to take shelter at her parental home. Loss of safety in the matrimonial home and fear of returning can continue to affect her even when the physical acts occurred elsewhere. The Court applied that principle along with its decision in Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla, Criminal Revision 2376/2020 decided 22 June 2021, concerning compelled residence at the parental home. These authorities supported treating the alleged continued refusal to take the wife back without dowry as cruelty, including the allegation against the elder brother-in-law that he had joined the later demand.

Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was relied on in refusing to quash substantial allegations against the husband and his parents at the threshold. Whether harassment had occurred and had forced the wife to remain away for want of safety was a matter for trial. Its quoted discussion of Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, and Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, cautioned against implicating distant relatives merely by naming them without tangible and specific material. The Court considered Raghvendra's claim of separate residence alongside the particular allegations of a later visit, demand and threat, and the reconciliation documents he had himself produced.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, explained that a wife may delay reporting while attempting reconciliation. The fact that the report follows the husband's divorce petition does not by itself justify an adverse inference. Civil divorce and criminal proceedings remain independent even when they arise from the same facts. In reviewing a case under Section 482, the High Court cannot replace a prima facie assessment of the FIR's allegations with extraneous findings based on the defence. The Court applied this principle in rejecting the husband's counterblast argument based solely on the dates, in light of the wife's stated hope that matters would improve. The passage quoted from Pratibha referred to the Bhajan Lal illustrations; the present Court applied it to the delay and divorce arguments and the requirement to assess the allegations at face value.

3. Statutes considered : Section 498-A IPC concerned cruelty by the husband or his relatives, including the alleged physical harm and continuing mental harm associated with unlawful dowry demands. Sections 506 and 34 IPC concerned the alleged threats and the charge based on common intention. Sections 3–4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were included in the FIR and charge sheet in relation to the alleged demand and transactions. Section 482 CrPC supplied the inherent power to quash. The Court assessed the allegations prima facie, without trying the disputed defence facts. The husband's divorce proceeding under the Hindu Marriage Act formed part of the chronology; it did not determine the criminal case.

4. Issues : Did the FIR and charge sheet attribute sufficiently specific conduct to Raghvendra, the separately residing elder brother-in-law, to justify proceeding against him rather than treating him as a relative implicated merely by name? Were there sufficiently particular allegations against the husband and parents of dowry demands, beating, expulsion and threats? Could compelling the wife to remain at her parental home because the demand had not been met amount to continuing mental cruelty? Should a complaint lodged after a divorce petition and attempts at reconciliation be treated as inherently retaliatory?

5. Ratio / Findings : In considering Raghvendra's case, the Court recognised that relatives should not be implicated on omnibus allegations. There was more than his relationship with the husband: the FIR specifically alleged that he accompanied the husband and parents to the wife's parental home at Gwalior, repeated the demand for Rs 5 lakh and a motorcycle, and threatened that she would not be kept in the matrimonial home without payment. His separate residence in Gwalior did not make that visit implausible, since the wife's parents also lived there. The applicants' reconciliation records showed that Raghvendra had appeared and signed on 13 June as representative of the other applicants and had again attended on 30 June with the husband. Those records supported his participation in the family's affairs. Read with the continuing-cruelty principle in Rupali Devi, the specific allegations disclosed a prima facie case and did not justify quashing the proceedings against him.

As to Hawaldar Singh and Munni Devi, the FIR alleged demands for money and a motorcycle, harassment, beating and expulsion. Although the FIR did not give the date on which the wife left, the husband's divorce pleading stated that she had gone to her parental home on 22 July 2021. Applying Taramani Parakh, the Court treated the particular allegations against the parents as triable. It could not be said that no offence was disclosed even if that account was accepted. The Court found sufficient material to prosecute them under the charged provisions. It did not finally determine guilt or separately examine every ingredient of Sections 506/34 and the Dowry Prohibition Act in relation to each parent.

As to Rakesh, the sequence of the divorce petition, counselling and FIR did not by itself displace the allegations of cruelty. Under Pratibha, fabrication cannot be inferred automatically merely because a wife delays reporting while seeking to restore the marriage. The civil proceeding neither determined nor brought an end to the criminal case. The Court accepted, for this stage, the wife's explanation that she had remained patient in the hope of improvement and had made the complaint when the prospects of reconciliation had failed, even though the divorce petition had already been filed. No other argument was advanced. The Court declined to decide the competing versions in the Section 482 proceeding.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. Crime 187/2022, the charge sheet already filed and pending RCT 4396/2022 against all four applicants remained for trial under Sections 498-A, 506/34 IPC and Sections 3–4 Dowry Prohibition Act.

Rakesh Singh Jadon and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 325/2023, 06/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (688) Prev Next

Headnote :- Double jeopardy / mining-rule civil penalty - Article 20(2) requires prior prosecution and punishment for the same offence; CrPC section 300(1) requires a former trial resulting in conviction or acquittal, subject to its statutory conditions. Payment of a ₹20,625 penalty imposed by the Collector under the Madhya Pradesh Sand (Mining, Transportation, Storage and Trading) Rules 2019 was treated as civil liability, not earlier criminal prosecution and punishment. The applicant therefore did not establish a double-jeopardy bar to IPC section 379/414 proceedings merely by depositing that amount. The observation arose in his first CrPC section 438 application, which he later withdrew.

MMDR compounding / independent IPC offences - State of M.P. v Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, was applied for the proposition that IPC provisions continue to operate in the absence of a statutory bar. Jayant v State of M.P., Criminal Appeal Nos. 824–825/2020 decided 03.12.2020, was quoted for MMDR Act section 23A(1)–(2): compounding prevents proceedings for the compounded MMDR Act/rule offence, while IPC section 379/414 may continue. The Court used that distinction to reject the asserted immunity from the sand-transport criminal case based on his payment of the penalty under the State rules.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rakesh Singh filed his first CrPC section 438 application seeking anticipatory bail in Crime 138/2020 at Police Station Sirol, Gwalior, involving IPC sections 379 and 414 and MMDR Act section 4/21. Police had seized tractors and trolleys carrying sand alleged to have been illegally excavated; he was identified as owner of tractor MP07 H2998. He said that an order dated 30 September 2020 passed by the Collector under the Madhya Pradesh Sand (Mining, Transportation, Storage and Trading) Rules 2019 had imposed a ₹20,625 penalty, which he had paid. He characterised the payment as earlier punishment for the same illegal mining and transport, invoking Article 20(2) to argue that a subsequent criminal case would be double jeopardy. The State opposed the application, submitting that the penalty related to civil liability and did not constitute a first criminal prosecution. The case diary was available, and after the Court considered the constitutional and statutory argument, counsel sought leave to withdraw the bail application. No evidentiary trial or final determination of possession, excavation or knowledge occurred.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Madhya Pradesh v Rameshwar and others, (2009) 11 SCC 424, was cited for the proposition that in the absence of a bar in the special statute or rules, IPC provisions remain applicable. The High Court applied that principle to reject the assumption that the mining regime excluded section 379/414 proceedings merely because a penalty under the sand rules had been paid. Jayant etc. v State of M.P., Criminal Appeal Nos. 824–825 of 2020, decided 3 December 2020, was quoted for the following distinction: valid compounding under section 23A(1), read with section 23A(2), prohibits proceedings or further proceedings for the compounded MMDR Act or rule offence, yet that bar does not extend to IPC section 379 and 414.

3. Statutes considered : Constitution Article 20(2) prevents a person from being prosecuted and punished more than once for the same offence. CrPC section 300(1) prevents a new trial for the same offence, or certain alternative charges on the same facts, after a former trial by a competent court has ended in conviction or acquittal. CrPC section 438 was the procedural route for pre-arrest bail. MMDR Act sections 4 and 21 supplied the mining allegations; section 23A(1)–(2), as discussed in Jayant, concerns the limited effect of compounding for MMDR/rule offences. The 2019 Madhya Pradesh Sand Rules supplied the Collector's penalty. IPC section 379 (theft) and section 414 (assisting concealment/disposal of stolen property) were the separate provisions under which proceedings could continue.

MMDR denotes the Mines and Minerals (Development and Regulation) Act, 1957. The Section 300 protection remains subject to its statutory qualifications, including those concerning distinct offences and later consequences; the Court reproduced the provision as a whole.

4. Issues : Whether the penalty paid under the Collector's order was a prior prosecution and punishment for the same offence sufficient to attract Article 20(2) or CrPC section 300, rather than a civil/regulatory liability. Whether the mining statute, sand rules or the section 23A compounding principle excluded distinct IPC section 379/414 proceedings arising from the same sand-transport facts. As this was a first anticipatory-bail application later withdrawn, whether any bail relief remained to be decided after the legal argument was addressed.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench quoted Article 20(2) and the full CrPC section 300 text and said a person claiming the protection must plead and prove prior prosecution and punishment for the offence now being pursued. It characterised the ₹20,625 payment as a civil penalty that did not constitute the requisite earlier criminal prosecution and punishment. Thus the asserted double-jeopardy premise failed on this record. It also found no MMDR Act or rule provision making the IPC inapplicable. Rameshwar supports the continued operation of the IPC in the absence of a bar. Jayant identifies the narrower statutory limit: compounding may end MMDR Act/rule proceedings for that compounded offence but cannot terminate independent IPC section 379/414 proceedings. Payment alone could therefore not absolve the applicant from those IPC charges.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application for anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC as withdrawn. For the reasons given, payment of the mining-rule penalty alone did not bar the IPC proceedings.

Rakesh Singh v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 38324/2021, 11/08/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (691) Prev Next

Headnote :- Legal insanity / temporal cognitive test - Hari Singh Gond v State of M.P., (2008) 16 SCC 109, Bapu v State of Rajasthan, (2007) 8 SCC 66, Sudhakaran v State of Kerala, AIR 2011 SC 265, and Surendra Mishra v State of Jharkhand, AIR 2011 SC 627, confine IPC §84 to incapacity, at the time of the act, to know its nature or that it was wrong or contrary to law. Medical illness, later aggression, lack of motive or a fall from a train resulting only in a toe abrasion did not prove the appellant's statutory incapacity on 8 June 2007. His subsequent psychosis and abnormal jail behaviour were acknowledged; the trial enquiry that found him fit to make his defence in 2009 concerned a different question.

Section 84 burden / continuing burden to prove mens rea - T.N. Lakshmaiah v State of Karnataka, (2002) 1 SCC 219, reproducing Dahyabhai Chhaganbhai Thakkar, treats the presumption under Evidence Act §105 that the exception is absent as rebuttable by the accused on a preponderance of probabilities, including through prosecution evidence. The prosecution must nevertheless prove guilt and mens rea beyond reasonable doubt throughout. Material insufficient for the exception can still raise reasonable doubt on an offence ingredient. The Bench rejected the §84 defence for lack of proof of incapacity at the time of the act but separately examined murderous intent and converted the conviction; it did not infer intent simply from failure to prove insanity.

Last seen / short interval / surrounding proof - Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, Mahavir Singh and Jagroop Singh require close temporal proximity and assessment of intervening possibilities. Ashok v State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, holds that last seen is not conclusive; Evidence Act §106 does not dispense with prosecution foundations, and other circumstances and explanation matter. Lalitabai saw the appellant, who occupied the adjoining bed, take Abhishek away. Within minutes, Abhishek was found with fresh fatal skull injuries and the same bed-6 patient was caught nearby. The child's earlier medical record showed only an old infected wound. Hearsay and the account of a witness who first claimed in court to have seen the assault, without a police statement, were not relied on as direct proof, nor was absence of blood on a seized brick considered decisive.

Homicide grading / psychosis short of defence - Veeran v State of M.P., (2011) 11 SCC 367, quoting Thangaiya and Virsa Singh, explains that §300 Thirdly requires the particular injury to have been intended and to be sufficient in the ordinary course to cause death. It also explains the distinction concerning a high probability of death under Fourthly; the tests are broad guidelines. The Bench found that Ram Bahadur committed the fatal assault. However, no eyewitness whose account was accepted described its exact manner, no hostility was proved between the appellant and the deceased, who were strangers, and subsequent medical and jail evidence showed psychosis and abnormal behaviour without proving §84 incapacity at the critical time. It reduced §302 to §304 Part I on these facts, sentenced him to the period already undergone, which exceeded 14 years, with ₹1,000 fine and one-month default rigorous imprisonment, and ordered release if no other case required custody.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Criminal Appeal 881/2011 under CrPC §374 challenged the judgment dated 20 August 2011 passed by the 2nd Additional Sessions Judge, Vidisha, in Sessions Trial 239/2007. That judgment convicted Ram Bahadur Thapa of IPC §302 for the death of eight-year-old Abhishek and sentenced him to life imprisonment, ₹1,000 fine and five months' rigorous imprisonment in default. On 8 June 2007 a railway worker reported an injured man, whose identity was then unknown, being brought by train to Vidisha; he was admitted to bed 6 of the district hospital surgical ward after an examination at about 11:25 a.m. showing only a right-toe abrasion. Abhishek was in the adjoining bed 5 for treatment of a forehead wound inflicted two or three days earlier in a family dispute involving his uncle. At 5 p.m. the child's condition was normal apart from the old infected wound. The prosecution alleged that around 6–6:15 p.m. the adjoining patient, later identified as the appellant and a Nepali national, obtained mother Lalitabai's permission to take Abhishek to play, threw him down and hit his head with a brick near the ward. The boy died at the site; hospital staff encountered a crowd holding the bed-6 man, who was taken into custody and transferred to other hospitals. Lalitabai's Dehati Nalishi led to an FIR; police took site earth, brick pieces, clothing, hospital records and witness statements. The post-mortem found fresh large lacerations, skull and facial fractures, exposed and damaged brain matter. Several claimed eyewitnesses withdrew support, and the trial court disbelieved one witness who first asserted direct observation in court without a police statement. The appellant based his §84 plea on his fall from the train, his failure to speak when examined, his subsequent medical treatment for psychosis and his later aggressive behaviour in jail. After insanity was raised as a ground in bail proceedings, a trial-court enquiry concluded on 3 September 2009 that he was fit to make his defence; no application under CrPC §328 to stay the trial had been made. He argued the case was circumstantial, that the old head injury and post-mortem timing undermined causation, that he lacked motive or mental capacity, and alternatively that the offence could be no more than §304 Part I. The State defended the conviction.

The parents attributed the child's older forehead injury to an axe blow by his paternal uncle. That earlier family occurrence was distinct from the fatal assault attributed to the appellant.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hari Singh Gond v State of M.P., (2008) 16 SCC 109, set out IPC §84's legal rather than merely medical cognitive test, the crucial time of commission, the relevance of behaviour shortly before, during and after, the Evidence Act §105 special burden and the prosecution's heavier burden. Its quoted discussion cautioned that oddness, weak intellect, abnormal behaviour, impulse or lack of motive do not automatically prove incapacity, and that proven earlier illness calls for proper investigation; the High Court applied this distinction between incapacity at the time of the act and later illness to the toe injury sustained in the train incident and the subsequent psychosis. Bapu v State of Rajasthan, (2007) 8 SCC 66, repeated the test of incapacity at the time of the act and rejected absence of motive or bizarre behaviour alone; its nested Sheralli Wali Mohammed example gave the same limit. Sudhakaran v State of Kerala, AIR 2011 SC 265, quoted Ratan Lal on the time of the act. Surendra Mishra v State of Jharkhand, AIR 2011 SC 627, differentiated medical from legal insanity and required proof on a preponderance of probabilities under §105 while considering surrounding conduct; it reproduced Bapu, Hari Singh Gond and T.N. Lakshmaiah. The Bench treated these overlapping authorities together and rejected the §84 defence because the statutory incapacity at the time of the act was not proved, even while acknowledging a diagnosis of psychosis.

T.N. Lakshmaiah v State of Karnataka, (2002) 1 SCC 219, was also quoted directly for the distinct burden principle. It explained that the prosecution must prove the killing with the required mens rea beyond reasonable doubt throughout; §105 presumes the general exception absent unless the accused proves its circumstances on the standard of a prudent person applicable in civil proceedings, using all available evidence. The extract from Dahyabhai Chhaganbhai Thakkar further states that material too weak to establish legal insanity may nonetheless raise a reasonable doubt on an offence ingredient, including intention.

Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, quoted Bodhraj, Rambraksh and Anjan Kumar Sarma for the requirement that the interval in a last-seen case be so short as to exclude a realistic possibility of intervention by a third party. Ashok v State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, stated that prosecution foundation comes first and facts specially known to the accused under Evidence Act §106 may call for explanation; last seen alone is not conclusive, and it must be assessed with the surrounding circumstances. Its reference to Harivadan Babubhai Patel also concerned the gap. Mahavir Singh and Jagroop Singh reinforced the importance of a short interval; the Court applied them to the interval of minutes between Lalitabai seeing the appellant take the boy away and the discovery of his body, together with the bed records, capture and fresh injuries. Veeran v State of M.P., (2011) 11 SCC 367, quoted Thangaiya v State of T.N., (2005) 9 SCC 650, and its Virsa Singh rule. Section 300 Thirdly requires intention to inflict the particular injury found and that injury's ordinary-course fatal sufficiency; §300 Fourthly differs from §299 knowledge by a very high, near-certain risk. These are broad rather than inflexible tests. The Bench invoked the distinction when assessing the uncertainty about the precise manner of the assault, the psychosis and the absence of a prior grudge, and converted to §304 Part I.

The reproduced authorities include Dahyabhai Chhaganbhai Thakkar v. State of Gujarat, AIR 1964 SC 1563, on the separate burdens concerning insanity and mens rea, and Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, within the Thangaiya discussion of Section 300 Thirdly. The latter test does not require a separate intention to kill once the intended particular injury and its ordinary-course fatal sufficiency are established.

3. Statutes considered : IPC §84 is a general exception for unsoundness of mind at the time of the act causing incapacity to know its nature or that it was wrong or contrary to law; it is separate from a mere medical diagnosis and from procedural fitness to defend. Evidence Act §105 supplies the accused's rebuttable exception burden on a preponderance of probabilities while the prosecution must prove the offence and mens rea beyond reasonable doubt. Evidence Act §106, as discussed in Ashok, concerns facts especially known to the accused after foundational last-seen proof and does not reverse the basic prosecution burden. IPC sections 299–300, particularly §300 Thirdly's intended particular fatal injury and Fourthly's high-probability knowledge, controlled grading between §302 murder and §304 Part I culpable homicide not amounting to murder.

CrPC §328 was noted as a possible inquiry into current fitness during proceedings, but the trial court had in fact enquired after the bail contention and found the appellant fit in 2009. CrPC §374 supplied appellate jurisdiction. The earlier family cross-cases under IPC sections 323, 324, 294, 506/34 provided context for Abhishek's old wound and did not establish the appellant's culpability.

4. Issues : Whether Abhishek's fatal brain and skull injuries resulted from a fresh homicidal event rather than from the infected forehead wound that preceded admission, including the defence's reading of a "prior to three hours" medical answer versus the 8 p.m. post-mortem. Whether the neighbouring-bed appellant was the assailant despite hostile or disbelieved eyewitnesses, a mother who did not directly see the final blows, a nurse unable to identify him in court and no blood on the brick. Whether his train fall, non-speaking state, later medical diagnosis, aggressive jail behaviour and absence of motive proved contemporaneous §84 incapacity under the accused's special burden; how the separate decision on fitness to make his defence at trial mattered. If the defence failed, whether the prosecution nevertheless proved the mens rea for §302 under Veeran's section 299–300 distinction, or whether §304 Part I was warranted. Finally, what conviction, custody credit, fine/default term and release order followed.

5. Ratio / Findings : The first medical record showed Abhishek's old infected forehead injury and normal general state at 5 p.m., while the later post-mortem described two large fresh lacerations, multiple skull/facial fractures and brain damage. Although the doctor used wording that injuries were "prior to three hours" in cross-examination, his report and other testimony placed death within three hours of the 8 p.m. post-mortem. The Bench rejected the suggested pre-5 p.m. fatal injury and found a fresh homicidal death near 6–6:15 p.m. The father Chironjilal knew of the alleged assault from others and gave hearsay evidence about its commission; Sanman Singh's claim, first made in court, that he had directly seen the assault was not accepted, and other eyewitnesses were hostile. Lalitabai consistently identified the appellant as the adjacent patient who asked to take her son to play, although her cross-examination indicated that she arrived at the body after hearing the commotion rather than personally observing each blow. Bed-head evidence put the appellant away from bed 6 at 5:15 p.m.; nurse Ismita Sachan described beds 5 and 6 and the immediate capture of the bed-6 person by the mob, though she could not identify the appellant in court. A doctor identified the appellant as the train-fall patient, and the hospital and police records established the connection between his identity and the patient who was captured. The short interval and fresh fatal injuries made third-party intervention implausible on this record. The absence of detected blood on the seized brick did not negate the independent links supplied by the hospital records, the scene and the medical findings. The Bench found that the appellant threw and assaulted Abhishek, without treating a witness's hearsay as direct proof of the precise blows.

For §84, the railway medical examination established only a toe abrasion; a head injury causing loss of mental control was suggested but not proved. There was no reliable contemporaneous evidence that at the time of the killing he could not understand what he was doing or that it was wrong or unlawful. He wrote in Nepali the next day about travel, his brother's death, the train incident and difficulty communicating in India. In later treatment Dr R.N. Sahu described psychosis, but at a February 2009 examination he found him normal and able to make his defence. Jail record Ex D2C showed talking and eating as well as periods of aggression, attacks on inmates and sleeplessness. The court distinguished these later manifestations of illness from the narrower §84 test at the offence time, rejected acquittal on legal insanity, and treated the 2009 enquiry into fitness to make his defence as a separate procedural question. Rejection of the insanity defence did not determine whether the homicide amounted to murder: applying Veeran's intended-injury and knowledge distinctions, the Bench considered the appellant's position as a stranger with no shown hostility, the absence of an accepted direct eyewitness account describing the precise manner of the assault, and the medical evidence of psychosis together with abnormal behaviour in custody. It held that culpable homicide under §304 Part I, rather than murder under §302, had been proved.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal to the extent of substituting IPC §304 Part I for §302. With uninterrupted custody since arrest on 8 June 2007, exceeding fourteen years by the appellate judgment, the Bench imposed a sentence of imprisonment for the period already undergone, maintained a ₹1,000 fine and set one month's rigorous imprisonment in default instead of the trial court's five-month default term. It ordered immediate release if the appellant was not required in another case, supply of a free copy of the judgment to him, and prompt return of the trial record with a copy for compliance. The trial judgment was affirmed only with these conviction and sentence modifications; no §84 acquittal was granted.

Ram Bahadur Thapa v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 881/2011, 28/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (693) Prev Next

Headnote :- Medical evidence / independent assessment - The first treating doctor recorded an entry wound on the back, an exit wound near the umbilicus and bowel protruding from the latter wound. The postmortem doctor reversed the entry and exit descriptions while also recording bowel protruding from the abdomen. Dayal Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 8 SCC 263, recognises the criminal court's duty to test the whole record, even where official investigation or presentation is defective. The Court favoured the earlier MLC and objective findings consistent with the eyewitness account; it was not bound by a prosecution doctor's report merely because the doctor had not been declared hostile.

Related witness / interest - Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, and Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, were applied to reject automatic exclusion based on kinship. The evidence requires scrutiny for credibility, and a plea of false implication requires a foundation. Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, distinguishes being related from having a motive or benefit in an accused's punishment. The presence and accounts of Dinesh and Suresh were supported by the connected roofs, rescue route and medical record.

Chance witness / explained presence - State of U.P. v. Anil Singh, 1988 Supp SCC 686, Dargahi v. State of U.P., (1974) 3 SCC 302, Ramvir v. State of U.P., (2009) 15 SCC 254, Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, Jarnail Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 9 SCC 719, Baby v. Inspector of Police, (2016) 13 SCC 333, and Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, require an explanation for an alleged chance presence and assessment of the testimony's intrinsic reliability, rather than rejection merely because of the label. Pawan explained that he was delivering milk, and Mahesh that he was visiting the shop opposite the house. Both were named promptly in the FIR, and their accounts were corroborated.

Ballistics / direct proof - The percussion cap of the spent cartridge was partly punctured, preventing comparison of its firing marks with those of the seized .12-bore gun. Use of that particular weapon was therefore not proved. The Court drew no adverse inference from an unproved attempt to damage the cap. Gulab v. State of U.P., Criminal Appeal No. 81/2021 (9 December 2021), following Gurucharan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1963) 3 SCR 585, treats the need for a ballistic expert as dependent on the circumstances of the case; its discussion distinguishes Mohinder Singh's weak ocular and discordant weapon record. Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 3 SCC (Cri) 149, permits a firearm not linked to the offence to be treated as though it had not been recovered. Here, the four eyewitnesses whom the Court found credible and the consistent medical evidence supported the finding that Ram Khiladi fired the fatal shot.

Acquitted co-accused / divisible testimony - Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749, Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2018) 6 SCC 433, and Mahendran v. State of T.N., (2019) 5 SCC 67, reject falsus in uno falsus in omnibus as a mandatory rule, while prohibiting reconstruction of a new prosecution case where truth and falsehood cannot be separated. Pankaj's acquittal under Section 302/34 did not erase reliable proof that Ram Khiladi personally fired the fatal shot. His Section 302 life sentence was upheld; the appellate court added six months' rigorous imprisonment in default of the existing Rs 1,000 fine.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ram Khiladi appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 30 September 2010 passed by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Morena, in Sessions Trial No. 144/2009. He had been convicted under Section 302 IPC for fatally shooting Ram Naresh and sentenced to life imprisonment and a Rs 1,000 fine, with no default term at trial. Pankaj, charged under Section 302/34 and tried with him, was acquitted; that acquittal was not challenged. Two other accused, Asharam and Sudhakar, had been proceeded against under Section 299 CrPC as absconders; Asharam was reported dead and Sudhakar remained absent. Their liability was not adjudicated in this appeal.

According to the prosecution, a dispute on 10 September 2008 arose after Ram Khiladi took a pouch without paying and his daughter plucked a gourd from a field. Ram Naresh went to complain at Ram Khiladi's home. An abusive quarrel and stone pelting followed. Ram Khiladi and Sudhakar allegedly brought firearms and Pankaj a stick. Ram Naresh fled onto the house's roof and attempted to climb onto the roof of a room built there; Ram Khiladi fired, hitting him in the back, while Sudhakar's alleged shot missed. Four witnesses, Dinesh Sharma, Pawan Sharma, Suresh Sharma and Mahesh, described the incident and the rescue across the connected roofs. Ram Naresh received first aid at Morena District Hospital around 5:05 pm, was referred to Gwalior and was declared dead there. An FIR was lodged at Civil Lines, Morena, within whose jurisdiction the incident occurred.

The first treating doctor, Dr Anup Gupta, recorded an entry wound on the back and an exit wound near the umbilicus, with bowel protruding from the latter wound (MLC Ex D.6). Postmortem doctor Dr J.N. Soni recorded an entry wound at the front of the abdomen and an exit wound on the back, but also described bowel protruding from the abdomen. The latter attributed death to shock and haemorrhage from a firearm abdominal injury sufficient in the ordinary course to cause death. The defence argued that a front entry and downward course contradicted the alleged shot from behind and below as the victim climbed. It also questioned why the victim fled to the appellant's roof rather than outdoors, whether the houses were connected, whether the witnesses had in fact accompanied him to hospital, whether related and alleged chance witnesses could be trusted, and whether the seized gun was used. The appellant's Section 313 CrPC account, however, admitted that the roofs were connected and that Ram Naresh sustained a gunshot injury on the appellant's roof, while attributing the shot to an unknown person. The State supported the conviction.

Police found bloodstained and plain cement on the room roof. After Ram Khiladi's arrest on 17 October 2008, officers seized his licensed .12-bore double-barrel gun and an empty cartridge. The FSL later found the gun working and recently fired, but a partly punctured percussion cap prevented comparison of the cartridge's firing marks. No comparison of the cartridge's firing marks with the gun established it as the murder weapon. The prosecution relied principally on the four eyewitnesses, the physical scene and the compatible earlier MLC.

2. Precedents — Considered : Dayal Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 8 SCC 263, was quoted for the criminal court's public duty to reach truth and conduct a fair trial for accused, victim and society. Its discussion of State of Karnataka v. K. Yarappa Reddy and Ram Bali v. State of U.P. explains that a defective or manipulated investigation requires caution and independent scrutiny of otherwise credible proof, not automatic acquittal. The present Court invoked that principle to assess the two doctors' findings itself rather than accept an unchallenged prosecution postmortem opinion as binding.

Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, said kinship alone does not make testimony unreliable and family is generally unlikely to shield the real killer to accuse an innocent person. Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, recognised the weight often carried by close family testimony without dispensing with evaluation. Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, required a foundation for false implication and careful testing for cogency; its quoted Dalip Singh and Masalti discussion cautioned against mechanical rejection yet did not create a general presumption that such testimony is credible. Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, distinguished a relative from a witness with a direct or indirect benefit or prior enmity motivating false implication, and required reliability, probability, cogency and consistency. The Court applied these authorities to the two brothers, Dinesh and Suresh, after testing their presence and the scene, and rejected the bare relationship objection.

State of U.P. v. Anil Singh, 1988 Supp SCC 686, rejected the 'chance witness' label for a witness naturally present and named in the FIR. Dargahi v. State of U.P., (1974) 3 SCC 302, recognised that a road witness can be tested notwithstanding chance presence and enmity, and Ramvir v. State of U.P., (2009) 15 SCC 254, considered local presence in daylight natural on its facts. Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, recounted the classic description of a witness who appears suddenly without an explanation for being there. Jarnail Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 9 SCC 719, drawing on Sachchey Lal Tiwari and other authorities, required adequate explanation and cautious scrutiny, while cautioning against transplanting the label mechanically into Indian settings. Baby v. Inspector of Police, (2016) 13 SCC 333, repeated that contextual caution. Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, through Rana Partap, stressed natural presence and intrinsic reliability over a mere label. The Court considered these authorities together when accepting Pawan's explanation that he was delivering milk and Mahesh's explanation that he was visiting the shop. Their accounts were corroborated and they were named promptly; the Court did not treat every passerby as automatically credible.

Gulab v. State of U.P., Criminal Appeal No. 81/2021 decided 9 December 2021, quoted Gurucharan Singh v. State of Punjab, (1963) 3 SCR 585, for the contextual need for a ballistic expert. Gurucharan explained that Mohinder Singh v. State, (1950) SCR 821, involved serious weaknesses in ocular evidence and a possible gun-versus-rifle inconsistency; it did not impose an invariable requirement of expert examination. Whether expert evidence was essential depended on the circumstances; unimpeachable direct evidence and clearly consistent post-mortem findings could make it unnecessary. Gulab also discussed State of Punjab v. Jugraj Singh on sufficient surrounding evidence. Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 3 SCC (Cri) 149, considered a nonmatching recovered firearm: the unlinked recovered gun may be treated as though it had not been recovered, without necessarily defeating credible eyewitness proof. Here the Court held that the particular seized gun had not been proved to be the murder weapon, rejected an adverse inference from conjectured cartridge tampering, then applied the cited distinctions to the independent eyewitness evidence.

Shakila Abdul Gafar Khan v. Vasant Raghunath Dhoble, (2003) 7 SCC 749, rejected falsus in uno falsus in omnibus as an Indian rule of law and directed careful separation of truth and embellishment, while warning against constructing an entirely different prosecution case from inseparable falsehood. Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2018) 6 SCC 433, repeated that qualified sifting duty and that unresolved real doubt must favour the accused. Mahendran v. State of T.N., (2019) 5 SCC 67, reiterated that insufficiency concerning acquitted co-accused does not compel acquittal of a person against whom the credible residue proves guilt. The Court applied this group to Pankaj's separate acquittal and Ram Khiladi's direct role.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC governed the murder conviction and minimum life term as the Court described; Section 34 formed part of Pankaj's separate charge; Ram Khiladi was convicted for his own act of firing the fatal shot. Section 374 CrPC supplied the appeal. Section 313 CrPC governed his explanation, including the admission of connected roofs and the claim of an unknown shooter. Section 299 CrPC governed procedure against the two absent accused and did not determine their guilt here. The Rs 1,000 fine imposed at trial was retained, and the appellate court added a default rigorous-imprisonment term.

4. Issues : Whether the gunshot death was homicidal and whether the postmortem doctor's reversal of entry and exit, compared with the initial MLC and physical findings, fatally contradicted the eyewitness account; whether the admitted connected roofs, access to the room roof, bloodstained cement and rescue route supported the witnesses despite the defence's proposed alternative; whether Dinesh and Suresh were disqualified by kinship and Pawan and Mahesh by their alleged chance presence; whether inability to match the seized firearm and cartridge left reasonable doubt about the shot specifically attributed to Ram Khiladi; whether Pankaj's unchallenged acquittal required discarding testimony against Ram Khiladi; and whether conviction and sentence required modification. The two absconders' guilt was outside this appeal.

5. Ratio / Findings : The treating MLC placed entry on the back and exit at the abdominal bowel-protrusion wound. Although the postmortem doctor reversed those descriptions and spoke of a downward path, he independently recorded bowel protruding from the same abdominal wound. The Court reasoned that this feature supported the MLC's description of entry at the back and exit at the front, and the account of a shot fired from below and behind the victim as he climbed. Relying on Dayal Singh's judicial duty of independent evaluation, it found the post-mortem report's identification of the entry and exit wounds mistaken and rejected the claim that a prosecution doctor's evidence bound the State because he was not declared hostile. Taken together, the two doctors' accounts supported a fatal firearm injury. The Court found no material contradiction between the eyewitness and medical evidence on this record.

The appellant's Section 313 explanation acknowledged that the roofs connected, undermining counsel's asserted 25-foot separation. The Court found flight toward the neighbouring home over connected roofs plausible. Pawan described climbing stored stones and gripping the overhanging roof edge (chhajja) to reach the six-to-seven-foot room roof; the investigating officer's evidence and the physical seizure supported the finding that the roof was accessible without stairs. Bloodstained cement was seized there, and witnesses described bringing the injured back over the roofs. A hospital intimation naming Vipin as a person accompanying the victim did not exclude others from seeing the incident or helping. The Court considered the transport and Gwalior death chronology before rejecting the claim that the Morena FIR was an afterthought merely because no zero FIR had been registered at Gwalior; it also recognised that an unproved merg document could not be used as substantive prosecution support.

Dinesh and Suresh were the deceased's brothers and were naturally present at the adjoining homes. Their relationship alone did not establish an interest in having an innocent person punished. Pawan, a milk vendor delivering locally, and Mahesh, visiting the deceased's shop opposite the appellant's house, gave explanations for being nearby. Both were named in the FIR and had timely police statements; their evidence was corroborated and no enmity shown. Applying the grouped Supreme Court credibility cases, the Court accepted all four after scrutiny.

The seizure witnesses proved a licensed .12-bore gun and spent cartridge from the appellant, and the FSL found a functioning gun with evidence of recent firing. A punctured percussion cap, however, prevented the necessary firing-mark match. The Court would not draw an adverse inference against Ram Khiladi from speculation that someone, possibly he, deliberately damaged the cap; it held that the seized gun had not been proved to be the weapon used in the killing. Gulab and Rakesh permitted the direct testimony, corroborated by the injuries and scene, to be assessed independently of that missing link. The appellant's unsupported unknown-shooter version was rejected after considering his admission that the injury occurred on his roof and his failure to report such an incident.

Pankaj's Section 302/34 acquittal remained final and unchallenged, but the Court distinguished the specific evidence that Ram Khiladi fired the shot which struck Ram Naresh. Under Shakila, Kameshwar Singh and Mahendran, a deficiency against one accused did not require the rejection of reliable evidence against another that could be considered separately. It found guilt under Section 302 proved. It found life imprisonment the minimum sentence it could impose for that conviction and therefore did not reduce it. The trial court had omitted a default term for the fine; the appellate court supplied six months' rigorous imprisonment if the fine was not paid.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal. Ram Khiladi's Section 302 IPC conviction and life imprisonment with Rs 1,000 fine were affirmed. The appellate judgment directed an additional six months' rigorous imprisonment if the fine was not paid, where the trial order had stated no default imprisonment. Pankaj's acquittal was not disturbed; no conviction of the absent co-accused was made. Ram Khiladi was in jail and was directed to serve the remaining sentence. A free copy of the judgment was directed to be supplied to him, and the trial record was to be returned for information and compliance.

Ram Khiladi v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 867/2010, 15/03/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (694) Prev Next

Headnote :- Age proof / school record - Mahadeo s/o Kerba Maske v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 14 SCC 637, supported the use of the sequence in Rule 12(3) of the Juvenile Justice Rules 2007 to assess a prosecutrix's age, and Ashwani Kumar Saxena v. State of M.P., (2012) 9 SCC 750, identified the first-school register as relevant. The primary examination certificate recorded 17 April 1989 as the date of birth. The prosecutrix supplied the certificate to the investigator, who collected it, but no school witness or person who made the entry proved the register, the source of the entry or the date. The Court rejected the certificate as unproved.

Unexhibited favourable material - The Government hospital ossification report, filed by the prosecution with the charge sheet but never proved and exhibited through a witness, assessed age above eighteen and below twenty on 2 July 2005. The Court permitted the accused to rely on this favourable material filed by the prosecution after finding the school entry unproved.

Delay / sole prosecutrix - Ramdas v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 2 SCC 170, permits conviction based solely on the testimony of a wholly credible prosecutrix and treats delay as relevant but not invariably fatal. The Court found the roughly one-year delay insufficiently explained by the parents' claimed long absence for the father's treatment, because there was no supporting evidence of treatment or the travel circumstances, and the father had visited occasionally. It considered the mother's non-examination and the untested paternity claim alongside the prosecutrix's account, and held conviction unsafe on these facts.

DNA / cumulative proof gap - The examining doctor advised testing after childbirth, yet no DNA comparison of the child and the appellant, or explanation for its omission, was produced. In this accusation involving pregnancy and childbirth, the Court found that omission material alongside the difficulties concerning age, delay and testimony. It set aside the Section 376(1) conviction and seven-year sentence, acquitted Ram Kishan and discharged his bail and surety bonds.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ram Kishan appealed under Section 374(2) CrPC, challenging the judgment of the Special Judge, Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, Shivpuri, in Special Sessions Trial No. 53/2007. His separate acquittal under the SC/ST Act was outside the scope of the appeal.

The prosecutrix's father, Bharosa, worked as a village chowkidar in Kutwara and had five children. The prosecutrix was the eldest. The prosecution alleged that, while Bharosa and his wife Ramwati stayed elsewhere for his tuberculosis treatment, their children remained at home. Ram Kishan lived next door and allegedly took the prosecutrix into his room repeatedly and forced her to have intercourse, with further alleged incidents at her home. She became pregnant. She said he threatened to kill her and himself if she disclosed the matter. After the parents learned of the pregnancy, she went to Hatod and gave birth to a boy. Police eventually recorded her allegation, medically examined her, collected a primary school examination mark-sheet said to give her birth date as 17 April 1989, and filed a charge sheet after arresting Ram Kishan about eighteen months later. The Court analysed the reporting interval as approximately a year.

Ram Kishan challenged the trial court's finding of minority, saying the certificate was inadequately proved and the prosecution's ossification material assessed her at 18–20. He argued that the reporting delay until after childbirth was unexplained and, in the absence of DNA evidence concerning paternity, the prosecutrix's testimony could not safely support conviction. The State defended the age and rape findings. The appeal required the Court to assess both age evidence and the independent credibility of the allegation.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mahadeo s/o Kerba Maske v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 14 SCC 637, was invoked by the Court to use Rule 12 of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Rules 2007 as a reference in determining a prosecutrix's age. Rule 12(3) prioritised matriculation or equivalent certificate, then a date-of-birth certificate from the first school attended, then a birth certificate from the relevant civic authority; assessment by a medical board followed only in the absence of those documentary categories. The present Court applied that order but required the asserted school entry to be proved, rather than treating a mark-sheet whose maker and source had not been established by evidence as conclusive. Ashwani Kumar Saxena v. State of M.P., (2012) 9 SCC 750, was cited for the relevance of the first-school admission register. Counsel used it to argue that withholding the underlying register warranted an adverse inference. The Court did not articulate a separate categorical adverse-inference ruling; it found the mark-sheet unproved because no school witness established its basis and the father did not state that he had supplied the recorded date.

Ramdas v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 2 SCC 170, was relied on by the appellant and substantively applied by the Court. Its principle, as stated in this judgment, permits a rape conviction resting solely on the prosecutrix's testimony if the court is convinced of its truthfulness and no circumstance seriously clouds veracity. Reporting delay alone need not be fatal, but its circumstances and possible effect on reliability must be evaluated. The present Court found the explanation of prolonged parental absence unsubstantiated, considered the father's occasional visits and other proof gaps, and concluded that the testimony did not safely establish this charge.

3. Statutes considered : Section 376(1) IPC was the charged and appealed rape conviction. The Court separately assessed the allegation of forcible intercourse without consent, as well as the disputed age evidence. Section 374(2) CrPC supplied appellate jurisdiction. Rule 12(3) of the Juvenile Justice Rules 2007, discussed through Mahadeo, set the documentary order and medical alternative for an age inquiry; the Court used it as guidance in the question of the prosecutrix's age. The SC/ST Act provisions appeared in investigation and trial, but the appellant's acquittal under that Act was not reversed. The Court did not separately construe the Act's elements.

4. Issues : Whether the prosecution proved the prosecutrix's age at the alleged acts through a 2001 school examination certificate without testimony from any school official, proof of the register entry or evidence of who supplied the date; what weight the defence could place on an ossification report filed with the charge sheet but left unexhibited by the State; whether the substantially delayed FIR was satisfactorily explained by the parents' claimed absence and threats; whether her testimony alone remained sufficiently trustworthy under Ramdas in light of that delay, the father's periodic visits and other missing evidence; whether the failure to carry out the recommended DNA test concerning paternity mattered in a case attributing pregnancy and childbirth to the appellant; and whether Section 376(1) guilt remained proved beyond reasonable doubt. The SC/ST Act acquittal was outside the appeal.

5. Ratio / Findings : The primary school examination certificate Ex P-5 recorded 17 April 1989. The prosecutrix handed the certificate to the police, and the investigating officer said he had collected it. That evidence did not establish who had entered the date or the information on which it was based. No headmaster, school official or first-school register entry was proved; the father did not say he had reported that date at admission. Applying Mahadeo and Rule 12 while considering Ashwani Kumar Saxena, the Court found the certificate not proved according to law. The Government hospital's 2 July 2005 ossification report, though unexhibited by the prosecution, had been filed with the charge sheet and favoured the accused; the Court allowed him to rely on it, noting radiological age above eighteen and below twenty on that date. It inferred a 1987 birth year. In paragraph 18, the Court calculated her age as seventeen at the first alleged act in 2004, but then held that she was eighteen and major even then. The Court also found the rape allegation unproved on separate credibility grounds.

On delay, the Court examined the claimed tuberculosis treatment and the assertion that both parents had lived in Hatod while five children stayed in Kutwara. It found no treatment documents or explanation of the relevant distances and travel circumstances to support such a long absence, and observed that Bharosa sometimes visited the children. The mother was not examined to substantiate the claimed disclosure. Although the prosecutrix alleged threats, the Court found the prosecution's explanation for the reporting delay of approximately one year unconvincing. Under Ramdas it expressly recognised that mere delay is not necessarily fatal, but considered the circumstances relevant to whether her sole account was dependable.

Dr Anjana Jain had advised DNA testing following birth of the male child. No DNA comparison of the child and the appellant was produced, and no explanation was given for the failure to carry out the recommendation. Because the prosecution asserted that the appellant's conduct caused the pregnancy, the Court treated the omission as a material gap in corroboration in this record. It considered that gap together with the unproved school entry, age-report treatment, delay and its assessment of the sole testimony, then held that the allegation of rape against the appellant had not been proved.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal. The Section 376(1) IPC conviction and the seven-year rigorous-imprisonment sentence, Rs 500 fine and default term were set aside. Ram Kishan was acquitted of that charge. He was on bail, and his bail and surety bonds were discharged. A copy of the judgment and the record were directed to be sent to the trial court. The earlier SC/ST Act acquittal was not disturbed.

Ram Kishan v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 658/2007, 01/12/2016, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (695) Prev Next

Headnote :- Dying declaration / extensive burns and capacity - Purshottam Chopra v State (NCT of Delhi), (2020) 11 SCC 489, applied Bhagwan and Vijay Pal to hold that even 92–100% burns do not alone establish inability to speak; the decisive considerations are the declarant's actual state of consciousness and fitness, the effects of the injuries and the coherence of the response. Its quotation from Dal Singh recognises that part of the thumb may remain intact, depending on the facts. The quoted Gian Kaur example concerned an unexplained clear thumb impression despite evidence that both thumbs were burnt. The admission MLC gave no burn percentage; the about-100% figure came from the post-mortem after Sakhibai's death. The Court described her death as occurring ten days after the incident. Dr Singh rejected the assumption that such burns necessarily caused unconsciousness or inability to speak. Dr Jain and the Naib Tahsildar supported her fitness. Modi's classification of burn degrees informed the Court's rejection of an inference of incapacity based only on the burn percentage.

Recorder / certificate / authentic impression - Purshottam Chopra's treatment of the Constitution Bench in Laxman v State of Maharashtra, affirming Koli Chunilal Savji and rejecting Paparambaka Rosamma's hypertechnical certificate requirement, permits reliance on a voluntary and truthful declaration where the recorder is satisfied of the declarant's fitness, without requiring a prescribed form, a Magistrate or particular medical-certificate wording in every case. Mukesh v State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, quoted Laxman while calling for vigilance about medical fitness and tutoring. Here, a Naib Tahsildar recorded Ex P7, with Dr Jain certifying fitness before and after recording. The missing recording times, unattached requisition and incomplete thumb impression on Ex P14, attributed to inadequate ink, were assessed alongside the testimony rather than treated as fatal defects automatically.

Multiple declarations / sole basis / caution - Purshottam Chopra, (2020) 11 SCC 489, permits a coherent and voluntary statement to be the sole basis for conviction, but requires corroboration where material infirmity or suspicion remains. Madan v State of Maharashtra, (2019) 13 SCC 464, emphasises cautious assessment of mental fitness and absence of tutoring, particularly because the maker cannot be cross-examined. Mukesh, (2017) 6 SCC 1, reproduces Atbir's safeguards and requires comparison of several declarations to determine whether any inconsistencies are material. Laltu Ghosh v State of W.B., (2019) 15 SCC 344, permits a reliable and unprompted declaration to be the sole basis for conviction, with other supporting evidence reinforcing it. The oral history to Dr Jain in Ex P6, Dehati Nalishi Ex P14, police statement Ex P16 and Naib Tahsildar's Ex P7 were materially consistent in identifying Ramlal as the person who set Sakhibai alight; kerosene smell and seized articles supported them. Hostile witnesses and his taking her to hospital did not defeat the credited accounts. His §302 conviction and life sentence were affirmed; the appeals of the two deceased co-accused had already abated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramlal's appeal under CrPC §374 challenged the judgment dated 28 May 2010 passed by the Sessions Judge, Vidisha, in Sessions Trial 266/2009 convicting him of murdering his wife Sakhibai under IPC §302 and sentencing him to life imprisonment, a ₹10,000 fine and two years' rigorous imprisonment in default. His father Ramprasad and mother Ganeshibai had been convicted under section 302/34 but died while the appeal was pending; their appeals were dismissed as abated by orders of 31 July 2014 and 11 March 2015. The present merits decision concerned Ramlal alone. The prosecution alleged that about 8:30 p.m. on 30 July 2009 he arrived drunk, quarrelled with Sakhibai, poured kerosene on her and set her ablaze, with the parents-in-law instigating him. He and others brought her to the community health centre at Kurwai. The admission Pre-MLC Ex P6 described patchy burns on several parts of the body, the smell of kerosene and injuries dangerous to life, without stating a burn percentage, and recorded her immediate account to Dr Pawan Kumar Jain (PW3) that her husband and parents-in-law burnt her. Police received the hospital intimation, and ASI H.S. Chauhan (PW11) recorded her Dehati Nalishi Ex P14 at 22:05 and her subsequent statement under §161, Ex P16, and conducted the site investigation. Naib Tahsildar Devendra Narayan Rishishwar (PW10) recorded written declaration Ex P7 after a medical fitness endorsement; Dr Jain endorsed fitness again at its end. Sakhibai died on 10 August 2009. Dr R.L. Singh's post-mortem Ex P8 reported about 100% burns and infected areas, and identified the cause of death as cardiorespiratory arrest resulting from burns and their complication, septicemia. The site seizure Ex P9 documented a kerosene container, matchbox, burnt cloth, earth and other articles. At trial the other witnesses turned hostile. On appeal counsel argued she was too badly burnt to speak, challenged the declarations and relied on Ramlal's taking her for treatment as a circumstance inconsistent with guilt; the State defended reliance on trustworthy declarations.

2. Precedents — Considered : Purshottam Chopra v State (NCT of Delhi), (2020) 11 SCC 489, was quoted extensively to resolve both fitness and evidentiary weight. It drew on the Constitution Bench in Laxman v State of Maharashtra: a statement concerning the cause of death requires rigorous scrutiny because its maker cannot be cross-examined; the declarant must be in a fit state of mind and free from tutoring or imagination, but no oath, particular recorder, prescribed statutory form, presence of a Magistrate or medical certificate in every case is a precondition. A doctor's certification is a cautionary safeguard, and the recorder's evidence may establish fitness. Laxman affirmed Koli Chunilal Savji and held the contrary hypertechnical view in Paparambaka Rosamma incorrectly decided; these authorities were considered within the quoted Purshottam Chopra discussion, rather than through separate applications to the present facts. Purshottam Chopra also discussed Dal Singh on whether the thumb skin remained intact on the particular facts and the absence of a universally prescribed recorder or format; Bhagwan, Vijay Pal and Mafabhai Nagarbhai Raval on the possibility of conscious declarations despite 92%, 99% or 100% burns; and Gian Kaur on a materially different record where both thumbs were shown burnt yet a clear ridged mark was unexplained. Its examples of Gopalsingh (an infirmity concerning identification), Dalip Singh (asserted knowledge beyond the maker's perception), Thurukanni Pompiah (a materially untrue part of the account), and Uka Ram (doubt about mental condition) illustrate when sole reliance is unsafe; it also discussed independent assessment of fitness and the absence of an automatic corroboration requirement in its collected principles. The High Court applied those principles to the testimony of the treating doctor, the recorder and the investigating officer, the admission record and the later post-mortem. It found no material incapacity, fabrication or contradiction.

Madan v State of Maharashtra, (2019) 13 SCC 464, was quoted for caution where weakness near death, self-vindication, prompting, the absence of the accused or the lack of cross-examination may threaten accuracy. Although corroboration is not an absolute legal requirement, a declaration must inspire confidence, reflect a fit mental state and be free from tutoring; an apparently suspicious one needs support. Madan cited Ram Bihari Yadav, Suresh Chandra Jana, Atbir, Paniben and Panneerselvam for these standards. Mukesh v State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, was quoted for voluntariness, medical-fitness vigilance, the Laxman rule that a formal certificate is a safeguard based on caution rather than an absolute prerequisite, and Atbir's ten safeguards. Atbir's quoted principles include the absence of a categorical corroboration requirement, rejection of a statement attributed to an unconscious maker and acceptance of brief but credible accounts. Mukesh also requires careful assessment of several declarations for material inconsistencies, rather than superficial differences, in light of the surrounding facts. The present Court used them to compare four accounts identifying Ramlal. Laltu Ghosh v State of W.B., (2019) 15 SCC 344, allowed sole reliance on a reliable declaration where neither false implication nor tutoring appears, and described other reliable evidence as reinforcement in its own facts; the High Court applied its rule to declarations supported here by medical observations and scene articles. The Court's quotation from Modi's Medical Jurisprudence distinguished the extent of superficial burns from their degree and physiological effects.

3. Statutes considered : Evidence Act §32(1), addressed through the Purshottam Chopra/Thurukanni passage, admits a deceased person's statement about the cause or circumstances of the transaction resulting in death when that cause is in issue; the rule does not require an expectation of death. The Court treated the admission history, Dehati Nalishi, ensuing police statement and written declaration as evidence of the fatal burning. CrPC §161 identified Ex P16 as a police-recorded statement, and §374 supplied the appeal route. IPC §302 governed Ramlal's murder conviction and life sentence. The deceased co-accused's section 302/34 trial findings explain their procedural position but were not affirmed on merits in this appeal. The Court found no sentence below the statutory minimum life term available on the conviction.

Section 34 IPC related to the deceased co-accused's trial convictions.

4. Issues : First, whether Sakhibai died from burns and whether the burning was homicidal, suicidal or accidental when the surviving eyewitnesses did not support the prosecution. Second, whether a patient later recorded as having about 100% burns could have made reliable statements at admission and while under treatment, taking account of the contemporaneous Pre-MLC, the doctors' evidence, the recorder's observations, medical endorsements and the actual timing of the percentage estimate. Third, whether missing start/end times and requisition, an incomplete thumb impression, hostile witnesses, or Ramlal's taking Sakhibai to hospital gave material reasons to doubt authenticity or voluntariness. Fourth, whether the oral history given to the doctor and the three written or police-recorded accounts were materially consistent and reliable enough to sustain §302 without supporting eyewitness testimony. Finally, whether the conviction and sentence required interference, keeping the earlier abatement of the parents' appeals distinct.

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr Jain found multiple patchy burns and kerosene smell on admission, described Sakhibai as fully conscious, and said he would have recorded loss of consciousness had it occurred; his contemporaneous Ex P6 did not give a percentage. Dr Singh found death caused by burn injury and resulting septicemia and estimated the burns at about 100% in the post-mortem after her death; he denied that such a percentage necessarily meant unconsciousness or inability to speak and could not say whether the thumb skin was burnt. The Bench distinguished the extent of the affected skin from the depth of the burns and the patient's actual mental function, referring to Modi's burn-degree descriptions and Purshottam Chopra's high-burn examples. Its assessment did not rest on an assumption that the later post-mortem figure alone established the exact burn percentage or degree when each declaration was recorded.

The first account was the history given to Dr Jain at admission and reflected in Ex P6. Ex P14, recorded at 22:05, described Ramlal's drunken quarrel with Sakhibai, his pouring kerosene on her and setting her alight, the parents' alleged instigation and her alarm. Chauhan recorded Ex P16 immediately afterwards, containing similar allegations; he explained that she answered clearly, so he did not request another fitness certificate for that police statement. The Naib Tahsildar's Ex P7 identified her husband as the one who burnt her, and he denied incapacity, forgery or absence of a thumb impression. Dr Jain was beside him and certified fitness before and after its 20–25-minute recording. An unattached written requisition and the absence of start and end times were acknowledged, as were the lack of burn percentage and pulse in the Pre-MLC, but did not outweigh this direct evidence of fitness. The appearance of the Ex P14 thumb impression in two parts was explained as the result of inadequate ink when a single impression was taken, and nothing proved complete loss of ridges on her thumb at the relevant time.

Under Madan, Mukesh, Purshottam Chopra and Laltu Ghosh the Bench assessed whether the accounts were truthful, coherent and unprompted, rather than imposing corroboration as a fixed prerequisite. It treated all four statements as materially identical in identifying Ramlal's act, notwithstanding Ex P7's shorter reference to the husband and fuller early allegations about his parents. Kerosene smell at admission and seizure of a kerosene container, matchbox and burnt materials reinforced the accounts; the site map's failure to enumerate every burnt item and Ex P9's mistakenly written 30 July instead of 31 July did not persuade the Court of a false seizure. The Court stated that Sakhibai survived ten days after the incident and found the declarations trustworthy even though the other witnesses were hostile. Ramlal's taking her to hospital established that he had brought her for treatment, but did not establish his innocence in the face of her immediate accusation. The Court therefore found he caused her homicidal death by setting her alight with kerosene and upheld his §302 conviction. The early allegations of the deceased parents' instigation did not alter the earlier abatement of their appeals.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed Ramlal's criminal appeal. The conviction under IPC §302 and sentence of life imprisonment, a ₹10,000 fine and two years' rigorous imprisonment in default, imposed by the Sessions Judge, Vidisha, on 28 May 2010 were affirmed. Ramlal was in jail and was directed to serve the remaining sentence. The Bench directed that he receive a free copy immediately and that the trial record with a copy of the judgment be returned for compliance.

Ram Lal and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 522/2010, 13/12/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (697) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR registration / writ alternative - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty under Section 154 CrPC to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from the remedy of an aggrieved informant:

a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 when police fail to act. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, prescribe recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). Applying Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016, the Court declined mandamus to register an FIR in relation to the alleged withdrawal of money from a private trust.

Magistrate's remedial powers - Under Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe, a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied on an application under Section 156(3) may direct registration of an FIR and a proper investigation, monitor the investigation and, where appropriate, recommend a change of investigating officer. The Magistrate does not conduct the investigation personally. Aleque Padamsee and Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, also explain the private-complaint route under Sections 190 and 200 and Chapter XV inquiry. These available procedures informed the refusal to entertain an ordinary writ petition seeking FIR registration.

Exceptional writ supervision - Divine Retreat Centre preserves rare Article 226 intervention where investigative power has been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII requires intervention, without judicially prescribing how police investigate. The MP Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria stated that the ordinary refusal of writ relief on the ground of an alternative remedy is subject to the recognised Whirlpool exceptions and distinguished Lalita Kumari's Section 154 duty from a right to mandamus without using available remedies. The High Court applied the ordinary rule requiring recourse to the statutory remedies.

Private trust / separate relief - The Court also held that the Collector and Tehsildar had no role in recovering the funds of the private trust described by the petitioner and indicated a civil suit for recovery. This provided an additional ground for dismissing the petition. The holding concerned the remedy for recovery; it did not determine whether the alleged withdrawals constituted a criminal offence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ram Milan Tiwari petitioned under Article 226 of the Constitution in Writ Petition No. 10868/2024. He sought a writ of mandamus directing the police to register an FIR against identified respondents for alleged serious offences, action against a respondent accused of failing to perform duties and harassing him, and directions to the Collector and Tehsildar to recover money allegedly withdrawn from a trust. He said his father had created the Ram Chandra Mandir private trust, with him and his sister Godavari Bai as trustees; he referred to a finding in a second appeal concerning trusteeship and to an earlier writ finding that one respondent could not be treated as Godavari Bai's legal heir. After her death, according to his submissions, one respondent purported to become a trustee and, together with other respondents, fraudulently withdrew about Rs 10 lakh from the trust account. He said police did not act on his complaint and revenue officials did not recover the amount.

The State appeared. The Court addressed the writ request for FIR registration against the statutory remedies for police inaction, quoted the governing Supreme Court and MP Division Bench law, then separately addressed the request for administrative recovery from a private trust. The order is dated 15 May 2024.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted on the separation between police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence and the method of addressing failure to register it. The Supreme Court reconciled Ramesh Kumari's duty holding with AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari on the informant's remedy: a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The High Court adopted that distinction while preserving the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was cited on both the ordinary complaint remedy and the exceptional writ jurisdiction. In an ordinary case of police inaction, Sections 190 and 200, with the Magistrate's Chapter XV inquiry, are available and a writ is not entertained merely to secure an FIR. In a rare case with a clear showing that investigative power has been exercised mala fide, with abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII, the High Court may use Article 226 to secure compliance with the proper process; even then the High Court cannot tell police how to investigate. Its quotation of Gangadhar explains the Magistrate's ability, after complaint inquiry and prima facie satisfaction, to take cognizance, issue process or direct investigation and report, or dismiss a complaint that discloses no offence.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted for the statutory sequence: written application to the Superintendent under Section 154(3) if police do not register an FIR, then a Section 156(3) application to the Magistrate if no satisfactory registration or investigation follows. The Magistrate may direct registration of an FIR and a proper investigation, and may monitor that investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reiterated the Magistrate route instead of routine Article 226 applications, including the discretion to recommend a different investigating officer and to monitor the investigation, without conducting it personally. The Court applied these authorities in declining the requested writ. Its decision concerned the procedural remedy, rather than the truth of the allegations concerning the trust.

The MP High Court Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016 decided 20 December 2016, was applied as the local binding formulation. It held that mandamus to enforce the Section 154 duty may be declined for failure to use Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200, subject to the four recognised Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, exceptions. It also distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, which concerns the police's registration obligation, from the separate entitlement to a High Court writ without exhausting adequate alternative remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 provided the jurisdiction invoked for mandamus. The Court declined to exercise it for the ordinary FIR-registration relief in view of the effective remedies under criminal procedure. Section 154 CrPC requires the police to register information disclosing a cognizable offence as described in Aleque Padamsee; subsection (3) permits an approach to the Superintendent of Police when the police station fails to act. Section 156(3) allows the Magistrate to direct and oversee proper police investigation on a prima facie basis. Sections 190 and 200, with Chapter XV complaint inquiry, enable an aggrieved person to place a complaint before a competent Magistrate. Chapter XII governs police investigation and provides the statutory context for Divine Retreat Centre's discussion of exceptional intervention to secure compliance with the prescribed process.

4. Issues : Whether Article 226 mandamus should require registration of an FIR on Tiwari's allegation of fraudulent withdrawal from a private trust where police allegedly failed to respond and the CrPC offered remedies before superior police officers and the Magistrate; how the police duty recognised in registration cases differs from the procedural route to enforce it; whether exceptional writ review over mala fide investigation changes the ordinary rule on these pleadings; and whether the Collector and Tehsildar could be compelled by writ to recover money from a private trust, as distinct from a public trust.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the FIR prayer as an ordinary complaint of police inaction and held that a writ petition for that purpose was not maintainable in the circumstances. Aleque Padamsee preserved the underlying police obligation when facts disclose a cognizable offence, while directing an aggrieved complainant to Sections 190 and 200 when police do not comply. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe set out the procedure under Sections 154(3) and 156(3) and the Magistrate's powers to order registration, ensure proper investigation and monitor it. Divine Retreat Centre preserved limited intervention under Article 226 where investigative power has been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII warrants intervention, while confining the Court to securing compliance with lawful process. The High Court applied the ordinary rule requiring recourse to the statutory remedies. Shweta Bhadauria's distinction from Lalita Kumari and its alternative-remedy qualification provided the writ standard applied by the Madhya Pradesh High Court.

On the recovery prayer, the petitioner himself described Ram Chandra Mandir as a private trust. The Court held the Collector and Tehsildar had no role in recovering the funds allegedly withdrawn from that private trust and indicated a civil suit as the petitioner's route for recovery. This separate ruling on the recovery prayer formed a further basis for dismissing the petition.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the writ petition as the reliefs claimed were not maintainable in the form presented. The authorities quoted identified the statutory remedies before superior police officers and the Magistrate, while the Court held that the petitioner had to seek recovery of the trust funds by filing a civil suit. The dismissal was based on maintainability and did not adjudicate the merits of those potential proceedings.

Ram Milan Tiwari v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 10868/2024, 15/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (698) Prev Next

Headnote :- Injured witnesses / presence - Mohar v. State of U.P., (2002) 7 SCC 606, State of U.P. v. Naresh, (2011) 4 SCC 324, and Baleshwar Mahto v. State of Bihar, (2017) 3 SCC 152, discussing Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259, give substantial weight to injuries as evidence of an eyewitness's presence, while permitting rejection for convincing material contradictions. Buddhe, Kamlesh and child Suraj had documented injuries; two had incised head wounds, and Kamlesh had fractures. Their accounts were assessed alongside the evidence of the three other eyewitnesses, the postmortems and the MLCs. Their relationship to one another and to the deceased did not negate that supporting evidence.

Related, interested and unexamined witnesses - Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, and Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, demand careful scrutiny, especially with animus; neither relation nor interest automatically defeats otherwise credible proof, nor does independent corroboration invariably become mandatory. Raju cautions against a categorical assumption that a related witness can never be interested. Gian Singh as quoted, Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, and Vijendra Singh require assessment of whether an unexamined witness would fill a material gap, rather than reliance on the number of villagers examined. The Court credited the six examined witnesses and did not draw an adverse inference merely because other villagers did not testify.

Enmity / competing inference - Kunwarpal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2014) 16 SCC 560, Ruli Ram v. State of Haryana, (2002) 7 SCC 691, and State of U.P. v. Kishan Chand, (2004) 7 SCC 629, treat prior hostility as capable of explaining both false implication and attack. The Court considered the defence-proved 2006 cross-case and the FIR's earlier-dispute allegation, then found that the armed opposition to the Bhujaria apology and the injuries supported the inference of retaliation by the appellants. The Court did not accept the theory of false implication as sufficient.

Group assault / medical fit - Abdul Sayeed recognises the limits of precise blow allocation during an attack by several assailants. Baleshwar Mahto and CBI v. Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC 1, require independent assessment of ocular evidence. An alternative medical possibility does not displace credible ocular evidence; medical evidence that completely rules out the account is material. The eyewitnesses identified sharp-weapon roles; cuts, head fracture, liver injury and multiple blunt wounds supported those accounts and the participation of the persons armed with lathis. Neither the absence of a penetrating skull wound nor the failure to show the seized weapons to the doctor made the described assault impossible. The Court affirmed each appellant's direct or Section 149 counts according to his proved role, preserving the differing individual convictions.

Delayed statements / other defences - Banti v. State of M.P., (2004) 1 SCC 414, Prithvi (Minor) v. Mam Raj, (2004) 13 SCC 279, Sunil Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (2005) 9 SCC 283, and State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, require assessment of an explanation for delay in recording statements under Section 161 CrPC rather than an automatic adverse result. The officer was not asked about the roughly two-month delay. The two injured witnesses explained that they had returned after an absence of about two months. Kamlesh linked his absence to treatment. Other accounts were recorded the next day, and the FIR was prompt. The Court also rejected daytime photographs as alibis for a 7–7:30 pm attack and accepted the identification of familiar villagers in limited light, taking into account the suggestion that it was a full-moon night. Ramesh v. State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, supports such identification on the facts of the particular case.

Murder / Exception 4 - Surain Singh v. State of Punjab, (2017) 5 SCC 796, requires absence of premeditation, sudden fight, no unfair advantage or cruelty, and fighting with the deceased; suddenness alone does not suffice. The Court found an armed retaliatory attack on five people, two of whom died, after rejection of a conciliatory visit and held unfair advantage and cruelty defeated conversion to Section 304 Part I. Both appeals were dismissed and all trial convictions and sentences were affirmed, with the sentences to run concurrently. The two appellants on bail were directed to surrender.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Two connected appeals, Criminal Appeal Nos. 235 and 373 of 2010, challenged the judgment dated 8 March 2010 of the Sixth Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track Court), Lahar, Bhind in Sessions Trial No. 5/2008. Appeal 235 was brought by Ramsewak, Lal Singh, Ajmer and Hardaul; appeal 373 by Ramgopal, Ram Singh, Rambahadur, Ramprakash and Akhilesh. The case concerned the deaths of Mungaram and Rameshwar and injuries to Buddhe, Kamlesh and Suraj in a village assault on 28 August 2007 around 7–7:30 pm. The trial court convicted all nine under Section 148 IPC; the convictions on two Section 302 counts and two Section 307 counts varied between direct liability and liability under Section 149 by appellant and victim. The Section 323 conviction was constructive for every appellant. It imposed one year's rigorous imprisonment under Section 148, life imprisonment and Rs 5,000 fine with one year's rigorous imprisonment in default on each murder count, seven years and Rs 2,500 fine with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default on each attempt count, and six months' simple imprisonment for the hurt count. The judgment states the sentences run concurrently.

The prosecution said Buddhe and Kamlesh went to Sarpanch Ramsewak's house to tie Bhujaria, described in the proceeding as a gesture of apology after an earlier quarrel. A group of appellants, armed with axes, Ballam/Barchhi and lathis, refused to allow the gesture, challenged them and attacked them. Mungaram, Rameshwar and Suraj arrived on hearing the disturbance and were also attacked. Witnesses attributed axe injuries to Akhilesh and Ram Singh, sharp/pointed-weapon injuries to Lal Singh and Ramprakash (also referred to as Prakash), and lathi blows to Ramsewak, Ramgopal, Rambahadur (Bahadur), Ajmer and Hardaul. Mungaram died at the spot and Rameshwar on the way to the police station. Buddhe lodged a same-night FIR. A previous 2006 quarrel had produced a pending case after Buddhe and Kamlesh allegedly assaulted women of Ramgopal's family over cattle; the two sides relied on this history for different purposes.

The postmortem of Mungaram recorded cuts and contusions, fractured rib and lacerated liver, with fatal haemorrhage; Rameshwar had cuts and contusions with an occipital fracture and fatal head injury. Buddhe and Kamlesh had incised scalp wounds and other injuries; Kamlesh had fractures of a finger phalanx and clavicle. Twelve-year-old Suraj had a hand cut and thigh contusion. The prosecution called six eyewitnesses: injured Kamlesh, Buddhe and Suraj, and Janak Singh, another Ram Singh (PW5, not the appellant) and Gaura, Mungaram's widow. They gave varying levels of detail during a multiple-assailant episode. Some police statements were recorded the next day, following the FIR that night, whereas the statements of Kamlesh, Suraj and Janak were recorded about two months later.

The defence contended that the incident was sudden and unplanned, no precise lathi blow was attributed to each appellant, sharp-weapon accounts did not fit the injuries, blood and weapon proof were inadequate, recognition at dusk was doubtful, late statements were suspicious, and independent villagers had not been examined. Akhilesh, Ramgopal and Ajmer advanced alibi accounts using photographs from another village; Ramsewak said he was resting with injuries from an earlier bicycle fall. The State defended all convictions. Alternatively, the appellants sought Section 304 Part I rather than murder.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mohar v. State of U.P., (2002) 7 SCC 606, and State of U.P. v. Naresh, (2011) 4 SCC 324, were quoted for the special evidentiary weight of a witness injured in the same event: bodily injury tends to establish presence, and convincing grounds or major discrepancies are needed to discredit the account, though it is not irrebuttable. Baleshwar Mahto v. State of Bihar, (2017) 3 SCC 152, adopted the same approach by quoting Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259, and also explained that expert medical opinion must be assessed alongside an independent evaluation of the credibility of ocular evidence. Hypothetical alternatives do not automatically prevail, while medical evidence that completely excludes the account may be material. The present Court applied this to the injuries of Buddhe, Kamlesh and Suraj and the two postmortems, rather than relying merely on their family relationship.

Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, called for special scrutiny of a genuinely interested witness and explanation of a chance witness's presence. Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, through Darya Singh, required careful testing of testimony of family members sharing hostility towards the accused while rejecting a universal independent-corroboration condition. Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, and Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, allowed credible, carefully evaluated related or interested evidence to support conviction. Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, cautioned that a natural family witness may still be interested in punishment and that an inimical relative's account needs discerning scrutiny; it questioned a broad assertion that kinship and interest can never overlap. Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, treated enmity as a reason for caution, not mechanical exclusion. The Court quoted this extensive line and accepted the injured and other eyewitnesses after considering their actual presence, physical injuries, medical corroboration and the history of rivalry.

Kunwarpal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2014) 16 SCC 560, Ruli Ram v. State of Haryana, (2002) 7 SCC 691, and State of U.P. v. Kishan Chand, (2004) 7 SCC 629, were used for the two possible inferences from animosity: it may prompt a false accusation or motivate the violence. This Court weighed the 2006 cross-case, FIR and conduct at the attempted Bhujaria reconciliation before drawing the inference that the hostility had motivated the violence.

Abdul Sayeed, (2010) 10 SCC 259, also explained why witnesses to an attack by numerous assailants need not identify, with forensic precision, who inflicted each of the many blows. CBI v. Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC 1, quoted the medical/ocular test from Abdul Sayeed: credible eyewitness evidence may survive medical variation unless the medical facts completely rule it out. This Court used these principles to uphold the participation of the persons armed with lathis alongside the specified acts with sharp weapons. It rejected the suggested contradiction arising from the absence of a penetrating head wound.

The judgment introduces an extract as Gian Singh, while the discussion reproduced from Vijendra Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 129, identifies State of H.P. v. Gian Chand. That discussion and Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, address unexamined independent witnesses. Available credible proof is assessed first; failure to call others does not automatically require rejection. A genuinely withheld material witness who would fill a significant unproved gap may, however, justify an adverse inference. The Court treated additional village witnesses as unnecessary duplication given the injuries and six witnesses, noting that villagers may hesitate in factional disputes. Ramesh v. State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, rejected automatic failure of identification of known neighbouring assailants merely due to limited evening light; the Court applied that cautiously with the admitted full-moon suggestion, pre-existing acquaintance and the injured witnesses who identified the assailants.

Banti v. State of M.P., (2004) 1 SCC 414, Prithvi (Minor) v. Mam Raj, (2004) 13 SCC 279, Sunil Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (2005) 9 SCC 283, and State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, treat delay in Section 161 CrPC statements as contextual, calling for a plausible explanation and, ordinarily, a direct question to the investigating officer rather than an automatic adverse assessment of credibility. The Court applied this to the recording of Kamlesh's and Suraj's statements after their return to the village about two months later. Kamlesh linked his absence to treatment. Buddhe's statement and those of the other early witnesses were recorded promptly, and the FIR was prompt. The officer was not asked a categorical question on the delay.

Surain Singh v. State of Punjab, (2017) 5 SCC 796, supplied the four cumulative Section 300 Exception 4 requirements: lack of premeditation, sudden fight, heat of passion, and no undue or unfair advantage or cruel or unusual conduct; the fight must concern the person killed. The Court applied them to the group violence, previous grudge and attacks on interveners, holding suddenness by itself insufficient to reduce the murder convictions.

3. Statutes considered : Section 148 IPC governed rioting while armed with deadly weapons. Section 149 supplied constructive liability for acts in prosecution of the unlawful assembly's common object on the specified murder, attempt and simple-hurt counts, while direct convictions under Sections 302 and 307 concerned individually identified conduct. Section 302 IPC governed two murders; Section 307 governed attempted killings of Buddhe and Kamlesh, and Section 323 simple injuries to Suraj. Section 300 Exception 4 was invoked as the defence's basis for reducing the murders to Section 304 Part I; all its conditions had to be satisfied and the Court rejected it. Section 161 CrPC concerned timing of police witness statements. Section 374 CrPC supplied appeal jurisdiction.

4. Issues : Whether medical proof showed two homicidal deaths and the three surviving victims' injuries; whether the six eyewitnesses, including three injured and one child, remained credible despite relationship, factional animosity, alleged low light, failure to examine additional villagers and delayed Section 161 recordings; whether the scene evidence and wound pattern supported named sharp-weapon and group lathi roles despite no puncture wounds or doctor opinion on seized weapons; whether prior hostility explained retaliatory assault or raised reasonable doubt of false implication; whether the separate alibis of Akhilesh, Ramgopal and Ajmer, and Ramsewak's claim that he was resting because of injuries, excluded presence; whether Section 148 and each direct or Section 149 murder, attempt and hurt count remained proved for each appellant; and whether a purportedly sudden encounter came within every condition of Section 300 Exception 4 so as to substitute Section 304 Part I.

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr Dinesh Gupta's postmortems proved Mungaram's fatal haemorrhage from a lacerated liver associated with rib fracture and Rameshwar's fatal head injury with occipital fracture. The MLCs proved Buddhe's multiple injuries including a scalp cut, Kamlesh's scalp cut, contusions and two fractures, and Suraj's hand cut and thigh contusion. The Court found both deaths homicidal and the injuries compatible with attacks using sharp and blunt weapons. It did not accept the argument that no injury could have been caused by a sharp edge; several incised wounds were recorded. It reasoned that the blows to the head with Ballam/Barchhi need not leave a penetrating skull wound and that not showing the weapons to the doctor did not alone defeat a reliable eyewitness case. Baleshwar Mahto and Mohd. Parvez required credible ocular evidence to be independently tested, while medical evidence completely ruling out the ocular account would remain material. Bloodstained earth was seized, and an FSL item showed blood; although the spot map did not explicitly label blood and the transmission draft was unexhibited, no focused cross-examination or competing scene account made those gaps decisive.

The three injured eyewitnesses' wounds supported presence and their accounts named the assailants. Kamlesh and Buddhe initially visited Ramsewak's house and Suraj arrived with the interveners. Janak, prosecution witness Ram Singh and Gaura corroborated the core; the Court did not treat family relationship as establishing interest or disqualification automatically. It considered the prior criminal proceeding against Buddhe and Kamlesh on the accused family's complaint. Under Kunwarpal, Ruli Ram and Kishan Chand, this could support suspicion of false implication, but the Court found an actual retaliatory reason in the armed opposition to the attempted reconciliation, followed by attacks on the two men and those who tried to stop them. It assessed the eyewitness testimony and medical record before accepting motive rather than using motive alone as proof. The failure to examine additional villagers did not leave a material gap warranting an adverse inference; the Court viewed the six examined accounts as adequate, while acknowledging possible reluctance in village faction cases. The incident was around 7–7:30 pm, but witnesses already knew the appellants, and the defence itself elicited a full-moon night; Ramesh supported the limited-light recognition conclusion.

The Court separated the sharp-weapon attributions from the lathi group. Akhilesh and appellant Ram Singh were identified with axes; Lal Singh and Ramprakash with Barchhi/Ballam. Witnesses named the remaining lathi bearers, though they could not enumerate which of the roughly 29 injuries each had personally caused. Abdul Sayeed allowed realistic testimony amid numerous assailants, and the recorded blunt injuries supported participation. The Court affirmed the original differences between the offence-specific convictions: Ram Singh had direct Section 302 for Mungaram and constructive Section 302/149 for Rameshwar; Lal Singh and Ramprakash had direct Section 302 for Rameshwar and constructive Section 302/149 for Mungaram; Akhilesh had direct Section 307 on the two injured targets and constructive Section 302/149 on both deaths. Ramsewak, Ajmer, Hardaul, Ramgopal and Rambahadur had constructive Section 302/149 for both deaths, Section 307/149 for the two attempted killings, and Section 323/149 for Suraj, along with Section 148. These were final trial findings affirmed on appeal, not a claim that each was proved to have wielded the fatal implement.

The Section 161 statements of Kamlesh, Suraj and Janak were recorded about two months later, but Kamlesh and Suraj said that they had returned to the village then. Kamlesh linked his absence to treatment. The investigator was not specifically challenged on the reason. Buddhe's FIR was samenight and his, PW5 Ram Singh's and Gaura's accounts were recorded the next day. Banti, Prithvi, Sunil Kumar and Satish precluded an automatic adverse consequence based on delay without considering its context. The alibis failed individually. A daytime photograph potentially showing Akhilesh at a village about 35 km away around 3 pm did not exclude his return before the 7–7:30 pm violence, and no independent record established Ramgopal's overnight stay. Ajmer's daytime photographs, uncorroborated by persons pictured or printing records, did not establish his location at the assault. Ramsewak's MLC and X-ray were from 4 September, his arrest date, without treatment evidence tying the injuries to an alleged 26 August bicycle fall or proof he was resting at the material hour.

Finally, a prior grudge, armed gathering, refusal of the Bhujaria gesture and continued unprovoked attacks on five persons, including two who came to intervene, led the Court to describe the assault as revengeful, unfair and cruel. Under Surain Singh, even accepting some immediate quarrel would not establish the absence of premeditation and, especially, the no-undue-advantage and no-cruelty conditions of Exception 4. It rejected Section 304 Part I and maintained both murder counts and the attempt/hurt convictions. Life imprisonment was the minimum sentence under Section 302 as applied, and all sentences were directed to run concurrently.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed the trial judgment and sentence dated 8 March 2010 for all nine appellants with their distinct direct and constructive counts. The two terms of life imprisonment for the murders, the two seven-year attempt terms, Section 148 term, Section 323 term and associated fines/default provisions remained as imposed, with all sentences concurrent. Ramprakash in Appeal 373 and Hardaul in Appeal 235 were on bail; their bonds were cancelled and they were ordered to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve the remainder. The other seven were in jail and were to continue serving their sentences. A free copy of the judgment was directed to be given to each appellant, and the trial record was directed to be returned for compliance.

Ram Sewak and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 235/2010 & 373/2010, 23/11/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (699) Prev Next

Headnote :- Injured, related and interested witnesses - Mohar v State of U.P., (2002) 7 SCC 606, State of U.P. v Naresh, (2011) 4 SCC 324, and Baleshwar Mahto v State of Bihar, (2017) 3 SCC 152, with Abdul Sayeed, recognise injuries as supporting a witness's presence, while allowing rejection of the testimony for major contradictions. Mahavir Singh v State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, Harbeer Singh v Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, Vijendra Singh v State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, Raju v State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, Jodhan v State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, and Yogesh Singh v Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, require careful assessment of relationship, interest and enmity rather than categorical rejection; Raju warns against treating a relative who is a natural witness as invariably disinterested. The three injured witnesses, including child Suraj, and three further eyewitnesses were credited after scrutiny and medical corroboration.

Motive / enmity - Kunwarpal v State of Uttarakhand, (2014) 16 SCC 560, Ruli Ram v State of Haryana, (2002) 7 SCC 691, and State of U.P. v Kishan Chand, (2004) 7 SCC 629, treat prior hostility as capable of motivating assault or false implication. The earlier assault case arising from the buffalo entering the field, and the rejection of the Bhujaria apology, supplied a motive for the armed attack in this case; the Court did not infer guilt from hostility alone.

Medical and ocular evidence / collective assault - Baleshwar Mahto, Abdul Sayeed and CBI v Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC 1, require an independent assessment of the credibility of ocular testimony. Medical evidence that completely rules out that account is material, while alternative medical possibilities alone do not displace credible testimony. Wounds from edged and blunt weapons, fatal injuries to the skull and liver, and injuries to three survivors supported the witnesses; failure to show the weapons to the doctor and lack of punctured skull wounds did not negate the described assault. Abdul Sayeed also explains why a witness to an attack by several assailants need not attribute each of 29 wounds to a particular attacker, though specific edged-weapon acts were recounted.

Independent witnesses / adverse inference - State of H.P. v Gian Chand (introduced as "Gian Singh" before one extract), Mahesh v State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, and Vijendra Singh, with its Takhaji Hiraji distinction, treat the failure to examine an available witness as material only where that witness was needed to fill a gap in the prosecution case. Reliable injured testimony and corroboration made the absence of further villagers non-fatal in this incident on a public way in a village affected by factional rivalry.

Delayed police statements / CrPC §161 - Banti v State of M.P., (2004) 1 SCC 414, Prithvi (Minor) v Mam Raj, (2004) 13 SCC 279, Sunil Kumar v State of Rajasthan, (2005) 9 SCC 283, and State of U.P. v Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, reject automatic distrust based on delay. The explanation, questions put to the investigating officer and credibility of the testimony govern the assessment. The FIR was promptly lodged by an injured witness, three accounts were recorded the next day, and Kamlesh and Suraj explained their absence for two months. The delayed accounts were accepted.

Alibi / evening presence - A 3 p.m. photograph at a village 35 km away did not rule out Akhilesh's return by the 7–7:30 p.m. assault and did not independently establish Ramgopal's presence there. It was not proved that Ajmer's daytime photographs were taken on the date of the incident; Ramsewak's medical records were generated after arrest and did not prove confinement at home on the attack date. The prosecution's separate positive evidence remained essential.

Murder / Exception 4 / group liability - Surain Singh v State of Punjab, (2017) 5 SCC 796, requires all the conditions governing a sudden mutual fight to be met, including absence of premeditation, undue advantage or cruel conduct. An armed revenge assault with repeated wounds on two deceased and three injured did not qualify for §304 Part I conversion merely because the immediate exchange began suddenly. The convictions under section 302/307 directly and with the aid of §149 remained distinct for each appellant; all sentences were concurrent; the appeals were dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Criminal Appeals 235/2010 and 373/2010 challenged the judgment dated 8 March 2010 of the VI Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track), Lahar, in Sessions Trial 5/2008. On 28 August 2007 about 7–7:30 p.m., brothers Buddhe and Kamlesh approached Sarpanch Ramsewak's house for the Bhujaria custom of tying paddy ears as an apology after a prior dispute. The prosecution said nine appellants and another named participant were armed with axes, ballam, barchhi and lathis, objected to the visit and assaulted them. When their relatives Mungaram and Rameshwar and young Suraj arrived to calm the altercation, the assault extended to them. Mungaram died at or near the site from haemorrhage due to a lacerated liver and fractured rib; Rameshwar died en route with an occipital fracture and head wounds. Kamlesh had incised head and other wounds with fractures of a finger bone and clavicle; Buddhe had an incised scalp wound and multiple contusions; 12-year-old Suraj had a hand incision and thigh contusion. The FIR was lodged by injured Buddhe that evening, followed by post-mortems, MLCs, documentation of the scene and the seizure of earth, witness statements and weapon seizures. The trial court convicted the nine appellants under §148 for armed rioting, on two homicide and two attempt counts, and under §323/149 for the injuries to Suraj, distinguishing direct liability from liability under §149. It imposed life imprisonment on two counts, seven-year terms for the attempts, one year under §148 and six-month terms for simple injuries, as applicable, with fines and default terms. All sentences were concurrent. The appellant groups were Ramsewak, Lal Singh, Ajmer and Hardaul in Appeal 235, and Ramgopal, Ram Singh, Rambahadur, Ramprakash and Akhilesh in Appeal 373.

The defence alleged a sudden quarrel without premeditation, old enmity and false implication, lack of precise lathi-blow allocation, variance between ballam/barchhi claims and wound types, absence of blood at the scene and of independent villagers, poor lighting, delayed §161 statements and failure to show weapons to the doctor. Akhilesh and Ramgopal invoked a visit to Katha village for a function celebrating a birth; Ajmer relied on daytime village photographs; Ramsewak asserted confinement after a bicycle injury. They sought acquittal or conversion from §302 to §304 Part I. The State defended the verdict.

2. Precedents — Considered : For injured eyewitnesses, Mohar v State of U.P., (2002) 7 SCC 606, treated injury as strong confirmation of presence and required convincing evidence to discredit an injured witness; State of U.P. v Naresh, (2011) 4 SCC 324, described a "stamped" witness's special status, though material contradictions remain a basis for rejection. Baleshwar Mahto v State of Bihar, (2017) 3 SCC 152, quoted Abdul Sayeed v State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259, on injuries as supporting presence and the need to assess substantial discrepancies; it also reproduced the medical/ocular caution that a doctor's hypothetical alternative cannot automatically displace credible eyewitness testimony. The Court applied those principles to the documented injuries of Buddhe, Kamlesh and Suraj and the corroborating other witnesses, while separately testing the medical objections.

Mahavir Singh v State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, required interested-witness evidence to be cogent and trustworthy, and a chance witness to give a plausible explanation for being present. Harbeer Singh v Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, quoted Darya Singh on careful scrutiny of relatives sharing hostility but rejected compulsory independent corroboration as a rule; it also recognised that the prosecution need call material witnesses rather than every witness whose evidence would be cumulative. Vijendra Singh v State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, quoted Hari Obula Reddy and Kartik Malhar for cautious reliance on interested testimony where it is intrinsically reliable. Raju v State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, offered a qualification: it considered a natural relative's interest in punishment and warned that the Kalki formulation treating a natural relative as necessarily disinterested was too narrow, particularly where enmity may heighten the danger of adding an innocent person. It prescribed more discerning scrutiny as a rule of prudence, rather than an absolute legal requirement of corroboration. Jodhan v State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, quoted Dalip Singh and Hari Obula Reddy for careful, truth-focused review, seeking material corroboration where actual false-implication motive exists. Yogesh Singh v Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, surveyed Dalip Singh, Piara Singh, Hari Obula Reddy and Ramashish Rai and called enmity a double-edged fact, not automatic exclusion. The Court considered these authorities when assessing kinship, the earlier cross-case and the six prosecution witnesses.

On motive, Kunwarpal v State of Uttarakhand, (2014) 16 SCC 560, Ruli Ram v State of Haryana, (2002) 7 SCC 691, and State of U.P. v Kishan Chand, (2004) 7 SCC 629, explain that enmity can motivate both the crime and false implication and must be weighed with credible proof. The Court found the earlier case arising from the buffalo entering the field, and the refusal to accept the apology, supported the motive for the assault, rejecting the defence's exclusive false-implication inference. Abdul Sayeed, (2010) 10 SCC 259, was later cited directly on the practical difficulty of describing every injury in an attack by several assailants. CBI v Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC 1, quoted Abdul Sayeed's rule that medical evidence completely excluding ocular possibility may discredit it, while minor conflict and alternative medical possibility do not. The Court applied this principle to the axe and lathi injuries and the blows to the head with pointed weapons that had not caused puncture wounds. It accepted the direct evidence despite the failure to show the weapons to the doctor.

On missing independent witnesses, the judgment introduces an extract as "Gian Singh (supra)," but Vijendra Singh's reproduced discussion identifies the rule as State of H.P. v Gian Chand. The rule is that absence of a material witness is contextual: reliable testimony is not automatically nullified, but a witness withheld who could fill a genuine gap can support an adverse inference. Mahesh v State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, protected a credible injured roadside eyewitness despite missing bystanders. Vijendra Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 129, elaborated Gian Chand, Takhaji Hiraji, Dahari and other cases, contrasting redundant cumulative testimony with an essential unexamined witness. The High Court relied on the existing evidence because six eyewitnesses and medical evidence already supported the assault in a village affected by factional rivalry, near the Sarpanch's home.

For delayed police statements, Banti v State of M.P., (2004) 1 SCC 414, rejects universal suspicion and considers plausible explanation and whether the IO was specifically asked about delay. Prithvi (Minor) v Mam Raj, (2004) 13 SCC 279, warns against making a fetish of delay, quoting Mohd. Khalid on credible testimony despite an explained gap. Sunil Kumar v State of Rajasthan, (2005) 9 SCC 283, and State of U.P. v Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, similarly found the absence of IO questioning and witness explanations material. The Court applied these qualifications to the prompt recording of Buddhe's and other witnesses' statements and the two-month absence explained by Kamlesh and Suraj.

Ramesh v State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, was cited for rural witnesses' ability to recognise known neighbours in meagre light. Here, the accused were known villagers, and defence questioning itself elicited that it was a full-moon night. Finally Surain Singh v State of Punjab, (2017) 5 SCC 796, required every Exception 4 element, including a sudden mutual fight without premeditation and no undue advantage or cruel conduct. The Court applied it to reject §304 Part I conversion in view of the repeated armed blows to five people.

3. Statutes considered : IPC §148 punished armed rioting; §149 imposed liability based on the group's common object for the specified homicides, attempts and simple hurt to Suraj, while some appellants retained direct convictions under §302 or §307. The two murder counts under §302 concerned distinct victims. The §307 counts concerned the distinct injured persons Kamlesh and Buddhe, and the count under §323/149 concerned Suraj. Section 300 Exception 4 was central to the requested §304 Part I conversion: a sudden event alone was insufficient unless the additional requirements of a mutual fight, heat of passion, absence of premeditation and absence of unfair advantage or cruel conduct were met. The Court upheld §302, noting life imprisonment as the minimum. CrPC §161 governed the timing objection to witness statements, evaluated for explanation rather than automatic exclusion.

4. Issues : Whether the prosecution's six eyewitness accounts, three from medically injured witnesses including 12-year-old Suraj, were reliable despite family ties, prior hostility and differences in roles or memory. Whether prior enmity more plausibly supported false implication or an armed revenge motive. Whether non-examination of additional independent villagers, delayed §161 statements, lighting, spot blood notation, failure to show the seized weapons to the doctor and alleged ballam/barchhi wound conflict undermined the location and perpetrators. Whether daytime photos or an MLC prepared after arrest established alibis for Akhilesh, Ramgopal, Ajmer or Ramsewak at the evening event. Whether an apparently sudden confrontation qualified for §300 Exception 4 and §304 Part I in light of repeated attacks on five victims. Finally, what findings of direct liability and liability under §149, sentences and custody directions applied to each appellant and victim.

5. Ratio / Findings : Post-mortem and MLC evidence established two homicides and injuries to three survivors, including Kamlesh's fractures. The wounds sustained by Buddhe, Kamlesh and Suraj supported their presence; Janak Singh, prosecution witness Ram Singh and Gaura supported the narrative. The Court examined family connections and the previous quarrel under the cited interested-witness authorities. Raju cautions against automatically treating kinship as establishing disinterest, but no substantiated material discrepancy here persuaded the Bench that the six witnesses fabricated the attack. The earlier criminal case arising from the buffalo entering the field was proved by defence exhibits; as Kunwarpal, Ruli Ram and Kishan Chand allow, this hostility also supplied a motive for the accused to reject the Bhujaria apology and attack. The FIR itself referred to the old quarrel. The Court found the assault was a revengeful act, not a provoked mutual fight.

The medical wounds included incisions and blunt trauma consistent with edged weapons, axes and lathis. The Court reasoned that a ballam/barchhi blow to a hard skull need not produce a deep penetrating wound, so lack of one did not completely negate the eyewitness version. It acknowledged that the spot map omitted a written blood notation and the prosecution had not proved the RFSL forwarding draft, but the seizure memo recorded bloodstained earth, the FSL found blood in Article A, the IO was not asked to establish a mismatch, and nobody suggested a changed location. Likewise, the failure to show the weapons to the doctor did not determine the result. Defence questioning disclosed a full-moon night; accused and witnesses knew each other, and the Court considered the proximity of houses and rural visual adaptation under Ramesh. These case-specific points supported observation of the assault. In an attack by nine people on five victims, resulting in 29 wounds, Abdul Sayeed explained why precise allocation of every lathi blow was unrealistic; witnesses nevertheless described specific edged-weapon acts and injuries caused by blunt weapons corroborated the collective assault. The failure to examine other villagers did not reveal an essential gap in the six accounts accepted by the Court, as Gian Chand, Mahesh and Vijendra Singh require; an adverse inference could arise where an available essential witness is withheld and that evidence is needed to fill a genuine gap, which the Court did not find here.

Buddhe's statement and those of two other witnesses were recorded the next day. Kamlesh and child Suraj described returning after two months, accounting for their later statements; the IO was not specifically asked about the delay. Applying Banti, Prithvi, Sunil Kumar and Satish, the Court held this lapse did not automatically make their medically supported testimony unreliable. The alibis failed on their own facts: a 3 p.m. photograph 35 km away did not prevent return before the 7–7:30 p.m. assault and did not independently establish Ramgopal's presence there; Ajmer's photographs were taken during the day, and it was not adequately proved that they were taken on the date of the incident; Ramsewak's medical examination took place on 4 September after his arrest and did not prove his alleged bicycle fall or that he was resting at home on 28 August. The positive prosecution proof remained independently assessed.

Under Surain Singh, a sudden encounter does not satisfy Exception 4 unless there was a mutual sudden fight, without premeditation, unfair advantage or cruel conduct. The armed challenge and repeated injuries killing both interveners and hurting three others showed revenge, unfair advantage and cruelty, so the §302-to-§304 Part I request failed. The Court affirmed direct and constructive liability by victim: Akhilesh's two §302/149 and two direct §307 counts; Ram Singh's direct §302 for Mungaram and §302/149 for Rameshwar; Ramprakash and Lal Singh's direct §302 for Rameshwar and §302/149 for Mungaram. Each of those three retained convictions on two counts under §307/149. The other five appellants retained convictions on two counts under §302/149 and two under §307/149. All retained convictions under §148 and §323/149. It did not assign every individual wound to every appellant.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the appeals, affirming the 8 March 2010 Sessions Trial 5/2008 convictions and sentences. All sentences were directed to run concurrently; each term of life imprisonment, seven-year term for attempted murder, one-year term for armed rioting and six-month term for simple hurt, with the trial fines/default terms, remained in force as applicable to each appellant and victim. Ramprakash and Hardaul were on bail: their bonds were cancelled and they were directed to surrender immediately to serve the remaining imprisonment. The other appellants were in jail and were to serve their remaining terms. The Registry was directed to give every appellant a free copy and return the trial record for compliance. No §304 conversion, acquittal or remand was ordered.

Ram Sewak and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 235/2010 & 373/2010, 23/11/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (700) Prev Next

Headnote :- Common object and distinct convictions — Dani Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203, requires proof of an unlawful assembly of at least five persons sharing an object under Section 141. Mere presence is insufficient, but a separate overt act by each member is not essential. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, requires a clear finding, based on the evidence, of the nature of the unlawful object. The armed group arrived together where Arvind was sitting, several members carrying guns, and Hakim fired repeatedly. The Court inferred a common object to murder. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 18, addresses the overlapping elements of the rioting charges. The detailed trial table records convictions under Section 148, direct convictions under Sections 302/307 for Jagdish, Santosh, Dalel, Hakim and Atar Singh, and convictions under Sections 302/149 and 307/149 for Chhotelal and Bhure. A general opening sentence also mentions Section 147 without specifying an individual sentence under it. Ram Singh died during the appeal and his name was deleted from the cause title.

Homicide and intention — Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, identifies intention to inflict the particular injury and the objective sufficiency of that injury as distinct elements of Section 300 Thirdly. Anda, Arun Nivalaji More and R. Punnayya explain Sections 299–304. Mahesh Balmiki, Pulicherla Nagaraju, Sangapagu Anjaiah, Kanhaiyalal and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao require assessment of the facts, weapon, part of the body targeted and force used, rather than application of a fixed rule for a single blow. Multiple firearm wounds included injuries to the neck and abdomen and caused fatal haemorrhage. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak and Kanhaiyalal require all the conditions of Exception 4 to be met, including the absence of undue advantage or cruelty; K.M. Nanavati addresses grave and sudden provocation. The murder convictions were upheld without applying either the sudden-fight or provocation exception to reduce them.

Alibi and prosecution burden — Under Evidence Act Sections 11 and 103, an accused asserting whereabouts incompatible with presence at the scene must prove that fact. Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, makes clear that failure to establish an alibi does not itself prove presence; Lakhan Singh alias Pappu was cited on raising the plea at the earliest opportunity. The claim that Atar Singh, Bhure and Santosh attended a Sevadal meeting did not displace injured Kailashi's identification, which was supported by the objective evidence of injuries.

Injured, related and sole witness — Jayabalan v. Union Territory of Pondicherry, (2010) 1 SCC 199, Seeman v. State, (2005) 11 SCC 142, and Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, with its quotation of Abdul Sayeed, require cautious assessment of consistency. They recognise the evidentiary significance of a witness's injuries and reject automatic exclusion on grounds of kinship or the absence of a fixed number of independent witnesses. Kailashi, Arvind's mother, had a deep firearm wound to her hand and fractures. Her account of the armed arrival and firing was consistent with the five entrance wounds and associated exit injuries recorded in Arvind's postmortem.

Medical proof and disposition — The doctor attributed Arvind's death to haemorrhage from firearm injuries and stated that it appeared homicidal. The Court accepted the finding of homicidal death. Kailashi's injuries and the pattern of wounds corroborated the occurrence. The Court affirmed all surviving appellants' distinct sentences for murder, attempt and the offence under Section 148, to run concurrently, and dismissed both appeals. Six named appellants on bail were directed to surrender, and a warrant was ordered for absconding Hakim. The deceased Ram Singh's name had already been removed from the appeal's cause title.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The common judgment disposed of Criminal Appeal Nos. 589 and 681 of 2007, under Section 374 CrPC, against the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahar, Bhind's 10 July 2007 conviction and sentence in Sessions Trial No. 162/2001. Ram Singh, son of Shyam Lal, the first appellant in Appeal 589, died during appeal and was deleted from the cause title by order of 8 May 2013. Hakim Singh was absconding but represented by counsel; his appeal was considered. The seven surviving appellants were Jagdish, Santosh, Dalel, Hakim, Atar Singh, Chhotelal and Bhure. On 14 January 2001 around 1–1:30 pm, Arvind was sitting on a platform near his home when an armed group arrived and fired. His mother Kailashi Bai tried to rescue him, suffered a firearm injury to her hand and fractures, and Arvind died on the spot. Her husband Dhanaram, the complainant, said he had returned from a Sevadal meeting; he lodged the FIR. The initial narrative names eight accused. Kailashi later identified Hakim, Dalel, Jagdish, Atar and Santosh as armed with firearms, Ram Singh and Bhure with lathis and Chhotelal with a farsa. She specifically described Hakim firing five times. The defence asserted election rivalry, alleged false implication and said Atar, Bhure and Santosh attended the Sevadal meeting rather than the assault. It challenged whether Karan Singh and Ashok had seen the event and relied on Dhanaram's statement that he was attending the meeting when the incident occurred.

The trial court's detailed table imposed two years' rigorous imprisonment and Rs 2,000 fine under Section 148 on each surviving appellant, three months' rigorous imprisonment in default; life imprisonment and Rs 20,000 fine for each murder conviction, three years' rigorous imprisonment in default; and seven years' rigorous imprisonment and Rs 10,000 fine for each attempt conviction, with one year's rigorous imprisonment in default for the five direct Section 307 counts and two years for the two Section 307/149 counts. All sentences were concurrent. Jagdish, Santosh, Dalel, Hakim and Atar were convicted directly under Sections 302 and 307; Chhotelal and Bhure were convicted under Sections 302/149 and 307/149. These convictions and sentences are recorded in the table and the disposition.

Dr S.K. Singh Niranjan documented five entrance wounds on Arvind, associated exit wounds to thigh, abdomen and neck, and a retained metallic pellet in the right shoulder/root-of-neck track. Blackening and tattooing accompanied several entrances. The neck track damaged vessels and structures, while the left thigh bone was shattered. He attributed death to syncope from excessive haemorrhage caused by antemortem firearm injuries and stated that it appeared homicidal. The Court accepted the finding of homicidal death. Kailashi had a deep blackened left-hand laceration and a right-thumb contusion, with fractures shown on X-rays. Weapons were seized under memoranda and sent for forensic examination; the FSL reports were said to show functioning seized articles. The prosecution called 20 witnesses, including Karan Singh, Ashok, Dhanaram, Kailashi, the doctor and investigating officers.

2. Precedents — Considered : Dani Singh v. State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203, was quoted at length: Section 149 depends on an unlawful assembly of at least five persons, a Section 141 common object shared by members or adopted even during the event, and the offence's connection to it or members' knowledge of its likelihood. Mere presence is not enough; a personally attributed overt act is not invariably necessary; different members may have different knowledge as the object changes. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 18, explained why Sections 143, 147 and 148 have nested elements and a Section 147 charge need not be separately framed when the relevant Section 149 offence is charged. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, required an express, evidence-based finding of the unlawful object's nature. In paragraph 61, the Court applied the shared-object principle to the armed group's coordinated arrival and firing.

Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was quoted for the four Section 300 Thirdly elements: bodily injury, its nature, intention to inflict the particular injury, rather than an accidental injury or a different injury, and objective sufficiency to cause death in the ordinary course. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, stressed the sufficiency of the intended injury and the relevance of the weapon and part of the body injured. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra set out the sequential inquiry under Sections 299 and 300 and the difference between Section 304 Parts I and II for intention and knowledge. State of A.P. v. R. Punnayya, (1976) 4 SCC 382, distinguished the three degrees of culpable homicide.

Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejected an invariable rule that one fatal blow cannot attract Section 302. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, listed factors for intention, including whether the weapon was carried or picked up, the part of the body injured and whether it was vital, the force used, any quarrel, preparation, prior enmity, provocation, unfair advantage and the number of blows. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred intention from a forceful crowbar blow to the head, a vital part of the body. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, reproduced Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram on the absence of an automatic reduction for a single blow and the importance of injury to a vital part. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, including its discussion of Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh, likewise required assessment in the factual context.

Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, was quoted for the cumulative requirements of Exception 4: no premeditation, a sudden mutual fight in the heat of passion, no unfair advantage or cruel or unusual conduct, and a fight with the deceased. Kanhaiyalal again reproduced the four conditions. K.M. Nanavati v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1962 SC 605, set out the reasonable-person test for grave and sudden provocation, the possible significance of words or gestures and the background, and the relevance of an interval allowing passions to cool.

Lakhan Singh alias Pappu v. State of NCT of Delhi, Criminal Appeal No. 166/1999, was quoted on raising an alibi at the first opportunity. Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, explained alibi as evidence under Section 11, not a general Penal Code exception, and expressly said failure of the defence does not prove presence: the prosecution must prove it positively. Jayabalan v. Union Territory of Pondicherry, (2010) 1 SCC 199, required cautious assessment of the consistency of interested witnesses' evidence, without a pedantic approach. Seeman v. State, (2005) 11 SCC 142, said reliable related or even sole testimony may suffice; absence of one named independent witness is not automatically fatal. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, quoted Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259, on the injured witness's enhanced assurance of presence, while preserving rejection for major contradictions. The citations to Ramlagan Singh, Malkhan Singh, Vishnu, Balraje and Jarnail Singh occur within Jodhan's supporting discussion; they were not separately applied in reasoned findings by this Court.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC supplied appellate jurisdiction. IPC Section 141 defines unlawful assembly and Section 149 attaches liability for an offence committed in pursuit of the assembly's shared object or known by its members to be likely in pursuit of that object; Sections 143, 147 and 148 concern membership and rioting, with Section 148 being the armed-rioting offence for which sentences were imposed. Sections 299 and 300 define culpable homicide and murder; Section 300 Thirdly and possible Exceptions 1 and 4 were discussed, Section 302 provided the affirmed murder punishment, and Section 304 Parts I and II were discussed as legal distinctions; no convictions under them were substituted. Section 307 governed attempted murder of Kailashi, directly or with Section 149. Evidence Act Section 11 makes incompatible whereabouts relevant and Section 103 places proof of the asserted alibi fact on the party asserting it without shifting the prosecution's ultimate burden.

4. Issues : Whether the death of Arvind was homicidal and Kailashi was injured in the same firing; whether her related, interested and injured testimony remained reliable after alleged contradictions, missing FIR overt acts, contested other eyewitnesses and political rivalry; whether Atar, Bhure and Santosh's Sevadal meeting theory established absence, subject to the principle that failure to establish an alibi does not prove presence; whether at least five accused shared a Section 141 unlawful object and whether the fatal shooting and attempted murder occurred in pursuit of that object or were known to be likely in its pursuit; whether firearm injuries, body parts and group conduct supported the distinct findings of direct and constructive liability under Sections 302/307 or some lower homicide category or exception; and whether the concurrent trial sentences should stand for each surviving appellant.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor identified five firearm entrance wounds with burn marks/blackening and tattooing in the described areas, related exits, severe tissue and vessel injury, shattered left femur and a pellet. He attributed Arvind's death to excessive haemorrhage and said it appeared homicidal. The Court accepted the finding of homicidal death. The doctor's examination that day and the X-rays documented Kailashi's deep hand injury and fractures. The Court held her injury a strong indicator of presence and found her specific identification of armed, known assailants and her account of Hakim's shots supported by that objective evidence. It considered the fact that she was Arvind's mother and the asserted omissions; in the context of a sudden traumatic event and an illiterate village witness, it judged them non-material. Karan and Ashok's eyewitness status was attacked; the Court referred to trial reliance on them but based its discussion on Kailashi's credible evidence, the medical evidence and the investigation. It rejected witness counting as a test.

The Court stated that all accused reached the platform armed and inferred from their coordinated conduct a common object to kill Arvind. According to Kailashi, Hakim fired five times. It applied Dani Singh and Kuldip Yadav's shared unlawful-object requirement, while affirming the distinct direct convictions and convictions with the aid of Section 149 recorded in the final trial table. The defence relied on Dhanaram's statement that he was attending the Sevadal meeting when the incident occurred. The Court accepted the injured witness's evidence of her presence and the assault.

The Court laid out the Section 300 Thirdly, Section 304 Part I/II, sudden fight and provocation doctrines, then upheld the murder convictions on the evidence of the firearm assault and fatal haemorrhage. Multiple shots and the neck and abdominal tracks supported the trial's conclusion. Neither the sudden-fight nor the grave-provocation exception was applied to reduce the convictions. Kailashi's hand gunshot injuries during rescue supported the affirmed attempt convictions. Memoranda/seizures and FSL reports indicating that seized articles functioned reinforced the prosecution case. The introduction mentions Section 147, the charge recital differs from the conviction table, and the general legal discussion refers to Section 34. The detailed convictions recorded in the table were affirmed.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed the trial conviction and sentence dated 10 July 2007 for the surviving appellants, including two years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 148, life imprisonment under Section 302 directly or Section 302/149, and seven years under Section 307 directly or Section 307/149, with the fines and default terms in the detailed table, all concurrent. Jagdish, Santosh, Dalel, Chhotelal, Atar Singh and Bhure had been on bail under suspended sentences; their bonds were cancelled and they were directed to surrender immediately to serve the balance of their sentences. The trial court was directed to issue an arrest warrant for absconding Hakim Singh. The deceased Ram Singh had already been removed from the cause title, and the trial record was ordered to be returned with a copy of the judgment.

Ram Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 589/2007 & 681/2007, 24/08/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (701) Prev Next

Headnote :- Unlawful assembly / common object / §149 IPC - Dani Singh v State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203, requires an assembly of at least five members sharing an unlawful object under §141. Liability extends to offences committed in pursuit of that object or known by members to be likely in its pursuit. Mere presence is insufficient, but an individual overt act is not indispensable. The common object may change, and members' knowledge may differ. Mahadev Sharma v State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 18, explains when rioting ingredients are implicit in another charge and when a separate charge is required. Kuldip Yadav v State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, requires a clear finding of an unlawful common object. The coordinated arrival of eight armed persons and the shooting supported that finding here. Bhure's and Chhotelal's liability under sections 302/149 and 307/149 was sustained without identifying a particular shot fired by either of them.

Culpable homicide / murder / §300 thirdly - Virsa Singh v State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, distinguishes the intention to inflict the particular injury from the objective question whether it is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. An intention to cause death is not required. Arun Nivalaji More (Criminal Appeals 1078–1079/2005) explains the sequence of inquiry from §299 to §300 and then §304 Part I/II; Anda v State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, addresses the sufficiency of the injury. Mahesh Balmiki v State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, Pulicherla Nagaraju v State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, Sangapagu Anjaiah v State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, State of Rajasthan v Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, reject an automatic reduction merely because there was a single blow. They require consideration of the weapon, vital part targeted, force and surrounding circumstances. State of A.P. v R. Punnayya, (1976) 4 SCC 382, classifies the grades of homicide. The multiple firearm wounds and fatal blood loss supported §302. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak, (2003) 9 SCC 322, Kanhaiyalal and K.M. Nanavati, AIR 1962 SC 605, set out the limits of Exception 4 and provocation. No exception was applied to reduce the conviction, and no conversion was ordered.

Alibi / burden and prosecution proof - Under Evidence Act sections 11 and 103, Binay Kumar Singh v State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, holds that failure to establish an alibi does not itself prove presence; the prosecution must still produce positive evidence. Lakhan Singh @ Pappu v State of NCT of Delhi, Criminal Appeal 166/1999, requires the alibi to be raised promptly. The Sevadal meeting argument did not displace Kailashi's identification, which the Court accepted. Failure of the alibi was not used as a substitute for prosecution evidence.

Related and injured eyewitness / credibility - Jayabalan v UT of Pondicherry, (2010) 1 SCC 199, requires cautious scrutiny for consistency without rejecting evidence because of kinship. Seeman v State, (2005) 11 SCC 142, permits reliance on credible testimony from a sole related witness despite the absence of independent corroboration. Jodhan v State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, applying Abdul Sayeed, (2010) 10 SCC 259, recognises that injury supports a witness's presence, subject to major contradictions. Kailashi's firearm injury to her hand and Arvind's post-mortem findings corroborated her account; minor omissions did not discredit it. Both appeals were dismissed, with separate surrender and warrant directions for the appellants concerned.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Criminal Appeals 589/2007 and 681/2007 arose from Sessions Trial 162/2001 and challenged the judgment dated 10 July 2007 of the Additional Sessions Judge, Lahar. According to the prosecution, an armed group arrived on 14 January 2001 at about 1–1.30 p.m., while Dhanaram's son Arvind was sitting near the house, and fired at him. Arvind's mother Kailashi Bai came to help and sustained firearm injuries to her hands. Arvind died at the scene. The earlier narrative identified Hakim, Santosh, Dalel, Jagdish and Atar Singh as carrying guns, and Bhure, Ram Singh and Chhotelal as carrying lathi/farsa. The eyewitness described Hakim firing repeatedly. Police documented the scene, collected weapons and had them tested, recorded witnesses' statements, obtained Kailashi's medical record and Arvind's post-mortem report, and filed charges. The medical evidence recorded injuries to Kailashi's hands and fractured metacarpals. Arvind had multiple firearm entry and exit wounds involving the thigh, abdomen and neck/shoulder, with fatal blood loss. At trial, Jagdish, Santosh, Dalel, Hakim and Atar Singh were convicted directly under IPC sections 148, 302 and 307 and sentenced respectively to two years' rigorous imprisonment, life imprisonment and seven years' rigorous imprisonment, with fines and default terms. Bhure and Chhotelal were convicted under sections 148, 302/149 and 307/149 with corresponding terms. All sentences were concurrent. Ram Singh, appellant 1 in Appeal 589, died during the appeal, and his name was deleted by order dated 8 May 2013. Hakim was absconding, but his appeal was considered because he was represented by counsel. The appellants disputed identification and the eyewitnesses' presence. They relied on omissions, relationship, a Sevadal meeting alibi for some appellants, political rivalry, the absence of individual overt acts in the FIR, and their objection to §149. The State supported the convictions.

2. Precedents — Considered : Dani Singh v State of Bihar, (2004) 13 SCC 203, explains that §149 concerns common object, as distinct from common intention under §34. An assembly of at least five members, with shared awareness of and concurrence in an object under §141, must be shown. Mere presence is insufficient, but a personal overt act is not invariably necessary. The object may form or change over time, and knowledge and liability under §149 may differ between members. The Court used this principle to assess the coordinated armed group. Mahadev Sharma v State of Bihar, (1966) 1 SCR 18, explains that the ingredients of rioting may be implicit in charges under §149, and that a distinct charge under §147 need not always be framed separately unless a conviction under it is sought. It formed part of the statutory discussion. Kuldip Yadav v State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, requires an express finding, supported by evidence, that the object was both common and unlawful. Here, the Court inferred an object to commit murder from the arrival and assault by eight armed persons, rather than treating their mere presence as sufficient.

Virsa Singh v State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, supplies the four-step test under §300 Thirdly. The presence and nature of the injury must be established objectively. There must be an intention to inflict that particular injury, rather than an accidental or different injury. The injury must then be shown objectively to be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Once those elements are established, an intention to kill or knowledge of the injury's fatal severity is unnecessary. Arun Nivalaji More v State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079/2005, explains the inquiry from §299 to the clauses and exceptions of §300, followed by the distinction between §304 Part I, based on intention, and Part II, based on knowledge. Anda v State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, emphasises sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature, with the weapon and body part taken into account. State of A.P. v R. Punnayya, (1976) 4 SCC 382, distinguishes the three punishment grades of culpable homicide. The Court cited these authorities to classify the fatal repeated gunfire as murder, rather than treating the fact of death alone as sufficient for §302.

Mahesh Balmiki v State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejects a fixed rule that a single blow excludes §302. The weapon, vital part targeted, circumstances, and the offender's intention or knowledge must be assessed. Pulicherla Nagaraju v State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, gives a non-exhaustive list of factors, including whether the weapon was carried or picked up, the force used, the target, sudden fight, premeditation, enmity and provocation. Sangapagu Anjaiah v State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred an intention to cause death from a forceful crowbar strike to the head. State of Rajasthan v Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, discusses Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram on the absence of an automatic single-blow rule, and quotes the four conditions of Exception 4. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, referring in turn to Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh, again distinguishes the intention to inflict the wound from knowledge of its seriousness. These authorities formed part of the legal discussion; the present case involved multiple shots. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, describes Exception 4 as applying to a sudden, mutual and unpremeditated fight without unfair advantage or cruelty. K.M. Nanavati v State of Maharashtra, AIR 1962 SC 605, explains the reasonable-person and cooling-time limits of grave and sudden provocation.

On alibi, Lakhan Singh @ Pappu v State of NCT of Delhi, Criminal Appeal 166/1999, was cited for the requirement to raise the defence promptly. Binay Kumar Singh v State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, explains §11 of the Evidence Act and makes clear that failure of an alibi cannot prove the accused's presence: the prosecution must still establish it by positive evidence. Jayabalan v UT of Pondicherry, (2010) 1 SCC 199, requires cautious scrutiny of interested testimony for consistency, without a pedantic approach. Seeman v State, (2005) 11 SCC 142, permits reliance on credible testimony from a sole related witness after careful scrutiny, and rejects automatic disbelief because an independent witness was not examined. Jodhan v State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, quoted Abdul Sayeed v State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259: injury corroborates a witness's presence, although strong grounds based on contradictions may justify rejection. The Court applied these principles to Kailashi's testimony and medical injuries, rather than treating kinship as an automatic guarantee of truth.

3. Statutes considered : IPC §141 defines an unlawful assembly and its qualifying objects. Sections 147 and 148 concern rioting and armed rioting, with the punishment table recording sentences under §148. Section 149 imposes constructive liability for an offence committed in pursuit of a common object or known to be likely in its pursuit. It requires five or more members, membership of the assembly and a common unlawful purpose. The direct convictions under §302 and those under section 302/149 were preserved separately, as were the convictions under §307 and §307/149 for Kailashi's firearm injury. The different appellant groups were not merged. IPC §299 distinguishes culpable homicide based on intention or knowledge. Under §300 Thirdly, the intended bodily injury must be objectively sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The exceptions, particularly Exception 4, prevent classification as murder only when their conditions are met. IPC §304 Parts I/II were discussed as possible classifications, but there was no conversion to §304. Evidence Act sections 11 and 103 concerned the relevance and burden of an alibi, without shifting the prosecution's duty to prove presence and guilt. CrPC §374 provided the appellate remedy.

4. Issues : (1) Whether the eight armed participants formed an unlawful assembly with a proved common object to commit murder, and whether §149 could apply without a separate overt act attributed to each member in the FIR, while preserving the distinction between direct and constructive liability. (2) Whether the multiple fatal firearm wounds, medical evidence and circumstances justified §302 rather than a reduced classification under §304, and whether the quoted sudden-fight and provocation exceptions had a factual basis. (3) Whether the asserted Sevadal meeting attendance and political rivalry displaced the prosecution evidence, without treating failure of an alibi as positive proof of presence. (4) Whether Kailashi's testimony, as the deceased's mother and an injured witness, could be accepted despite kinship, omissions and challenges to Karan/Ashok, and whether it was consistent with the medical and weapon evidence. (5) Whether the convictions and concurrent sentences of each surviving appellant should stand, with Hakim absent and Ram Singh deceased.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor recorded Kailashi's gunshot injury to the hand and fractures, and Arvind's multiple ante-mortem firearm wounds, including severe tracks through the neck and abdomen. He attributed death to syncope caused by excessive haemorrhage, supporting the finding of homicide. Applying Dani Singh and Kuldip Yadav, the Court explained the five-person threshold under §149, the common object and the connected conduct. Eight armed men arrived together, and the attack followed immediately. Kailashi identified them and described Hakim firing repeatedly. The Court inferred an unlawful object to kill from their collective conduct and affirmed both the direct convictions and those under §149. A separate overt act was not required for each member held constructively liable, but the inference rested on more than mere passive presence. The discussion of §299–300 incorporated Virsa Singh's test of an intended injury objectively sufficient to cause death, and the distinction between intention and knowledge, reinforced by Arun Nivalaji More and Anda. The wounds, firearm attack and death from haemorrhage were consistent with maintaining the conviction under §302. The Court also set out the alibi principles under §11/§103 and Binay Kumar Singh's rule against treating a failed alibi as prosecution proof.

Kailashi was the deceased's mother and also an injured witness whose presence at the attack was medically supported. The Court applied Jayabalan, Seeman and Jodhan/Abdul Sayeed in scrutinising her evidence, rather than rejecting it because of the relationship. It found that her account of all appellants' armed arrival and Hakim's gunfire remained undisturbed on material points. It assessed the minor omissions in light of her illiteracy and the fact that she saw her son die. The doctor's evidence and FSL reports confirming that the weapons were functional supported the central account of the assault. The Court held that the number of witnesses was immaterial where her credible testimony sufficed. Dhanaram's meeting attendance and alleged omissions in the eyewitness accounts had been relied on by the defence. The Court held that the trial convictions were supported.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both criminal appeals and confirmed the conviction and concurrent sentences dated 10 July 2007 in Sessions Trial 162/2001. Jagdish, Santosh, Dalel, Chhotelal, Atar Singh and Bhure were on bail after suspension of their sentences. Their bail bonds were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender immediately to serve the remainder of their sentences. Hakim Singh was absconding; the trial court was directed to issue an arrest warrant to secure his presence to serve his sentence. Ram Singh had died during the appeal and had already been removed from the cause title, so that operative direction did not apply to him. The trial record was ordered to be returned with a copy of the judgment. The punishment table records two years' RI and a fine of ₹2,000 under §148; life imprisonment and a fine of ₹20,000 under §302, either directly or read with §149; and seven years' RI and a fine of ₹10,000 under §307, either directly or read with §149. The default term was one year for direct §307 and two years for §307/149. The sentences were concurrent. There was no acquittal or conversion of the offences.

Ram Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Atar Singh and another v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 589/2007 & 681/2007, 24/08/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (702) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR inaction / police duty and remedy — Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, affirms the duty under Section 154 CrPC to record information disclosing a cognizable offence. It also directs a complainant faced with police inaction to the Magistrate's complaint procedure under Sections 190/200. The quoted discussion distinguishes Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary, concerning police action, from AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari, concerning the citizen's remedy when police do not act. The applicant alleged that the police had not registered an FIR despite his complaint.

Magistrate options — Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, describes a written approach to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). The Magistrate may direct registration of an FIR and a proper investigation, and may monitor that investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, adds that a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied may recommend a change of investigating officer, but cannot investigate personally. Divine Retreat Centre, quoting Gangadhar, explains the complaint inquiry under Sections 190/200, a possible investigation and report, dismissal under Section 203, or cognizance and issue of process. The Court preserved the applicant's liberty to approach the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/223 BNSS.

High Court intervention / exceptions — Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognises directions under Article 226 in rare cases of clearly established mala fide investigation, abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII. Even then, the High Court may require compliance with the statutory process, but cannot dictate how the police investigate. In Shweta Bhadauria, W.A. 247/2016, the Madhya Pradesh Division Bench referred to Whirlpool's four exceptions to the alternative-remedy rule. It held that Lalita Kumari, (2014) 2 SCC 1, addressed the duty to register an FIR, rather than an automatic right to mandamus without using the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200. The present application was brought under Section 482 CrPC, while the quoted passages concerned writ jurisdiction. Applying those authorities, the Court declined to direct registration and dismissed the application as not maintainable, leaving the Magistrate remedy open.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ram Singh Vanshkar filed Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 48043/2024 under Section 482 CrPC against the State of Madhya Pradesh and others. He submitted that he had made a complaint but the police had not lodged an FIR and sought a direction to do so. The State opposed the application on the ground that he could approach the competent Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The Court framed the question as the maintainability of a High Court request to direct police to register an FIR.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted at length. It states that police must register information disclosing a cognizable offence under Section 154, but a citizen aggrieved by police inaction should approach the Magistrate under Section 190 read with Section 200 CrPC. The quotation reconciled Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2006) 2 SCC 677, and its reiteration in Lallan Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2006) 12 SCC 229, concerning police duty, with All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359, concerning the procedure to follow when officials fail to act. Aleque Padamsee's additional direction concerning sanction related to that case, and was not an issue in the present application.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted on the High Court's rare corrective jurisdiction under Article 226 where mala fide investigation, clear abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII are established, while precluding directions on particular investigative steps. It also quoted Gangadhar's account of the Magistrate's complaint procedure under Chapter XV. After inquiry, the Magistrate may seek a police investigation and report, dismiss the complaint under Section 203 if no offence appears, or take cognizance and issue process when justified. The decision emphasised that an ordinary grievance about police inaction should be pursued under Sections 190 and 200, rather than by an immediate writ petition.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, set out the sequence of a written approach to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application under Section 156(3). A Magistrate may direct registration of an FIR and a proper investigation, and may monitor it. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed the Magistrate remedy. It specified the requirement of prima facie satisfaction, the power to recommend a change of investigating officer if necessary, and the distinction between monitoring an investigation and conducting the police investigation personally. It also explained why ordinary grievances about FIR registration and investigation should be directed to the Magistrate.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016 (20 December 2016), was the High Court Division Bench authority applied by the single judge. It held that mandamus to enforce the duty under Section 154 may be refused where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the four exceptions recognised in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1: the duty to register an FIR does not determine entitlement to writ mandamus without using alternative remedies. Whirlpool and Lalita Kumari were considered through the quoted Division Bench rule.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked for the present application. Section 154 CrPC imposes the duty to register an FIR on information disclosing a cognizable offence; subsection (3) permits a written approach to the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) permits a Magistrate to direct and monitor investigation as described in the authorities. Sections 190 and 200 provide the procedure for a complaint and cognizance; Section 203 provides for dismissal where sufficient ground is lacking after consideration. Chapter XII concerns police investigation, and Chapter XV concerns complaint procedure. The precedents addressed Article 226 as the High Court's exceptional public-law jurisdiction; the present proceeding was filed under Section 482, rather than as a writ petition.

4. Issues : Whether the Court should direct registration of an FIR on an application under Section 482 alleging only police inaction, or require the applicant to use the remedies before the Superintendent of Police and the Magistrate; how the police's substantive duty differs from the aggrieved person's procedural remedy; and whether the cited exceptions concerning rare cases of mala fide investigation or the alternative-remedy rule justified High Court intervention on the facts stated.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the distinction drawn in Aleque Padamsee: police should register information disclosing a cognizable offence, but where they fail to do so, the Code provides an effective complaint remedy before the Magistrate. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe describe the successive remedies under Section 154(3) and Section 156(3), and the Magistrate's supervisory role. Divine Retreat Centre preserves exceptional oversight under Article 226 in cases of clear abuse. The Division Bench rule in Shweta Bhadauria governed an ordinary request for FIR mandamus in this High Court and distinguished Lalita Kumari's substantive registration duty. The applicant's stated case was that police had not registered an FIR despite his complaint. The Court declined to direct registration and dismissed the application under Section 482 as not maintainable.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application as not maintainable. It expressly left the applicant free, if he considered that an offence had been committed against him, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS. It neither directed registration of an FIR nor ordered monitoring of an investigation, and did not decide the merits of any complaint the applicant might file.

Ram Singh Vanshkar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 48043/2024, 26/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (703) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 145(4) possession and timing — R.C. Patuck v. Fatima A. Kindasa, AIR 1997 SC 2320, distinguishes the ordinary inquiry into actual possession on the date of the preliminary order under Section 145(1) from the proviso's protection through deemed possession. That protection applies to a party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed within two months before receipt of the police report or other information, or between receipt and the preliminary order. The continuing effects of an earlier dispossession do not extend that period. In the dispute over land on which a village school had formerly stood, the SDO's order, which had been set aside, referred to a door constructed about six months earlier. That finding alone did not establish when one party had dispossessed the other. The High Court left the questions of timing and possession to be determined on evidence after remand.

Premature revisional observation — The First Additional Judge to the Court of the First Additional Sessions Judge, Datia, set aside the SDO's direction dated 12 April 2021 requiring the applicant to vacate the land and remanded the police Istgasa for a fair hearing and evidence. Paragraph 6 of the revisional order nevertheless stated that eviction was within the scope of Section 145. The applicant accepted the remand and challenged only that statement. In the absence of a specific finding on the date of dispossession, the High Court held the observation unwarranted and directed that it should not prejudice the SDO.

Evidence and statutory notice — Respondent No. 1's evidence had been deferred, and the SDO obtained a Nayab Tahsildar's report and decided the matter without completing both parties' evidence and hearing them. Such an inquiry report is neither the parties' evidence nor a judgment. Respondent No. 1 suggested Section 133 CrPC or Section 250 of the MP Land Revenue Code as alternative sources of power. The Court left their application undecided and cautioned against surprising the parties with an order under a different statute when they had not prepared their cases on that basis. The application under Section 482 was disposed of with a direction for a fresh decision under Section 145, after determining the relevant date and without being influenced by the revisional observation. The revisional record was ordered to be returned.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ram Singh Yadav filed MCRC No. 51066/2021 under Section 482 CrPC, challenging a limited part of the order dated 24 July 2021 passed by the First Additional Judge to the Court of the First Additional Sessions Judge, Datia, in Criminal Revision No. 56/2021. A police Istgasa under Section 145 CrPC concerned land in village Kutoli on which a primary school had formerly stood. The school had moved about 40 years earlier. The applicant and respondent Brij Nandan Yadav both claimed possession and were alleged to be creating a nuisance. Respondent No. 1 claimed that the Education Department had handed him the land after the school moved and that the applicant was interfering with his possession. This was a disputed claim, not a finding of title by the High Court. The SDO, Bhander, began recording evidence but deferred respondent No. 1's evidence on the applicant's objection and sought a Nayab Tahsildar's report. On 12 April 2021, the SDO directed the applicant to vacate the land, stating that the applicant had constructed a door about six months earlier. In revision, the SDO's order was set aside and the matter remanded for a proper hearing and evidence. Yet paragraph 6 of the revisional order stated that the eviction direction was within the scope of Section 145. The applicant accepted the remand and challenged only that prejudicial observation. The High Court had received the revisional record but not the SDO's file. Counsel for both parties consented to a decision on the available material.

The applicant submitted that the proviso to Section 145(4) permits deemed possession and restoration only where forcible and wrongful dispossession occurred within its defined two-month period. He argued that the finding of a door constructed six months earlier could not sustain eviction. Respondent No. 1 relied on his claim of earlier possession and suggested possible powers under Section 133 CrPC or Section 250 of the Madhya Pradesh Land Revenue Code.

2. Precedents — Considered : R.C. Patuck v. Fatima A. Kindasa, AIR 1997 SC 2320, was quoted and applied as the Supreme Court authority. Paragraph 9 explains that the ordinary inquiry under Section 145(4) concerns possession on the date of the order under Section 145(1). The proviso creates a limited legal fiction: a party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed may be treated as having been in possession on that date if dispossession occurred within two months immediately before receipt of the police report or other information, or after receipt but before the preliminary order. Paragraph 10 refused restoration because admissions placed the loss of possession before that period. It rejected the contention that continued non-possession was a continuing wrong that restarted the period. In paragraphs 11 and 13, the High Court referred to the filing of the complaint when describing the two-month period.

3. Statutes considered : Section 145(1) CrPC provides for a preliminary order in a dispute concerning land or water that is likely to cause a breach of the peace. Under Section 145(4), the Magistrate must consider the written statements, hear the parties and receive evidence to determine possession on the date of the Section 145(1) order, without deciding title or the right to possess. Its proviso permits deemed possession following forcible and wrongful dispossession within the period described above. Section 482 CrPC was the inherent jurisdiction invoked in the High Court to challenge the revisional observation. Respondent No. 1 relied on Section 133 CrPC and Section 250 of the MP Land Revenue Code as possible alternative powers, but their application was expressly left undecided.

4. Issues : Whether the revisional court could express a favourable opinion on the legality of the SDO's eviction direction after setting it aside for incomplete evidence and hearing; how the two-month period in the proviso to Section 145(4) was to be calculated, and whether the finding of a door constructed six months earlier itself established forcible dispossession; whether an administrative inquiry report could replace evidence from both parties; and whether Section 133 CrPC or Section 250 of the MP Land Revenue Code could provide an alternative basis in the remanded case without proper notice of the statutory basis and an opportunity to meet its different requirements. The remand itself was not disputed.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court quoted the full text of Section 145(4) and R.C. Patuck. The ordinary inquiry concerns actual possession on the date of the preliminary order. A party forcibly and wrongfully dispossessed within the limited period in the proviso may be treated as having been in possession; an earlier dispossession does not qualify merely because its consequences continue. Although the SDO had found that a door was constructed about six months earlier, that order had been set aside and had merged in the revisional order. There was no specific finding, based on evidence, of the date on which one party dispossessed the other. The revisional court therefore had no occasion to decide in advance whether the SDO's eviction direction fell within Section 145 or whether the two-month requirement was met. Its observation in paragraph 6 was unwarranted. The High Court neither declared the applicant's possession lawful nor permanently excluded relief under Section 145. It directed the SDO to determine the actual date of dispossession before deciding whether the statutory time requirement was met.

The remand was upheld because the SDO had acted on the Nayab Tahsildar's report without fully recording evidence or giving both parties a complete hearing. An authority's inquiry report is neither the parties' evidence nor a judgment that can replace the statutory inquiry. The applicant accepted the remand. The suggested alternatives under Section 133 and the MP Land Revenue Code were left open without findings on their merits. Parties prepare their evidence and defence under the identified provision and cannot be taken by surprise by a decision under a different statute in the same proceeding.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court disposed of the application under Section 482. It partially upheld the revisional order dated 24 July 2021: the remand for a fresh inquiry under Section 145 in accordance with law remained in force, but the observation in paragraph 6 on the SDO's eviction power was declared unwarranted. The High Court directed that the observation should not prejudice the SDO. Whether the Section 145 proceedings satisfied the proviso's timing condition was to be decided only after a finding on the date of dispossession. The High Court directed the immediate return of the revisional record; the SDO's record had not been received.

Ram Singh Yadav v. Brij Nandan Yadav and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 51066/2021, 22/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (704) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation control / arrest — D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, disapproves judicial control of the details of an investigation by requiring police to record particular statements, arrest an accused, seize property or file a chargesheet merely because an investigation is pending. It quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on the discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC and the effect of mechanical arrest on liberty. A lawful investigation may end in either a chargesheet or a closure report. The petitioner sought completion of the investigation into an FIR under IPC Sections 420/34. The order also recorded a prayer to identify and arrest the accused. The Court refused directions to arrest or to take particular investigative steps.

Timely completion / report — Section 173(1) CrPC, referred to alongside Section 193 BNSS, requires investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. Crime No. 0399/2023, registered at Misrod police station on the petitioner's complaint, was still under investigation at the hearing in November 2024. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the investigation as early as possible, decide whether an offence was made out, and take the necessary lawful steps towards the appropriate final report. The petitioner was free to submit any grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Bhopal, for consideration in accordance with law.

Affected persons / restraint — D. Venkatasubramaniam quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, against adverse judicial directions concerning investigation that affect the liberty and reputation of persons who have not been given notice. That discussion concerned Section 482, whereas the present matter was a writ petition under Article 226. The High Court confined its order to enforcing the statutory duty of timely completion, leaving the method of investigation, the decision to arrest and the outcome of the police report to lawful discretion. The petition was finally disposed of.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ram Swaroop Parmar filed Writ Petition No. 32294/2024 under Article 226, seeking a mandamus directing respondent No. 2 to complete the investigation in Crime No. 0399/2023 at Police Station Misrod promptly and in accordance with Section 173 CrPC. He also sought costs and other appropriate relief. He stated that his complaint had led to an FIR under Sections 420 and 34 IPC, but the police had not yet concluded the investigation. The order also recorded a prayer for the police to identify and arrest the accused. The Court heard the petitioner's counsel and disposed of the writ petition by defining the limits of judicial directions concerning investigation while enforcing the duty to complete it in a timely manner.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively. It set aside a High Court direction that treated the recording of particular witness statements, arrest, seizure, protection of bank funds and filing of a chargesheet as obligatory, and imposed a period for completion without adequate reasons or a hearing for the affected accused. Investigation is a statutory police function. Courts should normally refrain from directing its method or the angle from which it is conducted, or requiring coercive steps. Depending on the evidence, police may file a chargesheet or conclude that no case is made out and file the appropriate report. Paragraph 36 of that decision sets out the limited purposes of the inherent power under Section 482, while paragraph 37 warns that unreasoned judicial observations can influence events and harm persons who have not been given notice. Those passages arose in a Section 482 context; the present petition was expressly under Article 226.

In D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Supreme Court quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on the discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC. Even credible allegations of a cognizable offence do not require immediate arrest. Arrest interferes with liberty and reputation, so the power must be exercised cautiously, following such investigation as the circumstances warrant. The Court also quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on the need to give a reasonable opportunity of being heard before making a judicial order that sets a criminal investigation against a person in motion and seriously affects that person's reputation. The quoted Supreme Court decision also explained that neither a chargesheet nor seizure is an inevitable result of an investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the writ jurisdiction invoked. Section 173(1) CrPC requires every investigation under the relevant chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay; the order refers to the corresponding Section 193 BNSS. The investigation arose from an FIR under Sections 420 and 34 IPC. The discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC and the limits of the inherent power under Section 482 CrPC were discussed through the quoted Supreme Court decision, rather than as the operative basis of the present writ petition.

4. Issues : Whether a court exercising jurisdiction under Article 226 should order the identification and arrest of suspects, direct the filing of a chargesheet, or supervise particular investigative acts in an existing cheating FIR; whether Section 173(1) CrPC/Section 193 BNSS required the investigating officer to complete the pending investigation without unnecessary delay and submit an appropriate report in accordance with law; and what relief could be given to the informant without predetermining guilt, arrest or the police report.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the distinction in D. Venkatasubramaniam between police discretion in investigation and judicial oversight of the legal duty to investigate. A direction to arrest or file a chargesheet would amount to supervision of the investigation and could compel a decision not justified by the evidence. Section 41 does not require automatic arrest merely because an FIR discloses a cognizable offence. The quoted Supreme Court decision also emphasised fairness to persons affected by coercive orders.

At the same time, Section 173(1) requires every investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer cannot leave it pending indefinitely, but must decide on the evidence whether an offence is made out, take the steps required by law, and submit an appropriate final report, whether a closure report or a chargesheet. The case registered in 2023 remained under investigation on 4 November 2024. The Court directed the officer to conclude it as early as possible, without fixing a deadline in days or months or dictating the outcome. If the petitioner subsequently had a grievance, he could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Bhopal, for consideration in accordance with law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the writ petition, directing the investigating officer to conclude the investigation in Crime No. 0399/2023 as early as possible under Section 173(1) CrPC/Section 193 BNSS and take the necessary steps in accordance with law. It refused the request for directions to arrest and to control particular investigative outcomes. In case of any grievance, the petitioner was free to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Bhopal, for consideration in accordance with law.

Ram Swaroop Parmar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 32294/2024, 04/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (705) Prev Next

Headnote :- Forged will / civil overlap — The FIR in Crime No. 290/2024 alleged that Kamla Devi's grandson fabricated a Will three days before her death to reduce the other heirs' shares in a house in Ward 27, Shivpuri. It invoked IPC Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471. Jagmohan Singh v. Vimlesh Kumar (05.05.2022) permits a defendant in a civil claim based on a Will to initiate criminal proceedings alleging its fabrication. The civil plaintiff's burden to prove the Will's genuineness does not prevent such proceedings. P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, (2008) 5 SCC 765, recognises that civil and criminal proceedings may proceed simultaneously, with a stay depending on the facts of the case. Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of W.B., (2002) 1 SCC 555, drawing on Trisuns Chemical, Rajesh Bajaj and Bhajan Lal, explains that the civil aspects of a dispute do not, by themselves, extinguish an allegation of a cognizable criminal offence. The Court held that the allegation of a forged Will was not merely a civil inheritance dispute.

Independent forums and standards — Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam, (2009) 5 SCC 528, Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon (02.04.2024), and Vishnu Dutt Sharma v. Daya Sapra, (2009) 13 SCC 729, apply the principles in Iqbal Singh Marwah, K.G. Premshanker and M.S. Sheriff. Civil proof on a preponderance of probabilities differs from the prosecution's burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt; neither forum's factual findings automatically bind the other. Evidence Act Sections 40–43 may make a particular earlier judgment relevant, and Section 41 may make specified matters conclusive. The broad proposition in Karam Chand and V.M. Shah that civil findings prevail was disapproved. M.S. Sheriff's general preference for giving criminal proceedings precedence depends on the facts and does not automatically require every civil suit to be stayed.

FIR quashing — Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, disapproves quashing on extraneous material beyond the FIR and applies Bhajan Lal's limited exceptions. Nandkishor Laxminarayan Mundhada, a Bombay High Court decision, was cited as persuasive authority on allegations of a forged Will. The applicant sought relief under Section 528 BNSS on the ground that the allegations, even accepted at face value, were predominantly civil. The High Court refused to quash the FIR and dismissed the application. The Will's authenticity, the ingredients of the offences and the parties' inheritance rights remained untried.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rama Shankar Agrawal applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, to quash the FIR in Crime No. 290/2024 at Police Station Physical, Shivpuri, for alleged offences under IPC Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471. According to respondent No. 2's FIR, his mother Kamla Devi owned an old house in Ward 27 and died on 27 August 2006. He, his elder brother Om Prakash Agarwal, and his sisters Pista Devi Singhal and Sudha Devi Jain claimed equal shares after her death. He alleged that the applicant Ramashankar, Om Prakash's son and Kamla Devi's grandson, forged a Will just three days before her death to cause loss to him and his sisters. These were allegations at the FIR stage, not findings that the Will was false, that any particular person signed it, or that particular property shares had vested. The applicant's counsel argued that, even if the entire FIR were accepted as stated, the matter was predominantly civil. The Court heard counsel for the applicant and considered whether the alleged fabrication of a Will involved criminal ingredients despite its implications for succession.

2. Precedents — Considered : P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana alias Hari Babu, (2008) 5 SCC 765, was quoted for the principle that civil and criminal proceedings may proceed simultaneously, and that a decision to stay either depends on the circumstances. The quotation referred to M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, and Institute of Chartered Accountants of India v. Association of Chartered Certified Accountants, (2005) 12 SCC 226. The High Court applied this principle to the alleged forged Will: an overlapping civil inheritance claim does not itself prevent criminal investigation. Jagmohan Singh v. Vimlesh Kumar, SLP (Cr.) No. 9339/2021 (5 May 2022), supplied directly analogous reasoning on a disputed Will. A civil plaintiff relying on a Will bears the burden of proving its genuineness in that suit, but an opponent may still initiate criminal proceedings alleging forgery. Nandkishor Laxminarayan Mundhada v. Dwarkadas Murlidhar Mundhada, 2008 Cri LJ 990 (Bombay High Court), was cited as persuasive authority that an FIR alleging a forged Will falls outside the Bhajan Lal quashing criteria based on treating the dispute as merely civil. It is not a Supreme Court ruling.

Kishan Singh (deceased) through LRs v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, was quoted on the different standards of proof and the absence of an automatic binding effect between civil and criminal factual findings, subject to the possible relevance of judgments under Evidence Act Sections 41–43. Its discussion of Iqbal Singh Marwah distinguished proof on a preponderance of probabilities in civil proceedings from criminal proof beyond reasonable doubt. It also referred to the rejection of Karam Chand's broad proposition that civil findings prevail. Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), (2009) 5 SCC 528, set out K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, (2002) 8 SCC 87: final judgments may be relevant under Sections 40–43; Section 41 makes its defined category conclusive; and the effect of other relevant judgments depends on their role in the case. Their factual findings do not automatically bind the other forum. Its discussion of Karam Chand, V.M. Shah, Vishnu Dutt Sharma and M.S. Sheriff rejected a simplistic rule of binding effect. The quotation also included Iqbal Singh Marwah's concern that prosecution should not be delayed indefinitely while civil litigation proceeds.

Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon (Supreme Court, 2 April 2024, SLP (Cr.) 9778/2018) discussed Karam Chand, K.G. Premshanker, Vishnu Dutt Sharma, Satish Chander Ahuja and the Constitution Bench decisions in Iqbal Singh Marwah and M.S. Sheriff. The High Court quoted its reiteration of the different standards of proof, independent findings, and M.S.

Sheriff's general preference for timely criminal proceedings, expressly subject to special circumstances and without a fixed rule of precedence. Vishnu Dutt Sharma v. Daya Sapra, (2009) 13 SCC 729, was separately quoted for the same principles in Iqbal Singh Marwah and P. Swaroopa Rani. These discussions did not constitute separate decisions on this Will's authenticity.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted on the limits of inherent jurisdiction to quash at the FIR stage. A court should examine whether the allegations disclose a prima facie cognizable offence under State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, rather than rely on extraneous investigative or civil material, as occurred in Pratibha's own matrimonial case. Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of W.B., (2002) 1 SCC 555, quoted Trisuns Chemical Industry v. Rajesh Agarwal, (1999) 8 SCC 686, Rajesh Bajaj v. State NCT of Delhi, (1999) 3 SCC 259, Bhajan Lal and M.S. Sheriff to reject premature quashing merely because civil proceedings exist or the conduct has civil aspects. Special circumstances can affect the timing of proceedings but do not automatically negate criminal ingredients. The Court considered the forged-Will allegation at face value; it did not determine guilt.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS, 2023, provided the inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR; it corresponds to Section 482 CrPC in the older authorities quoted. The FIR cited IPC Sections 420 (cheating), 467 (forgery of valuable security and analogous documents), 468 (forgery for cheating) and 471 (use of a forged document as genuine). Evidence Act Sections 40–43 govern the relevance of earlier judgments, including the defined category of conclusive judgments under Section 41. Section 300 CrPC appears in the quoted K.G. Premshanker discussion concerning the conditional bar on a further trial for the same offence after conviction or acquittal. Sections 340, 341 and 343 CrPC appear in the Syed Askari quotation on complaints initiated by a court and the delays that may follow a preliminary inquiry, appeal and subsequent proceedings. Neither passage constituted a separate ruling on retrial or an order directing a complaint in this Will case.

4. Issues : Whether, accepting at face value the FIR's allegation that a Will was forged before the death, the matter involved cognizable criminal ingredients or should be quashed as predominantly civil; whether possible litigation over inheritance and proof of the Will barred simultaneous criminal investigation; whether any civil findings would bind the criminal forum, given the different burdens of proof and the limited relevance of earlier judgments; and whether any exceptional ground of the kind identified in Bhajan Lal justified intervention under Section 528 before the evidence on forgery, use or cheating was tested. The Court was not deciding the Will's genuineness, the rightful heirs' shares or criminal liability after trial.

5. Ratio / Findings : The allegation concerned more than the allocation of property: it was that a Will had been fabricated three days before Kamla Devi's death to deprive the other claimed heirs of their shares. Forging and using a false document can give the facts a criminal dimension alongside civil succession issues. Taking the allegations at face value at the FIR stage, the Court held that describing the dispute as merely civil did not justify ending the investigation, and that no ground for interference had been made out. P. Swaroopa Rani and Kamaladevi Agarwal supported simultaneous remedies; Jagmohan Singh directly addressed a disputed Will. A civil plaintiff's duty to prove the Will in that suit does not foreclose an opponent's criminal allegation. These findings concern the sufficiency of the allegations taken at face value, not proof that the applicant actually forged or used a document, or dishonestly obtained anything.

The Court's extensive discussion of Kishan Singh, Syed Askari, Prem Raj and Vishnu Dutt Sharma rejected any automatic rule that civil findings bind or take priority over criminal findings. The proceedings use different standards of proof and evidence. A particular judgment may be relevant under Evidence Act Sections 40–43, and Section 41 may make it conclusive within that provision's scope. It would therefore be too broad to say that no civil judgment can ever affect a criminal issue. M.S. Sheriff's preference for prompt criminal proceedings is subject to exceptions depending on the facts of the case; it does not require all civil suits to be stayed. Pratibha and Bhajan Lal caution against going beyond the FIR to decide contested facts at the quashing stage.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 528 BNSS. It declined to quash the FIR in Crime No. 290/2024 for the four listed IPC offences. The case could proceed in accordance with law.

Rama Shankar Agrawal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 5887/2025, 07/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (707) Prev Next

Headnote :- Erroneous grant versus later misconduct — Harjit Singh v. Inderpreet Singh (24.08.2021), Mahipal v. Rajesh Kumar, (2020) 2 SCC 118, Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 508, Lachhman Dass v. Resham Chand Kaler, (2018) 3 SCC 187, and Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338, distinguish a superior court's review of a perverse, illegal or unjustified bail grant from cancellation for an accused's subsequent breach of conditions or misuse of liberty. The complainant invoked Section 439(2). The Sessions Judge's order dated 15 November 2021 under Section 438 gave no reason for granting pre-arrest bail despite the alleged gunshot injury to Ramveer's left elbow and the taking of cognizance under Section 307/34. Proof of subsequent misuse was not required to set aside that unreasoned order. The respondent was directed to surrender.

Original bailable release / added offence — The chargesheet dated 7 October 2020 listed IPC Sections 147, 148, 149, 323, 294, 506 and 324. Respondent No. 2 had been released by police, and the trial court continued his bail solely because the listed offences were bailable. On the complainant's application under Section 193 CrPC, the Sessions Court found sufficient material on 12 November 2021 to take cognizance under Section 307/34 and cancelled that release. The High Court accepted that the mere addition of a section without new material does not automatically require re-arrest where bail was earlier granted after consideration of the merits. Here, however, the court granting the first release had not assessed the firearm allegation or the gravity of the offence.

Reasoned bail discretion — Kumer Singh v. State of Rajasthan (20.07.2021) and Harjit Singh apply Gudikanti Narasimhulu, Ash Mohammad, Sitaram Popat Vetal, Ram Govind Upadhyay, Prasanta Kumar Sarkar, Ramesh Bhavan Rathod, Chaman Lal, Sonu and Mahipal. A court must form a prima facie view and give reasons addressing the relevant considerations: the gravity of the offence, possible punishment, evidence, risk of absconding or tampering, and risk to the administration of justice, while balancing the accused's liberty. An exhaustive determination of guilt is not required. The impugned order merely recited the allegations and earlier bail history before stating that protection appeared justified.

Complainant standing — Mahesh Pahade v. State of M.P. (Division Bench, 18.07.2018) discusses Amanullah, Puran, P.S.R. Sadhanantham and the victim's access to justice. A person with a bona fide connection to the case, including a victim or complainant, may challenge an improper bail order even if the State does not act. Courts must, however, guard against strangers pursuing personal vendettas. Ramadhar's complaint formed the basis of the case. The High Court allowed his application, set aside the order dated 15 November and directed respondent No. 2 to surrender immediately.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramadhar Baghel applied under Section 439(2) CrPC to cancel the anticipatory bail granted by the 4th Additional Sessions Judge, Morena, on 15 November 2021 in Sessions Trial No. 289/2020, arising from Crime No. 159/2020 at Police Station Banmore, Morena. On the complainant's report, the police initially registered offences under IPC Sections 147, 148, 149, 323, 294, 506 and 324. The chargesheet was filed and cognizance taken on 7 October 2020. Respondent No. 2, who had been released by police, was present, and the trial court continued his release because the offences in the chargesheet were bailable. The court did not consider the gunshot accusation or a non-bailable charge of attempt to murder. The complainant later applied under Section 193 CrPC, alleging that the police had deliberately omitted Section 307. On 12 November 2021, the Sessions Court found sufficient material to take cognizance under Sections 307 and 34, cancelled the release granted on the basis of bailable offences, and directed respondent No. 2 to appear on 4 December. The respondent then applied for anticipatory bail under Section 438, which was granted by a court at the same level on 15 November. The allegation recorded in the order was that he carried a gun and fired a shot that injured Ramveer's left elbow. The allegations were not final findings of guilt.

The applicant argued that no court had considered the merits and gravity of the case before the protection granted on 15 November. He submitted that the non-bailable Section 307 charge and alleged firearm injury required a proper bail assessment, and that the warrant should have been addressed under Section 70(2) rather than Section 438. Respondent

No. 2 contended that the mere addition of a section should not undo an earlier bail order based on the same allegations, and that bail could be cancelled only for misconduct after its grant. The High Court distinguished the bailable-offence release on 7 October, the cognizance and cancellation order on 12 November, and the fresh anticipatory-bail grant on 15 November.

2. Precedents — Considered : Harjit Singh v. Inderpreet Singh alias Inder, Criminal Appeal No. 883/2021 (24 August 2021), was quoted extensively on the distinction between appellate or superior-court review of a bail grant and cancellation for a subsequent breach. Its survey of Gudikanti Narasimhulu v. Public Prosecutor, (1978) 1 SCC 240, explained that refusal of bail is not punitive and requires balancing liberty with the nature of the charge, evidence and possible penalty, the integrity of the trial, the risk of witness interference, and antecedents. Ash Mohammad v. Shiv Raj Singh, (2012) 9 SCC 446, recognised that liberty is subject to lawful restrictions and must be considered alongside social safety. State of Maharashtra v. Sitaram Popat Vetal, (2004) 7 SCC 521, required consideration of the accusation, possible penalty, supporting evidence, risk to witnesses or the complainant, and prima facie satisfaction in support of the charge. Failure to consider those factors suggests non-application of mind.

Harjit Singh then applied Mahipal v. Rajesh Kumar, (2020) 2 SCC 118, which quoted Ram Govind Upadhyay v. Sudarshan Singh, (2002) 3 SCC 598, on reasoned exercise of bail discretion, the gravity of the offence, punishment, evidence, threats to witnesses, and the genuineness of the prosecution. Mahipal distinguished review of an arbitrary grant from cancellation for a later violation. It cited Prasanta Kumar Sarkar v. Ashis Chatterjee, (2010) 14 SCC 496, on the prima facie case, gravity, risk of flight, character, repetition of the offence, witness influence and obstruction of justice, and Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 508, on setting aside an order founded on irrelevant considerations without requiring a supervening event. Harjit Singh quoted Ramesh Bhavan Rathod v. Vishanbhai Hirabhai Makwana, 2021 (6) SCALE 41, which in turn drew on Ram Govind, Prasanta Kumar, Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525, and Sonu v. Sonu Yadav to emphasise consideration of the serious nature of the offence and the need for reasons, even if brief. The High Court applied that distinction to review the original legality of the order dated 15 November. The allegations of conspiracy and antecedents in the quoted Harjit Singh decision concerned that separate case, not the present case.

Mahesh Pahade v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Criminal Appeal No. 933/2014 (MP Division Bench, 18 July 2018), was quoted on an affected complainant's or victim's standing to challenge an unjustified bail grant. It considered Supreme Court authorities including Rattan Singh, the Constitution Bench decision in P.S.R. Sadhanantham v. Arunachalam, (1980) 3 SCC 141, R. Rathinam, Puran v. Rambilas, (2001) 6 SCC 338, and Amanullah v. State of Bihar, (2016) 6 SCC 699. Amanullah permits an affected person with a bona fide connection to seek review by a superior court when the State prosecution fails to act, while cautioning against unrelated interlopers or personal vendettas. Its quoted authorities, Ramakant Rai, Esher Singh and Rama Kant Verma, illustrate that standing depends on the circumstances of the case. Mahesh Pahade, citing Puran, explained that an aggrieved party may challenge a bail order that ignores material even without subsequent misconduct. It also discussed victim participation, the amendment to Section 372, and UN principles on victims' access to justice. The present complainant had a direct connection to the case.

Kumer Singh v. State of Rajasthan, Criminal Appeal No. 571/2021 (20 July 2021), was then quoted in a further extended discussion of Mahipal, Ram Govind, Prasanta Kumar Sarkar, Neeru Yadav and Ramesh Bhavan Rathod. It reiterated that a judge must record the reasons for the bail decision so that it can be scrutinised, while avoiding an exhaustive examination of the trial evidence at the bail stage. The High Court tested the order dated 15 November 2021 against Kumer Singh and found that no reasons had been given.

Lachhman Dass v. Resham Chand Kaler, (2018) 3 SCC 187, was quoted within Mahesh Pahade on a challenge to the legal sustainability of a bail order, as distinct from a breach of bail conditions, with reference to Amarmani Tripathi and Prakash Kadam. Puran similarly distinguished setting aside a perverse grant from cancelling valid bail for later misconduct. In paragraph 8, the Court stated that reconsideration by the granting court on the same material may be barred by Section 362 CrPC, whereas a superior court can examine the legality of the grant.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439(2) CrPC was invoked in the High Court to cancel or set aside bail; Section 438 was the respondent's later route to anticipatory bail. Section 362 was discussed as restricting the same court's review of its final order in the absence of later misuse. Recall of a warrant under Section 70(2) was raised in a submission and was not independently decided. The complainant's application under Section 193 CrPC led the Sessions Court to take cognizance under Sections 307/34 IPC. The original FIR and chargesheet listed IPC Sections 147, 148, 149, 323, 294, 506 and 324. After the additional order, the attempt-to-murder allegation required consideration of bail on the merits for a non-bailable offence. The MP Division Bench passage referred to the Section 372 victim-appeal proviso in discussing standing. The present application was under Section 439(2), rather than an appeal against conviction of the kind described in that quoted passage.

4. Issues : Whether the directly affected complainant could challenge the fresh anticipatory-bail order; whether review under Section 439(2) of an originally unjustified grant required proof that respondent No. 2 later misused liberty; whether the earlier release based solely on bailable offences meant that cognizance under Section 307/34 was merely the addition of a section after a fully considered bail decision; whether the court granting bail on 15 November considered the prima facie firearm material, injury, gravity and liberty, and recorded reasons for protection under Section 438; and whether the asserted warrant-recall procedure under Section 70(2) precluded that application.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court distinguished cancellation by the granting court for supervening misconduct, subject to the finality concerns under Section 362, from a superior court's correction of an unlawful or perverse grant. Harjit Singh, Mahipal, Neeru Yadav, Puran and Lachhman Dass do not require proof of misuse of bail before a superior court can examine ignored material or the absence of reasons. Ramadhar was a complainant with a bona fide connection to the case and could seek review. The order dated 7 October 2020 granted release solely because the offences were described as bailable; the trial court had not assessed the alleged firing of a gun or attempted murder. The High Court expressly acknowledged the narrower rule that, where a court has considered the allegations and granted bail, the mere later addition of sections without further material does not automatically require the accused to return to custody. That rule did not apply here. The order dated 12 November found sufficient material for cognizance under Section 307/34, so the basis on which the earlier release had been granted no longer applied.

The court granting anticipatory bail on 15 November recorded the parties' submissions and the bail history, then merely stated that bail appeared justified. It gave no independent reason, even briefly, for protecting respondent No. 2 despite the alleged gunshot injury to Ramveer's left elbow and the newly added serious charge. Under Kumer Singh and the authorities requiring reasons for bail, even a preliminary decision in the exercise of discretion must consider the relevant material, gravity of the offence and the accused's role. It need not determine guilt beyond reasonable doubt. That failure showed non-application of mind.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed the application for cancellation of anticipatory bail and set aside the 4th Additional Sessions Judge, Morena’s order dated 15 November 2021 in S.T. No. 289/2020.

Ramadhar Baghel v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 58792/2021, 14/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (709) Prev Next

Headnote :- Successive bail after failure to appear — The applicant, accused under IPC Sections 452, 354, 34 and POCSO Section 8, had earlier obtained bail. He failed to attend trial on 11 April 2019 when witness Murari was present; his bail bonds were cancelled, and he was arrested again on 23 February 2021. The first application after that arrest was dismissed on 7 April with liberty to renew the prayer after examination of the witnesses who had been present. On the second Section 439 application, the Court found that Murari had registered the FIR and prepared the spot map and was not a material witness concerning the substantive allegation. The complainant/prosecutrix had already testified before the applicant absconded. Approximately five months in custody and the delay in completing the trial supported conditional release. The earlier breach remained relevant and was addressed by requiring deposit of the previous bond amount and imposing strict conditions.

Pandemic orders and conditions — In Re: Contagion of COVID 19 Virus in Prisons, Supreme Court orders of 23 March and 7 April 2020, required High Powered Committees to consider categories for release to reduce prison overcrowding, leaving the nature and severity of the offence for their consideration, and required transport or shelter for released persons. The High Court applied the public-health context prevailing at the time without treating release as automatic. It required a Rs 1 lakh personal bond with a surety for the same amount, deposit of the forfeited bond amount, an undertaking to comply with Covid instructions, medical examination and testing if needed, safe travel or treatment, notice to the local police, and compliance until the trial concluded. The order stated that bail would cease to have effect if the applicant jumped bail or breached a condition. These conditions were specific to this 2021 order.

Victim notice — Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 329/2021 (18 March 2021), was invoked for intimation of the bail grant to the complainant. Bail was allowed without a finding on the merits of the trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramanugrah Singh Gurjar filed a second application under Section 439 CrPC, MCRC No. 31986/2021, in Crime No. 10/2016 at Police Station Deepar, Datia, concerning IPC Sections 452, 354 and 34 and Section 8 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act. He had initially been granted bail. On 11 April 2019, prosecution witness Murari was present, but the applicant failed to appear. The trial court cancelled his bail bonds and issued a perpetual warrant of arrest. He was arrested on 23 February 2021 and remained in custody for approximately five months. The first application after that arrest, M.Cr.C. No. 18387/2021, was dismissed on 7 April 2021 with liberty to renew the prayer after examination of the witnesses present on the missed hearing date. In support of the present application, he produced the order sheet of 11 April pursuant to the later direction dated 8 July. He submitted that Murari was the officer who had registered the FIR and prepared the spot map, rather than an eyewitness to the alleged offence, and that the complainant/prosecutrix had testified well before he absconded. The State conceded Murari's official role but opposed bail. The applicant submitted that the trial would take time, that he had learnt from his failure to appear, and that he would deposit the amount of the earlier bail bond. The case diary was available, and the application was heard by video conference.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Re: Contagion of COVID 19 Virus in Prisons, Supreme Court Suo Motu W.P.(C) No. 1/2020, order of 23 March 2020, was quoted on the pandemic risk arising from prison overcrowding and the need to protect life under Article 21. It directed each State/UT to constitute a High Powered Committee comprising the State Legal Services Committee chair, the Home/Prison Secretary and the Director General of Prisons to determine the categories of prisoners eligible for release on parole or interim bail and the duration of release. Offences punishable with imprisonment up to seven years were given as an illustration, not as creating a mandatory entitlement. The Committee could consider the nature of the offence, the sentence, severity and other relevant factors. The High Court's individual bail reasoning relied on the period in custody and Murari's role; it made no express finding that the applicant fell within a High Powered Committee category.

The Supreme Court's order of 7 April 2020 in the same proceeding was quoted on the obligation of the Union and the States to ensure that released prisoners were not stranded. It required arrangements for travel home or the option of temporary shelter during lockdown, including possible action under the Disaster Management Act. The High Court applied that public-health direction by requiring medical examination before release, testing if recommended, safe travel where infection was not suspected or the test was negative, and hospital treatment if the test was positive. It also required compliance with the government pandemic directions applicable at the time.

Aparna Bhat and Ors. v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021 (18 March 2021), was cited in paragraph 13 for sending intimation of the bail order to the complainant.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the second application for regular bail; Sections 437 and 439 supplied the other standard conditions. IPC Sections 452 (house-trespass after preparation for hurt or assault), 354 (assault or criminal force to a woman with intent to outrage her modesty) and 34 (common intention), and POCSO Section 8 were the provisions under which the applicant was accused; their merits were not decided. Article 21 and the Disaster Management Act were mentioned in the quoted Supreme Court pandemic orders.

4. Issues : Whether a second bail application could be entertained after the applicant's failure to appear in 2019 and the refusal of bail on 7 April 2021 with liberty to renew the prayer after examination of the witnesses present at the missed hearing; whether Murari's role in registering the FIR and preparing the spot map, the prosecutrix's earlier examination, approximately five months of further custody and the likely delay in completing the trial justified release; how the earlier bond breach and safeguards during the pandemic should be addressed if bail were granted; and whether the complainant should receive intimation of the result.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered the witness-related qualification in the first rejection in its factual context. The order sheet established Murari's presence on 11 April 2019, but he had registered the FIR and prepared the spot map and was not a material witness concerning the substantive allegation. The complainant/prosecutrix had been examined before the applicant absconded. State counsel conceded Murari's police role. Considering approximately five months in custody after the 2021 arrest and the time likely to be taken by the trial, the Court allowed the application, subject to deposit of the earlier bail-bond amount and a new surety. The decision granted discretionary, conditional bail; it was not an acquittal or a finding that the alleged offences were minor.

The applicant was required to deposit the earlier bail-bond amount and furnish a personal bond of Rs 1,00,000 with one surety for the same amount to the satisfaction of the trial court, CJM or available remand Magistrate. He was also required to undertake compliance with the Central, State and local Covid instructions issued from time to time. Jail authorities were directed to obtain a competent doctor's examination and arrange testing if advised. The local administration was to arrange travel home if infection was not suspected or the test was negative. If the test was positive, the applicant was to be sent for hospital treatment. The applicant was directed to give a copy of the order to the police station having jurisdiction over his residence. The other conditions under Sections 437/439 remained applicable. The order was to remain in force until conclusion of the trial, but would automatically cease to have effect if the applicant jumped bail or violated a condition. Aparna Bhat was invoked for intimation to the complainant.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the second application for regular bail, subject to deposit of the amount of the earlier bail bond.

Ramanugrah Singh Gurjar v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 31986/2021, 22/07/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (710) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR duty versus remedy — Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, affirms the police duty under Section 154 CrPC to register information disclosing a cognizable offence, while directing an informant aggrieved by non-registration to the Magistrate procedure under the Code. It reconciles Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary, which concern the police duty, with AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari, which address the remedy. Ramashankar Rajoriya alleged that respondent No. 7 had not registered an FIR despite his request. The Court refused a direct mandamus under Article 226 without deciding the underlying accusation.

Statutory recourse — Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, describes a written approach to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application under Section 156(3) to the Magistrate, who can direct registration and proper investigation and monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, requires prima facie satisfaction and permits a recommendation to change the investigating officer when necessary; the Magistrate does not personally investigate. Divine Retreat Centre, quoting Gangadhar, describes the complaint inquiry under Sections 190/200, the possible direction for investigation and a report, dismissal under Section 203, or cognizance and issue of process. The final order preserved liberty to approach the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS.

Writ exceptions — Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, reserves intervention under Article 226 for rare cases in which mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse and noncompliance with Chapter XII are clearly established. Even then, the Court cannot direct the manner of investigation. Shweta Bhadauria, MP Division Bench W.A. 247/2016, recognises Whirlpool's exceptions to the rule requiring use of an alternative remedy and explains that Lalita Kumari, (2014) 2 SCC 1, does not decide entitlement to a writ of mandamus without recourse to Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200. The order identified no exceptional circumstance warranting intervention. The writ was dismissed with liberty to approach the Magistrate; the Court did not hold that the police may ignore a cognizable offence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramashankar Rajoriya filed Writ Petition No. 39390/2024 under Article 226 against Rajshankar Rajoriya and others, seeking a direction to the police to register an FIR. He submitted that he had approached respondent No. 7 for registration, but no action had followed. State counsel opposed a writ for registration and relied on the effective remedy of a complaint before the trial Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, now Section 223 BNSS. The Court considered the narrow question whether an Article 226 petition seeking a direct order for FIR registration was maintainable.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted at length. It affirms that the police must register a case whenever information discloses a cognizable offence, but distinguishes that duty from the procedure available to a citizen when the police fail to act: a complaint to the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The quotation explains why Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2006) 2 SCC 677, and its reiteration in Lallan Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2006) 12 SCC 229, on the police duty to register a case are consistent with All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359, on a Magistrate complaint when registration does not occur. The directions concerning sanction in Aleque Padamsee related to that case and were not a separate controversy here. The High Court applied the distinction to refuse intervention without recourse to the ordinary remedy; it did not negate the underlying police obligation.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted on the exceptional power under Article 226 where mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse and noncompliance with Chapter XII are clearly shown. The Court may insist on observance of lawful procedure, but cannot direct how the police investigate. Through Gangadhar, the quotation describes the complaint inquiry under Sections 190/200: the Magistrate examines the evidence, may direct police investigation and a report under Chapter XII, may dismiss the complaint under Section 203 if there is no basis for further action, or may take cognizance and issue process when a prima facie offence appears. Ordinary police inaction is to be addressed through this Magistrate procedure. The order did not identify exceptional circumstances concerning the investigation.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted on a written application to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed, if that remedy is ineffective, by an application under Section 156(3) to the Magistrate. The Magistrate may direct registration of the FIR and a proper investigation, and may monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, affirmed that procedure, the requirement of prima facie satisfaction, the discretion to recommend a change of investigating officer, and the restriction against the Magistrate personally investigating. It explained the burden on the High Courts if every allegation of non-registration were brought to them first. These authorities describe effective statutory remedies without deciding the petitioner's future complaint.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016 (20 December 2016), was cited as the binding local Division Bench decision. Its quotation permits refusal of a mandamus for FIR registration where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the four exceptions to the rule of alternative remedy discussed in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1: that decision concerns the police duty to register information and does not itself determine entitlement to a writ without use of the statutory remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was the jurisdictional basis of the petition. Section 154 CrPC concerned registration of information disclosing a cognizable offence; subsection (3) provided recourse to the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) empowered the Magistrate to direct investigation, as explained in the cited cases. Sections 190 and 200 governed complaint and cognizance, and Section 203 provided for possible dismissal after inquiry. Investigation under Chapter XII and complaint procedure under Chapter XV were discussed in the quoted precedent. The operative order identified Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, as the remedy available to this petitioner.

4. Issues : Whether the writ court should directly compel police registration merely on the petitioner's assertion of inaction; how the duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence differs from the citizen's remedy when the police fail to act; whether Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190/200 and the corresponding BNSS complaint provision offered effective recourse; and whether the facts recorded in the order disclosed exceptional abuse or an exception to the rule of alternative remedy.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied the distinction in Aleque Padamsee: the police remain obliged to register information disclosing a cognizable offence, but an aggrieved person must ordinarily use the statutory supervisory and complaint procedures before seeking a mandamus for FIR registration. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe explain the Magistrate's powers to direct registration and proper investigation where prima facie justified. Divine Retreat Centre preserved exceptional writ intervention where mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse and Chapter XII noncompliance are clearly established. Shweta Bhadauria recognised Whirlpool's exceptions while distinguishing Lalita Kumari's statement of police duty from entitlement to a writ. The order records the petitioner's assertion that respondent No. 7 had not registered the FIR. The Court identified no exceptional circumstance warranting immediate High Court intervention; it refused writ relief and left the complainant free to approach the competent Magistrate. It did not find that non-registration was lawful or that no cognizable offence existed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Article 226 petition with express liberty to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS for redress. It ordered no FIR or arrest, gave no direction on the manner of investigation, and made no finding on the merits of the proposed complaint.

Ramashankar Rajoriya v. Rajshankar Rajoriya and Ors., W.P. no. 39390/2024, 16/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (711) Prev Next

Headnote :- Kidnapping for ransom — Section 364-A IPC — distinct ingredients — Ramasre @ Fakkad appealed against a life sentence under Section 364-A read with Section 13 MPDVPK Act for the alleged abduction of Vidyaram in 1984. The Bench considered whether the appellant had abducted him for ransom and threatened death or hurt, or created a reasonable apprehension of death or hurt. It reproduced the statutory text and the detailed analysis in Shaik Ahmed v. State of Telangana (28 June 2021). Kidnapping, abduction or detention, the threat, apprehension or actual harm, and the purpose of coercion or obtaining ransom must be proved in the relationship required by the provision. The quoted Supreme Court judgment distinguishes the ransom-communication issue in Malleshi from the other ingredients, considers Anil Patil, Suman Sood, Vishwanath Gupta and Vikram Singh, and rejects treating Arvind Singh's facts concerning a child's abduction as creating an automatic presumption of threat. The Bench applied this framework to the record, but its decisive finding was that the appellant's identity and participation had not been proved.

Identification and proof — Vidyaram (PW1) acknowledged that he had been abducted and confined for 45 days, but said that he did not know the abductors. The Bench found his identification of Ramasre in court irreconcilable with PW1's admission that he had never seen the appellant during detention. The defence also relied on the fact that the accused alone was present for identification. Kedarnath (PW2) and Tehsil Khan (PW3) did not support the prosecution, and no other prosecution witness was examined. The Bench held that there was no evidence against the appellant. It set aside the conviction and life sentence, acquitted him and directed his release unless required in another case.

The judgment records an alleged occurrence in 1984 and the insertion of Section 364-A in 1993.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : According to the prosecution, at about 8 p.m. on 2 October 1984, seven or eight armed persons abducted Vidyaram and Tehsil Khan near village Pulawali. Tehsil Khan was released earlier; Vidyaram was kept in Uttar Pradesh, and a ransom demand was allegedly made to his brother Kedarnath. The FIR included Sections 364, 365, 386 and 400 IPC and Sections 11 and 13 of the MPDVPK Act. In the 1992 trial of other accused, Sitaram was convicted under Sections 365 and 384 and three co-accused were acquitted. Ramasre @ Fakkad, who had earlier been shown as absconding, was arrested in 2006 and tried separately. The Special Judge (Dacoity), Bhind convicted him under Section 364-A IPC read with Section 13 MPDVPK Act on 12 March 2010 and imposed life imprisonment. In Criminal Appeal 282/2010, the defence argued that the three witnesses examined had failed to identify or implicate him and that the identification in court was unreliable. The State relied on that identification and supported the conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Bench reproduced an extended passage from Shaik Ahmed v. State of Telangana, Criminal Appeal 533 of 2021, decided 28 June 2021, on the distinct ingredients of Section 364-A and the need to prove the statutory threat or apprehension rather than assume it from abduction for ransom. That Supreme Court analysis traced the Law Commission's proposed provision, its enactment in 1993 and expansion in 1995, and construed the single conjunction 'and' in relation to the alternatives joined by 'or'. The quoted decision referred to Punjab Produce and Trading Co. and Hyderabad Asbestos Cement Products as examples of conjunctive and disjunctive construction within Shaik Ahmed, rather than as authorities independently applied by the Bench to this record. It explained that Malleshi v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 8 SCC 95, decided an issue about communicating a ransom demand: a demand made to the abductee did not cease to satisfy the requirement merely because arrest prevented its transmission to another person. Its abbreviated list of ingredients did not dispense with the separate requirement of threat or apprehension. Anil alias Raju Namdev Patil v. Administration of Daman & Diu, (2006) 13 SCC 36, identified abduction together with the necessary threat, apprehension or actual harm and coercion. Suman Sood v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 5 SCC 634, upheld the benefit of doubt for an accused whose participation in pressurising or terrorising the victim or family was not reliably proved. Vishwanath Gupta v. State of Uttaranchal, (2007) 11 SCC 633, illustrated how the elements could occur at different places for the purpose of territorial jurisdiction; its facts did not make actual death a requirement in every prosecution under Section 364-A. Vikram Singh v. Union of India, (2015) 9 SCC 502, set out the three components of detention, threat or apprehension or actual harm, and coercion or ransom. Shaik Ahmed read Arvind Singh v. State of Maharashtra in the context of its facts and rejected a rule that tender age alone gives rise to a legal presumption of threat; each condition remains a matter of proof. Omprakash Shrivastava v. State, 2007 Cri LJ 696 (Del), was separately cited on communication of a ransom demand. The Bench's decisive ground for acquittal concerned proof of identity and participation, rather than the mode of communicating ransom.

3. Statutes considered : Section 364-A IPC was the provision under which the appellant was charged with kidnapping for ransom, and he was convicted under it read with Section 13 of the Madhya Pradesh Dakaiti Aur Vyapharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam (MPDVPK Act). The Bench reproduced Section 364-A and Section 365 IPC, described the 1993 insertion of the kidnapping-for-ransom provision, and quoted the Supreme Court's account of its later expansion. Sections 364, 365, 386 and 400 IPC and Sections 11 and 13 MPDVPK Act appeared in the FIR history; statements under Section 161 CrPC were recorded during the investigation.

4. Issues : Whether the prosecution proved that it was this appellant who abducted or detained Vidyaram for ransom, rather than unidentified persons; whether the statutory requirement under Section 364-A of a threat, reasonable apprehension of death or hurt, or actual harm was proved under the cited Supreme Court test; whether Vidyaram's identification in court remained reliable despite his admission that he had never seen Ramasre during detention; and whether the other two witnesses or any further evidence established the appellant's guilt.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench treated the ingredients of Section 364-A as separate matters requiring proof. Following the quoted analysis in Shaik Ahmed, proof of abduction or an account of a ransom demand alone could not dispense with the statutory requirement concerning threat or apprehension. On this record, Vidyaram acknowledged that he had been abducted and confined, but could not reliably identify those who had abducted him. His identification in court in paragraph 3 of his testimony was undermined by his admission in paragraph 6 that he had never seen the appellant during confinement. Kedarnath and Tehsil

Khan did not support the prosecution, and no further prosecution witness was examined. The trial court's reliance on PW1 could therefore not sustain a finding that this appellant committed the charged offence. The Bench held that there was no evidence against him.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal. The Special Judge's conviction and life sentence dated 12 March 2010 under Section 364-A IPC read with Section 13 MPDVPK Act were set aside, and Ramasre was acquitted. As he was in jail, the Bench directed his immediate release unless required in another case. It also directed that he receive a free copy of the judgment and that the judgment and trial record be sent for compliance.

Ramasre v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 282/2010, 11/11/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (712) Prev Next

Headnote :- Dying declaration — sole basis and reliability — Rambabu Ahirwar, his father Biharilal and mother Puniya Bai were convicted of murdering Rambabu's wife Sooraj Bai by burning her. Biharilal died pending appeal, which abated as to him. The defence challenged the declaration (Ex.P/21) because it was recorded as a narrative rather than in question-and-answer form, questioned the timing of the doctor's certification of consciousness, and relied on relatives who did not support the prosecution. Applying Atbir v. Government of NCT of Delhi, (2010) 9 SCC 1, the Division Bench held that a dying declaration may sustain conviction without corroboration when it inspires full confidence, the maker is in a fit state of mind, and the statement is true and voluntary. Corroboration is a safeguard required as a matter of prudence where the statement is suspicious, rather than an absolute requirement for every dying declaration. The Bench found Ex.P/21 coherent and recorded by the Executive Magistrate while Sooraj Bai was conscious. Her Dehati Nalishi, the medical evidence and the evidence concerning its recording supported the declaration. The declaration reproduced in the order describes the husband pouring oil on her and setting her alight after she refused money for liquor, and implicates the in-laws through their conduct. The Section 302 convictions and life terms were affirmed; Puniya Bai was directed to surrender by 7 March 2022.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sooraj Bai was married to appellant No. 1 Rambabu Ahirwar. The prosecution alleged that on 20 April 2008 at about 8 p.m., he demanded money to purchase liquor. When she refused, he poured kerosene over her and set her alight, while his parents Biharilal and Puniya Bai shut the house door. He later took her on a cart but, according to the prosecution account, did not obtain treatment for her; her brother-in-law and brother admitted her the next morning. Executive Magistrate Brajesh Kumar Sharma (PW13) recorded her statement (Ex.P/21) at CHC Lateri at 3:30 p.m. on 21 April after a doctor assessed her consciousness. She also made a Dehati Nalishi bearing her thumb impression (Ex.P/17), on which FIR 69/2008 (Ex.P/15) was registered. She died at Hamidiya Hospital on 22 April. The medical evidence described extensive second- and third-degree burns and cardio-respiratory failure due to burns and their complications. Fifteen prosecution witnesses and two defence witnesses were examined. The Special Judge convicted the husband and both parents under Section 302 IPC on 31 August 2010, imposing life imprisonment, a Rs. 500 fine and a default clause. Biharilal died while Criminal Appeal 707/2010 was pending, so his appeal abated. The surviving appellants challenged the form of Ex.P/21, the timing of the medical endorsement, the possible inconsistency between the doctor and the officer who recorded it, and the failure of family witnesses to support the prosecution. The State defended the conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : Atbir v. Government of NCT of Delhi, (2010) 9 SCC 1, was quoted in ten propositions and applied in paras 16–23. A dying declaration may be the sole basis of conviction if it inspires full confidence; the maker must be mentally fit and the statement free from tutoring, prompting and imagination. Once its truth and voluntariness are established, further corroboration is not legally indispensable; where the declaration is suspicious, corroboration is required as a matter of prudence. A purported statement by an unconscious person cannot support conviction. Brevity or failure to include every detail of the incident does not, by itself, destroy reliability. Where an eyewitness establishes that the maker lacked consciousness, a medical opinion cannot override that evidence. Careful scrutiny of the contents for coherence, consistency and freedom from inducement remains necessary. The Bench considered the Magistrate's evidence about the recording, the doctor's evidence about consciousness, the contents of the declaration, the deceased's own report and the defence objections.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC governed the murder conviction and life sentence. The FIR, Dehati Nalishi, post-mortem, medical certificate and testimonial record were assessed as evidence.

4. Issues : Could Ex.P/21 reliably establish the surviving appellants' guilt despite its narrative form, the defence assertion that there was no certification before recording, and the alleged inconsistency between the doctor and the Magistrate? Was Sooraj Bai conscious and able to narrate freely what had happened, and did the declaration inspire confidence under Atbir? What consequence followed from the relatives' failure to support the prosecution, given the deceased's own report and the evidence of the officer who recorded the declaration and the doctor? The appeal as to Biharilal could not be determined after his death.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench accepted Atbir's rule that a truthful, voluntary declaration by a person in a fit state of mind may, after close scrutiny, sustain conviction without corroboration. A suspicious declaration should not be acted upon without corroboration; a purported statement that the maker could not have made because of unconsciousness cannot form the basis of conviction. The Bench found that the Executive Magistrate recorded Ex.P/21 while Sooraj Bai was conscious and that the document clearly attributed the burning to her husband and implicated the parents in shutting the door. The evidence proving the declaration was not discredited in cross-examination. Her Dehati Nalishi, the doctor's evidence and the burn findings reinforced its reliability. The declaration narrates the quarrel over liquor money, beating, the pouring of oil and ignition, and identifies the conduct of the husband and in-laws. The Bench found the objections to form and certification timing, and the relatives' failure to support the prosecution, insufficient to displace the declaration it considered trustworthy. It affirmed the trial court's assessment.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the appeal as to the surviving appellants; the Section 302 convictions, life sentences and fines remained in force. Biharilal's appeal had abated upon his death. Rambabu was in jail. Puniya Bai, who was on bail, was directed to surrender before the trial court by 7 March 2022 to serve the remaining sentence; if she failed to surrender, the trial court could issue an arrest warrant.

Rambabu Ahirwar and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 707/2010, 24/01/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (713) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder appeal — individual proof and mixed result — Three appeals against the conviction of a large family group for the killing of Babulal on 13 June 2005 were decided together. The deceased and the witnesses were travelling on motorcycles for medical examination after an earlier clash. The Bench found that an armed assault by Atmaram, Mahesh, Rambabu and Kailash was proved. It acquitted Halkai and seven others because their participation or a shared common object was not proved. Raju and Jagmohan had died during the appeals.

Section 313 CrPC — Rakesh's form contained 222 questions and bore signatures on 29 pages, but only questions 1–3 and 220–222 had answers. The Bench found that the intervening questions had not been asked. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda, Ghulam Din Buch, Rautu Bodra and Ranvir Yadav require a meaningful opportunity to explain incriminating circumstances, while State of U.P. v. Raghuvir qualifies the consequence by reference to prejudice. The serious omission gave Rakesh an additional ground for acquittal; the prosecution had also failed to prove his role.

Medical and ocular evidence — The autopsy's failure to record the right-hand wound sustained in the earlier altercation did not displace the contemporaneous inquest and medical requisition recording it. Applying Dayal Singh, the Bench assessed the entire record despite possible negligence in conducting the autopsy or suppression of the injury. Palani, Darshan Singh, Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum and Yogesh Singh distinguish an expert opinion suggesting an alternative possibility from medical evidence completely ruling out credible ocular testimony. The Bench found the wounds in the chest/abdominal region and on the left side of the neck sufficiently consistent with the direct account of the assault by the four armed appellants.

FIR omissions and Section 149 — Applying Ravi Kumar's principle on the purpose of the first report, the Bench accepted the frightened informant's explanation for failing to specify every blow in the initial Dehati Nalishi concerning the four appellants who used weapons. The omission of Halkai's name, the absence of a head injury and the inability to establish that the blood on a seized lathi was human cumulatively raised doubt about his involvement. Sukhbir Singh, Manjit Singh, Vinubhai Ranchhodbhai Patel, Kuldip Yadav and related authorities require proof of a common object or the requisite knowledge for each alleged member. An overt act is not always necessary, but the presence of family members and general allegations of fist-blows, unsupported by contusions, did not prove the seven others' participation. Under Kunwarpal, enmity was considered both as a possible motive and as a reason to guard against false implication.

Section 34 substitution — Once participation was proved against fewer than five persons, liability under Section 149 and the conviction for rioting could not be sustained. Mala Singh and the authorities on charges and prejudice permit conviction under Section 302/34 despite the absence of a separate Section 34 charge where the same alleged facts and evidence gave fair notice and the omission caused no failure of justice. Atmaram, Mahesh, Rambabu and Kailash were convicted under Section 302/34, with their life sentences undisturbed, and acquitted under Section 148. Halkai, Pola @ Jainarayan, Rakesh, Batol @ Makhanlal, Pappu @ Sitaram, Sanjeev, Rajesh and Dinesh were acquitted of all charges and their bonds were discharged.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Criminal Appeals 724, 764 and 770 of 2010 challenged the 31 August 2010 judgment of the Sironj trial court in Sessions Trial 167/2005. The trial court had found the appellants guilty under Sections 148 and 302/149 IPC and imposed one year's rigorous imprisonment for Section 148 and life imprisonment plus a Rs. 5,000 fine and a default term for murder. Raju and Jagmohan died pending appeal, and their appeals abated. On 13 June 2005, Atmaram reported a morning assault; later, Babulal also reported an earlier clash and was sent from Deepnakheda police station for medical examination. Babulal rode with Datar Singh, while Rajkumar, Mukesh, Suresh, Ramgopal and constable Bhagirath travelled on two following motorcycles along the Chitholi route. The prosecution alleged that a group connected to Atmaram stopped them near the government park. In their detailed accounts, the eyewitnesses attributed sharp-weapon blows to Atmaram (near the abdomen), Mahesh (neck), Rambabu (below the left ear) and Kailash (back), a lathi blow to Halkai, and fist-blows to the others. Babulal died there of haemorrhagic shock following incised wounds. The defence challenged the presence of the witnesses and contradictions in their accounts, the omission from the post-mortem report of a hand injury reported earlier, the compatibility of the neck and abdominal wounds with the eyewitness accounts, and the claimed unavailability of buses. It also questioned the effect of earlier enmity, relied on Rambabu's alibi, disputed the alleged roles of the bare-handed accused, and raised Rakesh's nearly blank Section 313 form. The Bench examined the prosecution and defence witnesses and contemporaneous records, and assessed the different groups of accused separately before reaching different results in the three appeals.

2. Precedents — Considered : For Section 313, Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, required the exclusion of material circumstances never put to the accused. Its discussion of the earlier authorities Hate Singh Bhagat Singh, Shamu Balu Chaugule and Harijan Megha Jesha was reproduced. Ghulam Din Buch v. State of J&K, (1996) 9 SCC 239, held the conviction unsustainable when the core allegation was not put to the accused. Rautu Bodra v. State of Bihar, 1999 SCC (Cri) 1319, addressed both exclusion and whether remand after a long lapse of time was justified. Ranvir Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2009) 6 SCC 595, rejected treating the examination as a mere ritual. State of U.P. v. Raghuvir, (2018) 13 SCC 732, qualified the consequence by reference to actual prejudice or miscarriage of justice. The Bench applied these authorities to Rakesh's signed form, in which only six questions had been answered; the failure to prove his participation independently supported acquittal.

Dayal Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 8 SCC 263, permitted a court to assess reliable testimony and records independently of a defective or suspect post-mortem, while requiring caution and fairness. Its discussion of NHRC v. State of Gujarat, K. Yarappa Reddy and Ram Bali concerns the court's role and defective investigation; it does not authorise disregarding expert evidence without qualification. Palani v. State of T.N., (2020) 16 SCC 401, State of Uttarakhand v. Darshan Singh, (2020) 12 SCC 605, CBI v. Mohd. Parvez Abdul Kayuum, (2019) 12 SCC

1, and Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, were quoted on independently assessing the reliability of ocular evidence. Darshan Singh's quotation of Abdul Sayeed and Solanki Chimanbhai made the limits explicit: an alternative possibility suggested by an expert does not determine the result, but medical evidence completely excluding the alleged manner of injury may discredit the ocular version. The Bench found the wounds compatible with the eyewitness accounts and relied on the inquest and medical requisition as evidence of the omitted hand injury.

Ravi Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2005) 9 SCC 315, treated the FIR as early information rather than an encyclopaedia or substantive proof, allowing a frightened informant's omission of blow-by-blow details to be assessed in context. Kunwarpal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2014) 16 SCC 560, described prior animosity as a possible motive as well as a reason to guard against false implication. The Bench accepted the explained omissions and the specific evidence against the four armed attackers, but assessed the discrepancies concerning Halkai cumulatively in finding his involvement unproved.

Sukhbir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 3 SCC 327, required proof that each member shared the common object or had the requisite knowledge, notwithstanding the absence of an individual overt act. Manjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2019) 8 SCC 529, through Sikandar Singh, Masalti and Subal Ghorai, explained how conduct, arms, words and timing can establish a common object formed even on the spot, while warning against treating a passive onlooker as guilty. Bhagwan Jagannath Markad v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 10 SCC 537, Dev Karan v. State of Haryana, (2019) 8 SCC 596, and Vinubhai Ranchhodbhai Patel v. Rajivbhai Dudabhai Patel, (2018) 7 SCC 743, elaborated the requirement of five members and constructive liability without requiring proof that every member inflicted an injury. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2011) 5 SCC 324, rejected liability for every member irrespective of the common object or knowledge. Kashiram v. State of M.P., (2002) 1 SCC 71, recognised that a lawful gathering may later become unlawful. The Bench did not find such a transformation or a common object to commit murder proved against the seven bare-handed relatives.

Mala Singh v. State of Haryana, (2019) 5 SCC 127, was reproduced at length on CrPC Sections 216, 386 and 464 and the possibility of liability under Section 302/34 after Section 149 fails, where the facts and evidence overlap and the omission of the charge causes no actual failure of justice. The quotations from Willie (William) Slaney, Lachhman Singh, Karnail Singh and Chittarmal distinguished common intention from common object and made prejudice and fair notice decisive.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 141–149 IPC governed whether five or more persons constituted an unlawful assembly, the alleged rioting with deadly weapons under Section 148, and constructive liability for murder under Section 302/149. Section 34 IPC supplied the basis of common intention on which the conviction under Section 302 was ultimately sustained against four persons after liability under Section 149 failed. Sections 341 and 294 IPC and Section 25 Arms Act were mentioned in the charge-sheet narrative, not as independent appellate convictions. CrPC Section 313 governed the accused's opportunity to explain incriminating material; Section 374 provided for the appeals. Sections 216, 386 and 464 were discussed through Mala Singh in relation to alteration of charges, appellate powers and the test of failure of justice. Section 145 of the Evidence Act appears in the Ravi Kumar discussion of contradictions.

4. Issues : Whether Rakesh was asked to explain the incriminating circumstances in a meaningful examination under Section 313 and whether the omission caused prejudice; whether Babulal's death was homicidal and the direct witnesses' account remained reliable despite the alleged inconsistency with the autopsy; whether the earlier hand injury and the specific blows to the abdomen, neck and back were supported by the evidence; whether the omission of roles from the first report, enmity on the part of the witnesses, Rambabu's alibi and the defence bus records affected reliability; which appellants actually attacked or joined an assembly with a proved common object; whether a lawful family gathering later became unlawful; and whether the four proved attackers could be convicted under Section 302/34 after liability under Section 149 failed, despite the absence of a separate Section 34 charge. The dead appellants' appeals stood abated, not adjudicated on the merits.

5. Ratio / Findings : Rakesh's form contained 222 questions and ran to 29 pages bearing his and the Judge's signatures, yet only questions 1–3 and 220–222 had answers. The Bench found that the intervening incriminating circumstances were not put to him, rejected treating Section 313 as a mere ritual, and held him entitled to acquittal on that additional ground. Raghuvir's qualification concerning prejudice was expressly noted. The defect here was substantive, and the Court also found no proof of his role.

The doctor's autopsy established homicidal death through incised wounds and haemorrhagic shock but omitted a hand injury sustained in the earlier clash. The inquest report reproduced on page 12 records blood on the fingers and a wound between the right thumb and finger; the police requisition also mentioned that injury. The Bench found those contemporaneous records persuasive and considered that the doctor had either been careless or suppressed the injury, without deciding which. The lower chest wound was near the abdominal region and did not contradict the account of Atmaram's knife blow. The left-neck wound was treated as consistent with the evidence concerning Mahesh and Rambabu despite the doctor's opinion that it resulted from a single assault; Kailash's blow to the back had a corresponding wound. The Court independently assessed the eyewitnesses under the rule concerning complete exclusion by medical evidence and found the alleged acts of the four armed appellants proved. Datar Singh's shock explained his failure to specify their blows in the first report; enmity supplied a plausible motive as well as a reason for caution. The conductor sheets did not prove that buses were running, as their makers were not called. Neither the evidence of Rambabu's relative nor the invitation proved his presence at a memorial ceremony.

Halkai's alleged lathi blow to the head had no corresponding head injury, he was not named initially, and the blood on the lathi seized later was not shown to be human. The seven others — Pola @ Jainarayan, Rakesh, Batol @ Makhanlal, Pappu @ Sitaram, Sanjeev, Rajesh and Dinesh — were relatives or associates said to have used fists and blows, yet the body showed no contusions. Their travel with Atmaram after his medical examination explained their innocent presence. The prosecution did not prove an overt assault by them or establish a common object from their conduct, knowledge and the timing of events. With those eight acquittals, participation was proved against fewer than five persons, and the remaining trial findings could not be sustained under either Section 149 or Section 148. The four appellants proved to have used weapons, however, acted jointly in a case whose facts had been presented and contested. After quoting Mala Singh's test concerning absence of prejudice, the Bench found common intention and maintained their liability for murder under Section 302/34.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court maintained the convictions of Atmaram, Mahesh, Rambabu and Kailash under Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC; their life terms and the associated fine and default sentence were not disturbed. All four were acquitted under Section 148 IPC. Halkai, Pola @ Jainarayan, Rakesh, Batol @ Makhanlal, Pappu @ Sitaram, Sanjeev, Rajesh and Dinesh were acquitted of all charges and, being on bail, their bonds were discharged. Raju and Jagmohan's appeals had abated following their deaths. The appeal concerning Rambabu and Kailash was dismissed as to them and allowed as to its other surviving appellant. The appeal concerning Atmaram and Mahesh was dismissed as to them and allowed as to its other surviving appellants. The remaining connected appeal was allowed. The four imprisoned appellants were directed to serve the remaining life terms and receive free copies of the judgment; the trial record was returned.

Rambabu and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 724/2010 & 764/2010 & 770/2010, 22/02/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (714) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal procedure — closure report — procedural return and magistrate control — An FIR under Sections 302/34 IPC alleged that police shot the complainant’s son in a staged encounter. The first expunge/closure report was returned in March 2021 solely because it had not been presented through a competent police officer under Police Regulation No. 737. The procedural return did not amount to rejection of the report on its merits and did not oblige the police to file a charge-sheet. A fresh report filed through the Superintendent of Police in January 2025 remained before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Morena, on the record available to the Division Bench. Applying Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117, the Bench explained that the Magistrate could accept closure, decline it and direct further investigation under Section 156(3) CrPC if the investigation was incomplete, or take cognizance under Section 190(1)

(b) if the reported facts disclosed an offence notwithstanding the police opinion. The outcome of further investigation was not predetermined.

Protest/objection — The complainant must be notified, allowed to object, and afforded an opportunity to examine supporting witnesses before the pending report is disposed of. His FIR and earlier objection depended on the account attributed to Ran Singh, the alleged eyewitness whom he had not examined at the earlier hearing. If the report had already been finally decided, the complainant could pursue remedies available in law.

Criminal-side writ — The Single Judge's direction to the SP to look into the FIR was set aside because the fresh closure report was pending before the CJM, a circumstance not brought to the Single Judge's attention. The appellate court would not pre-empt the CJM's assessment or express a view on the alleged encounter and investigation. The 21-year delay on the part of the police was deprecated, while the complainant's own delay in seeking judicial intervention was noted. If the report remained pending, the CJM was to dispose of it within three months of receipt of the certified order after giving the complainant the prescribed opportunity to object and examine witnesses.

Fair and independent investigation — Reviewing State of Punjab v. CBI, Dharam Pal, Bharati Tamang, Babubhai, Himanshu Kumar, K.V. Rajendran, Vishal Tiwari, Royden Harold Buthello and Anant Thanur Karmuse, the Bench reiterated that the constitutional power to transfer an investigation to CBI or another independent agency must be exercised sparingly, where an exceptional need to ensure credibility, justice or confidence in an impartial investigation is substantiated. Mere allegations against local police, the complainant's preference for an agency, and delay alone do not automatically warrant transfer; the involvement of senior officials, prima facie taint, influence or serious inadequacy may be relevant if supported by the record. Neither filing of a charge-sheet nor commencement of trial is an absolute bar where an exceptional case exists. Further investigation under the CrPC differs from fresh/de novo investigation under the powers of superior courts. On the record before it, the Bench left the pending report and any decision on further investigation to the CJM and gave no finding on the truth of the fake-encounter allegation. The writ appeal was disposed of by setting aside the Single Judge's direction and issuing conditional directions to the CJM. Transfer to CBI, monetary relief and police protection were not granted.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rambabu Singh Tomar appealed under Section 2(1) of the Madhya Pradesh Uchcha Nyayalaya (Khand Nyaypeeth Ko Appeal) Adhiniyam, 2005 against the order of 19 November 2025 in W.P. No. 15661/2023. The Single Judge had directed the Superintendent of Police, Morena, to look into FIR Crime No. 262/2004 of Porsa police station. The father alleged that police officers shot his 29-year-old son, a BSF constable on leave, near Mahavir Temple, Dhaneta, on 3 September 2004 and wrongly portrayed the death as an encounter; the FIR named police personnel under Sections 302/34 IPC. These were allegations, not facts found by the appellate court. The father was not an eyewitness. His FIR attributed the account to Ran Singh. Police filed an expunge/closure report on 21 October 2015. After receiving notice, the father made a statement and raised objections in MJCR No. 389/2016 but did not examine Ran Singh. By order of 27 March 2021, the CJM returned the report for presentation through the Superintendent of Police/competent officer under Police Regulation No. 737; the report was not rejected on its merits. The father brought his writ petition on 5 July 2023. A police letter annexed to the State's return showed that a fresh report had been filed through the SP on 15 January 2025 as MJCR No. 36/2025 before the CJM. The precise stage of that report was not established in the appeal. The father asserted a 21-year failure to investigate fairly, noncompliance with investigative points identified by the DIG, and the police's delay after the 2021 return. He sought independent/CBI investigation, police protection for his family, ₹25 lakh compensation and costs, arguing that the return of the report obliged the police to file a charge-sheet.

2. Precedents — Considered : Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117, was applied to a Section 173 final report: the Magistrate may accept closure; where the investigation is incomplete or unsatisfactory, decline to accept the report and direct further investigation under Section 156(3); or take cognizance under Section 190(1)(b) on facts disclosing an offence despite the contrary police opinion. Further investigation may result in a charge-sheet or another final report. In the present case, the CJM had not adjudicated the merits of the 2015 report. The fresh report was for the CJM alone to consider in the first instance.

State of Punjab v. CBI, (2011) 9 SCC 182, was considered for the distinction between further investigation under Section 173(8), within the powers conferred by the CrPC on the police and subordinate courts, and the High Court's exceptional inherent or constitutional power to secure justice by fresh investigation or an independent agency despite an earlier charge-sheet. The passage quoted from it discussed Mithabhai Pashabhai Patel and Nirmal Singh Kahlon, including the difference between supplementing an investigation and ordinarily disfavoured reinvestigation, and the distinction between transferring an investigation and court monitoring, which ends after the charge-sheet is filed. No fresh investigation was ordered here.

Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2016) 4 SCC 160, was considered for the constitutional power, to be exercised sparingly, to intervene to ensure a fair inquiry for victims. Commencement of trial and examination of witnesses do not absolutely bar its exercise, but suspicion must have a factual foundation. Bharati Tamang v. Union of India, (2013) 15 SCC 578, was reproduced for the powers, in an appropriate case, to constitute or monitor an independent team, transfer an investigation even after a charge-sheet is filed, and exceptionally direct a de novo inquiry to avert a miscarriage of justice. Its accompanying propositions on admissibility of illegally obtained evidence and prosecutorial disclosure were quoted but were not independent issues decided in this appeal. Babubhai v. State of Gujarat, (2010) 12 SCC 254, distinguished further investigation and exceptional independent-agency inquiry from routine reinvestigation; judicial intervention in police investigation requires grave irregularity, mala fides or an inquiry that is improper and lacks objectivity.

Himanshu Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2023) 12 SCC 592, was extensively considered. It drew on State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, Secretary, Minor Irrigation & Rural Engineering Services v. Sahngoo Ram Arya, (2002) 5 SCC 521, and K.V. Rajendran to require that transfer be ordered cautiously and only in rare cases, on material in the record showing, for example, a prima facie tainted investigation, the capacity of high officials to influence it, concerns about credibility, or a need to secure justice or enforce fundamental rights. Allegations against police alone and a request for a chosen agency are insufficient. Its reference to Romila Thapar concerned the accused's inability to dictate an investigating agency; the father here was the complainant. The more general principle in Rajesh Gandhi was that an aggrieved person may demand proper investigation but cannot select the agency as of right.

K.V. Rajendran v. Superintendent of Police, CBCID, (2013) 12 SCC 480, was separately quoted. Its test of exceptional circumstances emphasized justice, an honest and complete investigation, and public confidence. It also observed that, once an investigation is complete and a charge-sheet has been filed, courts should ordinarily leave the matter to the criminal court and avoid expressing opinions on the merits of accusations against individuals. The encounter case of Rubabbuddin Sheikh, cited in that discussion, involved accusations against top police personnel with a credible concern that the State police investigation could not command confidence; it was not treated as requiring automatic transfer whenever police personnel are accused.

Vishal Tiwari v. Union of India, (2024) 4 SCC 115, was considered for the requirement of strong evidence on the record showing glaring and deliberate inaction, inadequacy or prima facie bias, and a likely failure of justice, before displacing the agency entrusted by statute with the investigation. Royden Harold Buthello v. State of Chhattisgarh reiterated the CPDR caution. It also discussed the concern in Mithilesh Kumar Singh for the victim's confidence and credible discovery of truth in light of the facts of each case, alongside Arnab Ranjan Goswami's insistence on an exceptional, substantiated case. Anant Thanur Karmuse v. State of Maharashtra reiterated Himanshu Kumar's rare-case test and the absence of an absolute bar merely because a charge-sheet has been filed or the trial has commenced.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 302 and 34 IPC were the provisions cited in the FIR for the alleged murder with common intention; their ingredients or the officers' guilt were not adjudicated. Sections 173(2) and 173(8) CrPC concerned police reports and the power of further investigation; Sections 156(3) and 190(1)(b) concerned the Magistrate's response to a final report as explained in Abhinandan Jha. Section 482 CrPC and Articles 226 and 32 of the Constitution appeared in the cited Supreme Court discussion of exceptional remedies concerning investigation before superior courts; this was a writ appeal from an Article 226 order, not a disposal under Section 482. Police Regulation No. 737 governed presentation by the competent officer, the defect identified by the CJM. Section 2(1) of the 2005 Madhya Pradesh Adhiniyam provided for the writ appeal.

4. Issues : (i) Whether return of the original closure report for want of presentation by the competent officer amounted to rejection on the merits and obliged the police to file a charge-sheet; (ii) which options the CJM retained upon the fresh report and what notice and opportunities to object and examine witnesses had to be given to the complainant; (iii) whether a writ direction to the SP should remain while the fresh report was pending before the CJM; (iv) whether the alleged delay, failure to address the DIG's points and allegations against police justified independent/CBI investigation at this stage; and (v) how further investigation differs from exceptional fresh/de novo inquiry and whether completion of an investigation bars transfer. The exact stage of MJCR No. 36/2025 was uncertain, so the operative direction was expressly conditional.

5. Ratio / Findings : The CJM's 2021 order concerned presentation of the report under Police Regulation No. 737 and did not adjudicate its merits. The procedural return did not oblige the police to file a charge-sheet. The January 2025 report was before the CJM, who, under Abhinandan Jha, could accept closure, direct further investigation if the investigation was inadequate, or take cognizance on the report's disclosed facts despite the police conclusion. Notice and an effective opportunity to object and examine witnesses were essential; the father's failure to call Ran Singh on his earlier objection was a material observation, not a final evaluation of any new evidence. The Single Judge had not been told of the fresh report's pendency. The direction to the SP was unnecessary while the report was pending before the Magistrate and was set aside. The Bench deprecated police delay but noted that the father had not approached a court before the closure report was filed and had not approached the High Court before 2023; with the report still subject to Magistrate scrutiny, it declined to comment on the investigation's merits. The Supreme Court authorities recognized the constitutional power, to be exercised sparingly on sufficient justification, to transfer an investigation to CBI or direct an independent or fresh inquiry even after a charge-sheet is filed or trial commences. This power is distinct from routine further investigation under Section 173(8). The power required material specific to the case showing a real threat to fairness or justice; the request, allegations and lapse of time did not themselves settle that question.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the Single Judge's 19 November 2025 order and disposed of the writ appeal. If MJCR No. 36/2025 was still pending, the CJM, Morena, was directed to decide it within three months of the filing/receipt of the certified copy of the appellate order, immediately serve notice if not already served, allow the father to object and examine supporting witnesses, hear both sides and apply Abhinandan Jha. If a final order had already been passed, the father could pursue such legal recourse as was permissible. The Court expressly left the report's merits to the CJM.

Rambabu Singh Tomar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.A. no. 186/2026, 09/04/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (715) Prev Next

Headnote :- Penal law — Sections 306 and 107 IPC — instigation and abetment of suicide — Six relatives challenged charges arising from Mamta's self-immolation. The deceased's dying declaration attributed her act to a fight with her mother-in-law Rambai, younger sister-in-law Poonam and younger brother-in-law Ummed Singh, and said her husband Shishupal had tried to save her. Her brother's statement alleged a sustained course of deprivation of food, compelled work, beatings, demands for household articles, Panchayat interventions and the husband's abandonment of her without money in Ahmedabad. The Single Judge reviewed Chitresh Kumar Chopra, Praveen Pradhan, Sanju, Gangula Mohan Reddy, Orilal Jaiswal, M. Mohan, Kishori Lal, Amalendu Pal and Amit Kapur on the three forms of abetment under Section 107: instigation, conspiracy and intentional aid. An intentional act or a connected course of conduct may support an inference of goading a person to suicide. Mere harassment without proximate positive action, ordinary domestic discord and a hypersensitive response do not establish the completed offence. The context and mens rea are material. The court's conclusion in this case was limited to whether the prosecution material supported charges, not whether the relatives had actually abetted the suicide.

Matrimonial cruelty — Section 498-A IPC — The dying declaration concerning the immediate quarrel was not the only prosecution material. The account attributed to Bablu described continuing alleged harassment after the initial years of marriage, repeated family interventions and material deprivation. The court regarded the material taken together as sufficient for trial against the applicants. Manorama's residence in nearby Dholpur did not, at this stage, rule out visits to the matrimonial home. These were allegations accepted for the limited inquiry at the stage of framing charges, with individual participation and proof left open.

Framing of charge — Sections 227–228 CrPC — At the stage of framing charges, the court must apply its judicial mind and sift the prosecution material to identify the ingredients of the offence, the broad probabilities and any serious infirmities. It may discharge the accused if two equally possible views give rise only to ordinary suspicion. It must not conduct a roving mini-trial or demand proof beyond reasonable doubt. Grave or strong suspicion, founded on material indicating that the accused might have committed the offence, is enough to proceed; the defence cannot introduce its own evidentiary case at this stage. The Bench applied the Supreme Court principles in Soma Chakravarty, P. Vijayan, State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, Prafulla Kumar Samal, Niranjan Singh and Shoraj Singh Ahlawat to affirm the trial court's charges under Sections 306 and 498-A IPC. The criminal revision was dismissed. All questions of credibility, intent and guilt remain for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rambai (mother-in-law), Poonam (younger sister-in-law/devarani), Ummed Singh (younger brother-in-law/devar), Subedar Singh (father-in-law), Shishupal alias Banti (husband) and Manorama (sister-in-law/nanad) challenged the First Additional Sessions Judge, Joura's order of 4 February 2020 in Sessions Trial No. 82/2019 framing charges under Sections 306 and 498-A IPC. Mamta married Shishupal in about 2005 and had two children. On 11 April 2018 she poured kerosene on herself and suffered burns. Her recorded dying declaration spoke of a fight with Rambai and Poonam and attributed her act to a quarrel with Rambai, Poonam and Ummed; she said her husband tried to save her. The smell of kerosene was recorded in the pre-MLC. She died while being taken toward Delhi for treatment. Police investigated and filed a charge-sheet; a container was seized on the husband's disclosure. The applicants characterized the event as a domestic dispute and argued that an overly sensitive person's suicide after ordinary discord could not establish an offence under Section 306. The State and the complainant alleged a very different course of events: according to her brother Bablu, after initial years of marriage she was denied food, required to work continuously, beaten and pressed for household goods/money; Panchayats were convened, she was sent to her husband in Ahmedabad, and he left her there without funds until her family sent ₹2,000 for her return. The family alleged renewed harassment on her return, with a further Panchayat about four months before the death and her complaint to Bablu ten days before it. These were prosecution accounts, not final findings that cruelty or abetment had been proved. The court also noted Manorama's Dholpur address but considered that Dholpur's proximity to Morena prevented visits from being ruled out at the stage of framing charges.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicants cited Amalendu Pal alias Jhantu v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 1 SCC 707; Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750; State of Kerala v. S. Unnikrishnan Nair, (2015) 9 SCC 639; and the High Court's decision in Kalyan Singh. The Judge then considered the following Supreme Court authorities in the legal discussion.

Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, explained that instigation may be goading, provoking, urging or encouraging; express words directing the act are unnecessary, and a deliberate course of acts or omissions creating a perceived lack of alternatives may establish the necessary incitement. A remark made merely in anger, without intending the result, is insufficient. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, emphasized the abettor's intention and the need to infer instigation from the circumstances rather than apply a universal formula. It also required that, when considering an application for quashing, the court form a tentative view relevant to Section 228 rather than a firm conclusion. Sanju alias Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, identified mens rea as an element of instigation. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, explained the three forms of abetment under Section 107—instigation, conspiracy and intentional aid—and the connection under Section 109 between the offence abetted and the act committed.

Gangula Mohan Reddy and M. Mohan v. State, AIR 2011 SC 1238, stressed a clear mental element and active or direct conduct intended to push the deceased into suicide, rather than mere discord. State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, cautioned against equating a hypersensitive reaction to ordinary petulance in domestic life with proved inducement of suicide. Amalendu Pal required direct or indirect incitement and proximate positive conduct beyond a bare allegation of harassment before conviction, with a proved active role under Section 107. These standards and cautions concern conviction. The Bench considered the record at the distinct, preliminary stage of framing charges. Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, citing Chitresh Kumar Chopra and Ramesh Kumar, was considered for a tentative inference of instigation from the circumstances, without marshalling the evidence as at trial when framing charges.

On charge and discharge, Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI distinguished the possibility that the accused committed the offence, sufficient for framing a charge, from guilt proved beyond reasonable doubt, with prosecution material accepted at face value for the limited inquiry. P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala permitted discharge where two possible views give rise only to ordinary suspicion but required judicial scrutiny rather than a mechanical charge. State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, AIR 1977 SC 2018, recognized strong suspicion as enough initially while disallowing its substitution for trial proof. Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, AIR 1979 SC 366, allowed limited sifting of evidence, broad probabilities and basic infirmities, with grave suspicion justifying a charge, while prohibiting a roving inquiry or weighing the evidence as at trial. Niranjan Singh Karam Singh Punjabi v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, AIR 1990 SC 1869, similarly confined evaluation to whether the record at face value discloses the ingredients of the offence. Shoraj Singh Ahlawat v. State of U.P., AIR 2013 SC 52, quoted Onkar Nath Mishra and other authorities to distinguish the charge threshold from conviction, and reproduced State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, on the accused's inability to adduce defence material to conduct a mini-trial at the stage of framing charges. Its quoted Rumi Dhar passage reiterated that a strong suspicion founded on the material can support charges despite a discharge application.

3. Statutes considered : Section 306 IPC punishes abetment of a completed suicide; Section 107 defines abetment through instigation, participation in a conspiracy accompanied by an act or illegal omission, or intentional aid, with its explanations addressing deliberate misrepresentation or concealment and facilitating acts. Section 109 was discussed in the quoted Kishori Lal and Amalendu Pal extracts, not separately charged in this case. Sections 227–228 CrPC governed the Sessions Court's decision on discharge or framing of charges as discussed in the precedent; the revision was brought under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. The quoted Shoraj Singh Ahlawat extract also discussed Sections 239–240 CrPC in the context of a trial before a Magistrate, by analogy with the common threshold for framing charges. The marriage had taken place well over seven years before the death.

4. Issues : Whether the material disclosed a case for framing charges under Sections 306 and 498-A IPC against the six relatives despite the deceased's account of an immediate quarrel and her statement that her husband attempted rescue; how intentional instigation or aid and the caution concerning ordinary discord and hypersensitivity inform the inquiry at the stage of framing charges; whether the court should consider the brother's account of an alleged continuing course of cruelty; and what degree of judicial sifting is permissible, what level of suspicion is required, and whether the accused may introduce defence material at the stage of framing charges.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench read the dying declaration together with Bablu's prosecution account rather than treating the immediate quarrel as the whole case. It noted the alleged deprivation, demands and family interventions in the later years of the marriage, the Ahmedabad episode, and the declaration's specific reference to Rambai, Poonam and Ummed. The court regarded the material taken together as sufficient for framing charges. Its observation that Manorama might visit from nearby Dholpur addressed the objection based on her residence at this preliminary stage; it did not establish her participation. The Supreme Court's Section 306 decisions require intention, a connected inciting or aiding act and a careful distinction between serious oppressive conduct and ordinary discord when guilt is eventually adjudicated. Applying the authorities on framing charges, the court held that a reasoned and limited assessment showing grave or strong suspicion is sufficient under Section 228. Mere ordinary suspicion is insufficient, but proof sufficient for conviction is not required. It affirmed charges for both offences without making final findings on mens rea or each applicant's liability. The evidentiary and intent questions remain for trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the order of 4 February 2020 framing charges under Sections 306 and 498-A IPC against all six applicants. The criminal revision was dismissed. There was no acquittal, conviction, sentence or final determination that the alleged cruelty caused the suicide.

Rambai and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors., Cr.R. no. 1467/2020, 31/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (716) Prev Next

Headnote :- Arms Act — Section 25(1-B)(a) — identity and custody of firearms — The prosecution alleged that guns had been seized from Ramcharan, Siddhar, Vijay and Kamarlal. The seizure witness did not support the alleged disclosure and had signed the documents without reading them. The officer could not account for the powder and pellets said to have been removed from the guns. The seizure memos lacked specimen seals. The armourer stated that he had returned the guns unsealed, whereas the District Magistrate's clerk stated that they had arrived sealed and had been resealed before being returned. The articles were produced in court unsealed. The prosecution did not explain the intervening sealing and opening. The Court held that the alleged seizures and possession had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt and set aside all four Arms Act convictions, despite the examination of the guns and the grant of sanction.

Evidence — material omission and Section 145 Evidence Act — Ram Singh's trial assertion that a miscreant escorted him and Mangilal two kilometres into the forest was absent from his police statement. His attention had been drawn to the omission, satisfying Section 145 although the statement had not been separately marked as a defence exhibit. Mangilal had not been confronted with his similar omission, so the omission could not formally be used to contradict him; his account nevertheless remained doubtful in light of the other evidence. The Court separately identified major conflicts concerning Durga's movements and use of the phone, how the persons said to have paid the ransom located the captors, the arrangements for and amount of cash, the time of release and the police patrol.

Section 157 CrPC — FIR transmission — The report recorded on 25 March 2009 reached the Special Judge more than 24 hours later. After considering Rabindra Mahto, Suresh Chaudhary and Arjun Marik, the Bench held that prompt forwarding protects against fabrication and allows the Magistrate to oversee the investigation. Delay is a material circumstance to be considered, but does not automatically require rejection of otherwise reliable evidence. Together with the serious contradictions in this case, it deepened the doubt about the prosecution account.

Kidnapping for ransom — Section 364-A IPC with Sections 11/13 MPDVPK act — The alleged detention, demand, delivery of ₹52,000–₹53,000 and release were not proved beyond reasonable doubt on the evidence taken as a whole. Vijay's TIP and dock identification could not take the place of proof of those acts. The medical evidence of injuries to Durga and Mahesh also did not link an assault to Vijay, given the possibility that the injuries resulted from a fall and the prosecution's failure to prove its account of the incident. His convictions under Sections 364-A and 323 IPC and the Arms Act were set aside.

Identification — Under Manu Sharma, Hemudan Nanbha Gadvi and Prakash, identification in court is substantive evidence and a TIP is generally corroborative, particularly when the suspect is a stranger to the witness. Neither the omission nor the failure of a TIP is invariably fatal. Proof of identity does not, by itself, establish commission of the crime. The acquittal of the other accused could not be reversed merely on the basis of dock identification when the substantive allegations had not been proved.

Acquittal appeal — Applying Abdul Mannan and Sunil Kumar Sambhudayal Gupta, an appellate court should not substitute its own view for a tenable view supporting acquittal merely because another view is possible; intervention is justified for perversity or serious error after review of the whole record. The State demonstrated no such error. Ramcharan, Siddhar and Kamarlal's acquittals of the offences under Section 364-A/MPDVPK and Section 323, and Suresh's full acquittal including the charge under the Arms Act, were affirmed. The four appellants'

Criminal Appeal No. 192/2010 was allowed in full; the State's Criminal Appeal No. 353/2014 was dismissed. Vijay was to be released if not required in another case, and the other accused persons' bonds were discharged.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Two connected appeals arose from the judgment dated 11 January 2010 passed by the Special Judge (MPDVPK Act), Shivpuri, in Special Sessions Trial No. 60/2009. Ramcharan, Siddhar, Vijay and Kamarlal alias Bhindua appealed their convictions (Cr.A. 192/2010). Vijay had received life imprisonment and fine under Section 364-A IPC read with Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act, three months' rigorous imprisonment and fine under Section 323 IPC, and three years' rigorous imprisonment and fine under Section 25(1-B)(a) Arms Act read with Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act. Ramcharan, Siddhar and Kamarlal had been convicted only on the Arms Act charge and acquitted of kidnapping for ransom under the IPC/MPDVPK Act and of hurt. The State's Cr.A. 353/2014 challenged those three partial acquittals and the complete acquittal of Suresh, who had faced charges under Section 364-A/MPDVPK, Section 323 and Section 25(1-B)(b) Arms Act, the last concerning a farsa.

The prosecution alleged that on 25 March 2009 four men stopped bullock carts in a forest, beat the occupants, released Durga to demand ₹60,000 and threatened to kill Mahesh, Narayan and Patiram if police were informed. It alleged that Ram Singh and Mangilal brought about ₹52,000 and that the three captives were released. Durga's Dehati Nalishi was said to have been recorded on patrol and sent for formal FIR registration. About seven weeks later police arrested five suspects and recorded firearm/farsa seizures. Vijay was identified in a TIP. On a full appellate review, the Bench found major unresolved contradictions concerning the movements of the messenger released by the captors and his use of Mahesh's phone; the source and precision of the information by which the alleged payers located the captors; the source and amount of cash; the chronology of payment and release; the police patrol's failure to encounter the alleged payers; and the place and manner in which the Dehati Nalishi was recorded. The FIR reached the Special Judge more than 24 hours after formal registration. The four guns allegedly seized were produced unsealed, with inconsistent accounts of their earlier sealing, testing by the armourer and handling for sanction. The gunpowder and pellets said to have been removed were missing. Durga and Mahesh had some injuries, but the doctor accepted a fall from a bullock cart as a possible cause; Narayan and Patiram were not medically examined.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rabindra Mahto v. State of Jharkhand, (2006) 10 SCC 432, was considered for Section 157 CrPC's prompt FIR-forwarding duty and its purposes of preventing later improvement and enabling Magistrate supervision, subject to the important qualification that delay alone does not justify discarding a case supported by reliable proof. Suresh Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2003) 4 SCC 128, illustrated how a substantial unexplained delay could add to the surrounding doubt. Arjun Marik v. State of Bihar, 1994 Supp (2) SCC 372, explained the "forthwith" requirement and the two purposes served by Sections 157 and 159. The Bench assessed the delay of more than 24 hours together with the multiple serious defects in the evidence, rather than treating the delay as automatically fatal.

Manu Sharma v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2010) 6 SCC 1, was quoted at length for the propositions in Munshi Singh Gautam and Malkhansingh reproduced in it: identification in court is substantive evidence under Section 9 Evidence Act; a TIP ordinarily tests the first impression of a witness unfamiliar with the suspect and provides corroboration. A prompt TIP is desirable, but a TIP is neither mandatory nor a right of the accused. Identification in court for the first time may be weak and ordinarily calls for corroboration as a matter of prudence, subject to exceptions depending on the facts. Hemudan Nanbha Gadvi v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 523, explained that the primacy of identification in court does not invariably exclude consideration of a TIP when identification in court fails and other corroborative evidence exists. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2014) 12 SCC 133, discussed the value and limits of pretrial identification, stranger identification, possible prior exposure, and circumstances in which proof may exist without a formal TIP or even positive identification. The Bench applied these authorities to distinguish proof of identity from proof of kidnapping, ransom, assault or firearm possession. Prakash's discussion included an explanatory quotation from foreign scholarship.

Abdul Mannan v. State of Assam, (2010) 3 SCC 381, was applied in exercising appellate restraint where the trial acquittal rested on a tenable view. Sunil Kumar Sambhudayal Gupta v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 13 SCC 657, explained the need to review the whole record, the strengthened presumption of innocence after acquittal, and the exception for perversity where relevant evidence has been ignored, inadmissible material relied on, or a finding is irrational or against the weight of evidence. The State could show no such error.

3. Statutes considered : Section 25(1-B)(a) Arms Act was the firearm-possession charge against Ramcharan, Siddhar, Vijay and Kamarlal, with the sanction for prosecution proved through the District Magistrate's clerk; Suresh faced the distinct charge under Section 25(1-B)(b) concerning a farsa and was acquitted at trial. The decisive Arms Act issue was whether the allegedly seized guns had been reliably identified and attributed to the accused; the decision did not rest on a general challenge to the grant of sanction. Section 364-A IPC and Sections 11/13 of the Madhya Pradesh Dakaiti Aur Vyapharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam were the provisions under which the kidnapping-for-ransom convictions and acquittals arose in the dacoity-affected area. The judgment resolved those charges on the failure to prove the alleged acts, without separately construing each statutory ingredient. Section 323 IPC governed the hurt counts. Section 145 Evidence Act required that a witness's attention be drawn to a prior written statement for contradiction; the court distinguished the confrontation of Ram Singh from the omission that was not put to Mangilal. Section 9 Evidence Act and Section 54-A CrPC arose in the identification analysis. Sections 157 and 159 CrPC governed prompt FIR transmission and Magistrate oversight; the FIR's registration and later forwarding were distinct events.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the seized guns were reliably linked to each of the four convicted men despite contradictory accounts of sealing and the missing powder and pellets; (ii) whether the testimony established the underlying detention, threat, demand, payment, release and physical assault beyond reasonable doubt; (iii) when an omission from a police statement is usable under Section 145 although the statement was not marked as a defence exhibit; (iv) the significance of a delay of more than 24 hours in forwarding the FIR, considered with the other contradictions; (v) what TIP and dock identification prove and cannot prove; and (vi) whether any trial acquittal was perverse or otherwise liable to reversal in the State's appeal. The Court considered the accused and the charges against them in separate groups.

5. Ratio / Findings : The seizure witness had signed the police documents without reading them and did not support the alleged disclosure. The investigator stated that the guns were loaded when seized and that the powder and pellets had been removed, but he neither produced nor accounted for them. He maintained that the guns had been sealed at the spot. The armourer stated that he had received the guns sealed but returned them unsealed because he had no seal. The District Magistrate's office, however, stated that they had arrived sealed and had been resealed after sanction, whereas they were produced in court unsealed. Neither the intervening resealing nor the subsequent opening was explained, and the seizure memos lacked specimen seals. Possession of the particular guns by Ramcharan, Siddhar, Kamarlal and Vijay was therefore not proved beyond reasonable doubt.

For Vijay's ransom conviction, Durga's claim about going to the police station conflicted with a forest-recorded Dehati Nalishi; his account of informing family by Mahesh's phone and returning it conflicted with Mahesh and the payers. The alleged guide who took Ram Singh and Mangilal two kilometres to the captors was a material improvement in Ram Singh's evidence, properly put to him under Section 145, although the police statement had not been separately marked. Mangilal had not been so confronted, so the omission could not formally be used to contradict him, but the account of how they reached the captors remained doubtful. The sources of the money were not identified. One alleged contributor was not examined, and his father did not corroborate the contribution. The amounts of ₹52,000 and ₹53,000 and the times of release differed. The police allegedly patrolling the forest never encountered the alleged payers. The formal FIR was forwarded after more than 24 hours, a significant additional factor, rather than a defect that was fatal by itself. The Court found the alleged kidnapping, ransom demand/payment and release story unproved beyond reasonable doubt. Vijay's positive TIP and dock identification addressed identity only and could not establish those disputed acts. His conviction under Section 323 was also set aside: the limited injuries were consistent with an alternative fall, two of the alleged victims had not been medically examined, and the Bench did not find assault by him proved. It referred to possible self-infliction or a fall as alternative explanations; it did not conclusively determine how the injuries had occurred.

In the State's appeal, the other accused had been acquitted of the kidnapping and hurt counts (and Suresh also of the alleged weapon count). Their dock identification could not overcome the same failure to prove the underlying incident. The trial court's view was at least tenable; the State showed no perverse finding warranting substitution. The Bench distinguished between setting aside convictions because the charges had not been proved and refusing to reverse acquittals in the absence of a permissible ground for appellate interference.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal appeal in full. The Section 25(1-B)(a) Arms Act convictions of Ramcharan, Siddhar, Kamarlal and Vijay were set aside; Vijay's Section 364-A IPC/Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act and Section 323 IPC convictions were also set aside. Vijay was to be released immediately unless required in another case; the bail bonds of Ramcharan, Siddhar and Kamarlal were discharged. The criminal appeal by the State was dismissed, affirming Ramcharan, Siddhar and Kamarlal's acquittals of the offences under Section 364-A/MPDVPK and Section 323, and Suresh's complete acquittal including the separate Arms Act allegation; Suresh's appeal bond was discharged. The trial records were to be returned and copies of the judgment supplied to the appellants. No order as to costs was made.

Ramcharan and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 192/2010 & 353/2014, 21/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (717) Prev Next

Headnote :- Mischief by fire — Section 436 IPC — use of the structure and proof of burning — On a private complaint concerning the burning of Babulal's kachcha and pakka houses at midnight, the appellants disputed that the hut had been proved to be a dwelling or used for storing articles. Babulal described the irrigation materials and other goods kept there. The defence witness Bhura admitted that a hut used for tying cattle stood at the site, that it had burnt and that the police visited afterward. The witnesses whom the Court believed stated that Atalbabu set fire to the kachcha house and Ramcharan and Shivraj to the pakka house. On this evidence, the Court upheld the conviction under Section 436/149.

Evidence — contradictions and eyewitness status — Babulal's earlier statement under Section 200 CrPC placed his wife and son at the scene only on the following morning. Their later claim to have witnessed the incident at night was rejected because of the material omission and contradiction. The earlier statement had identified two guests, Rajaram and Santosh, whose accounts withstood detailed cross-examination. Rejection of the wife's and son's claims to be eyewitnesses did not require rejection of the other witnesses' evidence. The defence witness's admissions corroborated the existence, use and burning of the hut, although he did not know who had caused the fire.

Unlawful assembly — Section 149 IPC — Ghanshyam had not personally set a house ablaze, but the Court found that he was identified among the group who arrived at midnight, abused Babulal, dragged him outside and assaulted him before other members set fire to the houses. His participation supported the finding of a common object and his constructive liability for the offence under Section 436. The decision rested on the identified conduct. Narmada's appeal had abated on his death.

Sentence — Section 436 provides no minimum term of imprisonment. The Court considered the lapse of approximately 13 years since the incident in 2009, the burning of the houses, and Babulal's displacement and loss. It affirmed the conviction, reduced the five-year term of rigorous imprisonment to two years, increased the fine from ₹5,000 to ₹20,000 and retained three months' default imprisonment. The appeal was partly allowed only in respect of the sentence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In a private complaint under Section 200 CrPC, Babulal alleged that at about midnight on 13 April 2009, five men came to his houses at a remote location, abused him, dragged him outside and struck him. He stated that Atalbabu set fire to his kachcha house and Ramcharan and Shivraj to the other, pakka house, damaging irrigation goods, grain and household effects. He alleged that the police initially took no action and estimated his loss at about ₹2 lakh. After statements were recorded under Sections 200 and 202, the case was committed for trial. The Additional Sessions Judge, Ganj-Basoda, framed charges under Sections 294, 436/149 and 506 Part II IPC and later convicted the appellants under Section 436/149, imposing five years' rigorous imprisonment, a fine of ₹5,000 and three months' simple imprisonment in default. In the criminal appeal under Section 374 CrPC, the appellants challenged the contradictions, the absence of proof that the structure was used as a dwelling or for storing property, the lack of independent witnesses and the absence of any act of setting fire by Ghanshyam. Babulal (CW-1), his wife Gyarsibai (CW-2), his son Ramkrishna (CW-3), his son-in-law Rajaram (CW-4) and Santosh (CW-5) testified; the defence examined Bhura (DW-1). Babulal's earlier statement under Section 200 placed his wife's and son's arrival on the following morning and identified two guests at the scene. At trial, the wife and son were presented as eyewitnesses; the two guests were Rajaram and Santosh. Bhura knew of the hut, stated that it was used for tying cattle, and acknowledged that it had burnt and that the police had visited. He did not know who had started the fire. Ghanshyam was identified among the group who assaulted Babulal and dragged him out; Narmada, another appellant, had died and his appeal had abated. The appeal also challenged the sentence and the valuation of the damage; the photograph filed with the complaint was not exhibited at trial.

2. Precedents — Considered :

3. Statutes considered : Section 436 IPC was the substantive charge of mischief by fire concerning the burning of a house or a structure used for keeping property. After assessing the established use of the hut for cattle and goods, the Court rejected the appellants' factual contention that it had not been used as a dwelling or for storing articles. Section 149 IPC imposed constructive liability on the basis of membership of an unlawful assembly and its common object; Ghanshyam's presence and his acts of dragging and assaulting Babulal were specifically examined. Charges had been framed under Sections 294 and 506 Part II IPC, but the appeal concerned the conviction under Section 436/149 and did not independently decide those charges. Sections 200 and 202 CrPC governed the private complaint and preliminary witness statements; the appeal was brought under Section 374 CrPC. Section 436 provides for life imprisonment or imprisonment for up to ten years, and fine, with no statutory minimum. The Court expressly relied on the absence of a minimum term in reviewing the sentence.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the testimony and defence admissions proved the burning of a structure used for keeping cattle or property, thereby answering the challenge to the charge under Section 436; (ii) whether the material omission in Babulal's earlier statement in the complaint proceedings excluded his wife and son as eyewitnesses and how that affected the evidence of Rajaram and Santosh; (iii) whether Ghanshyam's identified conduct supported liability under Section 149 despite his not personally setting fire to a house; and (iv) whether the lapse of about 13 years and the disputed extent of the damage warranted modification of the five-year sentence, while taking account of the victim's displacement.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected Gyarsibai's and Ramkrishna's claims to have seen the fire at midnight because Babulal's statement under Section 200 placed their arrival on the following morning. Rajaram and Santosh, the two guests identified earlier, supported Babulal's evidence and were not discredited in cross-examination. Bhura's testimony as a defence witness independently established the existence of a hut at the disputed site, its use for tying cattle, its burning and the subsequent police visit, although he did not identify who had set it on fire. The Court accepted Babulal's account that Atalbabu set fire to the kachcha house and Ramcharan and Shivraj to the pakka house, destroying the articles kept there. It specifically addressed Ghanshyam's objection: the eyewitnesses identified him as arriving with the group at midnight, abusing Babulal, dragging him outside and striking him before the houses were set on fire. These acts established his membership of the unlawful assembly and his sharing of its common object under Section 149, despite his not personally setting fire to a house. In considering the sentence, the Court weighed the substantial harm and Babulal's move to Semri against the time that had elapsed and the absence of a mandatory minimum term.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the conviction under Section 436/149. The five-year term of rigorous imprisonment was reduced to two years and the fine increased from ₹5,000 to ₹20,000, with three months' default imprisonment. The appellants, who were already in custody, were directed to serve the remainder of their sentences. The trial judgment dated 13 August 2012 was otherwise affirmed. A copy of the judgment was to be supplied to the appellants free of cost, and the trial record was to be returned for compliance. Narmada's appeal had already abated on his death.

Ramcharan and Ors. v. Babulal and Ors., Cr.A. no. 653/2012, 11/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (718) Prev Next

Headnote :- Child witness — solitary eyewitness to murder — A seven-year-old son, Devendra, testified that his father Ramdas struck his mother Jashoda Bai on the neck with an axe at about 4 a.m. The trial court first tested his ability to understand and answer questions, then recorded his testimony without administering an oath. His presence in the family home was natural and was accepted by Ramdas in his statement under Section 313 CrPC. His account of the blows was consistent with the fatal incised wounds on the neck. Neither his immediate conduct nor his brief cross-examination revealed tutoring. Ramesh, Hemraj and Dro Bai withdrew their earlier claim to have witnessed the attack, but described the boy's prompt report and their discovery of the body; the limited scope of their evidence did not make the boy's account unreliable. Following Panchhi v. State of U.P., a child's evidence requires careful scrutiny because of susceptibility to influence, but is not rejected on the ground of age alone. On the evidence, he was a trustworthy direct witness.

Section 106 Evidence Act — homicide inside a shared dwelling — The prosecution established homicidal death, co-residence, the death inside Ramdas's home and the son's direct account. The Bench considered State of J & K v. Vijay Kumar, Ravirala Laxmaiah and State of Rajasthan v. Thakur Singh, including the limit explained in Shambhu Nath Mehra: Section 106 addresses facts especially within an accused's knowledge and does not relieve the prosecution of its burden of proving guilt. Ramdas gave no explanation of how his wife died in their shared home. His failure to explain provided an additional link in the evidence taken together; his silence alone did not prove guilt.

Conduct — abscondence — Ramdas was absent immediately after the killing and was apprehended later that day. The Court recognised that even an innocent person might flee for fear of false implication, so flight does not invariably indicate guilt. Given the proved death in the home, the reliable eyewitness account and the absence of an explanation, his flight reinforced the other evidence. The medical examination established two deep incised wounds on the neck and homicidal death. The Court also considered the seizure of the axe and blood-stained clothing, although the seizure witnesses were partly hostile. The conviction under Section 302 IPC and the life sentence were affirmed; life imprisonment was the statutory minimum. The appeal was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramdas appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the conviction under Section 302 IPC recorded by the Additional Sessions Judge, Picchore, on 6 January 2009 and the sentence of life imprisonment, a fine of ₹100 and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. According to the prosecution, at about 4 a.m. on 7 August 2008, his wife Jashoda Bai was struck with an axe inside their home. Murarilal, the village chowkidar, reported the incident along with the couple's seven-year-old son Devendra. The report stated that the boy and others were present and that Ramdas left with the axe. The postmortem report described two large incised wounds on the neck, including injury to the major blood vessels and trachea. The doctor's examination supported homicidal death, although the axe was not sent to him for comparison. The police seized earth from the home, arrested Ramdas later that day and stated that they had seized a blood-stained axe and clothing. Some seizure witnesses did not support all the details given by the police. Ramesh, Hemraj and Dro Bai, who had earlier been presented as eyewitnesses, testified that Devendra told them his father had killed Jashoda and that they saw the body on arrival. At trial, they did not claim to have witnessed the blows. Rachna and Bhagwan Das gave evidence of the child's prompt communications and the family circumstances, but did not give direct eyewitness accounts. Devendra directly described the attack. Ramdas challenged reliance on the child after the other witnesses withdrew their claims to have witnessed the incident. In his statement under Section 313, he accepted that his wife and Devendra resided with him, but did not explain her fatal injuries in the home.

2. Precedents — Considered : Panchhi v. State of U.P., (1998) 7 SCC 177, was expressly applied: a child witness is not unworthy of belief as a matter of law, and the evidence is not automatically excluded. It must be evaluated with greater care because the child is susceptible to suggestion and tutoring. The Bench applied that caution in considering the trial court's assessment of the boy's competence, his natural presence, prompt disclosure and consistency, and the failure of cross-examination to reveal tutoring.

State of J & K v. Vijay Kumar, (2018) 13 SCC 655, was considered on the need to explain a spouse's homicidal death when the deceased was living with the husband shortly before death. Ravirala Laxmaiah v. State of A.P., (2013) 9 SCC 283, was discussed on the circumstances in which failure to explain an incriminating fact or a death in the shared home provides an additional link in the evidence. Its discussion included a quotation from Trimukh Maroti Kirkan and cases concerning explanations under Section 313.

State of Rajasthan v. Thakur Singh, (2014) 12 SCC 211, was quoted at length. Its discussion of Shambhu Nath Mehra preserved the prosecution's general burden under Sections 101 and 106 Evidence Act: Section 106 covers facts pre-eminently within an accused's knowledge when proof by the prosecution would be extraordinarily difficult. The quoted Trimukh, Ganeshlal, Dnyaneshwar, Jagdish and Mir Mohammad Omar illustrations concerned proved circumstances involving facts especially within an accused's knowledge and the consequences of a failure to explain them. Thakur Singh expressly stated that the husband was not required to prove his innocence. The Bench applied that limited principle only after proof of the death in the home and its homicidal nature, and alongside Devendra's eyewitness account.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC was the sole charge and conviction adjudicated. The Bench identified life imprisonment as the statutory minimum for murder and therefore did not reduce the trial court's life sentence. The appeal was brought under Section 374 CrPC. Section 313 CrPC was relevant to Ramdas's acknowledgment of co-residence and his failure to explain the death. Section 106 Evidence Act governed facts specially within personal knowledge and was read consistently with the prosecution's burden under Section 101.

4. Issues : Whether Devendra's testimony as the solitary seven-year-old eyewitness was sufficiently trustworthy after an assessment of his competence and in view of the other witnesses' withdrawal of their claims to have directly witnessed the incident; whether the established homicidal death in the shared home called for an explanation from Ramdas under Section 106 without reversing the prosecution's burden; what weight should be given to his absence immediately after the incident and his arrest later that day; and whether the combined direct, medical and circumstantial evidence proved his guilt under Section 302 beyond reasonable doubt. The statutory minimum also governed the review of the sentence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The two severe incised wounds on the neck established homicide. Before recording Devendra's testimony, the trial court had satisfied itself that he could understand and answer questions. His residence with both parents made his presence at 4 a.m. natural, a fact accepted by Ramdas. The boy's account of his father striking his mother's neck with an axe was consistent with the medical findings and his prompt report. The brief cross-examination did not establish that his elder brother or anyone else had tutored him. The other witnesses withdrew their claims to have personally witnessed the blows and therefore were not eyewitnesses to the assault. Their accounts of the child's disclosure, the dead body and the father's absence nevertheless supported the surrounding circumstances. The Court considered the police evidence of recovery and the axe despite the partial hostility of the seizure witnesses.

The Bench applied Section 106 within its limited scope. Once the prosecution had proved homicide in the shared home and adduced credible direct evidence, Ramdas was expected to explain facts concerning the death that were specially within his knowledge. His silence supplemented the existing evidence; it could not replace proof of the circumstances on which the prosecution relied. The Court separately cautioned that flight may result from an innocent person's fear of false accusation, but regarded Ramdas's absence from the shared home immediately after the killing as significant in the circumstances of this case. Taken together, the evidence established his guilt beyond reasonable doubt. The conviction did not rest solely on proximity, silence or an adverse inference.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the conviction under Section 302 IPC, life imprisonment, fine of ₹100 and default term imposed on 6 January 2009. The Bench found no scope to reduce the minimum life sentence. Ramdas, who was in jail, was directed to serve the remainder of his sentence, and a free copy of the appellate judgment was to be supplied to him. The criminal appeal was dismissed.

Ramdas v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 148/2009, 03/08/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (719) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal-side writ — mandamus to initiate prosecution — alternative statutory remedy - Allegations that private respondents had forged documents concerning land and obtained government compensation did not justify a direction under Article 226 to initiate criminal proceedings when the petitioner could file a criminal complaint before the competent Magistrate. The Court applied Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on exceptional writ intervention against a mala fide exercise of investigative power. That power is exercisable in the rarest cases where a clear abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII are established. Even then, a court cannot prescribe how the police conduct the investigation. The petition was dismissed with liberty to file a complaint.

FIR registration and investigation — magistrate's remedial powers - Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, were applied on the remedies under Sections 154(3) and 156(3) CrPC. If prima facie satisfied, the Magistrate may order registration of an FIR or a proper investigation and monitor it. Where necessary, the Magistrate may also recommend a change of investigating officer, but cannot conduct the investigation personally. The Court also relied on Divine Retreat Centre's explanation of the complaint remedies under Sections 190 and 200. Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016, distinguished the duty under Lalita Kumari to register an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence from an automatic entitlement to mandamus without first using those remedies, subject to the recognized Whirlpool exceptions.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramdayal Singrore filed W.P. No. 20284/2020 under Article 226 seeking a writ of mandamus to respondents 2–5 to initiate criminal proceedings against respondents 6–8. He alleged that the latter had prepared forged documents concerning his land, used them as genuine and thereby defrauded him and the Government. According to the petitioner, he had approached the authorities, and the Collector, Mandla, had found that respondent 8 prepared a forged document that respondent 7 used to obtain government compensation; he asserted that no further action followed. These were the petitioner's allegations and his account of the administrative finding, not findings of criminal guilt by the High Court. Counsel for the respondents opposed the petition. The High Court did not adjudicate the alleged forgery. The immediate question concerned the appropriate forum and remedy for seeking criminal action.

2. Precedents — Considered : Paragraphs 41–42 of Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, were quoted to distinguish exceptional intervention under Article 226 from the ordinary statutory remedy. The decision recognises intervention against a mala fide exercise of investigative power. That power is to be exercised in the rarest cases where a clear abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII CrPC are established. Even then, the court cannot direct how the police conduct the investigation. Where the police do not act on information, Sections 190 and 200 provide a remedy by complaint before the Magistrate. The quoted discussion relied on Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, for the Magistrate's powers to inquire into a complaint, direct an investigation, dismiss the complaint or issue process. It also referred, within that passage, to All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union (Regd.) v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582. These authorities were reproduced within Divine Retreat Centre's explanation; they were not independently applied to the facts of this land dispute.

Paragraph 11 of Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explained the sequence of remedies when an FIR is not registered or the investigation is alleged to be improper. The aggrieved person may make a written application to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). The Magistrate may order registration or a proper investigation and monitor it. The Court quoted and relied on this rule in rejecting the requested writ remedy.

Paragraphs 2–4 of Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed Sakiri Vasu and explained why such complainants should ordinarily approach the Magistrate. Entertaining such petitions would flood the High Courts with requests for registration of FIRs. If prima facie satisfied, the Magistrate may direct a proper investigation, monitor it and, where necessary, recommend to senior police officers a change of investigating officer. The Magistrate cannot conduct the investigation personally. The present Court relied on that reasoning to identify an effective alternative forum; it did not find that the investigating officer in this case should be changed.

The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. and Ors., W.A. No. 247/2016 (20.12.2016), was quoted for the rule that mandamus to compel compliance with Section 154 may be denied where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the four exceptional grounds described in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1: the police's duty on receiving information disclosing a cognizable offence does not itself determine whether a writ of mandamus is available without using the alternative remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked to seek mandamus. The Court examined the remedies of approaching the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) CrPC and seeking the Magistrate's directions and monitoring of registration or investigation under Section 156(3). It also considered the complaint and cognizance procedure under Sections 190 and 200, and the framework under Chapter XII limiting intervention in police investigation. The Supreme Court quotation also described the Magistrate's options on a complaint under Chapter XV and Section 203. These provisions were considered as remedies, without determining whether the named respondents had committed a particular forgery offence. No IPC charge or statutory ingredient was decided.

4. Issues : The main issue was whether the Court should exercise its power under Article 226 to direct public authorities to initiate criminal proceedings against respondents 6–8 on the petitioner's allegations of forgery, or whether an effective complaint remedy before the competent Magistrate made writ intervention inappropriate. Through the cited authorities, the judgment considered the CrPC remedies for police inaction or deficient investigation and the narrow circumstances permitting High Court intervention by writ.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first identified the choice between a writ directing registration of an offence and recourse to the concerned Magistrate. Divine Retreat Centre recognised intervention under Article 226 against a mala fide exercise of investigative power. That power is to be exercised in the rarest cases where a clear abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII are established. Even then, the court may insist on observance of the statutory process but cannot prescribe investigative steps. Where the police take no action on information, the complainant can follow the complaint and cognizance procedure before the Magistrate. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe explained the additional remedies under Sections 154(3) and 156(3) and the Magistrate's power, if prima facie satisfied, to require and monitor a proper investigation. Shweta Bhadauria confirmed that the duty to register an FIR under Lalita Kumari is distinct from an entitlement to immediate mandamus, while preserving the recognized exceptions permitting writ intervention. On the petition as presented, the Court found that a criminal complaint before the competent court provided an efficacious alternative remedy and therefore refused the requested mandamus. The refusal was procedural; it neither endorsed the alleged forgery nor exonerated the private respondents.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition with express liberty to the petitioner to file a criminal complaint before the court of competent jurisdiction. The Court awarded no specified costs or other consequential relief.

Ramdayal Singrore v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 20284/2020, 04/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (720) Prev Next

Headnote :- Dying declaration — police recording and medical fitness - The Court accepted Ex. P-15, which ASI Santosh Sharma recorded when an Executive Magistrate was unavailable. Dr. O.P. Sharma had examined Kalyan Singh, certified his ability to speak and remained present during recording. The serious abdominal wound and evidence that Kalyan's condition fluctuated did not displace the evidence of his fitness when the statement was recorded. The declaration identified Rameshwardayal as the gunman and Ramdayal as an armed participant. It was considered with independent evidence; the decision does not establish that every statement recorded by the police is automatically valid.

Related eyewitnesses — truthfulness despite relationship and enmity - Applying Karulal v. State of M.P., the Court held that relationship alone did not discredit the testimony of Rampal and Sughar Singh. It assessed their account of the material events against the prompt report, police records, the dying declaration and medical evidence. The absence of an independent eyewitness was not fatal on that record.

Contradictions — core of otherwise credible testimony - The Court applied Mallikarjun v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, and its quotations from Bakhshish Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 12 SCC 187, and Sunil Kumar Sambhudaya Gupta v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 13 SCC 657. These passages distinguish trivial omissions and inconsistent details on peripheral matters from contradictions that materially impair the prosecution case. The cited Raj Kumar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2013) 5 SCC 722, requires the witness's entire account and the specific deficiencies in it to be assessed together. The eyewitnesses' differences about consciousness and the sequence of peripheral events did not undermine their account of the fatal shot. The convictions were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramdayal Yadav and Rameshwardayal Yadav appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 6 August 2010 passed by the Sessions Judge, Shivpuri, in S.T. No. 31/2010. Ramdayal had been convicted under Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹5,000. Rameshwardayal had been convicted under Section 302 IPC and received the same life sentence and fine. He had also been convicted under Sections 25(1-B)(a) and 27(1) of the Arms Act and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹500 for each Arms Act offence, with default stipulations. Megh Singh, the third named participant, was dealt with before the Juvenile Court; this appeal concerned the two adult appellants.

According to the prosecution, on 24 August 2009 Rampal Singh (PW-1), Sughar Singh (PW-2) and Kalyan Singh were returning from agricultural work and had reached a place near Marghat in village Atarvai. Rameshwardayal carried a gun, Ramdayal a lathi and Megh Singh a gadasi; they confronted Kalyan, and Rameshwardayal fired at his abdomen. The witnesses described prior hostility involving land and financial dealings. Rampal telephoned police, and the responding officer recorded a Dehati Nalishi. Kalyan was taken to District Hospital, Shivpuri, then referred to Gwalior, where he died during treatment. The officer recorded Kalyan's statement in hospital as Ex. P-15 after he could not secure the attendance of an Executive Magistrate. Dr. O.P. Sharma certified Kalyan's fitness to speak and witnessed the recording. The deceased attributed the shot to Rameshwardayal and identified Ramdayal and Megh Singh as present with weapons. The medical witnesses described abdominal firearm wounds through which the bullet had passed, intestinal damage and complications contributing to death.

The appellants challenged the presence and credibility of PW-1 and PW-2, pointing to family relationship, previous enmity, darkness, non-examination of independent witnesses, inconsistencies and the injured man's fluctuating consciousness. They also contested the declaration. The State supported the trial court's assessment of the evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Karulal v. State of M.P. was expressly applied in paragraph 37 to the challenge based on the witnesses' relationship and absence of independent eyewitnesses. The High Court identified the Supreme Court principle that the testimony of a truthful related witness can form the basis of a conviction. It applied that principle only after examining the account of the material events given by PW-1 and PW-2 and the corroborating circumstances.

Mallikarjun and others v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, was quoted and applied in paragraph 38 to the contradictions alleged by the defence. The reproduced discussion explains that minor discrepancies do not necessarily destroy testimony that is otherwise credible. Within that quotation, Bakhshish Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 12 SCC 187, reproduced Sunil Kumar Sambhudaya Gupta v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 13 SCC 657. The latter distinguishes trivial omissions, embellishments or improvements from deficiencies affecting the core of the prosecution case. It also requires a justifiable reason for an appellate court to reassess a finding on credibility. The Sunil Kumar passage refers to State v. Saravanan, (2008) 17 SCC 587. The further quotation from Raj Kumar Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2013) 5 SCC 722, requires the testimony to be read in its entirety to see whether it has a ring of truth. The identified infirmities must be assessed in the context of the whole account to determine whether they undermine its credibility. These quotations appear within the Mallikarjun passage. The present Court applied their distinction between minor and material discrepancies and found the discrepancies in this case minor.

3. Statutes considered : The appeal was brought under Section 374 CrPC. Section 302 IPC and Section 34 IPC governed the distinct murder and common-intention convictions: Rameshwardayal fired the fatal shot, while Ramdayal was found to have joined the armed confrontation in which Kalyan was surrounded. Section 174 CrPC appears in the death inquiry; Sections 307/34 IPC and 25/27 Arms Act appear in the original Dehati Nalishi/FIR.

4. Issues : The Court addressed whether PW-1 and PW-2 were reliable despite relationship, alleged enmity, absence of independent witnesses, differences about the sequence and the injured man's consciousness; whether the police-recorded hospital statement was supported by proof of Kalyan's fitness and the circumstances of recording; whether medical and contemporaneous records corroborated a homicidal gunshot; and whether the evidence justified the different Section 302/34 and Section 302 findings against Ramdayal and Rameshwardayal.

5. Ratio / Findings : PW-1 described the confrontation and the shot. His prompt report at the scene and the police station Rojnamcha supported the contemporaneous identification of the assailants. PW-2 substantially supported that account, although his cross-examination showed that he turned after hearing the shot and saw the appellants fleeing. The Court found their evidence consistent on the material events. The difference about whether Kalyan initially became unconscious was insignificant to the occurrence. The previous dispute over land and financial dealings could warrant scrutiny of their evidence, but did not conclusively establish false implication. Applying Karulal, the Court relied on the testimony of the related witnesses after finding it truthful. On this record, the absence of an independent eyewitness did not require rejection of the two relatives' evidence.

ASI Santosh Sharma said that he recorded Ex. P-15 in question-and-answer form after unsuccessfully trying to secure the attendance of an Executive Magistrate. Dr. O.P. Sharma said that he examined Kalyan, found him conscious and fit to give a statement, certified that fitness on the exhibit and remained present. Another doctor, describing his separate examination, said that Kalyan was seriously injured and semiconscious. The Court accepted the evidence of fitness when the declaration was recorded and found no material discrepancy in the officer's account. It used the declaration to corroborate the gunman's identity and the other participants' presence and roles. It did not state that the absence of a Magistrate is automatically immaterial in every case.

The treating and postmortem doctors described abdominal firearm entry and exit wounds and intestinal complications. The Court found that Kalyan's death was homicidal. On the eyewitness accounts, declaration and medical record considered together, it concluded that Rameshwardayal fired the fatal shot, while Ramdayal and the juvenile Megh Singh jointly confronted and surrounded Kalyan while armed. Applying the distinction in Mallikarjun and its quoted authorities between minor and material discrepancies, the Court found that the remaining contradictions concerned peripheral details. It affirmed the trial court's convictions and sentences, including the Arms Act counts, without drawing an independent ballistic inference from the untested ammunition.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the trial court's convictions and sentences. Rameshwardayal (appellant 2), already in jail, was directed to serve the remaining sentence. Ramdayal (appellant 1), who was on bail, was ordered to surrender before the trial court by 18 April 2022; failing that, the trial court could issue an arrest warrant.

Ramdayal Yadav and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 635/2010, 11/03/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (721) Prev Next

Headnote :- Quashing — civil property dispute and criminal assault - The pendency of a suit challenging a will and claiming a share in ancestral property did not make the alleged assault a purely civil matter. The FIR alleged that family members beat, bit and threatened the claimant. A claim to property is civil, but a separate assault allegedly committed because of that claim can attract criminal law. The will relied on had not come into effect during the testator's lifetime. The High Court did not decide title or guilt. Taking the allegations at face value, it refused to quash the FIR under Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC.

Inherent powers — FIR-stage restraint - The Court applied Neeharika Infrastructure (P) Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, on the police's duty to investigate allegations of cognizable offences and the exceptional nature of quashing. At the investigation stage, the Court cannot test the genuineness of the FIR's allegations or conduct a mini-trial. The R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal categories remain available where their conditions are met. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was applied to distinguish the absence of an offence on the face of the allegations, or the absence of legal evidence, from contested evidence requiring ordinary adjudication. The applicants' account of the property dispute and their prior police call did not justify quashing the FIR alleging criminal conduct at this preliminary stage.

Informant motive — cognizable allegations - The Court applied Renu Kumari and its discussion of State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335. Once the allegations disclose a cognizable offence on their face, an informant's alleged desire for revenge or to exert pressure in civil litigation is secondary. Merely asserting a property feud or apprehending a future false FIR does not establish the exceptional category of a manifestly mala fide proceeding. Proof and individual liability remain open. The Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramdev Sharma and the other applicants sought quashing of Crime No. 960/2023, Police Station Maharajpura, Gwalior, and consequential proceedings, invoking Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS in M.Cr.C. No. 1791/2024. The FIR cited Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC. The complainant, respondent 2, alleged that on 14 November 2023 her husband, father-in-law Munshilal Sharma and brother-in-law Ramdev were discussing ancestral property. She said that obscene abuse followed and that Ramdev, his wife Uma and Munshilal beat her with their fists, causing injuries to her left thumb, chest and head. She also alleged that Deepak, Ramdev's son, bit her back and that she was threatened with death if partition was pursued. Her husband and nearby persons were said to have witnessed or intervened. These are FIR allegations, not findings that the applicants committed the acts. The applicants said the FIR was retaliatory because Munshilal had executed a will to transfer land in favour of applicant 2. They referred to their Dial 100 call on the same day, in which they expressed apprehension of a false report, and to a pending suit for declaration and injunction filed by the complainant's husband challenging the will and claiming a quarter share. They characterised the dispute as civil and alleged that the FIR was intended to exert pressure. The Court heard applicants' counsel, set out the legal principles governing quashing, and assessed whether those submissions justified quashing the FIR when its allegations were taken at face value.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure (P) Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401 (three-Judge Bench), was quoted at length and applied as the governing framework at the FIR stage. Its principles recognise the police's statutory duty to investigate cognizable offences. They prohibit routine judicial obstruction of investigation or an inquiry into the reliability of contested FIR allegations, and make quashing exceptional. They also preserve the power to intervene if the FIR discloses no offence and the established parameters under R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal are met. An FIR need not contain every detail. Where the facts are incomplete, the police must ordinarily be allowed to develop them through investigation. The present Court applied that test to the allegations of beating and threats without deciding their truth. The references to Khwaja Nazir Ahmad and earlier authorities appear within Neeharika's synthesis; they were not independently applied to the facts in this order.

After quoting Neeharika, the Court cited XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. 709/2021; Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri

Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682. The Court stated their combined point: proceedings can be quashed on that basis only if the uncontroverted allegations do not make out an offence.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was extensively quoted and applied to the plea that the informant acted with mala fides. It explains that Section 482 preserves the High Court's existing inherent powers; it creates no new power. Those powers may be used to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process and secure justice. Although wide, the power must be exercised sparingly. At the quashing stage, the Court does not act as an appellate court or determine the reliability of evidence. The passage reproduces R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, on the illustrative categories of a legal bar, allegations that disclose no offence on their face, and absence of legal evidence. It distinguishes the last category from a dispute over the weight of evidence. It also reproduces the seven illustrative categories in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, including a manifestly mala fide proceeding brought for private vengeance. The concluding reasoning states that, where the FIR reveals a cognizable offence, the informant's alleged motive is secondary. The material collected in investigation and the evidence proved at trial determine the case. The present Court applied that principle to the contention that the FIR was intended to exert pressure in the property dispute. The further cases cited within the Renu Kumari passage, including Janata Dal, Dhanalakshmi and State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, support that discussion; they were not separately applied on distinct facts in this application.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC and Section 528 BNSS were invoked to seek quashing in the exercise of inherent powers. The Court explained the Section 482 standard by referring to the Supreme Court decisions. The CrPC provisions governing police investigation of cognizable offences, including the distinction between Section 156(1) and Section 155(2) in the Bhajan Lal quotation, were relevant to that standard. The civil suit's questions of declaration, injunction, share and the will provided the context; the Court did not interpret a succession or property statute. It observed that a will takes effect on the testator's death and that Munshilal was alive when the suit was filed. That observation answered the suggestion that the will itself defeated the husband's claim at this stage; it did not amount to a decree of title.

The registered offences were Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC, concerning alleged obscene abuse, hurt, criminal intimidation and common intention. These were the criminal allegations to be investigated. The existence of the property dispute did not itself determine their truth.

4. Issues : Whether the applicants' civil litigation about ancestral property and a will made the FIR a misuse of criminal process despite separately pleaded physical violence and threats; whether the prior Dial 100 call and allegation of retaliatory motive established a ground for quashing; and whether the FIR, accepted on its face without a merits inquiry, disclosed enough of a cognizable offence to allow investigation.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered the FIR allegations as they stood. A pending suit claiming a share and challenging a will could coexist with criminal proceedings for an assault allegedly committed because a claimant demanded a share. Failure to give a share may be a civil matter, but beating or threatening a person over that demand has a separate criminal character. The Court noted that the will relied on had not become operative during Munshilal's lifetime and that the applicants had not denied the husband's asserted share. The alleged reason for the confrontation could therefore not be treated as imaginary. These observations were made at the preliminary stage; the Court did not find the allegations proved.

Under Neeharika, the Court could not weigh the applicants' competing account or halt investigation when the FIR disclosed a cognizable accusation. The preceding police call showed that the applicants anticipated an FIR; it did not establish that the subsequent report was fabricated. Under Renu Kumari's application of R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal, the existence of a civil property dispute and an alleged motive to exert pressure could not, by themselves, negate the reported assault. A manifestly malicious prosecution remains a possible exceptional ground for quashing, but its conditions must be established rather than assumed from private animosity. The applicants had not shown that the allegations disclosed no offence on their face or established another ground for exceptional interference. The Court therefore declined to quash. The reliability of the evidence, the complainant's motive and proof against each accused remained for investigation and ordinary adjudication.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS application. Crime No. 960/2023 and consequential criminal proceedings were not quashed.

Ramdev Sharma and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 1791/2024, 11/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (723) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal revision — surrender after conviction — exceptional exemption - Rule 48 of Chapter X of the M.P. High Court Rules ordinarily requires a convicted applicant to surrender before a revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC can be entertained. Applying Vivek Rai v. High Court of Jharkhand, (2015) 12 SCC 86, the Court held that the rule preserves its inherent power to grant exemption from surrender, on an application, in exceptional circumstances. Deepak Sahu v. State of M.P., 2012 (3) MPLJ 534, was also considered on whether a revision is maintainable without surrender. The applicant's earlier COVID illness, his wife's health problems and the asserted repayment arrangement did not justify exemption. The exemption and stay applications were dismissed. The revision concerning the Section 138 NI Act conviction was dismissed as not maintainable, with liberty to file a fresh revision after surrender. The conviction's merits were not decided.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rameshchandra Sharma was convicted under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act by the JMFC, Gwalior, on 13 March 2020 in Criminal Case No. 17629/2014. The 8th Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, dismissed his criminal appeal on 4 October 2021. The applicant did not surrender after dismissal of the appeal. He nevertheless filed Criminal Revision No. 3547/2021 under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC without a surrender certificate. By I.A. No. 1309/2022, he also sought exemption from personal appearance or surrender. By I.A. No. 1310/2022, he sought a stay of further proceedings in an MJC in which an arrest warrant had been issued.

Counsel stated that the applicant, aged about sixty, had contracted COVID in April 2021. His wife suffered from diabetes and thyroid ailments and needed care. Counsel submitted that imprisonment during the pandemic would harm the applicant's health. He also referred to a proposed compromise and repayment of the cheque amount after the applicant recovered, and asserted that the respondent had agreed to give him time. These submissions were considered only in deciding whether to grant an exceptional exemption from surrender. The Court did not decide the merits of the cheque-dishonour conviction or compound the case.

2. Precedents — Considered : Paragraph 11 of Vivek Rai v. High Court of Jharkhand through Registrar General, (2015) 12 SCC 86, was quoted and applied. The Supreme Court held that a rule preventing a criminal revision from being listed for admission before surrender remains subject to the High Court's inherent power to grant exemption in exceptional circumstances. If a case is made out on an application, and the Court grants exemption and directs listing, the rule cannot prevent that exercise of jurisdiction. The present Court distinguished the ordinary surrender requirement from an exceptional exemption granted by the Court. It then assessed whether the applicant's personal circumstances justified exemption. Vivek Rai was not treated as conferring a general right to pursue revision while remaining at liberty.

Deepak Sahu and others v. State of M.P., 2012 (3) MPLJ 534, a coordinate Bench decision, was cited on whether a revision is maintainable without surrender. Vivek Rai expressly explained the High Court's inherent power to grant exemption in exceptional circumstances, which qualifies the ordinary requirement.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC governed the revisional proceeding. Rule 48 of Chapter X of the M.P. High Court Rules governed the surrender requirement for a convicted applicant. The Court construed that procedural rule alongside its inherent power to grant an exceptional exemption, as explained in Vivek Rai. Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act identified the underlying conviction, but its ingredients, presumptions and merits were not decided. The applicant's claimed COVID illness and his wife's health problems concerned an application for exemption, not a statutory relaxation of the surrender rule.

4. Issues : Whether a person whose Section 138 conviction was affirmed in appeal could maintain a criminal revision without first surrendering under Rule 48; whether the High Court could grant exemption from surrender in exceptional circumstances despite that rule; and whether this applicant's earlier COVID illness, spouse's medical needs and prospective repayment presented such an exceptional situation. The connected stay application depended on the exemption request. No challenge to the substantive conviction was adjudicated.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted that Rule 48 ordinarily requires a convicted person to surrender before the revision can be entertained. It rejected an absolute reading that would remove its inherent power to grant exemption. Under Vivek Rai, the Court may grant a reasoned exemption in an exceptional situation on a suitable application. It therefore examined the applicant's grounds, rather than treating the absence of a surrender certificate as a bar admitting no exception. The applicant's COVID illness in April 2021, his wife's diabetes and thyroid treatment, the need to care for her and the respondent's asserted willingness to wait for payment did not establish the required exceptional circumstances. On this record, the medical claims and possible settlement did not warrant exemption from surrender after dismissal of the appeal. Since the applicant had neither surrendered nor obtained exemption, the revision was not maintainable under Rule 48. That procedural conclusion did not affirm the NI Act conviction on its merits or decide any future revision properly filed after surrender.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed I.A. No. 1309/2022 seeking exemption from surrender. Consequently I.A. No. 1310/2022 seeking a stay of the MJC proceedings was also dismissed. The criminal revision was dismissed as not maintainable under Rule 48 because the applicant had neither surrendered nor made out an exceptional ground for exemption. He was expressly granted liberty to file a fresh criminal revision after surrendering before the trial court. The judgment records no adjudication on the Section 138 conviction's merits.

Rameshchandra Sharma v. Ramkhiladi Sharma, Cr.R. no. 3547/2021, 20/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (724) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 319 CrPC — additional accused — dowry-related death and distant relatives - Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, cautions that distant relations cannot be summoned on mere naming or omnibus allegations. Specific material supporting their role is required. The Court applied that caution to the evidence in Sessions Trial No. 277/2018. The witnesses' testimony in court, read with their statements during investigation, specifically attributed to the applicants a demand for ₹5 lakh at vidai and subsequent physical and mental harassment. The police's earlier decision not to file a charge-sheet against them because they lived in a different locality did not negate that material. The Section 319 order was upheld and the revision dismissed. The ruling is confined to the propriety of summoning on this record. It makes no final finding of guilt or final determination of the requirements of Section 304-B IPC and Section 113-B of the Evidence Act discussed in the quoted precedent.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Pooja married Om Sharma on 7 December 2015. According to the prosecution narrative, her family gave ₹10 lakh in cash, ornaments said to be worth ₹5 lakh, and household goods at the wedding. Her father, respondent No. 2, alleged that the applicants, relatives of the matrimonial family, joined in a further demand for ₹5 lakh at the vidai ceremony and continued to participate in physical and mental harassment concerning that demand. The account included an alleged altercation involving visiting nephews shortly after the marriage, complaints reported by Pooja to her parental family, the continuing demand after childbirth, and an incident connected with the thirteenth-day ceremony for her paternal grandfather. These were allegations recorded in the case narrative and witness statements, not findings of guilt. Pooja died on 14 September 2017; the narrative described her death as suicide by hanging. A merg inquiry was initiated under Section 174 CrPC.

The police did not file a charge-sheet against the present applicants, principally because they lived separately from the other in-laws. After the father and other witnesses gave evidence in Sessions Trial No. 277/2018, the father applied under Section 319 CrPC to add the applicants as accused. The trial court initially allowed a similar application on 30 September 2019. In Criminal Revision No. 4988/2019 the High Court set that order aside on 16 June 2021 and remitted the application for a fresh decision in the light of Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab. On remand the Sixth Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, again added the applicants as accused by order dated 12 July 2021. They brought this revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC against that order.

The applicants argued that, as distant relatives living separately, they had been implicated through generalised accusations and that the trial court had not applied the standard for adding an accused. The State and complainant answered that both investigation statements and trial testimony assigned them specific roles and that they did not live so far apart as to exclude participation. The complainant later mentioned that a Section 302 IPC charge had also been framed. The High Court recorded that submission without stating a separate categorical rule on that basis.

In opposing the argument based on separate residence, the complainant stated that the applicants lived at Tyagi Nagar, Morar, at a distance of "15–16" from Bilhati. That distance was stated as a submission relevant to alleged participation, rather than as proof of guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hardeep Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 3 SCC 92, was the authority identified in the earlier remand order directing the trial court to decide the Section 319 application afresh. The applicants' counsel submitted that the evidence must exceed what is needed for framing a charge while remaining below the level of proof required for conviction. The High Court reviewed the material and concluded that the particularised allegations justified leaving the trial court's order undisturbed.

Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, was quoted at length and supplied the caution governing the High Court's assessment. It recognised the possibility that a complainant may exaggerate by naming the whole family in a dowry death case. Summoning a distant relation requires tangible material for a specific role; mere naming cannot substitute for it. It also called for a pragmatic assessment of an unnatural death and alleged dowry harassment. At the same time, it stressed that omnibus accusations against siblings and other relatives do not stand on the same footing as allegations against the husband and parents. In the present revision the High Court examined whether the applicants were assigned a specific role. It concluded that the record went beyond a general accusation against the family and contained specific allegations.

The Monju Roy extract drew on Kans Raj v. State of Punjab for the warning that indiscriminate implication of in-laws' relations can weaken the prosecution even against the real offenders. It also drew on Raja Lal Singh v. State of Jharkhand for the possibility that relatives' names are introduced to widen the net. The latter quotation mentions Kamesh Panjiyar v. State of Bihar as a supporting reference, without a developed separate analysis in this order. The extract also used Amar Singh v. State of Rajasthan to explain that Section 304-B IPC concerns cruelty or harassment in connection with a dowry demand. The presumption of dowry death under Section 113-B of the Evidence Act arises only when the prosecution first establishes the specified conduct by the person concerned soon before the woman's death. These observations on the offence and the presumption explain the need to identify each person's role.

3. Statutes considered : Section 319 CrPC was the operative power to proceed against persons not previously made accused on the basis of material arising during the trial. The Court assessed the application to add the applicants as accused in the light of the specific roles described by the witnesses and the Supreme Court caution against unsupported implication of the whole family. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC governed the revision in which the High Court reviewed the trial court's renewed order. Section 174 CrPC concerned the initial merg inquiry, and Section 161 CrPC concerned the investigation statements cited by the parties. The Court also expressly considered the witnesses' evidence in court. It did not treat the police's non-filing of a charge-sheet as a legal bar to the trial court's later exercise of Section 319.

The quoted Monju Roy passage discussed Sections 498-A and 304-B IPC and Section 113-B of the Evidence Act. It emphasised the need to connect harassment with a dowry demand and the presumption conditional on the specified conduct soon before death.

4. Issues : The issue decided was whether, after the earlier remand, the trial court's Section 319 order adding the applicants in the pending sessions trial called for interference in revision. Were the allegations against relatives living separately only vague and omnibus, or did the material, including trial testimony, assign them sufficiently specific roles to support the order? The applicants invoked Hardeep Singh's asserted evidentiary threshold and the danger of roping in distant relations. The respondents relied on particularised testimony about the dowry demand and harassment.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court read Monju Roy as requiring care before adding distant relatives on a complainant's broad assertion. The quoted principle does not exempt a relative merely because the relationship is distant. The crucial distinction is whether tangible material supports a concrete role rather than a general accusation against everyone in the matrimonial family. The Court examined the case diary and the evidence recorded in court. It noted that the police omitted the applicants from the charge-sheet only because they lived apart. The in-laws were said to live in Bilhati and the applicants in Tyagi Nagar, Morar.

The witnesses' statements during investigation and their evidence in court attributed to the applicants a demand for ₹5 lakh at vidai, followed by physical and mental harassment of Pooja concerning that demand. On this record the Court regarded the allegations as specific, neither vague nor omnibus. It rejected the suggestion that the applicants had merely been added through exaggerated inclusion of distant relatives. It therefore found no ground to disturb the renewed trial court order. This was a decision on the addition of accused under Section 319 in a pending trial. It did not establish that the allegations were proved for conviction or finally decide the requirements of Section 304-B IPC and Section 113-B of the Evidence Act recited in Monju Roy. Nor did it expressly adopt the complainant's proposed categorical consequence of the Section 302 charge.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision. The order dated 12 July 2021 in Sessions Trial No. 277/2018, by which the applicants were arrayed as additional accused under Section 319 CrPC, remained undisturbed.

Rameshwar Dayal Sharma and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors., Cr.R. no. 1616/2021, 25/08/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (726) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — disputed alibi — no mini-trial - Ramgovind Kushwaha, named in the FIR, claimed that his hospitalisation made it impossible for him to be present at the scene of the incident. The Court held that this defence required cogent proof at trial and could not be decided in proceedings for quashing under Section 482. It applied its earlier Prashant Kumar Nimgani order and the restriction on considering defence material at the charge stage quoted in Shoraj Singh Ahlawat v. State of U.P., AIR 2013 SC 52, especially Debendra Nath Padhi's alibi illustration. The claim of hospital admission was neither established nor rejected on its merits; the Court declined to determine that defence and dismissed the petition, no other ground having been advanced.

Framing of charge — prima facie material and strong suspicion - Shoraj Singh Ahlawat, drawing on Onkar Nath Mishra, Som Nath Thapa, Mohanlal Soni and Rumi Dhar, explains that Sections 239–240 CrPC require the court to examine the prosecution record to see whether it discloses the ingredients of the alleged offence and a ground for presuming its commission, rather than proof sufficient for conviction. Prafulla Kumar Samal permits limited sifting and discharge where two views are equally possible and the record gives rise only to suspicion that is not grave; Debendra Nath Padhi excludes a mini-trial of the accused's alibi defence at that stage. The present Court invoked those principles in declining, on procedural grounds, to determine the applicant's claim that he was absent, without itself adjudicating a charge application.

Inherent jurisdiction — exceptional quashing and face-value test - Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Koveuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2011) 12 SCC 437, was reproduced on the purposes of Section 482, the recognised grounds for preventing abuse of process and the need to exercise the power sparingly. Its discussion includes R.P. Kapur and the limited, context-specific reach of Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia as explained in P.P. Sharma. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, cautions against premature interference with investigation where an offence is disclosed. Vinod Raghuvanshi v. Ajay Arora, (2013) 10 SCC 581, rejects an assessment of probability and credibility at the threshold. Nagawwa v. Veeranna Shivalingappa Konjalgi, AIR 1976 SC 1947, illustrates the error of weighing defence material at the stage of issuing process. Applying that restraint, the High Court declined to quash solely on a disputed alibi.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Crime No. 23/2017 concerned allegations under Sections 147, 148, 149, 353, 186 and 307 IPC and Sections 25 and 27 of the Arms Act. Ramgovind Kushwaha was named in the FIR. He brought MCRC No. 30630/2018 under Section 482 CrPC to quash the criminal proceedings, asserting through counsel that he had been admitted to a hospital and therefore could not have been at the scene of the alleged incident. After hearing that ground, the Court recorded that counsel advanced no other argument.

The Court treated the request to exonerate the applicant at that stage as a disputed alibi defence and assembled extensive Supreme Court material governing charge, discharge, process and inherent quashing. Those authorities concerned different procedural stages. The case before the High Court was a Section 482 petition, not a trial of the alibi or a direct appeal from an order framing charges. The quoted charge-stage law explained why disputed defence evidence cannot simply be adjudicated at the threshold. The final order left the prosecution to proceed and did not decide whether Ramgovind was present or committed any listed offence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Shoraj Singh Ahlawat and others v. State of U.P. and another, AIR 2013 SC 52, was quoted in detail. The extract distinguished discharge under Section 239 CrPC, where the charge is groundless, from framing a charge under Section 240, where the prosecution material provides a ground for presuming commission of an offence. It explained that the charge court asks whether facts accepted at face value disclose ingredients, without assessing probative value by the standard required for conviction. The present Court used the extract particularly to reject a defence alibi inquiry in quashing jurisdiction; it did not purport to decide an application under Sections 239 or 240.

Within Shoraj Singh Ahlawat, Onkar Nath Mishra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2008) 2 SCC 561, explained the approach of examining the ingredients at face value and considering whether there was strong suspicion. It also distinguished the positions of the husband and parents-in-law in that case. State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa, 1996 Cri LJ 2448, stated that a probable consequence or possibility of commission justifies framing a charge, while conviction requires a different conclusion. State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni, 2000 Cri LJ 3504, reaffirmed the test of prima facie grounds rather than an assessment of whether the evidence is sufficient for conviction. Smt. Rumi Dhar v. State of West Bengal & Anr., (2009) 6 SCC 364, was reproduced for the sufficiency of strong suspicion on the material at discharge stage.

State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, as reproduced in Shoraj Singh Ahlawat, held that the accused cannot produce defence material at the stage of framing charges or taking cognizance, or turn that stage into a roving inquiry or mini-trial. Its express illustration of an alibi places the supporting evidence at the trial stage. The opportunity to address the court under Section 227 remains confined to the prosecution record and the documents submitted with it. Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, (1979) 3 SCC 4, recognised limited judicial sifting under Section 227. Grave suspicion can support a charge, whereas discharge is permitted where two views are equally possible and the suspicion is not grave. The judge neither acts mechanically nor conducts a trial. With due regard to the different procedural stages, the High Court relied on this group of authorities in declining to determine Ramgovind's claimed hospital alibi under Section 482. It did not apply the underlying charge thresholds to the detailed facts of this FIR.

Prashant Kumar Nimgani v. State of M.P. and another, MCRC No. 7480/2016, order dated 20 September 2018, was a coordinate High Court order quoted and applied. It treated alibi as a defence requiring cogent proof at trial. The facts of that rape case concerning travel and presence were illustrative of factual questions that could not be resolved on a Section 482 application; they were not facts about Ramgovind or the present offences.

Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Koveuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2011) 12 SCC 437, was quoted at length on Section 482. The extract identified the inherent power's three statutory purposes: giving effect to a Code order, preventing abuse of process and securing justice. It recognised the power's broad scope, while requiring caution and exceptional circumstances for its exercise. It cautioned against findings on disputed facts, use inconsistent with the Code where a specific remedy is available, and a meticulous assessment before trial of the prospects of conviction. R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, was quoted within it for recognised grounds involving a legal bar, allegations that disclose no offence when taken at face value, manifest failure of legal evidence and abuse of process. L. Muniswamy, (1977) 2 SCC 699, was quoted for stopping proceedings that become instruments of harassment. These are possibilities for relief; they do not automatically justify determining the merits of this applicant's hospitalisation defence.

The Padal extract also cited Kavita v. State and B.S. Joshi v. State of Haryana when discussing the limits arising from an available statutory remedy and inconsistency with the Code. It cited Dhanalakshmi

v. R. Prasanna Kumar, Ganesh Narayan Hegde v. S. Bangarappa and Zandu Pharmaceutical Works v. Mohd. Sharaful Haque for doing real justice without a meticulous inquiry into guilt. Bhajan Lal, Janata Dal, Rupan Deol Bajaj and Indian Oil Corpn. were cited as examples of attempts to identify grounds that are not exhaustive. State of Orissa v. Saroj Kumar Sahoo rejected a forecast based on probabilities and treated alleged malice on the informant's part as secondary. Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia v. Sambhajirao Chandrojirao Angre, (1988) 1 SCC 692, addressed special features and the use of prosecution for an oblique purpose. The quoted explanation in State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222, expressly refused to treat Madhavrao as a universal rule for testing the ultimate chances of conviction in every preliminary quashing case. It placed the decision's setting of civil and family disputes and compromise in context. The present Court reproduced these qualifications and did not find the exceptional grounds established by the sole assertion of alibi.

State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, was quoted for the broad but non-arbitrary power under Section 482 and restraint against premature interference where an offence is disclosed, in the absence of gross abuse of investigative power. The nested Swapan Kumar Guha passage explained that proper investigation gathers proof and ordinarily should continue when an offence is disclosed; Jeffrey J. Diermeier reiterated the three Section 482 purposes and careful, sparing exercise.

Vinod Raghuvanshi v. Ajay Arora, (2013) 10 SCC 581, was quoted for the initial-stage test: uncontroverted allegations are read prima facie. At that stage, the court does not examine whether the allegations are likely to be proved or assess their probability, reliability or genuineness in a quashing proceeding. Nagawwa v. Veeranna Shivalingappa Konjalgi, AIR 1976 SC 1947, was quoted for setting aside a High Court revision that had improperly weighed contradictions and defence documents when a Magistrate's process order was challenged at the Section 202 stage. The latter arose in a different procedural setting, and it was relevant here for the shared caution against premature fact-finding. All these quotations reinforced the Court's conclusion that the alibi must await trial; they do not amount to a factual determination against the defence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the application. It preserves inherent powers to give effect to Code orders, prevent abuse of the court's process and secure justice. The Court exercised its discretion within the threshold limits explained by the quoted authorities and declined to resolve contested defence facts. Sections 239 and 240 CrPC, and Section 227, were discussed through Shoraj Singh Ahlawat to distinguish discharge where a charge is groundless, framing a charge on prima facie material, and the restriction on presenting defence documents at that stage. Section 202 arose in Nagawwa's discussion of the stage of issuing process; it was not the provision under which Ramgovind's petition was brought.

Sections 147, 148, 149, 353, 186 and 307 IPC and Sections 25 and 27 of the Arms Act identify the alleged offences in Crime No. 23/2017.

4. Issues : The issues were whether an applicant named in a criminal FIR could obtain quashing of the resulting proceedings under Section 482 merely by asserting that hospital admission made his presence at the scene impossible; whether assessing that assertion would require prohibited appraisal of a contested defence at the threshold; and which limits on the charge stage and inherent jurisdiction, drawn from the quoted Supreme Court cases, applied to that question. No separate ground for quashing was argued. The Court did not decide the factual alibi, the credibility of a hospital record, the ingredients of each alleged offence or the eventual prospects of conviction.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first stated that it could not consider Ramgovind's defence in exercising Section 482. Its lengthy quotation from Shoraj Singh Ahlawat explained the procedural distinction: strong suspicion supported by prosecution material may suffice for a charge, but a court at that stage cannot hold an alibi mini-trial on documents tendered by the accused. Prafulla Kumar Samal's permission for limited prima facie sifting does not permit a full assessment of the evidence as at trial. The High Court's earlier Prashant Kumar Nimgani order directly described alibi as a matter requiring cogent proof at trial. Applying these principles to the only submission made, the Court treated the claims of hospitalisation and absence as disputed matters of defence rather than established facts warranting quashing.

The Padal, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, Vinod Raghuvanshi and Nagawwa extracts explained why inherent power, though broad and available to stop abuse, must be exercised carefully. It does not generally extend to deciding contested evidence, forecasting ultimate conviction or prematurely stopping a prosecution that discloses an offence. The quoted R.P. Kapur categories and the contextual discussion of Madhavrao preserve exceptional quashing where the conditions for applying them are met. This order did not decide that Section 482 is unavailable in every case involving an alibi, nor that an accused can never rely on indisputable material in any legal setting. It concluded only that this applicant's asserted hospital admission called for evidentiary proof at trial. The merits of the alleged IPC and Arms Act offences were left open.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC. Criminal proceedings arising from Crime No. 23/2017 were not quashed. The applicant remained able to lead evidence of his asserted alibi before the trial court; the order made no affirmative finding that he was present or guilty and prescribed no special condition or remand direction.

Ramgovind Kushwaha v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 30630/2018, 28/11/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (727) Prev Next

Headnote :- Successive regular bail — hostile prosecutrix — earlier interference concern - Ramhet's third application under Section 439 CrPC followed dismissal of the first application and dismissal of the second as withdrawn. The Court stated that the prosecutrix's hostile testimony had already been considered. It recalled its earlier finding of attempted witness influence through the applicant's procurement of her vakalatnama and counsel's possession of it to arrange representation and a favourable affidavit. In the present order, the Court noted that her vakalatnama had been obtained before her examination. That witness-influence concern remained material. The earlier order had quoted Javed Ansari v. State of U.P. concerning an alleged forged vakalatnama in a different case; its administrative proposals were not adopted as operative directions in the present case. The third bail application was dismissed.

Scientific evidence — hostile testimony not necessarily fatal - Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 523, was applied for the principle that adequate scientific evidence may support a conviction even when the prosecutrix turns hostile. In this case, the FSL report recorded human sperm on the slide and swab, so the prosecutrix's hostility did not itself establish a basis for bail. The Court did not record DNA attribution to Ramhet, finally determine the admissibility of the forensic evidence, or convict him; the assessment was limited to the bail request.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramhet was arrested on 8 July 2021 in Crime No. 341/2021, Police Station Pichhore, Shivpuri, concerning allegations under Sections 376-D, 366 and 506 IPC. His first regular bail application, MCRC No. 39388/2021, was dismissed by order dated 10 August 2021. A second, MCRC No. 46806/2021, was dismissed as withdrawn on 28 September 2021. He brought this third application, MCRC No. 3577/2022, under Section 439 CrPC, on the ground that the prosecutrix had turned hostile. The case diary was available.

The current judgment extensively reproduced the first bail order. In that earlier hearing, counsel had first asserted an engagement between the prosecutrix and co-accused Deepak and a consensual relationship, then changed his account to say that marriage talks were taking place when asked for supporting documents. Counsel also submitted that Ramhet's alleged role was to accompany the co-accused to a hut and stand outside while Deepak allegedly committed rape. When asked for supporting material, counsel disclosed that he held the prosecutrix's vakalatnama and would file an affidavit. The first order treated procurement and possession of her vakalatnama as an effort to arrange her representation and a favourable no-objection affidavit. After the Court expressed that concern, counsel sought withdrawal of the first bail application. These were submissions and procedural findings recorded in the earlier order. In the present order, the Court further noted that the vakalatnama had been obtained before the prosecutrix's examination. It did not determine the underlying sexual offence at trial.

The first order quoted a lengthy Allahabad High Court order in Javed Ansari concerning a different case in which advocates were confronted about a forged vakalatnama purportedly given by an informant. In the present third application the Court again noted the prior vakalatnama concern. It added that the FSL report found human sperm in the slide and swab of the prosecutrix and applied a Supreme Court authority on scientific proof despite hostile testimony.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 523, was the Supreme Court decision applied to the bail assessment. As the present order stated its principle, the prosecutrix's turning hostile does not prevent conviction where scientific evidence supports guilt; the Court noted that the accused in Hemudan was held guilty with the aid of an FSL report. The High Court applied its stated principle at the limited bail stage: because human sperm was reported on the prosecutrix's samples, her hostile testimony could not be treated as automatically defeating the prosecution.

Javed Ansari v. State of U.P., Criminal Misc. Bail Application No. 27194/2021, was an Allahabad High Court order quoted within the first bail decision of 10 August 2021, which was reproduced in the present order. In Javed Ansari one advocate purported to represent an informant under a vakalatnama. As alleged and acknowledged in that order, the accused's lawyer had supplied the vakalatnama and paid the advocate's fee. The court treated it as forged, referred one lawyer's conduct to the U.P. Bar Council, proposed verification measures and issued directions specific to that case. The Gwalior Bench used this as an illustration of the danger of manipulating victim or informant representation. It then criticised the defence counsel's possession of the prosecutrix's vakalatnama in Ramhet's case. The present Court did not find that a document was forged in Ramhet's case, issue a Bar Council referral, require Aadhaar proof or bind other courts to the Allahabad administrative proposal. Its earlier recorded concern about influencing witnesses remained relevant to the bail assessment.

The High Court's own order dated 10 August 2021 and the intervening withdrawal dated 28 September 2021 supplied the successive-bail procedural history. The first order had already considered the witness-influence issue; paragraph 7 of this order states that the later hostility had also been considered in detail. The present refusal was therefore not a fresh, final determination of the prosecutrix's credibility.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the third regular bail application and the Court's assessment before trial of changed circumstances, witness influence and available prosecution material. Sections 376-D, 366 and 506 IPC identify the alleged offences of gang rape, abduction and intimidation in this crime. The Court did not finally interpret their ingredients or decide guilt. The quoted Javed Ansari order involved Section 376(2)(i), Section 506 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the POCSO Act in a different case. The charges under Section 376(2)(i) IPC and the POCSO Act belonged to that case; Section 506 IPC also appears in the allegations against Ramhet. The quoted provisions supplied no special-statute bail restriction in the present application. The FSL report was evidentiary material assessed provisionally at the bail stage, not the subject of a separate statutory ruling on admissibility.

4. Issues : The issues were whether the prosecutrix's hostile testimony justified bail on Ramhet's third Section 439 application, given the earlier concern about procuring her vakalatnama to arrange a favourable affidavit and the present Court's statement that it had been obtained before her examination; and whether the FSL report left a viable prosecution case despite that testimony. The question concerned provisional release and the interests of witnesses and the investigation. It did not concern a final determination of credibility, forensic attribution to this applicant or proof of the alleged IPC offences. The Allahabad order's professional-conduct directions were quoted, but their operative application was not a separate issue for decision.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that hostility had already been considered and did not automatically justify a different bail result. It noted that the prosecutrix's vakalatnama had been obtained before she gave evidence and held by the applicant's counsel to engage a lawyer of the accused's choosing. The first order had found an effort to win over witnesses through the vakalatnama and proposed affidavit. In referring to Javed Ansari, it condemned the practice of an accused arranging counsel for the victim to procure a no-objection affidavit, without adopting that other court's specific misconduct findings or directions in the present proceeding.

The Court then noted the FSL report's detection of human sperm on the prosecutrix's slide and swab. Applying Hemudan as described in the order, it reasoned that scientific evidence can support conviction despite a hostile complainant, so hostility did not itself make bail appropriate. Its phrase that the present case was covered by Hemudan supported its conclusion on bail, not a final finding that the applicant committed rape. Taken with the earlier witness-influence concern, this was sufficient for the Court to refuse bail on this third application.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the third application for regular bail.

Ramhet v. State of MP, M.Cr.C. no. 3577/2022, 11/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (728) Prev Next

Headnote :- Regular bail — prosecutrix representation — witness influence - In a first Section 439 CrPC application concerning Sections 376-D, 366 and 506 IPC, counsel initially asserted that the prosecutrix and a co-accused were engaged. When asked for proof, he said that talks of marriage were taking place. Counsel then said that he held her vakalatnama and would file an affidavit. The Court found that the applicant had obtained the prosecutrix's authority in an attempt to win over witnesses. It held that an accused cannot arrange counsel for a prosecutrix to obtain an affidavit of his choice. The quoted Javed Ansari v. State of U.P., Criminal Misc. Bail Application No. 27194/2021 (Allahabad High Court), concerned a forged vakalatnama purportedly given by an informant in a different case and served as an illustration. Its Bar Council directions and identity-proof proposal were not operative here. The Court refused even the applicant's subsequent request to withdraw the bail application and dismissed it. No final finding on guilt or formal adjudication of forgery in this case was made.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramhet was arrested on 8 July 2021 in Crime No. 341/2021 at Police Station Pichhore, Shivpuri, on allegations under Sections 376-D, 366 and 506 IPC. He filed his first regular bail application, MCRC No. 39388/2021, under Section 439 CrPC. The case diary was available.

For bail, defence counsel submitted that the prosecutrix had been engaged to the co-accused Deepak and suggested that their sexual contact was consensual. He argued that no rape was alleged against Ramhet personally and that Ramhet's stated role was to accompany the co-accused to a hut at Bharatpur Ki Dang and stand outside while Deepak allegedly committed rape. These were counsel's assertions, not factual findings. When asked for a document supporting the claimed engagement, counsel changed his account and said that talks of marriage were taking place. When asked for evidence of those talks, counsel said that he already held the prosecutrix's vakalatnama and would file an affidavit. The Court regarded the defence lawyer's possession of that authority as troubling and indicative of an attempt to control the prosecutrix's representation and obtain a favourable affidavit.

The order then reproduced a long Allahabad High Court ruling in Javed Ansari about manipulation of an informant's vakalatnama in a different sexual-offence bail case. The quotation provided context for the Court's concern, but related to other parties, lawyers and offences. After the Court criticised the arrangement in the present case, Ramhet's counsel sought leave to withdraw the bail application. The Court declined even to accept withdrawal and dismissed it.

2. Precedents — Considered : Javed Ansari v. State of U.P., Criminal Misc. Bail Application No. 27194/2021 (Allahabad High Court), was quoted in detail. In that case, an advocate purported to represent the informant, who was the minor victim's father, and initially offered no objection to the accused's bail. Another advocate disputed that authority. The lawyer purporting to act for the informant said that the accused's lawyer had supplied the vakalatnama, arranged his appearance and paid his fee. The Allahabad Court treated the document as forged in that case, criticised both lawyers, allowed one to seek withdrawal of his appearance, referred the other's conduct to the U.P. Bar Council, proposed verification of identity when vakalatnamas are filed and issued notices and administrative circulation directions. It stressed the potential deprivation of victim/informant rights and the need for reliable authority to act for a client.

The Gwalior Bench found a similar risk in counsel's possession of the prosecutrix's vakalatnama and proposed filing of an affidavit for bail in the present case. It did not say this document had been proved forged, institute a disciplinary reference, impose the Allahabad Court's suggested requirement of proof of identity, or grant the other order's relief here. The proposition it drew was narrower and case-specific: an accused may not arrange the prosecutrix's legal representation so as to produce an affidavit of his own choice, and such an attempt to influence witnesses weighs against bail. Javed Ansari is a High Court decision, not a Supreme Court authority.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC supplied the regular-bail jurisdiction. Sections 376-D, 366 and 506 IPC identified the offences alleged in Ramhet's crime, but their ingredients and the question whether the co-accused's sexual conduct was consensual were not finally decided. The quoted Javed Ansari case concerned Section 376(2)(i), Section 506 IPC and Sections 3/4 POCSO in a different case. Section 376(2)(i) IPC and the POCSO provisions belonged to that case; Section 506 IPC was also alleged against Ramhet. A vakalatnama's function as the client's authority to act was central to the procedural concern. There was no separate determination under a named professional-discipline statute.

4. Issues : The issues were whether Ramhet should be released on his first regular-bail application on counsel's account of an engagement or marriage talks and his submission that the applicant had only a limited role; whether the defence side's possession of the prosecutrix's vakalatnama with a proposed affidavit indicated an effort to influence a witness; and whether the Court should permit withdrawal after that conduct came to light.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court tested counsel's account by asking first for a document supporting the claimed engagement and then for evidence supporting the revised account of marriage talks. Counsel produced no such substantiation in the recorded exchange, but instead disclosed possession of the prosecutrix's vakalatnama and a plan to file an affidavit. The Court found this an attempt by the applicant to win over witnesses from the beginning, with counsel drawn into the arrangement. Its concern was not merely the content of a possible no-objection affidavit, but the accused's ability to arrange legal representation for the victim or prosecution witness and procure an affidavit of his choosing. The quoted Allahabad order illustrated the importance of an authentic vakalatnama based on the client's independent authority; its distinct forgery finding and administrative measures were not adopted as findings or commands against these participants.

The Court rejected the practice as unacceptable for fair criminal process. In light of all the circumstances, including counsel's possession of the prosecutrix's vakalatnama, it found no case even to accept the request to withdraw the application. It dismissed the bail application rather than permitting withdrawal. Its finding of witness influence was a bail-stage assessment of the recorded conduct; it did not establish the underlying sexual offence, determine what the prosecutrix would later say in evidence, or impose a professional sanction.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the first application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC and refused permission to withdraw it.

Ramhet v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 39388/2021, 10/08/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (730) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — FIR disclosing cognizable offences — alleged mala fide - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was applied. A complainant's alleged personal motive is secondary where the allegations in the FIR, taken at face value, disclose a cognizable offence. Section 482 is exercised cautiously to prevent abuse, not to determine disputed questions of credibility. The applicants attributed Sarita's report of forcible entry, assault, attempted outrage of modesty and damage to a repayment dispute with her father-in-law. The Court did not treat the loan or the alleged threat as proved and refused to quash the proceedings on that disputed basis. Renu Kumari's quoted R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal categories preserve genuine exceptional grounds, including manifest abuse, but no such ground was established merely by alleging malice here.

Quashing — civil/property defence — time of possession and disputed payments - No interim injunction had been granted in the pending suit for specific performance filed by applicant No. 2's wife. A sale deed dated 9 October 2023 recorded delivery of possession on that date, after the alleged incident of 11 December 2022. Even if the same house was involved, the deed did not show that the applicants were in possession when the alleged entry occurred. The asserted large cash loans raised disputed issues, and the Court also invoked Section 269SS of the Income-tax Act in declining to accept that defence at this stage. Citing XYZ v. State of Gujarat, S. Martin and other Supreme Court quashing cases collectively for the principles that the allegations must be taken at face value and that a roving enquiry is impermissible, the Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The cash-loan assertion and criminal allegations were not finally adjudicated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sarita's FIR in Crime No. 237/2022, Police Station Pahargarh, Morena, alleged that on 11 December 2022 she was at home with her two daughters while her husband and father-in-law were away. According to her account, a group of about ten to twelve persons, including the applicants and persons identified as Omprakash, Matadeen and Rajpal with others unknown to her, entered her house, assaulted her, attempted to outrage her modesty and damaged the house. An uncle-in-law who intervened was allegedly assaulted too. The order records the FIR under Sections 452, 354, 427, 323, 147 and 149 IPC. These are the complainant's allegations; the Court was considering quashment, not determining their truth.

Ramhet and the other applicants brought MCRC No. 7193/2023 under Section 482 CrPC. Their explanation was a substantial monetary dispute with Sarita's father-in-law Sohanlal Dhakad, a relative. Counsel asserted various advances in 2021–22, including digital transfers and large cash sums, partial repayment after sale of a house, an outstanding balance, an agreement of 17 June 2022 to sell a Kailaras house to Kalavati Dhakad, wife of applicant No. 2, and a separate loan to applicant No. 4. These matters were put forward as the applicants' contentions; they were not judicially established financial transactions. Counsel said Sohanlal threatened false implication when repayment was demanded. Applicants complained to the police on 17 and 22 December 2022 and relied on Kalavati's pending suit for specific performance and injunction. The State opposed, contending that alleged informant malice was secondary once the report disclosed the commission of cognizable offences.

During arguments, the applicants acknowledged that no temporary injunction had been granted in the civil suit, but referred to a sale deed executed by Sohanlal in Kalavati's favour on 9 October 2023. The Court noted that it recorded transfer of possession on that date, nearly ten months after the reported attack.

2. Precedents — Considered : Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar and others, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted at length and directly applied. Its Section 482 analysis describes inherent power as exceptional. It is used to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process or secure the ends of justice. The High Court does not act as an appellate or revisional court determining facts under that provision. It may examine what the FIR alleges and whether those allegations, accepted in full, disclose an offence, while generally leaving the reliability of evidence to the trial court. Renu Kumari holds that once information discloses an offence, the informant's asserted mala fides are secondary and cannot by themselves warrant quashing. The material collected during investigation and the evidence led at trial decide the accused's fate. The present Court applied this proposition to the defence that the FIR was motivated by the repayment dispute. It did not resolve whether Sohanlal or Sarita had in fact acted maliciously.

Renu Kumari's passage reproduced R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, for illustrative circumstances involving a legal bar, allegations that disclose no offence when taken at face value, or manifest absence of legal evidence. It distinguished the last situation from an ordinary dispute about the weight of existing evidence. The passage reproduced all seven illustrative Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, categories, including no prima facie offence, no disclosure of a cognizable offence, absurd and inherently improbable allegations, an express legal bar and manifestly malicious proceedings. These categories remain subject to caution; every alleged grudge does not become a ground for quashing. The quoted explanation cited Janata Dal and Raghubir Saran for the absence of a rigid rule. It cited Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma, Rupan Deol Bajaj, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Satvinder Kaur and Rajesh Bajaj on mala fides, with Devendrappa, Awadh Kishore Gupta and Saroj Kumar Sahoo as reiterations.

Paragraph 8 of this order additionally listed XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, order dated 30 June 2021; Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682. The Court stated one collective proposition from this list: quashment requires that the uncontroverted allegations fail to disclose an offence, and Section 482 (with Section 528 BNSS mentioned parenthetically) does not allow a roving enquiry into their correctness.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the quashment application. The order also notes Section 528 BNSS as its counterpart while applying Section 482 to the pending matter. The stated inquiry was whether the uncontroverted FIR allegations disclose a cognizable offence, subject to exceptional grounds involving abuse of process. It was not a trial of disputed loans, title or credibility. Sections 452, 354, 427, 323, 147 and 149 IPC were the FIR offences involving alleged house trespass, assault, attempted outrage of modesty, property damage and group liability. The reproduced quotation from Bhajan Lal refers to Sections 156(1) and 155(2) CrPC to distinguish cognizable investigation from non-cognizable offences requiring a Magistrate's order; no such classification dispute was independently decided here.

The Court cited Section 269SS of the Income-tax Act when addressing the applicants' claim of substantial cash payments and stated that a payment exceeding ₹20,000 could not be made in cash. The provision formed part of its reasons for refusing to accept a disputed cash-loan defence in this quashing case. The Court did not undertake a tax assessment or decide any liability or penalty under that Act. That observation formed part of the Court's reasoning on the disputed cash-loan defence and was not an independently adjudicated tax-law holding.

4. Issues : The issues were whether alleged hostility between lender and borrower, and an asserted threat by the complainant's father-in-law, established mala fides sufficient to quash Sarita's FIR despite allegations which, taken at face value, disclosed cognizable offences involving violence and house entry; whether a pending property suit, the subsequent sale deed or contested repayment evidence could be assessed as a defence under Section 482; and whether the date on which possession was conveyed refuted the allegation concerning the December 2022 incident.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court identified alleged malice arising from the money dispute as the applicants' central ground. Applying Renu Kumari, it held that it could not adjudicate whether the FIR was motivated by malice when its allegations disclosed cognizable offences. The Bhajan Lal and R.P. Kapur passages quoted within that authority preserve genuinely demonstrable exceptions; here, the asserted debt and threats raised contested facts and did not by themselves negate the described entry, assaults, modesty allegation and damage. The Court also invoked the collectively cited Supreme Court cases for an approach under Section 482 that takes the allegations at face value and excludes a roving enquiry. It did not find that the applicants' transactions were fictitious or that the prosecution evidence was ultimately reliable.

No temporary injunction had been granted in the pending suit for specific performance. The 9 October 2023 sale deed recorded possession delivered on that date. Even if the complained-of entry took place in the very house later conveyed, that later acquisition did not show the applicants possessed it on 11 December 2022. The Court therefore regarded the precise identity of the house as immaterial to this defence. The asserted large cash payments remained disputed and were also rejected, with reference to Section 269SS, as a sufficient basis for quashing. This was a threshold assessment of the applicants' documentary and financial account, not a final determination of a civil title or tax dispute. In combination, the assertions did not warrant quashment of an FIR whose allegations disclosed cognizable offences on their face.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application seeking quashment of FIR Crime No. 237/2022. The FIR and consequent criminal process were left undisturbed.

Ramhet and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 7193/2023, 18/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (731) Prev Next

Headnote :- Kidnapping for ransom — direct demand — hearsay telephone account - Shiv Singh Yadav (PW3) recounted an alleged later telephone demand for ₹5 lakh and a death threat based on what Latoo Yadav reportedly told him. Latoo was not examined, and the trial court found no proof that the appellant placed that call; the High Court did not rely on this hearsay account as substantive proof. Siyaram (PW2) directly identified Ramji Gurjar as one of the armed men who waylaid him, Kalli and Lokendra and took Kalli away. He testified to the appellant's demand for ₹2 lakh and warning that ₹5 lakh would be required if a report was lodged. On the basis of the accepted direct evidence and the assessment of identification, the Section 364A IPC read with Sections 11/13

MPDVPK Act conviction was affirmed. Kalli had not returned, but the Court did not find that he was dead. Life imprisonment was retained as Section 364A's minimum.

Identification — dock evidence and corroborative TIP — date and light objections - Siyaram identified the appellant at trial, and the defence did not put a question challenging that dock identification. Naib Tahsildar H.L. Khatri (PW5) explained that an earlier TIP date on the form was struck through when that planned parade did not occur; the date under his signature remained unaltered, and another correction was countersigned. No chance for Siyaram to see the appellant before the parade was shown. Siyaram's conversation with the men at close range took place before Kalli was taken away at 7 p.m. The Court therefore rejected the premise that the entire event had occurred in darkness. Ramesh v. State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, was applied to assess a rural witness's visual capacity in context. The Court treated court identification as substantive and the TIP as corroborative, rejected the forgery claim and dismissed the appeal.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 15 December 2008 Siyaram, his brother Kalli and nephew Lokendra were returning in a bullock cart after collecting chhole leaves. The prosecution alleged that four armed men, three dressed like police officers, waylaid the three; some carried firearms and one a stick. Siyaram and Lokendra were ultimately let go, but Kalli was taken towards Jamnunia forest with a demand for ransom. The FIR was lodged the next day. Ramji Gurjar was later arrested on 18 February 2009 and placed in a test identification parade. Three other alleged participants were absconding and the police filed a charge-sheet under Section 299 CrPC against them. The case against Ramji involved Section 364A IPC, Sections 11/13 of the MPDVPK Act and, initially, Arms Act provisions. The trial court framed charges under Section 364A IPC read with Sections 11/13 of the MPDVPK Act. The order does not report Kalli's return, and the Court did not adjudicate his death.

The Special Judge, Shivpuri, convicted Ramji under Section 364A IPC read with Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act on 31 December 2009 and sentenced him to life imprisonment, a ₹1,000 fine and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. In Criminal Appeal No. 234/2010 under Section 374 CrPC, Ramji challenged identification: Siyaram's FIR had not described the assailants' body build, the parade form contained date changes, Siyaram may have seen him after his arrest, and there was insufficient light during the encounter, which counsel said had occurred at 7 p.m. Counsel also relied on non-examination of Kalli and Lokendra. The State supported the judgment. The prosecution had examined eight witnesses, but Karan Singh (PW1) and Gulli (PW4) did not support it; the appeal therefore turned substantially on Siyaram's evidence, Shiv Singh Yadav's account of an alleged later call, and the evidence of H.L. Khatri, who conducted the parade.

The conviction arose from Special Sessions Trial No. 44/2009. The FIR was lodged on 16 December 2008, the day after the alleged taking. Kalli had not returned at the time of trial; that absence was not a judicial determination of his death.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ramesh v. State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, was quoted and applied on identification in meagre evening light. The Supreme Court passage cautioned against equating the conditioned visual capacity of rural witnesses with that of people accustomed to fluorescent urban light. In that case, the Supreme Court found no demonstrated enmity and accepted last-seen evidence. The present Court used the relevant principle concerning visual capacity as one supporting consideration, but rested chiefly on Siyaram's close-range conversation and the chronology showing contact before Kalli was later taken away at 7 p.m.

The order also stated the well-established distinction between TIP as corroborative identification and identification in court as substantive evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the conviction appeal. Section 364A IPC supplied the kidnapping-for-ransom offence and, as the Court noted, a minimum sentence of life imprisonment. Once the conviction stood, the imposed life term could not be reduced. The Court applied it to the armed interception, Kalli's abduction and Siyaram's direct account of the demand for money and the threat. Section 299 CrPC described police proceedings against the three absconding alleged co-accused, not Ramji's own appeal. The charge-sheet mentioned Sections 25/27 Arms Act, but the judgment does not record a conviction or separate analysis under them. The identification parade was a procedural investigative step; the Court distinguished it from substantive testimony in court.

4. Issues : Could the alleged ransom telephone call be relied on when its supposed recipient, Latoo Yadav, was not examined and the caller's identity was unproved? Did Siyaram's direct evidence nonetheless establish Ramji's participation, Kalli's abduction and the ransom demand? Did identification in court and at the parade remain reliable despite the absence of an initial description of body build, a changed date on the parade form, the suggested possibility that the witness had seen the appellant earlier and the alleged poor light? Should the conviction and mandatory life sentence stand?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court separated what witnesses actually perceived from a reported conversation. Shiv Singh Yadav (PW3) said he received a call from Ramji and passed a phone to Latoo; his account of a ransom demand and death threat then depended on what Latoo reportedly told him. The trial court had already found no proof that the call was made by Ramji. With Latoo unexamined, Shiv Singh's account of the demand and threat was hearsay. The High Court therefore did not accept it as substantive proof of the demand and threat during that separate call. Kalli's own non-examination was explained by the prosecution's account that he never returned; the defence suggested that Siyaram was angry for that reason, but did not assert that Kalli had returned alive.

Siyaram (PW2) personally described being stopped with his brother and nephew, tied and assaulted, speaking with the abductors, hearing the appellant's ₹2 lakh demand and further ₹5 lakh warning, and seeing Kalli being taken away. He identified Ramji in court. Although the defence challenged details of timings and firearms, it did not put even a single question contesting that dock identification. The Court considered his account reliable as to the appellant's participation and the ransom demand. It did not treat proof of the separate telephone demand as indispensable once it accepted his direct evidence.

On the parade, H.L. Khatri (PW5), a Naib Tahsildar, explained that the form had been prepared for an earlier parade that did not take place. He struck out that date and entered 4 May 2009. The date written under his signature was unaltered, and another correction concerning the date of birth was countersigned. The Court accepted this explanation and rejected an inference that the memo was forged. Ramji had been in custody in another matter and produced by warrant, but counsel showed no evidence or cross-examination suggestion that Siyaram saw him between arrest and the parade. A mere possibility that the witness had seen him earlier did not invalidate the parade.

The assertion that the encounter began at 7 p.m. misstated the chronology. Siyaram said the waylaying occurred about 2 p.m., he was released about 6 p.m., and the FIR placed Kalli's taking at about 7 p.m. He had spoken to the men at close range before then. The Court also used Ramesh's contextual observation on rural visual adaptation in poor light. Thus there was a sufficient identification opportunity on this record. With the identification in court accepted as substantive evidence, the TIP corroborating it and the direct account of the ransom demand accepted, the Court upheld participation in the Section 364A offence and the MPDVPK conviction.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the Special Judge's judgment of 31 December 2009. Ramji Gurjar's conviction under Section 364A IPC read with Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act, life imprisonment, ₹1,000 fine and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default remained in force. He was in jail and was directed to serve the remaining term. The Court ordered that he be provided with a copy of the judgment immediately, free of cost, and that the trial court record be returned with a copy for information and compliance.

Ramji Gurjar v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 234/2010, 12/11/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (733) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder — Section 300 thirdly — intentional single head blow - Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, separates intention to inflict the injury actually found from the objective question whether that injury ordinarily suffices to cause death. Intention to kill is unnecessary under the third clause. Anda, Mahesh Balmiki, Bavisetti Kameswara Rao and the decisions discussed in Kanhaiyalal were considered against automatic conversion to Section 304. Dr. Ajay Gupta found a fresh blunt head injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death and resulting in shock and haemorrhage. Eyewitnesses attributed the strike to Laxmi Narayan. His individual Section 302 conviction and life sentence remained effective, though the original Section 302/34 formulation was set aside.

Murder and culpable homicide — sudden fight — Exception 4 - Arun Nivalaji More and Paul v. State of Kerala, (2020) 3 SCC 115, with Rayavarapu Punnayya, set out the sequence of inquiry under Sections 299, 300 and 304 IPC. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak requires all elements of Exception 4, including a sudden fight, absence of premeditation and no undue advantage or cruel manner. Pulicherla Nagaraju, Sangapagu Anjaiah and Kanhaiyalal require contextual assessment of weapon, vital part and force. The sudden incident and absence of prior concert among all three did not themselves establish an exception for the principal assailant. The Court refused to alter Laxmi Narayan's conviction to Section 304 Part I or II for the fatal blow to the head.

Section 34 IPC — common intention — individual participation - The Court considered Suresh Sankharam Nangare, Shyamal Ghosh, Mrinal Das, Ramashish Yadav, Hem Raj and Dashrathlal on shared purpose and participation. Ramji and Govind Das were unarmed and accused of kicks, fists and exhortation in a sudden altercation. Despite their participation, the Court did not find a proved common intention to murder Virendra. Their Section 302/34 convictions were replaced with Section 323 IPC convictions. The five months already undergone by Ramji and six months by Govind Das were treated as sufficient sentences.

Evidence — medical and ocular assessment — weapon description - Gorabai, Ram Singh, Kamta Prasad and Poonam supplied the eyewitness account. The post-mortem opinion supported homicidal death from a blunt head injury sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. The defence's objections concerning related witnesses, omitted names and the description of the weapon as a lathi or luhangi did not displace the core attribution to Laxmi Narayan; the seized stick had no iron cover. The differing acts of the companions remained relevant to the Section 34 and Section 323 outcome. The appeal was allowed in part, with release of Ramji and Govind Das if detained and not wanted in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal arose from an incident on 18 July 2009 in Village Dharmpura, Datia district. The prosecution said that Virendra Singh and his wife Gorabai (PW1) were returning from Bhagwapura after concerns about their daughter Poonam's recurring unconsciousness had led to consultation with a local religious healer. A quarrel began near Laxmi Narayan's house. The prosecution alleged that Laxmi Narayan, Ramji and Govind Das assaulted Virendra, including with kicks and fists. According to the prosecution, Laxmi Narayan struck Virendra's head with a lathi or luhangi. According to Gorabai, the other two exhorted him to kill, after which he delivered another blow to the head. Ram Singh (PW2) and Kamta Prasad (PW5) intervened. This was the prosecution version to be evaluated against the evidence; it was not a finding that all three had inflicted the fatal injury.

An FIR for Section 307/34 IPC was registered as Crime No. 98/2009. Virendra was medically examined by Dr. Anand Unaya (PW4), and later died during treatment. A Section 174 CrPC merg, inquest and post-mortem followed. Dr. Ajay Gupta (PW11) performed the autopsy; the police seized a blood-stained towel and a stick attributed to Laxmi Narayan, sent articles to FSL and eventually filed a charge-sheet against all three under Section 302/34 IPC. The prosecution examined eleven witnesses; the accused were examined under Section 313 CrPC and called Ranjana (DW1). The Additional Sessions Judge, Seondha, convicted all three under Section 302/34 on 31 January 2011 and imposed life imprisonment and ₹1,000 fine each, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default.

In Criminal Appeal No. 223/2011 under Section 374 CrPC, counsel questioned the individual roles, the number and location of injuries, the initial medical account, alleged inconsistencies with the FIR, the precise description of the weapon as a lathi or luhangi and the absence of a pre-arranged common intention. He sought substitution of Section 304 Part I or II on the ground that there had been a sudden fight without premeditation, citing several Supreme Court cases; the State supported conviction. The Division Bench framed issues concerning homicidal death, common intention and the act causing death. Its final disposition distinguished Laxmi Narayan from Ramji and Govind Das.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was quoted as the central Section 300 Thirdly test. The prosecution must objectively establish the presence and nature of the injury. It must also prove that the accused intended to inflict the particular injury found, rather than some other injury, and that the injury was not accidental. It must then establish objectively that the injury is sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The latter inquiry does not concern the assailant's subjective knowledge or desire to cause death. The Court used this to reject the argument that lack of an express intention to kill necessarily removes Laxmi Narayan's act from murder. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, similarly stressed the intentional injury and its ordinary-course sufficiency, with weapon and body part relevant. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, held that a single blow does not invariably fall within one statutory classification; weapon, vital part, manner, surrounding circumstances and intention determine whether Section 302, 304 or another offence fits. Here the High Court applied those tests to a proved fatal head strike, not merely to a count of blows.

Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Appeals (Criminal) 1078–1079 of 2005, was reproduced on the sequence of culpable homicide under Section 299, murder clauses and exceptions under Section 300, and Section 304 Part I (intention) versus Part II (knowledge without the specified intention). Its quoted discussion of knowledge under Section 300 Secondly distinguished virtual certainty from mere probability. The High Court stated that Secondly was not established on its analysis and focused on Thirdly. Paul v. State of Kerala, (2020) 3 SCC 115, was quoted to reject treating Section 304 as an alternative when the proved culpable homicide meets a Section 300 murder clause without a proved exception. The quoted discussion in State of A.P. v. Rayavarapu Punnayya, (1976) 4 SCC 382, articulated a three-stage inquiry: causation, Section 299 culpable homicide, then the applicable clause of Section 300 and any exception. The present Court proceeded through that structure before maintaining murder liability for Laxmi Narayan.

Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, was quoted on Exception 4. Absence of premeditation, a sudden fight in the heat of passion with the victim, and absence of undue advantage or cruel or unusual conduct must coexist. A sudden quarrel alone is insufficient. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, gave a non-exhaustive set of intention indicators, including weapon, how acquired, vital target, force, chance quarrel, enmity, provocation, heat, advantage and blow count. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred intent from the force of a crowbar blow to the skull. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, through its Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram discussion, rejected a universal one-blow reduction and reiterated all Exception 4 conditions. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, quoted Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh on the separate questions of the subjective intention to inflict the injury and its objective sufficiency to cause death; the cited single-blow cases reinforced contextual classification. The Court preferred an assessment under the third clause and Exception 4.

On Section 34 IPC, the Court discussed Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra, 2012 (9) SCALE 345, on common intention and participation. Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., AIR 2012 SC 3539, concerned a prior shared plan and action in furtherance of it. Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753, addressed the prosecution's burden of proof. Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 1083, recognised that shared intent may develop on the spur of the moment, though concert must be found. The Court cited Hem Raj v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1990 SC 2252, for acquitting companions whose participation was not accepted while retaining the conviction of the person who committed the murder. It cited Dashrathlal v. State of Gujarat, 1979 Cri LJ 1078 (SC), for mere accompaniment being insufficient; Rajagopalswamy Konar for different individual offences; and Sheikh Nabab for an unproved overt act. It also mentioned Akaloo Ahir in counsel's argument and Bijay Singh, an Allahabad decision. Later, it referred to Shyamlal Ghosh & Others v. State of Tripura and Pandurang Tukia & Bhillia v. State of Hyderabad on the absence of a meeting of minds. The present Court concluded that the sudden occurrence and the different, unarmed roles of Ramji and Govind Das did not establish a common intention to murder, even though the evidence described their participation in the assault and their exhortation.

3. Statutes considered : The appeal against conviction was brought under Section 374 CrPC. Sections 299 and 300 IPC defined culpable homicide and murder. The Court distinguished Section 300 Secondly from Thirdly, applied the Thirdly inquiry to the intentional injury ordinarily sufficient to cause death, and discussed Exception 4 as a possible route to Section 304 only if its cumulative conditions were proved. Section 302 IPC provided the punishment for the murder committed by Laxmi Narayan individually. Section 34 IPC could make each participant liable for a joint act in furtherance of common intention, but the Court did not find the shared murderous intention proved for the two companions. Section 323 IPC provided for their substituted convictions for simple hurt. Section 307/34 IPC was the initial FIR classification before Virendra died, not the final conviction. Section 149 IPC was mentioned in a doctrinal comparison to Section 34, not charged or applied to this three-person incident. Section 304-A IPC appeared in the judgment's taxonomy of homicide but was not the outcome.

4. Issues : First, was Virendra's death homicidal and causally linked to the deliberate blunt head injury? Second, did that injury satisfy Section 300 Thirdly notwithstanding a single fatal blow, an abrupt quarrel and the request to convert murder to Section 304 Part I or II? Third, did Ramji and Govind Das share a murderous common intention with Laxmi Narayan under Section 34, or were they individually liable only for the kicks and fists proved against them? Fourth, did objections concerning related eyewitnesses, omitted names and the discrepancy between descriptions of the weapon as a lathi or luhangi undermine the medically supported core of the prosecution? Finally, what conviction and sentence followed for each appellant?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench found homicidal death on Dr. Ajay Gupta's post-mortem evidence: fresh ante-mortem blunt injuries, a head injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and death from shock and haemorrhage following it. The initial examination and defence description of consciousness did not displace the later fatal course and post-mortem opinion. Gorabai, Ram Singh, Kamta Prasad and Poonam supplied the material eyewitness account. The Court rejected the defence's broad attack based on their relationship or non-mention of Poonam and Rajat in the FIR because medical evidence supported the central account that the fatal injury was inflicted on the head. It acknowledged that the seized stick lacked an iron covering, although witnesses sometimes called it a luhangi; this difference did not displace the evidence attributing the blow to the head to Laxmi Narayan. The Court also found no basis for private defence.

For Laxmi Narayan, the Court separated an intention to kill from the intention to inflict the actual injury. Virsa Singh's subjective requirement was satisfied by the deliberate blow to the head; the autopsy established objectively that the injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. No automatic reduction followed from a single injury. It described the incident as sudden and the group's advance planning as unproved, but did not find the full Exception 4 test established for Laxmi Narayan. Consequently the proposed alteration to Section 304 Part I or II was rejected in his case. It set aside the conviction framed under Section 302/34 but found him individually guilty under Section 302. In its final disposition, the Court affirmed the judgment and sentence as to him, preserving the life sentence and fine with the trial court's default term.

For Ramji and Govind Das, the evidence attributed kicks and fists and also reported exhortation before the fatal strike; neither was shown to carry the fatal weapon. The Bench reasoned that a sudden altercation did not demonstrate a proved prior meeting of minds or shared intention to murder and declined to hold them liable under Section 34 for Laxmi Narayan's fatal act. Their individual assault supported Section 323 simple hurt. The Court treated the five months undergone by Ramji and six by Govind Das as sufficient sentence, rather than acquitting them of all participation.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal in part. The three collective convictions and sentences under Section 302/34 IPC were set aside. Laxmi Narayan remained convicted of murder under Section 302 IPC individually, and his trial court sentence was affirmed. Ramji and Govind Das instead stood convicted under Section 323 IPC and were sentenced to the periods already undergone, five and six months respectively. If in prison, they were to be released forthwith unless required in another case. The Court directed copies to the jail and the trial court with the record for information and compliance.

Ramji and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 223/2011, 31/03/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (734) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — exceptional quashing; alleged vengeance — Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted and applied: inherent power is exercised sparingly to prevent abuse or secure justice, without assessing the reliability of evidence as an appellate court or predicting whether a conviction will follow. Its discussion of R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab and State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal identifies illustrative situations where quashing may be justified, including a legal bar, allegations disclosing no offence, and manifestly malicious institution of proceedings. An alleged grudge alone cannot justify ending a prosecution where the accusation and supporting material disclose a prima facie case. The applicant failed to prove that Awdhesh Tiwari instigated the complainant, and the committee report supported important parts of her account. The FIR and consequential proceedings were not quashed.

Internal committee report — claimed clean chit — The professor relied on a committee formed following Vishaka v. State of Rajasthan, (1997) 6 SCC 241, a case cited in his submission. The report recorded that he had awarded zero marks in two CCE papers and withheld the student's admission card until the principal issued a duplicate. Its one-line opinion that the hand-grabbing allegation was unclear lacked discussion or reasons; it also failed to explain the decisions concerning the marks and admission card. The Court treated the report as incomplete and adverse to the applicant, rather than exculpatory. The committee's view did not settle the disputed criminal accusation at the quashing stage.

FIR — delay by student complainant — The Court considered the teacher–student relationship, the prior complaints to the principal and collector, and the fact that the accused had not pleaded any bar of limitation. A student need not report alleged misconduct by a teacher to police immediately; the delay objection furnished no ground to quash this FIR. The ruling did not determine whether the charged conduct was proved.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramji Sharan Dangi, a professor at Government P.G. College, Datia, applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 247/2019 at Police Station Kotwali, Datia, initially registered under Section 354 IPC, and all consequential proceedings. During the pendency of the petition, the investigation concluded with a charge-sheet under Sections 354 and 509 IPC. The complainant, an M.A. first-semester student, alleged that he repeatedly made sexual propositions, invited her to his house, offered favourable examination results in exchange, threatened her examination prospects upon refusal, caught her hand, withheld her admission card and awarded zero marks in continuous comprehensive evaluation (CCE). These are allegations, not established findings of the charged offences. She reported the matter to the principal and collector; the principal ultimately issued a duplicate admission card after the original was not supplied.

The applicant asserted that an internal committee constituted in the wake of Vishaka had cleared him, that the charge-sheet omitted its report despite an interim direction dated 17 July 2019 allowing the investigating officer to scrutinise the documents, and that an adversary, Awdhesh Tiwari, had induced a false complaint. He referred to an earlier FIR he had lodged against Tiwari under Section 353 IPC and to Tiwari's alleged conduct in another FIR against a third person under Section 354 IPC and Sections 7/8 POCSO Act. Those other accusations were submissions, not proof that this student complained at Tiwari's behest. The State opposed quashing and stressed the alleged misuse of a teacher's position.

The Court examined the committee report reproduced in the judgment. The committee concluded that two CCE papers received zero marks from the professor and that he did not issue the student's admission card in time; a duplicate was supplied after the principal intervened. On the alleged hand-grabbing, the report gave an unexplained one-line conclusion that the allegation did not seem specific or clear. The Court evaluated what the report actually said, not the applicant's description of it as a clean chit.

2. Precedents — Considered : Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted at length and applied. In the setting of Section 482 CrPC, its reproduced discussion describes the inherent power as preserving the authority to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process and secure the ends of justice. Though wide, it is exceptional and exercised sparingly with caution; it is not an appeal or revision on evidentiary merits and may not stifle a legitimate prosecution. The High Court may inspect allegations and accompanying material to see if an offence is made out on their own terms, but it ordinarily must not decide whether witnesses are reliable, weigh contested evidence, predict the likelihood of conviction or reach a premature decision on incomplete facts.

The passage from Renu Kumari recounts three illustrative categories identified in R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab: an express legal bar, allegations accepted in full that do not constitute the offence, and the absence of legal evidence or the presence of material plainly inconsistent with the accusation. The qualification to the last category distinguishes it from a case in which legal evidence exists but its persuasive value must be assessed at trial. It also recounts State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal's non-exhaustive illustrations: allegations disclosing no prima facie offence; no disclosure of a cognizable offence justifying police investigation under Section 156(1) without a Magistrate's order under Section 155(2); uncontroverted material disclosing no offence; a solely non-cognizable offence investigated without the requisite order; inherently absurd allegations; an express bar or specific efficacious statutory remedy; and manifestly malicious institution of proceedings for private vengeance. These are illustrations subject to careful, sparing exercise, not a mechanical entitlement to quashing whenever enmity is alleged. In particular, the quoted principle treats informant mala fides as secondary after a cognizable case is registered: investigation and trial evidence decide its fate, and an assertion of malice alone cannot terminate it. The High Court applied that principle to reject the unproved claim that Tiwari had instigated the complaint in the face of the committee's corroborative findings and the complaint.

Vishaka v. State of Rajasthan, (1997) 6 SCC 241, was cited by the applicant to explain the constitution of an internal committee. The long quotation also lists Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma, Rupan Deol Bajaj, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Satvinder Kaur, Rajesh Bajaj and M. Devendrappa.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant invoked the High Court's inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR and later proceedings. The Court applied its restrained, prima facie review framework, without adjudicating guilt. The FIR invoked Section 354 IPC, and the subsequent charge-sheet invoked Sections 354 and 509 IPC; the Court did not separately resolve the ultimate proof of either offence. Sections 156(1) and 155(2) CrPC arose only inside the quoted Bhajan Lal illustrations about cognizable and non-cognizable investigations. Section 353 IPC and Sections 7/8 POCSO Act arose solely in the applicant's account of other cases involving Tiwari or a third person; they were not charges against the applicant in this matter.

4. Issues : Should the complaint, investigation and later charge-sheet be quashed under Section 482 because the committee supposedly exonerated the professor? Did the delay between the student's experiences, institutional complaints and FIR undermine the prosecution at the threshold? Did alleged enmity with Tiwari and supposed instigation establish manifest mala fides sufficient to terminate the case? The Court had to distinguish a prima facie examination of the allegations and material from a final determination of the student's account, the propriety of the grading, or criminal liability.

5. Ratio / Findings : The committee did not exonerate the applicant as he claimed. He admitted awarding zero marks to two CCE answer sheets; the committee recorded that finding and that the admission card was withheld until the principal arranged a duplicate. Although the student had complained to the principal on 3 May 2019, the committee disposed of the hand-grabbing allegation in a single unexplained line. The Court observed that reasons reveal whether the decision-maker applied his or her mind to the question. Two of the three allegations were found in substance against the applicant, while the rejection of the third was unsupported by reasons; the report was incomplete and in fact adverse to his quashing plea. This did not amount to a High Court finding that the sexual allegation had been finally proved.

On delay, the Court considered the practical reluctance of a student to lodge an immediate police complaint against a teacher, her previous institutional complaints, and the progression to a police report after the situation worsened. No limitation bar was asserted. It rejected delay as a basis to quash this FIR, without prescribing that every delayed accusation must be accepted or barring scrutiny of the timing at trial. On alleged malice, it found no proof that the student acted at Tiwari's instance. The professor's admitted dispute with Tiwari and the separate FIR narratives did not erase the student's prima facie allegations or the committee's findings about examination marks and admission card. Applying the Renu Kumari restraint and its treatment of possible mala fides, the Court held that the asserted motive was secondary once the material supported the complaint. The accusation would be determined on the evidence, rather than speculation about an adversary.

The Court therefore found no basis to quash the FIR or consequential proceedings. The Section 482 decision preserves the prosecution's course and the applicant's opportunity to contest evidence there.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. Crime No. 247/2019 and the consequential proceedings, including the intervening charge-sheet under Sections 354 and 509 IPC, were not quashed. No conviction, sentence or separate committee remedy was ordered.

Ramji Sharan Dangi v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 28479/2019, 01/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (735) Prev Next

Headnote :- Ocular and medical evidence — scalp wound — Latesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2018) 3 SCC 66, and Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, were followed for the rule that a discrepancy in medical evidence does not displace direct evidence unless it rules out the occurrence described. Eyewitnesses described Brajesh's axe blow to Roop Singh's occiput; the doctor recorded a lacerated wound that was dangerous to life and attributed it to a blunt object. The presence of scalp hair, the hardness of the skull and the unknown condition of the unrecovered axe meant that the medical evidence did not exclude the eyewitness account. The four injured witnesses' MLCs supported the collective assault.

Alibi — burdens and proof — Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, were applied: the prosecution must first establish the accused's presence. An accused who then relies on an alibi must produce convincing positive evidence excluding that presence. However, credible evidence to the contrary may raise reasonable doubt, and a failed alibi cannot take the place of prosecution proof. The unsubstantiated evidence of a society meeting did not establish Horilal's claim that he was absent from the field.

Injuries to accused — unexplained minor contusions — Mano Dutt v. State of U.P., (2012) 4 SCC 79, and Gurwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 525, were applied to the requirements that the accused's injuries be serious and sustained in the same occurrence. Non-explanation does not automatically discredit the prosecution; Gurwinder Singh recognises that the omission assumes greater significance where the evidence is partisan or the defence version is comparably probable. Krishnegowda v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 13 SCC 98, and Kumar v. State, (2018) 7 SCC 536, were quoted on material investigative lapses and suppression of injuries in the circumstances of those cases. Ramjilal's MLC showed three small contusions, while his own driver confirmed his initial stone throwing. The origin of the incident was independently established, so the failure to explain these minor injuries was not fatal to the prosecution case.

Unlawful assembly — collective liability — Bhagwan Jagannath Markad v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 10 SCC 537, Vinubhai Ranchhodbhai Patel v. Rajivbhai Dudabhai Patel, (2018) 7 SCC 743, and Mahendran v. State of T.N., (2019) 5 SCC 67, were used to assess Sections 141, 146–149 IPC. There must be at least five members and a common object enumerated in Section 141. Membership, a shared object or knowledge of a likely offence may be inferred from the group's conduct, the weapons carried and the surrounding circumstances. Prior agreement or an identical act by each member is unnecessary. Innocent presence alone does not suffice. Here the other appellants actively assaulted victims after Brajesh's head blow; the Court upheld the convictions based on constructive liability and for rioting.

Related witnesses — injured participants — Bhagwan Jagannath Markad and Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 426, required careful evaluation of the evidence of partisan relatives. Such evidence cannot be rejected mechanically, and corroboration by independent witnesses is not invariably required. The MLCs supported the presence of the four injured family members and material parts of their accounts of the assault. The defence driver also placed Baikunthi at the scene. The family relationship and land dispute did not render the accepted testimony unreliable.

Unrecovered weapons — Nankaunoo v. State of U.P., (2016) 3 SCC 317, and Mritunjoy Biswas v. Pranab, (2013) 12 SCC 796, were followed for the conditional rule that failure to recover weapons does not nullify trustworthy direct and medically supported proof. No weapons were seized, but the injured witnesses' evidence supported the convictions.

Voluntary defence testimony — The Court cited its own Rakesh Garg v. State of M.P., Cr.A. No. 6426/2017 (10 May 2019), for the proposition that an accused who elects to testify under Section 315 CrPC is subject to cross-examination. The Court found Ramjilal's account of being dragged from a tractor and Roop Singh falling on a spade unsupported by his driver. This was an evaluation of the defence he chose to give, without relieving the prosecution of its burden.

Sentence — Section 307 IPC — The convictions were affirmed, but the Court found the terms of ten years' rigorous imprisonment excessive on these facts and, there being no prescribed minimum, reduced each appellant's Section 307/149 or Section 307 term to five years' rigorous imprisonment with a fine of ₹10,000 and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. The other punishments remained unchanged, and all sentences were to run concurrently.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In a dispute about a mud boundary between adjoining fields on 25 October 2007, Ramjilal allegedly began throwing stones into Roop Singh's field. Seven appellants then confronted and assaulted Roop Singh and family members who came to assist him. The witnesses attributed the axe blow to Roop Singh's head to Brajesh, the lathi blow to his thigh to Jagmohan, and the farsa blow to Shivnarayan's forehead to Khema/Khemraj. They attributed the blows to Shivnarayan, Bir Singh and Baikunthi to other members of the group. A hospital intimation led to Shivnarayan's Dehati Nalishi, police FIR No. 69/2007, investigation and trial. Roop Singh, Shivnarayan, Bir Singh and Baikunthi testified as injured eyewitnesses; Hazarilal also described the episode. The doctor recorded an 8 cm laceration in the occipital region that was dangerous to life and a thigh contusion on Roop Singh; Shivnarayan had a frontal incised wound and other injuries; Bir Singh and Baikunthi had contusions/abrasions. No assault weapon was recovered.

The Second Additional Sessions Judge, Sabalgarh, convicted Brajesh under Section 307 IPC, Khema under Section 324 IPC, and the appropriate appellants under Sections 307/149 and 324/149 IPC, with each convicted under Section 323 on two counts and Sections 147/148 IPC. The judgment's opening sentencing table lists ten years' rigorous imprisonment and ₹2,000 fine for Section 307 or 307/149, two years for Section 324 or 324/149, one year for each Section 323 count and one year under Section 148, with Section 147 attracting no separate term in view of Section 71 IPC. The seven appealed under Section 374 CrPC. They disputed the origin of the incident and the compatibility of the eyewitness account with the medical evidence. They relied on Ramjilal's injuries and disability and Horilal's claimed alibi, challenged the reliability of the related witnesses and relied on the failure to recover weapons. They also denied that the other appellants shared the common object and sought a reduction in sentence. The Court examined prosecution and defence witnesses, including Ramjilal himself (DW6), tractor driver Tole Sharma (DW7), a purported society officer Anant Singh (DW1), the examining doctor and the police record of Ramjilal's counter-report.

2. Precedents — Considered : On ocular versus medical evidence, Latesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2018) 3 SCC 66, and Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, were quoted and applied. They treat medical opinion as corroborative in relation to reliable eyewitness testimony; a discrepancy matters decisively where the medical evidence completely excludes the narrated occurrence. The Court applied that qualification rather than treating oral evidence as invariably superior. It explained that an axe blow to a hard skull covered with hair could produce a wound that appeared lacerated; the actual axe and the condition of its edge were unknown. Modi's Medical Jurisprudence was also quoted on scalp-wound appearances, as a text rather than a Supreme Court holding.

On Horilal's alibi, Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, Sk. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, were each quoted. Binay Kumar explains that alibi is a rule of relevance under Section 11 Evidence Act concerning facts inconsistent with a fact in issue, rather than an exception under the IPC. The prosecution must first prove presence and participation. Once it has done so, an accused relying on a specific claim of being elsewhere must produce strong affirmative evidence excluding presence at the scene. Evidence credible enough to raise reasonable doubt may still benefit the accused, and failure of alibi is not itself proof of the charge. Vijay Pal quoted Binay Kumar's discussion, including the reasonable-doubt qualification. Sk. Sattar also reaffirmed that a failed alibi does not relieve the prosecution of its burden. The Court applied their common rule to the asserted society meeting. DW1 did not satisfactorily establish the society's registration, its office bearers or the relevant documentary particulars; the Court accepted the injured eyewitnesses instead.

On injuries to an accused, Mano Dutt v. State of U.P., (2012) 4 SCC 79, and Gurwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 525, were quoted for the necessary inquiry into seriousness and connection with the same occurrence. Gurwinder, quoting Takhaji Hiraji and earlier three-Judge cases, rejects an invariable rule that an unexplained injury to an accused makes the prosecution case false; the omission becomes more significant with partisan witnesses or a comparably probable defence, yet clear credible evidence can survive it. The Court also quoted Krishnegowda v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 13 SCC 98, concerning failure to investigate and disclose an accused's injuries and counter-complaint, and Kumar v. State, (2018) 7 SCC 536, concerning investigative neutrality and materially unexplained injury in its factual setting. Kumar reproduced the propositions in Mohar Rai and Lakshmi Singh about suppression of genesis, dishonest denials and a probable competing defence; those are contextual, not an automatic rule overriding the minor-injury qualification. The Court acknowledged that line of authority but distinguished the present case because Ramjilal's three contusions were minor and the origin of the incident had been independently established. It did not treat the stronger prosecution concerns in Krishnegowda or Kumar as factually present.

For the group offence, Bhagwan Jagannath Markad v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 10 SCC 537, Vinubhai Ranchhodbhai Patel v. Rajivbhai Dudabhai Patel, (2018) 7 SCC 743, and Mahendran v. State of T.N., (2019) 5 SCC 67, were quoted and followed. Bhagwan derives common object from collective acts, language, weapons and surrounding conduct and recognises that every participant need not inflict a blow; it quoted Gangadhar Behera and Masalti on careful sifting in a crowd. Vinubhai distinguished an unlawful assembly under Section 141, comprising at least five persons with a prescribed common object, from rioting under Sections 146/147 involving force used in pursuit of that object. It also identified the distinct requirement under Section 148 that the rioter charged be personally armed with a deadly weapon. Section 149 provides for constructive liability where an offence is committed in prosecution of the common object or is one that the members knew was likely to be committed in its pursuit. Vinubhai cautions against inferring the group mental state solely from individual overt acts, while insisting on proven assembly membership and object; the identity of each of the five persons need not necessarily be proved. Mahendran explained that object is not Section 34 common intention and needs no prior concert, that innocent presence is insufficient, and that the total circumstances and particular facts matter. Its discussion included quotations referring to Masalti, Lalji, Dan Singh, Gangadhar Behera and Sanjeev Kumar. The present Court found actual collective participation by seven and a common object arising on the spot, rather than presuming liability from proximity alone.

On family eyewitnesses, Bhagwan Jagannath Markad was separately quoted for careful, non-mechanical assessment of partisan testimony. Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 426, quoted Darya Singh's need for closer scrutiny of a relative with hostility, and rejected independent corroboration as an inflexible requirement; quality, not number, governs. Its quotation from Raghubir Singh addressed the selection of material witnesses without unnecessary multiplication of witnesses. The Court considered injury records and the defence driver's account when rejecting the blanket objection.

On weapon non-recovery, Nankaunoo v. State of U.P., (2016) 3 SCC 317, and Mritunjoy Biswas v. Pranab, (2013) 12 SCC 796, were quoted and applied. Nankaunoo held that the failure to recover a pistol did not undermine unimpeachable oral evidence corroborated by medical material. Mritunjoy reproduced Lakshmi v. State of U.P., Lakhan Sao v. State of Bihar and State of Rajasthan v. Arjun Singh to show that recovery can be important but is not an invariably essential condition where direct evidence is acceptable. The Court treated the omission as nonfatal on this evidentiary record, without dispensing with proof of the assault. Its own Rakesh Garg v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 6426/2017 (10 May 2019), was also quoted regarding voluntary defence testimony under Section 315 CrPC and cross-examination under Section 132 Evidence Act; it is not a Supreme Court authority.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the conviction appeal. Section 315 CrPC and Section 132 Evidence Act were mentioned in the Court's discussion of Ramjilal's choice to become a defence witness; Section 11 Evidence Act provided the alibi relevance rule in the quoted Supreme Court precedents. Sections 141 and 143 IPC define and punish an unlawful assembly; Sections 146 and 147 concern rioting by an unlawful assembly using force, and Section 148 adds the deadly-weapon requirement for the charged individual. Section 149 creates vicarious guilt for an offence committed in prosecution of the common object or known to be likely to be committed in its prosecution. The convictions involved Section 307 IPC (Brajesh directly, others with Section 149), Section 324 IPC (Khemraj directly, others with Section 149), two Section 323 counts and Sections 147/148; Section 71 IPC explained no separate Section 147 punishment in the trial table. Section 294 and Section 506-B IPC were in the original FIR/charges but are not listed among the convictions affirmed; the judgment makes no separate appellate determination of guilt under them. No special statute controlled this appeal.

4. Issues : Did the injured and related eyewitnesses reliably prove the field assault despite the medical description of the wound and the failure to recover weapons? Did Horilal's meeting alibi, Ramjilal's account of a fall on a spade, his disability and his unexplained contusions raise reasonable doubt about presence or the origin of the fight? Did the group share the common object under Section 141 or possess the knowledge required under Section 149 so as to sustain constructive liability under Sections 307/324 and the rioting convictions, although Brajesh alone delivered the blow to the head? Should the term of ten years' imprisonment under Section 307 be reduced after the conviction was affirmed?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the competing accounts. Tole Sharma (DW7), produced by the defence and said by Ramjilal to have driven the tractor, agreed that Ramjilal began throwing stones into Roop Singh's field and Roop Singh threw some back. He did not support Ramjilal's further claims that Roop Singh dragged him from the tractor or fell on a spade, and said he left after Baikunthi pelted stones. Ramjilal's disability certificate did not disprove his own admitted presence in the field; the Court rejected the contention based on his alleged inability to walk without help. Rakesh Garg was invoked to explain the consequences of electing to give defence evidence, but the Court rejected Ramjilal's account because it was not supported by his own driver's evidence. The prosecution still bore the ultimate criminal burden.

Roop Singh's occipital injury and thigh contusion, Shivnarayan's incised frontal wound and other injuries, and Bir Singh's and Baikunthi's injuries supported material parts of the eyewitness account. The doctor classified the head laceration as caused by a blunt object, but the Court explained why an axe blow to a hair-covered hard skull could appear lacerated and why the condition of the axe's edge could not be assumed when the axe had not been recovered. Latesh and Yogesh Singh required medical impossibility, not a speculative mismatch, to displace otherwise accepted direct evidence. The doctor's correction of a location note regarding Shivnarayan's forehead did not invalidate the medically documented injury. The Court accepted Brajesh's axe blow, Jagmohan's leg blow, Khemraj's farsa injury and the other described assaults, without treating medical support as a substitute for evaluating all the witness evidence.

Horilal's alibi failed on the actual proof tendered. Anant Singh (DW1) claimed a society meeting in Joura until 4 p.m. but supplied no satisfactory registration or office-bearer record and could not state later meeting dates despite claiming numerous meetings. In light of accepted direct presence evidence, this did not establish a sufficiently reliable account of his presence elsewhere. The Court's phrase that alibi cannot be proved by mere preponderance was applied with the qualification in the discussions of Vijay Pal, Sk. Sattar and Binay Kumar that sufficiently credible defence evidence can create reasonable doubt; rejection of DW1 was not affirmative proof replacing the prosecution case.

Ramjilal's counter-MLC listed three small contusions (back, below eye, wrist) and chest pain without external injury; the police recorded his non-cognizable report. The Court took those injuries into account but found them minor. The defence's own driver substantiated the initial stone throwing, so the failure to explain his injuries did not establish that a different origin of the incident had been concealed. Mano Dutt and Gurwinder's contextual test permitted the otherwise credible injured-witness account to stand; Krishnegowda and Kumar's concerns about material suppression did not compel acquittal on these facts.

Seven appellants came to the scene and collectively assaulted the four victims with the described implements. The Court found more than passive or curious presence: the others played active roles after Brajesh's axe strike. Under the distinct provisions of Sections 141 and 146–149 discussed in Vinubhai, the collective conduct allowed a common object formed at the scene to be inferred; Bhagwan and Mahendran showed why an identical blow or advance meeting of minds was unnecessary. The Court affirmed the respective direct and constructive Section 307/324, Section 323 and Sections 147/148 convictions. Its rejection of the related-witness challenge rested on scrutiny of the injuries, testimony and DW7's evidence placing Baikunthi in the field. Nankaunoo and Mritunjoy made the lack of weapon recovery nonfatal given accepted direct and medical proof.

As to sentence, the Court found the term of ten years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 307 or 307/149 excessive in view of the manner in which the incident occurred and noted that Section 307 prescribes no minimum. It reduced that count to five years' rigorous imprisonment and increased the fine to ₹10,000 for each appellant, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. It did not disturb the other terms, which were to run concurrently. This exercise of sentencing discretion on the facts did not treat Brajesh's roughly four years already served as an automatic limit or establish a general rule that a sentence under Section 307 must be five years.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the appeal only in respect of the sentence under Section 307/149 or Section 307 directly. For that count, each appellant's term of ten years' rigorous imprisonment and fine of ₹2,000 were replaced by five years' rigorous imprisonment and ₹10,000 fine, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The other convictions and sentences from Sessions Trial No. 170/2008, judgment of 8 October 2015, remained; all terms run concurrently. Ramjilal, Horilal, Jagmohan, Khema/Khemraj, Hukum Singh and Barelal, who were on bail, were ordered to surrender; Brajesh, already jailed, was to serve the remaining term. The judgment and sentence were affirmed with these modifications; no appellant was acquitted.

Ramjilal and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1014/2015, 14/08/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (736) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abetment of suicide — Sections 107 and 306 IPC — The Court considered Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, Sanju v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, M. Mohan v. State, AIR 2011 SC 1238, Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, and Amalendu Pal v. State of W.B., (2010) 1 SCC 707. The principles stated in these authorities require intentional instigation, conspiracy within Section 107, or intentional aid; distress followed by suicide does not by itself establish abetment. Instigation may be inferred from acts or a sustained course of conduct leaving no other option; it need not be expressed in words. It nevertheless requires a sufficiently certain link and the necessary mental element. Anger, ordinary discord and bare harassment lack that ingredient without a proximate positive act. State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, and Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618, caution against equating a hypersensitive response to ordinary social friction with abetment. Kumar @ Shiva Kumar v. State of Karnataka, Criminal Appeal No. 1427/2011 (1 March 2024), was mentioned as stating the same law. These authorities were applied to the particular alleged property damage, repeated abuse and assaults, including the day before death. Even on those allegations, no instigation or intended aid of suicide was disclosed.

Section 482 CrPC — threshold inquiry — Praveen Pradhan and Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, were quoted to distinguish a tentative view of the allegations and record from marshalling evidence as at trial. They also recognise that an indirect course of conduct may support an inference of instigation in an appropriate case. The Court assumed the uncontroverted accusations true, despite the absence of material then placed before it to substantiate the shop damage or repeated abuse. Neeraj Singh had been accused in an earlier sexual-offence FIR, and the parties were hostile. The alleged conduct did not, in the Court's view, include the requisite Section 107 incitement to his suicide. The FIR under Section 306/34 IPC and consequential proceedings were quashed; the Court did not adjudicate the truth of the alleged assaults or a separate charge for them.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramkhilawan Dwivedi and other applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC against FIR Crime No. 101/2023, Police Station Unchehra, District Satna, registered under Section 306 read with Section 34 IPC after Neeraj Singh died by hanging during the intervening night of 8–9 April 2023. Neeraj himself had earlier been named in an FIR of 1 March 2023 alleging Section 354 IPC and POCSO offences concerning the daughter of applicant No. 2. The prosecution alleged ensuing hostility: five persons damaged articles in Neeraj's shop and assaulted Alka Singh on 4 March; they frequently abused him; and on 8 April, while Neeraj was returning from Nagod Court, he and Suresh Singh were stopped, abused and assaulted. The complainant argued the repeated threats and violence left him no choice but suicide. The applicants argued that even if all the allegations were accepted together, they did not disclose abetment of suicide. The State acknowledged that a hypersensitive victim's suicide is not, by itself, enough for Section 306.

The Court expressly assumed the allegations of damage to the shop and abuse to be true for this application even though it said nothing had been placed on record to substantiate those allegations. The Court's acceptance of those allegations for this application was not a factual acquittal or a finding that the alleged violence did not occur. The alleged initial POCSO case supplied background for hostility, not an adjudication of Neeraj's guilt or an ingredient of suicide abetment.

2. Precedents — Considered : Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, was quoted on "instigation" under Section 107. Instigation means goading, urging, provoking or encouraging a consequential act. It need not take the form of literal commands, but the circumstances must permit reasonable certainty of incitement. An act, omission or sustained course of conduct creating a situation in which the deceased saw no other option may permit that inference; words spoken in anger without intending the consequence do not. The Court applied the requirements of incitement and intent to the alleged abuse and assault, rather than treating proximity alone as conclusive.

Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, was quoted for the abettor's intent, the three Section 107 modes, and an inference drawn from the facts of the case where no direct exhortation is recorded. It also stated that, at the quashing or threshold stage, a tentative view is formed from the circumstances and record, rather than a firm conclusion on the merits; the quoted passage mentions Section 228 CrPC. Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, likewise cautioned against marshalling evidence to decide whether Section 306/107 is proved at that stage, yet recognised that continued conduct leaving the deceased with no option may warrant inference. The present Court accepted the alleged conduct at face value, then held that it still did not disclose that legal ingredient.

Sanju @ Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, was quoted for Section 107's three modes and mens rea in instigation. Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, and M. Mohan v. State represented by Deputy Superintendent of Police, AIR 2011 SC 1238, were reproduced on the mental process of instigation or intentional aid and the need for a positive act, active or direct, intended to push the deceased toward suicide. Their conviction language served as guidance to identify the offence; the High Court's actual holding was on prima facie ingredients under Section 482, not a post-trial acquittal. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, set out instigation, conspiracy and intentional aid and the link to the specific abetted offence; its Section 109 discussion was explanatory, not a separate Section 109 charge here. The quoted Praveen Pradhan passage also cites Iqbal Singh, Surender, Kishori Lal and Sonti Rama Krishna.

Amalendu Pal @ Jhantu v. State of W.B., (2010) 1 SCC 707, was quoted in detail: scrupulous examination of the circumstances is required; harassment alone, without direct or indirect incitement and a positive action sufficiently proximate to suicide, cannot sustain Section 306. Intentional aid under Section 107's third clause requires doing or illegally omitting something to facilitate commission, as its Explanation 2 specifies. That Supreme Court case discussed its own factual theory under the third clause; the High Court did not convert it into a requirement that every Section 306 case must involve that clause alone. It found no incitement or aid on the sequence of events alleged in the present case.

State of W.B. v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, cautions that a hypersensitive victim's suicide following ordinary petulance or discord, which would not lead a similarly placed person to suicide, is insufficient to infer abetment; assessment remains contextual. Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618, was cited for words uttered in anger without intended consequences and the same ordinary-discord qualification. Gangula Mohan Reddy also reiterated hypersensitivity in its quoted passage. The Court invoked those limits, but the alleged shop damage and assault were not described as lawful or trivial merely because the Section 306 threshold failed. The Court applied these authorities' requirements of a connection under Section 107 and the necessary mental element, without creating a general exemption from liability for abusive conduct.

3. Statutes considered : Section 107 IPC defines abetment by instigation, conspiracy accompanied by a relevant act or illegal omission, or intentional aid by act or illegal omission; its explanations address misrepresentation/concealment in instigation and facilitation in aid. Section 306 IPC penalises abetment of suicide. The High Court's inherent jurisdiction to quash the proceedings was invoked under Section 482 CrPC. Section 228 CrPC appeared in the quoted Praveen Pradhan discussion of a tentative threshold view; it was not the operative relief provision. Section 109 IPC appeared within Kishori Lal/Amalendu Pal passages as general abetment context, not a separate charge. Section 354 IPC and POCSO were part of the earlier allegation against the deceased, not a determination in this case.

4. Issues : Did the alleged destruction of shop property, repeated filthy abuse, physical assaults and final encounter on the day before Neeraj's hanging, even if assumed true, disclose intentional instigation, a relevant conspiracy or intentional aid of suicide within Section 107 so as to establish a prima facie case under Section 306/34? How should a court under Section 482 apply that test of the offence's ingredients without trying contested evidence? Did a person's distress or hypersensitive response to hostility suffice without the abettor's necessary mental state and conduct?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court recounted the 1 March sexual-offence FIR against Neeraj, the alleged 4 March damage and assault of Alka Singh, continued abuse, and the 8 April obstruction and assault of Neeraj and Suresh Singh, followed by Neeraj's hanging in the intervening night. It inferred hostility between the parties. Although the Court noted that supporting material for the shop-damage and continued-abuse allegations had not been placed before it, it expressly took the uncontroverted allegations as true for the quashing analysis. The absence of that supporting material was therefore not treated as a finding on the merits against the complainant.

The governing authorities permit an inference of instigation from a directed course of conduct, even without express words inviting suicide; the inference nevertheless requires the specific Section 107 mental element, an act of instigation or intentional aid, and a sufficiently clear connection to the suicide. The Court concluded that the FIR and witness statements alleged wrongdoing toward Neeraj but did not allege an act that instigated his taking his life. Suicide following the alleged criminal mistreatment, even with the last assault so close in time, was insufficient without the distinct ingredient of abetment. The Court referred to the hypersensitive-victim principle in rejecting liability from Neeraj's reaction alone, while not making an evidentiary psychiatric finding that he was in fact hypersensitive. Nor did the Court hold that all threats, abuse, assaults or property damage are incapable of being offences under other provisions; those were outside the charged Section 306/34 disposition.

With no prima facie abetment disclosed on the allegations taken at face value, there was no need to decide the ultimate evidentiary proof or the collective element under Section 34. The conclusion concerned the legal sufficiency of the allegations before the Court; it was not an acquittal after trial and did not rule out a finding of instigation from a genuinely coercive course of conduct in a different case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application. FIR Crime No. 101/2023 at Police Station Unchehra, District Satna, under Section 306/34 IPC and its consequential proceedings were quashed.

Ramkhilawan Dwivedi and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 25836/2023, 08/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (738) Prev Next

Headnote :- Age proof — school entry and ossification — Mukarrab v. State of U.P., (2017) 2 SCC 210, and Ramdeo Chauhan v. State of Assam, (2001) 5 SCC 714, were applied for the principles that medical age estimates have limited precision and must be considered with other material. Arjun Singh v. State of H.P., cited by the Court for Section 35 Evidence Act, treats a school register entry as admissible and valuable but not conclusive. Ram Suresh Singh v. Prabhat Singh, (2009) 6 SCC 681, states that whether the lower, upper or average estimated age should be adopted depends on the facts of the case. Jaya Mala v. Govt. of J&K, (1982) 2 SCC 538, recognised an approximate two-year radiological margin either way. The girl's 2002 primary-school marksheet gave 2 January 1991 as her date of birth. The April 2005 ossification estimate placed her age above 16 but below 18. That examination took place more than a year after she was taken in March 2004; the Court rejected automatically adding two years to that estimate and found her to be under 16 when she was taken.

Kidnapping and compelled marriage — The father had not consented to the appellant taking his daughter out of his lawful guardianship. Her evidence described threats, movement to several cities, being held and beaten, and being passed off as the appellant's wife. She was under 18 for Section 363/366 IPC purposes; prolonged cohabitation and childbirth did not amount to the guardian's consent. The Sections 363 and 366 convictions were affirmed; co-accused Kamlesh's acquittal was not reopened.

Rape — historical Section 375 sixthly age threshold — Satish Kumar Jayanti Lal Dabgar v. State of Gujarat, (2015) 7 SCC 359, and Kailash v. State of M.P., (2013) 14 SCC 340, were followed: for the law applicable to the 2004 events, a girl under 16 could not give legally valid consent to intercourse. The appellant's reliance on a year of travel and the birth of a child failed after the age finding. The prosecutrix described repeated rape and coercion; the Section 376 conviction and term of ten years' rigorous imprisonment were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal under Section 374 CrPC challenged a December 2005 Sessions judgment convicting Ramkishan alias Raja under Sections 363, 366 and 376 IPC. The girl, who had gone to Chinor for a Class VIII examination on 24 March 2004, failed to return. Her father Atar Singh lodged a missing-person report on 1 April; inquiries led to the kidnapping FIR. When she was recovered from Ramkishan in April 2005, she had an infant son. She said Ramkishan threatened to kill her and her brother unless she accompanied him, took her through Gwalior, Indore, Ujjain, Devas, Bhopal, Guna and Sadhora, repeatedly had intercourse against her will, beat her, prevented her return, held her out as his wife and later pressured her to compromise. Lodging-house and gurudwara records traced some stays, and medical records documented childbirth. These were the assertions in her evidence, evaluated by the appellate Court; cohabitation was not generally assumed to prove consent.

The defence said she was over 16 when taken, relying on Dr J.S. Sikarwar's 11 April 2005 ossification estimate of above 16 and below 18, and had willingly travelled and lived with the appellant for about a year. The school marksheet of the 2002 primary examination recorded 2 January 1991 as her date of birth; she affirmed it. The State relied on the school record and uncertainty in radiological age assessment. Kamlesh, another charged person, had been acquitted, and that acquittal was not appealed. The trial court sentenced Ramkishan to three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000 under Section 363, five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹5,000 under Section 366, and ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000 under Section 376, with default provisions. The terms were concurrent, and ₹10,000 out of the fine was to be paid to the prosecutrix as compensation.

The appeal arose from Sessions Trial No. 191/2005 before the First Additional Sessions Judge, Dabra, and the investigation was Crime No. 53/2004. The medical examination found no external injury; that later finding did not establish legally effective consent under the historical age provision applied by the Court.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mukarrab v. State of U.P., (2017) 2 SCC 210, was quoted at length on the limitations of radiological age estimation. It treats ossification and other physical/dental evidence as useful guides, subject to individual and regional variation, not conclusive proof of a precise date of birth or age. The quoted material mentions Babloo Pasi and State of M.P. v. Anoop Singh for the principle that ossification cannot be the sole criterion for determining age and cites medical literature about variability; the present Court used the broader caution when reading the April 2005 estimate against evidence from the earlier incident date. Ramdeo Chauhan alias Raj Nath v. State of Assam, (2001) 5 SCC 714, was also quoted: an X-ray may be more informative than some expert impression but cannot fix a precise date, and no abstract formula supplants all material and circumstances. The Court did not deem medical evidence valueless.

The Court quoted Arjun Singh v. State of H.P., (2009) 4 SCC 18, on the admissibility and evidentiary value of a school register entry under Section 35 of the Evidence Act, without treating the entry as conclusive; the passage cites State of Chhattisgarh v.

Lekhram. Here the primary-school marksheet, rather than a newly created record at the time of litigation, recorded the girl's date of birth and was considered alongside oral and medical evidence.

Ram Suresh Singh v. Prabhat Singh, (2009) 6 SCC 681, was quoted on the absence of a universal formula selecting the upper, lower or average end of an age range. Jaya Mala v. Govt. of J&K, (1982) 2 SCC 538, noted a radiological margin of about two years either side. The Court applied those qualifications to reject the defence argument that the two-year margin must always be added in favour of an accused. Its assessment of the marksheet from the 2002 primary examination, the interval between the relevant dates and the ossification result on the facts of this case supported the finding that she was under 16 on 24 March 2004; it did not state that every school entry overrides an incompatible properly supported medical assessment.

Satish Kumar Jayanti Lal Dabgar v. State of Gujarat, (2015) 7 SCC 359, was quoted on clause sixthly of Section 375 IPC as applicable to a girl below 16: consent is legally immaterial, and her purported assent cannot mitigate the adult's act on that basis. Kailash v. State of M.P., (2013) 14 SCC 340, likewise treated claimed consent as irrelevant once the 13–14-year-old prosecutrix's age was established. The Court applied those authorities to reject the reliance on travel, living together and childbirth as a defence to the sexual offence. The age thresholds in those authorities were applied under the statutory wording in force for the relevant events.

The reproduced school-record passage identifies State of Chhattisgarh v. Lekhram, (2006) 5 SCC 736.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the appeal. Sections 363 and 366 IPC were the basis for the charges of kidnapping from lawful guardianship and taking for compelled marriage or a related purpose. The Court addressed the girl's age, the father's lack of consent, threats, course of taking and representation as a wife. In its general description of kidnapping from lawful guardianship, the judgment referred to a male under 16 and a female under 18; this case concerns the female threshold. Section 375 sixthly IPC, in the form applicable to the March 2004 occurrence, used the under-16 threshold to make the girl's consent irrelevant for rape; Section 376 supplied punishment. That threshold concerned the law applicable to the offence in this case, rather than the law governing later offences. Section 35 Evidence Act governed the admissibility and evidentiary value of the school record in the quoted authority. The State invoked Rule 12 of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Rules, 2007 as an age-assessment analogy, but the judgment resolved the actual record through the marksheet and medical evidence, not an independent holding that the Rules directly governed this 2004 complainant. Her Section 164 CrPC statement was part of the investigative record, not an independently analysed statutory question.

4. Issues : Was the prosecutrix below 16, the relevant age under the historical Section 375 sixthly, when she was taken in March 2004, having regard to the 2002 marksheet and an ossification examination conducted more than a year later? Did the supposed two-year radiological margin necessarily have to be applied on the upper side? Did the taking from her father's guardianship and its purpose establish the offences under Sections 363 and 366? Could prolonged travel, cohabitation and childbirth provide legally effective consent? Did the term of ten years under Section 376 require appellate reduction?

5. Ratio / Findings : The girl affirmed her 2 January 1991 birth date on the primary-school marksheet Ex. P/2. The 11 April 2005 ossification report described her then as older than 16 but below 18. Since the examination followed the March 2004 taking by more than a year, it was not a contemporaneous measurement of her age when taken. The Court considered it with the school record. Mukarrab and Ramdeo Chauhan precluded treating the medical range as exact, while Arjun Singh recognised the school record's evidentiary value. Ram Suresh Singh and Jaya Mala precluded mechanically adding two years to a radiological estimate in every case. It found her below 16 on the incident date.

The father did not consent to Ramkishan taking the girl, and she did not say she left home with permission. Her evidence of threats and forced movement, stays at identified places, the appellant's presentation of her as wife despite an existing marriage and children, and childbirth supported the finding that the appellant had taken a minor from lawful guardianship for the purpose of compelling marriage under Section 366. The appellate Court affirmed Sections 363 and 366 without reopening Kamlesh's acquittal or holding that every underage departure automatically proves every purpose required by Section 366.

Once it found the girl under 16 in 2004, the Court applied the then operative Section 375 sixthly and Satish Kumar Jayanti Lal Dabgar and Kailash. Neither her alleged willingness to accompany Ramkishan nor the facts of travel and childbirth could amount to legally valid consent to intercourse under that provision. Moreover, her testimony described coercion, repeated intercourse and beatings. The Court affirmed Section 376; it did not need to infer consent from the absence of a fresh physical injury at the later medical examination. As to sentence, his existing marriage and three children, taking a minor across places for around a year and the resulting childbirth led the Court to decline reduction of the ten-year term. This appellate conclusion rested on the facts of the case and did not establish a mandatory ten-year rule.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal. The convictions and sentences under Sections 363, 366 and 376 IPC imposed by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Dabra, on 13 December 2005, including concurrent terms, fines and the trial court's compensation direction, were affirmed. Ramkishan's bail and surety bonds were cancelled and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve the remaining term. Kamlesh's unchallenged acquittal was not disturbed.

Ramkishan v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 24/2006, 26/07/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (740) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 — medical care of under-trial — hospital admission and special ward — The earlier writ order directed an assessment and prompt hospital referral if medical attention was needed; it did not decide entitlement to a special ward. In this petition the Court recognised every under-trial's entitlement to treatment, left clinical necessity to doctors, and declined a special-ward direction where counsel identified hypertension, anaemia and diabetes but gave no medical reason for the requested placement. Hospital beds should not be occupied solely for an under-trial's convenience if proper treatment can be supplied in jail. Doctors were directed to reassess the patient every fifteen days and give a specific reason for continued admission. The jail authorities were to forward the doctors' recommendations to the relevant criminal court, together with the superintendent's report on the jail's capacity to provide treatment. The Court directed that the petitioner's brother be returned to jail immediately once doctors found that admission was no longer necessary, with proper treatment to continue there. The Court expressed no view on the accused brother's guilt and laid down no universal clinical rule for those conditions.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramkrishan Sharma filed an Article 226 writ for his brother Dr B.K. Sharma, an under-trial in Crime No. 170/2018 of Police Station Biloua, Gwalior. The FIR, as recounted from the petition, alleged rape of a resident with an intellectual disability at a shelter home run by the brother, forced abortion and destruction of the fetus; those allegations explained the context of his custody and were not adjudicated. In an earlier W.P. No. 27577/2018, the petitioner claimed his brother urgently needed medical attention but jail staff shortages delayed referral. The order of 7 December 2018 directed the authority to act on the representation and refer him to J.A. Hospital forthwith if the assessment showed that he needed medical attention. It expressly stated that no opinion on the merits was being expressed.

He was later placed in Room 13 of the hospital, with fees paid for a special ward. Following media coverage, he was shifted to a general ward on 13 January 2019. The new petition sought transfer to a special ward, consideration of his representations and a direction concerning any charges payable. Counsel identified hypertension, anaemia and diabetes but gave no medical basis for hospital admission or the special ward when questioned; counsel's statement that the brother had come from abroad did not establish a need for the special ward. The Court did not itself diagnose the patient or find that those conditions can never require admission.

2. Statutes considered : The petitioner invoked the High Court's writ jurisdiction under Article 226 of the Constitution. The serious FIR allegations did not change the under-trial's entitlement to appropriate treatment; nor did the allegations establish guilt. The CJM, committal court or trial court was designated to receive medical recommendations and the jail superintendent's report, not to replace medical judgment with a judicial diagnosis.

3. Issues : Had the under-trial, who had already been referred for medical attention, shown an entitlement to a special hospital ward? Who should decide whether hospital admission remained necessary? How should the need for continued treatment in hospital rather than jail be documented and reviewed while he remained in criminal custody?

4. Ratio / Findings : The Court acknowledged its lack of medical expertise and left clinical assessment to doctors. Every under-trial is entitled to treatment, but hospital admission must depend on medical need. Where adequate care can be provided in jail, a preference for remaining outside jail does not justify occupying a scarce hospital bed. It was not shown that the brother's stated conditions required either hospital admission or treatment in a special ward. The Court therefore refused to direct a transfer to a special ward, while maintaining his entitlement to care. It directed doctors to review his condition every fifteen days, give a specific finding on the need for continued hospital admission and inform the jail authorities of his condition and the need for continued admission. The jail authorities were to forward the recommendations to the competent criminal court with the superintendent's report on whether treatment could be provided in jail. Once doctors found that hospital admission was no longer necessary, he was to be returned to jail immediately, with proper treatment ensured there. These directions required continued review on the facts of this case; they did not lay down a general clinical rule about hypertension, anaemia or diabetes. The order quoted the earlier direction of 7 December 2018 as procedural history. That direction required prompt medical evaluation and referral if needed; it did not confer an entitlement to a special ward or authorise indefinite hospital admission.

The alleged shelter-home crimes remain allegations. The Court left clinical judgment to doctors and required documented custodial oversight, subject to the actual medical condition and capacity for treatment in jail.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the writ petition with the fifteen-day review and reporting directions. The requested transfer from general to special ward was refused. The Court directed immediate return to jail once doctors concluded that hospitalization was no longer necessary, with proper treatment to continue in jail.

Ramkrishan Sharma v. State of M.P. and Ors., W.P. no. 1751/2019, 28/01/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (741) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — investigation — no judicial command to arrest or file charge sheet - Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the Court declined to direct police to arrest the accused. The Supreme Court authority, drawing on M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explains that police must exercise their discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC cautiously. Arrest does not follow automatically from a complaint of a cognizable offence. Courts normally cannot dictate arrest, seizure, the filing of a charge sheet or the course of investigation. The Supreme Court authority also cautions against far-reaching directions without notice to persons likely to be affected, by reference to Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542.

Investigation — Section 173(1) CrPC — completion without unnecessary delay - The Court distinguished an impermissible direction to arrest or to reach a particular conclusion in the final report from a lawful requirement to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take steps required by law. The statutory assessment of whether an offence was made out remained with the officer. The petitioner could raise a grievance with the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramkrishna Bohare filed M.Cr.C. No. 19587/2021 under Section 482 CrPC. He sought a direction to file a charge sheet against the accused persons before the competent court; the order also addresses a request for a direction to the police to arrest them. Counsel appeared for the petitioner and the State. The Court considered whether it could order arrest or other specified investigative outcomes and whether the investigation should be completed promptly. The order was made on 26 April 2022.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted and applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488. The quoted passages examine an earlier High Court order that had treated recording witness statements, arrest, seizure, filing a charge sheet and protecting property as obligatory. The Supreme Court held that the investigating police ordinarily decide how to proceed, rather than the court. An investigation need not result in arrest, seizure or a charge sheet; the police may find that no case is made out. Section 482 is to be used sparingly for its statutory purposes, with reasons and due regard to the consequences. The present Court applied this to reject the requested arrest direction and to avoid dictating the final investigative outcome.

In the passage quoted from the Supreme Court, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, was discussed in relation to the discretion under Section 41 CrPC to arrest without a warrant when legally justified. Arrest neither follows automatically from an FIR nor is mandatory in every cognizable case. Because it affects liberty and reputation, the power requires caution, taking into account the nature of the alleged offence and the persons accused. The present Court relied on this principle as stated in D. Venkatasubramaniam; it did not make a fresh assessment of the facts to decide whether arrest was necessary. The quoted passage also refers to Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on the need to hear persons likely to be affected by investigative directions with drastic adverse consequences for their reputation. D. Venkatasubramaniam held that the earlier High Court order was a nullity because those affected had not been heard.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the inherent jurisdiction sought and its limits concerning judicial control of police investigation. The quoted Supreme Court discussion addresses Section 41 CrPC as a discretionary power of arrest that must be exercised cautiously, rather than mechanically on allegations. Section 173(1) CrPC was separately quoted by the High Court: "Every investigation under this Chapter shall be completed without unnecessary delay." That duty justified a direction to complete the investigation expeditiously; it did not justify directing a particular outcome as to the filing of a charge sheet.

4. Issues : (i) Could the High Court under Section 482 compel the police to arrest persons named as accused or predetermine the filing of a charge sheet in a pending investigation? (ii) Could it require an investigating officer to conclude the investigation promptly under Section 173(1), while preserving police discretion over lawful methods and the outcome?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated a judicial order to arrest particular persons and file a charge sheet as supervision of the investigation itself. Following D. Venkatasubramaniam, it held that the court cannot force an investigator to choose arrest, seizure or prosecution regardless of evidence. The discussion of M.C. Abraham in the quoted Supreme Court passage explains why the discretion to arrest under Section 41 must be exercised cautiously and cannot be replaced by a mechanical judicial command. The quoted Divine Retreat Centre passage warns that far-reaching adverse directions made without a hearing can damage reputation and be invalid. The High Court's own reason for refusing relief here, however, was that directing these steps would improperly control the investigation. The Court thus refused the requested arrest direction.

The High Court then considered Section 173(1) and stated that an investigation cannot be kept pending unnecessarily. The officer must determine in accordance with law whether an offence is made out and complete the investigation as early as possible. The Court also permitted the petitioner to submit a grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, and directed that any such application be considered in accordance with law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the petition. The Court refused to direct arrest or dictate the filing of a charge sheet, but directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take necessary lawful steps under Section 173(1) CrPC. It permitted the petitioner to approach the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, with any grievance and directed that any such application be considered in accordance with law.

Ramkrishna Bohare v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 19587/2021, 26/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (742) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — quashing FIR — disputed bona fide purchase of government land - An FIR alleged that survey land recorded as forest/government land was entered in the names of private Bhumiswamis, that its area was enlarged by 52.794 hectares and that records for the intervening years were shown as missing through collusion with revenue officials. The applicants' assertion that their housing company had purchased in good faith from the recorded vendors could not be determined on a Section 482 petition while investigation remained pending and commercial use allegedly continued after restoration of government entries. A vendor without title could not confer better title. At the quashing stage, the Court considered whether the uncontroverted allegations disclosed offences under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471, 120-B and 201 IPC and declined to conduct a roving inquiry into their truth.

Limitation — old revenue entry and alleged continuing conduct - The Court rejected the argument that the proceedings were time-barred merely because the alleged manipulation occurred in 1969–70. Some of the alleged offences were punishable with imprisonment exceeding three years. The Court also considered the alleged connivance of revenue officers and the continued possession and use of the land. It characterised the offence as continuing and referred to Sections 472 and 473 CrPC concerning cognizance.

FIR — delay in registration — quashing threshold - Following Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, the Court noted that the law fixes no period for lodging an FIR. A prompt FIR may reduce the risk of fabrication but does not guarantee truth, while delay may have genuine causes. Applying Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, it held that delay by itself does not justify quashing. The applicants' plea of belated reporting was therefore insufficient. The Court found no statutory time bar and noted that the complainant could explain any delay, with the explanation to be assessed at the appropriate stage.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramkumari Gupta and other applicants sought to quash Crime No. 366/2020 at Police Station Kotwali Datia under Section 482 CrPC. The FIR, lodged on a complaint by the Tahsildar, alleged offences under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471, 120-B and 201 IPC. The Tahsildar referred to his order of 8 May 2018 in revenue Case No. 0002/v-6-v/2017-18 declaring Survey Nos. 2467, 2468 and 2469 government land. According to the FIR, the land had been recorded as forest land and the field map corresponded to that status, but in 1969–70 it was entered as private Bhumiswami land without a competent order or forest release. The areas were alleged to have increased from 37.536, 32.128 and 16.00 hectares in 1943–44 to 38.838, 32.505 and 68.794 hectares. The FIR alleged an unauthorised increase totalling 52.794 hectares. Revenue records from 1944–45 to 1968–69 were said to be missing, allegedly to conceal the alteration. The FIR estimated a ₹56 crore loss by reference to the stated present value of 140.137 hectares; those figures remained allegations, not assessed damages in this order.

The applicants claimed that they had purchased in good faith after checking revenue records and could not be criminally liable for the original entry; they also argued that the FIR was belated by decades. The State responded that investigation was pending, that the applicants were directors of Maa Pitambara Housing Pvt. Ltd., and that they continued commercial activity and possession even after the disputed land was re-recorded for the Forest Department/State. It challenged their claim of good faith, contended that a vendor without title could not pass title, and suggested that any claim against the vendors should be pursued through a suit for compensation.

2. Precedents — Considered : In paragraph 8, the Court referred collectively to XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. No. 709/2021, order of 30 June 2021; Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682. The Court relied on these authorities collectively for the rule that, under Section 482, it considers whether the uncontroverted allegations disclose an offence; it does not conduct a roving inquiry into the evidence to decide whether disputed allegations are true.

The Court then explained the principle in Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690: the law fixes no time for lodging an FIR. Prompt reporting benefits investigation and reduces the opportunity to concoct a version. Nevertheless, delay does not necessarily invalidate the FIR, and promptness does not conclusively establish its genuineness. Genuine explanations for delay may exist. It followed that principle in rejecting the contention that delay automatically made the FIR illegal. It also applied Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, specifically for the rule that delay in FIR registration by itself cannot be a ground for quashing. In paragraphs 10–13, the Court discussed and applied the specific principles on delay from these two authorities, whereas it had relied on the authorities in paragraph 8 collectively.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC, with a parenthetical reference in the order to Section 528 BNSS, provided the inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR. The Court applied the uncontroverted-allegation test and refused to evaluate the applicants' disputed bona fide purchaser defence in a roving inquiry. Sections 472 and 473 CrPC were invoked concerning a continuing offence and extension of the period for taking cognizance. The Court stated that some alleged offences were punishable with imprisonment exceeding three years and rejected the applicants' argument based solely on limitation. It also referred to continuing conduct and late discovery. The underlying land classification and title history arose from revenue and forest records.

4. Issues : (i) Could the applicants' claim of good-faith purchase based on revenue entries, and their dispute over the vendors' title, justify immediate quashing when the FIR alleged collusive conversion of government forest land and enlargement of its area, and commercial use allegedly continued after restoration of the State's entry? (ii) Did the alleged alteration in 1969–70 and the delay in lodging the FIR in 2020 create a statutory bar of limitation, taking into account the punishment prescribed for the alleged offences, the alleged continuing conduct and Sections 472–473 CrPC? (iii) Did delayed reporting alone justify quashing under the principles on FIR delay adopted from Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court took the State's allegations of forest-land conversion, excess area and official connivance as the account relevant to deciding the quashing application and noted that the applicants allegedly continued possession and commercial activity after re-recording for the State. It reasoned that a vendor without right or title could not transfer a better title and that the applicants' asserted bona fides and knowledge required factual inquiry, not resolution under Section 482 on a disputed record. For the purposes of quashing, it held that unlawful sale and purchase of government land would amount to the IPC offences alleged and invoked the Supreme Court authorities in paragraph 8 for the proposition that uncontroverted allegations, not a roving inquiry into their truth, govern quashing. On limitation, the Court held that the age of the entries alone was insufficient to establish a bar. It noted that some alleged offences were punishable with imprisonment exceeding three years and referred to the alleged connivance that could delay discovery. In view of the alleged ongoing possession and commercial use, it characterised the conduct as continuing. It cited Sections 472 and 473 CrPC as relevant to taking cognizance after expiry of a limitation period. Separately, it applied Ravinder Kumar's distinction between promptness, reliability and genuine reasons for delay, and Mohammad Wajid's express rule that delay alone does not justify quashing. A complainant could explain the delay if relevant; unless a prosecution was legally barred, the applicants' assertion that the FIR was belated was insufficient at this stage.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The Court declined to quash Crime No. 366/2020; investigation and further lawful proceedings were left to continue.

Ramkumari Gupta and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 36885/2022, 27/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (743) Prev Next

Headnote :- Separate trials — evidence of co-accused — common appellate judgment - Applying A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Cr.A. No. 1306 of 2021 (29 October 2021), the Division Bench held that testimony recorded in one accused's separate trial could not be used for or against another appellant. It heard three connected abduction appeals together but analysed each trial record separately. Punjab Singh's examination under Section 313 CrPC took place later because he had failed to appear after the prosecution evidence closed.

Identification — previously unknown abductors — FIR and dock testimony - The complainant said he did not know the alleged abductors' names when he lodged the FIR. Its narrative named only Surendra, yet other names appeared in the accused-details column without explanation. No test identification parade was held. In Punjab Singh's trial, Surendra, whom the complainant identified as the source of the names, was formally arrested only after the original FIR. In Avtar Singh's later trial, the dock identification was weakened by the complainant's account of covered faces, lack of prior acquaintance and uncertainty about the names learned from Surendra. Identity was not proved on the cumulative evidence assessed separately for each appellant. The absence of a parade was not treated as an automatic rule excluding identification evidence.

FIR record — unexplained insertion and deficient investigation — proof beyond reasonable doubt - The Court examined proof of the missing-person Rojnamcha entry, the failure to investigate the house and forest sites where confinement was alleged, the failure to seize the ransom letter and the unexplained names in the accused-details column alongside the witness accounts. It found that Ramlakhan and Punjab Singh had been falsely implicated and that Avtar Singh's guilt was not proved beyond reasonable doubt. All three appeals were allowed, and the convictions under Section 364-A IPC and Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act, carrying life imprisonment, were set aside. Ramlakhan and Avtar Singh's bail bonds were discharged; Punjab Singh was directed to be released if not required in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Three appeals arose from an alleged abduction of shopkeeper Mohan Prasad Rathore on 7 May 2003. The prosecution said armed persons stopped him on his way home, abandoned his motorcycle by a nala, held him for an extended period including in a forest and in Surendra Dubey's house, and compelled him to write a letter demanding a ₹10 lakh ransom before he escaped. He reported the episode on 4 June 2003 at Police Station Kailaras as Crime No. 0/2003; it was transmitted to Police Station Chharch and registered as Crime No. 26/2003. The police filed an initial charge sheet against Surendra and Ramlakhan under Sections 364-A and 368 IPC and Sections 11/13 of the Madhya Pradesh Dakaiti Aur Vyapharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam (MPDVPK Act); Punjab Singh and Avtar Singh were later arrested and supplementary charge sheets followed. The appellants were not tried in one joint proceeding.

Ramlakhan alias Mohar Singh appealed in Cr.A. No. 405/2005 against his conviction by the Special Judge, Shivpuri, on 6 June 2005 in S.S.T. No. 112/2003 under Section 364-A IPC read with Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act, carrying life imprisonment, a fine of ₹5,000 and three years' rigorous imprisonment in default. Avtar Singh appealed in Cr.A. No. 510/2008 against the separate 11 June 2008 judgment in the same numbered S.S.T.; he was convicted under Section 364-A/34 IPC and Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act and sentenced to life imprisonment, a fine of ₹5,000 and three years' rigorous imprisonment in default. He was acquitted under Section 365/34 IPC. Punjab Singh appealed in Cr.A. No. 454/2010 against the 5 April 2010 judgment in S.S.T. No. 12/2005, imposing life imprisonment, a fine of ₹5,000 and one year's rigorous imprisonment in default under Section 364-A IPC and Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act. Surendra's appeal abated after his death. The three appeals were heard together, but the prosecution had led evidence separately for each appellant. The prosecution evidence in Punjab Singh's trial had closed in 2005. He then failed to appear and was declared absconding. His examination under Section 313 CrPC and the judgment followed in March–April 2010.

Ramlakhan challenged the unexplained entry of names in the FIR accused-details column when the complainant had named only Surendra in its narrative, the lack of reliable identification of previously unknown abductors, the asserted missing-person record, the failure to investigate the place of confinement and the lack of a seized ransom letter. In Punjab Singh's trial the abductee's account attributed the names to Surendra after the FIR, while the chronology in the record placed Surendra's formal arrest on 23 June 2003. In Avtar Singh's later trial the complainant identified him in court, but accepted that faces were covered during abduction and that the men had not been known to him earlier. The Court considered each trial record separately, without pooling the testimony.

2. Precedents — Considered : A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Supreme Court, Criminal Appeal No. 1306 of 2021, judgment dated 29 October 2021, was expressly relied on in paragraph 20. Where accused persons have been tried separately, evidence recorded in one accused's trial cannot be read either in favour of or against another in a different trial. The Division Bench applied this rule by deciding each of the three appeals under its own heading notwithstanding simultaneous hearing and a common judgment.

3. Statutes considered : The principal conviction under review was for abduction for ransom under Section 364-A IPC. In Avtar Singh's case, the charge and conviction were under Section 364-A read with Section 34 IPC, based on common intention. Section 365/34 IPC formed a separate charge on which Avtar had already been acquitted; Section 368 IPC, alongside Section 364-A, appeared in the charge-sheet history, rather than among the convictions under review. Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act accompanied the trial convictions; the High Court set aside the convictions because these appellants' involvement was unproved. Section 313 CrPC concerned Punjab Singh's later examination after the evidence in his separate trial had been recorded.

4. Issues : (i) In a common judgment on appeals arising from separate trials, could evidence from one trial be used to establish or disprove another appellant's guilt? (ii) In each trial, had the prosecution proved the particular appellant's identity and participation beyond reasonable doubt despite the complainant's unfamiliarity with the abductors, the absence of that appellant's name from the FIR narrative, the unexplained name in its accused-details column, the lack of a test identification parade and the deficient investigation of the place of captivity? (iii) Did the later and varying testimony in Punjab Singh's and Avtar Singh's trial records provide reliable identification independently of Ramlakhan's record?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court began with A.T. Mydeen's separate-trial rule and kept the evidence of Ramlakhan, Punjab Singh and Avtar Singh apart. In Ramlakhan's trial, the abductee (PW2) said he had not known the kidnappers' names when he lodged the FIR and learned them from Surendra later. The father and the other witnesses who searched for him established the discovery of the motorcycle, but did not reliably connect the names to the abductee's immediate account. Some witnesses turned hostile. The FIR writer and investigating officer acknowledged that Ramlakhan appeared in the accused-details column but not the narrative, without explaining the discrepancy. The officer had not investigated or established the location of the house, its occupants or the forest sites and had seized no ransom letter. The Rojnamcha entry tendered for a missing-person report was not proved by its writer, and the original enquiry material was incomplete. The Court held that Ramlakhan's abduction of Mohan was not proved and described his implication as false.

In Punjab Singh's trial, Mohan, the family witnesses, the FIR officers and the investigator were examined separately. The father named Punjab on information from Mohan. Pooran's account of his police statement was inconsistent. Mohan admitted that he had not known Punjab before the incident, had not named him in the FIR narrative and had not participated in a test identification parade. Although he identified Punjab in court, he attributed the name to Surendra and could not clearly date that disclosure. Surendra's formal arrest was on 23 June 2003, later than the 4 June FIR in which Punjab's name inexplicably appeared in the accused-details column. The Court examined proof of the missing-person Rojnamcha entry, the lack of investigation of the place of confinement and the failure to seize the ransom letter on this trial record. It found that the case had been concocted and Punjab's involvement was unproved, describing it as false implication.

The evidence in Avtar Singh's trial was recorded after the evidence in the other trials. The Court observed that the witnesses were aware of the weaknesses in their earlier evidence. The father and brother gave varying names said to come from Mohan; Mohan in Avtar's trial said that the kidnappers' faces were covered, he had not known them beforehand, and Surendra supplied their names, yet he did not establish an opportunity for that disclosure during captivity. He identified Avtar in the dock, but the initial FIR did not name him in its narrative; the author of that FIR was not examined, and the officer had not investigated the village where confinement was alleged. Ramdayal, said to have taken Mohan to the police station, was not examined, and no document supporting that account was filed. The Court found Avtar's guilt unproved beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed all three appeals. The convictions and sentences in the respective Special Judge judgments of 6 June 2005 (Ramlakhan), 11 June 2008 (Avtar) and 5 April 2010 (Punjab Singh) were set aside, and all three appellants were acquitted of the charges against them. Ramlakhan and Avtar Singh were on bail; their bail bonds were discharged. Punjab Singh, who was in jail, was ordered to be released immediately if not required in another case. A free copy of the judgment was directed to be supplied to the appellants, and the trial records returned immediately with a copy of the judgment for information and compliance. Surendra's separate appeal had already abated upon death and was not granted an acquittal by this order.

Ramlakhan @ Mohar Singh v. State of M.P.; Punjab Singh v. State of M.P.; Avtar Singh v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 405/2005 & 454/2010 & 510/2008, 24/03/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri G.S. Ahluwalia & Satish Kumar Sharma, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (744) Prev Next

Headnote :- Sentence — appellate alteration — prior merits review - Applying Nagpal Traders v. Davinder Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 431, the Court held that the quantum of sentence cannot be altered solely on a plea of long delay without considering the merits of the case. It reviewed the injured complainant's testimony and the medical corroboration, including the doctor's distinction between injuries that could have resulted from a fall and those that could not. It also considered the hostile witness and the absence of the counter-case record. The Court affirmed the appellants' convictions under Sections 324/34 and 323/34 IPC before modifying the sentence.

Sentencing — long pendency and no minimum term — fine in place of imprisonment - After reviewing the merits, the Court took account of the passage of more than twenty years since the 2003 incident, its trivial origin, intoxication and the injuries. It also noted that Sections 323 and 324 IPC prescribed no minimum custodial term and that, according to the record, the appellants had not remained in jail. It substituted fines of ₹1,000 per appellant under Section 323/34 and ₹10,000 per appellant under Section 324/34 for the concurrent rigorous-imprisonment terms. The fines had to be paid by 29 February 2024. On default, the original jail terms would automatically revive and the trial court was required to issue arrest warrants. The conviction otherwise stood affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramlal and another appellant appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 15 March 2005 passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Beohari, District Shahdol, in Sessions Trial No. 245/2004. The trial court had convicted them under Sections 324/34 and 323/34 IPC, imposing respectively one year and six months of rigorous imprisonment, to run concurrently. The prosecution alleged that on 26 October 2003 the appellants assaulted Teedu Kol after an altercation while under the influence of liquor. The narrative of the assault included lathi blows, pressure on his neck and a bite. Teedu lodged an FIR the next day and underwent medical examination. Police investigated and filed a charge sheet for Sections 324, 323 and 506-B read with Section 34 IPC. The trial court framed charges that differed by appellant in their use of Section 34; both pleaded not guilty. Prosecution witnesses were Dr Ram Sanehi Pandey (PW1), Teedu (PW2), Panda alias Tumai (PW3) and investigating officer Brijlal Tripathi (PW4); no defence witness was examined. On appeal, counsel principally sought reduction of sentence, arguing that more than twenty years had elapsed since the incident and no grievous injury had been caused. The State opposed the appeal. The High Court considered the merits of the conviction before considering sentence. PW1's MLC recorded a lip laceration, abrasions and a contusion. In cross-examination, the doctor accepted that injuries 4–6 could result from a fall but maintained that injuries 1–3 could not. PW2 described the prior meal and liquor, the altercation near a nala, the assault by both appellants, the subsequent FIR and examination. He denied a fall, was confronted with minor FIR omissions, acknowledged intoxication and said that a counter FIR had been lodged against him. PW3 did not support the prosecution; PW4 prepared the spot map and investigated. The counter FIR, any resulting charge sheet and its outcome were not on record.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court expressly relied on Nagpal Traders v. Davinder Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 431, for the proposition that an appellate court cannot interfere with the quantum of sentence without considering the merits of the case. The High Court applied it by examining the prosecution evidence and affirming the convictions before assessing whether the custodial sentence should be changed.

3. Statutes considered : The appeal against conviction was filed under Section 374 CrPC. Sections 324 and 323 IPC, read with Section 34 for common intention, were the offences of conviction and the basis for separate sentences. The Court noted that neither hurt provision prescribed a minimum sentence in the circumstances and treated that as relevant to replacing imprisonment with fines. Section 506-B IPC was included in the investigation and charge background, but no conviction or sentence under it was affirmed in this order.

4. Issues : (i) Could the High Court alter the custodial sentence on the appellants' plea based on delay and the nature of the injuries without first considering the merits of the conviction, as governed by Nagpal Traders? (ii) Did the evidence support the hurt convictions despite the hostile witness, the possible explanation that some injuries resulted from a fall and the mention of a counter FIR that was not on record? (iii) After affirming conviction, did the passage of more than twenty years, the circumstances of the offences and the absence of a mandatory minimum justify substituting fines for imprisonment, and on what terms in default?

5. Ratio / Findings : Following Nagpal Traders, the Court refused to decide the sentencing request on elapsed time alone and examined the merits. It found PW2's account of assault corroborated by Ex. P-1 medical evidence. In cross-examination, the doctor accepted that a fall could explain injuries 4–6 but not injuries 1–3. Although PW3 turned hostile, the medical evidence continued to corroborate PW2's account. PW2 admitted that a counter FIR had been lodged, but its contents, any resulting charge sheet and disposition were not produced. The Court concluded that the appellants were the aggressors and, noting no serious challenge to conviction, affirmed the Sections 324/34 and 323/34 convictions.

On sentence, the Court noted the lapse of twenty years, the trivial origin of the incident, intoxication of the participants, the counter FIR mentioned by the complainant and the absence of minimum sentencing requirements under Sections 323 and 324 IPC. Referring to the record, it also stated that the appellants "did not remain in jail". Taken together, these circumstances of the case justified replacing the one-year and six-month concurrent rigorous-imprisonment terms with fines. This was a sentence modification only; payment of the fines was subject to a fixed date, with automatic revival of the original custodial terms on default.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal to the extent of modifying the sentence. Each appellant was ordered to pay ₹1,000 for Section 323/34 IPC and ₹10,000 for Section 324/34 IPC by 29 February 2024. If payment was not made by then, the trial court's jail sentence automatically revived and the trial court was directed to issue arrest warrants to compel the appellants to serve those terms. The convictions were affirmed; the sentence under the judgment of 15 March 2005 stood modified on the stated conditions. Bail and surety bonds were cancelled, and the trial court was to receive the order and record for compliance.

Ramlal and Others v. The State of M.P. and Others, Cr.A. no. 741/2005, 10/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (745) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal-side writ — mandamus to register FIR — statutory alternative remedies - On a petition alleging police failure to register an FIR after a District Prosecution Officer described the dispute as civil, the Court applied Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, and Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016. The Court held that a complaint of police inaction should ordinarily be pursued through the Code's remedies before the Magistrate, including Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. Mandamus under Article 226 may be denied where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used. Shweta Bhadauria recognises the Whirlpool exceptions and distinguishes the statutory duty to register an FIR under Lalita Kumari from a right to bypass those remedies. The petition was dismissed as not maintainable, leaving recourse under Section 200 open.

Judicial control of investigation — exceptional writ interference - Divine Retreat Centre, as quoted and relied upon by the Court, preserves rare intervention under Article 226 on a clear showing that investigative power has been exercised mala fide, with abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII CrPC. Even in such a case, the High Court can require observance of the Code's process, but cannot dictate the manner of investigation. The present order did not find such an exceptional case on the limited record before it.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramlali invoked Article 226 of the Constitution in W.P. No. 29550 of 2023. She sought a mandamus directing respondents 4 and 5 to register an FIR against respondents 6 and 7, investigate and then take appropriate steps towards prosecution; she also sought other suitable relief and costs. Counsel said that the police had not registered an FIR because the District Prosecution Officer had opined that the matter was civil in nature. The State opposed writ intervention, citing Supreme Court authority and a Madhya Pradesh High Court Division Bench ruling on alternative remedies, and submitted that the petitioner could file a complaint under Section 200 CrPC. The Court heard both sides and decided the writ on 9 January 2024.

2. Precedents — Considered : Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and others, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted at length and applied. It recognises that, in rare cases, the High Court may exercise its power under Article 226 to require observance of Chapter XII CrPC where a clear case of mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse of power and statutory noncompliance is shown. Even in such a case, the High Court cannot direct the manner of police investigation. Where the police fail to act on information, it directs the informant to the remedies under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC before a Magistrate, rather than routine writ proceedings. The quoted Supreme Court passage refers in turn to Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra and All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union (Regd.) v. Union of India: the Magistrate must inquire into the complaint as provided in Chapter XV. Where appropriate, the Magistrate may direct investigation, dismiss a complaint disclosing no offence under Section 203, or take cognizance and issue process upon a prima facie case.

The State also cited Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171. The Court separately quoted and adopted the Division Bench decision Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016. It states that mandamus to compel performance of the statutory duty under Section 154 can be denied if the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the four exceptions in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. It further states that Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, addresses the registration duty and not an unconditional entitlement to a writ without using Code remedies. These authorities supplied the basis for declining the present writ and preserving the Magistrate remedy.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the jurisdiction invoked to seek mandamus. Section 154 CrPC concerns the statutory duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence, and Section 154(3) provides a further remedy when the police fail to act. Section 156(3) concerns a Magistrate's direction for investigation. Sections 190 and 200 provide for approaching the Magistrate by complaint and examination. The Divine Retreat Centre passage also describes the Magistrate's subsequent Chapter XV options, including Section 203 dismissal or process on a prima facie case, and Chapter XII investigation. These procedural remedies governed disposal of the writ; the Court did not decide the merits of the proposed FIR. The Court applied CrPC without identifying an underlying penal offence or deciding whether registration of an FIR was legally mandatory on the alleged facts.

4. Issues : The issue was whether the Court should entertain a writ seeking a direction to the police to register an FIR and take prosecution steps when the petitioner said the police relied on a District Prosecution Officer's civil-dispute opinion and the State pointed to available CrPC complaint remedies. The Court's quoted authorities also address the limited exceptional scope of Article 226 over mala fide investigation and the difference between the police's Section 154 duty and a litigant's access to writ mandamus.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court reproduced Divine Retreat Centre's rule that police inaction is ordinarily to be raised through a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 rather than an Article 226 petition. The same passage recognises rare intervention where a clear case of mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse of power and breach of Chapter XII is shown. Even then, the Court may require observance of the statutory process but cannot dictate how the police investigate. The Court then reproduced Shweta Bhadauria's holding that mandamus directing registration of an FIR may be denied for failure to use the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200, subject to the recognised Whirlpool exceptions. It also adopted the Division Bench's distinction that Lalita Kumari's holding on Section 154 does not itself settle whether statutory remedies may be bypassed by invoking writ jurisdiction. Applying these principles to the relief sought, the Court found no case for directing police to register the offence and stated that the petitioner could approach the Magistrate under Section 200.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition as not maintainable. No FIR-registration, investigative or prosecution direction was issued. The petitioner was expressly left at liberty to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC if she considered that an offence had been committed. No costs or further directions were awarded.

Ramlali v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 29550/2023, 09/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (746) Prev Next

Headnote :- Cancellation of bail / supervening conduct and witness influence - The Court observed that bail is a temporary release pending trial, not an acquittal; the liberty of an undertrial must be balanced with the interests of the complainant, society and a fair trial. On a Section 439(2) CrPC application, the accused's post-release glorification in a large public procession, coupled with a video showing him firing into the air and a supporter challenging the complainant, furnished grounds to cancel bail for misuse of liberty. The Court considered the video in open court; after viewing it, counsel for the accused did not dispute its contents. The Court also noted that witnesses had begun turning hostile, while describing a causal link with the accused's glorification or release as a possibility, not a proved finding.

Supreme Court precedent / public display after release and fair-trial apprehension - Applying Ms. P. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and another, AIR 2022 SC 2183, paras 28–32, the Court treated public displays following release and their effect on a complainant's bona fide fear of witness influence as material supervening circumstances for cancellation. Ms. P. had also addressed relevant material overlooked when bail was granted; the present cancellation was expressly grounded in subsequent misuse of liberty. The Supreme Court's observations were limited to bail and subsequent conduct, without deciding trial merits or foreclosing a fresh bail request upon new circumstances.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramlesh Bai applied under Section 439(2) of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, to cancel bail granted to respondent No. 2 by the High Court on 16.08.2022 in M.Cr.C. No. 38920/2022. Respondent No. 2 was facing trial in Crime No. 133/2021 at Police Station Kachnar, District Ashoknagar, for alleged offences under Sections 420, 467, 468, 409 and 471 of the Indian Penal Code. The bail order required a cheque deposit of ₹5,00,000 in the account of the Chief Executive Officer, Zila Panchayat, Ashoknagar, and a cash surety of ₹1,00,000 before release. Those were conditions of the earlier bail order, rather than fresh conditions imposed in this proceeding. The applicant alleged that, immediately after release, more than 100 supporters garlanded the accused, touched his feet, chanted slogans and accompanied him in a procession as he stood and waved in an open jeep. She further alleged that he later fired shots in the air and a supporter challenged her. She filed a CD of the events with a certificate stated to be under Section 65-B of the Evidence Act, and submitted that the display undermined the morale of witnesses, some of whom were turning hostile. Relying on Ms. P. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and another, she sought cancellation. The accused opposed the application. He alleged that it was motivated by hostility arising from his complaints against the applicant's husband, and also referred to the husband's criminal antecedents. His counsel characterised the welcome as ordinary social conduct and initially alleged that the CD was doctored. The Court played the CD in open court in the presence of counsel. After viewing it, counsel did not dispute its contents or identify a basis for the tampering allegation. He also admitted the public welcome and procession.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ms. P. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and another, AIR 2022 SC 2183, was the Supreme Court authority quoted and applied by the Court. In the quoted paragraphs 28–32, the Supreme Court considered post-release social-media posters and celebratory captions projecting the accused's influence, and assessed their effect on the complainant's bona fide apprehension of an unfair trial and witness influence. On that record, it held that relevant material had been overlooked when bail was granted and that the subsequent adverse conduct also warranted cancellation. It set aside bail and directed surrender. It expressly confined its observations to the bail order and subsequent conduct, leaving the merits to be decided at trial and allowing an application for fresh bail if new circumstances arose. The present Court applied that reasoning to a different form of public display: the admitted mob reception and procession, a video showing firing in the air and a supporter's challenge. The Court grounded its order on misuse of liberty after release.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439(2) CrPC was the provision invoked for cancellation of bail; the Court applied it to the accused's conduct after release and its effect on the administration of justice. Sections 420, 467, 468, 409 and 471 IPC identify the alleged offences in the pending trial and were not interpreted or adjudicated. The applicant stated that the CD was accompanied by a certificate under Section 65-B of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872; the Court viewed it in open court, and the accused's counsel ceased to dispute its contents.

4. Issues : (i) In light of Ms. P., did the accused's conduct following conditional bail, particularly the public procession, display of support, recorded firing in the air and challenge to the complainant, amount to misuse of liberty warranting cancellation under Section 439(2) CrPC? (ii) Did the allegation that the CD was doctored, or the claim that the reception was an ordinary social welcome, displace the applicant's account after the video was played and counsel made admissions? The underlying IPC charges and the merits of the trial were not for determination.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the CD in open court because the accused had alleged manipulation. After viewing it, counsel did not dispute the contents or identify a reason for alleging fabrication; he also admitted the gathering, garlanding, slogans and procession. The Court therefore evaluated the public display following release on the basis of the video and these admissions. It also noted the scene in which the accused was seen firing in the air and a supporter was heard challenging the applicant.

Applying the Supreme Court's reasoning in Ms. P., the Court held that presenting an accused on release as a public hero through such conduct was adverse to society and to the administration of justice. It stressed that bail had been granted after considering the period of detention and subject to the stipulated deposit and surety; bail is temporary respite and cannot be equated with acquittal. The interests of the undertrial, complainant and society must be kept in balance. The Court noted that witnesses had begun turning hostile, but said that this "may" have resulted from the glorification or release; it did not make a definitive finding of causation or guilt. Considering these circumstances together, it found misuse of the liberty conferred by bail and cancelled the earlier order. In Ms. P., the Supreme Court confined its observations to the bail order and subsequent conduct, leaving the trial merits open and permitting a fresh bail application if new circumstances arose.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for cancellation of bail and cancelled its order dated 16.08.2022 in M.Cr.C. No. 38920/2022 on the ground of misuse of liberty. Respondent No. 2 was directed to surrender before the trial court within one month, by 16.11.2022.

Ramlesh Bai v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 45937/2022, 17/10/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (747) Prev Next

Headnote :- Eyewitness identification / darkness and cross-examination - The Court observed that an asserted identification of an assailant fleeing a night-time scene cannot be accepted by disregarding admissions in cross-examination that the scene was dark, the injuries could be seen only after a chimney was lit, and the assailant was initially unknown. Banwari (PW1) did not name the appellant either in the FIR or in his police statement; Guddya's claim to have identified him and informed Shivraj (PW5) was contradicted by Shivraj's account that he was told only that somebody had assaulted their father. The trial court's two-line dismissal of cross-examination failed to assess the witnesses' credibility in the light of material admissions affecting the appellant's liberty.

Chance witness / explanation and subsequent silence - Following Jarnail Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 9 SCC 719, the Court held that the label "chance witness" does not itself require rejection in the Indian setting, but presence and conduct require cautious scrutiny. The quoted Supreme Court passage treated explanation for presence and subsequent disclosure to others as material to credibility. Gajraj (PW4) claimed to have seen the appellant flee while checking his cow, yet did not tell the family or others at the scene, although he reached there. He disclosed the alleged sighting only in his police statement two days later. The scene was also dark. The Court found his claim that he had seen the appellant fleeing unreliable.

Forensic report / exhibit and proof of blood - Although an FSL report had been produced before the trial court, it was not exhibited under Section 293 CrPC and could not be read against the appellant or for the prosecution. In the absence of usable forensic proof of blood, still less human blood, on the seized farsa or clothing, the alleged recovery did not establish its incriminating character. An independent witness's failure to support the seizure did not automatically preclude proof of seizure through police witnesses; the forensic link remained missing on this record.

Circumstantial evidence / incomplete links and acquittal - The prosecution relied on two asserted circumstances: the appellant seen running away and recovery of a bloodstained farsa and shirt. The identification testimony failed, the chance witness was unreliable, and the alleged blood link lacked usable FSL proof. The Court found the death homicidal on the medical evidence. That evidence did not identify the perpetrator. With no other circumstance connecting the appellant, the prosecution failed to prove guilt under Sections 452 and 302 IPC; conviction and sentence were set aside.

Constitutional compensation / faulty investigation and prolonged incarceration - Referring to Ankush Maruti Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 15 SCC 470, in which the Supreme Court awarded compensation under Article 142 for false prosecution, the Court observed that acquittal alone does not invariably require compensation. Here it found a faulty investigation, false implication of an appellant suffering from psychosis, and incarceration since 21.12.2008—approximately 13 years—in violation of his life and liberty under Articles 20 and 21. It ordered the State to pay ₹3 lakh within one month, preserved a civil damages suit, and permitted the State to recover the amount from witnesses if it chose.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramnarayan appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 22.02.2010 passed by the Additional Sessions Judge, Chachoda, District Guna, in Sessions Trial No. 9/2009. He had been convicted under Section 452 IPC and sentenced to three years' rigorous imprisonment and ₹500 fine (one month's rigorous imprisonment in default), and under Section 302 IPC to life imprisonment and ₹1,000 fine (two months' rigorous imprisonment in default). At about 9 p.m. on the relevant night, Jaswant was found injured in the courtyard after cries and sounds of beating. The initial report by his son Banwari did not identify an assailant. Doctors noted multiple head and other injuries; Jaswant died after referral to Guna on 20.12.2008. The appellant was arrested on 21.12.2008. Police claimed to have seized a farsa and clothing said to be bloodstained. The appellant denied guilt. The trial included a period of treatment for psychosis after the jail reported his condition; a defence witness was also called on mental instability.

The State's case on appeal depended on two asserted circumstances: the appellant was seen running from the scene, and a bloodstained farsa and clothing were recovered from him. The defence challenged the ability of witnesses to identify anyone in darkness, the inconsistent and belated accounts, and the absence of usable forensic proof connecting the articles to blood. It also alleged false implication arising from property interests and referred to the appellant's mental condition. The State supported the conviction while conceding that the purported sighting was its only other incriminating circumstance. The appellate court assessed the medical evidence, each significant witness, the effect of cross-examination, the FSL report, and the consequences of the resulting acquittal.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jarnail Singh v. State of Punjab, (2009) 9 SCC 719, paragraphs 21–23, was quoted and applied to Gajraj (PW4). The Supreme Court passage explained that a chance witness is not inherently suspect merely because present by chance; the expression is especially ill-suited to ordinary Indian social life. Such testimony nevertheless calls for cautious scrutiny of a plausible explanation for presence, and later conduct, including whether the witness promptly told others, may matter. The passage referred to Sachchey Lal Tiwari v. State of U.P. on the terminology, and cited Satbir, Harjinder Singh, Acharaparambath Pradeepan, Sarvesh Narain Shukla, Shankarlal and Thangaiya on scrutiny and conduct. Applying Jarnail, the High Court found that Gajraj's silence at the scene and until the police recorded his statement two days later, together with the darkness, undermined his asserted identification.

Ankush Maruti Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 15 SCC 470, was cited for the Supreme Court's award of compensation to persons falsely prosecuted in exercise of Article 142. The High Court invoked the example while grounding its own compensation direction in the appellant's rights under Articles 20 and 21, the faulty investigation, false implication and almost 13 years in custody. The Court qualified that proposition by observing that mere acquittal does not, in every case, require compensation.

3. Statutes considered : The appeal against conviction was brought under Section 374 CrPC. Section 293 CrPC was materially applied because an FSL report produced before the trial court had not been exhibited; the Court held it could not be read against the appellant or for the prosecution. Other IPC sections 307 and 324 appeared in the police charge-sheet background but were not convictions determined in the appeal. Articles 20 and 21 of the Constitution were invoked for the appellant's life and liberty and the compensation direction. Article 142 was mentioned as the source of the Supreme Court's power in Ankush Maruti Shinde, not as a power exercised by the High Court. No Section 84 IPC defence was adjudicated merely because psychosis was described.

4. Issues : (i) Did the medical record establish homicidal death and, separately, was the appellant proved to be the perpetrator? (ii) Could Banwari, Guddya and Kamleshbai reliably identify a fleeing person in darkness when their cross-examination, the FIR naming no assailant and Shivraj's account were considered, and had the trial court properly assessed those admissions? (iii) Did Gajraj's claimed chance sighting withstand scrutiny of his presence and failure to tell anyone until his police statement? (iv) Did the unexhibited FSL report or the seizure testimony establish blood on the farsa or the appellant's clothing, and was the circumstantial case complete? (v) Upon acquittal after prolonged imprisonment, did faulty investigation and false implication justify public-law compensation, and what relief should follow?

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctors described incised and lacerated wounds, head fracture, subdural haematoma and death from shock due to head injuries; one doctor accepted that a fall could cause injuries and neither identified a particular weapon. The High Court nevertheless found Jaswant's death homicidal. It treated this as distinct from proof that Ramnarayan committed the offence.

On identification, Banwari (PW1) conceded in cross-examination that it was dark and he could not identify the fleeing person; no assailant was named in the FIR or his police statement, and he did not disclose the source from which he claimed to have learned the assailant's name the following day. Kamleshbai (PW3) said the injuries themselves became visible only when a chimney was lit, and her account of who arrived and when was inconsistent. Guddya (PW2) claimed to see the appellant with an axe but acknowledged the darkness and differing arrival sequence; Shivraj (PW5) said Guddya had told him only that somebody had assaulted their father, not that Ramnarayan was identified. The Court rejected the asserted sighting by these witnesses. It specifically faulted the trial court for dismissing cross-examination in two lines: credibility must be assessed against material admissions elicited by the defence before life and liberty are curtailed.

Gajraj (PW4), saying he was checking his cow, also claimed to see the appellant fleeing with a farsa. He accepted darkness and did not tell family members or others at the scene of such an observation. His account emerged only with the police statement on 21.12.2008, two days after the incident. Applying the chance-witness principles from Jarnail Singh, the Court did not reject him for the label alone; it found his conduct and unexplained silence made the claimed sighting untrustworthy. The hearsay evidence of Murarilal (PW11) and the derivative account given by Mishrilal (PW6) did not overcome the failure of identification.

The FSL report had been produced before the trial court but never exhibited under Section 293 CrPC; it was not usable as evidence for the prosecution or against the accused. An independent witness did not support seizure of the farsa, although the Court acknowledged that police testimony can still prove a seizure. On this record there was no usable proof that the seized farsa or the appellant's clothing bore blood, let alone human blood. The Court therefore rejected the second alleged circumstance. With neither fleeing identification nor an incriminating recovery proved and no other link, guilt under Sections 452 and 302 IPC was not established.

For compensation, the Court cited Ankush Maruti Shinde and observed that acquittal does not automatically entitle every accused to compensation. It considered the investigation faulty and the appellant falsely implicated, noted his psychosis and custody from 21.12.2008 for approximately 13 years, and treated his life and liberty as infringed under Articles 20 and 21. The Court considered Pappu's suicide, the property interests and Mishrilal's connection to Pappu's widow, and found that the appellant had been falsely implicated with the sole intention of taking control of his share in the property. The Court found the honourable acquittal alone inadequate redress and ordered monetary compensation while leaving civil damages open.

The Court also noted that the unexhibited FSL report was not available on the record. The Court suggested that Pappu might have been the assailant; this was not a finding identifying another killer. Its conclusion that the appellant had been falsely implicated to obtain his property share was distinct from that tentative suggestion. The Court described the period of custody from 21 December 2008 to 4 August 2021 as approximately thirteen years.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal. The convictions and sentences under Sections 452 and 302 IPC in the judgment of 22.02.2010 were set aside and Ramnarayan was acquitted. As he was in jail, immediate release was directed unless required in another case. The State was directed to pay ₹3 lakh within one month of the date of this order for false and malicious prosecution. He remained free to sue for additional civil damages; the State, if it wished, could seek recovery of the amount from witnesses.

Ramnarayan v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 171/2010, 04/08/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (749) Prev Next

Headnote :- Successive bail / examination of prosecutrix - The Court observed that the fact that a prosecution witness has already testified cannot, by itself, justify bail merely on the claim that the risk of future pressure or tampering has thereby been reduced. This was a fifth Section 439 CrPC application in a prosecution alleging gang rape, house-trespass, intimidation and POCSO offences; the prosecutrix had been examined and supported the prosecution. Applying its earlier Bhupat Singh ruling and the Supreme Court's analysis of bail factors reproduced there, the Court held that witness examination could not be considered in isolation from the nature and gravity of the accusation, supporting material and potential punishment.

Bail parameters / material relevance and earlier refusal - The quoted discussion of Virupakshappa Gouda v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 5 SCC 406, draws on Chaman Lal, Prasanta Kumar Sarkar and CBI v. V. Vijay Sai Reddy to require a reasoned, prima facie assessment of accusation, evidence, punishment, the accused's presence at trial, risk to witnesses and broader justice interests. It also invokes Neeru Yadav and Dinesh M.N. v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 66, against arbitrary bail based on irrelevant material while relevant factors are omitted. The quoted discussion also cautions against repeated applications on the same factual footing. In the present application, the Court applied the limited point that prior examination of witnesses could not override all other factors; the co-accused parity discussion belongs to the quoted Bhupat Singh case, not a new finding on parity here.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramniwas filed his fifth repeat application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC. He had been arrested on 02.09.2017 in Crime No. 115/2017 at Police Station Bijoli, District Gwalior, on allegations of offences under Sections 376-D, 450 and 506 read with Section 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012. His current ground was that the prosecutrix had now been examined, so the risk of influencing or pressuring prosecution witnesses had ended. The State opposed bail and said the prosecutrix had supported its case. The case diary was available. The Court cited its earlier Bhupat Singh bail order, recited the Supreme Court standards contained in that order, and dismissed this application.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bhupat Singh v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 14129/2018, order dated 11.05.2018, was quoted as the Court's earlier ruling on the argument that examination of witnesses removes risk of tampering. It held that where the witnesses have supported the prosecution, their examination alone is not a ground for bail; the gravity of the accusation, evidence and punishment must also be considered. The Court noted that SLP (Crl.) No. 5103/2018 against that order was dismissed on 21.06.2018.

The quoted Bhupat Singh order contained a detailed discussion of Virupakshappa Gouda and another v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 5 SCC 406. The reproduced Supreme Court paragraphs 15–19 explain the relevant bail factors: prima facie support for the accusation, nature and gravity of the charge, severity of sentence, risk of failure to appear at trial, accused's conduct and standing, likelihood of repetition, witness influence and threat, and the larger risk to justice. The evaluation is prima facie, not proof of guilt beyond reasonable doubt. The passage draws on Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., Prasanta Kumar Sarkar v. Ashis Chatterjee and CBI v. V. Vijay Sai Reddy for those factors. It quotes Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P. on the high value of liberty coupled with lawful, reasoned limits, and Dinesh M.N. v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 66, on the vulnerability of bail orders that rely on irrelevant considerations while excluding relevant ones. The earlier order also separately cited Dinesh M.N. and rejected a co-accused parity claim in its own fact setting. In the present application, the Court applied that combined assessment of bail factors to the ground now advanced.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the repeat regular-bail application. No charge or guilt determination arose in this interlocutory order.

4. Issues : Was the prosecutrix's completion of testimony, said to remove the risk of pressuring or tampering with witnesses, by itself a sufficient ground for bail on a fifth application when she had supported the prosecution and the alleged offences carried serious consequences?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted its earlier Bhupat Singh analysis, which in turn relied on Virupakshappa Gouda and the Supreme Court's assessment of the relevant bail factors. Examination of a witness addresses one possible risk, but does not displace consideration of the prima facie case, the nature and gravity of the accusation, potential punishment and the larger interests of justice. The State stated that the prosecutrix's testimony supported the prosecution rather than undermined it. Accordingly, the bare assertion that her examination ended a tampering risk did not justify release on this fifth application. The quoted warning in Dinesh M.N. concerns bail orders driven by irrelevant material or failure to consider relevant facts; it was used as part of the governing analysis, not as a finding that any order granting bail to Ramniwas had been annulled.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the fifth application for regular bail.

Ramniwas v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 37083/2019, 09/09/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (750) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation / accused's defence documents - The Court observed that an accused under investigation cannot use Section 482 CrPC to dictate the manner of investigation by requiring acceptance of documents selected for his defence. Applying Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, which reiterates that an accused has no entitlement to choose the investigating agency or control the manner of investigation, the Court refused the direction sought in Crime No. 166/2021.

Judicial monitoring / no supervision of an investigator's opinion - The Court relied on Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, M.Cr.C. No. 10446/2017, which quotes Manohar Lal Sharma on the distinction between monitoring an investigation, in rare and compelling circumstances, to ensure fairness, timeliness and freedom from interference, and supervising its direction and the investigator's conclusion. A Section 482 direction to receive selected defence papers would indirectly supervise this investigation. The absence of specific material alleging mala fides was noted in Romila Thapar; the absence of an allegation of dereliction was recorded in Prabal Dogra. The earlier decision's reproduction of Lalita Kumari on FIR registration and the allegations in that case concerning an MLC formed part of the quoted context; they were not issues decided in the present application.

Charge-stage material / limited analogy - The Court cited State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, for the proposition that at the stage of framing charges an accused cannot insist on tendering defence documents for consideration. It used that charge-stage rule as an additional reason against compelling the investigator to accept selected defence papers during investigation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramniwas Niranjan applied under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, in relation to FIR Crime No. 166/2021 at Police Station Dursada, District Datia, in which offences under Sections 409 and 420 IPC were alleged against him and the co-accused. He submitted that he had supplied certain defence documents to the investigating officer, who refused to accept them, and requested a direction to receive those documents so that the investigation would be free and fair. The State opposed the request on the ground that an accused cannot direct the investigating officer to proceed in a chosen manner. The Court heard both sides, examined authorities on the accused's role and judicial control of investigation, and dismissed the application.

The refusal to compel receipt of the defence documents did not determine their authenticity, evidentiary value or ultimate admissibility.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar and others v. Union of India and others, (2018) 10 SCC 753, paragraphs 24–30, was quoted at length and applied to the applicant's request for a direction. It set out the Supreme Court's consistent position that an accused ordinarily has no say in selecting an agency or determining the mode of investigation and prosecution. The quoted discussion referred to Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat on agency selection, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India on the manner of investigation, and E. Sivakumar v. Union of India and Narender G. Goel on the absence of an automatic right to be heard at the investigation stage. It also explained Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala: neither accused nor complainant can select an agency, while Article 226 relief remains possible upon a convincing showing of mala fide exercise of investigative power. State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, was reproduced within Romila Thapar for sparing use of extraordinary CBI-transfer power; that transfer question was not before this Court. The other case names listed within Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt and the paragraph-specific arrest facts of Romila Thapar formed part of the quoted context, rather than holdings independently examined in deciding this application. The High Court applied the controlling no-dictation principle.

Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior and State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 10446/2017, order dated 30.11.2017, was the Court's earlier decision quoted in paragraph 8. In that decision, the Court reasoned that a fair trial protects both accused and complainant and that a court must not predetermine the investigating officer's opinion. Its quotation from the Supreme Court's Manohar Lal Sharma decision distinguishes monitoring in rare and compelling circumstances to ensure a fair, timely and independent investigation from supervision that directs its execution and could prejudge the Section 173(2) report and trial. The present Court adopted that distinction in refusing to direct the investigator's treatment of the applicant's papers. Prabal Dogra also reproduced Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, on mandatory registration under Section 154 CrPC and limited preliminary inquiry. The quoted passage states that judicial directions about the manner of investigation are impermissible unless bias arising from extraneous considerations or mala fides is shown.

State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, was invoked for the charge-stage rule that an accused cannot insist on filing defence documents for consideration at framing of charge. The High Court relied on that rule as an additional reason for refusing the direction sought at the earlier stage of investigation, not as a determination of a pending charge hearing.

3. Statutes considered : The application invoked the Court's inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC; the Court considered the limits on directing a particular course of investigation. Sections 409 and 420 IPC identify the alleged offences in the FIR but their ingredients or proof were not examined. The quoted Prabal Dogra passage discusses Sections 154 and 173(2) CrPC to distinguish FIR registration and the investigator's final opinion. Article 226 appears within the Supreme Court discussion as a possible route for appropriate relief on demonstrated mala fides, but this was a Section 482 proceeding.

4. Issues : (i) Whether, during the continuing investigation of the FIR, Section 482 CrPC could be used to compel the investigating officer to accept defence documents proffered by an accused and thus conduct the inquiry from that point of view. (ii) Whether the claim to a fair investigation justified judicial control of investigative steps, having regard to the distinction between limited monitoring and supervision and the principles governing intervention for mala fides or extraneous influence stated in the quoted authorities.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied Romila Thapar's summary of Supreme Court precedent: an accused cannot choose the investigating agency or dictate how the investigation or prosecution is conducted. The requested order would oblige the investigator to accept documents selected by the person being investigated and thereby direct the manner of investigation rather than merely protect its fairness. The Court's earlier Prabal Dogra decision, quoting Manohar Lal Sharma, explained why monitoring an investigation in rare and compelling circumstances to ensure freedom from delay or interference differs from supervising the investigative task and opinion; predetermining the investigator's opinion in the report under Section 173(2) risks encroaching on the trial court's role. The quoted authorities address intervention for substantiated mala fides or bias arising from extraneous considerations; their observations about the absence of specific allegations concerned those earlier cases. The Court also cited Debendra Nath Padhi's charge-stage exclusion of defence documents as supporting its refusal to compel acceptance of defence documents at the earlier stage of investigation. This reasoning rejected the specific mandatory direction sought.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. No direction was issued to the investigating officer to accept the applicant's defence documents or investigate from his chosen perspective. The FIR and ongoing investigation were not quashed; the Court gave no finding of guilt under Sections 409 or 420 IPC.

Ramniwas Niranjan v. State of MP, M.Cr.C. no. 51818/2021, 26/11/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (752) Prev Next

Headnote :- Ocular and medical evidence / weapon not recovered - The Court observed that non-recovery of the alleged iron rod does not by itself defeat otherwise credible direct evidence from the injured witness, especially where the MLC corroborates the injury account. Applying Gulab v. State of Uttar Pradesh, Criminal Appeal No. 81/2021, decided 09.12.2021, and Rakesh v. State of U.P., (2021) 7 SCC 188, it rejected the applicant's sole challenge to a Section 324 IPC conviction. Gulab distinguishes a case where both a firearm and a cartridge are recovered but the prosecution fails, without explanation, to obtain a ballistic comparison from a case in which no weapon is recovered; ballistic opinion is not an inflexible requirement in every case with credible eyewitness evidence. The present case involved an iron rod, not a firearm, and the Court relied on Devendra Singh (PW1) and MLC Ex. P/3 rather than an assumed forensic link.

Criminal revision / concurrent factual findings - Relying on Bir Singh v. Mukesh Kumar, (2019) 4 SCC 197, the Court held that revisional power does not permit a fresh analysis of concurrent findings of fact in the absence of perversity, inconsistency with the record or jurisdictional error. The mere possibility of error is insufficient. It found no such defect in the courts' reliance on the injured witness and medical corroboration, and affirmed the conviction. It also declined to alter the three-month sentence because the applicant had absconded after dismissal of his appeal and remained at large until his arrest in 2021.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rampal sought revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC against the Additional Sessions Judge, Ambah, District Morena's dismissal of Criminal Appeal No. 285/2015 on 15.09.2016, which affirmed the JMFC's conviction dated 21.11.2015 for the offence under Section 324 IPC. The trial court imposed three months' rigorous imprisonment, a ₹1,500 fine and fifteen days' further rigorous imprisonment in default. Complainant Devendra Singh alleged that on 23.06.2006, while returning toward Silawali from Dodri, Rampal waylaid him, struck him on the head and back with an iron rod and demanded ₹5,000 before leaving when Devendra promised payment. The doctor recorded a wound on his head; the prosecution examined Devendra (PW1), another witness, the doctor and the investigating witness. No iron rod was recovered. The applicant's appeal was dismissed while he was absent; he was arrested on 07.01.2021 after not surrendering. The delay in his revision was condoned on 09.02.2021 and he obtained bail pending revision. His sole challenge on the merits was that, because the alleged rod had not been seized, it could not be proved to have caused the injuries. The State relied on the injured witness's account, its medical corroboration and the limited scope of revision.

2. Precedents — Considered : Gulab v. State of Uttar Pradesh, Criminal Appeal No. 81/2021, decided 09.12.2021, was quoted at length and applied to the effect of non-recovery on credible ocular evidence. The Supreme Court held that failure to recover a weapon does not automatically undermine consistent eyewitness accounts supported by injuries. Within the Gulab passage, Sukhwant Singh v. State of Punjab was distinguished: when both the firearm and the cartridge used in the crime were recovered, an unexplained failure to obtain a ballistic comparison could materially weaken the prosecution. Gurucharan Singh v. State of Punjab and State of Punjab v. Jugraj Singh were quoted to show that there is no inflexible requirement of ballistic examination irrespective of compelling direct testimony and the surrounding circumstances. These firearm-specific qualifications were considered by analogy; Rampal's alleged weapon was an iron rod and the Court did not itself decide any issue of ballistic evidence. Rakesh and another v. State of U.P. and another, (2021) 7 SCC 188, was also quoted for the limited proposition that a mismatch between a recovered firearm and bullet may mean the actual weapon was not recovered, rather than automatically disproving a credible prosecution case. The Court used these authorities to reject the categorical objection based on non-recovery, not to declare every failure of recovery irrelevant.

Bir Singh v. Mukesh Kumar, (2019) 4 SCC 197, was quoted for restraint in disturbing concurrent findings of fact in revision in the absence of perversity; the passage referred to Southern Sales & Services v. Sauermilch Design and Handels GmbH, (2008) 14 SCC 457, for the principle that even an erroneous order should not be interfered with where there is no jurisdictional error. Although the reproduced paragraph from Bir Singh mentions Section 482, the present application invoked Sections 397 and 401 and the Court applied the broader revisional restraint it articulated in paragraph 15. These authorities supported refusal to reassess the injured witness's testimony and the MLC as though hearing a second appeal.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC governed the criminal revision and its limited scope for reviewing concurrent findings of fact. Section 324 IPC was the offence of conviction; the Court affirmed the conviction on the injured witness's testimony and MLC, without undertaking a fresh, detailed interpretation of the provision. Section 5 of the Limitation Act was mentioned only because delay in filing revision had earlier been condoned. The original charge-sheet also referred to Section 323 IPC, but the charge and conviction determined here were under Section 324.

4. Issues : (i) Whether non-recovery of the alleged iron rod necessarily created reasonable doubt notwithstanding the direct account of the injured complainant and MLC corroboration. (ii) Whether the concurrent conviction contained perversity or inconsistency with the record sufficient for intervention in revision, and whether the short custodial sentence should be altered in view of the applicant's failure to surrender after appeal.

5. Ratio / Findings : The applicant relied on non-recovery of the weapon as his only substantive challenge. The Court distinguished proof by reliable direct testimony from a requirement to produce the physical weapon in every case. The Supreme Court's decision in Gulab supported reliance on reliable direct testimony while preserving circumstances in which an available but untested firearm and cartridge may make the missing forensic link material. Rakesh likewise did not treat a mismatch as automatically entitling the accused to acquittal. Devendra Singh (PW1), the injured complainant, supported the account of assault, and MLC Ex. P/3 corroborated the injury; non-recovery of the rod did not undermine that evidence taken together.

Independently, the High Court held that Sections 397 and 401 did not authorise revisiting concurrent factual findings merely because an alternative view of the evidence could be advanced. Under Bir Singh, interference required perversity or inconsistency with the record; no such defect was pointed out in relation to the injured witness and the MLC. The Court affirmed the conviction under Section 324. It also refused to reduce the trial court's three-month term: following dismissal of the appeal in 2016, Rampal had absconded until arrest in 2021, conduct that was material to the decision on sentence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the revision in limine. The judgments and the Section 324 IPC conviction and sentence were affirmed. Rampal was then on bail; his bail bonds were cancelled and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to undergo the remaining jail sentence. The trial record was ordered to be returned with a copy of the judgment for compliance.

Rampal v. State of M.P., Cr.R. no. 186/2021, 18/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (753) Prev Next

Headnote :- Unlawful assembly — Section 149 IPC — Bhargavan v. State of Kerala, (2004) 12 SCC 414, was quoted and applied: the common object of an assembly of five or more persons may develop during an incident and may be inferred from their acts, words, arms and surrounding conduct, but the first limb concerns an offence in prosecution of that object and the second requires positive knowledge of its likelihood, beyond a mere possibility. Baladin v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 181, was quoted against liability from mere presence without proof of membership in the unlawful assembly. The field dispute showed a common object to stop Gopali from ploughing. Hanumandas fired the single proved fatal shot through the thigh; the general, uncorroborated allegations that everyone fired, considered with the injuries to persons on the opposing side, did not prove that the other appellants shared a common object to kill or had the necessary knowledge that killing was likely. Their Section 302/149 convictions were set aside; Hanumandas's direct Section 302 conviction and life term stood.

Injured and inimical relatives — Raju alias Balachandran v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2012) 12 SCC 701, incorporating Dalip Singh, required scrutiny in light of the facts of each case: family ties do not mechanically discredit witnesses, while proved enmity may explain the implication of innocent persons along with the guilty. Narendra and Ramlakhan were present and injured. Their account of Hanumandas's one shot and specific injuries caused by lathi and axe matched the medical record, but the allegation of numerous other gunshots striking or nearly striking the party had no corresponding gunshot injuries; election and land disputes heightened the risk of exaggerated inclusion. The Court accepted the corroborated part of the account and did not impose constructive liability for murder on the others.

Rioting armed with deadly weapons — The Court cited Jugat Ram v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2020) 9 SCC 520, in assessing, in the circumstances of this case, an axe as an agricultural implement and the carriage of lathis during agricultural activity in a village. Mere carriage did not establish that these persons had come armed with deadly weapons for the purposes of Section 148; actual use could change that assessment. The hurt caused with lathi and axe remained proved. Santosh, Damodar and Pramod were convicted directly under Section 324 IPC and, on the State's acquittal appeal, Homesingh's acquittal was reversed to that extent; each received one year's rigorous imprisonment. The convictions under Section 148 and the broader convictions under Section 324/149 were set aside in the convicted appellants' appeals. The State did not obtain murder convictions against the previously acquitted Ramdutt or Satyaprakash.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This Division Bench decided four appeals by convicted accused (Criminal Appeal Nos. 212, 219, 268 and 285/2010) and one State appeal against partial acquittals (No. 346/2016), arising from Sessions Trial No. 165/2007, judgment of 11 March 2010. The prosecution said a large armed group arrived by Tata Sumo on 3 July 2007 as Ramgopal alias Gopali ploughed a field amid a dispute about land and its sale. Narendra (PW3), Gopali's brother, and Ramlakhan (PW6), their father, said Hanumandas fired the shot that struck Gopali's right thigh below the abdomen. The femur fractured, blood vessels were injured, and he bled to death. They also alleged many gunmen fired and that lathi/axe wielders assaulted the rescuers. Narendra and Ramlakhan had documented head and other injuries. The defence invoked election rivalry, disputed land ownership, enmity, alleged inconsistencies between claims of numerous shots and only one gunshot wound, as well as injuries to Homesingh and Munna and a claim that Rambaran was in hospital at the time. Other family witnesses asserted involvement, but the Court found that they reached the scene after the crucial shot or had serious credibility defects.

The trial court had convicted the appellants under Sections 302/149, 148 and 324/149 IPC, with life imprisonment and ₹500 fine for the murder count and one year's rigorous imprisonment for each other count. It had acquitted Homesingh, Ramdutt and Satyaprakash of the charged group offences, including Section 307/149; the State appealed with leave.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bhargavan and others v. State of Kerala, (2004) 12 SCC 414, was quoted at length and applied to Section 149 IPC. A common object, unlike common intention under Section 34, does not require prior concert; it may arise at the scene, and the number of persons, their conduct as a group, their words, the arms carried and the circumstances inform the inference. The first limb of Section 149 covers an offence in prosecution of the shared object; the second concerns an offence the members knew was likely in pursuit of it. "Knew" requires positive knowledge, not merely that a consequence might have been known or was possible. The High Court accepted stopping cultivation as the group's proved aim, then refused to extend it to the fatal shot on this record.

Baladin and others v. State of U.P., AIR 1956 SC 181, was quoted against inferring unlawful-assembly membership from physical presence alone, subject to acts or omissions establishing membership or the circumstances covered by Section 142. That principle did not negate direct evidence that some participants had caused hurt.

Raju alias Balachandran and others v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2012) 12 SCC 701, was quoted on a related and interested witness who is also inimical to the accused. Through Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, it rejects a sweeping presumption that relatives lie; ordinarily a relative would not screen the real culprit, but a personal grudge supported by the record may prompt the inclusion of another innocent person. Each witness's testimony must be assessed in light of the facts of the case. The High Court applied that distinction: the two injured relatives' specific account of Hanumandas and the assaults with lathis and an axe that were consistent with the medical evidence stood, while their collective account of numerous additional gunshots was not accepted amid proved hostility arising from election and land disputes.

Jugat Ram v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2020) 9 SCC 520, was cited in the Court's assessment of whether lathis and an axe carried at an agricultural field by these assailants established that they had come prepared with deadly weapons for the purposes of Section 148. It also cited Ram Charan v. State of U.P., Criminal Appeal No. 1164/2000, decided 23 April 2020, as contextual support.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 141 and 149 IPC concerned the disputed unlawful assembly, common object and constructive liability for murder and hurt; Section 142 was mentioned in Baladin's qualification. Section 148 IPC concerned rioting while armed with a deadly weapon. Section 302 IPC formed the basis of Hanumandas's direct conviction for murder after the Court removed the reference to constructive liability; the other appellants' Section 302/149 liability failed. Section 324 IPC governed the directly proved hurt by Santosh, Damodar, Pramod and Homesingh. Section 307/149 was among the charges in the trial and State appeal, but no Section 307 conviction was entered in the final order. The FIR and investigation also mentioned Section 147, but the final disposition records no separate Section 147 conviction. Prior criminal cases and an SC/ST Act allegation were defence material about hostility, not substantive statutory holdings here.

4. Issues : Which witnesses actually saw the fatal shot; whether their injury records and the post-mortem supported one shot by Hanumandas and assaults by named lathi/axe wielders while undermining sweeping additional firing claims; whether the group intended or positively knew that Gopali would be killed when it arrived to stop cultivation; whether kinship, combined with established animosity arising from election and land disputes, required partial rejection rather than wholesale acceptance or disbelief; whether carriage of an axe and lathis in an agricultural setting established the offence under Section 148; and whether the State could reverse the three acquittals in whole or in part.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court identified Narendra (PW3) and Ramlakhan (PW6), themselves injured, as the witnesses of the crucial shot. Other family and purported eyewitnesses arrived after hearing cries or firing, or had material delays in the recording of their statements, omissions and problems concerning their conduct. The post-mortem showed a single gunshot entrance in the inner right thigh and a large exit wound with a fracture of the femur and injury to blood vessels causing fatal blood loss. MLCs showed incised and lacerated wounds, not gunshot wounds, on Narendra and Ramlakhan. That supported Hanumandas's identified shot and particular assaults with blunt and sharp objects, but not the allegation that every named gunman fired numerous shots that supposedly hit or narrowly missed the group. The Court noted the prior election defeat, disputed temple/field sale and boundary controversy, and injuries to Homesingh and Munna. It considered the relatives' account usable in part under Raju, giving the other appellants the benefit of doubt about the exaggerated allegations of wider participation while retaining the supported part of the account.

The common purpose that the Court could infer was to stop Gopali's tractor and prevent him from cultivating the land. The ensuing dispute led Hanumandas to shoot him; on these facts the other participants were not proved to share a common object to kill or have positive knowledge that killing was likely under Bhargavan's distinct limbs. Baladin cautioned against treating mere presence as proof of membership of an unlawful assembly. The Court therefore set aside the other convicts' convictions under Sections 302/149 and 324/149 and the conviction under Section 148. Hanumandas's fatal act remained proved directly under Section 302, with life imprisonment and ₹500 fine.

Santosh, Damodar and Pramod were identified by the injured witnesses in the lathi/axe assault, and the injuries to Narendra and Ramlakhan were consistent with the medical reports. Homesingh, previously acquitted, was similarly implicated in causing hurt supported by the medical evidence. The Court reasoned that an axe in the agricultural setting and lathis commonly carried by villagers did not, by possession alone, establish that deadly weapons had been carried for the purposes of Section 148. Actual use causing hurt still sustained direct Section 324 convictions. The State appeal succeeded only as to Homesingh's Section 324 liability, leaving the acquittals of Ramdutt and Satyaprakash and the acquittals on the other more serious charges undisturbed. A hospital certificate tendered for Rambaran was denied by its purported doctor and the hospital register contained overwriting.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal appeals to the extent of setting aside Sections 302/149, 148 and 324/149 convictions of Ramprakash, Ramsuresh, Munna, Ramvaran, Pramod Kumar, Totaram, Santosh and Damodar. Santosh, Damodar and Pramod were instead convicted under Section 324 IPC and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Hanumandas Baba's criminal appeal was dismissed; his conviction was specified as direct Section 302 IPC with life imprisonment and ₹500 fine. The State's criminal appeal was partly allowed: Homesingh was convicted under Section 324 and given one year's rigorous imprisonment; no other reversal is recorded. Hanumandas was directed to surrender by 25 April 2022 to serve the remaining jail sentence, failing which the trial court could issue an arrest warrant. The four persons convicted directly under Section 324 were also directed to surrender by 25 April 2022 to serve their one-year terms, if not already served, with the same consequence for noncompliance. No fresh sentence under Sections 148, 302/149 or 324/149 remained against the relieved appellants.

Ramprakash and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 212/2010 & 219/2010 & 268/2010 & 285/2010 & 346/2016, 12/04/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (754) Prev Next

Headnote :- Unlawful assembly — common object — Section 149 IPC - Applying Bhargavan v. State of Kerala, (2004) 12 SCC 414, the Court held that an assembly's purpose can be inferred from conduct and surrounding circumstances and can develop at the scene; the first limb of Section 149 requires an offence committed in prosecution of the common object; the second requires positive knowledge that the offence was likely, rather than a mere possibility. Baladin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 181, was considered on mere presence and Section 142 membership. The established object was to stop cultivation of disputed land; Hanumandas's later fatal shot was not shown to be within the common object or to be an offence that the others positively knew was likely. Their murder convictions by constructive liability were set aside.

Related and inimical witnesses — selective credibility - Applying Raju alias Balachandran v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2012) 12 SCC 701, including its quoted discussion of Dalip Singh, the Court scrutinised the injured relatives with care because of proved land and election enmity. Relationship alone did not invalidate their account of the identified shooter and the assaults corroborated by injuries; it also did not compel acceptance of the broader, uncorroborated allegations against every alleged gunman.

Witness observation — later arrivals and material improvements - The other claimed eyewitnesses had arrived after the shot or gave materially doubtful accounts, including Manish's delayed statement and improvements. Their presence near or after the occurrence did not establish direct observation of the fatal firing.

Ocular and medical evidence — accused-specific corroboration - A single fatal gunshot wound to the thigh and the absence of firearm injury to the two injured witnesses supported the identified shooting by Hanumandas but exposed the sweeping account of repeated firing by the others to reasonable doubt. The injured witnesses' incised and lacerated wounds supported the separately identified lathi and axe assaults.

Hurt and implements — possession distinguished from proved use - The Court declined to infer a common object to murder solely from the carriage of an agricultural axe and a lathi at the field. Separately, with reference to Jugat Ram v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2020) 9 SCC 520, and Ram Charan v. State of U.P. (Allahabad High Court, 23.04.2020), it held that carrying those implements in that agricultural setting did not establish that the accused had come prepared with deadly weapons. Their proved use against the injured witnesses sustained direct Section 324 IPC liability for Santosh, Damodar, Pramod and Homesingh, while the collective convictions under Sections 302/149, 148 and 324/149 were set aside as specified in the order.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 3 July 2007 Ramgopal alias Gopali was ploughing land at Bazariya near village Dhidhona. His father Ramlakhan and brother Narendra were nearby. The parties had a dispute about the land: the complainant family asserted a temple or ancestral connection, while a sale through Hanumandas and an intermediary to Totaram's wife was contested; there was also local election rivalry. According to the prosecution, a group arrived in a Marshal/Tata Sumo, several members carrying firearms, while Santosh, Damodar and others carried lathi or axe. The tractor was stopped and Hanumandas fired one shot at Ramgopal, striking his right thigh. Narendra and Ramlakhan sustained injuries in the ensuing altercation. The dehati nalishi led to Crime No. 34/2007 at Pavai under IPC provisions including Sections 302, 307, 147, 148 and 149. Ramgopal died, and the post-mortem attributed death to a gunshot wound fracturing the femur and damaging blood vessels with excessive bleeding.

The prosecution examined fifteen witnesses and the defence three. Narendra (PW-3) and Ramlakhan (PW-6) were injured witnesses. Other relatives or asserted observers included Guddan (PW-4), Surendra (PW-5), Manish (PW-8) and Shashikant (PW-15). The defence alleged false implication because of the land and election disputes, challenged the omnibus firing allegation given the single firearm injury and the absence of gunshot injuries to the two injured witnesses, and relied on inconsistencies and delayed or improved accounts. Evidence also showed injuries to Homesingh and Munna on the accused side; the investigating officer had not established who inflicted them. The trial court's judgment of 11 March 2010 convicted the appellants under Sections 302/149, 148 and 324/149 IPC and acquitted Homesingh, Ramdutt and Satyaprakash. Four conviction appeals under Section 374 CrPC (Nos. 212, 219, 268 and 285 of 2010) and the State's appeal against the three acquittals (No. 346 of 2016) were decided together.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bhargavan v. State of Kerala, (2004) 12 SCC 414, was quoted and applied to Section 149 IPC. The common object need not be preceded by a meeting of minds and may emerge during the occurrence; it is inferred from the assembly's acts, language, arms and behaviour. The first limb requires the offence to be committed in prosecution of that object. The second requires knowledge that the offence was likely to be committed in prosecution of the common object; the quoted passage stresses that 'knew' demands positive knowledge, not what merely might have been known. The Court used these distinctions to refuse to impute Hanumandas's killing to the other appellants.

Baladin v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 1956 SC 181, was quoted on the point that mere presence in an assembly does not, without an act or omission establishing membership or circumstances covered by Section 142 IPC, make a person a member of an unlawful assembly. The Court considered it alongside the common-object analysis; it did not treat mere arrival in the vehicle as conclusive of shared murder liability.

Raju alias Balachandran v. State of Tamil Nadu, (2012) 12 SCC 701, was quoted and applied for careful scrutiny of a related witness who also has enmity with the accused. The quotation reproduces Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab, 1954 SCR 145, which rejects a general assumption that relatives are unreliable but acknowledges that established animosity can motivate implication of an innocent person; each case turns on its facts. The Court accepted the injured relatives' corroborated account of the fatal shot and assault while rejecting their expanded account of other firing.

Jugat Ram v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2020) 9 SCC 520, and the Allahabad High Court's Ram Charan v. State of U.P. (Criminal Appeal No. 1164 of 2000, decided 23 April 2020) were referred to when the Court assessed carrying an axe or lathi in an agricultural setting. It then distinguished carrying the implements from their proved use to cause hurt.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 141, 142 and 149 IPC governed unlawful assembly, membership and constructive liability. The judgment distinguished an offence committed in pursuit of a common object from an offence members positively knew was likely; it also considered that an object may arise during the occurrence. Section 302 IPC governed the fatal shooting. Sections 148 and 324 IPC concerned the charges of rioting while armed with a deadly weapon and causing hurt; the final order replaced the collective Section 324/149 conviction with direct Section 324 convictions for the four persons found to have assaulted the injured. Section 307 IPC appeared among the FIR and acquittal charges but was not sustained or separately reasoned as a final conviction. Section 374 CrPC supplied the conviction-appeal jurisdiction; the State appealed the acquittals after leave.

4. Issues : First, whether the prosecution had reliably established Hanumandas as the shooter and proved the alleged participation of the remaining appellants, given the injured witnesses' family relationship, prior disputes, the medical findings and the accounts of the other asserted eyewitnesses. Second, whether the common object of the persons who came to the field was to kill Ramgopal, or whether his killing could otherwise be imputed to them under the two limbs of Section 149 IPC. Third, whether the lathi and axe bearers' possession and actual assaults justified the collective convictions or distinct Section 324 liability. Fourth, whether the State's challenge to the three acquittals succeeded on the evidence as to each acquitted person.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found that only Narendra and Ramlakhan witnessed the fatal firing and were themselves injured. Guddan and the others reached after the shot or failed to establish reliable observation; Manish's police statement was recorded after a substantial delay and omitted important particulars, Shashikant acknowledged that no assault took place before him, and Surendra's own account placed him away when the firing occurred. The injured witnesses consistently identified Hanumandas as the person whose shot hit Ramgopal. The post-mortem showed one gunshot injury in the right thigh and fatal vessel damage. Narendra's and Ramlakhan's incised and lacerated wounds were compatible with sharp and blunt assaults. Those parts of their account were corroborated, despite their relationship to the deceased.

The Court also found established enmity concerning both land and the Sarpanch election. It applied Raju's cautious, case-specific approach without discarding all related testimony. The assertion that several other armed accused fired repeatedly at the deceased and injured witnesses was inconsistent with the single gunshot wound to the deceased, the absence of gunshot wounds to Narendra and Ramlakhan, and the absence of other corroboration. Against the background of enmity, the Court treated that part as exaggeration and gave the other alleged gunmen the benefit of doubt.

The evidence showed that the immediate purpose in approaching the tractor was to stop ploughing on disputed land; a dispute then arose and Hanumandas fired the fatal shot. Under Bhargavan and Baladin, arrival together, arms and presence alone could not establish that the other appellants shared an object to kill or positively knew that the killing was likely. Hanumandas remained personally answerable for murder, but the Section 302/149 convictions of the others could not stand. The Court also declined to infer that they had come prepared with deadly weapons merely because some persons carried lathi and an agricultural axe at the field, referring briefly to Jugat Ram and Ram Charan. It separately accepted the injured witnesses' medically supported identification of Santosh, Damodar, Pramod and Homesingh as assailants who used lathi or axe. Homesingh's trial acquittal could not be sustained for that hurt despite the enmity concern. The proof did not similarly justify disturbing the acquittals of Ramdutt and Satyaprakash. The Court's order differentiated personal murder liability, direct hurt liability, and unproved collective liability.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal appeals to the extent that the convictions and sentences of Ramprakash, Ramsuresh, Munna, Ramvaran, Pramod Kumar, Totaram, Santosh and Damodar under Sections 302/149, 148 and 324/149 IPC were set aside. Pramod, Santosh and Damodar were convicted under Section 324 IPC and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment. Hanumandas Baba's criminal appeal was dismissed, but he was convicted under Section 302 IPC with life imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500. The State's criminal appeal was partly allowed only as to Homesingh, who was convicted under Section 324 IPC and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment; the acquittals of Ramdutt and Satyaprakash were left undisturbed. Hanumandas was directed to surrender by 25 April 2022 to serve the remaining life sentence. Santosh, Damodar, Pramod and Homesingh were directed to surrender by the same date to serve the one-year term if not already served. The trial court could issue arrest warrants on default.

Ramprakash and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 212/2010 & 219/2010 & 268/2010 & 285/2010 & 346/2016, 12/04/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (755) Prev Next

Headnote :- Arrest — police discretion under Section 41 CrPC — Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, which quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, the Court held that a cognizable FIR does not require immediate mechanical arrest. Statutory power is exercised cautiously in light of necessity, offence, liberty and reputation. The complainant's Section 482 request to compel arrest in Crime No. 05/2022 was refused, without forbidding a later lawful arrest.

Investigation — no predetermined charge sheet — D. Venkatasubramaniam was also applied for the distinct rule that courts ordinarily do not direct police to record particular evidence, seize property, arrest or file a charge sheet: investigation may end in a charge sheet or a closure report on its findings. The quoted Supreme Court decision noted the need for reasons and an opportunity to hear persons likely to be affected by drastic orders, referring to Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542. An order compelling both arrest and challan would improperly supervise this investigation; the Court declined it.

Section 173(1) CrPC — completion without unnecessary delay — The Court nonetheless applied the statutory duty to conclude investigation promptly and submit an appropriate final report. It directed the investigating officer to complete the case as early as possible and take lawful necessary steps, leaving the decision between closure and charge sheet open. The complainant could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, for consideration of any grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramprakash Singh Gurjar complained that, after his report led to registration of Crime No. 05/2022 at Police Station Behat, Gwalior, under Sections 427, 323, 294, 506 read with 34 IPC, police had taken no further effective action and had not arrested the named suspects. In a Section 482 CrPC application he sought a direction to respondent No. 2 to arrest them and file a challan before the competent court at the earliest. The question was the scope of judicial control over arrest, the form of the police's final report, and the pace of investigation.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted at length and applied. That Supreme Court case set aside a High Court order telling police to record statements, arrest, seize property and file a charge sheet on a schedule without sufficient reasons. Police have a statutory duty to investigate but ordinarily decide their own steps, and the product may be a charge sheet if the case is supported or a closure report if it is not. Section 482 is exercised sparingly for its stated purposes, not to predetermine the course of an investigation or require it to proceed from a chosen angle. The Supreme Court also faulted an order with drastic consequences for persons not heard and warned about casual superior-court observations influencing investigation. The present Court used the limits on judicial directions concerning investigation and arrest stated in D. Venkatasubramaniam to refuse Ramprakash's requested commands.

Within that passage, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, supplied the Section 41 CrPC distinction between permission to arrest in enumerated situations and an obligation to arrest immediately on an FIR. Cautious exercise depends on the nature of the accusation, necessity and the individual because arrest affects liberty and reputation. The High Court incorporated that distinction in its refusal. D. Venkatasubramaniam also quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on hearing a person likely to be affected before a judicial order setting drastic criminal process in motion.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the jurisdiction invoked; it did not authorise this complainant to control arrest or guarantee a charge sheet. Section 41 CrPC, through M.C. Abraham, gives police an arrest power and discretion in prescribed circumstances rather than an unconditional duty. Section 173(1) CrPC expressly requires every investigation under the chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay; the Court used it for the limited timing direction. The appropriate final report could be a closure report or charge sheet according to investigation. Sections 427, 323, 294, 506 and 34 IPC identify the FIR's allegations and common-intention allegation, but their elements were not determined.

4. Issues : Whether a complainant can compel police by an order under Section 482 to arrest named persons and submit a charge sheet once an FIR is registered; how the cautious Section 41 arrest discretion and possible closure outcome constrain that relief; and whether the Court may still require completion without unnecessary delay under Section 173(1) while leaving investigative choices to the officer.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected arrest as an automatic consequence of the FIR. D. Venkatasubramaniam and its M.C. Abraham quotation show that an investigator may assess circumstances before deciding whether arrest is legally necessary. The requested order would have selected both a coercive step and the final prosecutorial outcome before investigation was complete. Because the police can lawfully conclude that no case warrants a charge sheet, such an order would amount to judicial supervision and predetermine the investigation.

The Court then applied Section 173(1): police may not leave the investigation pending unnecessarily. It directed the officer to complete it as soon as possible, choose the legally appropriate final report, and take necessary steps under law. This limited instruction controls timeliness and statutory compliance without ordering arrest, seizure or a challan. It left a grievance route to the Superintendent of Police. The factual assertion of police inactivity was not converted into a merits finding that the FIR allegations were established.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the application. The requested arrest and compulsory charge-sheet directions were denied. The investigating officer was directed to conclude Crime No. 05/2022 as early as possible and take the necessary lawful steps, with the choice of charge sheet or closure left to the evidence and law. Ramprakash could make an application to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, about any remaining grievance.

Ramprakash Singh Gurjar v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 15039/2022, 30/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (757) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — offence disclosed by allegations taken at face value and exceptional intervention — Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Koveuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2011) 12 SCC 437, was quoted and applied on the wide inherent power to be exercised sparingly to prevent abuse or secure justice, including the R.P. Kapur illustrations of legal bar or allegations that disclose no offence. It explained Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia v. Sambhajirao Chandrojirao Angre, (1988) 1 SCC 692, through State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma: its special, predominantly civil context does not create a universal licence to predict conviction by weighing contested proof. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, and Vinod Raghuvanshi v. Ajay Arora, (2013) 10 SCC 581, were also applied against prematurely stifling an investigation with substantial allegations. A hospital OPD slip and register entry were allegedly fabricated to place Ragini Pandey in hospital during an earlier assault, and a medical certificate was used to secure anticipatory bail later cancelled after an enquiry. The material supported prima facie prosecution of the applicant under Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B IPC; the FIR was not quashed.

No mini-trial — defence representation and medical records — Padal Venkata, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan and Vinod Raghuvanshi precluded determining the reliability of witnesses and documents or the prospects of ultimate conviction at the quashing stage. Smt. Nagawwa v. Veeranna Shivalingappa Konjalgi, AIR 1976 SC 1947, was quoted for the related limit on examining defence documents when reviewing process at the Section 202 complaint stage; the present case was an FIR investigation, so that authority supplied caution by analogy. The present Court found the allegation of a forged OPD slip and the institutional enquiry sufficient to allow the prosecution to proceed. The applicant's omission to disclose an earlier rejection of his own anticipatory-bail application was noted as a clean-hands concern, not made a substitute for the offence analysis.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramprasad Jatav and others applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 101/2018 at Police Station Dabra City, Gwalior, under Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B IPC. The alleged fabrication grew out of another case, Crime No. 455/2017, in which Ragini and Dharmendra Pandey and others were accused of assault at about 5 p.m. on 4 June 2017. The new case alleged that they and Dr Virendra Gaud, a doctor at Civil Hospital Dabra, colluded to create a certificate showing Ragini's hospital admission from 9 a.m. that day to 10 a.m. the following day, furnishing an alibi. The applicant was accused of making a forged OPD slip or hospital-register entry to support the document. Ragini used the medical certificate for anticipatory bail in M.Cr.C. No. 7358/2017, granted 10 July 2017; after a State enquiry found the certificate forged, the High Court cancelled bail on 27 March 2018 in M.Cr.C. No. 9375/2017. The Supreme Court dismissed her special-leave challenge on 12 June 2018 and granted time to surrender.

Ramprasad's counsel said he was a driver with no responsibility for making OPD entries. His son's representation to the Superintendent of Police asserted that Dr Gaud and Jaswant Jatav fabricated medical material for money and that the doctor was shifting blame. The State relied on the enquiry and the use of the certificate in court. The judgment also noted that Ramprasad had not disclosed the rejection of his own anticipatory-bail application, M.Cr.C. No. 23726/2019, on 28 June 2019. The Court invoked a clean-hands principle but then proceeded to the prima facie merits; nondisclosure was not its sole ground.

The underlying assault case initially involved Sections 324, 323, 294, 341 and 506/34 IPC, with Sections 326 and 307 added after the injured person's medical report. In dismissing Ragini's special-leave challenge on 12 June 2018, the Supreme Court allowed seven days to surrender. Those proceedings concerned Ragini's bail and did not decide Ramprasad's guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Koveuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2011) 12 SCC 437, was quoted extensively and supplied the central Section 482 framework. It describes three statutory purposes: giving effect to a Code order, preventing abuse of a court's process and securing justice. The power is wide but discretionary and exceptional; it is not an appeal on disputed facts, cannot override an effective specific statutory remedy or be used inconsistently with the Code, and should not predict conviction by conducting a meticulous examination of the merits. Its reproduced R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab categories include a legal bar, face-value allegations not constituting the offence, no legal evidence or evidence that plainly fails to prove the charge, and abuse or justice concerns. The High Court accepted that framework, not an automatic rule that every allegation of false implication requires quashing.

Padal Venkata reproduced State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy on preventing a proceeding becoming a weapon of harassment, and State of Orissa v. Saroj Kumar Sahoo on avoiding an early probability calculation and treating alleged informant mala fides as secondary. It discussed Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia v. Sambhajirao Chandrojirao Angre, (1988) 1 SCC 692, and explained it through State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222. Madhavrao's reference to special features and bleak conviction prospects in a predominantly civil dispute does not establish a universal power to weigh contested evidence and predict acquittal at the outset.

State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, was separately quoted: Section 482 does not confer arbitrary power, and absent gross investigative abuse a court should be slow to interrupt an early investigation where allegations taken at face value disclose an offence. Its nested State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha discussion explains why gathering material for a disclosed offence ordinarily should continue; Jeffrey J. Diermeier restates sparing inherent power. Vinod Raghuvanshi v. Ajay Arora, (2013) 10 SCC 581, was also separately quoted and applied: a prosecution at its initial stage, supported by allegations of substance, should not be stifled by examining the likely proof or probability of conviction; uncontroverted allegations must first be tested for a prima facie offence. The present Court found the hospital fabrication accusation and enquiry to pass that threshold. It did not adopt a categorical ban on quashing every early investigation, as both authorities preserve exceptional abuse and absent-ingredient cases.

Smt. Nagawwa v. Veeranna Shivalingappa Konjalgi, AIR 1976 SC 1947, was quoted about a High Court impermissibly weighing defence documents, contradictions and probabilities when quashing process issued after a Section 202 CrPC complaint inquiry. This case involved an FIR and Section 482 application, so the High Court used the caution against conducting a mini-trial by analogy.

The nested authorities in Padal Venkata include R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866; State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy, (1977) 2 SCC 699; and State of Orissa v. Saroj Kumar Sahoo, (2005) 13 SCC 540. They supply the recognised grounds of a legal bar, absence of offence ingredients and abuse of process and the restraint against premature probability assessment, rather than separate factual findings about this alleged hospital fabrication.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC supplied the inherent quashing jurisdiction. Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B IPC were the charged cheating, forgery of documents or public records, forgery for cheating and conspiracy allegations on which the Court found sufficient prima facie material for prosecution. Sections 324, 323, 294, 341, 506/34 and later 326/307 IPC belonged to the underlying 2017 assault case, not the charges decided here. Section 438 CrPC explained Ragini's and the applicant's anticipatory-bail proceedings. Section 202 CrPC appeared inside Nagawwa's complaint-process setting, not the procedural stage of this FIR. Article 226 was mentioned in the P.P. Sharma passage quoted in Padal Venkata as an alternative constitutional route in other circumstances, not the application here.

4. Issues : Whether the allegations that the applicant prepared a false OPD slip or register entry, forming part of a forged hospital alibi certificate used for anticipatory bail, disclosed offences warranting investigation or prosecution; whether the Court should accept his contention that he was only a driver and his son's accusations against the doctor or another worker at the Section 482 stage; and whether the broad inherent jurisdiction or the reference to special features in Madhavrao justified ending this case before contested facts were tried.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court viewed the alleged creation of a false hospital stay for an accused at the time of an earlier assault as a direct attempt to influence judicial process through a public hospital record. It noted the use of the certificate in a bail hearing, the subsequent State enquiry finding fabrication and bail cancellation. The allegation against Ramprasad was concrete: he prepared an OPD slip or entry supporting that certificate, and the in-house enquiry found the register entries fabricated. His claim about his occupational role and his allegations against Dr Gaud or Jaswant Jatav raised a disputed factual defence. Under Padal Venkata, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan and Vinod Raghuvanshi, the Court would not resolve those competing accounts by weighing probabilities or trying the disputed authorship of the documents under Section 482. Nagawwa reinforced caution against using defence assertions to undo criminal process prematurely, with its distinct complaint-stage context acknowledged.

The Court also criticised the applicant's failure to mention his own prior anticipatory-bail rejection, but paragraph 13 returned to the alleged OPD fabrication and enquiry. It concluded only that enough material existed prima facie for Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B prosecution. Nor did the Supreme Court's refusal of Ragini's special-leave challenge amount to an independent adjudication of Ramprasad's responsibility.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The FIR in Crime No. 101/2018 and prosecution under Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B IPC were not quashed.

Ramprasad Jatav and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 9138/2021, 17/02/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (758) Prev Next

Headnote :- Charge — strong suspicion — limited sifting - M.E. Shivalingamurthy v CBI, (2020) 2 SCC 768, with its discussion of P. Vijayan, Sudershan Chakkar and Debendra Nath Padhi, requires prosecution material supporting grave suspicion and judicial sifting to determine whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclose the offence ingredients. It excludes a roving inquiry into the merits and consideration of defence evidence at the §227 CrPC stage. Soma Chakravarty v State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, requires accused-specific prima facie material and distinguishes material indicating possible commission of an offence from the proof required for conviction. State (NCT of Delhi) v Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, with Ramesh Singh and Dipakbhai Patel, confirms the scope for limited weighing, the need for material capable of being translated into evidence at trial, and the exclusion of an assessment of the probable defence. The CMHO inquiry was charge-stage material concerning the hospital register, not a merits determination.

Evidence Act Sections 25–26 — departmental statement - A co-accused's statement to a non-police departmental inquiry officer, outside police custody, did not fall within the prohibitions in those provisions concerning confessions to police officers or while in police custody. Its account of Ramprasad's OPD-register duties could be considered in the inquiry report for charge purposes, while the report's findings themselves still required proof at trial.

Handwriting proof — expert opinion - Manorama Naik v State of Odisha, Criminal Appeal 423/2022 (14.03.2022), explained that Evidence Act sections 45, 47 and 73 provide modes of proving handwriting or signatures beyond an expert opinion. The report attributing entries to another person was an opinion and was not before the trial court when charges were framed; it did not conclusively negate the material available at that stage or decide the trial issue.

Criminal revision — charge order - State of Rajasthan v Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, rejects a test requiring certainty of guilt under section 397 CrPC at the charge stage. The revision against charges under IPC sections 120-B, 420, 467, 468 and 471 was dismissed; all defences were reserved and no High Court observation was to be treated as a merits finding.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In an earlier section 307 IPC prosecution, Ragini Pandey sought anticipatory bail using a medical certificate suggesting that she was hospitalised at Civil Hospital, Dabra at the incident time. The Sessions Court refused bail but the High Court granted it on 10 July 2017. Respondent no. 2 then sought cancellation, alleging that the certificate and hospital records had been falsified to secure bail.

A CMHO-directed inquiry found the hospital records manipulated; co-accused Dr Virendra Gaur stated in the departmental inquiry that Ramprasad Jatav, formally a driver, also maintained names in the OPD register. The High Court cancelled Ragini's bail on 27 March 2018; the Supreme Court dismissed her SLP on 12 June 2018 with liberty to surrender. Following the inquiry, Dabra police registered Crime 101/2018 concerning the alleged false medical certificate and official records. The charge sheet implicated Ramprasad and others. On 8 January 2022 the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Dabra, S.T. 104/2021, framed a charge of conspiracy and charges of cheating, forgery and use of forged documents read with conspiracy under IPC sections 120-B, 420, 467, 468 and 471; Ramprasad invoked sections 397 and 401 CrPC. He argued that Dr Gaur's inquiry statement was barred by Evidence Act sections 25–26, he was only a driver with no register duties, and a handwriting expert attributed the entries to Dr Gaur rather than him. The State and complainant distinguished the non-police inquiry and said expert opinion was not conclusive.

2. Precedents — Considered : M.E. Shivalingamurthy v CBI, Bengaluru, (2020) 2 SCC 768, was quoted for the section 227 discharge/charge test: if the prosecution's material, taken at face value, could not establish commission of the offence, there is no ground to proceed, while material supporting strong or grave suspicion suffices without assessing its probative value as at trial. A judge must sift for offence ingredients, broad probabilities and basic infirmities, not act as a prosecution post office or conduct a roving inquiry. Its discussion of P. Vijayan v State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398, developed the distinction between mere suspicion and grave suspicion; its references to State of J&K v Sudershan Chakkar, (1995) 4 SCC 181, and State of Orissa v Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, confined charge-stage consideration to the prosecution record and excluded a right to introduce defence documents. The High Court used this composite framework to resist a premature exoneration based on competing interpretations of the inquiry.

Soma Chakravarty v State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, was quoted for the distinction between material indicating that an accused might have committed an offence (charge) and proof beyond reasonable doubt (conviction), and for a judicially reasoned, accused-specific basis rather than suspicion alone. State (NCT of Delhi) v Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, quoted State of Bihar v Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39, and Dipakbhai Jagdishchandra Patel v State of Gujarat, (2019) 16 SCC 547: limited sifting and weighing may ask whether the facts, taken at face value, disclose the offence, but no meticulous credibility assessment, weighing of the probable defence or certainty of conviction is required; the strong suspicion must rest on material capable of translation into evidence at trial. The Court adopted this preliminary standard and expressly preserved trial proof.

State of Rajasthan v Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, addressed section 397 revision when a charge has been framed: the revisional judge tests material supporting strong suspicion of an offence that could be proved at trial, not the final test of guilt. This directly limited interference in Ramprasad's revision. Manorama Naik v State of Odisha, Criminal Appeal 423/2022, order of 14 March 2022, explained that Evidence Act sections 45, 47 and 73 offer ways to prove handwriting or signatures and expert opinion is not exclusive; the High Court applied it to the report naming Dr Gaur, while separately observing that this report had not been before the trial court at charge framing. The earlier Ragini bail and cancellation orders and Supreme Court dismissal of her SLP were case history, not legal precedents used to establish Ramprasad's guilt.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC §227 supplied the discharge/charge threshold as explained by the Supreme Court precedents, and sections 397 and 401 supplied the High Court's criminal revision jurisdiction. Evidence Act section 25 prohibits proof against an accused of a confession made to a police officer; section 26 likewise restricts a confession made in police custody unless immediately before a Magistrate. Neither prohibition was triggered by Dr Gaur's statement to a departmental officer when not in police custody. The inquiry statement/report could inform charge-stage assessment but was not substantive proof of its contents: the prosecution must prove them at trial. Evidence Act sections 45, 47 and 73 concerned expert opinion, handwriting familiarity and judicial comparison as potential means of proving a signature or writing. IPC Sections 120-B, 420, 467, 468 and 471 identified the conspiracy, cheating, forgery and use-of-forged-document charges framed by the trial court. IPC section 307 belonged to the earlier offence underlying Ragini's bail application, not the forgery revision charge.

4. Issues : (1) Whether the charge-stage record created legally sufficient, individualised strong suspicion against Ramprasad despite his nominal driver appointment and claim of no OPD-register duties. (2) Whether Evidence Act sections 25–26 prohibited the use of Dr Gaur's statement in an inquiry run by non-police health officers and, if not, whether the report was proof at trial or only preliminary material. (3) Whether an expert opinion attributing the entries to Dr Gaur, unavailable to the trial court at charge framing, compelled discharge or could be examined with other handwriting proof at trial. (4) Whether the limited section 397/401 revisional standard allowed the High Court to overturn the charges by resolving such factual disputes now.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied M.E. Shivalingamurthy, Soma Chakravarty and Shiv Charan Bansal to require prosecution material capable of supporting grave suspicion, while forbidding a premature weighing of credibility or probable defence. The health inquiry, made part of the case diary, recorded both alleged manipulation of the Civil Hospital record and a duty attributed to Ramprasad to enter patient names in the OPD register. His official driver designation did not, at this stage, conclusively exclude additional register work; the Court noted possible temporary allocation due to staffing constraints. It read Evidence Act sections 25 –26 according to their conditions concerning a police officer or police custody: Dr Gaur had spoken to a District Leprosy Officer/DHO who was neither police nor holding him in police custody. The statement could therefore be considered for the inquiry report's limited charge-stage purpose. Crucially, the report was not itself substantive evidence, so its assertions remained for the prosecution to prove in trial. Manorama Naik prevented treating handwriting expert opinion as the sole route to identifying a writer; the report relied on was not before the trial court when charges were framed and, even if considered as an opinion, did not by itself negate the other prima facie material. Fatehkaran Mehdu required the revision inquiry to focus on strong suspicion founded on material, rather than certainty of guilt. Sufficient preliminary material remained to require trial on the framed charges. Its observations were expressly confined to charge-stage review; the applicant retained all lawful defences.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision and the 8 January 2022 charge-framing order in S.T. 104/2021 stood. The High Court expressly directed that its observations not be treated as findings on merits and left the applicant free to raise all lawful defences before the trial court. It expressly directed that its observations not be treated as findings on merits and left the applicant free to raise all defences before the trial court in accordance with law.

Ramprasad Jatav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., Cr.R. no. 600/2022, 25/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (761) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence — complete chain - Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, supplied the five strict conditions; Pudhu Raja v State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, rejected grave suspicion as proof; Ram Singh v Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, and Inspector of Police v John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, required clinching links that exclude reasonable innocence. John David reproduced the formulations in Ram Balak, C. Chenga Reddy, Padala Veera Reddy, Raja Ram and Jagbir Singh. The Court examined each claimed link and upheld the convictions on reliable identification of the accused and supporting firearm evidence despite the failed stolen-article link.

Property identification — mangalsutra - Seizure from Ramdas was established, but Radha was shown the item by the police before the parade, described only one article there, and never identified it in court; the parade officer was not examined. Ashish Batham v State of M.P., (2002) 7 SCC 317, required caution about an identification parade without comparable articles. Rajesh v State of Haryana, (2021) 1 SCC 118, and Dana Yadav v State of Bihar, (2002) 7 SCC 295, distinguish substantive in-court identification from investigative corroboration; Evidence Act section 9 and CrPC section 162 informed the Court's rejection of the police identification and the unreliable later parade. The recovery consequently ceased to link Ramdas to the stolen mangalsutra.

Identification of accused — prior display — injured eyewitness - C. Muniappan v State of T.N., (2010) 9 SCC 567, rendered Munni Devi’s parade identification ineffective because she had already seen the arrested men. Dataram denied exposure and identified the three in a parade and in court with distinct assigned acts; the parade officer supported him despite misaligned memo annotations. Noorahammad v State of Karnataka, (2016) 3 SCC 325, applying Dana Yadav, treats prior identification as prudential corroboration, subject to reliable observation exceptions. Baleshwar Mahto v State of Bihar, (2017) 3 SCC 152, with Abdul Sayeed and Jarnail Singh, supported the reliability of his account, given his presence confirmed by injury, subject to major contradictions. The medical wounds, close view and recorded light sustained the identity finding; Ramesh v State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, was cited on rural witnesses' ability to identify in limited light, although here the light was expressly on.

Ballistics — distinct arms liability - The spot cartridge was forensically matched to the pistol recovered from Kunjilal; the bullet comparison was only approximate because rifling marks were inadequate. Dataram's evidence and Hotam's fatal firearm injury corroborated use. Due prosecution sanction was recorded. All appellants' IPC section 396 with MPDVPK Act section 11/13 convictions and life sentences stood; Kunjilal's additional Arms Act section 25(1-B)(a) and section 27 convictions and concurrent seven-year terms stood.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In the early hours of 20 November 2006, five intruders entered Dataram's home, where Mangal and Radha slept downstairs with their infant. According to the prosecution witnesses, the intruders took jewellery, cash and a phone; Dataram, Mangal, Radha and Munni Devi were hurt. Dataram described sharp-weapon blows to his head by Ramdas and an older assailant, later identified as Ramratan, and a firearm held by Kunjilal. Munni suffered a through-and-through gunshot wound to her hand, with Mangal injured on the jaw. When the men fled, Hotam pursued them and was shot in the chest. Post-mortem showed damage to the lungs and heart, shock and haemorrhage, and a homicidal death. The FIR named unknown offenders but asserted an ability to identify them. The police seized a cartridge and bullet from the scene; recovered a pistol from Kunjilal and a mangalsutra from Ramdas; conducted person and article parades; obtained forensic evidence; and charged three apprehended men while investigation continued against the others. The trial court framed IPC section 395, 396 and 397 with MPDVPK Act section 11/13, and Arms Act charges. On 2 December 2011 the Special Judge (MPDVPK Act), Bhind, in Special Sessions Trial 23/2007, convicted all three under IPC section 396 read with MPDVPK Act section 11/13 and sentenced each to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Kunjilal was additionally convicted under Arms Act section 25(1-B)(a), and separately under section 27 read with the MPDVPK provisions. For each Arms conviction, he was sentenced to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default. All sentences awarded to him were to run concurrently. The appellants' section 374 CrPC appeal attacked the accused and property identification, recoveries and completeness of the chain; the State invoked ocular and FSL corroboration.

2. Precedents — Considered : On circumstantial proof, Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, was quoted for five prerequisites: proven, conclusive circumstances consistent with guilt alone and a complete chain excluding a reasonable innocence hypothesis; "may be" guilt falls short of "must be." Pudhu Raja v State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, required reliable and clinching proof of each link and disallowed even grave suspicion as a substitute. Ram Singh v Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, likewise warned against conjecture filling a missing link. Inspector of Police v John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, repeated that rule and quoted the synthesis in State of U.P. v Ram Balak, which itself recalled the conclusive, no-gap tests of C. Chenga Reddy, Padala Veera Reddy and Sharad Sarda and cited State of Rajasthan v Raja Ram and State of Haryana v Jagbir Singh.

For property identity, Ashish Batham v State of M.P., (2002) 7 SCC 317, cautioned that a chain with a distinctive iron-wire hook had not been mixed with genuinely comparable chains, weakening that test. The Court applied this caution to Radha's description of a one-item mangalsutra display despite the memo's statement that similar articles had been mixed, and the parade officer's absence. Rajesh v State of Haryana, (2021) 1 SCC 118, set out that a parade tests memory at investigation, should ordinarily follow arrest promptly without prior display, is not statutorily compelled, is governed by CrPC section 162, and may corroborate, while in-court identification is substantive; omission of a parade does not automatically make in-court evidence inadmissible and weight depends on the case. Dana Yadav v State of Bihar, (2002) 7 SCC 295, explained Evidence Act section 9 relevance, the in-court/parade distinction and the ordinary prudential need for corroboration where a witness identifies strangers. The Court used these principles both to reject the article identification and later to evaluate the accused separately. It held police identification unavailable as corroboration and a subsequent display-tainted parade untrustworthy.

Baleshwar Mahto v State of Bihar, (2017) 3 SCC 152, reproduced Abdul Sayeed v State of M.P. and its discussion of Jarnail Singh v State of Punjab: proof that a witness was injured supports the witness's presence and ordinarily the reliability of the account, but strong grounds such as major contradictions can discredit the account. The High Court used that principle for Dataram's evidence and medical corroboration, without accepting Munni's identity evidence after a separate defect. C. Muniappan v State of T.N., (2010) 9 SCC 567, held that a parade after the suspect or photograph has been shown to the witness loses its investigative purpose and stressed keeping a suspect screened before the parade. It was applied to Munni Devi's admitted pre-parade viewing, but not extended by speculation to Dataram. Noorahammad v State of Karnataka, (2016) 3 SCC 325, quoted Dana Yadav in depth: first-time in-court identification of a stranger normally needs earlier corroboration as prudence, not an absolute admissibility rule; a trustworthy witness's sustained observation, interaction or distinctive features can justify an exception. The High Court used it to support Dataram's independently corroborated identification. Ramesh v State, (2010) 15 SCC 49, was cited for the contextual ability of rural witnesses to identify in poor light; here the spot map and Dataram said a light was on, and victims saw intruders at close quarters.

3. Statutes considered : IPC section 396 governed the dacoity-murder conviction of all three; section 395 and 397 were earlier registered/framed charge provisions but no distinct final conviction under them was affirmed in the operative order. MPDVPK Act section 11/13 accompanied the section 396 conviction and Kunjilal's section 27 Arms Act conviction. Arms Act section 25(1-B)(a) and section 27 supported only Kunjilal's additional possession/use convictions, with due sanction for prosecution noted, but without a detailed separate licence or sanction analysis. Evidence Act section 9 made facts identifying a person or thing relevant, while CrPC section 162 affected the worth of police-stage identification as corroboration; a later fair parade remains investigative corroboration and in-court identification substantive. The investigating officer proved Kunjilal's section 27 Evidence Act memorandum and pistol recovery. CrPC section 313 examination initially omitted the FSL report; once the trial court exhibited it as C-1/C-2, further questions were put to Kunjilal. The High Court exercised appellate jurisdiction under CrPC section 374.

4. Issues : (1) Was Hotam's death homicidal, and did the witnesses' injuries corroborate presence and their account of the assault? (2) Under the circumstantial-evidence principles cited, were the recoveries, identities and forensic evidence individually reliable and jointly sufficient? (3) Was the mangalsutra proved as Radha's stolen property where police showed it before a delayed article parade, she described no comparable items, the officer did not testify, and there was no in-court production? (4) Did Munni's admitted pre-parade exposure also invalidate Dataram's distinct person identification, given his denials, parade memo alignment objections and his in-court account assigning different acts to the accused? (5) What did the pistol/cartridge comparison prove, despite an inconclusive bullet-to-weapon comparison, and did it sustain Kunjilal's Arms charges? (6) Did lighting and the witnesses' opportunity to see support identification, and should the trial convictions and sentences be disturbed? No independent defence trial evidence was led; the appeal sought reversal, while the State supported the judgment and relied on the forensic report.

5. Ratio / Findings : The post-mortem described the bullet traversing the chest and damaging both lungs and heart, an injury sufficient in the ordinary course to cause death; the doctor considered death nearly immediate. MLCs documented Munni's hand gunshot injury, Mangal's jaw wound, Radha's neck/scapula injuries and two bleeding, bone-deep incised wounds on Dataram's skull. The Court found their presence established, while evaluating their identity evidence separately. It recited Sharad Sarda, Pudhu Raja, Ram Singh and John David to insist on established, coherent circumstances rather than an inference built on suspicion. Gopal and Ramhet supported seizure of the mangalsutra from Ramdas; their kinship with Hotam, without demonstrated interested falsehood, did not by itself disprove recovery. But Radha admitted seeing the item in the hands of the police before a parade three months later, described one object on a table despite the memo's statement of three similar ones, and the conducting Tahsildar was not examined. Crucially the mangalsutra was never produced and identified in court. Under Ashish Batham's comparator caution and Rajesh/Dana Yadav's investigation-versus-substantive evidence distinction, the article parade could not establish the item's identity and the recovered article lost its incriminating effect. The Court carefully separated proof of seizure from proof that the recovered article was the stolen property.

Gopal, Ramhet and the investigating officer established Kunjilal's pistol seizure. Seizure of a fired cartridge and bullet from the spot was not meaningfully challenged. FSL C-1 linked the cartridge to the pistol; a bloodstained bullet had barrel marks, but inadequate rifling marks for a firm comparison, and was only described as nearly matching the cartridge. This supported, without overstating the weaker bullet inference, Dataram's evidence that Kunjilal shot Hotam. The trial court's supplemental section 313 questions addressed the report after initial omission. As to persons, Munni had admitted that police showed her the arrested appellants before the parade, so C. Muniappan rendered her later identity evidence ineffective. That admission did not prove Dataram himself saw them: neither her precise answers nor Dataram's cross-examination established it. He identified the three in the parade and at trial, described Kunjilal's shot, Ramdas's farsa blow and the older Ramratan's sharp-weapon blow, learned their names only later, and said light was on. His parietal incised wounds matched the nature of the two described blows. The parade officer Michael Tirki testified to identification; ticks before all three names and written endorsements just above Kunjilal and Ramdas on a blank-paper form resolved the alignment objection, while Ramratan's age and Dataram's dock description reinforced his identity despite the absence of an aligned endorsement. Under Noorahammad and Dana Yadav, the corroborated in-court evidence was reliable; the Court also noted Ramesh on rural visual capacity, with the stronger record fact that light was actually on and victims had close encounters. It therefore upheld all three section 396 with MPDVPK convictions, and only Kunjilal's additional Arms convictions in light of recovery, FSL, firearm use and recorded sanction. It gave no freestanding detailed analysis of every ingredient of section 11/13 MPDVPK or of the earlier section 395/397 charges.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the Special Judge's conviction and sentence dated 2 December 2011 in Special Sessions Trial 23/2007. All three remained liable to life imprisonment, ₹10,000 fine each and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default under IPC section 396 read with MPDVPK Act section 11/13. Kunjilal's further conviction under Arms Act section 25(1-B)(a), and his conviction under section 27 read with the MPDVPK provisions, carried the recorded seven-year rigorous imprisonment and ₹1,000 fine with one month's default rigorous imprisonment for each; his sentences were clarified to run concurrently as ordered below. Ramratan, appellant no. 1, was on bail: his bonds were cancelled and he was directed to surrender immediately to serve the remainder. Kunjilal and Ramdas, appellants 2 and 3, were in jail and were to serve the remainder. Free copies to appellants and return of trial records for compliance were directed.

Ramratan and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 17/2012, 22/06/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (762) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act — Section 138 — successive dishonour and notice - MSR Leathers v S. Palaniappan, (2013) 1 SCC 177, overruled Sadanandan Bhadran v Madhavan Sunil Kumar, (1998) 6 SCC 514: a cheque may be presented again within its validity and a fresh dishonour may provide the basis for prosecution even after an earlier notice, provided the notice and payment-default requirements of Section 138 and the complaint timing under Section 142 are satisfied. The present Court applied its Devendra Prajapati order to distinguish a third notice issued outside thirty days from information of a single cheque return: merely repeating notice without re-presentation creates no fresh statutory window. Vishwanath Ghosh, 2010(4) MPLJ 99, which had addressed avoidance of service of initial notices under the former one-cause approach, was considered in light of MSR Leathers. The revisional order challenged by the current applicant was set aside and the JMFC complaint dismissal restored on a different ground.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramsingh Prajapati applied under Section 482 CrPC in MCRC 28445/2024 against a revision order of 18 April 2024 made by the II Additional Sessions Judge, Ganjbasoda, Vidisha, in Criminal Revision 9/2023. That order had displaced the JMFC's 10 December 2022 dismissal of a Section 138 Negotiable Instruments Act complaint in UN.CR. 83/2021. His counsel argued that the case was covered by the High Court's 6 December 2024 order in Devendra Prajapati v Sachin Dixit, MCRC 28446/2024, but invoked co-ordinate Bench authority Vishwanath Ghosh v Ramesh Chandra Sindhi, Criminal Revision 1569/2009, decided 11 February 2010, on unserved first two notices followed by a third notice issued later and treated as served. The High Court explained its treatment of that authority, then reproduced substantial portions of Devendra. That earlier, different case involved Cheque No. 022563 dated 23 November 2019 for ₹1,50,000, one dishonour on 9 January 2020, notices on 21 January, 1 February and 28 February, the third returned with refusal endorsement on 4 March, and complaint filed 5 April 2021. Its JMFC had dismissed the complaint on a different calculation; a Sessions revision had restored it, partly reasoning from refusal of the third notice and pandemic limitation extension. The Devendra High Court order restored its JMFC dismissal because the third notice was beyond thirty days from the single cheque return and no fresh presentment occurred. These detailed 2020 facts belong to Devendra and are not attributed to Ramsingh's own transaction. The present Court said Ramsingh's case was covered by the same legal conclusion, set aside his different revision order and restored his JMFC dismissal.

2. Precedents — Considered : MSR Leathers v S. Palaniappan and another, (2013) 1 SCC 177, was the controlling Supreme Court decision discussed directly and in the reproduced Devendra reasoning. It overruled Sadanandan Bhadran v Madhavan Sunil Kumar, (1998) 6 SCC 514, which had treated the first notice/cause as foreclosing prosecution on a later dishonour. MSR Leathers held that Sections 138 and 142 do not extinguish the holder's right to present an unpaid cheque again within its validity; a successive dishonour may be chosen as the basis of one prosecution if the statutory presentment, timely notice and payment-default conditions are freshly fulfilled. It was concerned both with the statutory wording and avoiding forced litigation when the holder wishes to allow time for settlement. That is different from sending repeated notices tied only to the same original dishonour after the Section 138 notice window has elapsed. The present Court applied this distinction through Devendra, without suggesting multiple prosecutions for the same dishonour or unlimited time after a single return.

Vishwanath Ghosh v Ramesh Chandra Sindhi, 2010(4) MPLJ 99, was a co-ordinate Bench authority put forward by the applicant. Its reasoning addressed a drawer evading service of initial notices and the difficulty under the then-prevailing Sadanandan approach if a later third notice was issued after the first thirty days but was treated as served. The Court explained that MSR Leathers has since removed the former bar on fresh presentment: a payee can re-present the cheque during its validity and send a new notice following a fresh dishonour. The Court declined protection for a later notice unsupported by a new presentment. Devendra Prajapati v Sachin Dixit, MCRC 28446/2024, order of 6 December 2024, was the High Court decision directly applied in the present case and was reproduced at length. Its discussion of the Supreme Court's In Re: Cognizance for Extension of Limitation order of 10 January 2022 recounted the revision court's pandemic argument on a cause said to arise in March 2020; the Devendra court instead resolved the earlier failure to issue a valid notice within thirty days of the January dishonour.

3. Statutes considered : Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, with its proviso, was decisive: a cheque must be presented within validity, written demand notice issued within thirty days of the payee's information about its return unpaid, and the drawer must fail to pay within the prescribed fifteen days after receipt. Section 142 governs the subsequent cause of action, complaint and time for institution. MSR Leathers permits a fresh compliant sequence after a new presentment and dishonour; a new notice on the same original dishonour cannot by itself restart the first thirty-day clock. The former Supreme Court restriction in Sadanandan had been overruled. Section 482 CrPC was the High Court jurisdiction through which the present applicant challenged the revisional revival of the complaint.

4. Issues : Whether a later notice treated as served after two initial unserved notices could sustain a Section 138 complaint when, according to the applied Devendra reasoning, it was issued more than thirty days after information of a single dishonour and no fresh cheque presentation supplied a later return. Whether the reasoning of the co-ordinate Bench in Vishwanath Ghosh about service avoidance survived as a basis to overlook that timing after MSR Leathers allowed a fresh valid presentation. Whether the Sessions revision order in Ramsingh's case should stand or the JMFC dismissal be restored.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court regarded the present case as covered by Devendra and explained why the applicant's reliance on Vishwanath Ghosh did not validate a late notice based on a single cheque return. Under Sadanandan, issuing the first notice had been treated as fixing the cause and barring a later presentment-based cause, prompting the co-ordinate concern that a drawer could evade service. MSR Leathers overruled that bar: a holder can present the cheque again within its validity and, if it is again dishonoured, issue a timely notice and proceed on the later default. In the reproduced Devendra reasoning, however, the cheque had been presented only once and returned on 9 January 2020. The notices of 21 January and 1 February were within thirty days but returned unserved; the 28 February notice on which prosecution was launched was outside the thirty-day period from that same return. The payee had not presented the cheque again after the second notice, so no later dishonour supplied a fresh statutory window. The perceived 4 March refusal and the later pandemic-extension discussion could not cure the missing timely notice condition. The present Court applied the same rule to set aside Ramsingh's revisional revival and restore dismissal on a different ground.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application. The II Additional Sessions Judge, Ganjbasoda's 18 April 2024 order in Criminal Revision 9/2023 was set aside, and the JMFC, Ganjbasoda's 10 December 2022 dismissal in UN.CR. 83/2021 was restored, although the High Court supplied a different legal ground. The reproduced Devendra order separately concerned Criminal Revision 10/2023 and UN.CR. No. 81/2021.

Ramsingh Prajapati v. Rahul Dixit, M.Cr.C. no. 28445/2024, 17/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (763) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 — police inaction on FIR request — alternative remedy - Aleque Padamsee v Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the duty to register information revealing a cognizable offence from the remedy for police nonregistration: a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. Divine Retreat Centre v State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, allowed exceptional writ control upon clear mala fide abuse and Chapter XII noncompliance, but not judicial direction on how investigation is to be conducted; the ordinary remedy for police inaction lies before the Magistrate. Shweta Bhadauria v State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016, applied the alternative-remedy rule subject to recognised exceptions and distinguished Lalita Kumari's police-duty question. Direct mandamus was refused and liberty to use Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS was granted.

Magistrate remedy — distinction between Section 156(3) and complaint procedure - Sakiri Vasu v State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explained written recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and then a Section 156(3) application enabling a Magistrate to direct FIR registration, proper investigation and monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed the need for the Magistrate to be prima facie satisfied, the possibility of recommending a change of investigating officer, and the Magistrate's inability to investigate personally. Aleque Padamsee identified Sections 190/200 complaint procedure as the response to continued inaction. The High Court's final liberty expressly concerned the Magistrate complaint route.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramsingh Thakur filed Writ Petition 18731/2024 under Article 226 seeking a mandamus to respondent No. 2 to consider and decide his application-cum-complaint at Annexure P/1 in light of Lalita Kumari v Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, and such further relief as appropriate. He said that he had approached police for FIR registration but no action had been taken. The State argued that a direct FIR writ was not maintainable because an efficacious Magistrate complaint lay under Section 200 CrPC, which the order paired with Section 223 BNSS, 2023. The Court considered the pleaded contentions and State submission, framed the maintainability question, quoted Supreme Court and Madhya Pradesh Division Bench authorities, and dismissed the petition with liberty to use the Magistrate route.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police's Section 154 duty to register a cognizable offence from the correct forum when police fail to act. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC let the aggrieved person place a complaint before the Magistrate. Divine Retreat Centre v State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted to preserve rare Article 226 intervention for clear mala fide investigative abuse and Chapter XII noncompliance, while forbidding the writ court to dictate how police conduct investigation. For non-action on information, its quotation of Gangadhar described a Magistrate's complaint inquiry, possible investigation direction, dismissal under Section 203 or cognizance and process. The High Court invoked this to decline an ordinary writ for registration.

Sakiri Vasu v State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted for a staged response: written approach to the Superintendent under Section 154(3), followed, if necessary, by a Section 156(3) Magistrate application for FIR registration or proper investigation, with monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed Sakiri Vasu and explained that a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied may ensure registration or proper investigation and, if needed, recommend replacement of the investigating officer, while investigation remains a police function. It cautioned that direct writ petitions on routine nonregistration would flood High Courts. The present Court used these authorities to support the alternative-remedy rule. Shweta Bhadauria v State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016 (20 December 2016), a Division Bench of this High Court, stated that mandamus to perform the Section 154 duty can be declined for failure to exhaust Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 remedies, unless a recognised Whirlpool Corporation exception applies. It explained that Lalita Kumari addresses the police duty to register a cognizable report, not automatic entitlement to a writ bypassing remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution supplied the mandamus jurisdiction invoked, subject here to the ordinary availability of adequate criminal-process remedies and the narrow possibility of exceptional writ intervention in an investigation recognised in Divine Retreat Centre. Section 154 CrPC governed the police duty on cognizable information and Section 154(3) the written supervisory approach to the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) CrPC was quoted as a Magistrate's pre-cognizance power to direct registration or a proper police investigation and to monitor it when satisfied. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC supplied the cognizance and private-complaint route that the High Court expressly left open. Chapter XII CrPC was discussed in Divine Retreat concerning investigative abuse.

4. Issues : Whether alleged police inaction on Annexure P/1 justified Article 226 mandamus for consideration or FIR registration on the petitioner's Lalita Kumari reliance; whether statutory police and Magistrate remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 ordinarily had to be pursued first; and whether an exceptional writ ground was established on this record.

5. Ratio / Findings : Aleque Padamsee supplied the critical distinction between the police duty to register cognizable information and the informant's ordinary judicial remedy if police do not act, a Magistrate complaint under Sections 190/200. Divine Retreat Centre preserved rare Article 226 intervention for clear mala fide investigative abuse and Chapter XII noncompliance, while forbidding a writ court to dictate police investigative steps. Sakiri Vasu explained written recourse to the Superintendent under Section 154(3) followed, if necessary, by a Section 156(3) Magistrate application permitting FIR registration, proper investigation and monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe made such action by the Magistrate conditional on prima facie satisfaction, permitted a recommendation to change the investigating officer, and left the investigation itself to the police. Shweta Bhadauria reconciled the ordinary alternative-remedy rule with Whirlpool exceptions and specifically distinguished Lalita Kumari, which Thakur invoked in his prayer: its police-duty principle does not itself create an unconditional direct writ remedy in disregard of Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200. Applying those authorities, the Court declined the writ and left a Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS complaint open.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition with liberty to Ramsingh Thakur, if he desired, to approach the Magistrate concerned under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS, 2023, for redress of his grievance.

Ramsingh Thakur v. The State of M.P. and Ors., W.P. no. 18731/2024, 24/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (764) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abetment of suicide — Sections 107 and 306 IPC — intentional nexus - Instigation may be inferred from words, omission or a sustained course of conduct with a reasonable nexus that leaves the deceased feeling without another option; mental element and an active instigating or aiding role remain essential. Chitresh Kumar Chopra v State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, Praveen Pradhan v State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, Sanju @ Sanjay Singh Sengar v State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, Gangula Mohan Reddy v State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, M. Mohan v State, AIR 2011 SC 1238, Kishori Lal v State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, and Amalendu Pal v State of W.B., (2010) 1 SCC 707, supplied the related tests. State of W.B. v Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, cautioned that ordinary domestic discord and a victim's hypersensitivity do not themselves establish abetment. Refusal of the son's claimed property share and strained family relations, as alleged, disclosed no intentional inducement or aid by the father.

Section 482 — absence of offence ingredients in allegations taken at face value - The FIR, charge sheet and proceeding under Section 306/34 IPC were tested assuming the prosecution's allegations true. Amit Kapur v Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, was considered for a tentative threshold assessment and the possibility of circumstantial instigation, not a full evidence trial. No specific positive act or proximate intentional assistance could be identified in the father's alleged refusal of property or belongings, so the proceeding against him was quashed. The Court had previously quashed the stepmother's proceeding by a separate 18 September 2017 order; this disposition concerned the applicant father.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramsingh Yadav, father of Sunil Yadav, petitioned under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 258/2016 at Police Station Shamshabad, Vidisha, its charge sheet and the consequential proceeding under Section 306 read with Section 34 IPC. Sunil was brought to the Community Health Centre after consuming poison and died during treatment; his father had taken him to hospital. The police made a marg inquiry, arranged postmortem and recorded maternal relatives' statements. The prosecution allegation was that Sunil's mother Rukmani Bai died when he was five or six months old; Ramsingh later married Rekha Bai and had two sons with her. Sunil married Puja Bai and had a daughter, but Puja also died by suicide. Sunil reportedly told his maternal relatives that relations with his father and stepmother were strained, left his child with the maternal grandfather, and went to Vidisha to work. He later came home for belongings but allegedly was refused; his asserted share in property was also denied. The father argued that even if all allegations were accepted, no Section 107 abetment ingredient was shown. The State asserted that denial of belongings and property left Sunil with no option but suicide. A separate 18 September 2017 order in MCRC 3448/2017 had already quashed proceedings against the stepmother Rekha Bai; the present application concerned the father.

2. Precedents — Considered : Chitresh Kumar Chopra v State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, explained instigation under Section 107 as goading, provoking or encouraging an act. Specific imperative words are not indispensable, but conduct or omission must allow a reasonably certain inference of incitement; a sustained course of conduct creating circumstances in which the deceased feels there is no other option can suffice, while an angry utterance without intended consequence does not. Praveen Pradhan v State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, emphasised the alleged abettor's intention and a contextual inference, with no fixed formula; it also noted that at a quashing or charge stage the view is tentative rather than a final weighing. Sanju @ Sanjay Singh Sengar v State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, set out the Section 107 alternatives and required mens rea for instigation. The Court used these together to reject an inference that a property refusal itself intentionally urged suicide.

Gangula Mohan Reddy v State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, required a positive instigating or aiding act, clear mens rea and a direct role intended to push a person into suicide; it cautioned against attributing a death caused by hypersensitivity to ordinary domestic discord. State of W.B. v Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, supplied the careful, context-specific warning that ordinary petulance and domestic differences not expected to drive a similarly situated person to suicide should not be treated as abetment. M. Mohan v State represented by Deputy Superintendent of Police, AIR 2011 SC 1238, reiterated positive act, intention and direct conduct intended to drive the deceased to suicide, leaving no other option. Kishori Lal v State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, explained the distinct instigation, conspiracy and intentional-aid alternatives in Section 107 and Section 109's linkage to the specific abetted offence. Amalendu Pal @ Jhantu v State of W.B., (2010) 1 SCC 707, required proof of direct or indirect acts of incitement and cautioned that mere harassment without positive proximate action does not sustain Section 306; it explained intentional facilitation under Section 107's third clause.

Amit Kapur v Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, cautioned that a court at the threshold forms a tentative view from the record and that incitement can sometimes be inferred from a series of acts or omissions that leave a person no alternative. The High Court checked the pleaded acts and found no intentional nexus here. Ramesh Kumar v State of Chhattisgarh appears within the Amit Kapur quotation on circumstantial instigation, and Iqbal Singh, Surender, Kishori Lal and Sonti Rama Krishna appear within the Praveen Pradhan quotation; only Kishori Lal was also quoted independently.

3. Statutes considered : Section 306 IPC punishes abetment when a person commits suicide. Section 107 IPC supplies three modes: instigation; conspiracy plus a further act or illegal omission in pursuance; or intentional aiding by act or illegal omission. Its explanations address wilful deception in instigation and conduct before or at an act that intentionally facilitates its commission. The cited Supreme Court cases required a mental process and sufficiently connected positive conduct, while recognising that intentional sustained acts or omissions may sometimes permit an inference. Section 482 CrPC supplied inherent jurisdiction to test whether allegations taken at face value established a prima facie offence.

4. Issues : Whether the father's refusal to give Sunil a claimed property share or allow removal of belongings, together with strained family relations after remarriage, could amount to Section 107 instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid of the suicide if every prosecution allegation were accepted. Relatedly, whether Section 482 permitted quashing the FIR, charge sheet and pending Section 306/34 proceeding at this threshold despite the State's inference that the deceased had no other option.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court set out Sections 306 and 107 and surveyed the Supreme Court distinction between a merely distressing act and intentional incitement or facilitation of suicide. Instigation can be inferred without express words when a continued course of conduct attributable to the accused reasonably creates a situation in which the deceased feels there is no other option; mens rea and proximate causal connection still have to emerge from allegations. The Court acknowledged through Praveen Pradhan and Amit Kapur that threshold assessment is tentative and circumstantial evidence can matter. It therefore accepted the complaint narrative for the purpose of its legal test rather than resolving witness credibility. Sunil's mother's early death and Ramsingh's remarriage did not themselves show poor upbringing or cruelty from childhood. No such long-standing neglect was alleged; the alleged non-cordial relations with father and stepmother and refusal of a property share and belongings did not amount to the father goading, urging or intentionally aiding suicide. On this record, the father's refusal to give a share did not satisfy Section 107. The Court noted Rekha Bai's earlier quashing order, then concluded there was no prima facie material connecting this applicant to abetment.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application. Crime No. 258/2016 at Police Station Shamshabad, Vidisha, the charge sheet for Section 306/34 IPC and the pending criminal proceeding were quashed as against Ramsingh Yadav. Rekha Bai's proceeding had already been quashed in MCRC 3448/2017 on 18 September 2017.

Ramsingh Yadav v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 11138/2017, 22/03/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (765) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 — police inaction on an FIR request — alternative remedy - Aleque Padamsee v Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from the remedy when police fail to do so: a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. Divine

Retreat Centre v State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, allowed exceptional writ control upon clear mala fide abuse and Chapter XII noncompliance, but not judicial direction on how investigation is to be conducted; the ordinary remedy for police inaction lies before the Magistrate. Shweta Bhadauria v State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016, applied the alternative-remedy rule subject to recognised exceptions and distinguished the question of police duty considered in Lalita Kumari. Direct mandamus was refused and liberty to use Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS was granted.

Remedies before the magistrate — distinction between Section 156(3) and the complaint procedure - Sakiri Vasu v State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explained written recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and then a Section 156(3) application enabling a Magistrate to direct FIR registration, proper investigation and monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed the requirement that the Magistrate be prima facie satisfied, the possibility of recommending a change of the investigating officer, and the Magistrate's inability to investigate personally. Aleque Padamsee identified Sections 190/200 complaint procedure as the response to continued inaction. The High Court's final liberty expressly concerned the Magistrate complaint route.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramsubhag Prajapati filed Writ Petition 17148/2024 under Article 226 complaining that police authorities had not acted on his reports or complaints dated 10 and 14 May 2024. His prayer referred to a preliminary medical examination on 10 May and asked for appropriate action by police on the reports, with costs and other suitable relief. Counsel said he had approached police for FIR registration but no action followed. The State responded that a writ for FIR registration was not maintainable given the efficacious route of a Magistrate complaint under Section 200 CrPC, referenced in the order alongside Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. The court posed the maintainability question, quoted a series of Supreme Court judgments and a Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision, and disposed of the petition without a factual merits ruling.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police's Section 154 duty to register a cognizable offence from the correct forum when police fail to act. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC let the aggrieved person place a complaint before the Magistrate. Divine Retreat Centre v State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted to preserve rare Article 226 intervention for clear mala fide investigative abuse and Chapter XII noncompliance, while forbidding the writ court to dictate how police conduct investigation. For police inaction on information, the passage from Gangadhar quoted in Divine Retreat Centre described a Magistrate's complaint inquiry, possible investigation direction, dismissal under Section 203 or cognizance and process. The High Court invoked this to decline an ordinary writ for registration.

Sakiri Vasu v State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted for a staged response: written approach to the Superintendent under Section 154(3), followed, if necessary, by a Section 156(3) Magistrate application for FIR registration or proper investigation, with monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed Sakiri Vasu and explained that a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied may ensure registration or proper investigation and, if needed, recommend replacement of the investigating officer, while investigation remains a police function. It cautioned that direct writ petitions on routine nonregistration would flood High Courts. The present Court used these authorities to support the alternative-remedy rule. Shweta Bhadauria v State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016 (20 December 2016), a Division Bench of this High Court, stated that mandamus to perform the Section 154 duty can be declined for failure to exhaust Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 remedies, unless a recognised Whirlpool Corporation exception applies. It explained that Lalita Kumari addresses the police duty to register a cognizable report, not automatic entitlement to a writ bypassing remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution supplied the mandamus jurisdiction invoked, subject here to the ordinary availability of adequate criminal-process remedies and the narrow exceptional power to intervene in investigation recognised in Divine Retreat Centre. Section 154 CrPC governed the police duty on cognizable information and Section 154(3) the written supervisory approach to the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) CrPC was quoted as a Magistrate's pre-cognizance power to direct registration or a proper police investigation and to monitor it when satisfied. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC supplied the cognizance and private-complaint route that the High Court expressly left open. Chapter XII CrPC was discussed in Divine Retreat concerning investigative abuse.

4. Issues : Whether the petitioner, asserting police inaction on two May 2024 complaints and relying on a medical examination, could obtain an Article 226 mandamus for FIR registration or police action directly; whether the available complaint and pre-cognizance Magistrate procedures required him to use the statutory forum; and whether the cited principle governing exceptional writ intervention in investigation altered that ordinary result on this record. The Section 156(3) power was explained in precedent but was not the express operative liberty.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court began with Aleque Padamsee's two distinct legal questions. Police must register information disclosing a cognizable offence, but a failure to do so does not ordinarily make direct Article 226 mandamus the first judicial remedy; the complainant can move the Magistrate under Sections 190/200. This distinction reconciles authorities on the duty to register an FIR with those on the proper forum for a complaint. Divine Retreat preserved exceptional High Court intervention in the rarest of rare cases where clear mala fide abuse of investigative power and noncompliance with Chapter XII require it, with the writ court insisting on lawful process but not choosing investigative steps. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe showed a separate statutory path through Section 154(3) and then Section 156(3), under which a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied can direct registration or proper investigation, monitor it and potentially recommend an officer change, but cannot investigate himself. Shweta Bhadauria applied the alternative-remedy rationale to a mandamus request while acknowledging exceptional writ situations and distinguishing the police-duty rule in Lalita Kumari. Given these remedies, the Court declined the present writ and left the petitioner to the complaint forum.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition with liberty to Ramsubhag Prajapati, if he wished, to approach the Magistrate concerned under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS, 2023, for redress of his grievance.

Ramsubhag Prajapati v. The State of M.P. and Ors., W.P. no. 17148/2024, 01/08/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (766) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder — Section 300 thirdly — nature of the intended injury - Virsa Singh v State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was applied for the distinction between intention to inflict the particular injury proved and the separate, objective question whether that injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death; intent to kill need not independently be proved under clause Thirdly. Arun Nivalaji More explained the Section 299, 300 and 304 hierarchy; Anda emphasised ordinary-course sufficiency. Mahesh Balmiki, Pulicherla Nagaraju, Sangapagu Anjaiah, State of Rajasthan v Kanhaiyalal and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao treated number of blows as non-conclusive and directed attention to weapon, vital site, force and attendant circumstances. The fatal head injuries to both deceased, with accepted joint assault evidence, sustained Section 302/34 rather than conversion to Section 304. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak's Exception 4 conditions were quoted.

Common intention — constructive liability - Section 34 IPC requires the criminal act in furtherance of a shared intention proved from participation and circumstances; agreement may arise at the scene before the act, but merely parallel intent or presence does not suffice. Jasdeep Singh alias Jassu v State of Punjab, Criminal Appeal No. 1584/2021 (7 January 2022), required concrete evidence of common intention and connected assistance; Suresh, Pandurang, Chhota Ahirwar and Virendra Singh, with the other quoted Section 34 authorities, explained action in concert, possible formation at the scene, different roles and the need for careful inference. Evidence of Ramswaroop's axe, Ramesh's lathi and Hemant's spade attacks on both deceased, and blows to four intervenors, supported both murder counts and four hurt counts with Section 34.

Injuries to an accused — prosecution explanation - Bhaba Nanda Sharma v State of Assam, (1977) 4 SCC 396, Ramlagan Singh v State of Bihar, (1973) 3 SCC 881, and Bhagwan Tana Patil v State of Maharashtra, (1974) 3 SCC 536, were used for the contextual rule that unexplained injury to an accused is not necessarily fatal to the prosecution case; the defence's failure to ask prosecution witnesses about it matters. Ramesh's simple abrasions, assessed days later and potentially caused by running or falling, did not displace the accepted proof.

Related and inimical witnesses — medical evidence - The prior dynamo dispute could supply both motive and a reason for caution, and relationship with the deceased did not itself make the injured eyewitnesses unreliable. The Court accepted the witnesses' account of a coordinated attack, the postmortem findings of fatal head injuries, and MLCs of four intervenors, while rejecting the unproved alibi. The judgment stated that medical evidence corroborated the testimony.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This Section 374 CrPC appeal challenged the Additional Sessions Judge, Chachoda, Guna's 28 September 2011 judgment in Sessions Trial 256/2008. Ramswaroop, Ramesh and Hemant had each been convicted of murder under Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC on two counts for Kallu and his father Shivlal and of hurt under Section 323/34 on four counts for intervenors, with life imprisonment and ₹1,000 fine for the murders and six months' rigorous imprisonment for the hurt counts, sentences concurrent and default stipulations. The prosecution traced a dispute to theft of Ramswaroop's dynamo some four to six months earlier. On 10 June 2008 the accused allegedly demanded its return or ₹40,000 while Nathu Patel and Dheeraj Meena were called to resolve the dispute. Near noon, as Kallu and Dheeraj were leaving, Ramswaroop allegedly struck Kallu's head with an axe, Ramesh used a lathi, and Hemant used a spade when Shivlal tried to intervene. Mahendra, Karibai, Dheeraj and Ishwar were also injured in the episode. Shivlal died at or near the scene and Kallu on the way to hospital. Mahendra lodged Ex. P8; FIR Crime 160/2008 initially cited Sections 302, 307, 324 and 323/34 IPC. The charge sheet and convictions were for the two murder and four hurt counts. Thirteen prosecution witnesses, including injured eyewitnesses, doctors and investigating/seizure witnesses, were examined. The accused denied presence, alleged false implication from previous enmity and called Rambharose (DW1), Ramhet (DW2) and Badrilal (DW3). On appeal they pointed to claimed contradictions, sharp axe/spade descriptions versus hard-and-blunt medical descriptions, and Ramesh's unexplained injuries. The State supported the convictions. The doctors described fatal head trauma to both deceased: Shivlal's occipital injury led to coma and shock; Kallu had two grave head wounds, occipital fracture and ruptured brain membrane with fatal bleeding. The record also described wounds to the four intervenors and simple abrasions on Ramesh, examined on 15 June and estimated five to seven days old.

2. Precedents — Considered : On homicide, Virsa Singh v State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, supplied the four-part Section 300 Thirdly test: objective existence and nature of injury, intention to inflict that very injury, and objective sufficiency of that injury to cause death in the ordinary course of nature, with prosecution bearing the burden; intention to kill or knowledge of fatal seriousness is not an added requirement. The Court adopted this framework after holding that clause Secondly did not apply. Arun Nivalaji More v State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079/2005, explained that Section 299's intention and knowledge limbs must be compared with Section 300's clauses and exceptions before Section 302, 304 Part I or 304 Part II follows. Anda v State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, stressed the high probability embodied in ordinary-course sufficiency. Mahesh Balmiki v State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejected a mechanical one-blow reduction and evaluated weapon, site, manner and circumstances. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, explained Exception 4: no premeditation, sudden mutual fight, heat of passion, no undue advantage or cruel or unusual manner, and a fight with the person killed; a sudden quarrel alone is insufficient. Pulicherla Nagaraju v State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, listed non-exhaustive intent factors including weapon, prior possession, vital targeting, force, quarrel, chance, premeditation, enmity, provocation, heat, unfair advantage and number of blows. Sangapagu Anjaiah v State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred murderous intention from crowbar, vital skull site and fracture-causing force. State of Rajasthan v Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, rejected a fixed single-blow exclusion from Section 302 and discussed Exception 4. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, likewise required circumstances rather than counting injuries, and quoted Virsa Singh on intention to inflict the actual injury.

On Section 34, Jasdeep Singh alias Jassu v State of Punjab, Criminal Appeal 1584/2021, decided 7 January 2022, was reproduced at length: common intention and action in furtherance must be proved by substantial, clear evidence, a participant's assistance can differ from the final physical blow, mere presence is not invariably assistance, intent may be inferred cumulatively and withdrawal or a graver act outside the shared plan must be evaluated. The quotation's historical Queen v Gorachand Gope and IPC Sections 33–39 discussion furnished context, not independently decided issues here. Suresh v State of U.P., (2001) 3 SCC 673, described a connected overt, covert or in some circumstances omission-based act and cautioned that intention kept only in mind is insufficient; its later passage explained joint participation without a separate independent offence by each. Lallan Rai v State of Bihar, (2003) 1 SCC 268, treated presence with a shared intention and cautioned against a rigid rule based on distance from the scene. Chhota Ahirwar v State of M.P., (2020) 4 SCC 126, required simultaneous consensus for the particular crime, potentially developed on the spot, while not demanding an individual overt blow where shared intention and participation are proved. Pandurang, Tukia and Bhillia v State of Hyderabad, 1955 SCR (1) 1083, distinguished prior concert from merely simultaneous independent intent; the plan can form suddenly but must precede the joint act. Virendra Singh v State of M.P., (2010) 8 SCC 407, required intention and participation, stressed careful evidence before inferring a common plan formed at the scene, and warned about a graver result than initially designed. The Court quoted it directly and also within a longer Section 34 compilation. Rambilas Singh v State of Bihar, (1989) 3 SCC 605, declined any requirement that every member perform an overt act but demanded material connecting an act to shared intention. Krishnan v State of Kerala, (1996) 10 SCC 508, distinguished a helpful overt act from an invariable legal requirement. Surendra Chauhan v State of M.P., (2000) 4 SCC 110, addressed presence facilitating the joint venture. Gopi Nath v State of U.P., (2001) 6 SCC 620, explained diverse acts and common intention arising during the event; Ramesh Singh @ Photti v State of A.P., (2004) 11 SCC 305, tied responsibility for another's deed to the shared intent; Nand Kishore v State of M.P., (2011) 12 SCC 120, required a joint criminal act, shared intent and individual participation, distinguishing common intention from ordinary mens rea; and Shyamal Ghosh v State of W.B., (2012) 7 SCC 646, recognised that a plan could form on the spur of the moment while retaining common intent and participation. Barendra Kumar Ghosh v King Emperor, AIR 1925 PC 1, and Mehbub Shah v Emperor, AIR 1945 PC 148, were Privy Council authorities quoted in the compilation on connected separate acts and prior concert; they were not Supreme Court holdings. The High Court used this body of doctrine to infer a common design from the three appellants' accepted weapon-specific assaults on both deceased and four intervenors. References to Brathi, Dharnidhar, Amrik Singh and Asoke Basak are nested in the cited passages, without a separate application by the High Court.

On Ramesh's injuries, Bhaba Nanda Sharma v State of Assam, (1977) 4 SCC 396, made the effect of unexplained accused injuries depend on circumstances; Ramlagan Singh v State of Bihar, (1973) 3 SCC 881, stated that absent defence questions to prosecution witnesses about the injuries, the prosecution may have had no occasion to explain; and Bhagwan Tana Patil v State of Maharashtra, (1974) 3 SCC 536, warned against rejecting the entire prosecution case merely because the accused's injuries were not explained. The High Court applied these to Ramesh's simple abrasions and the doctor's possible fall or running explanation. The Court scrutinised the related eyewitnesses' testimony on the record.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC supplied the appeal against conviction. IPC Section 299 defines culpable homicide through two intention limbs and a knowledge limb; Section 300 identifies murder, including clause Thirdly, which concerns an intentionally inflicted injury that is objectively sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, subject to its statutory exceptions. The judgment distinguished the Section 300 clauses and discussed Exception 4 as quoted in Dhirajbhai, while its dispositive focus was clause Thirdly. Section 302 carried the two murder convictions. Section 304 Parts I and II were the alternative categories discussed when intention or knowledge falls below murder, but no conversion was ordered. Section 323 covered four hurt counts for the intervenors. Section 34 imposed constructive responsibility where a criminal act was done in furtherance of all participants' common intention; its theory requires both the shared mental element and connected participation, without requiring a plan formed long before the event or an identical blow from each.

Sections 307 and 324 appeared in the initial FIR narrative, not the ultimate convictions.

4. Issues : First, did the evidence of targeted and fatal head injuries, evaluated under Sections 299 and 300 Thirdly, prove two murders under Section 302 rather than a lesser Section 304 offence, notwithstanding the dynamo altercation and the defence's claimed sharp/blunt mismatch? Second, was common intention under Section 34 proved against each of Ramswaroop, Ramesh and Hemant, whose weapons and alleged blows differed, for both deceased and all four injured intervenors? Third, were the injured and related eyewitnesses unreliable because of earlier enmity, contradictions or the three defence witnesses' claim that the appellants were absent from the scene? Fourth, did the prosecution's failure to explain Ramesh's abrasions reasonably undermine its account? The order quotes Exception 4 and single-blow jurisprudence; the discrepancy alleged between the weapon descriptions and the medical evidence was raised, and the Court stated that the medical evidence corroborated the testimony.

5. Ratio / Findings : On death and mental element, the appellate bench set out Section 299's genus of culpable homicide, Section 300's murder conditions and the Section 304 intention/knowledge alternatives. It used Virsa Singh's distinction between intending the proved injury and the objective fatal sufficiency of that injury, together with the cited case-specific single-blow and Exception 4 principles. The postmortem account attributed Shivlal's death to coma and shock from occipital head trauma and Kallu's to bleeding from brain injury, two grievous head wounds, fracture and ruptured membrane. The Court found the injuries sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause their deaths. It accepted testimony of repeated blows from an axe, lathi and spade directed to the victims' heads during the same encounter. It thus affirmed murder and declined to alter the convictions on the grounds that the dispute began in an argument or that a separate intention to kill was absent. The argument that sharp weapons had no matching sharp wounds was recorded.

On Section 34, the Court reproduced extensive Supreme Court material distinguishing a shared plan with participation from simultaneous but independent intentions and from mere presence. The plan need not be long prearranged and may arise during the event before the relevant criminal act; an overt blow by each is not invariably needed, while the prosecution bears the burden of a clear inference of conduct in furtherance, especially for murder as a graver outcome. Mahendra (PW8) attributed an axe strike to Ramswaroop, a lathi strike to Ramesh and a spade strike to Hemant; he and Karibai (PW1) described the combined assault on Kallu and then Shivlal. Dheeraj (PW2), Ishwar (PW4) and Anitabai (PW5) supported the occurrence and intervenor injuries. The doctors' reports recorded harm to Karibai, Mahendra, Dheeraj and Ishwar, and the investigating/seizure witnesses described the spot, weapons and relevant exhibits. The bench found the three acted with common intention to cause grave, likely fatal harm to both deceased and caused injuries to four rescuers; it affirmed two Section 302/34 and four Section 323/34 counts. The judgment states that shared intention was proved from these witnesses and their weapon-specific roles. On credibility, prior enmity was double edged and kinship alone could not disqualify an otherwise reliable witness. The trial court had scrutinised them carefully; the appellate bench found cross-examination had disclosed no ground to reject the core account. DW1–DW3 did not furnish positive alibi proof that the appellants were elsewhere. On Ramesh's abrasions, PW13 called them simple, compatible with falling or running, and examined days after the assault. Relying on Bhaba Nanda, Ramlagan and Bhagwan Tana Patil, the Court held that non-explanation was not inevitably fatal, depending on the questions put and circumstances; the accepted prosecution evidence survived.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. The conviction and sentence of 28 September 2011 were affirmed: the three appellants remained liable under Section 302/34 IPC on two murder counts and Section 323/34 on four hurt counts, with life imprisonment and fine for murder and six months' rigorous imprisonment for hurt, concurrent and subject to trial-court default stipulations. Ramswaroop (appellant No. 1) and Hemant (No. 3), then on bail, had bail and surety bonds cancelled and were directed to surrender immediately to serve the remaining sentence. Ramesh (No. 2), stated to be in jail, was to remain there. Copies were directed to the jail authorities and the trial court with the record.

Ramswaroop and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 862/2011, 09/05/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (767) Prev Next

Headnote :- Speedy trial — delay without automatic quashing - Investigation lasting about two years and a trial said to have proceeded for over four years without a witness did not, merely by passage of time, end the prosecution. P. Ramachandra Rao v State of Karnataka, (2002) 4 SCC 578, was applied: reaffirming A.R. Antulay's illustrative Article 21 guidance, it rejected mandatory outer limits in Common Cause and Raj Deo Sharma; courts assess the circumstances for oppressive, unwarranted delay and can use powers to manage the trial or suitable inherent and constitutional powers. High Court Bar Association, Allahabad v State of U.P., Criminal Appeal No. 3589/2023 (29 February 2024), was additionally cited for the absence of a universal trial-completion outer limit. No order sheets were filed to attribute the delay solely to prosecution; quashing was refused on this ground.

Quashing — disputed damage to cement poles - An accused's explanation that tractors driven by others might have broken cement poles raises a factual contest for trial. Section 482 CrPC does not authorise a mini-trial on whether the allegation is true; a proceeding may be quashed on the face-value ground only if uncontroverted allegations do not make out an offence. The applicants did not show that the allegations under Sections 447, 427 and 34 IPC failed to disclose an offence when accepted at face value.

Illness — appearance at trial - An applicant's asserted illness and need for frequent dialysis did not itself justify quashing the criminal proceedings. If regular personal attendance causes difficulty, an exemption application may be moved before the trial court; no exemption was granted or medical finding made in this Section 482 order.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : An FIR alleging offences under Sections 447, 427 and 34 IPC was registered on 21 June 2018 over damage to cement poles. As presented by counsel, police took about two years to investigate and filed the charge sheet in 2020; the applicants said that even after more than four further years no witness had been examined. They sought quashing of the FIR or charge sheet/proceedings on that delay. They also denied destroying the poles and suggested tractors driven by others might have damaged them. Counsel additionally submitted that an applicant suffered illnesses requiring frequent dialysis and therefore sought quashing, or relief from the burden of proceedings. The State appeared through the Government Advocate. The High Court considered these submissions in Misc. Criminal Case No. 24094 of 2024. No trial-court order sheets were filed to demonstrate the actual sequence of listings, causes of postponement, or exclusive prosecution responsibility for the absence of witness testimony.

2. Precedents — Considered : P. Ramachandra Rao v State of Karnataka, 2002:INSC:203 : (2002) 4 SCC 578, was quoted extensively and applied to the demand for termination on elapsed time. The quoted Supreme Court conclusion reaffirmed the propositions in A.R. Antulay v R.S. Nayak, (1992) 1 SCC 225, concerning Article 21 speedy trial, but described them as illustrative and dependent on circumstances, not hard-and-fast rules. It held that fixed limitation periods mandating closure, discharge or acquittal in Common Cause (I), as modified in Common Cause (II), and Raj Deo Sharma (I) and (II), were impermissible and not good law. Their time periods could serve as reminders to examine relevant factors and determine whether a case had become inordinately delayed, oppressive and unwarranted; they did not automatically bar continuance. The quotation also identified existing CrPC Sections 309, 311 and 258 as powers with which a diligent criminal court may effectuate speedy trial, and recognised suitable High Court relief under Section 482 CrPC and Articles 226 and 227 in appropriate cases. It ended by reminding governments of the need for judicial resources. Those earlier decisions appear within the quoted passage from P. Ramachandra Rao. High Court Bar Association, Allahabad v State of U.P. and others, Criminal Appeal No. 3589/2023, decided 29 February 2024, was separately cited alongside P. Ramachandra Rao for the proposition that no universal outer limit can be fixed for the trial court to complete trial. The High Court applied the shared no-automatic-termination principle to the unsupported allegation of prosecution-caused delay.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR, charge sheet or criminal proceedings. The Court held that such inherent jurisdiction did not permit a factual mini-trial and could intervene on the face-value ground when uncontroverted allegations failed to constitute an offence. Article 21 of the Constitution, through the quoted P. Ramachandra Rao discussion of A.R. Antulay, protects speedy trial by a contextual inquiry rather than an absolute limitation period. Sections 309, 311 and 258 CrPC were identified in the quoted Supreme Court conclusion as examples of trial-court powers to advance the speedy-trial guarantee; Section 482 and Articles 226 and 227 were identified there as possible High Court routes for suitable relief in an appropriate case. Sections 447, 427 and 34 IPC were the charged trespass, property-damage and common-intention provisions recited as background. Exemption from personal appearance was left to an application before the trial court, without a particular exemption provision specified in the order.

4. Issues : First, did the two-year investigation followed by a claimed four years without an examined witness make the case automatically liable to quashing, or establish a particularised oppressive delay attributable to prosecution? Second, could a Section 482 court accept the applicants' possible tractor-damage explanation and reject the criminal allegations without trying the disputed evidence, when counsel showed no deficiency even on accepting those allegations? Third, did the asserted medical need for frequent dialysis itself require quashing, or could the applicant seek a narrower attendance accommodation at trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : On delay, the High Court adopted P. Ramachandra Rao's rejection of an automatic lapse-of-time rule. Its quotation retained the Article 21 concern for speedy trial and the possibility that, after examining case-specific factors, delay could be oppressive and unwarranted; it did not turn the four-year figure into a bar or deny the existence of all speedy-trial remedies. High Court Bar Association, Allahabad was cited to reinforce the absence of a general outer limit for completing trials. No order sheets established the course or attribution of adjournments, much less that the prosecution alone was responsible. Accordingly the time taken in investigation or the pendency of the trial, by itself, could not justify quashing the FIR, charge sheet or proceedings. On the merits, the Court separated a face-value legal defect from a contested factual explanation. Whether the applicants broke the cement poles or other tractors did so required evidence at trial; inherent jurisdiction could not test credibility through a mini-trial. Counsel did not identify a circumstance showing that the full uncontroverted allegations, assumed true for this limited purpose, failed to disclose an offence against the applicants. On illness, even assuming the stated inconvenience from repeated dialysis, it was not a reason to extinguish the prosecution. The Court pointed to a trial-court application for exemption from regular personal appearance. These were grounds for refusing Section 482 interference, not findings that the allegations were proved, that delay could never yield tailored relief, or that exemption must be granted.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The High Court declined to quash the FIR, charge sheet or pending criminal proceedings on delay, illness or the proposed alternative cause of damage. The applicant affected by illness remained free to move the trial court for exemption from personal appearance. The factual defence and culpability remained for the trial.

Ramswaroop Patidar and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 24094/2024, 01/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (768) Prev Next

Headnote :- Kidnapping of a minor — voluntary accompaniment and enticement - The prosecutrix was aged under sixteen and was a minor in June 2019. Her alleged willingness to meet Ravi and accompany him did not, at the charge stage, dispose of allegations that Ramu assisted Ravi in taking her. Anversinh @ Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v State of Gujarat, Criminal Appeal No. 1919/2010 (12 January 2021), was applied: distinguishing S. Varadarajan, it confined the voluntary-departure exception to a minor capable of appreciating the act who leaves guardianship without assistance or inducement; a minor's consent does not negate active enticement.

Forensic evidence — prosecutrix's denial of sexual contact - The State reported Ravi's DNA profile on the prosecutrix's clothes seized before his arrest. Against her reported denial of rape or any physical relationship, the High Court considered the denial apparently false on that material. Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 523, was invoked for the principle that scientific evidence may support conviction despite a prosecutrix turning hostile.

Criminal revision — refusal of discharge and framing of charges - In a revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC against rejection of a Section 227 application, the Court found no ground to interfere with the 5 January 2022 order framing IPC and POCSO charges.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant reported on 23 June 2019 that the prosecutrix had been taken away after going outside in the evening. The prosecution case describes her eloping with co-accused Ravi and Ramu during the night. The recorded date of birth showed that she was under sixteen and a minor on either account. Police recovered her on 24 June. As narrated in the applicant's submissions, she said Ravi and four others had taken her in a four-wheeler, kept her in a room, and left her at a location in Gwalior, on 23 June after someone asked her age. FIR Crime No. 59/2019 was registered at Police Station Pavai, Bhind, initially under Section 363 IPC. The investigation produced a charge sheet invoking Sections 363, 366, 366-A, 34 and 376(3) read with 109 IPC and Sections 3, 4, 16 and 17 of the POCSO Act. The Fifth Additional Sessions Judge/Special Judge (POCSO Act), Bhind, rejected Ramu's Section 227 CrPC discharge application on 5 January 2022 and framed charges against him under Sections 363, 366, 366-A and 376(3) read with 109 IPC and Section 3 read with Sections 4 and 17 POCSO. Ramu brought this revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. He relied on the prosecutrix's statement that she went out to meet Ravi voluntarily, that Ramu had only arrived with Ravi on a motorcycle and Ravi took her toward Gwalior on Ramu's motorcycle, and that nobody raped her; she could not explain semen detected on her panty. The description of two other persons in the darkness was uncertain. On 9 March 2022, after hearing the competing positions, the High Court called for Ravi's DNA report. The State later reported a match to Ravi on her previously seized clothing.

2. Precedents — Considered : Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi v State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 523, was invoked for the evidentiary proposition that a prosecutrix turning hostile does not preclude conviction where scientific or forensic evidence establishes the case. The High Court used that principle to reject reliance on her denial of physical contact in the face of the State's reported Ravi DNA result. Anversinh @ Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v State of Gujarat, Criminal Appeal No. 1919/2010, decided 12 January 2021, was quoted at paragraphs 17–19 and applied to the voluntary-accompaniment argument. The Supreme Court distinguished S. Varadarajan's limited 'taking' situation from enticement: that exception requires a minor who understands the full import of her conduct and voluntarily leaves guardianship without assistance or inducement by the accused. Where an accused actively draws the minor out, her consent is no defence to kidnapping; Anversinh had sustained a Section 366 conviction on its own facts. Here the High Court relied on the distinction because Ramu was alleged to have assisted Ravi in kidnapping a minor.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC supplied revisional jurisdiction over the Special Judge's charge order, and Section 227 CrPC governed the discharge application which had been rejected. Sections 363, 366 and 366-A IPC were among the framed kidnapping and related charges; the Court's express reasoning addressed the alleged minor status, assistance and enticement rather than separately construing every element of each section. Section 376(3) read with Section 109 IPC and Section 3 read with Sections 4 and 17 of the POCSO Act were also framed. Section 34 IPC and Section 16 POCSO appeared in the charge sheet as recounted, without being listed in the final enumeration of charges framed against Ramu.

4. Issues : First, whether the prosecutrix's stated voluntary decision to meet and travel with Ravi removed the basis for kidnapping-related charges against Ramu, who was alleged to have come with Ravi and furnished transport, given her established minority. Second, whether her denial of rape or sexual relationship required the charge order to be set aside when forensic material was said to link Ravi to semen on clothing seized earlier. Third, whether those matters warranted revisional interference with the 5 January 2022 refusal of discharge and framing of the specified IPC and POCSO charges.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first recorded the State's report that co-accused Ravi's DNA profile was found on the prosecutrix's clothes seized substantially before Ravi's arrest. It treated her denial of a physical relationship as apparently false on that record, citing Hemudan Nanbha Gadhvi for the legal possibility of relying on forensic proof notwithstanding a hostile prosecutrix. The finding is tied to the DNA result reported by the State and the present revision, and the DNA was attributed to Ravi, not Ramu. On kidnapping, the Court noted the recorded birth-date entry establishing minority at the event. Although the applicant presented her trip as voluntary, the allegation that he assisted Ravi in kidnapping her meant that her voluntary departure alone did not negate enticement. The Anversinh quotation explained why S. Varadarajan could aid an accused only if capacity to understand, voluntary departure and absence of accused assistance or inducement were established; a minor's consent could not negate active enticement. The Court applied that distinction to the asserted joint departure and Ramu's alleged role, then concluded there was no case to interfere with the charge order.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision. The High Court affirmed the Fifth Additional Sessions Judge/Special Judge (POCSO Act), Bhind's order of 5 January 2022 rejecting discharge and framing the enumerated charges against Ramu. The pending prosecution therefore continued under the affirmed charge order.

Ramu v. State of M.P. and Ors., Cr.R. no. 138/2022, 19/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (769) Prev Next

Headnote :- Defence evidence — Section 233 CrPC — court-directed preservation and production of CDRs - The accused had sought preservation of call details and mobile locations to contest the alleged presence of witnesses; the trial court ordered preservation on 7 September 2018, expressly reserving access and use. The then SP received the data on his official email on 17 September 2018, although police later claimed that the material had never been preserved and could not be produced after two years. Rejection of the Section 233 production request on that false premise was set aside; the present SP was directed to file the complete records within ten days, if not already filed.

Investigation and trial fairness — suppressed official digital record - A prosecution agency must bring relevant material before the trial court or give an accurate account of its nonproduction. The senior officer's withholding of records already received, a reply reporting only the steps taken in response to the 2018 compliance request, and the later false unavailability assertion impaired the truth-finding process. The trial court erred in casually accepting the explanation and excusing responsibility. The records were to be produced for lawful consideration.

Personal accountability — conditional compensation for police suppression - The then SP's unexplained withholding was found mala fide, but the Court could not determine without fuller inquiry which side he meant to favour. It directed him personally to deposit ₹5,00,000 within a month, with ultimate payment to the complainant side upon conviction or the accused side upon acquittal. Default required recovery and a separate contempt case.

Police discipline — differential officer responsibility - Union Territory of Jammu and Kashmir v. Abdul Rehman Khandey, SLP (C) 5873/2025, 7 March 2025, was considered for departmental action against officers disregarding court orders. The DGP was directed to inquire into Mayank Awasthi's concealment and issue a charge sheet within one month; a copy was to enter his service record. Yatendra Singh Bhadoriya had sent the preservation request promptly and may not have known the SP had received the data, so no present stricture was passed, subject to further inquiry. The current SHO's false reply was separately left for trial-court consideration.

Judicial supervision — preservation order — contempt reference - The trial judge, having ordered preservation, was required to address conscious noncompliance rather than accept a bare assertion of loss. A contempt process was directed against the then SP, with questions concerning the individual responsibility of the former and current SHO left for the trial court.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramu faced Sessions Trial 2/2018 at Seondha for offences under Sections 147, 148, 149, 294, 307, 336 and 302 IPC arising from the alleged killing of Kailash and attempt on the complainant on 24 September 2017. His defence asserted that the deceased, injured person and witnesses were at Amayan in Bhind rather than at the alleged crime scene within Police Station Deepar, Datia's jurisdiction. On an application of 13 August 2018 seeking preservation of specified phone and SIM call details and locations, the trial court ordered preservation on 7 September 2018. It expressly said the order conferred no vested right of use, and the data could not be shared without its leave. Former SHO Yatendra Singh Bhadoriya sent the request upward on 8 September; the Cyber Cell contacted providers and sent reminders. The providers delivered records for all ten listed numbers to then SP Mayank Awasthi's official email on 17 September 2018. Yet when the accused sought a compliance report, the SHO's 1 October reply stated only that steps had been taken to preserve the records, and the trial court disposed of that request on 4 October. Later, on the accused's Section 233 CrPC application for production as defence evidence, police asserted that records older than two years had not been preserved and could no longer be produced. The trial judge accepted that assertion and rejected production on 18 September 2024. In this Section 482 application, both the accused and the complainant criticised police handling but suggested opposite possible beneficiaries of the suppression. The former SP responded that the records were later recovered from the State Crime Records Bureau's stored official emails and were now in the present SP's possession; he blamed the SHO for the later unavailability statement. The former SHO relied on his prompt letter, lack of notice that the SP had received the material, and his transfer on 17 November 2018. At earlier hearings in March 2025 the High Court required explanations and put the officers on notice of possible inquiry, compensation and contempt consequences. The trial was reportedly at final-argument stage; the interim order had restrained final disposal until the next listing.

2. Precedents — Considered : Deepak alias Preetam Verma and Anr. v. State of M.P. and Anr., MCRC 12592/2018, 11 September 2018, was an earlier High Court order reproduced at length to assess Mayank Awasthi's prior conduct, not to adjudicate a new parallel-inquiry challenge in Ramu's trial. It had condemned a superior officer's independent parallel enquiry during a pending FIR investigation following an MLA's intervention, explained Section 36 CrPC and the police circular, refused quashing based on a collateral exoneration report, and ordered service-record consequences. The present Judge used the earlier order as evidence of repeated disregard of legal process. The Supreme Court's order of 18 January 2022 dismissing SLP (Cri.) 1345/2019 and 8982/2018, after the State's earlier SLP had also failed, was reproduced: neither Section 36 nor the relevant circular authorised a simultaneous independent enquiry of the kind undertaken there, and the Supreme Court found no reason to disturb the prior High Court observations about the officers. Union Territory of Jammu and Kashmir and Ors. v. Abdul Rehman Khandey and Ors., SLP (Civil) 5873/2025, order dated 7 March 2025, was expressly invoked before the DGP direction. The Supreme Court had regarded departmental action against officers failing to comply with judicial orders as appropriate, although it refrained at that stage from exemplary costs and disciplinary recommendation because contempt proceedings were pending and requested expeditious hearing.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to correct the trial court's order; Section 233 CrPC concerned the accused's application for production of defence evidence. Section 36 and Section 172 CrPC appeared within the fully reproduced earlier Deepak order on unauthorised parallel enquiry and case diaries, not as controlling statutory provisions for the present CDR production question.

4. Issues : First, whether the Section 233 request could be rejected as impossible to satisfy when the directed 2018 CDR and location data had actually been received and recovered. Second, what a trial court and police were required to do after a preservation order, a response reporting only the steps taken and a later claim of nonavailability. Third, whether the then SP's admitted receipt and unexplained withholding justified a personal compensatory deposit, disciplinary process and a contempt reference, despite uncertainty whether he meant to favour the accused or complainant. Fourth, whether the former SHO's prompt escalation, alleged ignorance and later transfer called for the same present stricture, and whether the current SHO's false response should be investigated.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the former SP's own account and recovered official email material as establishing that all directed CDRs and locations were received by him on 17 September 2018 and remained retrievable. He had not explained why he failed to forward them to the police station or trial court or disclose their receipt. The 1 October 2018 reply that steps were being taken obscured the fact of receipt; the later statement that the data had never been preserved was false. The Judge characterised this as conscious suppression and a fraud on the court, damaging a truth-finding trial where an accused faced the most serious penalties and a complainant's family had lost a member. The trial court knew it had ordered preservation; it should have required production or an explanation identifying responsibility, and should not have simply excused the agency. It was directed to initiate a contempt process against the former SP. As to motive, the Court considered two possibilities: concealment might have enabled the accused to seek an adverse inference, or might have favoured the complainant by hiding the actual locations of the witnesses and the deceased. Without a detailed inquiry it could not choose between them, but found mala fide favour to one side. That finding led to a personal ₹5 lakh deposit, with the recipient determined by conviction or acquittal. The earlier Deepak case and its Supreme Court SLP outcome were considered as context for the officer's prior conduct, and Abdul Rehman Khandey supported disciplinary accountability. The DGP was directed to initiate a departmental inquiry with specified charges. The former SHO sent the request the next day, may not have learned that the SP had the data and was transferred shortly thereafter; the Court declined a present stricture while expressly leaving open inquiry into what he knew and whether contempt should proceed. It likewise left to the trial court whether to proceed against the current SHO for the false unavailability reply. Finally, the data's present possession rendered the Section 233 refusal unsustainable. The High Court ordered production for consideration by the trial court under law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the petition and set aside the First Additional Sessions Judge's 18 September 2024 refusal in ST 2/2018. The current SP, Datia, was directed to file the complete records specified in the 7 September 2018 preservation order within ten days, unless already filed; the trial court was to continue in accordance with law. The trial judge was directed to initiate contempt proceedings against former SP Mayank Awasthi. The trial court could decide whether to proceed in contempt against former SHO Yatendra Singh Bhadoriya after specifically finding whether Awasthi had informed him of receipt of the records; it could separately consider whether to proceed against current SHO Amar Singh Gurjar for filing the false reply. Awasthi was directed personally to deposit ₹5,00,000 with the Principal Registrar within one month, failing which recovery and a separate contempt case were directed. On deposit the money was to go to the trial court for disbursement to the complainant side upon conviction or the accused side upon acquittal. The DGP was directed to institute departmental inquiry and issue a charge sheet within one month, intimate the Principal Registrar by 20 May 2025, and preserve a certified copy of the order in Awasthi's service record. No present stricture was imposed on Bhadoriya, without binding any later inquiry.

Ramu v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 4578/2025, 16/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (770) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation — registered FIR — informant's grievance about proper investigation — Section 156(3) CrPC and magistrate's supervisory powers - Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was applied: even after registration of an FIR, a person complaining that investigation is improper may approach the concerned Magistrate, who can order and monitor a proper investigation and take necessary incidental steps if satisfied. The applicant alleged that investigation into his minor daughter's death was deficient and named respondents 6–8, but the basis of those accusations was unclear to the High Court. His Section 482 application was dismissed with liberty to approach the Magistrate with his grievances and prima facie material.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramveer Baghel, the father of a minor daughter, approached the High Court under Section 482 CrPC in relation to Crime No. 40/2023 at Police Station Dehat Bhind, District Bhind. The registered offences were Sections 302 and 201 IPC. He alleged that his daughter had been raped and killed, that Ashish, Ranu and Harnam were responsible for the alleged rape, and that the police were not carrying out the investigation properly. The prayer embedded in the order sought directions concerning the investigation, arrest of respondents 6 –8, DNA testing of those respondents, and protection of the applicant and his family. These were his allegations and requests, not findings or directions of the Court. The State opposed the application and submitted that the police were investigating freely and fairly. The High Court therefore addressed the proper forum for the asserted investigative grievance, rather than determining criminal responsibility or the adequacy of each proposed investigative step.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., 2007:INSC:1243, (2008) 2 SCC 409, was expressly invoked and extensively quoted by the High Court. The reproduced passages explain a staged remedy: a person complaining that police refuse to register a cognizable FIR may first address the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) CrPC; if that fails, or if an FIR has been registered but investigation is improper, an application under Section 156(3) lies to the Magistrate. On satisfaction, the Magistrate can direct registration where necessary, direct proper investigation, make suitable incidental orders and monitor investigation. The latter remedy remains available after registration and during investigation; the present Court applied that aspect to the father's complaint about an existing FIR. The Sakiri Vasu quotation also refers to Mohd. Yousuf v. Afaq Jahan, (2006) 1 SCC 627, for the pre-cognizance Magistrate's ability to direct registration as part of an investigation order, and to Dilawar Singh v. State of Delhi, (2007) 12 SCC 641, for the same general position. The reproduction was materially used for the Section 156(3) route, not to resolve the truth of the applicant's allegations.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the jurisdiction invoked for the High Court application. The decision applied Section 156(3) CrPC, including the Magistrate's power, as stated in Sakiri Vasu, to secure and monitor proper investigation even when an FIR is already registered. Section 154(3) CrPC appears in the reproduced Supreme Court explanation of a complaint to the Superintendent of Police concerning non-registration; non-registration was not the factual problem in this case. Sections 302 and 201 IPC identify the offences recorded in Crime No. 40/2023. The alleged rape was part of the applicant's account, not a charge or offence independently adjudicated in this order.

4. Issues : The material question was whether the father's dissatisfaction with a police investigation already underway, including his accusations against respondents 6–8, warranted direct relief from the High Court under Section 482, or whether his grievance should be brought with prima facie material before the Magistrate empowered under Section 156(3).

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that the applicant was dissatisfied with the police investigation and had made allegations against respondents 6–8, but the basis for making those allegations was not clear from the matter before it. It applied Sakiri Vasu to identify the Magistrate as the available judicial forum for a complaint that a registered case is not being investigated properly. The quoted Supreme Court reasoning is broader than FIR registration alone: Section 156(3) carries the incidental powers needed for a proper investigation and permits Magistrate monitoring when the Magistrate is satisfied. In the present case the High Court left the applicant at liberty to place his grievances and prima facie material before the Magistrate. This was a ruling on the appropriate forum and available remedy at the stage of the pending investigation.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The applicant was expressly given liberty to approach the concerned Magistrate, stating his grievances and placing prima facie material supporting his allegations against respondents 6–8. Any exercise of Section 156(3) powers remained for the Magistrate upon a proper application.

Ramveer Baghel v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 21040/2023, 25/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (772) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder — Section 300 thirdly — intended injury and objective fatal sufficiency - Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, set out the four inquiries: presence and nature of injury, intention to cause the injury actually found, and its sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Intention to kill or awareness of fatal seriousness is not an additional requirement under clause Thirdly. The Bench applied the Virsa Singh framework to the firearm wounds and the post-mortem findings of homicidal death to sustain the murder conviction. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, was considered for the high probability of death and the relevance of the weapon and body part.

Culpable homicide — Sections 299, 300, 302 and 304 IPC — intention, knowledge and exceptions - Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra (Criminal Appeals 1078–1079 of 2005) explained the sequence from Section 299 to Section 300 and its exceptions, with Section 304 Part I addressing intention and Part II addressing knowledge where the homicide is not murder. The Court set out that framework and declined to disturb the Section 302 conviction for successive shots fired at the victim against a background of continuing prior enmity.

Murder conversion — sudden fight and the single-blow analogy - Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai

Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, required every Exception 4 condition, including a sudden mutual fight without premeditation or undue advantage. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, required a contextual assessment of weapon, force, target, prior enmity and surrounding circumstances; Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, drew intention from the weapon, vital target and injury. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, rejected mechanical conversion solely because an attack involved one injury. The Bench cited those tests and affirmed murder on the evidence of multiple shots in the present case.

FIR — Section 154 CrPC — police response before registration - A police station roughly 50–60 metres from the firearm attack could respond to a noticed cognizable crime before the FIR was formally registered. The appearance of a tractor engine number in the FIR before its recorded seizure and disputed timing did not, in these circumstances, fatally undermine the prosecution case; registration was not a prerequisite to the police taking initiative.

Medical and ocular evidence — firearm injuries and sequence - The doctor's opinion that the shots entering from the back appeared to have struck while the victim was standing did not conclusively negate eyewitness accounts of his running, falling after Ramveer fired, and Kailash firing thereafter. Three entries, two exits, charring or blackening and the fatal cause supported a firearm attack; the expert opinion was treated as indicating probability rather than conclusively establishing the victim's precise posture and the sequence of shots.

Witness contradictions — two shooters and brief occurrence - The Court accepted the testimony of PW-1, PW-2 and PW-4 identifying both appellants despite prior enmity, family relationship, alleged omissions and the acquittal of other accused. In an attack lasting only a few seconds and directed at one victim, inability to say which gun caused each wound and minor sequencing differences were not fatal in light of this evidence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ramveer and Kailash, two brothers, appealed under Section 374(2) CrPC against the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Morena's judgment of 23 November 2005 in Sessions Trial No. 79/2001. Both had been sentenced to life imprisonment under Section 302 IPC and five years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 27(1) of the Arms Act, concurrently. Three other accused brothers, Balveer, Shatrughan and Siyaram, had been acquitted. The families had a history of reciprocal murder cases following the deaths of Vasudev, a brother of the accused, and Feli Ram, the father of deceased Mahendra; the parties had compromised in those earlier trials, but the prosecution maintained the hostility continued.

On 14 November 2000 Mahendra, his cousins Rajendra Singh (PW-1) and Balram (PW-2) had gone to visit their relative Ramjilal in Morena Jail and waited for a bus at Noorabad. According to the prosecution, the accused arrived by tractor with firearms, lathi and luhangi; the three men ran toward the nearby police station. Ramveer fired his licensed gun at Mahendra, who fell, and Kailash then fired a katta; the others allegedly struck him. Rajendra and Balram reported the event. Police prepared a spot map, seized cartridges, soil and a tractor, registered the death and obtained a post-mortem before filing the charge sheet. The post-mortem recorded three firearm entries, two exits, a pelvic-region wound without an exit and a frontal abrasion, and concluded that the gunshot injuries caused homicidal death. The doctor's evidence included an opinion about the victim's posture when back-entry wounds were inflicted.

At trial the two appellants faced charges including Sections 148, 302 or alternatively 302/149, and 307 or alternatively 307/149 IPC, as well as an Arms Act charge. The appealed convictions were under Section 302 IPC and Section 27(1) of the Arms Act. They argued that the same evidence had led to other accused being acquitted; the related eyewitnesses were interested due to prior enmity; the FIR was suspicious or antetimed because the tractor engine number appeared before a later seizure and the reported time varied; the witnesses' account that the victim had fallen conflicted with the doctor's inference that he was standing when shot; and omissions and contradictions undermined guilt. The State supported the trial judgment. The Bench heard the appeal and reviewed the record, including PW-1, PW-2, PW-4, the doctor PW-5, and the investigating officer PW-7.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was quoted for the four elements of Section 300 Thirdly: an actual injury, proof of its nature, an intention to inflict that very injury rather than an accidental or different wound, and the injury's objective sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The Bench explained that an intention to kill, or to cause an injury understood to be fatal, is not additionally needed. The later Bavisetti quotation reiterated Virsa Singh's separation of intended injury from its seriousness. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, was quoted for the high probability of death represented by ordinary-course sufficiency and the relevance of weapon and body part; it reinforced that inquiry.

Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra (Criminal Appeals 1078–1079 of 2005) was reproduced for the sequence of inquiry: Section 299 culpable homicide, the four clauses and exceptions of Section 300, and then the distinction between intentional homicide under Section 304 Part I and homicide based on knowledge without intention under Part II if murder is not established. Its discussion of the criminal-law sense of knowledge under Section 300 Secondly distinguished virtual certainty from mere probability.

Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, was quoted at length on Exception 4 to Section 300: a sudden mutual fight in the heat of passion, no premeditation, and no undue advantage or cruel or unusual conduct, all on facts involving the deceased. It explained that mutual provocation and combat distinguish it from unilateral provocation.

Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, was cited for classification of an offence involving even one knife blow according to the injury, whether a vital part was affected, the weapon and the manner of assault, with no rule automatically excluding Section 302. Pulicherla Nagaraju alias Nagaraja v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, furnished a nonexhaustive contextual list for intention: the weapon and whether it was carried, whether a vital body part was targeted, the force used, a quarrel or chance occurrence, prior enmity, provocation, heat of passion, advantage and number of blows. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, was quoted for inferring intention from the weapon, chosen body part and force reflected by the injury. The Bench invoked these complementary tests and then accepted the evidence of firearms directed at the victim, continuing enmity and fatal injuries, rather than reducing the charge merely on the basis of the number of injuries.

State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, was reproduced on the absence of a fixed single-blow exemption from Section 302 and on the cumulative conditions of Exception 4. Within its quotation the Supreme Court discussed Arun Raj v. Union of India, (2010) 6 SCC 457, on vital part and weapon, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 10 SCC 604, on a forceful fatal pestle strike, and Leela Ram on the four Exception 4 conditions. These nested authorities supplied Kanhaiyalal's explanation rather than distinct factual applications by this Bench. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, likewise cautioned that one injury cannot mechanically imply Section 304 Part II; premeditation, weapon and assault context matter. Its embedded discussion of State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam, (1995) 1 SCC 326, and Virsa Singh concerned the distinction between intending the actual injury and its degree of seriousness. These single-injury authorities were used as classification guidance; this case involved multiple firearm wounds and two identified shooters.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 299 and 300 IPC supplied the governing culpable-homicide and murder definitions. Section 299 requires death caused by an act done with intention to cause death, intention to cause bodily injury likely to cause death, or knowledge that death is likely. Section 300's four clauses identify murder, subject to its exceptions; the judgment particularly explained clause Thirdly's intended injury and objective ordinary-course sufficiency, clause Secondly's knowledge aspect, and Exception 4's sudden-fight conditions through precedent. Section 302 prescribes the affirmed murder liability; Section 304 Parts I and II were considered as possible lesser classifications dependent on intention or knowledge when murder is not made out. Section 154 CrPC governed information about a cognizable offence and the FIR timing contention, while Section 374(2) supplied appellate jurisdiction. Section 27(1) Arms Act was part of the affirmed sentence, and the charge was described as Section 27(1) read with Section 5.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Mahendra's firearm death was culpable homicide amounting to murder attributable to Ramveer and Kailash, or whether the applicable mental element and exceptions warranted an offence under Section 304 rather than Section 302. (ii) Whether the FIR's timing and its tractor engine number before the documented later seizure showed antetiming or fabrication that undermined the prosecution, and whether police could have acted before formal FIR registration. (iii) Whether the eyewitness identification and shooting sequence survived the medical posture opinion, the related witnesses' prior hostility, alleged contradictions and omissions, and the difficulty of attributing individual wounds to two shooters. (iv) Whether the convictions and concurrent sentences, including Section 27(1) Arms Act, should be set aside.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench first set out the Sections 299–300 distinction and Virsa Singh's Section 300 Thirdly test. It treated the intention to cause the particular bodily injury, not a separately proved desire for death, as decisive under Thirdly once that injury's sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature to cause death was shown. It also set out the knowledge-based Section 304 Part II distinction and all the conditions for a sudden fight under Exception 4 through the cited Supreme Court authorities. Their contextual approach to intention precluded mechanical reliance on the number of injuries. On the case record, it found a homicidal firearm death: the post-mortem documented three entry wounds and two exits, with a fatal pattern. The continuing hostility furnished motive despite earlier compromises. PW-1, PW-2 and PW-4 said Ramveer fired first and Kailash fired immediately afterward as Mahendra fled, and their account was supported by the gunshot injuries.

On the FIR objection, the station was about 50–60 metres from the scene. Officers could hear the shots, notice a cognizable event and begin action before a Section 154 report was formally registered. The Bench therefore rejected the defence inference that the tractor details recorded before seizure and the timing discrepancies necessarily established antetiming that was fatal to the prosecution case.

The doctor's opinion that back-entry wounds could have been inflicted while the deceased stood was expert evidence indicating probability, rather than conclusive proof of the exact sequence. The Bench related it to the evidence that Mahendra was running before he fell. The blackening, charring, entry and exit findings substantiated gunfire and did not discredit identification of the two appellants. In a rapidly unfolding attack with both firing at one target, reliably attributing each injury to a particular gun was impracticable. Omissions and variations in the witnesses' account of an incident lasting only a few seconds were not fatal; the investigating officer and seizure witnesses supported the investigative record. The Bench concluded that the trial court did not err in convicting and sentencing these two appellants.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. The Sessions Trial No. 79/2001 judgment dated 23 November 2005 was confirmed as to Ramveer and Kailash: life imprisonment under Section 302 IPC and five years' rigorous imprisonment under Section 27(1) Arms Act, running concurrently. The Bench noted the Central Jail, Gwalior report of 9 August 2021 that Ramveer was on 30 days' parole from 4 August and Kailash on 16 days' parole from 28 July through 12 August 2021. It directed the trial court to take steps ensuring both returned to custody to serve the remaining sentence, and ordered the judgment and trial record sent back.

Ramveer and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 82/2006, 01/09/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (774) Prev Next

Headnote :- Homicide — Sections 302 and 304 Part II IPC; Section 300 exceptions 1 and 4 — The husband was convicted of murdering his wife Mamta, who had sustained extensive blunt injuries in their home. An earlier missing-person report from September 2017 corroborated her previous departure and was considered in the accused's favour although it had not been exhibited. It established neither adultery nor sudden provocation at the time of the occurrence in July 2018. No immediate triggering act was proved. There had been ample time to cool down, and the blows were repeated and cruel. B.D. Khunte was applied to grave and sudden provocation; K. Ravi Kumar, Abdul Latif, Bagdi Ram and Adu Ram were cited by the appellant in support of conversion. The murder conviction and life sentence were affirmed.

Evidence — Section 106 Evidence Act — The prosecution established homicidal death in the appellant's house, his presence with the deceased and their prior quarrel through PW1's unchallenged testimony before the appellant was called upon to explain facts especially within his knowledge. Section 106 does not relieve the prosecution of its burden or complete an otherwise incomplete chain of circumstances. The account of a fall from the roof was rejected in view of the pattern of injuries, the absence of any indication of a toilet on the roof and the appellant's conduct. Rajinder Singh, Nagendra Sah, Ram Gulam Chaudhary, Mir Mohammad Omar and Tulshiram Sahadu Suryawanshi were considered.

Medical and forensic proof — Ex.P/27 recorded numerous ante-mortem abrasions and contusions, arm and hand fractures, occipital fracture and subdural hematoma; the autopsy opinion was that death was homicidal. Some isolated injuries could occur from a fall, but the overall pattern could not be explained by a single-storey fall. The doctor's omissions in his oral account did not negate the exhibited report; the Court criticised the prosecutor's failure to seek clarification. Ex.P/29 reported human blood on the knife, danda and towel.

Witnesses — partial hostility — PW1 testified to the fight and the appellant's refusal to allow intervention, though he denied actually seeing the assault. This part was not challenged in defence cross-examination. PW2–PW4, examined in the accused's absence with counsel consenting to cross-examine, did not support the prosecution. The evidence of other hostile witnesses and the investigating officers was also considered.

Conduct — absconding — The appellant did not alert the police, arrange treatment, identify the body or participate in the inquest, and was arrested the next day near a bus stand. Kundula Bala Subrahmanyam was applied: flight alone is not proof and may have innocent explanations, but it corroborated the other established circumstances. The appeal was dismissed, and the appellant was to serve the remainder of his life sentence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Division Bench heard an appeal under Section 374(2) CrPC against a 22 August 2019 conviction by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Sabalgarh, Morena, in Sessions Trial No. 350/2018. The appellant received life imprisonment and Rs. 2,000 fine, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default, under Section 302 IPC. He and Mamta had been married for roughly twelve to fifteen years and had two children. On 14 July 2018 villagers and her family found her body in the courtyard of his house. A merg was registered, followed by inquest, scene seizures, postmortem, statements, arrest, recoveries and FSL analysis. The accused proposed that she had climbed to the roof to relieve herself and died in a fall; alternatively he sought Section 304 Part II on grave and sudden provocation arising from alleged infidelity and a quarrel. The State disputed both accounts. The judgment framed questions of homicidal death, authorship, explanation and provocation. The appellate court evaluated the autopsy, neighbour Banwarilal's account, relatives' hostile evidence, the appellant's absence and subsequent arrest, and an unexhibited 2017 Jaipur missing-person report.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rajinder Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 15 SCC 245; Nagendra Sah v. State of Bihar, (2021) 10 SCC 725; Ram Gulam Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2001) 8 SCC 311; State of W.B. v. Mir Mohammad Omar, (2000) 8 SCC 382; and Tulshiram Sahadu Suryawanshi v. State of Maharashtra, (2012) 10 SCC 373 were cited or quoted for Section 106: prosecution must first establish a basis for inference, and the accused's silence or false explanation about facts especially within his knowledge can only add a link, not replace an incomplete prosecution chain. Kundula Bala Subrahmanyam v. State of A.P., (1993) 2 SCC 684 was quoted for absconding as potentially corroborative but not conclusive. B.D. Khunte v. Union of India, (2015) 1 SCC 286 was quoted at length on all ingredients of grave and sudden provocation, loss of self-control and cooling time; Holmes and Mancini appeared within its quoted discussion, not as independently analysed authorities. The appellant relied on K. Ravi Kumar v. State of Karnataka, (2015) 2 SCC 638; State of M.P. v. Abdul Latif, (2018) 5 SCC 456; Bagdi Ram v. State of M.P., (2004) 12 SCC 302; and Adu Ram v. Mukna, (2005) 10 SCC 597 for a Section 304 Part II outcome even with multiple injuries after loss of self-control. The Bench recorded these citations but found the necessary provocation absent and established that the conduct was cruel and dangerous.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374(2) CrPC governed the appeal. Section 302 IPC and Section 300 Exceptions 1 and 4 supplied the murder and mitigation inquiry; Section 304 Part II was the alternative requested by defence. Section 106 Evidence Act concerned facts especially within the accused's knowledge, without shifting the prosecution's ultimate burden of proving guilt beyond reasonable doubt; Section 114 was mentioned in the Tulshiram extract. Section 313 CrPC statement supplied the appellant's account and certain admissions. Section 174 CrPC related to the initial unnatural-death inquiry. The Bench mentioned Section 233 CrPC in relation to PW2–PW4 evidence taken when the accused was absent, but expressly declined to decide the supposed violation because no prejudice resulted from their hostile evidence. It accepted that a defence explanation is assessed on preponderance of probabilities, distinct from the prosecution's criminal standard.

4. Issues : Whether injuries and autopsy established homicide rather than accidental fall; whether the prosecution proved foundational circumstances linking appellant and deceased, permitting a limited Section 106 inference; whether partially hostile and other witnesses, recoveries, FSL and post-event conduct sustained authorship; whether the earlier disappearance and contemporaneous dispute amounted to grave and sudden provocation or an Exception 4 sudden fight warranting Section 304 Part II; and whether any procedural prejudice arose from recording three hostile witnesses with defence counsel participating while appellant was absent.

5. Ratio / Findings : The post-mortem report, Ex.P/27, prepared by Dr S.R. Mishra (PW10), described multiple abrasions and contusions on extremities, buttocks and thighs, fractures of the left little finger and metacarpal and right humerus, occipital fracture with subdural hematoma, facial abrasion, cheek blister and burnt hair. Death was attributed to head and multiple body injuries and was classified as homicidal. Cross-examination elicited that a fall might cause some injuries, but the court considered the overall widespread pattern inconsistent with a fall from the single-storey home. The doctor's oral description omitted some abrasions and buttock contusions in the exhibited report. The Bench criticised his apparent assistance to the accused and the prosecutor's lack of clarifying questions, yet held Ex.P/27 proved because its contents and the opinion of homicidal death had not been challenged. PW1 said the husband brought Mamta back at about 10 p.m., they dined and fought, and he went to intervene only to be told it was a personal matter; the next morning the appellant was absent and Mamta lay dead. PW1 denied seeing blows and was partly hostile, but his material account went unchallenged in defence cross-examination. PW2–PW4, relatives examined with counsel willing to cross-examine though the accused was not present, supported only an accident account received from others and turned hostile. Other witnesses were partly or wholly hostile; the investigating officers and constable proved inquest, scene seizure, arrest and recovery evidence. Knife and wooden danda were produced in sealed cover; some other sealed exhibits were not opened at trial. The court noted they were ordinary common objects. FSL Ex.P/29 found human blood on the knife, danda and towel. The prosecution established homicide at the marital house after the couple had been together and had fought. Applying the cited Section 106 cases, the Bench found the appellant's explanation of facts especially within his knowledge inadequate, without treating Section 106 as a substitute for its prior proof. No toilet on the roof was shown in the site plan, nor was its existence suggested to any witness. The appellant neither took Mamta for treatment nor informed police, was absent from the inquest and postmortem identification and was arrested on 15 July at 2 p.m. near Sujarma bus stand. Flight was corroborative, not individually decisive. For provocation, an unexhibited prosecution missing-person report was usable in the accused's favour and corroborated his concern about her disappearance in 2017, but it did not prove adultery. Her staying at her parental home and the husband's bringing her back did not disclose a grave, sudden triggering event. About ten months had passed since that report, and the immediate quarrel's cause was not shown; he did not call children said to be in the house. The court treated the old incident, if anything, as potential motive rather than a continuing loss of self-control. The repeated severe beating, cruel conduct and undue advantage also precluded the suggested mitigation on the basis of a sudden fight. It found that he had intended to kill her, had known that his acts would cause her death, and had inflicted injuries sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, and rejected Section 304 Part II.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court affirmed the Section 302 IPC conviction and life-imprisonment sentence with Rs. 2,000 fine and the trial court's three-month default rigorous imprisonment. As life imprisonment was the minimum punishment applicable to the sustained murder conviction, the Bench made no sentence reduction despite the appellant's submission that he had served about seven years and eleven months. The appellant remained in jail and was to serve the remaining sentence. The appeal was dismissed and the record with judgment returned to the trial court for information and compliance.

Ramvilas Dhakad v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 9150/2019, 15/06/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (775) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail — successive application — fourth Section 439 CrPC request following rejection of third application on 29 may 2024 — The applicant produced the trial order sheets in support of his claim of delay. The chargesheet was filed on 5 December 2023; from 2 January 2024, defence counsel repeatedly sought time to argue on the framing of charges; the charges were eventually framed on 20 April 2024. Later concerns about summons and a co-accused's absconding did not persuade the Court that prosecution caused the asserted delay. The record disclosed no fresh basis for granting bail.

Regular bail — Sections 420 and 406/34 IPC — The applicant, arrested on 6 October 2023, was alleged to have taken vehicles on rent and mortgaged them for money. The Court described him as the mastermind, took account of the delay attributable to the defence at the stage of framing charges and the co-accused's absconding, and dismissed the application. The applicant was given liberty to revive his bail prayer after Ankit Sharma surrenders; meanwhile, he could seek separation of his trial from Ankit Sharma's. These are allegations and bail-stage observations, not a final finding of guilt.

Supervisory correction — trial record — Handwritten order sheets of 24 February, 9 March and 23 March 2024 listed absence of prosecution witnesses and evidence dates although arguments on framing charges had not yet concluded; other entries were typed. Later directions to issue witness summons lacked endorsements in the margins of the order sheets, and the entry of 14 June referred to summons that apparently had not been issued. The Principal District and Sessions Judge, Bhopal was directed to inquire into how the entries were made and signed and to complete the proceedings within two months. If judicial negligence was found, it was to be reported to the Chief Justice for administrative action; if the clerk was also found responsible, departmental proceedings were to be initiated against him. A copy of the order was directed to be sent for compliance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This was the applicant's fourth regular-bail application under Section 439 CrPC in Crime No. 891/2023 of Police Station Nishatpura, Bhopal, registered for offences under Sections 420 and 406 read with Section 34 IPC. Arrested on 6 October 2023, he was alleged to have rented vehicles, then mortgaged them and retained the money. Counsel relied on custody and delay in trial. An earlier, third application had been dismissed on 29 May 2024 in M.Cr.C. No. 21121/2024. In response to that order, the applicant supplied trial-court order sheets to support his renewed delay argument. The High Court reviewed the sequence from chargesheet to the June 2024 hearing dates and found substantial concerns about how the record was maintained. Its decision both refused bail and made conditional administrative inquiry directions. The case diary was available.

2. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the regular-bail request. The registration of the underlying crime was under Sections 420 and 406/34 IPC, dealing respectively with alleged cheating, criminal breach of trust and common intention. The sequence of charge framing and witness summons was evaluated from the trial order sheets. The High Court directed a district judicial inquiry and possible administrative or departmental action conditionally.

3. Issues : Whether the period in custody and the order sheets supplied after the third bail rejection showed delay justifying release on the fourth application; how the seriousness of the alleged scheme of mortgaging vehicles taken on rent and the conduct of accused and co-accused affected bail; and whether the apparent trial-record anomalies required a separate supervisory inquiry.

4. Ratio / Findings : The chargesheet was filed on 5 December 2023. From 2 January 2024, counsel for the accused repeatedly sought time to argue on framing charges. The 10 February entry listed the matter for that purpose, but handwritten entries on 24 February, 9 March and 23 March recorded absent prosecution witnesses and repeatedly listed evidence, before any charge had been framed. The court returned to arguments on framing charges on 5 April and framed charges on 20 April. The High Court observed that the anomalous handwritten entries appeared to have been written by a clerk and signed by the trial court without scrutiny; it ordered an inquiry rather than declaring responsibility finally established. At the evidence stage, entries of 17 and 31 May directed summons, but no endorsements in the margins of the order sheets showed that the summons had been issued; the 14 June notation that issued summons had not returned appeared prima facie inaccurate in light of the 31 May sheet. The co-accused Ankit Sharma absconded on 27 June; his bail bonds were cancelled and an arrest warrant issued. On these facts, the High Court attributed the earlier delay at the stage of framing charges to defence counsel, observed no delay on the prosecution's part for the bail determination, and considered the absconding co-accused and the applicant's alleged leading role. It held that no case for bail had been made out. The description of the applicant as a mastermind is the court's bail-stage characterization of an allegation, not a conviction. The third bail rejection dated 29 May 2024 was a procedural antecedent.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the fourth application for regular bail. The applicant was given liberty to renew his prayer once co-accused Ankit Sharma surrenders; meanwhile he could apply to separate his trial from that of the absconder. The Principal District and Sessions Judge, Bhopal was directed to inquire into the writing and signing of the 24 February, 9 March and 23 March entries. If judicial negligence is found, a report is to go to the Chief Justice for administrative action; if the clerk is also found responsible, departmental proceedings are to be initiated. The entire inquiry process was to conclude within two months of the date of this order. Ranjeet Singh Johal v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 29009/2024, 24/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (776) Prev Next

Headnote :- Sexual offences — Section 376 IPC — pre-amendment Section 375 sixthly — prosecutrix born 2 april 1990 and occurrence on 20 july 2006 — above sixteen at occurrence — Consent was accordingly material to the rape charge. Assessing her court testimony, cross-examination and circumstances of travel and stays over ten to twelve days, the High Court found consent on this record and acquitted the appellant of rape. Kaini Rajan was applied to assess voluntary consent in its factual context. The Court applied the law governing the 2006 occurrence.

Kidnapping and procuration — Sections 361, 363 and 366-A IPC — girl below eighteen — minor's willingness did not replace guardian's consent — Accused's taking or enticement remained in issue. The Court considered the request to run away, her account of being taken under threat and their subsequent travel. It found the necessary persuasion or taking and affirmed both convictions. Jinish Lal Sah, Mahendra Subhashbhai Vankhed and S. Varadarajan were cited by the appellant on the need for an act of the accused and proximate causation.

Evidence — case-diary statement ex. D-1 — Section 145 Evidence Act — The statement was not substantive proof of alleged earlier intercourse that was not repeated in testimony; the State could not rely on it to establish an earlier occasion of statutory rape. The Court considered omissions and contradictions when assessing the testimony.

Proof of age — unproved and unexhibited school marksheet filed by prosecution with charge-sheet — The Court accepted the date of birth stated in it in favour of the accused, as the trial court had done, without treating the document as adverse substantive proof. Age over sixteen governed the 2006 rape issue, while age below eighteen governed kidnapping and procuration.

Sentence — partial allowance of appeal — Section 376 conviction and seven-year sentence set aside; Sections 363 and 366-A affirmed — Approximately one year and twenty-six days of custody was treated as sufficient imprisonment for the surviving counts; the fine was enhanced to Rs. 10,000 on each count. The enhanced fines were to be deposited within three months. Default would revive the original three-year rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 500 fine on each count and require surrender; the bail bonds would be discharged on timely deposit.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appellant challenged the judgment of the Second Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track), Ganjbasoda, Vidisha, dated 21 April 2009 in Sessions Trial No. 205/2006. The trial court convicted him under Sections 363, 366-A and 376 IPC and imposed respectively three, three and seven years' rigorous imprisonment with Rs. 500 fine for each offence; the custodial terms were concurrent. The complainant father reported his daughter missing on 21 July 2006 after finding her absent at night. Investigation led to her recovery, witness statements, medical examinations, the appellant's arrest and a charge-sheet. The prosecutrix said the appellant met her when she went outside at night, threatened her with a knife, took her to relatives and other places, and had intercourse. She also described a ten-to-twelve-day stay, travel with him, an alleged promise of marriage and eventual return to a police station. Her cross-examination and the earlier case-diary statement were contested. The school marksheet attached to the prosecution charge-sheet gave her date of birth as 2 April 1990. The incident was on 20 July 2006, so she was over sixteen and under eighteen. The school document had not been proved or exhibited. The High Court treated it as a prosecution document usable in favour of the accused, upheld the trial court's age finding, and examined the separate consequences under the then rape provision and the kidnapping provisions.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kaini Rajan v. State of Kerala, (2013) 9 SCC 113, was quoted and applied for the proposition that consent under Section 375 is voluntary, reasoned participation and is assessed from all relevant circumstances, with Section 90 identifying circumstances that negate consent. State of H.P. v. Mango Rami appeared within the Kaini Rajan passage, rather than as a separately analysed authority. The appellant relied on Jinish Lal Sah v. State of Bihar, (2003) 1 SCC 605; Mahendra Subhashbhai Vankhed v. State of Gujarat, 2018 (1) SCC (Cri) 840; and S. Varadarajan v. State of Madras, AIR 1965 SC 942, to contend that a minor's voluntary departure with the accused is insufficient without an act by the accused proximately causing her departure from guardianship. The High Court set out that contention, distinguished the meaning of taking and enticing, and found an act attributable to the appellant on its assessment of the evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374(2) CrPC supplied appellate jurisdiction. Section 375 sixthly IPC as applicable to the July 2006 occurrence used sixteen years as the relevant age for the rape charge; Section 376 prescribed the conviction under appeal. Sections 361 and 363 IPC concerned taking or enticing a female under eighteen from lawful guardianship without the guardian's consent. Section 366-A IPC, quoted in the judgment, concerned inducing a girl under eighteen to go from any place or do an act with the specified intent or knowledge of likely illicit intercourse. Section 90 IPC was addressed through the cited consent precedent. Section 145 of the Evidence Act governed contradiction by a prior statement; the case-diary statement Ex. D-1 was treated as non-substantive.

4. Issues : Whether the prosecutrix's age and the evidence of consent permitted the appellant's Section 376 conviction to stand under the provision applicable in 2006; whether, despite her voluntary travel as found for that issue, the appellant took or enticed a girl under eighteen from her guardian without permission and induced her for purposes of Sections 363 and 366-A; whether an allegation of earlier sexual relations contained in Ex. D-1 but absent from sworn testimony could sustain the State's alternative theory; whether the unproved school document could be used in the accused's favour to ascertain age; and what sentence was appropriate on the surviving convictions.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court accepted the birth date in the marksheet filed with the charge-sheet in the accused's favour despite the prosecution's failure to prove or exhibit it. The trial court's corresponding finding meant that the prosecutrix was above sixteen at the time of the incident, so her consent was material to the rape allegation under the then applicable Section 375 sixthly. The High Court considered her travel and stays with the appellant and relatives, encounters with other people and with police at a railway station without making a complaint, admissions about friendship and her accounts in examination and cross-examination. It concluded on this particular record that she had voluntarily accompanied him and participated in intercourse; accordingly, it set aside the Section 376 conviction. The judgment also mentioned a medical characterization of prior sexual experience and FSL findings. The State argued that earlier intercourse while under sixteen would constitute rape independently. The court rejected that route because the allegation of the prior occasion appeared only in Ex. D-1 and was not part of the evidence given in court. It said a case-diary statement is not substantive evidence and may be used in the context of contradiction under Section 145; an allegation appearing solely in it could not count against the accused. For the remaining offences, the court treated the prosecutrix's age under eighteen and absence of the guardian's consent as material, and recognised the distinct question whether the accused took or enticed her. It discussed taking by force or fear and enticing by persuasion. The appellant invoked Supreme Court authorities for the need for a proximate causal act. The court referred to her account of a knife, their travel and, expressly, the Ex. D-1 account that he asked her to run away; it characterised the latter request as persuasion and affirmed Sections 363 and 366-A.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court partly allowed the appeal. The appellant was acquitted of the Section 376 IPC charge and the related seven-year term was set aside. Convictions under Sections 363 and 366-A were sustained. The court calculated custody of about one year and twenty-six days, taking into account detention from 30 July to 1 December 2006 and later custody reflected in the trial and appellate records, and substituted the period already undergone for the three-year rigorous imprisonment on both surviving counts. It enhanced the fine from Rs. 500 to Rs. 10,000 for each count. The enhanced amounts were payable within three months of the date of this order. On default, the original three-year rigorous imprisonment and Rs. 500 fine on each surviving count would automatically revive, and the appellant had to surrender to serve the remainder. He was then on bail; timely payment meant no surrender and discharge of his bail and surety bonds. The balance of the trial judgment was affirmed subject to those changes.

Ranu Kushwaha v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 358/2009, 04/10/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (777) Prev Next

Headnote :- Rash driving — overloaded bus — roof passengers — Sections 279, 337 and 304-A IPC - The bus overturned, killing eight and injuring twenty-six. Pawan (PW-1) and Ashok (PW-18) identified the applicant as the driver. His identification was not challenged in cross-examination; a Dehati Nalishi lodged within thirty minutes named him. Several witnesses described rash driving and some specifically described roof passengers. The Court held that allowing passengers to sit on the roof itself amounted to rash and negligent driving and that the driver was not to permit passengers beyond the bus's capacity. On the combined evidence, it found guilt proved beyond reasonable doubt. Accident alone was not used as a substitute for proof.

Criminal revision — concurrent factual findings — perversity - The JMFC's convictions and the Sessions appellate court's dismissal were not open to a fresh factual reassessment in revision merely because the driver repeated his denial. The High Court stated the need to show perversity, found none identified, and independently noted the testimony and prompt report supporting the findings. It affirmed the convictions for IPC Sections 279, 337 (26 counts) and 304-A (eight counts), the conviction under Sections 66/192(a) of the Motor Vehicles Act and the concurrent sentences. The earlier Section 338 acquittal and co-accused's separate liability were not reopened.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rashid Kha drove bus MP08-F-9685 in an incident in which the bus overturned, eight people died and twenty-six were injured. The prosecution alleged rash and negligent driving and carriage of passengers above the bus's capacity, including people on the roof. The police charge-sheeted him under IPC Sections 279, 337 (initially described as 21 counts), 338 (14 counts) and 304-A (eight counts), as well as Sections 66/192(a) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1988. Co-accused Santosh faced the Motor Vehicles Act accusation. Both pleaded not guilty. The prosecution examined numerous witnesses, including passengers and witnesses to identity; the applicant called no defence witness.

On 14 December 2016 in Criminal Case No. 126 of 2010, the JMFC, Guna acquitted Kha of Section 338 on fourteen counts but convicted him under Section 279, Section 337 on twenty-six counts, Section 304-A on eight counts and the Motor Vehicles Act provisions. The judgment imposed three months' rigorous imprisonment and a Rs. 500 fine for Section 279, three months' rigorous imprisonment per Section 337 count, two years' rigorous imprisonment per Section 304-A count, and a Rs. 2,000 fine for the Motor Vehicles Act offence with default imprisonment. The imprisonment terms were to run concurrently. Santosh was separately convicted and fined under the Motor Vehicles Act. The order reports different Section 337 counts at the charge-sheet and conviction stages.

The Sixth Additional Sessions Judge, Guna dismissed Kha's Criminal Appeal No. 110 of 2017 on 8 March 2018. He then invoked Sections 397 and 401 CrPC in Criminal Revision No. 1537 of 2018. He denied that the prosecution proved his identity as driver and argued that rash and negligent operation had not been established even if he was driving. The State supported the concurrent findings. He was in jail at the time of the High Court's final order.

2. Statutes considered : IPC Section 279 governed rash driving on a public way, Section 337 the hurt counts, and Section 304-A the negligent-death counts affirmed by the Court. Section 338 was charged on fourteen counts, and the JMFC acquitted Kha on those counts. Sections 66/192(a) of the Motor Vehicles Act, 1988 were among the conviction provisions and fine orders. The bus capacity and roof-passenger conduct were material to the High Court's finding of negligent operation. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provided the revisional jurisdiction and the stated limit on interference with concurrent findings of fact absent perversity.

3. Issues : First, was Kha proved to have driven the bus at the time of the overturning, given his denial, the testimony of Pawan and Ashok, the scope of their cross-examination and the prompt Dehati Nalishi? Second, did the witness evidence, particularly excessive passenger carriage and seating on the roof, support the criminal finding of rash and negligent operation that had led to deaths and injuries? Third, in revision after a trial conviction and dismissed appeal, had any perversity in the concurrent factual findings been identified that would justify interference?

4. Ratio / Findings : Pawan (PW-1) and Ashok (PW-18) expressly said Kha was driving. The defence did not cross-examine them on the driver's identity. A Dehati Nalishi lodged within thirty minutes of the incident also identified Kha as driver. On the combined strength of this evidence, the High Court held his identity proved. On the manner of driving, it considered testimony of multiple passengers and other prosecution witnesses describing rashness, including specific descriptions of people seated on the roof. It reasoned that the driver was not supposed to permit passengers beyond the bus's capacity and that allowing passengers to travel on the roof was itself rash and negligent. The bus's overturning and the resulting fatalities and injuries formed the factual setting, but the Court relied on the identified testimony and conduct rather than treating the occurrence alone as decisive. It found the prosecution established rash and negligent driving beyond reasonable doubt. The Court applied the settled limit on revisional interference with findings of fact to the record.

The Court then applied the limited revisional standard: findings of fact concurrently made by the trial and appellate courts should not be disturbed unless shown to be perverse. Kha's counsel pointed to no perversity. The High Court also expressly endorsed the evidentiary basis for the lower courts' conclusions. It affirmed the IPC convictions and the Motor Vehicles Act conviction, and affirmed the sentences, all of which were concurrent as ordered below.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision. The convictions and sentences affirmed by the Sixth Additional Sessions Judge on 8 March 2018, arising from the JMFC judgment of 14 December 2016, remained in force: IPC Sections 279, 337 (26 counts), 304-A (eight counts) and Sections 66/192(a) of the Motor Vehicles Act, with the previously ordered concurrent imprisonment and fines. The applicant was in jail; the High Court gave no release or sentence modification direction.

Rashid Kha v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 1537/2018, 17/01/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (778) Prev Next

Headnote :- Cheating — business advances — dishonest intention at inception - The FIR and Section 161 CrPC statements described payments to fund stocking liquor under the applicants' one-year licence, followed by failures both to refund the money and to induct the complainant as a partner. They did not allege that partnership was promised before the money was advanced. The later partnership theory was an afterthought on that record. Following the distinction discussed in Naresh Kumar v. State of Karnataka, SLP (Crl.) No. 1570 of 2021, decided 12.03.2024, including Vesa Holdings (P) Ltd. v. State of Kerala, (2015) 8 SCC 293, and Jay Shri v. State of Rajasthan, SLP (Crl.) No. 14423 of 2023, decided 19.01.2024, a mere breach or non-refund did not demonstrate the dishonest intention required at inception for Section 420 IPC. Civil and criminal remedies may coexist where the ingredients of a criminal offence are pleaded; they were missing here.

Criminal breach of trust — Section 405/406 IPC — entrustment and dishonest diversion - Sachin Garg v. State of U.P., 2024:INSC:72, quoted Deepak Gaba v. State of U.P., (2023) 3 SCC 423: entrustment of property or dominion, dishonest misappropriation/conversion/use/disposal, and violation of the relevant legal direction or trust obligation are necessary. A wrong monetary claim or non-refund does not by itself establish any of these elements. Sachin Garg's related references to Prof. R.K. Vijayasarathy, (2019) 16 SCC 739, Vijay Kumar Ghai, (2022) 7 SCC 124, and Dalip Kaur, (2009) 14 SCC 696, reinforced the need to test the pleaded ingredients. The allegations of a business advance and demand for repayment did not disclose the necessary Section 406 foundation.

Inherent powers — civil dispute given criminal colour — Section 482 CrPC - Naresh Kumar applied Paramjeet Batra, (2013) 11 SCC 673, and referred to Randheer Singh, (2021) 14 SCC 626, and Usha Chakraborty, 2023:INSC:86, on the need for caution while permitting quashing where a civil transaction is clothed as an offence without its ingredients. Jay Shri discouraged using prosecution to pressure a person to repay a purely civil debt; Jaswant v. State of Punjab, Criminal Appeal No. 1233 of 2021, supplied another abuse-of-process illustration. On the complainant's own FIR and statements, the primary demand was return of Rs. 35,31,000 allegedly advanced. The Court found predominantly civil allegations and quashed the FIR under Sections 406, 420 and 34 IPC and consequential proceedings.

Quashing threshold — discharge remedy — pleaded offence ingredients - Sachin Garg's reproduced discussion of the suggestion to seek discharge did not prevent the High Court from testing the FIR and Section 161 material on their face. The High Court concluded that the prosecution's own case lacked an allegation of deceit before the advances were made or the material breach-of-trust ingredients, making continued criminal process abusive.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants, including Ratan Singh Chouhan and Ashutosh Singh Chouhan, sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 115 of 2023 at Police Station Madhoganj, Gwalior, registered for Sections 406, 420 and 34 IPC. According to respondent No. 2's FIR, a well-wisher told him on 10 February 2022 that the Chouhan applicants held a liquor licence for Jaurasi and Bilaua and needed about Rs. 30–40 lakh to stock liquor for a one-year contract. Aakash Singh Rajawat arranged a meeting; Gajendra Sen accompanied respondent No. 2. The FIR said Rammurari Singh Tomar gave Rs. 1,50,000 cash, respondent No. 2 gave Rs. 4 lakh cash after three days, respondent No. 2 later transferred a total of Rs. 20,41,000 by bank on several occasions, and Rammurari transferred Rs. 9,40,000 by bank. The asserted aggregate was Rs. 35,31,000.

The complainant alleged that the money was not returned, he was not made a partner and repayment demands were avoided. The FIR requested that the applicants return the asserted amount and that legal action follow. The applicants characterised this as a loan or business advance and argued that a civil recovery suit, rather than prosecution, was the appropriate remedy. They said the FIR and Section 161 CrPC statements revealed a desire to recover money. Respondent No. 2 countered that they had induced him with a promise of partnership in a licence awarded to an individual, allegedly knowing that a partner could not be inducted, thus showing deceit from inception. The High Court compared that later contention with the actual FIR and witness statements.

2. Precedents — Considered : Naresh Kumar and Another v. State of Karnataka and Another, SLP (Crl.) No. 1570 of 2021, decided 12 March 2024, was quoted and applied. It framed the need to distinguish a true criminal allegation from a predominantly contractual dispute and reiterated that dishonest or fraudulent intention must exist when a promise is made for cheating, not be inferred automatically from later non-performance. Within its quoted discussion, Paramjeet Batra v. State of Uttarakhand, (2013) 11 SCC 673, stated that Section 482 power is sparing but should prevent abuse where essential criminal ingredients are absent and an essentially civil dispute is given a criminal cloak. That passage acknowledged that civil transactions can also carry a criminal texture. Naresh Kumar cited Randheer Singh v. State of U.P., (2021) 14 SCC 626, against using criminal process as harassment, and Usha Chakraborty v. State of West Bengal, 2023:INSC:86, on quashing a civil dispute clothed as crime. It also cited Sarabjit Kaur v. State of Punjab, (2023) 5 SCC 360, that a breach is not necessarily an offence, and Vesa Holdings (P) Ltd. v. State of Kerala, (2015) 8 SCC 293, for fraudulent intent at the inception of the transaction.

Jay Shri and Another v. State of Rajasthan, SLP (Crl.) No. 14423 of 2023, decided 19 January 2024, was then cited directly for the proposition that mere breach does not amount to Section 420 or 406 IPC unless dishonest or fraudulent intention is shown from the start, and that criminal prosecution should not be used as pressure to settle purely civil claims. The Court relied on that caution when identifying the complaint's repayment objective. Jaswant v. State of Punjab and Another, Criminal Appeal No. 1233 of 2021, order of 20 October 2021, was quoted at length as a separate abuse-of-process illustration. The reproduced Supreme Court account concerned money paid for promised overseas employment, earlier investigative views favouring closure, later Section 420 proceedings, a compromise with the principal accused, and summons against persons abroad without specific cheating allegations. It criticised declining relief under the inherent powers merely because an accused was named in an FIR.

Sachin Garg v. State of U.P. and Others, 2024:INSC:72, 2024 (1) SCR 1134, was relied on by the applicants and substantially quoted in the Court's own analysis. The passage recorded a suggestion in the appealed judgment that discharge remained available, then addressed whether a commercial dispute disclosed Sections 405/406 IPC. It reproduced Deepak Gaba v. State of U.P., (2023) 3 SCC 423, on entrustment or dominion, dishonest misappropriation/conversion/use/disposal, and breach of a legal direction or contract touching that trust. Deepak Gaba's concrete example of an allegedly wrongful monetary demand lacked those ingredients. Sachin Garg also identified Prof. R.K. Vijayasarathy v. Sudha Seetharam, (2019) 16 SCC 739, and Vijay Kumar Ghai v. State of West Bengal, (2022) 7 SCC 124, as expressing the same view, and cited Dalip Kaur v. Jagnar Singh, (2009) 14 SCC 696, for the question of inducement and intention at inception where an advance is not refunded, alongside Section 405's separate definition. The High Court incorporated those tests in assessing its FIR.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC conferred the inherent power invoked to prevent abuse of criminal process. The Court exercised it after testing the FIR and Section 161 statements rather than holding a trial. Sections 405 and 406 IPC concerned criminal breach of trust: entrustment or dominion, dishonest dealing with the property, and violation of the legally relevant obligation were central to the discussion in Sachin Garg quoting Deepak Gaba. Section 420 IPC concerned cheating, requiring dishonest inducement from the time of the transaction, as distinguished from subsequent non-performance. Section 161 CrPC supplied the witness statements whose content the Court compared with the FIR. The liquor licence formed the commercial setting.

4. Issues : First, did the FIR and statements allege an assurance of partnership before respondent No. 2 and Rammurari advanced the money, such that dishonest inducement was pleaded at inception for Section 420? The complainant's counsel advanced that theory, while the applicants said the record showed only funds advanced for stocking a licensed liquor business and a later demand for repayment. Second, did the described lending and non-refund identify entrusted property and dishonest appropriation or conversion in violation of a relevant obligation for Sections 405/406, rather than an unmet business payment? Third, could Section 482 relief be granted where the factual allegations were predominantly civil and aimed at recovery of money, notwithstanding that civil and criminal remedies sometimes coexist and a discharge application might be available?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court read the FIR and Section 161 statements together. Both described payments because the applicants needed money to store liquor; neither said that, before the payments, the applicants promised to induct respondent No. 2 as partner. A later statement that he was not inducted did not establish that partnership was the condition inducing the original advances. The Court therefore called counsel's theory that a promise preceded payment an afterthought. The Court found no allegation disclosing dishonest intention when the money was obtained; the eventual failure to induct a partner or repay the advances did not by itself supply that ingredient. Naresh Kumar and its cited Vesa Holdings principle, together with Jay Shri and the Dalip Kaur discussion in Sachin Garg, explained why the timing of dishonest intention distinguishes breach from cheating. The ruling did not hold that a contract or loan can never coexist with a criminal offence; it assessed the particular ingredients absent from the prosecution's own account.

The Section 406 allegation likewise could not be established merely by a demand that the amount be returned. The Sachin Garg extract, through Deepak Gaba, required property entrusted for a legally relevant purpose and a dishonest dealing with it in violation of that trust, not merely a wrong monetary demand. The FIR described funding of liquor stock, failed repayment and a requested return of money, without a separately identified act of misappropriating entrusted property. The Court's final conclusion described the allegations as predominantly civil and the complainant's primary object as recovery of the asserted Rs. 35,31,000. The Supreme Court's principles in Paramjeet Batra, quoted through Naresh Kumar, supported examining the alleged facts beyond their criminal label; Jaswant illustrated why mere presence in an FIR is insufficient without individual offence allegations. The Court found that continuation of the case would abuse process. This was a threshold conclusion on the FIR and Section 161 record, not a trial finding about the actual use of every bank transfer or a civil adjudication of debt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application. Crime No. 115 of 2023 at Police Station Madhoganj, Gwalior, for Sections 406, 420 and 34 IPC, together with all consequential proceedings, was quashed.

Ratan Singh Chouhan and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 46674/2023, 05/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (780) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal appeal — limitation — condonation on medical ground - An appeal filed after a delay recorded as ten years and nine days was accompanied by an unsupported assertion of serious illness and treatment. The applicant had not surrendered after judgment and appealed only following arrest on a perpetual warrant. Even allowing a lenient approach to Section 5 of the Limitation Act, the High Court found no convincing evidence of sufficient cause before the Sessions court or in revision and upheld the dismissal as time-barred; the ruling did not treat illness as a ground inherently incapable of constituting sufficient cause.

Criminal revision — appeal disposed of on limitation — sentence merits - Where the Sessions court had not entered the merits of a conviction appeal, the revision against its refusal to condone delay addressed the legality of that refusal. Relying on Nagpal Traders v. Davinder Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 431, on the need to consider the merits before dealing with sentence, the Court declined to substitute custody already undergone for the trial sentence. It made no fresh determination of the merits of the conviction.

M.P. Excise Act — Section 34(2) — minimum imprisonment - The Court also held that the one-year minimum sentence identified for the Section 34(2) offence precluded reducing the sentence to the approximately six months already served. The revision was dismissed, the bail bonds were cancelled, and immediate surrender was ordered to serve the remaining imprisonment; the fine was not modified.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Criminal Case No. 21 of 2006, the Judicial Magistrate First Class, Shivpuri convicted Ravi Rajak under Section 34(2) of the M.P. Excise Act by judgment dated 31 August 2010. The sentence was one year's imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 26,000, with default imprisonment. Counsel for Rajak had been heard on sentence by the trial court. He did not surrender after conviction, and a perpetual warrant was issued. The record indicated that he was arrested in execution of that warrant.

Rajak filed Criminal Appeal No. 94 of 2020 after a delay stated in the judgment as ten years and nine days, with an application under Section 5 of the Limitation Act. He attributed the delay to serious illness and treatment and urged a sympathetic approach to condonation without undue technicality. The State opposed the application, pointing out that no medical document supported the claimed incapacity and that the appeal came only after arrest. On 4 August 2020, the Seventh Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri dismissed the appeal for delay without addressing its merits. Rajak then invoked Sections 397 and 401 CrPC in Criminal Revision No. 1937 of 2020 to challenge that order. He also argued that, having undergone roughly six months of the one-year imprisonment, the sentence should be confined to custody already served. The High Court considered the appeal's procedural stage, the claimed explanation and the statutory sentence.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court expressly considered Nagpal Traders v. Davinder Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 431. As the present judgment states its relevant proposition, a question of sentence cannot be dealt with unless the merits of the case are considered. This proposition mattered because the Sessions court had dismissed Rajak's appeal on limitation alone. The High Court applied it in declining to grant the proposed reduction to time served while reviewing that limited order.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC furnished the revisional jurisdiction invoked against the Sessions court's order rejecting the conviction appeal as time-barred. The High Court confined review to whether the stated reasons for rejecting condonation disclosed illegality. Section 5 of the Limitation Act was the provision invoked by Rajak for condonation of late filing. The Court examined whether his stated illness, viewed leniently, supplied sufficient cause and found that no medical records were produced before either relevant court. Section 34(2) of the M.P. Excise Act was the conviction offence; the Court identified one year as its minimum imprisonment, foreclosing the requested reduction to six months.

4. Issues : First, was the Sessions court's refusal to condone a delay recorded as ten years and nine days in Rajak's conviction appeal legally sustainable when he asserted illness but supplied no evidence of illness or treatment and had appealed only after arrest on a warrant? The question required consideration of the actual explanation and the surrounding circumstances of his failure to surrender, without treating a sympathetic approach as a substitute for sufficient cause. Second, could the High Court, in revision from an order disposing of an appeal on limitation, assess the merits or reduce the imprisonment to about six months already served? That involved the procedural limit arising from the absence of appellate consideration of the merits and the independently stated minimum sentence under Section 34(2) of the State Excise Act.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court reviewed the Sessions order and noted that trial counsel had been heard on sentence, yet Rajak apparently did not surrender after conviction. A perpetual warrant was issued; his appeal followed execution of the warrant and arrest. Before the Sessions court he had merely asserted that he was seriously ill and undergoing treatment. He filed no document showing a physical ailment or treatment, and he likewise produced no supporting material in revision. The Court considered the request with what it described as the most lenient approach but found no convincing account for the entire delay recorded as ten years and nine days. Therefore no sufficient reason for condonation was demonstrated and no illegality in the Sessions court's order justified revisional interference. This was a rejection of the explanation on the record before it, not an assessment of guilt under the Excise Act.

The Sessions court had decided only limitation. For that reason the High Court framed the revisional question as the propriety of the rejection of condonation and declined to examine the merits of the conviction or the adequacy of the sentence for the first time in this revision. Nagpal Traders supported the Court's conclusion that sentence could not be dealt with without consideration of the merits. The requested reduction to custody already undergone also encountered Section 34(2)'s stated mandatory minimum of one year. Since about six months served was less than that minimum, the Court stated that it could not impose a shorter term of imprisonment in these circumstances.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision and the Sessions court's order of 4 August 2020 refusing condonation remained undisturbed. The conviction appeal thus was not revived for merits hearing, and the trial sentence was not reduced to time already served. Rajak had been released on bail under an order dated 22 September 2020; the High Court cancelled his bail bonds and directed him to surrender immediately before the trial court to undergo the remaining imprisonment.

Ravi Rajak v. State of M.P., Cr.R. no. 1937/2020, 11/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (781) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 / arrest direction / police discretion - D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, quoting M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, held that Section 41 CrPC confers a discretionary power of arrest that must be exercised cautiously; registration of an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence does not automatically require arrest. Courts ordinarily may not direct arrest, seizure or the filing of a charge sheet as mandatory steps in an investigation. Applying that restraint to an FIR under Sections 406 and 420 IPC, the High Court refused the complainant's request to compel immediate arrest or supervise the police's investigative choices.

Investigation direction / hearing affected persons - D. Venkatasubramaniam also adopted the safeguard stated in Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, concerning the serious consequences of coercive investigation directions issued without hearing the persons affected. The quoted reasoning criticized directions for arrest, seizure and filing of a charge sheet issued without reasons or notice to the affected accused. The present High Court quoted that safeguard as part of its refusal to direct such action.

Section 173(1) CrPC / prompt completion / final report - Police discretion over how to investigate does not permit indefinite delay. Section 173(1) requires completion without unnecessary delay. After lawful investigation, the officer must decide whether an offence is made out and submit the appropriate final report—a closure report or a charge sheet. The High Court directed prompt completion of the investigation and necessary steps according to law, leaving the outcome to the investigating officer.

It also left the petitioner free to submit a grievance application to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior for consideration according to law.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ravi Sharma filed a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution concerning a complaint on which police had registered an FIR for offences under Sections 406 and 420 IPC. He said that the accused had not been arrested and the investigation had not been concluded. He sought a direction for immediate arrest, punishment of the respondent authorities for alleged illegal action, custody of certain vehicles and other relief including costs. The Court heard counsel finally through video conferencing.

The principal question in the petition was whether a court exercising writ jurisdiction under the Constitution should direct the police to arrest identified suspects after registration of an FIR. The Court also considered the continuing duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay and submit the appropriate report. It quoted at length the Supreme Court's explanation of the limits on judicial control of investigation before disposing of the matter with a limited direction.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488. In that case, the Supreme Court set aside a High Court order requiring the police to record statements, arrest the accused, seize property, file a charge sheet and complete the investigation within a specified period. The Supreme Court explained that investigation is the police's statutory duty and ordinarily falls within its domain. The evidence may justify a charge sheet or a report concluding that no case is made out; arrest and seizure are not compulsory outcomes. Directions prescribing a particular course of investigation or coercive steps without adequate reasons can have far-reaching effects. The present High Court adopted that central limit in declining to direct arrest.

In D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Supreme Court quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on Section 41 CrPC. An officer may arrest without a warrant in the prescribed circumstances, but the power is discretionary and must be cautiously exercised because arrest affects the accused's liberty, reputation and status. Registration of an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence does not impose an automatic duty to arrest. The High Court applied that proposition to the specific relief sought here. The longer passage from D. Venkatasubramaniam also discusses Section 482 CrPC as a power to be exercised sparingly and criticizes observations that casually direct the course of a prosecution; this petition itself was under Article 226, not Section 482.

D. Venkatasubramaniam further reproduced Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on the requirement of a reasonable opportunity of being heard before a judicial direction that could seriously affect an accused's reputation and interests. The Supreme Court set aside the earlier order also because the persons against whom arrest and seizure were directed had not been impleaded or heard. The High Court quoted this procedural safeguard when declining to direct the course of the police investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution supplied writ jurisdiction. The FIR alleged criminal breach of trust and cheating under Sections 406 and 420 IPC. Section 41 CrPC appeared in the M.C. Abraham quotation as a discretionary power, subject to statutory conditions, to arrest without a warrant. Section 173(1) CrPC was directly reproduced and applied: investigation must be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer must then submit the report warranted by the results, whether a closure report or a charge sheet. Section 482 CrPC appeared in the quoted Supreme Court decision concerning limits on an earlier High Court's directions in exercise of its inherent powers; Ravi Sharma's petition was not brought under that provision.

4. Issues : (i) Could the Court order the immediate arrest of accused persons merely because an FIR under Sections 406 and 420 IPC had been registered and the complainant was dissatisfied with the progress of the investigation? This raised the scope of the officer's discretion under Section 41 and the limits on a constitutional court's power to direct an investigation. (ii) What procedural safeguards and risks arise if a court were to direct arrest, seizure or filing of a charge sheet against persons without hearing them, as explained in the quoted Supreme Court authority? Requests for punishment of officials and custody of vehicles were pleaded but were not separately addressed in the reasons or granted.

5. Ratio / Findings : On the question of arrest, the Court held that it could not direct the police to take the accused immediately into custody. D. Venkatasubramaniam and M.C. Abraham distinguish the lawful discretionary power to arrest from a complainant's entitlement to require its exercise. In appropriate cases, the police may decide whether arrest is necessary after some investigation, having regard to the circumstances and the accused's liberty and reputation; an FIR does not automatically require arrest. Directing arrest or the filing of a charge sheet would substitute the writ court's chosen investigative steps for the judgment of the police.

The quoted Supreme Court discussion also warned against requiring seizure and the filing of a charge sheet irrespective of what the evidence might establish, and against imposing serious consequences on persons who had not been given a hearing. The fair-hearing rule in Divine Retreat Centre formed part of that reasoning.

The Court distinguished that restraint from the statutory duty to complete the investigation. Section 173(1) requires every investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. The officer cannot keep the matter open indefinitely, but must determine whether an offence is disclosed and submit the appropriate final report—a closure report or a charge sheet—according to the evidence. On that basis, the Court directed completion of the investigation as early as possible and necessary steps according to law, without directing arrest, a particular report or a factual finding. The petitioner remained free to make an application to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior; the order required the Superintendent to consider any such application according to law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the writ petition. It refused to direct immediate arrest, directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take necessary steps according to law, and left the petitioner free to submit a grievance application to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior for consideration according to law.

Ravi Sharma v. State of M.P. and Others, W.P. no. 14168/2020, 25/09/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (782) Prev Next

Headnote :- Injured witness / medical omission / assailant identity - Bhargavan v. State of Kerala, (2004) 12 SCC 414, following Pattipati Venkaiah v. State of A.P., (1985) 4 SCC 80, explains that a treating doctor's primary duty is treatment, not establishing who caused the injury; failure to give the assailant's name to the doctor has no automatic adverse implication. The High Court therefore did not treat Sonu's omission in the hospital record as establishing that the Dehati Nalishi naming Ravi was ante-timed or that his identification of Ravi was false. It still assessed the injured witness and medical record in context.

Ocular evidence / minor variation / core account - The Dehati Nalishi said Ravi offered liquor and Sonu refused, while Sonu's testimony said Ravi demanded money for liquor and Sonu refused. The Court treated both as a dispute over liquor followed by a gunshot to the right side of the chest and found no material variation in the origin of the incident, recognizing possible minor deviations after injury.

Forensic report / Section 293 CrPC / Section 313 opportunity - An RFSL report said the recovered bullet was fired from the seized pistol, and the report was received by the trial court and supplied to defence counsel. It remained unexhibited, however, and no question on it was put to the appellant in his Section 313 CrPC examination. The High Court refused to use the report against him despite the provisions of Section 293 governing reports of government scientific experts. On the other evidence, it affirmed the finding that Ravi had fired the shot, without relying on the ballistic match.

Attempt to murder / intent from targeted gunshot - A sudden liquor dispute and absence of prior enmity did not require conversion from Section 307 to Section 308 IPC where Ravi carried an illegal country-made pistol at night and fired into the chest, a vital part of Sonu's body, causing a gunshot injury and an embedded bullet. The Court inferred the requisite intention or knowledge and held that the offence under Section 307 was proved beyond reasonable doubt. It separately upheld the sentence of five years' rigorous imprisonment as not excessive on these facts and affirmed the sentences under the Arms Act.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ravi Shivhare appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment of the Third Additional Judge to the Court of the First Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, in Sessions Trial No. 468/2010, dated 24.02.2012. The trial court convicted him under Section 307 IPC and Sections 27(1) and 25(1-B) of the Arms Act. For Section 307 it imposed five years' rigorous imprisonment, a fine of ₹3,000 and six months' imprisonment in default; for the Arms Act offences the order records three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹500 with three months' imprisonment in default, with the sentences running concurrently. It directed ₹2,000 from the total fine to the complainant and confiscation of the seized .315-bore country-made pistol subject to the outcome of the appeal.

At about 1:30 a.m. on 01.09.2010, Sonu, the injured complainant, lodged a Dehati Nalishi while at J.A. Hospital, Gwalior. He alleged that around 12:30 a.m. he met Ravi while returning home near Laxmanpura Kalari, refused Ravi's proposal to drink liquor, and Ravi fired a country-made pistol into the right side of his chest. His mother and neighbours reportedly came after he raised an alarm. Crime No. 557/2010 was registered. Police prepared a spot map, seized earth and a bullet removed from Sonu's body, arrested Ravi after his court surrender on 28.09.2010, recorded a Section 27 Evidence Act memorandum, and seized a .315-bore pistol said to have been recovered on his disclosure. An armoury official examined it, the Additional District Magistrate gave permission to prosecute under the Arms Act, and items were sent to the regional forensic laboratory. After investigation, police filed a charge sheet for offences under Section 307 IPC and Section 25 of the Arms Act. The trial court initially framed a Section 25-A charge, then amended it to Section 27(1); Ravi pleaded not guilty and called no defence witness.

In his appeal, Ravi contended that an unknown person shot Sonu and that he was falsely implicated. He pointed to Sonu's hospital history, which mentioned unidentified persons and liquor drinking without naming Ravi, and to a change between an offer of liquor in the first account and a demand for liquor money in court. He argued that the sudden encounter and lack of prior enmity negated the intention required under Section 307, so that, at most, Section 308 applied. The State defended the trial result and suggested a ballistic report matched the bullet to the seized pistol. The High Court examined the trial order and whether each item of evidence could be used, before considering conviction and sentence. It did not accept the proposed substitution of offence.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court expressly cited Bhargavan v. State of Kerala, (2004) 12 SCC 414, and Pattipati Venkaiah v. State of Andhra Pradesh, (1985) 4 SCC 80, on the limited significance of an injured person not telling the treating doctor the assailant's name. It quoted Bhargavan's explanation that the doctor's priority is treatment rather than investigating who inflicted the injury; Bhargavan itself cited Pattipati for the same view. The High Court used this rule to reject the proposed automatic inference that the Dehati Nalishi naming Ravi was ante-timed or that Ravi was falsely implicated merely because the hospital record omitted his name. The principle did not eliminate scrutiny of a particular record: the Court considered the voluntary hospital history of unidentified assailants, Sonu's contrary testimony and the other circumstances before deciding the identification issue.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided the appeal. Section 307 IPC governed the attempted-murder charge. The Court assessed its mental element and application to the facts against the suggested alternative under Section 308 IPC. Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act was the stated basis for Ravi's disclosure memorandum before pistol recovery. Section 293 CrPC concerned use of the RFSL government scientific expert report without the ordinary mode of proving such a report, yet did not make the particular ballistic finding usable against Ravi here when the report had not been exhibited and that circumstance had not been put to him. Section 313 CrPC required an opportunity to explain the incriminating circumstance; the ballistic match was never put in his examination. The trial court's initial Section 25-A Arms Act charge was corrected to Section 27(1), a procedural history point rather than a conviction under the former provision.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the medical and radiographic evidence established a gunshot wound to the chest and whether Sonu credibly identified Ravi notwithstanding his hospital history, omitted assailant name and variation between the accounts of the liquor dispute. (ii) Whether the RFSL bullet-to-pistol match could be read for the prosecution when the report was received and supplied to the defence but was never exhibited, and the ballistic finding was not put to Ravi under Section 313, despite Section 293. (iii) Whether firing at the vital chest area after a sudden dispute without demonstrated earlier hostility supported Section 307 IPC beyond reasonable doubt or only the proposed Section 308 offence. (iv) Whether the custodial and fine sentences, Arms Act terms, compensation and related operative directions should stand.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first established the injury. Surgeon Dr Rajesh Prajapati (PW-8) said

Sonu arrived with a chest gunshot wound; he and his team operated on 02.09.2010 and removed the bullet that had been felt on palpation. Dr Tusar Somwanshi (PW-7) saw a foreign body near T8–T9 on the x-ray of the right side of the chest. The date of 31.08.2010 recorded for the x-ray and the uncertainty about its timing emerged in cross-examination, but the Court accepted the two doctors' evidence that Sonu sustained a gunshot injury with a lodged bullet. This medical conclusion established the injury but did not, by itself, establish the assailant's identity.

Sonu (PW-4), a neighbour who knew Ravi, identified him as the shooter in court and in the Dehati Nalishi. The two versions varied on whether Ravi offered to share liquor or demanded money to buy it. The Court held that the variation was not material in context: the confrontation in both accounts concerned liquor, Sonu refused, and a shot to the chest followed; a seriously injured witness might not reproduce every detail identically. His mother Shashikala (PW-3) said she knew Ravi, saw Sonu injured and was told who had fired the shot, though parts of her account varied and she was declared hostile; she was not presented as an independent eyewitness to the firing. Other investigative witnesses described the first report, recovery and handling of bullet and pistol. The High Court characterized Sonu as the solitary eyewitness and assessed his testimony accordingly.

The hospital history recorded through PW-8 differed more substantially: it said Sonu was drinking in a liquor shop when some persons came and fired, without naming an assailant. The doctor testified that the patient supplied the account voluntarily and that no name was given during hospitalization; Sonu denied giving it and said he was unconscious when doctors asked. The Court invoked Bhargavan and Pattipati to reject the proposed conclusive inference from the absence of a name in treatment records. It held that omission alone did not prove that the first report naming Ravi was ante-dated or that he had been falsely implicated.

The Court expressly declined to use the ballistic corroboration proposed by the State. A report from RFSL in Sagar matching the bullet recovered from Sonu's body to the seized pistol reached the trial court on 03.03.2011 and a copy went to defence counsel. It had nevertheless not been exhibited, and the Section 313 examination did not put that incriminating ballistic finding to Ravi for an explanation. The Court refused to read it for the prosecution, even considering Section 293 CrPC. The Court nevertheless found, on the accepted evidence of the injured eyewitness, that Ravi had caused Sonu's injury. The conviction was affirmed without relying on the RFSL finding that the Court had declined to use.

On the offence, the Court relied on the shot to the right side of the chest, a vital area, the recovered bullet and the presence of an illegal country-made weapon with Ravi around 12:30 a.m. Even if the encounter began suddenly over liquor and the families had no prior enmity, firing into a vital part demonstrated the requisite intention or knowledge for Section 307. It found the prosecution had proved that offence beyond reasonable doubt and refused conversion to Section 308. On reviewing the sentence, the Court held that five years' rigorous imprisonment was not excessive for an illegal firearm used against the chest in such circumstances. The fact that Sonu was brought from jail to testify, while facing trial in another case, gave Ravi no right to shoot him or any basis for reducing the punishment.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the trial judgment and sentences of 24.02.2012 in ST No. 468/2010, including the convictions under Section 307 IPC and Sections 27(1) and 25(1-B) of the Arms Act, the concurrent sentences, fines, and the recorded compensation and confiscation directions. Ravi was on bail; his bail bonds were cancelled and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve the remaining term. The trial record was ordered returned with the judgment for information and compliance.

Ravi Shivhare v. The State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 209/2012, 12/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (783) Prev Next

Headnote :- Quashing / Family Court decree / criminal court's independent assessment - Dismissal of the wife's Section 13 Hindu Marriage Act divorce petition and grant of the husband's Section 9 restitution petition did not bind the criminal court or establish that the allegations in her cruelty FIR were false. The High Court examined the family judgment, identified its erroneous criticism of directly reporting Section 498-A IPC cruelty and its unexplained inference from a jointly held locker, then refused to quash on the civil decree alone. The questions and proof in the criminal case remained distinct from those in the family proceeding.

Section 498-A IPC / scope of cruelty / direct police report - Cruelty under Section 498-A is not confined to dowry or property demands; conduct of the requisite statutory gravity that may drive a woman to suicide or gravely endanger her life, limb or health also falls within its scope. The Family Court's suggestion that the wife should have made other police complaints before directly reporting an offence under Section 498-A was contrary to law.

Cruelty FIR / specificity over a short matrimonial stay - Absence of separately stated dates for every alleged atrocity did not make an otherwise specific FIR vague where the wife had stayed in her matrimonial home for only 25 days. Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260, incorporates Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551: merely naming distant relatives without attributing a role to them or providing tangible supporting material warrants caution, but particularized, triable allegations against husband and close relatives cannot be tested for truth in proceedings for quashing. The Court found this FIR specific and left disputed merits for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ravi Shrivas and the other applicants applied to the High Court under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR No. 67/2021 dated 09.02.2021 at Police Station Kohe Fiza, Bhopal, and all ensuing proceedings. Respondent No. 2 was the wife of applicant No. 1. Counsel submitted that she had lived in her matrimonial home for only 25 days and lodged the FIR after applicant 1 instituted a petition for restitution of conjugal rights under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act on 09.01.2021. She had also sought divorce under Section 13. Counsel maintained that the later Family Court result, rejecting her divorce petition and allowing his restitution petition, proved that the cruelty allegations were false.

The applicants submitted a judgment and decree of the Additional Principal Judge, Family Court, Bhopal, dated 10.05.2023, in RCS HM No. 120/2022 (Section 13) and RCS HM No. 85/2021 (Section 9). The High Court inspected its reasons rather than relying only on the applicants' characterization of it. Paragraph 30 of the family judgment criticized the wife for directly lodging an FIR under Section 498-A IPC instead of making other complaints to police about disputes with in-laws. Paragraph 34 treated the existence of a joint bank locker as evidence of the mother-in-law's affection rather than an attempt to take the wife's property. The High Court noted undisputed details overlooked there: the locker was in respondent 2's name, she bore opening expenses and owned the fixed deposit required by the bank; counsel fairly conceded that the mother-in-law retained its key. The Court questioned the inference drawn from joint operation of the locker and the unexplained retention of its key, without itself deciding a property offence or making a final finding of motive.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reproduced Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260. Taramani explains that a complaint alleging dowry-related harassment by a husband and his parents and the wife's departure from the matrimonial home cannot be quashed merely because the accused dispute the facts: whether cruelty occurred is a matter for trial. A prosecution that is plainly an abuse of process may still be quashed, but the court at that stage does not resolve the veracity of rival versions. Taramani quoted Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, where distant relatives were unnamed in the FIR and later named in a complaint without a specified role. Kailash Chandra, referring to Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, warns that indiscriminate implication of relations can prejudice even a case against actual wrongdoers; mere naming of a distant relation without tangible material supporting a specific role does not suffice.

Taramani's extract refers within its quashing discussion to K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa. The High Court applied Taramani's distinction between specific cruelty allegations requiring trial and proceedings that are an abuse of process on their face to reject the applicants' contention that the FIR was vague. The family-court judgment was case material, not a binding criminal-law precedent.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the provision under which the applicants invoked the Court's inherent jurisdiction to quash FIR No. 67/2021 and subsequent proceedings. Section 498-A IPC was the cruelty offence expressly discussed. The Court rejected the Family Court's implied view that cruelty means only harassment for property or dowry: the statutory conception also covers wilful conduct of the requisite gravity likely to drive a woman to suicide or cause grave injury or danger to her life, limb or health. Sections 9 and 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 governed the competing restitution and divorce petitions that culminated in the family judgment; those civil outcomes did not bind the criminal court's assessment of the FIR.

4. Issues : (i) Whether an adverse Family Court decision on the wife's divorce application and a favourable restitution decree for the husband compelled the conclusion that the allegations in her earlier cruelty FIR were false, thereby requiring quashing. This required attention to whether the family judgment's reasoning correctly understood Section 498-A and whether civil fact findings control the criminal case. (ii) Whether she had to pursue a different preliminary complaint to the police rather than directly reporting conduct alleged to amount to statutory cruelty. (iii) Whether, in light of a 25-day matrimonial stay, the absence of a separate calendar date for each alleged atrocity made the FIR vague despite the Court's assessment that its allegations were specific.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that findings in a civil or family proceeding are not binding on the criminal court. It therefore refused to infer that dismissal of the Section 13 divorce petition and grant of the Section 9 restitution petition established that the allegations in the earlier FIR were false. Its review of the decree disclosed a further difficulty with treating that decree as conclusive: the family judge faulted a direct Section 498-A report as though the wife first had to file a different complaint. The High Court called that finding illegal. Section 498-A's definition of cruelty extends beyond conduct connected with property demands to other conduct of statutory seriousness threatening the woman's life, limb or health or likely to drive her to suicide. If a report discloses such cruelty, the police must register the applicable offence; the complainant is not barred from identifying Section 498-A merely because she did not make another complaint first.

The High Court also criticized the family judgment's locker inference. The wife paid the locker expenses and owned the required fixed deposit, while the mother-in-law admittedly held the key. A joint locker did not by itself establish affection or answer why the key remained with the mother-in-law. The Court described the family finding as apparently wrong for failing to consider these circumstances. The observation is not a conclusive finding of appropriation, guilt or the mother-in-law's intention.

Turning independently to the FIR, the Court said its allegations were specific. The applicants themselves asserted that the wife's stay at the matrimonial house was only 25 days. The absence of a separate date for each act within such a brief period did not necessarily make the allegations general; more precise dates could become important when the alleged conduct spans years, a contrast the Court expressly drew. The caution stated in Taramani against implicating distant relatives without specifying their roles remains applicable where the facts warrant it, while specific triable cruelty allegations should not be disbelieved on a Section 482 application. The Court found no basis for quashing here.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The request to quash FIR No. 67/2021 of Police Station Kohe Fiza, Bhopal, and subsequent proceedings was refused.

Ravi Shrivas and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 12726/2024, 20/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (784) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / notarized separation / alleged divorce - A private notarized agreement at Vadodara did not itself dissolve the marriage of the non-Muslim spouses; for these parties, divorce by mutual consent required approaching the court. The purported separation therefore did not terminate their marriage for the purposes of the applicants' objection under Section 498-A IPC. The Court added, as an alternative observation, that even a valid later divorce would not erase cruelty alleged to have occurred before it.

Criminal recourse / agreement not to sue - The complainant's alleged undertaking not to take legal action could not bar her FIR. The Court applied Section 28 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, to treat an absolute restraint on legal proceedings as void, and referred to Section 41 of the Specific Relief Act, 1963, in support of its view that an injunction could not restrain legal recourse.

Dowry cruelty / specific roles / quashing - Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260, quoting Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, cautions against roping in distant relatives without a specific role and tangible supporting material, but leaves allegations of cruelty that raise triable issues for trial rather than resolving rival versions at quashing. Here the FIR and witness statements alleged demands for ₹10 lakh and a car, beatings by the husband and father-in-law, and dowry taunts and mistreatment by the parents-in-law. The Court rejected the contention that all the allegations were general.

Section 482 CrPC / disputed prior-marriage document - The applicants' certificate from Vaidic Vivah Avam Sanskar Samiti, Indore, offered to suggest the complainant had previously married, was a private document of which the Court could not take judicial notice. Its authenticity and legal effect had to be established through defence evidence. Her pending Section 11 Hindu Marriage Act application did not adversely affect the FIR; the Court said it supported her account.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Respondent 2 said that she married applicant 1, Ravindra Pratap, at Vadodara on 21.04.2022. Her parents allegedly spent about ₹20 lakh on the marriage, including ₹8 lakh cash and household articles. According to her FIR, she was treated well for five days, then the applicants taunted her for insufficient dowry. She alleged that her husband avoided physical relations and, when asked, answered that he had married her and that was enough. She initially hoped matters would improve and returned to Bhopal. On 26.05.2022, she alleged, her husband came to Bhopal, assaulted her and demanded ₹10 lakh and a car from her and her parents. After her parents tried to persuade him, she returned with him to the matrimonial home on 30.05.2022. She alleged further abuse, assault and insistence that her parents supply the money and car as a condition of proper treatment.

The FIR further alleged that on 16.06.2022 the husband quarreled over trivial matters and assaulted her, injuring her right hand and leg. Her parents were informed, attempted telephone discussions and visited the matrimonial home, but could not resolve the dispute; she returned to Bhopal. In May or June 2023, the husband and father-in-law reportedly attended counseling in Bhopal. When she asked them to take her back, she alleged they beat her, repeated the demand for money and a car, and refused to take her. She said she made a report at Police Station M.P. Nagar and continued living with her parents because she had no choice. The present FIR was registered on 20.12.2023 as Crime No. 388/2023 at Mahila Thana, Bhopal, for IPC Sections 498-A, 506 and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4.

The applicants moved under Section 482 CrPC to quash. Counsel relied on a notarized mutual-separation agreement executed at Vadodara on 22.06.2022, arguing that the parties were already divorced before the FIR and could not sustain a matrimonial cruelty accusation. Counsel also referred to the complainant's Section 11 Hindu Marriage Act application to declare the marriage null, described the allegations as general, and invoked an alleged undertaking by her not to resort to legal action. The application additionally alleged an earlier marriage of the complainant and annexed a certificate issued by Vaidic Vivah Avam Sanskar Samiti, Indore; counsel did not argue that point orally. The Court addressed the asserted legal bars, the allegations against each participant and the private document relied on by the defence.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260, for the distinction between an FIR containing triable, particularized dowry cruelty allegations and a proceeding that is an evident abuse on its face. Taramani held that allegations against the husband and parents of harassment causing the wife to leave the matrimonial home could not be held insufficient to disclose an offence at the pretrial stage; whether harassment actually occurred was for trial. The quoted passage in turn reproduces Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, which warns against summoning distant relatives who are only named without a specific role or tangible material. Its quotation of Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, explains why indiscriminate implication of relations in dowry matters can weaken a prosecution.

The Taramani extract also refers to K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa for recognized quashing parameters. The High Court applied the distinction between assessing the allegations on their face and testing their truth at the quashing stage: the allegations and witness statements disclosed specific dowry-related conduct, leaving their truth to be determined in the ordinary proceedings. The conclusions about the notarized deed, Section 28 of the Contract Act, Section 41 of the Specific Relief Act and the private certificate were those of the High Court.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the application invoking the Court's inherent powers to quash the FIR. IPC Section 498-A was the principal cruelty offence invoked in the applicants' asserted divorce defence; Sections 506 and 34, and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, 1961, were the other registered allegations. Section 11 of the Hindu Marriage Act, 1955 was identified as the complainant's pending nullity application, not a decree in this case; the Court held that its pendency did not bar the FIR. The Court reasoned that these non-Muslim spouses could not achieve mutual-consent divorce solely by notarizing a separation agreement, without going to court. It also observed that a later divorce would not erase alleged cruelty before it, while finding no divorce here.

The order reproduced Section 28 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, including the provision voiding an absolute restriction on enforcement through the usual legal proceedings and exceptions concerning arbitration and certain bank or financial-institution guarantee terms. Its application was to the asserted undertaking against legal action; none of the quoted exceptions arose for consideration or decision. The Court also invoked Section 41 of the Specific Relief Act, 1963, for the proposition that an injunction could not restrain a person from legal recourse. The private prior-marriage certificate was treated as a defence document that required proof, rather than as proof of an earlier marriage of which the Court could take judicial notice.

4. Issues : (i) Whether a notarized mutual-separation agreement executed after the alleged 2022 incidents had legally dissolved the marriage and made a Section 498-A FIR in December 2023 unsustainable; and whether prior cruelty would in any event remain actionable after a later valid divorce. (ii) Whether an alleged no-legal-action undertaking or the complainant's pending marriage-nullity application barred criminal recourse. (iii) Whether the FIR and witness statements contained specific acts by the applicants rather than only general allegations of dowry harassment, under the Taramani and Kailash Chandra standards for quashing. (iv) Whether a privately issued certificate tendered to show the complainant's alleged earlier marriage could be accepted as conclusive at the Section 482 stage.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court refused to treat the 22.06.2022 notarized separation as a judicial divorce. It questioned how a notary could notarize an instrument apparently intended to grant divorce and held that a notary cannot dissolve this marriage through such an agreement. For these parties, mutual-consent divorce required approaching the court. The purported agreement thus lacked the asserted legal effect, so the husband's claim that the spousal relationship had ended failed because the agreement had not dissolved the marriage. Even if an actual divorce had occurred, the Court observed, allegations of cruelty before it could still support an FIR under Section 498-A.

The asserted undertaking that the complainant would take no judicial action did not defeat her complaint. The Court applied Section 28 of the Contract Act to invalidate a contract absolutely prohibiting recourse to legal proceedings, and cited Section 41 of the Specific Relief Act against restraining legal recourse by injunction. Her Section 11 Hindu Marriage Act application did not adversely affect the FIR; the Court said it supported her account.

On specificity the Court compared the whole FIR and witness statements with Taramani's rule. It identified demands for ₹10 lakh and a car, an alleged beating by the husband and father-in-law around the reconciliation date, and continuing taunts, filthy language and assault attributed to the father-in-law and mother-in-law. These were sufficient allegations specifying the participants' acts to reject the contention that all the allegations were general. Taramani's caution against needlessly implicating distant relations remained intact; that caution did not require quashing allegations specifying close family members' conduct. The Court found a triable accusation, not a proven demand, injury or joint intention.

Finally, the Court noted the unargued application allegation that respondent 2 had married previously. The applicants relied on a marriage certificate issued by a private Indore organization. The private certificate could not establish the asserted prior marriage by judicial notice; it had to be proved through defence evidence. Considering these matters together with the specific allegations and the failed procedural objections, the Court found no ground for interference.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. Quashing of FIR Crime No. 388/2023 at Police Station Mahila Thana, Bhopal, under IPC Sections 498-A, 506 and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4 was refused.

Ravindra Pratap and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 14908/2024, 16/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (785) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR / preliminary inquiry / cognizable information - CBI v. Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi, Criminal Appeal No. 1045/2021 (08.10.2021), extensively considered Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, and State of Telangana v. Managipet. Section 154 CrPC requires registration when the information itself discloses a cognizable offence. Where a preliminary inquiry is appropriate, its purpose is to determine whether the information discloses a cognizable offence, rather than whether the allegation is true. Such an inquiry is not required before every FIR, even in corruption cases. The High Court also relied on Meera Yadav v. State of M.P., W.P. No. 9743/2022 (26.09.2023). The absence of a preliminary inquiry before this FIR did not vitiate it.

Inherent powers / alleged enmity and mala fides / face-value test - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, reproduced the categories of cases identified in R.P. Kapur and State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal in which proceedings may be quashed. It also reiterated that disputed evidence cannot be assessed as at trial in proceedings under Section 482 CrPC. A manifestly malicious proceeding may justify intervention. Previous enmity, however, can provide a motive either for false implication or for committing the offence. A bare assertion of enmity cannot displace allegations which, taken at face value, disclose a cognizable offence. Applying that standard under Section 528 BNSS, the Court declined to quash the FIR and charge sheet on this disputed ground.

Alibi / Section 11 Evidence Act / burden of proof - Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, and Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283, treat alibi as relevant evidence, not a Penal Code exception. The prosecution must first prove the accused's presence and participation. The accused then bears a strict burden to establish through positive evidence that he was elsewhere, although sufficiently persuasive defence evidence can raise reasonable doubt. S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, confirms that failure to establish an alibi does not relieve the prosecution of its obligation to prove its case independently beyond reasonable doubt. These tests were quoted without finally determining the applicant's whereabouts.

Quashing / disputed medical alibi / trial-stage proof - The applicant tendered a haematology report and a prescription written on plain paper to support his claim that he was receiving treatment in Ambah at the time of the incident. Whether those materials established an alibi was a disputed question of fact requiring cogent evidence. The Court could not assess that disputed evidence as at trial in proceedings under Section 528 BNSS. The plea remained to be proved at the appropriate evidentiary stage. Dismissal of the quashing application did not determine the truth of the alibi or the eventual merits of the IPC charges.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ravindra Sakhwar sought to quash FIR Crime No. 40/2023 registered at Police Station Mahua, District Morena, and challenged the continuation of proceedings after the police had filed a charge sheet. The alleged incident occurred at about 4 p.m. on 25.03.2023. According to the complainant's FIR, he was at home when Dinesh Sakhbar and Ravindra Sakhbar came there amid a dispute about the post of President of Sakhbar Dharamshala at Porsa. They allegedly abused him in filthy language. When the complainant objected, Dinesh allegedly drew a sword and threatened to kill him. The complainant said that his uncle Ramlal Sakhbar and son Shyambir Sakhbar witnessed the incident and intervened. Police registered offences under Sections 294, 506 and 34 IPC.

The applicant invoked Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. Counsel asserted that the FIR had been registered without a preliminary inquiry, arose from prior enmity and mala fides, and falsely placed the applicant at the scene. The applicant claimed that he was instead in Ambah receiving treatment from Dr Rakesh Singh on 25.03.2023. A haematology report and a prescription written on plain paper were filed to support this alibi. The Court heard counsel for the applicant and decided the application to quash the FIR. It did not try the charge or finally assess the defence.

2. Precedents — Considered : On preliminary inquiry, the Court reproduced a lengthy extract from Central Bureau of Investigation v. Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi alias T.H. Vijayalakshmi, Criminal Appeal No. 1045/2021, decided 08.10.2021. That Supreme Court decision concerned a CBI FIR alleging disproportionate assets, the source information on which it was based and the asserted need for a preliminary inquiry under CBI practice. The quoted analysis gives primacy to the Constitution Bench decision in Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1. Information that on its face discloses a cognizable offence requires registration of an FIR under Section 154 CrPC. Where the information does not itself disclose such an offence but warrants an inquiry, a limited inquiry can determine whether it does. The inquiry does not test credibility or decide whether the accusation is true. The illustrative categories in Lalita Kumari, including corruption, allow consideration of an inquiry according to the facts; they do not make an inquiry mandatory in every such case. The CBI Manual provides internal administrative guidance and cannot override the Code.

The quoted discussion in Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi considers P. Sirajuddin v. State of Madras, (1970) 1 SCC 595, and Nirmal Singh Kahlon, concerning caution before public accusations against officials and CBI practice, in light of the controlling principles in Lalita Kumari. It also considers the concurring discussion in Yashwant Sinha about the desirability of an inquiry into allegations of corruption against a public figure. It does not treat that setting as creating a general right for an accused to delay registration of an FIR. State of Telangana v. Managipet, as quoted, rejected the contention that a preliminary inquiry was mandatory even for disproportionate-assets allegations where the information already disclosed an offence. The absence of an inquiry alone would not justify quashing the FIR. The discussion in Charansingh addresses the separate question whether an anti-corruption inquiry before registration of an FIR is permissible or desirable. In the same quoted analysis, K. Veeraswami v. Union of India rejected an asserted right of an accused public servant to give the investigator a satisfactory explanation before a charge sheet was filed. Still less did it confer a right to such an opportunity before registration of an FIR. Other Supreme Court cases named within these passages include CBI v. Tapan Kumar Singh and W.N. Chadha. The High Court applied the principle that a preliminary inquiry is not invariably mandatory to the present FIR; it did not treat the disproportionate-assets facts in those authorities as facts of the present case. It also quoted its own decision in Meera Yadav v. State of M.P., W.P. No. 9743/2022, decided 26.09.2023: failure to hold an inquiry does not itself vitiate an FIR containing allegations of a cognizable offence.

On mala fides, the Court quoted Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346. That decision explains the inherent jurisdiction preserved by Section 482 CrPC to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process and secure justice. It requires those powers to be exercised carefully and sparingly. The extract reproduces R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, on quashing where there is a legal bar or the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence. It also preserves the distinction between the absence of legal evidence and a dispute about the weight of evidence. The extract further reproduces State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, including cases where no offence or no cognizable offence is disclosed, the allegations are inherently improbable, a legal bar applies, or proceedings are manifestly instituted maliciously to wreak vengeance. These are illustrative exceptional grounds. They do not permit an assessment of whether disputed evidence will ultimately sustain a conviction. Renu Kumari states that the informant's alleged mala fides become secondary once an offence is disclosed; the material collected during investigation and the evidence at trial determine the accused's fate. The High Court applied these principles to the applicant's bare assertions of enmity and false implication. Enmity could motivate either a false complaint or the alleged offence, and the Court did not resolve that disputed question in the quashing proceedings. Cases appearing within the quotations or citation strings in Renu Kumari include Janata Dal, Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma and M. Devendrappa.

On alibi, the Court directly quoted Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749. That extract incorporates Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (1997) 1 SCC 283: a fact showing that the accused was elsewhere is inconsistent with presence at the scene and is relevant under Section 11 of the Evidence Act. Alibi is not a special or general IPC exception. The prosecution must first establish the accused's presence and participation; raising an alibi does not lessen that obligation. Once the prosecution has satisfactorily established the accused's presence, the accused must strictly prove through positive evidence that he was elsewhere, excluding his presence at the scene. However, defence evidence that creates reasonable doubt about his presence entitles him to the benefit of that doubt. The Court then separately reproduced S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, on the accused's obligation to prove an alibi by positive evidence. That authority also makes clear that failure to establish an alibi does not establish the prosecution case: guilt must independently be proved beyond reasonable doubt. Finally, the Court quoted Binay Kumar Singh directly, reiterating both the sequence of burdens and the qualification concerning reasonable doubt. The High Court applied these authorities to the procedural question before it. The applicant's disputed documents and whereabouts required proof at the evidentiary stage and could not be conclusively determined on the merits in the quashing application.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant sought quashing under the Court's inherent powers in Section 528 BNSS, 2023. The alibi authorities explained Section 11 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, with illustration (a): a fact showing presence elsewhere, inconsistent with the alleged presence, is relevant evidence. Alibi was expressly not treated as an IPC general exception. Pleading an alibi did not create a statutory presumption transferring the prosecution's underlying burden of proving guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

4. Issues : (i) Whether failure to conduct a preliminary inquiry before registering this FIR, whose recited allegations disclosed a cognizable offence, invalidated registration or justified quashing. (ii) Whether alleged prior enmity and mala fides warranted the exceptional remedy under the Court's inherent powers despite the accusation taken at face value and the disputed inferences about motive. (iii) Whether a haematology report and a prescription written on plain paper, relied on to show that the applicant was receiving treatment in Ambah, could conclusively establish his absence in Section 528 proceedings, or whether the alibi required evidence at trial under the sequence of burdens described in the Supreme Court authorities.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first considered whether the absence of a preliminary inquiry vitiated the FIR. It adopted the account of Lalita Kumari and Managipet in Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi. Information disclosing a cognizable offence calls for registration. A limited inquiry may be appropriate where it is necessary to determine whether the information discloses such an offence; there is no general requirement for an inquiry whose omission automatically vitiates an FIR. The High Court also referred to the statement in Meera Yadav that failure to hold an inquiry will not vitiate an FIR. The complainant's account identified the alleged participants, place, time, abuse and sword threat. The Court treated the FIR as disclosing a cognizable offence and therefore rejected the applicant's objection based on the absence of an inquiry. That conclusion did not determine the eventual reliability of the account or whether the police should believe it after investigation.

The Court next applied the principles in Renu Kumari governing allegations taken at face value and the use of inherent powers to prevent abuse of process. Manifestly malicious proceedings can fall within an illustrative category in Bhajan Lal, and inherent powers remain available on proper grounds. Here, however, the effect of the alleged prior enmity was disputed. Enmity could provide a motive either for false implication or for the alleged misconduct. Since the FIR, taken at face value, disclosed a cognizable offence, the informant's alleged mala fides alone did not determine the validity of the case. The Court could not resolve the competing factual accounts or weigh the prospective evidence as though conducting a trial.

Finally, the Court declined to determine the applicant's alibi on the basis of the haematology report and the prescription written on plain paper. His claim that he was receiving treatment at Ambah at the material time was disputed and required cogent proof. Vijay Pal and Binay Kumar Singh explain that Section 11 makes evidence of presence elsewhere relevant. Only after the prosecution has satisfactorily established presence does the accused bear the strict burden of establishing his alibi. The quoted requirement of 'absolute certainty' describes that stringent defence burden. The same authority, however, preserves the accused's entitlement to the benefit of reasonable doubt where the defence evidence creates such doubt about his presence. S.K. Sattar further makes clear that failure to establish an alibi does not itself prove guilt; the prosecution must independently establish its case beyond reasonable doubt. The High Court held only that the disputed alibi materials could not justify terminating the proceedings at this stage. Rejection of the three grounds left the substantive criminal case to proceed in the ordinary course.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application, finding no case for interference under Section 528 BNSS. It refused to quash FIR Crime No. 40/2023 at Police Station Mahua, Morena, for IPC Sections 294, 506 and 34. The charge sheet already filed was not set aside. The order imposed no special condition or separate direction and made no finding of conviction, acquittal, established alibi or final credibility. The prosecution and the applicant's evidentiary defence remained matters for the ordinary subsequent proceedings.

Ravindra Sakhwar v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 51224/2024, 06/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (786) Prev Next

Headnote :- Police / cognizable information / duty and remedy on refusal - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty under Section 154 CrPC to register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence from the remedy available when police fail to act. The informant may follow the complaint procedure before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 rather than demand an immediate direction from the High Court. The police duty to register an FIR does not itself confer a right to mandamus in every case of refusal.

Magistrate / registration and investigation / statutory supervision - The Court applied Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277. After approaching the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), an aggrieved informant may apply to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). If prima facie satisfied, the Magistrate can direct registration of an FIR or proper investigation and monitor its progress. The Magistrate cannot personally investigate. A complaint under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC, also referred to by the Court as Section 223 BNSS, remained available to this applicant.

High Court / FIR mandamus / alternative remedy and exceptional intervention - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, explains that intervention under Article 226 is exceptional. It requires a clear case of mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII calling for interference. Even then, the court may insist on lawful process but cannot prescribe the method of investigation. The Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016, applied the rule requiring recourse to alternative remedies, subject to the recognised Whirlpool exceptions. It distinguished the police duty explained in Lalita Kumari from entitlement to writ mandamus. On the applicant's claim that his complaint had not resulted in an FIR, the application under Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS for a direction to police was dismissed as not maintainable, with liberty to approach the Magistrate.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ravindra Singh Gurjar stated that he had complained to the police but no first information report had been registered. The order does not set out the complaint's date, its alleged offence, documents, persons accused, prior recourse to the Superintendent of Police or any reasons communicated by police for declining registration. Gurjar filed Misc. Criminal Case No. 35612/2024 in the High Court at Gwalior under Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS, seeking a direction requiring police to lodge an FIR.

The State opposed intervention by the High Court on the ground that the applicant could approach the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The Court considered whether an application seeking a direction to police to register an FIR was maintainable. It examined the procedural remedies prescribed by the Supreme Court and the Madhya Pradesh High Court. In its final order, the Court referred to the complaint remedy under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS, granted liberty to pursue it and dismissed the application.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, at length for the central distinction between the police duty and the remedy for inaction. Police must register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence. What an informant should do when police fail to act is a separate question. The Supreme Court directed the aggrieved informant to follow the procedure under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC before the Magistrate. The present Court applied that distinction concerning remedies; it did not conclude that Gurjar's complaint, whose details were not set out, necessarily disclosed a cognizable offence.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, paragraphs 41–42, was quoted for two qualifications. Article 226 permits exceptional intervention where mala fide exercise of investigative power, clear abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII CrPC justify interference. Even then, the High Court cannot dictate the method of investigation; it can insist only on observance of the legal process. Where police simply fail to act on information, the informant's ordinary remedy is under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The quotation incorporated the explanation of complaint inquiry in Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre. Upon prima facie satisfaction, the Magistrate may direct police investigation or take cognizance and issue process. If no offence emerges, the Magistrate may dismiss the complaint under Section 203.

The Court directly quoted paragraph 11 of Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, on the successive remedies: a complaint to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). If satisfied on the material placed before him, the Magistrate can direct registration and proper investigation, and monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, was quoted for the same alternative remedy rather than routine petitions under Article 226. It also recognised the Magistrate's discretion, where necessary, to recommend a change of investigating officer to the police hierarchy. It expressly stated that the Magistrate cannot investigate personally.

The Court quoted the binding approach of the Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016, decided 20.12.2016. Mandamus to compel performance of the police duty under Section 154 may be declined where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used. This rule is subject to the four exceptions referred to in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. The Division Bench distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, which concerns the police duty to register an FIR, from a litigant's entitlement to immediate writ mandamus despite the other remedies. The quoted authorities did not treat High Court jurisdiction as absolutely excluded in every case of refusal.

3. Statutes considered : Section 154 CrPC governs the recording of information disclosing a cognizable offence. Subsection (3) permits a written application to the Superintendent of Police when the police station refuses registration. Section 156(3) empowers a competent Magistrate to order investigation, including registration where appropriate on a prima facie showing, with judicial oversight as explained in the precedents. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC provide for a complaint and cognizance before the Magistrate. A quoted authority refers to Section 203 as permitting dismissal of a complaint that discloses no offence. In granting liberty to pursue the complaint remedy, the Court referred to Section 223 BNSS, 2023 as the corresponding provision. It referred to Section 528 BNSS alongside Section 482 CrPC as the provision invoked for the High Court application.

4. Issues : (i) Where police have allegedly failed to register an FIR, does their statutory duty to register an FIR on information disclosing a cognizable offence itself entitle this applicant to a High Court direction under Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS, or must he first pursue the remedies before superior police officers and the Magistrate? (ii) What powers can the Magistrate exercise on the informant's complaint or application under Section 156(3), and what limits apply to judicial directions about the method of investigation? (iii) Is recourse to alternative remedies invariably required, or do the cited authorities preserve exceptional intervention under Article 226 where established mala fides, clear abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII require it? The Court did not decide the merits or cognizability of Gurjar's underlying allegations; it left him free to pursue the statutory forum.

5. Ratio / Findings : Following Aleque Padamsee, the Court distinguished the police duty to register an FIR from the remedy for failure to perform that duty. Police must register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence, but their inaction does not automatically entitle the informant to approach the High Court first for a direction to register an FIR. The affected person can complain to a competent Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC; the final order also referred to Section 223 BNSS. The Court decided only whether it should intervene on this application.

The Court also relied on Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe for an additional statutory remedy. The informant may apply in writing to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application under Section 156(3). If prima facie satisfied, the Magistrate may direct registration of an FIR or an investigation, or monitor an existing investigation. The Magistrate does not personally take over the police investigation. The complaint procedure described in Divine Retreat and Gangadhar includes an appropriate inquiry, dismissal where no case emerges, or taking cognizance and issuing process where justified. These are distinct statutory options; they do not require every item of information automatically to result in registration of an FIR.

Divine Retreat and Shweta Bhadauria preserve exceptional constitutional oversight while limiting its exercise. A clear case of mala fide abuse and statutory non-compliance can justify rare intervention under Article 226, and the quoted Division Bench recognised the Whirlpool exceptions to the requirement of alternative remedies. Even then, the court can require adherence to lawful process but cannot select the method of investigation. The police duty explained in Lalita Kumari does not dispense with the prescribed remedies. The Court found no case for directing registration of an FIR. It refused the requested High Court direction without rejecting on the merits any complaint that might later be made to the Magistrate.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application as not maintainable for the requested direction to police to lodge an FIR. It expressly preserved Gurjar's liberty, if he believed an offence had occurred, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS.

Ravindra Singh Gurjar v. Shriman Police Adhikshak and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 35612/2024, 22/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (787) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers / pending investigation / premature quashing - The Court relied on Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, and State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, in declining to interfere while police collected material concerning allegations of a cognizable offence. Investigation may be stopped only on sound grounds showing an abuse of process, not merely because the accused disputes the complainant's account. The allegation that the applicants had procured a false school record of age to have a murder accused treated as a juvenile required investigation.

FIR quashing / face-value and malicious-prosecution exceptions - S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, reproduced the examples in Bhajan Lal permitting quashing where an FIR, taken at face value, discloses no offence or the proceeding is manifestly mala fide. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, reproduced the caution in Bhajan Lal against inquiring into the reliability of the allegations. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, likewise required intervention to rest on sound grounds and cautioned against stifling a genuine prosecution.

Quashing / defence documents and disputed facts - Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognises a limited exception to the ordinary rule against considering the accused's disputed defence at the quashing stage. In an appropriate case, a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute may be considered. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, and CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, disapprove premature findings on disputed facts and a roving inquiry. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, similarly cautions against assessing evidence before investigation is complete. The applicants' account of the later age proceedings and the competing records of date of birth did not permit the Court to determine authenticity or innocence while investigation of the FIR was pending.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The respondent complainant alleged that his elder son Pranam Jain was shot dead on 08.03.2024 by Mikku alias Vishal Bhadoriya and Bhola Bhadoriya. After the suspects' arrest, Mikku reportedly gave his age as 19 during police interrogation and was initially produced before a regular criminal court. According to the written complaint, his father Randeep Singh, applicant 2, and uncle Ravindra Singh, applicant 1, conspired with him to present fabricated school records giving Mikku a birth date of 02.07.2006. The alleged purpose was to have him treated as a juvenile at the time of the killing and thereby avoid consequences applicable to an adult. The trial court directed his production before the Juvenile Justice Board.

The complainant referred to conflicting age records. The admission register of Government Integrated Middle School, Vindwa reportedly recorded the date of birth as 08.06.2005; the Aadhaar card recorded 08.05.2000; the local voter list gave an age of 22; and the Anganwadi record gave 07.07.2003. He alleged manipulation of an entry in Jai Gurudev Primary/Middle School, Vindwa recording 02.07.2006 as the date of birth, and of admission entry 355 dated 22.06.2011. According to the District Education Officer, the school's recognition period ran from 26.07.2011 to 31.03.2013. The complainant relied on that period to question the earlier admission entry. Police conducted a preliminary inquiry into his written complaint and then registered Crime No. 833/2024 at Police Station Kotwali, Bhind for offences under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120B IPC.

Ravindra Singh and Randeep Singh sought quashing under Section 528 BNSS. Counsel submitted that, after multiple proceedings, Mikku had ultimately been declared an adult. He also submitted that, in Criminal Revision No. 3522/2024, the High Court had dismissed Mikku's challenge to a direction of the VII Additional Sessions Judge, Bhind to inquire into his age. Counsel argued that the FIR did little more than describe the applicants as conspirators and allege forged documents, without sufficient allegations to justify investigation. The question before the Court was whether to halt the collection of evidence at that stage; it was not finally deciding juvenility or guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, was quoted for the need for caution against quashing an FIR prematurely, before proper investigation. Investigation may be stopped where its continuation would be an abuse of process, but police must ordinarily be allowed to gather material. Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, was quoted for the statutory power to investigate a cognizable offence disclosed on the face of an FIR. Intervention is rare and requires satisfaction that the prosecution is malicious and vexatious. The High Court applied this restraint against premature interference to the allegations of forged age documents.

State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, was reproduced on the importance of completing investigation where an offence is disclosed. It also explains that the wide powers under Section 482 must be exercised sparingly to prevent abuse of process and secure justice. Swapan Kumar Guha and Jeffrey J. Diermeier appear as authorities quoted within that Supreme Court extract. Their passages explain why investigation ordinarily continues and why inherent power cannot be exercised arbitrarily.

XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted against resolving contested facts through a roving inquiry and stalling investigation before evidence is collected. Its facts concerned alleged blackmail and a disputed settlement; they illustrated the principle and were not facts of the present case concerning age records. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, was quoted briefly against assessing evidence before investigation is complete. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, was quoted against making detailed findings on disputed facts and the accused's defence in proceedings under Section 482. The High Court applied these principles concerning the stage of proceedings and restraint in assessing evidence. Factual verification was left to police investigation and the later court proceedings.

S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, was quoted on exceptional quashing where allegations, taken at face value, do not constitute an offence or the proceeding is manifestly mala fide. Its discussion quotes the categories in Bhajan Lal and refers to Medchl Chemicals, Zandu Pharmaceutical and Shakson Belthissor on the sparing exercise of power and protection against baseless proceedings. Those subsidiary authorities appeared within the quoted discussion. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, likewise reproduced the caution in Bhajan Lal: the High Court should not inquire into the reliability of FIR allegations, and its inherent power does not confer unrestricted authority.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was quoted on the ordinary rule against considering the accused's disputed defence documents and its limited exception. In an appropriate case, the Court may consider a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. appear within that quotation as sources of the exception. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, was quoted on both the restraint required and the grounds for intervention. Section 482 should not be used to end a genuine prosecution prematurely by assessing evidence as at trial. It may nevertheless be exercised sparingly where the allegations taken at face value lack the ingredients of an offence, a legal bar applies, or manifestly malicious prosecution is shown. These principles supported the refusal to prejudge the pending investigation.

3. Statutes considered : The applicants invoked the Court's inherent powers under Section 528 BNSS, 2023 to seek quashing. IPC Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120B identify the reported allegations of cheating, forgery, use of a forged record and conspiracy under investigation. The earlier revision and age inquiry formed the procedural background. The High Court addressed whether police could continue investigating the alleged fabrication.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the applicants' assertions about the later determination of age and their criticism of the FIR justified quashing Crime No. 833/2024 before police had completed investigation into the alleged forged school entries and their use before a court. (ii) What limits concerning allegations taken at face value, abuse of process and mala fides govern the exercise of inherent powers at that stage, including whether purported public or undisputed defence documents may be considered without trying disputed questions of authenticity. (iii) Whether the Court could at that stage decide the competing dates of birth, the school's existence or recognition, the applicants' role, and the entry's authenticity or the intention behind it, or whether those questions should be left to investigation and subsequent proceedings.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court stressed that investigation should not routinely be stopped before completion where the FIR alleges a cognizable offence. The alleged fabrication of a later date of birth, use of school documents to claim juvenile status for a murder accused, and conflict with other official age entries justified the collection of evidence. The alleged date on which school recognition began called for investigation of the 2011 admission entry. It was not a judicial finding that the school did not exist or that every cited register was authentic. The Court treated the seriousness of the accusation as a reason against premature interruption. It did not decide whether any particular applicant had actually created a document. The quoted Supreme Court decisions permitted quashing where allegations, taken as true, disclose no offence or a clearly abusive or malicious proceeding is shown. They also cautioned that the wide inherent power is subject to limits and cannot be used for a roving inquiry into disputed evidence. The applicants relied on the earlier age proceedings and argued that the FIR contained only a conclusory allegation of conspiracy. Counsel's assertion that Mikku had later been declared an adult did not, by itself, preclude investigation into the alleged earlier fabrication or use of records to claim a particular age. Nor did the earlier judicial inquiry prevent investigation of the separate allegation that documents had been falsified.

The exception explained in Mohd. Akram Siddiqui does not make every purported register or Aadhaar entry conclusive at the quashing stage. The Court quoted the qualified rule permitting consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or one whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. It did not decide the authenticity of the competing age records or treat a particular defence document as conclusively answering the accusation. The conflicting dates and disputed origin of the school entry remained matters requiring evidence. The Court held that the serious allegations of forged age documents required the collection of evidence and found no reason to halt the investigation under Section 528 BNSS.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. It refused to quash the investigation arising from FIR Crime No. 833/2024 at Police Station Kotwali, Bhind, for IPC Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120B. Police remained free to gather evidence.

Ravindra Singh and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 5402/2025, 02/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (788) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable instruments / Section 18 / different sums in figures and words - Where a cheque states different amounts in figures and words, Section 18 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881 makes the amount in words the sum undertaken or ordered to be paid. The Court considered the bank's return of the cheque on account of that discrepancy prima facie unwarranted. The bank, however, was not a party, and that observation did not dispose of the separate cheating charge.

Cheating / loan transaction / dishonest intention at inception - Applying Vesa Holdings (P) Ltd. v. State of Kerala, (2015) 8 SCC 293, and V. Ravi Kumar v. State, (2019) 14 SCC 568, the Court reiterated that Section 420 IPC requires an intention to deceive from the inception of the transaction. A mere breach of a promise to repay is insufficient. Whether the discrepancy was deliberate or a bona fide error remained for trial. Counsel could not say whether the amount stated in words had been tendered after registration of the case. The Court separately held that failure to tender after knowledge of dishonour could support an inference of initial dishonest intention for the limited purpose of framing a charge. This was not a finding of guilt.

Cheque dishonour / Sections 138 NI Act and 420 IPC / distinct ingredients - The Court followed Sangeetaben Mahendrabhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2012) 7 SCC 621. Section 138 involves a rebuttable presumption that the cheque was issued to discharge an antecedent liability and does not require proof of fraudulent intention when the cheque was issued. Section 420, by contrast, requires dishonest inducement and mens rea. An IPC prosecution is therefore not barred merely because the facts overlap with a possible remedy under Section 138. The ingredients of each offence must still be established.

Framing of charge / grave suspicion / limits of scrutiny - The Court applied M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI, (2020) 2 SCC 768, Soma Chakravarty v. State, (2007) 5 SCC 403, State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, and State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198. A charge requires material supporting grave or strong suspicion, rather than proof beyond reasonable doubt. The judge may sift the material to determine whether it is sufficient to proceed, but cannot conduct a roving inquiry as at trial or assess its ultimate probative value. On the alleged discrepancy in the cheque and the unanswered question of subsequent tender, the Court left the Section 420 charge and the revisional order undisturbed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant's case, as recorded by the High Court, was that Ravindra Thakur borrowed money and assured repayment of ₹4,20,000. After approximately three years without repayment, he gave a cheque for ₹4,21,000. The prosecution alleged that he filled all the entries himself. Syndicate Bank, Katra Bazar returned the cheque because the sums appearing in figures and in words differed. The complainant treated the discrepancy and dishonour as a dishonest device to avoid the loan. Following investigation, police filed a charge sheet. The Judicial Magistrate First Class, Sagar framed a charge under Section 420 IPC in Criminal Case No. 1805/2019 on 21.12.2021. The Sessions Judge, Sagar dismissed Criminal Revision No. 37/2022 on 12.04.2022. Thakur invoked Section 482 CrPC to challenge both orders.

The applicant submitted that, under Section 18 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, the amount in words prevails where it differs from the amount in figures. He therefore argued that the bank should not have returned the cheque. He said that he had received neither information from the bank about its return nor notice from the complainant, and contended that these circumstances could not establish cheating. He further argued that cheque dishonour fell under Section 138 of the NI Act rather than Section 420 IPC. The complainant alleged that the mismatch had been deliberately entered to avoid repayment.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court relied on Vesa Holdings (P) Ltd. v. State of Kerala, (2015) 8 SCC 293, and V. Ravi Kumar v. State, (2019) 14 SCC 568, to distinguish civil non-performance from cheating. Section 420 requires a dishonest intention to deceive from the inception of the transaction. Applying that test, the Court asked whether the different cheque amounts were a deliberate means of deception or a bona fide error. It considered the later conduct as possible evidence of initial intention only for the purpose of framing a charge.

The Court quoted and applied paragraphs 37–39 of Sangeetaben Mahendrabhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2012) 7 SCC 621, in rejecting the argument that Section 138 was the exclusive remedy. An NI Act complaint involves a rebuttable presumption concerning antecedent liability and does not require fraudulent intention when the cheque is issued. IPC cheating requires mens rea, has different ingredients and follows a different procedural route. Some overlap in the facts does not itself bar the IPC case. The Court applied that distinction to uphold the Section 420 charge despite the applicant's reliance on the Section 138 remedy.

M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI, Bengaluru, (2020) 2 SCC 768, was reproduced on the judge's duty to sift police statements and prosecution documents, distinguish simple suspicion from grave suspicion, and consider broad probabilities and basic infirmities. Discharge is warranted if the prosecution material, even if accepted, cannot establish the offence. The decision also prohibits a roving inquiry into ultimate proof and ordinarily excludes defence documents when discharge is sought under Section 227 CrPC. The reproduced reasoning draws on P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, (2010) 2 SCC 398. It refers to State of J&K v. Sudershan Chakkar, (1995) 4 SCC 181, and State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, (2005) 1 SCC 568, for the limits on material produced by the defence at that stage.

Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, was quoted for the distinction between an opinion at the charge stage that the accused might have committed the offence and proof beyond reasonable doubt for conviction. The court must apply its mind to material supporting a prima facie case; suspicion without material is insufficient. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, was quoted on limited sifting and weighing under Section 227. The facts taken at face value must disclose the ingredients of the offence, grave suspicion must rest on material, and the court must avoid a miniature trial. State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, was quoted on revisional interference with a charge. Strong suspicion capable of yielding proof at trial suffices; certainty of guilt is not required. Together, these authorities supplied the limited standard by which the two lower court orders were examined. They did not call for a final assessment of the cheque or the applicant's intention.

Within the passage quoted from Shiv Charan Bansal, State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, (1977) 4 SCC 39, and Dipakbhai Jagdishchandra Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 16 SCC 547, reinforce that the ground for presuming an offence must rest on material capable of becoming evidence at trial. At the charge stage, no weight is to be attached to the accused's merely probable defence.

3. Statutes considered : Under Section 18 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, where an instrument states different sums in figures and words, the amount in words is the sum undertaken or ordered to be paid. Applying that provision to the bank's stated reason for return, the Court observed that prima facie the cheque should not have been returned on that ground. The bank was not impleaded, and no binding direction or adjudication against it followed. The applicant relied on Section 138 NI Act as the exclusive remedy for cheque dishonour. Through Sangeetaben, the Court distinguished the ingredients of that offence and its presumption.

Section 420 IPC punishes cheating coupled with dishonest inducement to deliver property or deal with a valuable security. The Court stressed the need for dishonest intention at inception, rather than mere subsequent non-payment. Section 482 CrPC was invoked to challenge the order framing the charge and the order dismissing the criminal revision. The quoted Supreme Court passages on Section 227 CrPC supplied the general standard for charge and discharge. Section 397 CrPC was discussed through Fatehkaran Mehdu in relation to review at the charge stage.

4. Issues : (i) What effect did Section 18 give to the difference between the cheque amounts, and did the bank's reason for return by itself defeat the prosecution allegation? (ii) On the prosecution account of the loan, delayed repayment and discrepant cheque, was this necessarily a mere civil breach, or was there material supporting suspicion of dishonest intention at inception for Section 420 IPC? (iii) Did a possible remedy under Section 138 NI Act exclude prosecution under Section 420 IPC on overlapping cheque facts? (iv) What degree of suspicion and scrutiny was permissible when framing the charge and reviewing it in revision or under inherent powers, and did the challenged orders exceed those limits? Whether the discrepancy was deliberate or a bona fide error, and ultimate criminal liability, remained matters for trial; they were not conclusively determined in this petition.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court read Section 18 as making the amount in words controlling. It observed that prima facie the bank should not have returned the cheque solely because that amount differed from the figures. Whether the mismatch was a bona fide mistake or a deliberate means of avoiding payment could not be conclusively determined in the challenge to the charge.

The Court applied the requirement of dishonest intention at the inception of the transaction, explained in Vesa Holdings and V. Ravi Kumar. Later conduct could shed light on that earlier intention. Asked whether the amount written in words had been tendered after registration of the criminal case, counsel said that he had no information. The Court separately considered the inference that could follow from failure to tender after knowledge of the cheque's return. Such failure could support an inference of initial dishonest intention for the limited purpose of framing a charge. This was an inference for assessing suspicion at that stage, rather than a final finding that the applicant was dishonest or had received notice at a particular time. The Court did not hold that non-payment alone automatically constituted an offence.

Applying Sangeetaben, the Court rejected the argument that Section 138 NI Act excluded Section 420 IPC. The NI Act presumption and the absence of a requirement to prove mens rea there differ from the elements of IPC cheating. The same cheque transaction may give rise to overlapping facts without making the offences identical. Each offence must be established through its own ingredients and process. The possibility of one does not bar a sufficiently supported charge for the other.

The quoted authorities required the Court to assess whether the material supported grave suspicion within the limits applicable at the charge stage. They permitted sifting for the essential ingredients and basic infirmities, but prohibited a roving inquiry into credibility or the application of the standard for conviction. Suspicion had to rest on material. Here, the Court relied on the prosecution account of the cheque containing inconsistent amounts and the unanswered tender question, rather than an allegation unsupported by material. On that limited review, it found no illegality in the Magistrate's Section 420 charge or the Sessions Judge's affirmance. The applicant could contest intention and the prosecution material at trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 CrPC application and left undisturbed the JMFC, Sagar order dated 21.12.2021 framing a Section 420 IPC charge and the Sessions Judge's revisional order dated 12.04.2022. There was no acquittal, conviction, final finding that the cheque error was deliberate, or adjudication of any actual Section 138 prosecution.

Ravindra Thakur v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 24357/2022, 14/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (790) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / matrimonial allegations against husband's relative / particularised support of dowry demand - The Court observed that merely naming a relative in a matrimonial FIR does not justify making him face a criminal trial. The protection against vague and omnibus allegations, however, does not exclude a specifically attributed act. The Court considered Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207; Monju Roy v. State of West Bengal, (2015) 13 SCC 693; Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan; Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., (2012) 10 SCC 741; and Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, (2010) 7 SCC 667, together on the need for specific allegations about the relative's role. Applying Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, it found specific allegations which, taken at face value, raised triable issues. The complainant alleged that, after her husband assaulted her and referred to an unfulfilled demand for ₹2 lakh and a four-wheeler, the applicant abused her, supported the husband's statement about dowry and said that he would deal with the situation. His assertions that he lived separately, 2.5 km away, and was estranged from the family did not conclusively establish his defence at that stage. The Court refused to quash the FIR.

Accused's investigation request / agency and method / limited judicial control - The Court observed that applying to the Superintendent of Police for a free and fair investigation did not entitle the applicant to require police to investigate from his point of view. It quoted and applied Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753: an accused has no right to choose the agency or method of investigation, or to require court-monitored investigation. The quoted passage preserves exceptional directions under Article 226 where mala fide investigation is substantiated. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, was reproduced on the limited participation of an accused and the absence of an automatic right to a hearing during investigation, subject to statutory and exceptional qualifications. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was cited on the distinction between monitoring and supervision. The Court found a prima facie case warranting investigation and dismissed the Section 482 application.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : R.D. Mishra sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of FIR Crime No. 0021/2024 dated 02.04.2024 at Women Police Station, Panna. The complainant said that she married Praveen alias Rohit on 05.05.2018 and that cash, ornaments and household items were given at the wedding. She alleged that, after an initially satisfactory year, her husband assaulted her on 15.06.2019 for not preparing food and complained that her father had not supplied a further ₹2 lakh and a four-wheeler. When she complained about his conduct to her in-laws, including Mishra, he allegedly abused her, agreed with the husband's statement that her father had not given sufficient dowry, and said that he would settle or deal with the situation. Her father came to persuade the in-laws. She said that her brother took her to her parental home for Rakshabandhan in August 2023 and that she remained there with a four-year-old child because of cruelty by her in-laws.

Mishra claimed that he had been falsely implicated. He said that his house was about 2.5 km from the matrimonial home, that he had not been on talking terms with the family for 30 years, and that he had applied to the Superintendent of Police, Panna for a free and fair investigation. This was his second application under Section 482. The first, M.Cr.C. No. 17064/2024, had been rejected with liberty to refile because he had unnecessarily described himself in the cause title as State President (Ex Officio) of Vidyut Pensioners Hit Rakshak Association without explaining the inclusion of that office. The earlier rejection did not decide the FIR challenge on its merits.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, 2000:INSC:251 : (2000) 5 SCC 207; Monju Roy v. State of West Bengal, (2015) 13 SCC 693; Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan; Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., (2012) 10 SCC 741; and Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, (2010) 7 SCC 667 were expressly invoked together, without separate quoted passages, on the need for clear and specific allegations before requiring a husband's relative to stand trial. The High Court examined the FIR in light of that protection. It identified words attributed to the applicant and his alleged support for the husband's assault in connection with the dowry demand. These authorities did not give a relative categorical immunity merely because he lived outside the matrimonial home or was distantly related.

Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., 2015:INSC:221 : (2015) 11 SCC 260, was directly quoted on the distinction between cases warranting quashing and those requiring trial. Allegations that are absurd, disclose no offence or show an abuse of process may justify quashing. Where a case requires trial, the court does not determine the truth of the rival versions at that stage. The reproduced passage contrasts the mere naming of distant relatives, discussed in Kailash Chandra Agrawal, with concrete allegations against the husband and parents that require trial. Kans Raj, K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa also appear within the quoted Supreme Court discussion, rather than as separate analyses of Mishra's case by the High Court. The complainant and facts described in that quotation belong to Taramani, not the present FIR. The High Court applied that principle to Mishra's alleged endorsement and threat, leaving their truth to investigation and trial.

Romila Thapar and Others v. Union of India and Others, 2018:INSC:912 : (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted at length and applied in rejecting the accused's claimed right to control the investigation. The passage collects decisions establishing that an accused cannot select the investigating agency or prescribe the manner or mode of investigation, including court-monitored investigation as a matter of entitlement. Narmada Bai and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt are cited for that rule. E. Sivakumar discusses a hearing for the accused before transfer of investigation in a distinct writ context. Romila also recognises exceptional intervention under Article 226 where an aggrieved person convincingly establishes mala fide investigation. It reproduces the Constitution Bench's caution in Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights against routine transfer to CBI. The politically charged investigative facts in the Romila quotation were not facts of this matrimonial FIR.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, 2014:INSC:139 : (2014) 4 SCC 626, was directly reproduced on the limits of an accused's participation while investigators collect evidence. There is no automatic right to a prior hearing before every investigative step or further investigation. The quotation from W.N. Chadha addresses statutory exceptions and distinguishes investigation from trial. It also discusses CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, Sri Bhagwan Samardha and Narender G. Goel in the context of transfer or further investigation in that separate case. The quoted material preserves the later opportunity to test evidence at trial and recognises lawful further investigation under court supervision. It does not establish that an accused has no procedural rights at any stage. In the present case, it supported the refusal to let Mishra dictate the police point of view.

Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary and Others, 2013:INSC:839 : (2014) 2 SCC 532, was cited in support of the Court's statement that it could not supervise this investigation and that supervision differs from monitoring.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to quash the FIR under the High Court's inherent jurisdiction. The Court considered whether the allegations, taken at face value, raised a triable issue. It did not apply a final standard of proof or determine whether every detail of the complainant's account was true. The order does not set out the registered penal sections, although its factual account concerns mistreatment related to dowry and physical assault. The quoted Dinubhai passage mentions Sections 173(2), 173(8), 204 and 202 CrPC in the procedural context of that authority. Those provisions were not independently applied here to decide any police final-report or further-investigation question. Romila's discussion of Article 226 preserves an exceptional public-law remedy where mala fide investigation is convincingly established. The present proceeding was a Section 482 quashing application, not a decision on an Article 226 claim to transfer the investigating agency.

4. Issues : (i) Did the FIR merely name Mishra among the in-laws, or did it attribute a specific act connecting him with the husband's alleged demand and assault, sufficient to warrant investigation rather than quashing under Section 482? His claims of separate residence and estrangement were the competing factual account.

(ii) Did the application to the SP for a free and fair investigation entitle the accused to require police to investigate from his point of view or the High Court to supervise the investigation, subject to the exceptional constitutional remedies described in the cited authorities?

(iii) What effect did the defect in the first petition's cause title and the Court's comment about it have on the present proceedings? The first rejection permitted a properly constituted application and did not decide the merits.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the Supreme Court's caution against vague and omnibus allegations implicating relatives, but found specific conduct alleged here. According to the FIR, Mishra was approached after the husband's assault on 15.06.2019 and complaint about the unmet demand for ₹2 lakh and a four-wheeler. Mishra allegedly abused the complainant, endorsed the husband's complaint and said that he would deal with the situation. The Court treated this as specific support for the husband's alleged mistreatment in connection with dowry, rather than an accusation based only on Mishra's status as an in-law. In paragraph 9, it observed that the alleged challenge appeared correct because he had tried to impress the Court by using his association title in the first application. It then said, 'Be that whatever it may be,' before returning to the acts attributed to him. The first petition's rejection on a procedural ground did not amount to an admission of criminal conduct.

Applying Taramani, the Court declined to decide whether the FIR or Mishra's account of separate residence and decades of estrangement was true. Those claims could be investigated and tested in the ordinary proceedings. They did not justify quashing the specific allegations which, taken at face value, raised a triable issue in this Section 482 application. The Court found a prima facie case warranting investigation. It did not find guilt, conclusively establish actual cruelty or direct that the applicant must be charged.

Applying to the SP did not entitle Mishra to prescribe the point of view from which police should investigate. Romila Thapar and Dinubhai explain that an accused ordinarily has no right to select the agency or method, or to require court monitoring during an ongoing investigation. They preserve statutory opportunities and exceptional constitutional intervention on appropriate proof. The Court accordingly declined to supervise the investigation or require it to proceed from the applicant's point of view.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application to quash FIR Crime No. 0021/2024. Investigation was left to proceed; the Court ordered no change of agency, no particular investigative act, and no prosecution outcome.

R.D. Mishra v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 19711/2024, 28/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (791) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / pending FIR investigation / no compelled charge sheet - The Court observed that a complainant may seek lawful completion of a pending investigation but cannot require the High Court to direct police to file a charge sheet. It applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488: directing a report with a predetermined conclusion would supervise and pre-empt the investigation. Depending on the material collected, the officer may submit a charge sheet or a closure report. The quoted Supreme Court passage also reproduced M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on discretion to arrest. It referred to Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on notice before prejudicial judicial directions.

CrPC Section 173(1) / unnecessary delay / neutral final report - The statutory command to complete investigation without unnecessary delay prevented the officer from leaving Crime No. 293/2017 indefinitely pending. The Court directed the Investigating Officer to conclude it as early as possible and take the steps law requires, including an appropriate final report. The applicant could approach the Superintendent of Police, Bhind if she had a further grievance. The application was disposed of with those limited directions, not with an order for prosecution of a named person.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Reenadevi filed an application under Section 482 CrPC relating to Crime No. 293/2017 at Police Station Bhind Dehat, District Bhind. On her complaint police had registered an FIR for Sections 498-A, 323 and 34 IPC. Counsel said that the investigation had not been concluded and asked the High Court to direct the respondents to file a charge sheet. The question was what form of judicial intervention, if any, was permissible while police investigation remained pending.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively and directly applied. In that case, the Supreme Court rejected a High Court order which, without adequate reasons, virtually made the recording of witness statements, arrest, seizure and filing of a charge sheet obligatory investigative steps. Paragraphs 25 and 31–32 distinguish the police duty to investigate from a judicial direction prescribing the manner or result of investigation. After inquiry, police may find material warranting a charge sheet or conclude that no case is made out. The Supreme Court objected to the High Court choosing a particular line of investigation and directing several coercive steps before the officer could exercise discretion on the developing material. Paragraph 36 explains that the inherent power preserved by Section 482 may be used to give effect to an order under the Code, prevent abuse of court process or secure the ends of justice. Its scope is confined to those three grounds. The present Court applied that limit to refuse Reenadevi's request for a compulsory charge sheet, while preserving the requirement of timely and lawful completion.

Within the passage from Venkatasubramaniam, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, is reproduced on arrest under Section 41 CrPC. Allegations of a cognizable offence do not make arrest automatic. The officer must exercise discretion cautiously because arrest affects liberty and reputation. In an appropriate case, the officer may decide whether arrest is necessary after some investigation, rather than act mechanically on registration of the case. The quoted Supreme Court decision also addresses prejudicial judicial directions about investigation issued without hearing those affected. It reproduces Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on notice before a judicial order with drastic consequences for a person's reputation. The absence of reasons and a hearing supported setting aside the directions in that Supreme Court case. The High Court here relied on the broader holding in Venkatasubramaniam to refuse compulsory filing of a charge sheet. The quoted discussion of nullity and reversal concerns that precedent, not the present application.

An allegation of delay did not entitle the applicant to a direction requiring a charge sheet. The Court required timely completion under the statute while preserving the investigating officer's freedom to reach the appropriate conclusion.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked for relief under the High Court's inherent powers. Their limited scope did not permit the Court to dictate how the officer should collect evidence or what conclusion the investigation should reach. Section 173(1) CrPC was expressly set out: an investigation under the Chapter must be completed without unnecessary delay. It supported a direction to conclude the investigation and take the steps required by law, without requiring a particular type of police report. The Supreme Court quotation refers to Section 41 CrPC to explain the discretion to arrest; no arrest direction was sought or given here. Sections 498-A, 323 and 34 IPC identified the registered allegations.

4. Issues : (i) Could the High Court, under Section 482, direct police to file a charge sheet at the complainant's request before investigation was complete, or would that take over the officer's lawful assessment of the evidence and foreclose a possible closure report?

(ii) Could the Court nonetheless enforce Section 173(1)'s duty against unnecessary delay by requiring prompt completion, while leaving the report's nature and other investigative acts to the lawful process? What relief remained for a later grievance?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court refused the requested direction to file a charge sheet on the facts before it. Under Venkatasubramaniam, the investigating officer must decide which investigative acts are needed and whether the collected material makes out a case. A court acting under Section 482 cannot prescribe the outcome sought by the complainant. Directing a charge sheet would supervise the investigation and predetermine its result. The officer is not bound to adopt the complainant's preferred conclusion; a finding that no case is made out is a lawful possible outcome of investigation, subject to the ordinary process. Refusing a compulsory charge sheet does not, however, approve delay or prevent the Court from requiring completion of the investigation.

The officer's discretion over the outcome did not permit indefinite inactivity. The Court treated the express requirement in Section 173(1) to avoid unnecessary delay as binding. It directed the officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the consequential steps required by law. The final police report could be a closure report or a charge sheet, depending on the lawful result of the investigation. The limited relief thus required completion of the process without compelling prosecution. The applicant remained free to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Bhind, who would consider any grievance according to law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the application. The prayer to command a charge sheet was refused; the Investigating Officer was directed to conclude investigation promptly and take lawful necessary steps without a predetermined report. An application to the Superintendent of Police remained available for a further grievance. The FIR was neither quashed nor found proved. The Court ordered no arrest or seizure and set no fixed deadline for filing a charge sheet.

Reenadevi v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 18806/2018, 29/11/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (792) Prev Next

Headnote :- Interim maintenance / salary assessment / voluntary loan EMI - The Court observed that voluntary repayment of a loan whose proceeds the spouse has already received cannot be deducted from current salary when assessing the means available to support his wife and child. On the February 2024 salary slip, it deducted the listed statutory recoveries of ₹14,278 from gross salary of ₹68,228, arriving at take-home income of ₹53,950. It did not deduct the further loan EMI of ₹23,125. Against those means, the interim awards of ₹2,000 and ₹1,000 per month were shockingly low. The family was entitled to the status it would have enjoyed in the matrimonial or parental home. The Court increased the awards to ₹10,000 and ₹5,000 per month respectively.

Interim maintenance / commencement and overlapping awards - Applying paragraph 113 of Rajnesh v. Neha, 2020:INSC:631 : (2021) 2 SCC 324, the Court made the enhanced maintenance payable from the application date because the applicants do not control the duration of the proceedings. The award was subject to adjustment for maintenance actually received in any other proceeding, preventing overlapping recovery while preserving the present entitlement. The revision under Sections 397/401 CrPC and Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act was allowed without costs.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rekha Ahirwar and another applicant challenged the order dated 03.07.2024 passed by the Principal Judge, Family Court, Gwalior in Case No. 989/2023 MJC. They sought enhancement of interim maintenance under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC read with Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act. The Family Court had awarded ₹2,000 per month to applicant No. 1 and ₹1,000 to applicant No. 2. The order describes the supported family as the wife and child or children. It does not give applicant No. 2's name or age or assess that applicant's needs separately.

According to counsel, the respondent's February 2024 salary slip showed gross pay of ₹68,228 and recoveries of ₹14,278, leaving take-home pay of ₹53,950. Deduction of the further loan EMI of ₹23,125 was opposed because the respondent had already received the loan proceeds and repayment was voluntary. Counsel disputed the explanation that the loan had met marriage expenses: the marriage took place on 09.05.2019, whereas the loan was taken in February 2022. The respondent did not appear despite service. The matter had also been adjourned after his nonappearance on 29.11.2024.

2. Precedents — Considered : In paragraph 8 of the present judgment, the Court directly quoted paragraph 113 of Rajnesh v. Neha and Another, 2020:INSC:631 : (2021) 2 SCC 324. That paragraph directs that maintenance be awarded from the application date to ensure uniformity and consistency. Its stated reason is that the applicant does not control the period for which the proceedings remain pending. The High Court expressly applied that rule to the enhanced interim amounts.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC and Section 19(4) of the Family Courts Act are identified as the revision route against the Family Court's interim order.

4. Issues : (i) Which deductions from the respondent's February 2024 salary should be taken into account when fixing interim maintenance? In particular, should voluntary repayment of a loan whose proceeds had already been received reduce take-home income in addition to the recoveries treated by the Court as statutory?

(ii) Were monthly awards of ₹2,000 and ₹1,000 proportionate to the income so assessed and the applicants' ordinary standard of family support, and what higher amounts did the record justify? The Court fixed a separate amount for each applicant in its operative order.

(iii) From what date should the increase operate, and how should an award actually received in another maintenance proceeding interact with it?

5. Ratio / Findings : The salary slip recorded basic pay of ₹36,400, dearness allowance of ₹16,744, house rent allowance of ₹9,828 and transport allowance of ₹5,256, giving gross pay of ₹68,228. For its calculation, the Court listed recoveries of ₹30 for the Railway Employees Insurance Scheme, ₹5,314 for NPS Tier I, ₹6,334 in income tax, ₹800 in Maharashtra professional tax and ₹1,800 for CMTD-ECC Bank. These totalled ₹14,278. Deducting them from gross pay gave take-home income of ₹53,950.

The further EMI of ₹23,125 repaid a loan whose proceeds the respondent had already received. The Court held that arranging such voluntary repayment could not reduce the income considered for his family's support. On take-home pay of ₹53,950 under the accepted calculation, the existing awards were disproportionately low. A wife and child were entitled to the standard they would otherwise enjoy in the family home; undue sympathy for the husband without good reason was contrary to the interests of justice. The Court increased applicant No. 1's monthly interim maintenance fivefold to ₹10,000 and applicant No. 2's to ₹5,000. This was an interim assessment based on the particular salary slip. It did not lay down a universal income percentage or finally determine permanent maintenance.

Applying the quoted paragraph 113 of Rajnesh, the Court made the enhancement payable from the original application date, rather than the revision decision. The claimants could not control the delay while proceedings were pending. The Court also directed that maintenance actually received by either applicant in another proceeding be adjusted against this award.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the revision. Interim maintenance rose from ₹2,000 to ₹10,000 monthly for applicant No. 1 and from ₹1,000 to ₹5,000 monthly for applicant No. 2, payable from the application date and subject to adjustment for maintenance received in another proceeding. No costs were ordered.

Rekha Ahirwar and Others v. Nirmal Chandra, Cr.R. no. 3457/2024, 02/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (793) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 498-A IPC / dowry allegations against husband's aunt / individual role - The Court observed that a distant relative's family connection cannot substitute for a specific allegation of dowry demand or cruelty. It applied Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207; Monju Roy v. State of West Bengal, (2015) 13 SCC 693; Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan; K. Subba Rao v. State of Telangana, (2018) 14 SCC 452; Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand; Neelu Chopra v. Bharti, (2009) 10 SCC 184; and Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., (2012) 10 SCC 741, on the need for allegations identifying the relative's act and material supporting that role. The FIR attributed to Revti Devi only a statement outside the Family Court after the marital dispute. It did not allege that she made the ₹5 lakh demand or harassed the complainant for nonpayment. Her prosecution under Section 498-A and the Dowry Prohibition Act could not continue merely because the other in-laws were accused. The quoted Supreme Court passages from dowry-death and trial cases supported caution against indiscriminate implication; they did not require proof sufficient for conviction at the FIR stage.

IPC Sections 503 and 506 / conditional reference to a possible killing - The Court observed that the aunt's alleged statement that the family could buy the police even if the complainant were killed, together with the assertion that money would not be returned, did not allege that the aunt herself threatened to kill her. Section 503 requires a threat of injury with intent to cause alarm or compel conduct. Applying that requirement to this particular FIR, the Court held that Section 506 was not disclosed against Revti. The FIR and criminal case were quashed only as against her.

Matrimonial FIR / reconciliation and divorce petition / specific allegations against immediate in-laws - The Court observed that silence about the other in-laws during reconciliation intended to preserve the marriage did not establish that the later FIR allegations were false. Filing the FIR after notice of the husband's divorce petition did not by itself prove that it was a counterblast. Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of West Bengal, (2002) 1 SCC 555, and Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, were quoted and applied on the independence of criminal proceedings, the different standard of proof, and efforts to settle before reporting. Applying Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, the Court found a triable case in the specific allegations of a ₹5 lakh demand and harassment against K.K. Naroliya, Radha Naroliya and Surendra Naroliya. K.K.'s different posting did not by itself defeat allegations that did not require continuous physical presence. Their quashing applications were dismissed.

CrPC Section 36 / independent parallel police inquiry - The Court observed that the powers of a superior officer did not authorise an independent inquiry alongside the FIR investigation without withdrawal of the assigned investigation. It followed its order in Deepak alias Preetam Verma and the Supreme Court's dismissal in Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P., SLP (Crl.) No. 1345/2019, 18.01.2022, which addressed Section 36 and the circular in that separate case. The Court refused to give legal effect to the CSP report in the present case. In any event, the report recommended waiting for the divorce case; it did not find the FIR allegations false.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This common order decided two petitions under Section 482 CrPC concerning FIR Crime No. 568/2018 at Kotwali, Morena and Criminal Case No. 308/2019 before the JMFC. Revti Devi and Surendra Naroliya filed M.Cr.C. No. 35599/2021; K.K. Naroliya and Radha Naroliya filed M.Cr.C. No. 37501/2021. The offences stated in the order were Sections 498-A, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The Court expressly assessed the allegations separately for each applicant, rather than treating the accusations against the family as one indivisible case. The husband, Mrigendra, was described as a co-accused but was not one of the four quashing applicants.

The complainant, respondent No. 2, said that she married Mrigendra on 22.04.2015 and described the expenditure and cash given at the marriage and engagement. In her FIR dated 14.06.2018, she alleged that her husband, his father K.K. Naroliya, mother Radha and younger brother Surendra demanded a further ₹5 lakh and harassed her mentally and physically. She described repeated pressure concerning childbearing and contraceptive pills, isolation and abuse while in Delhi with her husband, and attempts at family reconciliation. Later, Radha and Surendra allegedly refused to let her enter the matrimonial home in Morena unless she brought ₹5 lakh. She also alleged that Mrigendra threatened to kill her and took out a knife when her mother visited Delhi. At a separate encounter outside the Family Court, her husband and his aunt Revti allegedly said that she could not harm the in-laws or recover money and that the police could be bought even if she were killed.

As regards Revti, the Court found no assertion in the FIR that she demanded dowry or harassed the complainant for failing to provide it. K.K., Radha and Surendra disputed the allegations by relying on the complainant's failure to name them during reconciliation, the FIR following the husband's divorce petition under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, her restitution petition under Section 9, and K.K.'s different official posting. They also relied on a CSP report from an independent inquiry purportedly under Section 36 CrPC. The report proposed waiting for the divorce case before considering the allegations.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, was quoted against implicating all of a husband's relatives in a dowry case on the basis of kinship or conjecture. The reference in that extract to proof beyond reasonable doubt concerned overt acts in a dowry-death trial. The High Court applied the requirement of individual allegations under Section 482 without demanding conviction-level proof at the FIR stage. Monju Roy v. State of West Bengal, (2015) 13 SCC 693, was quoted for caution about omnibus accusations against siblings and distant relatives. It also acknowledged the real possibility of harassment by close family members and required a pragmatic assessment, rather than mechanical weighing of every allegation.

Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan was quoted on quashing general allegations against relatives where no specific role was attributed to them. That case also involved uncertainty about whether they lived with the couple and extraordinary delay. K. Subba Rao v. State of Telangana, (2018) 14 SCC 452, concerned maternal uncles implicated in dowry litigation without specific allegations and the exceptional power to prevent abuse of process.

Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2010 SC 3363, was quoted on the hardship caused by sweeping matrimonial prosecutions and the need to scrutinise allegations against relatives, particularly those living elsewhere. Neelu Chopra v. Bharti, (2009) 10 SCC 184, required particulars identifying the alleged act of each accused, rather than a mere recitation of offence sections. Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., (2012) 10 SCC 741, was quoted on the insufficiency of a casual reference to a family member without active involvement. Its quotation from G.V. Rao concerns the risk of drawing the wider family into matrimonial litigation; it is not a factual finding about the present complainant. Applying these authorities separately to each applicant, the Court distinguished the absence of a dowry or cruelty allegation against Revti from the specific allegations against the father, mother and younger brother.

Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of West Bengal, (2002) 1 SCC 555, was quoted and applied on the independence of civil and criminal proceedings and their different standards of proof. A pending civil suit alone cannot terminate a criminal prosecution. The passage quoted from M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, discusses a preference for prompt criminal proceedings in context, while expressly rejecting a rigid rule. The present Court applied the principle of separate proceedings; it did not order a stay of the matrimonial case. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted and applied against automatically treating a wife's FIR after failed reconciliation and a divorce petition as belated or retaliatory. It also restricts quashing on extraneous material beyond the allegations. The Court treated the effort to save the marriage as a possible explanation for the timing, without finally deciding motive.

The Court invoked its earlier order in Deepak alias Preetam Verma v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 12592/2018, dated 11.09.2018, against an independent parallel police inquiry without withdrawal of the assigned investigation. It directly quoted the Supreme Court's order in Surendra Singh Gaur v. State of M.P., SLP (Crl.) No. 1345/2019, dated 18.01.2022, dismissing the challenge to that order. The quoted reasons state that neither Section 36 CrPC nor the circular cited in that case authorised a simultaneous independent inquiry. The circular itself was consistent with Section 36. The High Court applied that distinction in disregarding the CSP report here; it did not prohibit lawful control by superior officers or a proper transfer of investigation. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was directly quoted and applied to the remaining applicants. Absurd allegations or allegations disclosing no offence may justify quashing, especially where relatives are named in omnibus terms. Where specific allegations raise a triable case against the husband and close family, their reliability and the competing version are not assessed under Section 482. The complaint and outcome quoted from Taramani concern that separate case. Here, the Court identified specific allegations against K.K., Radha and Surendra and left their truth for trial.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the limited inherent jurisdiction to consider quashing separately for each applicant in the FIR and pending JMFC case. Section 498-A IPC required cruelty within the statutory matrimonial context. On the allegations against Revti, the isolated encounter outside the Family Court, without any attributed dowry demand or harassment for nonpayment, did not disclose that charge. Sections 503 and 506 IPC governed criminal intimidation, requiring a threat of injury with the statutory intent to cause alarm or compel conduct. The Court distinguished that requirement from Revti's alleged statement that the police could be bought if the complainant were killed.

Section 36 CrPC was relied on for the CSP's inquiry as a superior officer. The Supreme Court principle adopted by the High Court prohibited an independent inquiry parallel to the assigned FIR investigation in the circumstances described; it did not make lawful superior control itself impermissible. Sections 9 and 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act concerned the parties' restitution and divorce proceedings respectively. The Court treated those proceedings as background, rather than bars to investigation. The different standards of proof in civil and criminal proceedings mattered when rejecting the argument that the FIR was automatically a counterblast or that the civil proceedings precluded it.

4. Issues : (i) Did Revti's attributed statement outside the Family Court disclose her own cruelty or dowry demand, and did it amount to a threat of injury with the intent necessary under Sections 503/506, as distinct from the specific accusations against the closer in-laws?

(ii) Did filing the FIR after divorce notice, or omitting allegations against the in-laws during reconciliation, establish that the later detailed complaint was false? Or would that amount to deciding disputed facts under Section 482 while the matrimonial and criminal proceedings remained independent?

(iii) Could the independent CSP inquiry purportedly under Section 36 override the assigned FIR investigation and justify quashing, and what did its actual text decide?

(iv) Did K.K.'s different posting defeat the specific prima facie allegations of a ₹5 lakh demand and harassment against K.K., Radha and Surendra, or did it raise a factual defence to be tested at trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the FIR separately for each applicant. It found no allegation that Revti demanded dowry or took part in harassment for its nonfulfilment. Even assuming that she spoke the words attributed to her in the Family Court incident, that allegation did not disclose the cruelty alleged against her under Section 498-A. For criminal intimidation, the Court considered the particular accusation: she allegedly spoke about money, influence over police and what might happen if the complainant were killed, but the FIR did not allege that Revti herself threatened to kill the complainant. Applying the threat and intent requirements in Section 503, it held that this allegation did not disclose Section 506. In light of those deficiencies and the Supreme Court's insistence on a specific individual role in matrimonial prosecution, continuing the case against Revti would result in a failure of justice.

The FIR contained sufficiently specific allegations against K.K., Radha and Surendra at this stage. K.K. and Radha were among those alleged to have demanded ₹5 lakh and harassed the complainant. Radha and Surendra allegedly refused her entry unless she paid, and Surendra was also named in the earlier demand. The reconciliation counsellors sought to preserve the marriage, rather than determine each relative's criminal liability. The complainant's silence about the relatives there could be consistent with an attempt at reconciliation and was not a conclusive contradiction. Pratibha and Kamaladevi supported the refusal to quash merely because divorce proceedings existed or the FIR followed divorce notice. The Court noted that the hope of saving the marriage could explain the later resort to an FIR. Civil findings did not determine the criminal case, which was governed by a different standard of proof.

The Court declined to treat the CSP report as a lawful basis for exoneration. Following Deepak and the quoted Supreme Court order in Surendra Singh Gaur, it held that reliance on Section 36 could not validate an independent parallel inquiry without withdrawal of the assigned investigation. On that basis, it refused to consider the report. As a separate ground, the report did not find the allegations false; it proposed waiting until the divorce petition was decided. That recommendation could not make the divorce case determinative of the criminal process. Nor did K.K.'s postings at Panna and Jabalpur establish that he could not have demanded dowry or harassed the complainant. The Court contrasted a murder allegation, in which alibi might arise, with the alleged dowry demands and harassment, which did not require continuous physical presence. Applying Taramani, it concluded that the uncontroverted specific allegations against the three warranted prosecution rather than interference under Section 482.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed Revti Devi's application in M.Cr.C. No. 35599/2021 and quashed FIR Crime No. 568/2018 and further Criminal Case No. 308/2019 proceedings only qua her. It dismissed Surendra Naroliya's application in the same M.Cr.C. and K.K. Naroliya's and Radha Naroliya's application in M.Cr.C. No. 37501/2021; their prosecution was not quashed. The husband's position was not disposed of as a petitioner in these two applications. No guilt or acquittal was decided.

Revti Devi and Others v. State of M.P. and Others; K.K. Naroliya and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 35599/2021 & 37501/2021, 21/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (794) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 125 CrPC — subsequent maintenance application — changed circumstances - Rejection of an earlier application because the wife could maintain herself did not bar a later application when her means were no longer sufficient. In LeelaBai v. Mohan Lal (Criminal Revision No. 18/1987, decided 01.01.1987), a coordinate Bench permitted a second claim when earnings no longer sufficed. Bina said that her parents, who were alive when her claim was rejected in 2004, had since died. She described herself as now alone and receiving a destitute allowance. The Court upheld the finding that she was unable to maintain herself. A later claim requires assessment of the changed circumstances; repeating the application does not by itself establish entitlement.

Wife's maintenance — actual self-sufficiency and husband's support capacity - Applying Rajnesh v. Neha, (2021) 2 SCC 324, the Court held that the ability to earn or receipt of some earnings does not necessarily establish that the wife can adequately maintain herself. The discussion in Rajnesh of Shailja v. Khobbanna, (2018) 12 SCC 199, Sunita Kachwaha v. Anil Kachwaha, (2014) 16 SCC 715, and Chaturbhuj v. Sita Bai, (2008) 2 SCC 316, required consideration of actual sufficiency and sustenance beyond mere survival. Rajnesh also discussed an able-bodied husband's presumed earning capacity and his burden to establish inability to support his family, including the principle in Shamima Farooqui v. Shahid Khan, (2015) 5 SCC 705. Rikhiram's unsupported assertion that he depended on his son did not discharge that burden; he did not establish disability. In view of basic living costs, monthly maintenance of Rs. 1,500 was not excessive. The Article 226 petition was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rikhiram filed Writ Petition No. 19364 of 2012 under Article 226 of the Constitution to set aside the appellate order dated 24 July 2012 in Criminal Case No. 55/2012. That order had upheld the award dated 30 April 2012 granting his wife Bina monthly maintenance of Rs. 1,500 under Section 125 CrPC. The maintenance order in Miscellaneous Case No. 58/2011 described the court as Gram Nyayalaya, Mandla/JMFC, Mandla. Rikhiram contended that no notification had established a Gram Nyayalaya in Mandla and that it therefore lacked jurisdiction. Bina replied that the same presiding officer was the JMFC, Mandla and was competent to entertain Section 125 proceedings even if the Gram Nyayalaya designation were ineffective.

Rikhiram also relied on the rejection of Bina's earlier Section 125 application in 2004, when she could maintain herself. In the later application, Bina said that her parents, who were alive when the earlier claim was rejected, had since died, leaving her alone, receiving a destitute allowance and unable to support herself. She also alleged that Rikhiram had remarried. The JMFC found that she was unable to maintain herself and awarded Rs. 1,500 per month. Rikhiram argued that the earlier rejection barred a new award. He also said that he depended on his son, but produced no proof that disability prevented him from working. Bina opposed the petition on the ground that entitlement under Section 125 could change over time. The parties' marriage was admitted.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court followed the coordinate Bench decision in LeelaBai v. Mohan Lal (Criminal Revision No. 18/1987, decided 1 January 1987), which permitted a second Section 125 application when the claimant's earnings were no longer sufficient. It rejected the argument that the 2004 refusal barred a later claim, taking into account Bina's stated loss of parental support and present inability to maintain herself.

Rajnesh v. Neha, 2020:INSC:631 : (2021) 2 SCC 324, was quoted extensively on the principles governing maintenance. Paragraph 90 discussed Supreme Court and other court decisions distinguishing earning capacity from sufficient means of support. Shailja v. Khobbanna, (2018) 12 SCC 199, distinguished the ability to earn from sufficient earnings and required consideration of whether the wife could maintain herself according to the marital standard. Chaturbhuj v. Sita Bai, (2008) 2 SCC 316, was cited within that discussion, which explained that sustenance means more than mere survival. Sunita Kachwaha v. Anil Kachwaha, 2014:INSC:744 : (2014) 16 SCC 715, rejected denial of maintenance merely because a postgraduate wife earned some income as a teacher. The extract from Rajnesh also referred to P. Suresh v. S. Deepa, 2016

Cri LJ 4794 (Kar), Vipul Lakhanpal v. Pooja Sharma, 2015 Cri LJ 3451 (HP), and Sanjay Damodar Kale v. Kalyani Sanjay Kale (Bombay High Court), in discussing the distinction between earnings and their actual sufficiency.

Rajnesh further discussed Chander Parkash v. Shila Rani, AIR 1968 Del 174, on the presumption that an able-bodied husband can earn enough to support his family. The husband bears the burden of showing that reasons beyond his control prevent him from doing so; an adverse inference may be drawn if he does not disclose his income. Shamima Farooqui v. Shahid Khan, 2015:INSC:283 : (2015) 5 SCC 705, cited Chander Parkash with approval and emphasised the husband's maintenance obligation. The High Court applied these principles in holding that Rikhiram's unsupported assertion of dependency on his son did not defeat his maintenance obligation, and in sustaining the modest award. It did not calculate his particular income or treat the destitute allowance as sufficient to support Bina.

3. Statutes considered : Section 125 CrPC provided the basis for the wife's application and the inquiry into her ability to maintain herself and the husband's duty to support her. The Court permitted a renewed application after a material change in financial circumstances and upheld the monthly amount in view of basic living costs. Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked to challenge the order after dismissal of the appeal. The Court dismissed the writ petition.

4. Issues : (i) Did rejection of Bina's Section 125 claim in 2004 because she could maintain herself bar a second claim based on the asserted loss of parental support and changed need? (ii) Did her destitute allowance or potential means defeat her present entitlement, had Rikhiram shown inability to support her, and was monthly maintenance of Rs. 1,500 excessive? (iii) Rikhiram questioned whether the Gram Nyayalaya could make the award when, according to him, no notification had established it. Bina answered that the presiding officer also acted as the competent JMFC. The marriage was undisputed.

5. Ratio / Findings : The earlier refusal was based on Bina's ability to maintain herself at that time. Following LeelaBai, the Bench held that a second Section 125 application could be made when the claimant's means were no longer sufficient. Bina's parents had been alive when her first claim was rejected. She later described herself as alone, receiving a destitute allowance and unable to support herself. The 2004 rejection did not invalidate the JMFC's finding of her present inability to maintain herself. The Court assessed the changed circumstances; it did not decide afresh that the earlier refusal had been erroneous.

In assessing the present claim, the Bench applied the distinction in Rajnesh between earning capacity or some receipts and adequate maintenance. Bina was admittedly Rikhiram's legally wedded wife. Rikhiram merely asserted that he depended on his son, without producing material showing disability or inability to work. That unsupported assertion did not relieve him of his maintenance obligation. Having regard to the price index and the cost of basic living needs, the Court held that monthly maintenance of Rs. 1,500 was not excessive.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Article 226 petition. The order dated 24 July 2012 and the underlying award dated 30 April 2012 granting Bina Rs. 1,500 per month remained effective.

Rikhiram v. Bina, W.P. no. 19364/2012, 05/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (795) Prev Next

Headnote :- BNSS Section 528 / FIR quashing / face-value cognizable-offence test - The Court observed that inherent powers at the investigation stage must be exercised sparingly. Quoting and applying Neeharika Infrastructure (P) Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, it held that the police should ordinarily investigate an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence. A court considering quashing does not assess the allegations' reliability or decide the merits. It may, however, intervene when no offence is disclosed or an exceptional ground is established within the recognised parameters. The Court also cited a group of Supreme Court decisions for the narrower proposition that proceedings may be quashed when the uncontroverted allegations disclose no offence. It did not analyse each cited decision separately.

Inherent powers / civil suits and rival FIRs / disputed retaliatory motive - The informant's earlier complaints, the accused side's later civil suits and a further FIR gave rise to competing claims that one proceeding was a counterblast to another. The Court held that it could not resolve those disputed retaliatory motives in inherent jurisdiction on the parties' rival assertions. It quoted and applied Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346: alleged mala fides of the informant cannot by themselves justify quashing when the FIR discloses a cognizable offence. The evidence must be assessed in investigation and at trial. On this record, the applicants' claim of coercive litigation and request for police-station CCTV footage did not establish an exceptional ground for quashing. The Section 528 application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rinku Choudhari and the other applicants applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023 (BNSS) to quash FIR Crime No. 71/2024 and all subsequent proceedings. Respondent No. 2, described as the wife of applicant No. 2, alleged that her husband Balli Chaudhary and younger brother-in-law Rinku Chaudhary demanded ₹10,000 from her at about 5 p.m. on 11.07.2024. She alleged that, when she said she had no money, they abused her and threatened that she would not be allowed to remain in the home and would be killed if she came out. She named her son-in-law Shayam Sundar Dubey and daughter Nisha as witnesses.

The applicants said that applicant No. 2 had filed two civil suits challenging a registered gift deed and seeking a declaration of title and a permanent injunction. They alleged that the FIR was intended to pressure them to withdraw those suits. They also requested police-station CCTV footage to support the claim that applicant No. 2 was a victim. The Court noted the wider family dispute. Respondent No. 2 had lodged FIR No. 183/2022 at Police Station Karhiya, Gwalior, on 09.11.2022 and FIR No. 184/2022 at the same station on 10.11.2022. The civil suits were filed after those FIRs.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neeharika Infrastructure Private Limited v. State of Maharashtra and Others, 2021:INSC:253 : (2021) 19 SCC 401, was directly quoted on the principles governing early quashing of an FIR under Section 482 CrPC. The extract recognises the police's statutory duty to investigate cognizable allegations. It cautions courts against deciding their truth or reliability, stopping investigation on incomplete facts, or requiring an FIR to contain an exhaustive account. Quashing must be sparing and circumspect, although intervention is available where the FIR discloses no offence or an established ground for quashing is made out. The Court applied this framework to the analogous request under Section 528 BNSS and held that the applicants' factual defence and competing account of motive did not justify interference. The quotation referred to R.P. Kapur as a source of the established quashing parameters.

Paragraph 7 collectively invokes XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. No. 709/2021, order dated 30.06.2021; Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682. The order provides this collective citation for the conclusion that quashing is available where uncontroverted allegations fail to disclose an offence.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar and Others, 2008:INSC:278 : (2008) 12 SCC 346, was directly quoted at length and applied to the allegation of mala fides. The extract distinguishes the exceptional use of inherent powers to prevent abuse of process or secure justice from an assessment of disputed evidence as if on appeal. It recalls the illustrative categories in R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal, including manifest mala fides, but retains an important qualification: when the FIR discloses a cognizable offence, the informant's alleged improper motive is secondary and cannot by itself end the prosecution. The case is decided on evidence collected and tested through the ordinary process. The Court applied that qualification, together with the unresolved competing accounts of the litigation, in refusing to quash the FIR. The reproduced Supreme Court passage also refers to Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma, Rupan Deol Bajaj, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Satvinder Kaur, Rajesh Bajaj and M. Devendrappa.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was invoked to seek quashing of the FIR and subsequent proceedings through the High Court's inherent powers. The Court explained the limits of those powers by quoting decisions under Section 482 CrPC, the predecessor provision. The quotations also discuss the CrPC framework for cognizable offences and investigation, particularly the police's statutory investigative role and the illustrative exceptions concerning Sections 156(1) and 155(2) in Bhajan Lal. The gift deed and civil suits formed the background to the alleged motive; they did not automatically bar criminal investigation.

4. Issues : (i) Did the FIR, taken at face value, disclose allegations requiring ordinary investigation at the Section 528 stage? Or could the Court quash it by assessing the allegations' genuineness and the applicants' denial, including their request for police-station CCTV footage? The distinction was between the legal sufficiency of uncontroverted allegations and a premature assessment of their disputed reliability.

(ii) Could the applicants' claim that the 2024 FIR was intended to force withdrawal of the civil gift-deed suits justify quashing, when respondent No. 2 had lodged two FIRs in 2022 before those suits were filed and the rival claims of retaliatory motive remained disputed? The Court considered the alleged mala fides separately from whether the FIR disclosed a cognizable offence.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying Neeharika, the Court held that a court considering quashing of an FIR does not ordinarily assume the investigator's role, require a complete evidentiary account at registration, or decide whether the informant is believable. The police must be allowed to investigate cognizable allegations. Inherent powers may still be exercised when the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence or an exceptional recognised ground is established. The Court also relied on the collective Supreme Court citations in paragraph 7 for the conclusion that proceedings could be quashed when the uncontroverted allegations disclosed no offence.

On the alleged retaliatory motive, the Court noted that the wife's 2022 FIRs preceded the civil suits. The applicants claimed that the 2024 FIR was intended to pressure them to withdraw the suits. The competing possibility was that the suits had been filed in retaliation for the earlier FIRs. Those rival accounts raised a disputed factual question that could not be decided in inherent jurisdiction at this stage. Applying Renu Kumari, the Court also held that an allegation of the informant's mala fides is secondary when the FIR discloses a cognizable offence. Factual truth and evidentiary weight must be assessed in investigation and at trial. The dismissal did not determine the factual defences or the ultimate criminal and civil outcomes.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 528 BNSS application. FIR Crime No. 71/2024 and subsequent proceedings were not quashed.

Rinku Choudhari and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 8134/2025, 01/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (796) Prev Next

Headnote :- Regular bail / third application / witnesses already examined / parity with co-accused - The Court held that examination of most prosecution witnesses, with the resulting reduction in the opportunity to influence them, does not by itself justify bail under Section 439 CrPC. The court must also consider the nature and gravity of the charge, the potential punishment and the prima facie supporting material. It adopted the reasoning in its earlier Bhupat Singh order, which applied Virupakshappa Gouda v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 5 SCC 406, requiring reasoned consideration of all relevant bail factors rather than one circumstance alone. Bail granted to a co-accused after one witness failed to support the prosecution did not determine this applicant's request: another witness supported the seizure of batteries from him. The refusal was based on the bail-stage record and did not determine guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rinku Kushwah filed his third application for bail under Section 439 CrPC in Crime No. 48/2017 at Police Station Gohad Chaurah, District Bhind. He had been arrested on 02.05.2017. The registered offences were Sections 407 and 396 IPC, Sections 25/27 of the Arms Act and Sections 11/13 of the MPDVPK Act. His first two applications had been dismissed as withdrawn; they had not been rejected on the merits.

Counsel for the applicant relied on the coordinate Bench's order dated 29.01.2020 in M.Cr.C. No. 3957/2020, granting bail to co-accused Ramjeet Singh after Ramkumar Tomar (PW-29) had not supported the prosecution. Counsel also argued that most witnesses had been examined and that continued pretrial detention was unwarranted. The State replied that Ajeet Sikarwar (PW-13) had supported the prosecution's account of the seizure of batteries from this applicant.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted at length and adopted Bhupat Singh v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. No. 14129/2018, order dated 11.05.2018. That order held that examination of eyewitnesses or material witnesses does not by itself require bail when other relevant factors and supporting testimony remain. In Bhupat Singh, the eyewitnesses had supported the prosecution, and bail granted to other co-accused was not accepted as a precedent for release. The present Court noted that, on 21.06.2018, the Supreme Court had dismissed SLP (Crl.) No. 5103/2018 challenging that order. It applied the reasoning in Bhupat Singh to reject witness examination as the sole ground for bail.

Virupakshappa Gouda and Another v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 5 SCC 406, was reproduced extensively within the quotation from Bhupat Singh. Paragraphs 15–18 discuss the relevant bail factors: prima facie support for the accusation, its nature and gravity, the severity of possible punishment, flight risk, the accused's circumstances, the likelihood of repetition, interference with witnesses, public interest and obstruction of justice. The extract cautions against arbitrary grants of bail and reliance on irrelevant matters while excluding material factors. It recognises the importance of liberty while requiring adherence to established legal parameters. Paragraph 19 disapproves a later grant of bail on the same facts after earlier refusals. The present Court adopted Bhupat Singh's application of these factors to the witness-examination argument. Rinku Kushwah's first two applications, however, had been withdrawn, rather than rejected on the merits.

Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., Prasanta Kumar Sarkar v. Ashis Chatterjee, CBI v. V. Vijay Sai Reddy, Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P. and Dinesh M.N. v. State of Gujarat appear in the reproduced Virupakshappa Gouda discussion of general bail factors and the vulnerability of an order based on irrelevant considerations. Bhupat Singh also separately referred to Dinesh M.N. (S.P.) v. State of Gujarat, (2008) 5 SCC 66. These passages identify the authorities supporting the rule adopted through Bhupat Singh; the present Court did not independently apply their facts to this applicant. The co-accused's bail order was relied on by counsel as a comparator, rather than accepted as a binding precedent determining the present request.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC provided the basis for the application for regular bail after arrest. Sections 407 and 396 IPC, Sections 25/27 of the Arms Act and Sections 11/13 of the MPDVPK Act were the alleged offences in the registered case.

4. Issues : (i) Was examination of most prosecution witnesses, reducing the opportunity to influence them or tamper with their evidence, sufficient by itself to justify bail when the State relied on supporting testimony about a seizure from this applicant? The issue concerned the proper assessment under Section 439, rather than whether the testimony ultimately proved the accusation.

(ii) Did bail granted to Ramjeet Singh after PW-29 failed to support the prosecution give Rinku Kushwah a comparable entitlement despite the State's reliance on PW-13's support for a seizure from Rinku Kushwah? The question required consideration of their specific evidentiary positions, without assuming identical roles or parity merely because they were co-accused.

5. Ratio / Findings : Adopting Bhupat Singh, the Court held that the absence of a further opportunity to influence witnesses or tamper with their evidence is only one factor in deciding bail. The quoted principles in Virupakshappa Gouda also require consideration of the nature and seriousness of the alleged offence, the severity of possible punishment, the prima facie material and other relevant risks and circumstances. Witnesses may support the prosecution when they testify; completion of their examination therefore does not automatically entitle an accused to release. Applying that limited proposition from the earlier order, the Court held that mere examination of prosecution witnesses did not justify bail for this applicant.

The applicant relied on Ramjeet Singh's release because PW-29 had not supported the prosecution. The State, however, cited PW-13's testimony supporting the seizure of batteries from this applicant. Relying on that testimony, the Court found no good ground to grant bail. The claim of parity did not displace the particular prima facie material recorded against this applicant in the present application.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the third application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC.

Rinku Kushwah v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 3866/2020, 03/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (797) Prev Next

Headnote :- Compromise-based quashing — rape allegation — renewed application - Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab, 2014:INSC:217, (2014) 6 SCC 466, distinguishes statutory compounding under Section 320 CrPC from the sparing exercise of inherent powers under Section 482 to quash non-compoundable proceedings. The relevant considerations include securing justice or preventing abuse of process, the nature and societal impact of the offence, the prospects of conviction and the timing of settlement. Heinous offences such as rape ordinarily fall outside the category of private disputes that may be quashed on compromise. The High Court applied that serious-offence limitation to Crime No. 482/2023 under Sections 376 and 506 IPC. It stated that a coordinate Bench had already refused compromise-based quashing on the merits after questioning consent. Although a new Principal Registrar report verified a voluntary settlement, the applicant had not disclosed the earlier refusal in the renewed applications or his statement.

Criminal-side proceedings — material suppression — costs and conditional contempt - The Court described the applicant's failure to disclose the earlier refusal on the merits as an attempt to play fraud on the Court. It dismissed MCRC No. 43501/2024 with costs of ₹25,000, payable personally by the applicant into the Registry within thirty days of 22 January 2025. If he failed to pay, the Principal Registrar was directed both to initiate recovery and to register a contempt case. Those directions were conditional on nonpayment; they did not themselves decide contempt or establish that proceedings had begun.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rinku Mourya filed Misc. Criminal Case No. 43501/2024 to quash the FIR in Crime No. 482/2023 at Police Station Dabra, District Gwalior, in which offences under Sections 376 and 506 IPC were alleged. During its pendency, an interlocutory application sought quashing on compromise. Paragraph 3 of the order identifies it as I.A. No. 23928/2023 under Section 359 BNSS; the later narrative and Principal Registrar's report refer to I.A. Nos. 23928/2024 and 23930/2024. Arjun Singh Jatav sought intervention through I.A. No. 303/2025. As no one appeared for the applicant to oppose it, the Court allowed intervention. The intervenor's counsel said that a coordinate Bench had refused an earlier compromise-based quashing application concerning the same FIR, MCRC No. 42955/2023, on 11 October 2023. According to counsel, the Bench had found the prosecutrix's consent doubtful under Narinder Singh. Counsel alleged that the renewed compromise applications did not disclose that refusal. On 17 December 2024, a coordinate Bench directed the accused and prosecutrix to appear before the Principal Registrar. They appeared on 19 December with counsel, identification, affidavits and compromise applications. After recording their statements, the Registrar reported that the prosecutrix had agreed voluntarily, without threat, inducement or coercion. The present Court stated that a similar verification had preceded the earlier rejection and reproduced the earlier order. That quotation contains inconsistent material, including a rape narrative followed by unrelated cheating and Indian Navy allegations and different petition numbers. The present Court itself stated that compromise-based quashing of this FIR had previously been dismissed on the merits and that the applicant had not disclosed the refusal in his renewed application or Registrar statement.

2. Precedents — Considered : Narinder Singh and others v. State of Punjab and another, 2014:INSC:217, (2014) 6 SCC 466, paragraph 29, was expressly invoked and reproduced extensively in the quoted coordinate Bench order, and was cited and applied by the present Court in paragraph 8. It distinguishes the High Court's sparing Section 482 power to quash non-compoundable proceedings after settlement from statutory compounding under Section 320. The guiding objectives are to secure justice or prevent abuse of process. Serious offences of mental depravity or societal impact, including rape, murder and dacoity, are not private matters to be quashed merely because the victim and offender agree. Corruption offences and offences committed by public servants acting in that capacity likewise have public dimensions. Predominantly civil, commercial, matrimonial or family disputes may, conversely, favour quashing after complete settlement. In other cases, the likelihood of conviction, possible oppression from continuation, and the timing and stage of settlement are material. For an alleged Section 307 IPC offence, injury and evidence may be examined rather than relying on the label alone. The present Court described the earlier order dated 11 October 2023 as questioning voluntariness despite Registrar verification and refusing compromise-based quashing. Its quoted text, however, combines the rape narrative with unrelated cheating and Indian Navy allegations and ends with different petition numbers. The present Court described the earlier decision as a refusal to quash this FIR on compromise; that description is distinct from the inconsistent factual reasoning in the quotation.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 376 and 506 IPC were the offences recorded in the FIR. The quoted earlier order and the Narinder Singh framework addressed the inherent quashing jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC. They distinguished statutory compounding under Section 320 CrPC from quashing non-compoundable proceedings; reference to Section 320 did not make rape compoundable. The Registrar's verification concerned the fact of voluntary agreement; it did not confer an entitlement to compound or quash a serious offence. The order gave directions for costs, recovery and conditional contempt proceedings without citing a separate costs or contempt provision.

4. Issues : (i) Did the newly verified voluntary settlement warrant quashing the rape and intimidation FIR when an earlier compromise-based request had been refused on the merits and that refusal had not been disclosed? (ii) Did the material nondisclosure justify costs and further directions if those costs were not paid?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first permitted Arjun Singh Jatav to intervene, as no one appeared for the applicant to oppose I.A. No. 303/2025. It then considered the Principal Registrar's new verification of voluntary compromise. The Court stated that an earlier similar verification had not removed the coordinate Bench's doubts about the prosecutrix's consent and that the earlier compromise-based quashing request had been dismissed on the merits. Applying Narinder Singh, it held that rape is a heinous offence affecting society and cannot be treated as a purely personal dispute to be disposed of on settlement alone. The new verification therefore did not require quashing. The Court also found that the applicant had suppressed the earlier rejection in his subsequent quashing applications and omitted it from his statement before the Registrar. It characterised the suppression as an attempt to play fraud on the Court and considered a firm response necessary. The reproduced earlier order contains an apparent internal mismatch: its rape narrative is followed by forged naval material and cheating allegations, and it ends with different case numbers. The present Court's own stated findings concerned the legal limits of settlement, the prior refusal and the applicant's nondisclosure. Its quotation contains the inconsistencies described above.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. It directed the applicant to deposit costs of ₹25,000 in the High Court Registry within thirty days from the date of the order. If he failed to deposit the costs, the Principal Registrar was directed both to initiate recovery proceedings and to register a case for contempt of Court. The FIR and prosecution were not quashed.

Rinku Mourya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 43501/2024, 22/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (798) Prev Next

Headnote :- Closure report / magistrate's pending decision / statutory control - A police closure report expresses the investigating officer's opinion; filing it does not finally dispose of the FIR while the competent Magistrate's decision remains pending. The State, relying on Abhinandan Jha v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117, identified three available courses: accepting the report, rejecting it and taking cognizance, or directing further investigation. The Court recognised the Magistrate's responsibility to decide whether closure was proper or the investigation remained incomplete. The report in Crime No. 1268/2020 was still pending, and its eventual treatment could not be assumed.

Section 482 CrPC / compromise in non-compoundable Section 308 IPC case / pending closure report - The Court distinguished statutory compounding from compromise-based quashing through inherent powers. The alleged Section 308/34 IPC offence was not compoundable under Section 320 CrPC; quashing therefore required a separate, cautious exercise of Section 482 jurisdiction. The Court quoted Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab, (2014) 6 SCC 466, on that distinction, securing justice or preventing abuse of process, seriousness of the offence, the evidentiary context and the timing of settlement. It also invoked the governing parameters in Gian Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 10 SCC 303. As the closure report awaited the Magistrate's statutory decision, the Court declined to exercise Section 482 powers at that stage and dismissed the application.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rinku and the other applicants applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime No. 1268/2020 at Police Station Kotwali, District Morena, for an alleged offence under Section 308 read with Section 34 IPC. During arguments, both sides conceded that the police had completed the investigation and filed a closure report, which the competent Magistrate had not yet decided. By its order dated 09.03.2022, the High Court had therefore given the applicants' counsel time to address whether a compromise-based application was maintainable while the closure report remained pending.

The applicants' counsel argued that closure reports and charge sheets were both nonbinding opinions of the investigating officer. A Magistrate could reject closure and take cognizance, just as an accused could seek discharge despite a charge sheet. Counsel maintained that Section 482 powers remained available before cognizance. The State opposed immediate High Court intervention. It submitted that the Magistrate could accept the report, reject it and take cognizance, or order further investigation, and that the complainant should have an opportunity to address the closure report.

2. Precedents — Considered : Counsel for applicants cited Satya Narain Musadi v. State of Bihar, AIR 1980 SC 506; H.S. Bains v. State (UT of Chandigarh), AIR 1980 SC 1883; Swil Ltd. v. State of Delhi, (2001) 6 SCC 670; Fakhruddin Ahmad v. State of Uttaranchal, (2008) 17 SCC 157; Vasanti Dubey v. State of M.P., (2012) 2 SCC 731; G. Sagar Suri v. State of U.P., (2000) 2 SCC 636; Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia v. Sambhajirao Chandrojirao Angre, AIR 1988 SC 709; Laxminarayana v. North East Securities Ltd., (2004) 13 SCC 447; and Delhi High Court's Gangesh Kumar Nayak decision dated 07.01.2009. The judgment lists these as authorities advanced for the applicants' propositions about closure reports and pre-cognizance power, without extracting or deciding a distinct test from each. They are not presented as separate High Court holdings.

The State relied on Abhinandan Jha and Others v. Dinesh Mishra, AIR 1968 SC 117, for the Magistrate's three options on a closure report: acceptance, rejection and cognizance, or further investigation. The citation appeared in the State's submissions. In paragraph 8, the Court itself recognised the Magistrate's responsibility to decide whether the report should be accepted or the investigation was incomplete and further investigation was needed. That statutory process remained pending and formed the basis for declining immediate interference.

The Court directly quoted Narinder Singh and Others v. State of Punjab and Another, (2014) 6 SCC 466, at length. Paragraph 29 distinguishes quashing on settlement under Section 482 from compounding under Section 320. It requires sparing and cautious exercise of inherent powers to secure justice or prevent abuse of process, and distinguishes serious offences affecting society from predominantly civil, commercial or matrimonial disputes. The quoted guidance also addresses the remoteness of conviction, injustice from continuing the proceedings, the prima facie supporting material and the timing of settlement. Its Section 307 IPC example allows consideration of substance, injury and evidence, rather than reliance on the statutory label alone.

Gian Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 10 SCC 303, was expressly invoked with Narinder Singh as governing the circumstances relevant to compromise-based quashing. The Court did not decide whether the actual compromise justified quashing this FIR. Its reference to those authorities therefore did not determine whether the FIR should ultimately be quashed.

3. Statutes considered : The applicants invoked the High Court's inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC. Section 320 CrPC did not permit compounding of the alleged Section 308 IPC offence. Direct statutory compounding therefore had to be distinguished from a discretionary request for compromise-based quashing under Section 482. The closure report remained for the Magistrate to decide, including whether it should be accepted or further investigation was required.

4. Issues : (i) What was the legal effect of a police closure report that had been filed but not decided, both on the FIR and on the Magistrate's authority? The applicants described it as a nonbinding opinion but sought immediate High Court intervention before cognizance. The State relied on the Magistrate's remaining statutory options and the complainant's opportunity to be heard.

(ii) Should the High Court immediately exercise Section 482 powers to quash on compromise a non-compoundable Section 308/34 IPC case while the Magistrate had not considered the closure report, or should the statutory decision on that report come first?

(iii) Did the Court determine whether the alleged compromise satisfied the fact-sensitive criteria in Gian Singh and Narinder Singh? It described those standards but declined to entertain the application at this stage, without assessing the actual allegations and settlement.

5. Ratio / Findings : The closure report remained the investigating officer's opinion, subject to the Magistrate's decision. The Court explained that the Magistrate could accept the officer's conclusion if satisfied that closure was proper, or find the investigation incomplete and direct further investigation. The parties' submissions also addressed rejection of closure and taking cognizance. As the Magistrate had not acted, the High Court did not assume that the proceedings had ended or decide the consequences of a hypothetical final outcome. On these facts, the pending statutory process provided an available and efficacious remedy.

The Court distinguished non-compoundability from inherent quashing. Section 308 IPC was not compoundable under Section 320; compromise-based quashing required a justified exercise of Section 482 powers. The quoted Narinder Singh guidance and the reference to Gian Singh required consideration of more than the existence of a settlement. Because the closure report remained pending, the Court declined to examine whether the particular allegations and compromise justified quashing before the Magistrate's decision. The ruling rested on the effective statutory process and the stage of the proceedings. It did not impose a categorical bar on Section 482 powers before cognizance, hold every Section 308 case too serious for compromise-based quashing, or finally accept or reject the compromise.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application, and the FIR was not quashed. The closure report remained for the competent Magistrate to decide in accordance with law.

Rinku and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 38076/2021, 01/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (799) Prev Next

Headnote :- Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act — Section 5 procurement — paying customer - The Court read 'procure' in context as obtaining a person for prostitution. The allegation that the applicant paid to obtain a girl, together with his presence with her during the raid, provided a prima facie basis for the charge. The Court followed X v. State of Kerala, Criminal Revision Petition No. 1208/2023 (Kerala High Court, 21 December 2023), on customer liability. It distinguished Naman Laddha v. State of Madhya Pradesh, MCRC No. 34970/2022 (19 December 2022), because that case involved no allegation of payment to procure a person. Describing himself as a customer did not defeat the Section 5 charge at this stage.

Framing of charge — material-founded grave suspicion — Section 227 CrPC principles - Quoting and adopting M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI, Bengaluru, (2020) 2 SCC 768, the Court recognised that the judge may sift the prosecution record, consider broad probabilities and basic infirmities, and discharge where the accepted material discloses no offence or gives rise only to ordinary suspicion. Strong suspicion must rest on actual material; a roving inquiry into the merits is impermissible. Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, distinguishes the possibility of an offence at the charge stage from proof beyond reasonable doubt at trial, while requiring more than unsupported suspicion. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, permits limited sifting and examination of the ingredients at face value, on material capable of becoming evidence at trial. Applying these principles, the Court found that the alleged payment and raid material justified proceeding under Section 5. It left the Section 6 detention and abetment questions, including the applicant's consent to the detention, for assessment on trial evidence.

Criminal revision — framed charge — limited interference - The Court quoted State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, on review under Section 397 CrPC after a charge has been framed. Strong suspicion founded on material is sufficient for the case to proceed to trial; a final opinion of guilt is not required. Applying that restraint, the High Court declined to interfere with the charge order already affirmed in revision.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 6 January 2021, police received information that prostitution was taking place and searched a house associated with co-accused Deependra/Deepesh Vishwakarma, also called Vicky. Officers reported several persons in the hall, including a punter sent by the police, and a male and female in each of two rooms. They reported finding Rishabh Khare with a woman identified in the judgment as Y in one room, where condoms were recovered. According to the prosecution account, the room had been taken for payment, and Prakhar Dubey and Nilesh Patel had supplied the girl. Police reported recovering currency from co-accused persons, including identified notes given by the punter, and ₹600 and a phone from the applicant. After an FIR and charge sheet mentioning Sections 3 –6 of the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956, the JMFC, Jabalpur, framed charges against the applicant under Sections 5 and 6 on 15 March 2021. The 18th Additional Sessions Judge dismissed Criminal Revision No. 125/2021 on 28 July 2021. The applicant challenged the charge order in MCRC No. 15353/2022, arguing that a customer could not be prosecuted under those provisions. At the hearing on 13 March 2024, the High Court drew attention to the alleged payment to procure the girl and gave counsel time to address Section 5. When the matter resumed, counsel sought a further adjournment because the arguing lawyer was away. The Court refused: the point had already been argued extensively and additional time granted. The State defended the charges on the alleged payment and procurement.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicant relied on the Madhya Pradesh coordinate Bench decision in Naman Laddha v. State of Madhya Pradesh, MCRC No. 34970/2022 (19 December 2022), for the proposition that a customer could not be prosecuted. The Court distinguished it because there had been no allegation of paid procurement in that case, whereas there was such an allegation here. Counsel also cited Bikas Kumar Jain v. State of Odisha, CRLMC No. 3390/2023 (Orissa High Court, 9 February 2024), on customer non-liability, and X v. State of Kerala, Criminal Revision Petition No. 1208/2023 (Kerala High Court, 21 December 2023). The Court found that X supported the contrary conclusion: in context, ‘procure’ in Section 5 includes obtaining a person and can cover a customer. It adopted that interpretation in considering the allegation of paid procurement.

The Court quoted and applied four Supreme Court decisions on the standards for framing charges and reviewing them. M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI, Bengaluru, (2020) 2 SCC 768, sets out principles drawn from P. Vijayan. Under Section 227 CrPC, the judge may undertake limited sifting of police statements and prosecution documents, consider broad probabilities and basic infirmities, and discharge where the material, accepted at face value, discloses no offence or raises only ordinary suspicion. The judge is not a mere post office. Strong suspicion requires material support, without a roving trial or assessment of ultimate probative worth. The extract also cites State of J&K v. Sudershan Chakkar and State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi on the ordinary restriction of discharge submissions to prosecution material and the absence of a general defence right to produce documents at the charge stage. Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI, (2007) 5 SCC 403, distinguishes a possible offence sufficient for framing a charge from proof of guilt beyond reasonable doubt at trial. It also requires supporting material: suspicion alone is insufficient. The High Court relied on both qualifications. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Charan Bansal, (2020) 2 SCC 290, permits limited sifting and examination of offence ingredients at face value where material capable of becoming trial evidence supports grave suspicion. Its quotation refers to State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh and Dipakbhai Jagdishchandra Patel. Finally, State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu, (2017) 3 SCC 198, states the restrained Section 397 CrPC standard after charge: the question is whether strong suspicion exists, rather than whether guilt is certain. The Court relied on that restraint in refusing interference at this stage. These authorities concern the charge threshold; they do not establish that the prosecution allegations are proved.

3. Statutes considered : The Court interpreted Section 5 of the Immoral Traffic (Prevention) Act, 1956 as covering procurement for prostitution, including possible customer liability on an allegation of paid procurement. Section 6 concerns detention of a person in a brothel or on other premises with the specified sexual-intercourse intent, whether or not the detained person consents. The order quoted the punishment but left for assessment after trial evidence whether the detention had the applicant’s consent and whether his procurement amounted to abetment. It did not finally decide those questions. Section 397 CrPC appeared in Fatehkaran Mehdu’s discussion of revisional interference with a framed charge.

4. Issues : (i) Could 'procure' in Section 5 cover the alleged paying customer, despite his claim of categorical customer immunity, and did Naman Laddha govern despite the different allegations? (ii) Did the alleged payment, use of the room and raid material meet the threshold for framing a charge, as distinct from proving guilt? (iii) Could Section 6 detention, including the applicant's consent to detention and possible abetment through his procurement, be decided at this stage, or did those matters require trial evidence? Should the High Court interfere with the charge order already affirmed in revision?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court interpreted 'procure' in context as obtaining a person and adopted the Kerala High Court's view that a customer could fall within Section 5. It distinguished Naman Laddha because this applicant was specifically alleged to have paid to procure the girl. The label 'customer' did not confer categorical immunity; the Court did not hold that all customers automatically commit the offence. The prosecution material included the applicant's alleged presence in a room with Y and his payment to obtain her. In discussing Section 6, the Court described the detention offence and referred to a person detained in a room used as a brothel and the applicant's alleged procurement. M.E. Shivalingamurthy, Soma Chakravarty and Shiv Charan Bansal distinguished unsupported suspicion from grave suspicion founded on material, and both from the ultimate test for conviction. They permitted limited sifting, without a roving inquiry into the merits. The restraint described in Fatehkaran Mehdu governed interference after framing of charge. On the alleged paid procurement and surrounding record, the High Court found no ground to interfere with the framed charges. Its reasoning concerned the prosecution case at the charge stage.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. It did not set aside the JMFC's order dated 15 March 2021 framing charges under Sections 5 and 6, affirmed by the Sessions Judge in Criminal Revision No. 125/2021 on 28 July 2021. The evidence and unresolved Section 6 detention and abetment questions remained for the trial court to decide.

Rishabh Khare v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 15353/2022, 20/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (800) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / relative-specific allegations / Seema Agrawal - The allegation against Seema, a sister-in-law residing in the matrimonial home, was confined to an initial taunt about small silver coins and money in envelopes when the complainant entered the matrimonial home. No particular later act of cruelty was attributed to her. On those allegations, her residence in the matrimonial home did not establish a prima facie case under Section 498-A IPC. The Court quashed the FIR and charge-sheet only against Seema.

Dowry demand / separate residence / neema agrawal or jain - Neema, the other sister-in-law, lived approximately 500 steps from the matrimonial home, but the allegations against her included a specific ₹10 lakh demand and threats of servitude, death and divorce. The Court considered Dara Lakshmi Narayana v. State of Telangana, 2024 INSC 953, on vague and omnibus allegations against relatives. It distinguished the vague instigation attributed to the relatives in that case from the direct allegations against Neema and refused to quash her prosecution. The truth of the alleged conduct remained for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant married Rishi Agarwal on 16.02.2022. In her FIR, she alleged that her family had given household goods and ornaments according to its means, but her husband and his relatives demanded more. She attributed an initial taunt about money in envelopes and small silver coins to Seema Agrawal, a divorced sister-in-law living in the matrimonial home. Neema, a married sister-in-law living roughly 500 steps away, allegedly kept silver coins and instigated a demand for ₹10 lakh. The complainant alleged that Neema warned her that she would have to live as a servant unless she brought the money, later threatened death and divorce, and took part in continuing pressure. She also alleged that her husband assaulted her, pressured her to obtain a ₹28 lakh loan and then sought another. She moved to her parental home. Crime No. 37/2023 at Mahila Thana, Vidisha, was registered for offences under Sections 498-A, 323, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. After investigation, a charge-sheet was filed, and RCT No. 198/2024 was pending at Vidisha. Rishi and his two sisters sought quashing under Section 528 BNSS. Rishi withdrew his application at the outset. The sisters contended that the allegations were vague. Neema relied on her separate residence; Seema claimed no involvement in the couple's family affairs despite living in the matrimonial home. The State and complainant relied on their access to the home and the specific accusations. These were allegations and submissions at the quashing stage, rather than findings at trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicants cited Dara Lakshmi Narayana v. State of Telangana, 2024 INSC 953, arising from SLP (Criminal) No. 16239/2024. The High Court expressly analysed and distinguished it. The Supreme Court had examined vague, collective allegations that relatives living elsewhere merely instigated the husband, and cautioned against prosecuting family members without a clear prima facie case. The High Court required sufficiently specific instances. It declined to apply the decision indiscriminately to Neema because the alleged personal demands and threats were materially more concrete. It also applied the requirement of specificity to Seema, whose only attributed act was the isolated taunt.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023 provided the inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR and ensuing proceedings. Section 498-A IPC was the central cruelty charge against which the Court assessed the allegations relating to each accused. The Court read the police witness statements under Section 161 CrPC alongside the FIR.

4. Issues : (i) After Rishi's withdrawal, did the FIR and police statements disclose an individual prima facie allegation of cruelty against Seema beyond the isolated initial taunt and her residence with the couple? (ii) Did Neema's married status and separate residence make the alleged ₹10 lakh demands and threats too remote or vague to warrant trial? (iii) How should the Supreme Court's caution against omnibus implication of relatives be applied to the different conduct attributed to the two sisters? The truth of the accusations and final guilt under the individual offences remained untried.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court assessed the allegations against each applicant separately. Against Seema, the FIR and Section 161 statement identified only the initial taunt about envelopes and silver coins. Her residence in the matrimonial home and the collective assertion that the family's behaviour had not improved supplied no further specific allegation of cruelty. Even accepting the alleged taunt, the Court found no prima facie basis to require her to face trial and quashed proceedings only against her. Neema's residence some 500 steps away gave her ready access and did not itself exclude involvement. The FIR and statements attributed to her a specific ₹10 lakh demand, a warning that nonpayment would require the complainant to live as a servant, a threat to kill her and pressure concerning divorce. The Court distinguished the vague instigation alleged against relatives in Dara Lakshmi Narayana from those direct words and acts attributed to Neema. The result depended on the particular allegations against each sister; neither living with the couple nor living separately was conclusive.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Rishi's Section 528 BNSS application as withdrawn. It allowed Seema's application and quashed the FIR and charge-sheet only against her. It dismissed Neema's application, leaving her prosecution in RCT No. 198/2024 to continue on the charged provisions. Rishi Agarwal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 38585/2024, 17/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (801) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / matrimonial cruelty FIR / specific accusations against husband and parents - Applying Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260, the Court refused to quash the prosecution of Rishi Bajaj, Kishanlal Bajaj and Meera Bajaj. The wife alleged that, during her approximately two-and-a-half-month stay in the matrimonial home, her husband and his parents demanded ₹20 lakh and a vehicle and subjected her to abuse, assault and cruelty when the demand was not met. Her Section 161 statement repeated those allegations. Their truth and the competing versions were matters for trial. At this threshold, a legitimate prosecution could not be stifled mid-way.

Section 482 CrPC / distant matrimonial relative / vague instigation and unparticularised abortion allegation - Applying Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, and the consistent requirement of specificity noted in Kahkashan Kausar, Geeta Mehrotra and Preeti Gupta, the Court quashed the FIR and charge sheet only against Manjula Bajaj. The FIR and Section 161 statement placed the sister-in-law in Mumbai, away from the matrimonial home in Kota. They did not identify when she instigated the others or explain the basis for alleging that the husband administered pills at her direction. The timing of pregnancy and abortion was also unspecified. Her relationship and the general allegations did not supply tangible individual material requiring her to face trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rishi Bajaj, his father Kishanlal Bajaj, mother Meera Bajaj and sister Manjula Bajaj applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 52/2024 at Police Station Stationganj, District Narsinghpur. The alleged offences were Sections 498-A, 294, 323 and 506 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. Rishi was respondent No. 2's husband; the other applicants were her father-in-law, mother-in-law and sister-in-law respectively. Their counsel described the allegations as omnibus, alleged an unexplained four-and-a-half-month delay in lodging the FIR, and claimed that it was a counterblast to the husband's divorce petition.

In her FIR, the wife stated that she married Rishi on 27 June 2023 and that her husband and his parents began mistreating and threatening her soon afterwards. She alleged that, when she became pregnant, her husband administered pills at Manjula's instance, resulting in an abortion. Around Rakshabandhan, the parents allegedly demanded ₹20 lakh and a vehicle as a condition for her to visit her parents and for the husband to go to Narsinghpur. When she refused, her husband and his parents allegedly abused and assaulted her. She informed her brother Vijay by phone and returned to her parental home on 4 September 2023, where she remained. She alleged mental and physical cruelty over dowry. Her Section 161 CrPC statement substantially repeated the FIR.

The Court assessed applicants 1–3 separately from applicant 4. The wife had stayed in the matrimonial home for only about two-and-a-half months, but her complaint attributed a specific demand, abuse, assault and cruelty during that period to the husband and his parents. The FIR and statement placed Manjula in Mumbai, while the matrimonial home was in Shrinathpuram, Kota. No occasion or time was given for her alleged instigation. The husband, rather than Manjula, was alleged to have supplied the pills. The FIR did not specify when pregnancy or abortion occurred or explain the basis for attributing his act to her direction. By the operative paragraph, the police had also filed a charge sheet, which the Court quashed only against Manjula.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reproduced and applied Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2015:INSC:221 : (2015) 11 SCC 260, to the husband and parents. The extract distinguishes distant relatives named without specific roles from identifiable allegations of dowry harassment against the husband and parents. If the allegations, taken at face value, disclose a triable case, their truth and the rival versions are for trial; Section 482 should not be used to quash prematurely. The quotation referred to Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, and Kans Raj on caution against mechanically implicating distant relatives. It also mentioned K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa as authorities on quashing.

Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, 2000:INSC:251 : (2000) 5 SCC 207, was directly quoted for caution against implicating all relations in a dowry case merely because of kinship and conjecture. Its reproduced passage also speaks of proving overt acts of persons other than the husband beyond reasonable doubt in the dowry-death trial context.

Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, was then quoted. It recognises that evidence of dowry harassment cannot be weighed mechanically, while distinguishing omnibus accusations against siblings and other relatives from allegations against the husband and parents. The extract repeats the warning in Kans Raj and requires specific material linking a distant relative to harassment, acknowledging the possibility of exaggerated naming. The Court applied Monju Roy to the absence of an identified act or occasion of instigation by Manjula.

Chandralekha and Others v. State of Rajasthan and Another, 2013 (1) UC 155, was directly quoted. In that case, general allegations attributing no specific role to the relatives, uncertainty about shared residence and extraordinary delay supported quashing for abuse of process. The present Court relied on the need for specificity in assessing Manjula's separate Mumbai residence and alleged involvement without particulars.

The Court expressly invoked together Kahkashan Kausar alias Sonam v. State of Bihar, 2022:INSC:163 : (2022) 6 SCC 599; Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., 2012:INSC:478 : (2012) 10 SCC 741; and Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, 2010:INSC:512 : (2010) 7 SCC 667. These authorities state that vague, general and omnibus allegations without a clear, specific role do not justify prosecuting relatives. The Court applied that collective principle to quash Manjula's prosecution while allowing the specific allegations against applicants 1–3 to proceed.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the limited inherent jurisdiction to consider whether quashing would prematurely stifle a triable prosecution or whether continuing proceedings against a particular applicant would amount to abuse of process. The Court read the complainant's police statement under Section 161 CrPC, which repeated her allegations, with the FIR when assessing each applicant. The offence provisions were Sections 498-A, 294, 323 and 506 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. Both the FIR and charge sheet were quashed only against applicant 4.

4. Issues : (i) Did the FIR and Section 161 statement disclose sufficiently individual allegations of dowry demand and cruelty against the husband and parents to warrant trial, without weighing their competing version under Section 482? The applicants described the case as omnibus, delayed and retaliatory; the Court examined the specific narrative concerning the short matrimonial stay.

(ii) Did the allegations against the Mumbai-based sister-in-law identify a sufficiently specific act, occasion or material link to the alleged cruelty and administration of pills to justify requiring her to face trial? Or would continuing her prosecution amount to abuse of process under the cited Supreme Court standards?

(iii) What was the party-specific scope of quashing, including the charge sheet, while proceedings against the husband and parents continued?

5. Ratio / Findings : For applicants 1–3, the Court considered the approximately two-and-a-half-month period between marriage and separation and the wife's specific allegations that Rishi, Kishanlal and Meera demanded ₹20 lakh and a vehicle, abused and assaulted her when the demand was not met, and treated her with cruelty. Her Section 161 statement repeated the allegations. Applying Taramani Parakh, the Court held that whether harassment had actually occurred was a matter for trial where the complaint disclosed such allegations against the husband and parents at face value. It found no ground to interfere and stated that a legitimate prosecution should not be stifled mid-way. The alleged FIR delay and divorce counterblast remained the applicants' recorded grounds; the Court did not separately resolve them as factual defences defeating this prosecution at that stage.

For Manjula, the Court separately read the FIR and Section 161 statement. Both placed her in Mumbai, away from the Kota matrimonial home. No time or occasion was specified for her alleged instigation of applicants 1–3. The timing of pregnancy and abortion was also unspecified. The husband was alleged to have administered pills, but the complaint did not explain why his act was attributed to Manjula's direction. Her relationship and the assertion of instigation did not fill that gap. The Court relied on Kans Raj, Monju Roy, Chandralekha and the collective principle in Kahkashan Kausar, Geeta Mehrotra and Preeti Gupta requiring clear and specific allegations against other relatives. It found the allegations insufficient to require her to face a criminal trial and quashed the case only against her.

The different outcomes depended on the conduct attributed to each accused. They did not establish an automatic exemption for a sister-in-law or automatic prosecution of a husband or parent. Some quoted Supreme Court decisions concerned different procedural settings, including proof in a dowry-death case and delayed complaints. The High Court applied the role-specific Section 482 test to this FIR and statement.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application of Rishi Bajaj (applicant 1), Kishanlal Bajaj (applicant 2) and Meera Bajaj (applicant 3); their prosecution in Crime No. 52/2024 continues. It allowed Manjula Bajaj's application (applicant 4). The FIR at Police Station Stationganj, District Narsinghpur, for Sections 498-A, 294, 323 and 506 IPC and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, and the charge sheet, were quashed only against Manjula.

Rishi Bajaj and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 9965/2024, 15/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (802) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation / arrest and charge sheet / limits of Section 482 directions - Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the Court refused the complainant's request to direct the arrest of the persons named in the FIR and the filing of a charge sheet. Investigation is a statutory police function. Arrest under Section 41 CrPC requires the investigating officer to exercise discretion with care; the investigation may lawfully end in either a charge sheet or a closure report. A direction requiring arrest and prescribing the final report's conclusion would supervise both the manner and the outcome of investigation through Section 482 CrPC.

Investigation / Section 173(1) CrPC / completion without unnecessary delay - The refusal to direct arrest or the filing of a charge sheet did not permit indefinite police inaction. Section 173(1) requires every investigation under that Chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer must decide lawfully whether an offence is made out and submit the appropriate final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet. The Court directed the investigating officer to complete the investigation as early as possible and take necessary steps according to law. It prescribed no arrest, particular report or fixed deadline. The applicant remained free to approach the Superintendent of Police, Vidisha, with a grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rishita applied under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure for directions to the respondents to arrest the accused and file a charge sheet in Crime No. 384/2019 at Police Station Basoda City, District Vidisha. The police registered the FIR on the complainant's complaint for alleged offences under Sections 376(2)(n) and 384 IPC, Section 67(A) of the Information Technology Act, 2000, and Sections 3/4 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act.

Counsel submitted that the police had neither arrested the accused nor concluded the investigation. The Court was not adjudicating the allegations against the accused. It considered whether to compel particular police action or require completion of the statutory investigation without unnecessary delay.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was extensively quoted and applied. In that case, a High Court had directed specified investigative steps, including arrest, seizure and the filing of a charge sheet. The Supreme Court held that investigation is a statutory police duty whose method courts should not normally direct. An investigation need not result in arrest, seizure or a charge sheet. Depending on the evidence, the police may file a charge sheet or conclude that no case is made out. Section 482 powers must be exercised carefully and for their statutory purposes; they do not justify an unreasoned direction to investigate from a particular angle.

In paragraph 25 of the reproduced passage, D. Venkatasubramaniam quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on Section 41 CrPC. An officer may arrest in the statutory circumstances but is not mechanically bound to do so when a cognizable case is registered. The need for arrest must be assessed cautiously because arrest affects liberty, reputation and status. This reasoning supported the refusal to compel arrest. The present Court did not determine under Abraham whether arresting these accused would have been justified on their individual facts. The reproduced D. Venkatasubramaniam passage also referred to Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on hearing affected persons before a judicial order likely to have drastic consequences for them. That reference supported judicial restraint in applying Venkatasubramaniam; it was not an independent holding on notice in the present matter.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant invoked the High Court's inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC. The Court declined to use it to supervise the investigation by predetermining arrest and the final report. It expressly reproduced and independently applied Section 173(1) CrPC, which requires every investigation under the relevant Chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay. That duty to conclude promptly leaves the police to choose lawful investigative steps and determine whether to file a closure report or a charge sheet.

The IPC, Information Technology Act and POCSO provisions were listed as alleged FIR offences.

4. Issues : (i) Could the High Court, on a complainant's Section 482 application concerning a pending FIR investigation, direct the police to arrest the accused and file a charge sheet because counsel said those steps had not been taken? The issue concerned the distinction between police discretion over the manner and outcome of investigation and the Court's inherent jurisdiction.

(ii) Once the Court refused those directions, what duty did Section 173(1) impose to complete the pending investigation, and what limited direction could the Court give without requiring a particular police conclusion?

5. Ratio / Findings : On the first issue, the Court expressly refused the prayer for arrest. Quoting D. Venkatasubramaniam at length, it held that directing arrest and the filing of a charge sheet would amount to supervising the investigation. The Supreme Court discussion explains that the police's statutory task includes deciding whether arrest is warranted and whether the collected material supports prosecution. The Section 41 passage in M.C. Abraham rejects mechanical arrest immediately after an FIR. The officer must assess the need for arrest during investigation, having regard to the alleged offence and the person concerned, with caution for liberty and reputation. A charge sheet is likewise not an inevitable result of an FIR.

On the second issue, the Court applied Section 173(1)'s requirement to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. The police could not simply leave the matter pending. The investigating officer had to decide whether an offence was made out and file the lawful final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet. The Court directed the investigating officer to complete the investigation as early as possible and take necessary steps according to law. That limited direction addressed delay while leaving the conclusion and specific investigative acts to the officer.

The lengthy quotation's discussion of hearing affected persons was part of the Supreme Court's reasons for setting aside the overbroad order in that case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the Section 482 application. It refused to compel arrest or the filing of a charge sheet and directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law. Whether the lawful final report would be a closure report or a charge sheet remained open. If Rishita had a grievance, she could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Vidisha, who was to examine it according to law. The Court made no finding on guilt or the necessity of arresting any accused and set no fixed deadline.

Rishita v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 35421/2020, 11/01/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (803) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act, Sections 138 and 141 / foundational complaint averment for company officers - Section 141 extends liability for a company's cheque-dishonour offence to persons who were in charge of and responsible for its business when the offence was committed. This is subject to the statutory defences and the separate route under subsection (2) based on consent, connivance or neglect. S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla, (2005) 8 SCC 89, was applied to require an allegation in the complaint of responsibility for day-to-day business. Standard Chartered Bank v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 6 SCC 62, was examined on the sufficiency of substantive allegations about company roles and cheque signatories. Although "Karta Dharta" was awkward wording, the complaint alleged that these applicants managed the company and were authorised signatories who supplied the cheque with an assurance that it would be honoured. Those allegations provided the basic assertion of responsibility. The cheque was allegedly returned for insufficient funds. Proof of the allegations remained for trial; cognizance and summons were sustained.

Section 482 CrPC / disputed corporate role at the process stage - The applicants relied on a memorandum of association in which, they said, their names did not appear as directors. The Court distinguished counsel's account of resignation before the cheque in Ajay Agrawal v. Integrated Finance Company Ltd., Criminal Appeal Nos. 586–594 of 2018 (decided 20 April 2018). Here, evidence was needed to establish the director list in existence when the cheque was issued, any changes to that list, actual day-to-day control and authorised-signatory status. The Magistrate at cognizance and the High Court in this Section 482 challenge did not resolve those disputes by accepting the defence document. The orders of 3 and 18 May 2016 were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dainik Bhaskar, respondent No. 1, filed a complaint under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act against Ritesh Ajmera and the other applicants, as well as two co-accused who were named as respondents. The complaint described the applicants and other accused as the private company's "Karta Dharta" and authorised signatories. Its reproduced paragraphs alleged that they supplied the company's cheque to the complainant with an assurance that it would be honoured. The cheque was returned for insufficient funds. The Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate, Indore, took cognizance on 3 May 2016 and summoned the applicants on 18 May 2016 in Criminal Case No. 13658/2016.

The applicants sought quashing of both orders under Section 482 CrPC. Their counsel argued that describing them as "Karta Dharta" and authorised signatories did not explain how each managed and was responsible for the company's daily business. They therefore disputed vicarious liability under Section 141 and claimed that the Magistrate had issued process mechanically. They produced the memorandum of association of Mayuri Herbal Care Private Limited and asserted that their names were absent from its list of directors. Counsel cited K.K. Ahuja, Sabitha Ramamurthy, Jugesh Sehgal and Ajay Agrawal on the alleged deficiency in the complaint, also relying on the last case's example of resignation before the cheque. The Court considered those submissions, the actual complaint allegations and the defence material.

Respondents Nos. 2 and 3 had not been served. The applicants explained that they were co-accused inadvertently named as respondents, not necessary adverse parties to the quashing petition. The Court found it unnecessary to hear them and disregarded non-service.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Judge invoked S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals Ltd. v. Neeta Bhalla and another, (2005) 8 SCC 89, for the pleading requirement under Section 141: the complaint must allege that the persons named as accused were responsible for the company's day-to-day business. The High Court applied that requirement to the description of these applicants as "Karta Dharta" and authorised signatories who gave the cheque. It understood "Karta Dharta" to convey management or control, leaving actual responsibility to be established by evidence.

Standard Chartered Bank v. State of Maharashtra and others, (2016) 6 SCC 62, was quoted and explained. Paragraphs 31–32 examined a complaint naming a chairman, managing director, executive and whole-time directors, and cheque signatories. The allegations expressly linked them to responsibility for the company's daily business when the offence was committed and alleged consent, connivance or neglect. The Supreme Court found those averments sufficient. The High Court compared their substance with the less polished "Karta Dharta" wording in this complaint. It required neither identical designations nor a fixed verbal formula: the alleged controlling role and authorised issuance of the cheque sufficed for process, subject to proof at trial. The applicants also cited Ajay Agrawal v. M/s. Integrated Finance Company Limited, Criminal Appeal Nos. 586–594 of 2018 arising from SLP (Crl.) Nos. 7122–7130 of 2017, decided 20 April 2018. Counsel said that the Supreme Court had quashed proceedings there because the appellant resigned before the cheque was issued and the resignation was communicated to the Registrar of Companies well before presentation. The Judge distinguished the present memorandum of association. Whether its director list was current when the cheque was issued or had later changed, and whether these applicants controlled the business or were authorised signatories, required evidence. The order records that comparison; it does not set out a full independent analysis of Ajay Agrawal's ratio.

K.K. Ahuja v. V.K. Vora, (2009) 10 SCC 48; Sabitha Ramamurthy v. R.B.S. Channabasavaradhya, (2006) 10 SCC 581; and Jugesh Sehgal v. Shamsher Singh Gogi, (2009) 14 SCC 683, were invoked together by counsel to support the need for adequate complaint allegations of responsibility for the company's business.

3. Statutes considered : Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881, was the complaint offence concerning the dishonoured company cheque. Section 141(1), reproduced in the judgment, deems the company and anyone who was in charge of and responsible to it for conducting its business when the offence was committed liable. Such a person may prove that the offence was committed without their knowledge or that they exercised due diligence. The second proviso excludes a qualifying government or financial-corporation nominee director from prosecution under the chapter. Section 141(2) separately extends liability to a director, manager, secretary or other officer where the company's offence is proved to have been committed with that person's consent or connivance, or to be attributable to their neglect. The explanation includes a firm or other association within "company" and defines a firm's "director" as a partner.

The applicants invoked the High Court's jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC to challenge the cognizance and summons orders. At that preliminary stage, the Court assessed the complaint's basic allegations. It did not decide the disputed corporate records, management duties or authorised-signatory status on evidence.

4. Issues : (i) Did the Section 138 company complaint contain the basic allegation needed for process under Section 141, although it described the applicants as "Karta Dharta" and authorised signatories without a more precise account of individual daily duties? The Court tested that wording against the statute and the Supreme Court's approach to complaint allegations.

(ii) Could the memorandum said to show that the applicants were not directors justify quashing cognizance and summons? Or did the director list's timing and possible changes, actual responsibility and authorised-signatory status require trial evidence? The Court compared those unresolved matters with counsel's account of resignation before the cheque in Ajay Agrawal.

(iii) Was service on co-accused respondents Nos. 2 and 3 necessary to decide the applicants' petition?

5. Ratio / Findings : Section 141 creates a defined form of vicarious or constructive liability for a company's Section 138 offence. S.M.S. Pharmaceuticals requires the complaint to connect an accused with responsibility for day-to-day business; Standard Chartered Bank illustrates the sufficiency of substantive allegations about corporate roles and responsibility at the process stage. Here, the complaint described these applicants and others as "Karta Dharta" and authorised signatories who supplied the company's cheque with an assurance that it would be honoured. The Court regarded "Karta Dharta" as awkward drafting but understood it to mean someone exercising powers and managing daily affairs. Read with the cheque allegations, it provided the necessary basic assertion of responsibility. The Magistrate could rely on that assertion when deciding prima facie whether to issue process.

The applicants' memorandum did not conclusively establish their position when the cheque was issued. The director list might have changed, and directorship did not by itself answer the question of business control or authorised-signatory status. Their actual corporate roles, whether they were authorised signatories and any resulting statutory liability required evidence. The Court distinguished counsel's account of Ajay Agrawal, where resignation before the cheque had been communicated to the Registrar before presentation.

According to the applicants, respondents Nos. 2 and 3 were co-accused named as respondents by mistake. The Court did not need their participation to decide these applicants' petition, so non-service did not prevent its determination. This ruling concerned service on parties; it did not separately determine the elements of Section 138 or those respondents' liability.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 petition. It affirmed the orders of the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate, Indore, taking cognizance on 3 May 2016 and issuing summons on 18 May 2016 in Criminal Case No. 13658/2016. The Section 138 complaint was left to proceed, with the disputed company roles and authorised-signatory status to be determined on trial evidence.

Ritesh Ajmera and others v. Dainik Bhaskar and others, M.Cr.C. no. 10582/2016, 14/08/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (804) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act, Section 138 / legally enforceable debt under an agreement to sell - The buyer issued a ₹6 lakh cheque for the balance of the land price, but the seller did not execute the sale deed. The agreement did not make time of the essence. The seller's complaint nevertheless asserted a three-month period for payment, ending on 12 April 2016; the cheque was issued on 5 October 2016 and returned on stop-payment instructions on 30 December 2016. The Court distinguished this from a case in which the seller had conveyed the land and the buyer then stopped payment. Here, the seller had not performed her reciprocal obligation, so the cheque did not discharge a legally recoverable debt. The later civil decree refused specific performance because the buyer had not proved readiness and willingness, but required the seller to refund the ₹8.5 lakh advance with 6% interest from the agreement date. In light of that decree, the seller could recover no further amount from the buyer. The Court set aside the order registering the Section 138 complaint and dismissed the complaint under Section 482 CrPC. Its decision turned on the unperformed sale and this civil decree; it did not create a general exemption for stopped cheques.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Riya Bajaj and Rajni Kori entered an agreement on 13 January 2016 to sell land for ₹14,50,000. Bajaj paid ₹8,50,000 in advance, with the ₹6,00,000 balance payable when the sale deed was executed. The agreement did not make time of the essence. Kori's cheque complaint, however, alleged an understanding that the balance would be paid within three months, ending on 12 April 2016. Bajaj issued a ₹6,00,000 cheque on 5 October 2016.

Kori did not execute the sale deed, and Bajaj instructed her bank to stop payment. The cheque was returned on that ground on 30 December 2016. The Court considered these transaction facts and the complaint's timing assertion when examining whether there was a legally recoverable debt.

Kori filed Complaint Case SCNIA No. 202/2018 under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act before the JMFC, Jabalpur. The complaint was registered by order dated 7 February 2018. Bajaj also sued for specific performance. By judgment and decree dated 20 November 2023 in RCAS No. 10A/2020, the I Civil Judge, Senior Division, Burhar, District Shahdol, refused specific performance because Bajaj had not proved her readiness and willingness to perform her part. The civil court nevertheless directed Kori to refund Bajaj's ₹8,50,000 advance with interest at 6% per annum from the agreement date. Bajaj applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the cheque complaint and its registration order.

Bajaj submitted that the balance cheque arose solely from the uncompleted sale and that, after the civil decree, Kori had no legally recoverable claim against her. Kori maintained that Bajaj was obliged to perform her part when she issued the cheque. Kori nevertheless fairly acknowledged the decree requiring her to refund the advance. After hearing both sides, the High Court confined its question to whether the cheque discharged a legally recoverable debt.

2. Statutes considered : The complaint alleged an offence under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, 1881. The Court treated the existence of a legally recoverable debt or liability represented by the cheque as decisive. It examined the ₹6,00,000 cheque for the balance price, the seller's unperformed obligation to execute the deed and the later civil decree requiring her instead to refund the advance.

Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, was the provision under which the High Court set aside the complaint's registration and terminated the pending Section 138 proceeding. On its finding about the debt, allowing the complaint to continue would serve no useful purpose.

3. Issues : (i) Did Bajaj's ₹6,00,000 cheque for the balance price discharge a legally recoverable debt to Kori when Kori had not executed the promised sale deed? The cheque was issued months after the payment period asserted in the complaint and returned on stop-payment instructions. Bajaj relied on the failed sale; Kori maintained that the buyer still owed performance when the cheque was issued.

(ii) What effect did the later civil decree, refusing Bajaj specific performance but requiring Kori to refund the advance with interest, have on the seller's claim that this uncompleted transaction supported a Section 138 prosecution?

4. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the agreement and found no term making time of the essence. It separately noted the complaint's assertion that the remaining ₹6,00,000 was payable within three months of 13 January 2016. That period ended on 12 April 2016 without a cheque being given; the cheque was issued on 5 October 2016. More fundamentally, Kori had not executed the sale deed. The Court distinguished the position if the seller had executed the deed and the buyer had then stopped payment: that would have been a clear case of legally recoverable debt. Here, because Kori had not performed her corresponding obligation, the cheque for the balance price was not shown to discharge such a debt. The Court reached that conclusion by examining the agreement, the absence of an executed deed, the cheque chronology and the civil decree.

The civil decree reinforced the Court's conclusion about the parties' obligations and was decisive when the High Court determined the criminal challenge. The civil court refused Bajaj the discretionary relief of specific performance because she had not established readiness and willingness. It nevertheless directed Kori to repay the ₹8,50,000 advance with 6% annual interest from 13 January 2016. After the decree, Kori could recover no amount from Bajaj on this transaction and instead owed her a refund. The Court therefore held that the cheque had not been issued to discharge a legally recoverable debt and that continuing the Section 138 complaint would serve no useful purpose.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed Bajaj's Section 482 application. It set aside the order dated 7 February 2018 by which the JMFC, Jabalpur, had registered SCNIA No. 202/2018, and dismissed Kori's complaint against Bajaj for the Section 138 offence.

Riya Bajaj v. Rajni Kori, M.Cr.C. no. 40510/2022, 03/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (805) Prev Next

Headnote :- Private complaint / sufficient ground for process / unsupported suspicion - Following Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, (2010) 7 SCC 578, the Court held that "sufficient ground" under Sections 203 and 204 CrPC requires a prima facie case. It does not require proof sufficient for conviction or a full trial at the complaint stage. The complainant's Section 200 account and the Section 202 witness expressed suspicion that Mukesh Ladiyai had killed her husband, but provided no substantial facts connecting him to the killing. His Section 174 inquest statement described waking to find the deceased injured; it contained no admission that Ladiyai had killed the deceased and no assertion that they had locked the outpost from inside before sleeping. His later disposal of the keys and shirt, and his fear of suspicion, did not by themselves supply the missing prima facie link. The Court refused the requested Section 106 Evidence Act inference because the statement did not contain the inside-lock premise. It affirmed dismissal of the private complaint under Section 203. The outcome of the police closure report was unknown to the Court; this order did not decide it.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rohani Ahirwar alleged that her husband was killed in a forest outpost at Village Bagwara in December 2015. The police conducted an inquest and, according to her submission, did not file a charge sheet. She then filed a private complaint under Section 200 CrPC. The complaint gave 10 December as the incident date, while her Section 200 statement mentioned 19 December. Her counsel explained that she learned of the death on the latter date. The Magistrate at Deori, Sagar, dismissed the complaint on 15 March 2022 in UNCR No. 15/2019. The Additional Sessions Judge dismissed Criminal Revision No. 06/2022 on 23 January 2024. Ahirwar applied under Section 482 CrPC to set aside both orders and sought prosecution for the IPC offences listed in her prayer, including Section 302.

Counsel argued that the Magistrate had wrongly treated Ahirwar as a hearsay witness and overlooked Mukesh Ladiyai's alleged extra-judicial confession during the police inquest. The Court examined his actual Section 174 statement. It described him and the deceased using ganja at the outpost and sleeping there. He said that, on waking the next morning, he found the deceased unresponsive, with blood at his ear and a stone nearby. He said he panicked, took a motorcycle and later abandoned his shirt and keys. He did not tell others because he feared being suspected. The statement did not say that he had killed the deceased or that they had locked themselves inside before bed. When questioned by the Court, counsel conceded that both assertions were absent. The outside lock described on their initial arrival did not establish that they had locked the room from inside during the night.

Ahirwar's counsel challenged the Magistrate's treatment of her information from others as hearsay. In recounting her Section 200 statement, the Court noted her exclusion from the matrimonial home and her suspicion of Ladiyai because he allegedly knew that the deceased had money and had not promptly reported the incident. Durga Prasad Ladiya, examined under Section 202, also expressed suspicion without identifying a substantive basis. The Court said that a non-expert witness's opinion alone carried no legal weight for this purpose.

2. Precedents — Considered : Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary and Others, 2010:INSC:355 : (2010) 7 SCC 578, was quoted and applied. It explains that "sufficient ground" in Sections 203, 204 and 209 CrPC means a prima facie case, rather than evidence sufficient to convict. Its discussion of Chandra Deo Singh, Kewal Krishan and Mohinder Singh explains the limited Section 202 inquiry. Where prima facie evidence exists, process is not refused merely because the proposed accused has a defence. The Magistrate must not weigh the evidence meticulously as at trial.

The Court applied that prima facie standard while requiring more than an allegation or suspicion. It examined the Section 174 statement and the Section 200/202 accounts and found no admission, assertion that the room had been locked from inside, or substantial statement connecting Ladiyai to the homicide. Shivjee Singh's rejection of a conviction-level threshold did not require process where the complainant's own material provided no sufficient basis.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 200 and 202 CrPC governed the complainant's and supporting witness's statements in the private complaint. Sections 203 and 204 respectively provide for dismissal for want of sufficient ground and issue of process on a prima facie basis. Section 209 appears in the quoted Supreme Court explanation of the same phrase. The Court read the police inquest statement under Section 174 for what it actually said, without treating it as a confession. Section 482 CrPC was the route for challenging the Magistrate's and revisional orders. Counsel invoked Section 106 of the Indian Evidence Act on the premise that the room had been locked from inside. The requested inference could not be drawn because the statement did not contain that premise.

4. Issues : (i) Did the complainant's preliminary material under Sections 200 and 202 CrPC, read with the inquest statement, provide prima facie "sufficient ground" to issue process for her husband's alleged killing, as distinct from proof sufficient for conviction? Counsel argued that the alleged confession and circumstantial inferences had been overlooked; the Court checked whether the statement supported them.

(ii) Could an inference under Section 106 of the Evidence Act be drawn from the claim that only two persons were in the outpost, locked from inside during the night, when the inquest statement did not assert an inside lock and the complainant's witnesses provided only suspicion?

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying Shivjee Singh, the Court required a prima facie case at the complaint stage, rather than proof beyond reasonable doubt or the weighing of a defence as at trial. The preliminary statements nevertheless had to disclose concrete grounds for proceeding. The statement relied on by counsel did not support his assertion that Ladiyai had confessed, and counsel acknowledged the absence of any admission. The claim that the room had been locked from inside likewise lacked support in the statement. The Court declined to infer guilt merely because, on Ladiyai's account, he had been asleep nearby while both men were affected by ganja and had later feared suspicion. His account of disposing of the objects remained part of the material considered.

Ahirwar's statement and the Section 202 witness's account expressed suspicion without substantial facts connecting the proposed accused to the killing. Non-expert opinion could not fill that gap. The Court found no sufficient ground even under the preliminary prima facie standard and affirmed the Section 203 dismissal and the revisional order.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. It affirmed the order dated 15 March 2022 of the JMFC, Deori, dismissing private complaint UNCR No. 15/2019 under Section 203 CrPC and the Additional Sessions Judge's order dated 23 January 2024 in Criminal Revision No. 06/2022.

Rohani Ahirwar v. Mukesh Ladiyai, M.Cr.C. no. 8052/2024, 10/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (806) Prev Next

Headnote :- Cheating / adulterated food presented as genuine / FSSA overlap - The Court refused to quash a Section 420 IPC FIR alleging that 43 kg of apparently adulterated mawa had been transported in 24 packets without lot numbers or packaging dates. The possibility that the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006 also applied to the product did not, by itself, warrant quashing. Applying Manish Gupta v. State of M.P. (M.Cr.C. No. 11462/2021, decided 01.04.2021), the Court treated a seller's representation of adulterated or substandard food as pure and safe to unsuspecting consumers as capable of constituting cheating. The quoted Manish Gupta order had invoked State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, for a limited proposition: where a distinct criminal wrong is alleged, a special regulatory regime does not automatically exclude general criminal law in the absence of a relevant bar. The Court held that Rohit Jain's case was covered by that reasoning, dismissed his Section 482 CrPC application and vacated interim protection.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Police received information that adulterated mawa was arriving at a bus stand. The prosecution alleged that Rohit Jain arrived by bus carrying 24 packets of New Radhika Brand Mix Cake Food, weighing 43 kg in total. According to the order, the packets bore neither lot numbers nor packaging dates, and the label displayed a picture of a sweet. In those circumstances, the officers considered that the mawa appeared adulterated. Samples were collected, and the remaining mawa was handed to police. Crime No. 19/2021 was registered at Police Station Kotwali, Chhatarpur, for the alleged offence under Section 420 IPC.

Jain sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC. He submitted that, even if the FIR were taken at face value, no offence under Section 420 was made out and any offence would fall only under the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006 (FSSA). The State opposed the application. The Court considered whether adulteration of an eatable could also constitute cheating and applied its earlier Manish Gupta order. That order concerned a different dairy and allegations that adulterated or substandard milk was offered as pure. Those dairy-specific facts were not proved facts in Jain's case.

2. Precedents — Considered : Manish Gupta v. State of M.P. (M.Cr.C. No. 11462/2021, order of 01.04.2021) was quoted extensively and expressly applied. In that order, the applicant operated a dairy and argued that the sampled material was not saleable milk. The Court there treated the undisclosed sale of adulterated or substandard food as pure and safe as capable of deceiving innocent purchasers under Section 420 IPC. In that separate matter, it also addressed a charge under Section 272 IPC, the absence of a pleaded prior punishment under the FSSA, and an objection under Section 26 of the General Clauses Act.

The quoted Manish Gupta passage itself invoked State of Madhya Pradesh v. Rameshwar and Others, 2009:INSC:456 : (2009) 11 SCC 424. Rameshwar rejected the argument that a special statutory remedy concerning co-operative societies categorically displaced the general criminal process where there was no applicable bar and a conspiracy to cheat was alleged. Jain's Court reproduced that authority within its quotation of the earlier court's reasoning; it did not separately analyse the authority against specific provisions of the FSSA. The analogy adopted was limited to the proposition that a special statute does not automatically exclude an independently supportable cheating allegation. Rameshwar did not determine whether this mawa was adulterated or whether all IPC provisions concerning food survive the FSSA.

3. Statutes considered : Section 420 IPC was the sole offence identified in Jain's FIR and the offence for which he sought quashing. The Court treated the presentation of adulterated food as genuine, thereby deceiving consumers, as potentially constituting cheating. The elements of the offence and the evidence remained matters for the ordinary criminal process. Section 482 CrPC was the provision invoked to seek quashing. Section 272 IPC, Sections 51 and 26(2)(ii) FSSA, and Section 26 of the General Clauses Act appear only in the reproduced Manish Gupta order concerning a different FIR. They were not additional charges or matters of relief adjudicated in Jain's case.

4. Issues : The issue was whether the Section 420 IPC FIR should be quashed at the threshold because it concerned suspected adulterated mawa and the FSSA provided a food-safety regime. The defence submitted that, even if accepted, the allegations disclosed no cheating and fell only under that Act. The Court considered whether adulteration of an eatable could also constitute an offence under Section 420 and applied the earlier ruling on deception through misrepresentation.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted the reasoning in Manish Gupta. That ruling identified a potentially distinct offence of cheating where adulterated or substandard food is offered to unsuspecting customers as pure and safe. The existence of food-regulatory penalties would not, by itself, defeat an otherwise supportable allegation under Section 420. The Rameshwar analogy within the quoted order provided a limited reason for rejecting automatic exclusivity of a special statute in the absence of an operative bar. The Court held that this reasoning covered Jain's Section 420 FIR and refused to quash it. The factual account in the present order was confined to alleged transportation, labelling defects and an appearance of adulteration that led to sampling.

The broad Section 272 and concurrent-prosecution statements inside the 2021 Manish Gupta quotation belong to that cited order.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC and vacated the interim order dated 2 November 2023. The Section 420 FIR remained in place. The Court did not convict Jain, make a laboratory determination or find the precise degree of adulteration. It added no charge under the FSSA or Section 272 IPC.

Rohit Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 14294/2021, 23/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (807) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation control / accused's choice of agency or method - Applying Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, the Court held that a suspect ordinarily has no right to choose the investigating agency, dictate investigative steps or insist on a hearing during investigation. The quoted authorities preserve exceptional constitutional intervention where a mala fide exercise of power is established and caution that transfer to the CBI is not a routine measure. The applicant asserted that an encroachment dispute had motivated Crime No. 52/2025 and requested a “fair and impartial” inquiry conducted in his preferred manner. Those grounds did not justify directing the investigation under Section 528 BNSS in this case.

Alibi / CCTV claimed by suspect / threshold inquiry - The Court considered Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, drawing on Binay Kumar Singh, and S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, (2010) 8 SCC 430, on alibi as a factual defence requiring proof. The prosecution must first prove the accused's presence and the offence. If it does so, the accused bears a heavy burden to establish, by positive evidence, that he was elsewhere, sufficiently excluding his presence at the scene. Failure to establish an alibi does not itself prove guilt. Koli claimed that his home CCTV showed that he had left before the alleged 10:30 p.m. incident and returned later. The Court left the truth and weight of the footage to be established by evidence and declined to quash the FIR on the asserted alibi.

Court monitoring / no judicial direction of investigative method - Relying on Manohar Lal Sharma, the Court distinguished exceptional monitoring of an investigation's progress and fairness from supervision that directs its method or report. Directing police how to investigate Koli's asserted alibi would cross that boundary and risk influencing the trial. The Court dismissed the Section 528 BNSS application to quash the FIR or direct a particular inquiry.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rohit Koli invoked the inherent power under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023 (BNSS) in relation to Crime No. 52/2025, registered on 15 February 2025 at Police Station Khaniyadhana, Shivpuri. On respondent No. 3's report, police had recorded offences under Sections 331(4), 115(2), 296 and 351(2) of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita, 2023 (BNS). The judgment sets out neither the full allegations in the FIR nor the eventual evidentiary record; the ingredients of the offences and guilt cannot be established from this order. Koli sought quashing of the FIR and consequential proceedings or, alternatively, a direction to police to conduct a fair and impartial inquiry or investigation.

Koli said that he had opposed influential villagers' alleged encroachment and had therefore been falsely implicated. He submitted that the incident was alleged to have occurred at 10:30 p.m., whereas he had left home at about 9 p.m. and returned late. He claimed that footage from a camera at his house showed his absence. The Court framed the question as whether a suspect had a right to interfere with an ongoing investigation.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar and others v. Union of India and others, 2018:INSC:912 : (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted at length. It rejects an accused's entitlement to choose an investigating agency or dictate the manner of investigation. Its quoted reasoning draws on Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt and E. Sivakumar. It also preserves the qualification in Divine Retreat Centre that directions under Article 226 may issue where mala fide investigation is demonstrated. Citing the Constitution Bench in State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, the quotation states that transfer to the CBI must be sparing and exceptional, rather than a routine response to allegations. It distinguishes opportunities to seek relief at remand or through bail, discharge and quashing from control over the current investigation. The underlying authorities formed part of Romila Thapar's explanation; they were not separately applied to new facts in this order.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, 2014:INSC:139 : (2014) 4 SCC 626, was also quoted. It reproduces passages from Union of India v. W.N. Chadha, CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, Sri Bhagwan Samardha and Narender G. Goel explaining why a proposed accused ordinarily need not receive notice or participate in decisions about the investigating agency or further investigation. Those passages preserve the opportunity to contest the evidence at trial. They discuss further investigation under Section 173(8) CrPC and the exceptional facts in Dinubhai that justified transferring a deficient local investigation to the CBI.

Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), 2015:INSC:194 : (2015) 4 SCC 749, quoted Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar on alibi as a relevant fact under Section 11 of the Evidence Act because it is inconsistent with presence, rather than an exception under the IPC. The prosecution initially bears the burden of proving presence and participation. Once reliable prosecution evidence establishes presence, an accused relying on alibi must produce strong positive proof that he was elsewhere. Nevertheless, sufficiently credible defence evidence may raise a reasonable doubt. S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra, 2010:INSC:546 : (2010) 8 SCC 430, likewise required affirmative and stringent proof of alibi, while maintaining that failure to establish it never substitutes for independent prosecution proof beyond reasonable doubt. The Court applied the need for factual proof of this defence to Koli's asserted CCTV alibi and left its evaluation to the proper evidentiary stage.

Manohar Lal Sharma was quoted on the distinction between court monitoring and supervision. In rare and compelling cases, monitoring checks progress, impartiality, timely investigation and freedom from external interference. Supervision, by contrast, would direct investigative steps and assist in formulating the police report, risking prejudice to the trial. The Court relied on that limit in declining to direct the manner of this investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was the provision under which the applicant invoked the Court's inherent power to seek quashing or directions concerning investigation. The Court did not regard that procedural stage as entitling a suspect to control the investigating agency or method.

Section 11 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 arose in Vijay Pal's quoted explanation of alibi as a relevant fact inconsistent with presence. The quotation places the initial burden of proving the offence and presence on the prosecution and addresses the defence's subsequent burden to prove an asserted alibi. It does not determine whether Koli's video satisfied the requirements for admission in evidence or authentication of its source.

4. Issues : (i) Could a suspect named in an FIR invoke Section 528 BNSS to have the High Court dictate the investigating agency or method, or order a preferred "fair and impartial" inquiry, on his allegation of false implication arising from a village dispute? The Court considered the requested control in light of Romila Thapar and Dinubhai, including their qualifications concerning exceptional public-law intervention.

(ii) Did Koli's asserted home CCTV and alleged absence around 10:30 p.m. establish an alibi warranting immediate quashing, or was it a disputed factual defence to be proved at the evidentiary stage? The Court considered Vijay Pal and S.K. Sattar, including the prosecution's continuing burden.

(iii) Would directing police to verify the alibi in a specified way amount to judicial supervision rather than permissible exceptional monitoring? The Court addressed this through the quoted Manohar Lal Sharma distinction.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court read Romila Thapar and Dinubhai as establishing that a suspect has no general entitlement to select the investigating agency, control its method or demand a hearing as of right during investigative decisions. The qualifications permitting intervention for a demonstrated mala fide exercise of investigative power and extraordinary constitutional transfer remain applicable. Mere demands or unsupported suspicions do not, by themselves, satisfy those exceptions. Koli's allegation concerning influential encroachers and his alternative request for a preferred inquiry did not justify the directions sought under Section 528.

The asserted CCTV alibi raised a disputed question of fact. The Supreme Court rules quoted in Vijay Pal and S.K. Sattar preserve the prosecution's initial obligation to prove presence and the offence. If that burden is discharged, the accused must adduce positive evidence that he was elsewhere; failure to establish that defence does not automatically prove guilt. The High Court left the claimed CCTV alibi to be proved by evidence, without deciding the footage's authenticity, timing or probative effect at the FIR-quashing stage.

Finally, the Court distinguished exceptional judicial monitoring to ensure a free, fair and timely investigation from supervision that directs evidence collection or the police report. It regarded a direction about the manner of investigating Koli's alibi as impermissible supervision that could prejudice the later trial. On these combined grounds, it declined to interfere, leaving ordinary lawful investigation and later evidentiary remedies available.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 528 BNSS. It refused to quash Crime No. 52/2025 and declined to direct police to investigate by Koli's chosen method.

Rohit Koli v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 11150/2025, 11/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (808) Prev Next

Headnote :- Kidnapping from lawful guardianship / minor's professed consent / active inducement - Applying Anversinh @ Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v. State of Gujarat (Criminal Appeal No. 1919/2010, decided 12.01.2021), the Court held at the charge stage that a minor's affection for an accused and claim that she accompanied him voluntarily do not, by themselves, defeat a case under Sections 361/363 IPC. Anversinh distinguished the narrow situation in S. Varadarajan: the minor must know and be capable of appreciating the full import of her actions, leave guardianship voluntarily, and receive no assistance or inducement from the accused. The school record gave her date of birth as 16.02.2002, making the complainant's daughter below 18 when she left on 27.06.2019. Her account of travelling and residing with the applicant, together with their marriage affidavit, provided prima facie material of active inducement. The affidavit did not disclose her age, and no marriage ceremony was proved.

Minor wife / sexual offence / marriage affidavit - Applying Independent Thought v. Union of India, (2017) 10 SCC 800, the Court held that, under Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC as read down, marriage does not exclude rape liability for sexual relations with a wife below 18. In her Section 161 CrPC account, the prosecutrix said that she and the applicant lived as spouses and had physical relations. Her Section 164 account stated that the applicant had not committed any “Bura Kaam”; the Court read this as a denial of force. It left the contrast for trial, rather than treating it as conclusively negating the prima facie case under Section 376 and the POCSO Act at the charge stage. It also held that an affidavit does not itself solemnise a marriage. The assessment was only prima facie; the factual accounts of voluntariness and intercourse, and proof of the offences, remained matters for evidence.

Charge and discharge / competing statements / no roving assessment - Following State of Tamil Nadu v. N. Suresh Rajan, (2014) 11 SCC 709, including its discussion of Sections 227, 239 and 245 CrPC and R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716, the Court applied the preliminary prima facie test. It declined to give the Section 164 statement categorical preference over the Section 161 account. The Sessions Judge's charges under Sections 363, 366-A and 376(2)(n) IPC with Section 5/6 POCSO were affirmed in revision. The trial court was expressly cautioned to decide on tested evidence without being influenced by these provisional observations.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Radhe Yadav reported his daughter missing on 27 June 2019, leading to Crime No. 179/2019 at Police Station Shahdhora, Ashoknagar. The prosecution recovered her from Ahmedabad on 8 July, recorded her statements under Sections 161 and 164 CrPC and collected a school record showing her date of birth as 16 February 2002. She was therefore below 18 on the alleged date of departure. The FSL report was said to have found human semen and sperm on her clothes. In her Section 161 statement, she described being in love with Rohit Panchal, going to Ahmedabad with him, marrying or purporting to marry, living as spouses and having physical relations. She also said that she had not been kidnapped or forcibly subjected to “Bura Kaam.” Her Section 164 statement said that the applicant had not committed any “Bura Kaam”; the Court read this as addressing the absence of force. These statements and the prosecution material were not final findings on the truth of the allegations. The prosecution produced an English translation of an affidavit jointly sworn at Ahmedabad on 31 May 2019. It declared that a marriage had taken place on 22 January 2019 and that there was no other documentary proof of the marriage. The affidavit described both signatories as adults but did not disclose the prosecutrix's actual age. The Court found no showing that the marriage had been solemnised according to Hindu rites. The date of birth in the school record showed that she was a minor both at the alleged January marriage and when she left in June.

On 14 November 2019, the First Additional District Judge, Ashoknagar framed charges in Special Sessions Trial No. 30/2019 under Sections 363, 366-A and 376(2)(n) IPC read with Section 5/6 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012 (POCSO). Rohit Panchal challenged the order in Criminal Revision No. 311/2021 under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. He submitted that her voluntary departure, their romance and the absence of forcible intercourse meant that the kidnapping and sexual offences were not made out.

2. Precedents — Considered : Anversinh @ Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v. State of Gujarat (Criminal Appeal No. 1919/2010, decided 12.01.2021) was quoted and applied. It treats a minor's supposed consent as immaterial to the protection of lawful guardianship under Section 361 IPC. Affection for an accused cannot, by itself, defeat a kidnapping charge. It discusses the additional intention or knowledge required under Section 366 concerning compelled marriage or illicit intercourse. It distinguishes S. Varadarajan, cited only by its short name, as confined to a minor who knows and can appreciate the full import of her actions, leaves her guardian voluntarily, and receives no assistance or inducement from the accused. The Supreme Court passage lists these conditions. The present Court treated the earlier purported marriage and joint affidavit as material showing active inducement, rather than a departure without the accused's assistance. This was an inference at the charge stage, not a final finding that every statutory ingredient had been proved.

Independent Thought v. Union of India and another, (2017) 10 SCC 800, was invoked for reading down Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC: a sexual relationship with a wife below 18 is not exempt merely because of marriage. The Court applied this rule when considering the minority shown by the school record, the affidavit of an unproved marriage and the Section 161 account of physical relations.

State of Tamil Nadu v. N. Suresh Rajan and others, (2014) 11 SCC 709, was quoted on the differences in statutory language and timing of discharge under Sections 227, 239 and 245 CrPC, and the common preliminary inquiry into whether a prima facie case exists. The quoted passage referred to Sajjan Kumar and Dilawar Balu Kurane as not supporting a roving assessment of evidence. It also cited R.S. Nayak v. A.R. Antulay, (1986) 2 SCC 716, for the preliminary prima facie test. Applying that restraint to the competing Section 161 and 164 accounts, the Court affirmed the charges and expressly left credibility for trial.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 361 and 363 IPC concern kidnapping from lawful guardianship and its punishment; the legal value of a minor's claimed consent and the accused's active inducement was central.

Sections 397 and 401 CrPC conferred revisional jurisdiction. The quotation from N. Suresh Rajan compared discharge under Sections 227, 239 and 245 CrPC, preserving their procedural differences while emphasising the prima facie inquiry. The Court's final direction expressly required the evidence to be tested at trial through cross-examination.

4. Issues : (i) In revision against a Sessions charge order, did a minor's account of leaving voluntarily with a man she loved, together with a purported marriage affidavit, negate a prima facie case of kidnapping or enticement where the school record showed minority and the material suggested the accused's participation? The defence emphasised voluntariness; the Court examined the conditions stated in Anversinh.

(ii) Did the asserted marriage and the Section 164 statement denying any “Bura Kaam” eliminate the prima facie sexual-offence charges, despite the Section 161 account of marital cohabitation and physical relations and Independent Thought's rule concerning a minor wife? The issue concerned preliminary charges, distinct from proof after trial.

(iii) Could the revisional court resolve the apparent tension between Sections 161 and 164 by preferring one account or undertaking a roving assessment at the charge stage, and what effect would affirmance have on the later trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : For the provisional assessment of the charges, the Court relied on the school record's date of birth, 16 February 2002, as establishing minority at the relevant stages. It applied Anversinh's rule that a minor's consent is immaterial under Section 361 and that S. Varadarajan's exception for an informed departure without assistance is subject to limiting conditions. The complainant's daughter had described an earlier purported marriage to the applicant, and the prosecution had a jointly sworn affidavit. On this material, the Court inferred at this stage that she had been induced to leave under the impression that she was his wife. It observed that an affidavit alone does not solemnise a marriage and that performance of the required rites had not been alleged.

Under Independent Thought and Exception 2 to Section 375 as read down, even a valid marriage would not, by itself, immunise intercourse with a wife below 18. The Section 161 account described physical relations; the Section 164 account stated that the applicant had not committed any “Bura Kaam”. Reading the latter in context, the Court understood it as addressing the absence of force, rather than necessarily denying all relations. It nevertheless declined to give that account definitive preference over the Section 161 statement. The FSL material was reported, without being conclusively weighed. The sexual-offence charges remained a prima facie matter, with every element and the actual evidence left for trial.

Applying N. Suresh Rajan, the Court held that scrutiny at the charge or discharge stage concerns the existence of a prima facie case and does not permit a roving assessment as at trial. It found sufficient material to sustain the trial judge's order and dismissed the revision. It stressed that the trial court must decide strictly on evidence tested by cross-examination, without being influenced by the High Court's limited observations. The judgment thus distinguishes a provisional threshold inference from a trial determination of guilt, the factual account of voluntariness, the weight of the age evidence or the validity of the marriage.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the order dated 14 November 2019 framing charges in Special Sessions Trial No. 30/2019 and dismissed the criminal revision. It cautioned the trial court to decide according to law on the evidence tested through cross-examination, without being influenced or prejudiced by the High Court's comments at the charge stage. Dismissal of the revision did not amount to a conviction or final factual determination.

Rohit Panchal v. State of M.P. and Ors., Cr.R. no. 311/2021, 19/03/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (809) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers — FIR quashing — specific assistance in kidnapping and confinement - In Crime No. 597/2021, the applicant asserted that the prosecutrix was an adult who had voluntarily married a co-accused. The High Court relied on her earlier statement in habeas corpus proceedings that the marriage had been forced and on the continuing restraint against the institution said to have solemnised it. The allegations specifically attributed assistance to this applicant: driving the motorcycle, providing a room, locking her inside and supplying food while the co-accused allegedly committed rape. On that prima facie material, the Court refused to quash the FIR under Section 482 CrPC.

POCSO age determination — statutory document hierarchy — contested supplementary affidavit - The Court reproduced the co-accused's earlier bail order and expressly reaffirmed its rejection of his contention that the prosecutrix was an adult. In that order, Joginder Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 11 SCC 335, was invoked for age assessment under the Juvenile Justice Act. The quoted Section 94 gives first priority to a school date-of-birth certificate or a matriculation or equivalent certificate from the examination Board. In their absence, a birth certificate from a corporation, municipal authority or panchayat is to be obtained. Only if both categories are absent may age be determined by a medical test ordered by the Committee or Board. The school register and a medical report were already available. The alleged corrected school record, Samagra ID and unattested caste-certificate application did not establish majority at that stage.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rohit Rajput sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 597/2021 at Police Station Thatipur, Gwalior. The order described the case as involving Sections 366-A, 343, 376(2)(n), 376(3), 506 and 34 IPC and POCSO provisions. The applicant claimed that a school principal's later affidavit corrected the school record and established that the prosecutrix was an adult. He also claimed that the POCSO offences had been deleted and that she had voluntarily married co-accused Yogesh Gahlot. He argued that prosecution would damage his career. The State opposed the application. His anticipatory-bail request in MCRC No. 18/2022 had been rejected on 11 January 2022, and he had not surrendered. Earlier, the co-accused had filed habeas corpus W.P. No. 16082/2021, claiming that he had married the prosecutrix. She appeared before the High Court on 20 September 2021, denied being unlawfully confined by her father and said that the writ petitioner had forcibly married her. A complaint dated 6 September had been made to the Superintendent of Police and dispatched to Thatipur police on 8 September. On 22 September, however, a sub-inspector told the habeas court that the complaint had not arrived. The Superintendent's affidavit contradicted the officer's statement, and an FIR was registered on 23 September. The habeas court ordered separate show-cause contempt proceedings against the officer, and the writ petitioner did not press his petition. These were orders in the earlier writ, not fresh directions or a determination of contempt in this MCRC. The present judgment reproduced the co-accused's bail order dated 17 November 2021, which rejected a request for fresh ossification and the age materials relied on, discussed the asserted Arya Samaj marriage and refused bail. The present Court noted that the applicant's own bail refusal and the co-accused's age challenge had already addressed much of the quashing argument. It recorded the prosecution's allegations that the applicant helped transport the prosecutrix, provided a room, locked her inside and supplied food during her alleged confinement and repeated rape by Yogesh.

2. Precedents — Considered : The present Court reproduced the co-accused's prior bail order and relied on its earlier rejection of the majority contention. That order quoted Joginder Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 11 SCC 335, on using the Juvenile Justice age-determination process for a victim, and set out Section 94 of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015. It also invoked Independent Thought v. Union of India, (2017) 10 SCC 800, on Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC as read down in relation to intercourse with a wife under eighteen. The earlier bail order applied Shalu Sharma v. State of M.P., W.P. No. 762/2020 (9 December 2020), concerning the restraint on Mool Shankar Arya Samaj Vaidik Sanstha's marriage ceremonies. In the present order, the Court noted that W.A. No. 95/2021 had been dismissed on 17 December 2021.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the request to quash the FIR. The earlier bail order reproduced Section 94 of the Juvenile Justice Act, 2015. It gives first priority to a school date-of-birth certificate or a matriculation or equivalent certificate from the examination Board. In their absence, a birth certificate from a corporation, municipal authority or panchayat is to be obtained. Only in the absence of both categories may age be determined by a medical test ordered by the Committee or Board. Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC, as read down in Independent Thought, arose only within the earlier bail quotation.

4. Issues : (i) Did the specific allegations that the applicant helped take the prosecutrix to a room, confined her and supported the co-accused make quashing the kidnapping and sexual-offence FIR inappropriate, despite his claims of a consensual marriage and majority? (ii) What effect did the contested school-principal affidavit, age documents and earlier co-accused bail determination have at the present quashing stage, given the applicant's separate claim that the POCSO provisions had been deleted? (iii) How did nondisclosure of his earlier anticipatory-bail refusal affect the Court's view of the petition? The show-cause proceeding against the police officer arose in the earlier writ and was not before the Court for disposal in this application.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court did not accept the applicant's bare assertion of a voluntary marriage. It relied on the prosecutrix's statement in the habeas corpus proceeding that the co-accused had forced the marriage, and on the continuing restraint against the institution said to have performed it. It also noted the dismissal of the institution's writ appeal. The age argument had been considered in the co-accused's anticipatory-bail order. Under the approach based on Joginder Singh and Section 94 reproduced there, the school register and existing medical report provided no basis for requiring a fresh ossification test; the informal or unattested alternative records did not establish majority. The prosecution attributed specific assistance to Rohit: transporting the prosecutrix by motorcycle, providing a room, locking her inside and supplying food during her alleged confinement and rape by Yogesh. The Court relied on these specific allegations of assistance in finding no ground to quash the FIR. It further found that the applicant had filed the quashing petition on 20 January 2022 without disclosing the rejection of his own anticipatory-bail application on 11 January. It treated that omission as an attempt to mislead the Court and observed that counsel should assist the Court with clean hands.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application and refused to quash the FIR in Crime No. 597/2021.

Rohit Rajput v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 4509/2022, 09/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (810) Prev Next

Headnote :- Food Safety and Standards Act / Section 42 prosecution route / IPC FIR - In this decision dated 29 April 2022, the Court construed Section 42 FSSA as prescribing a route through the Food Safety Officer, Designated Officer and Commissioner for offences punishable with imprisonment under the FSSA itself, including Sections 59–64. It did not treat that route as a general condition precedent to an IPC police case. The applicant identified no FSSA provision, among those considered by the Court, that barred the IPC case. Applying State of M.P. v. Rameshwar, (2009) 11 SCC 424, by analogy, the Court declined to hold that the special Act automatically excluded general criminal law.

Food-safety penalty / parallel prosecution / double jeopardy objection - The Court distinguished an adjudicatory penalty for substandard food under Sections 49, 51 and 68 FSSA from a fine or imprisonment for a criminal offence. It quoted R.S. Joshi v. Ajit Mills Ltd., AIR 1977 SC 2279, on forfeiture as a penalty, including statutory liability without mens rea. It also cited Som Distilleries on a regulatory penalty for breach without actual loss or a guilty mind. On that basis, the existence of the pending adjudicatory complaint alongside the IPC prosecution did not, by itself, establish the asserted bar of double jeopardy.

Substandard dairy product / proposed cheating charge / trial court's framing power - Eight of the ten dairy samples were reported to be substandard, rather than unsafe. The applicant pointed to no disclosure to customers that the products were below standard. The Court considered sale without that disclosure prima facie capable of cheating unsuspecting customers. The police charge sheet cited Sections 269, 272 and 273 IPC and omitted Section 420. Nevertheless, the trial court could consider the offence supported by the material when initially framing charges and could alter a charge under Section 216 CrPC. In this Section 482 proceeding, the High Court neither framed a Section 420 charge nor determined guilt. It dismissed the request to quash the FIR and charge sheet.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Rohit Sahu operated Subham Dudh Dairy Milk Product in Guna. On 9 January 2020, a Food Safety Officer inspected the dairy and found milk stored for sale in allegedly unhygienic conditions. Ten samples were taken under the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006 (FSSA) and sent to the State Food Laboratory. They included milk from six containers, packaged milk, skimmed milk powder and desi ghee. The report dated 15 January 2021 found that two samples passed and eight were substandard. Under the FSSA reporting process, the Designated Officer transmitted the analyst's report for service and offered reanalysis under Section 46(4). Police registered Crime No. 184/2021 at Police Station Guna under Sections 269, 272 and 273 IPC and filed a charge sheet on 16 March 2021. Charges had not yet been framed. A complaint was later filed before the FSSA Adjudicating Officer on 15 July 2021. In his Section 482 CrPC petition, Sahu sought quashing of the FIR and charge sheet. He argued that substandard food under Section 3(zx) FSSA falls below specification without being unsafe and attracts, at most, a monetary penalty under Section 51 through adjudication under Section 68, rather than IPC prosecution. He put the penalty ceiling at ₹5 lakh. He also submitted that there was no injury or consumer complaint, that parallel adjudication and criminal proceedings amounted to double jeopardy, and that the charge sheet did not include Section 420 IPC. The State opposed quashing. These were submissions.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Madhya Pradesh v. Rameshwar and Others, (2009) 11 SCC 424, was quoted for rejecting the argument that a special co-operative-societies regime barred general criminal proceedings merely because it was a complete code. There was no statutory bar, particularly where charges under the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 were involved.

R.S. Joshi etc. v. Ajit Mills Ltd. and another, AIR 1977 SC 2279, was quoted at length on statutory forfeiture and penalty. The quoted discussion rejects the argument that forfeiture equal to unlawful collections is merely a transfer of funds rather than a penalty. It recognises the legislature's power to impose penalties for enforcement and explains that economic or regulatory liability may be absolute, without mens rea. The present Court used that reasoning to characterise FSSA adjudicatory penalties as enforcement measures, while distinguishing the Act's provisions for fines and imprisonment. The quotation itself describes forfeiture as a kind of penalty or punishment. The High Court's operative distinction concerned this FSSA adjudication and the criminal offence and fine process in the case before it; it did not treat every statutory penalty as universally non-punitive for every purpose.

M/s Som Distilleries Pvt. Ltd. v. Excise Commissioner and Ors. (W.P. No. 60/2016, order of 30.11.2018), affirmed in W.A. No. 362/2019 on 28.03.2019, was used as an example of a penalty for breach of a public-interest regulatory rule without need to prove mens rea or actual loss.

3. Statutes considered : Section 42 FSSA provides for sampling, the analyst's report, scrutiny by the Designated Officer and a recommendation to the Commissioner for FSSA contraventions punishable with imprisonment. It also provides for sanction or referral to the appropriate court and communication to the Food Safety Officer, who launches that prosecution. The Court construed this route as applying to prosecution under FSSA Sections 59–64, rather than automatically to independently punishable IPC offences. Section 3(zx) defines substandard food as food that fails to meet a specified standard without being rendered unsafe. Section 46(4) concerned the offered reanalysis. The Court discussed Section 51's penalty for substandard food, Section 68's adjudicatory process and opportunity to make representations, and Section 49's criteria for fixing the penalty. Those criteria include gain or unfair advantage wherever quantifiable, loss caused or likely to be caused to any person, repetition, whether the contravention was without the person's knowledge, and other relevant circumstances. It contrasted penalties under Sections 50–58 with fines and imprisonment under Sections 59–64.

The police charge sheet cited Sections 269, 272 and 273 IPC. The Court considered whether the omission of Section 420 IPC prevented the trial court from framing a cheating charge if the alleged undisclosed sale of substandard products supported one. Section 216 CrPC permits alteration of a charge. Section 482 CrPC was the basis of the High Court's quashing jurisdiction.

4. Issues : (i) Did the Section 42 FSSA route for sanction and prosecution of offences punishable with imprisonment under that Act, together with adjudication under Sections 51/68 for substandard food, bar an IPC police FIR and charge sheet on the dairy sample allegations? The applicant submitted that only the special Act's penalty procedure was available; the State opposed that submission.

(ii) Did the subsequent FSSA adjudicatory complaint make the pending criminal proceedings impermissible double jeopardy, given the Court's distinction between regulatory penalty and criminal fine/imprisonment? No previous completed punishment was identified.

(iii) Could the trial court consider Section 420 IPC at initial charge framing where police had not included it, in light of the reported substandard samples and absence of disclosed quality limitations to customers?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court construed Section 42 FSSA as governing the statutory procedure for FSSA contraventions punishable with imprisonment, including the roles of the Designated Officer and Commissioner. It confined that procedural requirement to the cited FSSA offences under Sections 59–64. Sahu identified no FSSA provision that the Court regarded as a general bar to applying the IPC. Rameshwar supported the limited proposition that a special scheme does not automatically displace general criminal law without an applicable bar. The Court therefore declined to quash the police case merely because samples had been taken under the FSSA or because a penalty complaint under Sections 51/68 also existed.

The Court then examined the distinct character it attributed to FSSA adjudication. Section 68 provides for an inquiry and monetary penalty after an opportunity to make representations. Section 49 requires consideration of gain or unfair advantage wherever quantifiable, loss caused or likely to be caused to any person, repetition, whether the contravention was without the person's knowledge, and other relevant factors. The Act uses the term penalty in Sections 50–58 and provides for fines and imprisonment in Sections 59–64. Drawing on R.S. Joshi and Som Distilleries, the Court described a regulatory penalty as a means of enforcing compliance, potentially without mens rea or actual loss, and distinguished it from a criminal fine or imprisonment for an offence. The later adjudicatory complaint did not, by itself, make the concurrent criminal proceedings double jeopardy. This rejected the asserted bar while the proceedings were pending; it did not decide a question of successive final punishments.

Finally, the Court considered the eight samples reported to be substandard and Sahu's failure to identify any material showing that the packaged or loose milk products were marked, or otherwise disclosed to consumers, as substandard. It reasoned that a purchaser ordinarily expects food meeting FSSA standards and treated the undisclosed sale of products below those standards as prima facie capable of cheating. The police had omitted Section 420 from the charge sheet, and the trial court had not yet framed charges. The Court observed that, when framing charges, the trial court could frame a supported charge even if the police had not included that offence in the charge sheet. A charge could also be altered under Section 216 CrPC.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC and refused to interfere with Crime No. 184/2021 or the existing charge sheet. The trial court remained responsible for framing charges on the material and law applicable at that stage.

Rohit Sahu v. State of M.P. and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 10982/2021, 29/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (811) Prev Next

Headnote :- Food Safety and Standards Act / Sections 272 and 273 IPC / Section 89 override - The Court dismissed this Section 482 CrPC application by expressly applying the same-day Neelkamal Sharma order and adopting its distinction between food-adulteration charges and cheating. Ram Nath v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2024:INSC:138 : (2024) 3 SCC 502, was understood to give Section 89 FSSA priority over inconsistent Sections 272 and 273 IPC where the same food-adulteration conduct attracts the more stringent Section 59 FSSA. Sushil Kumar Gupta v. State of West Bengal (Criminal Appeal No. 1798/2024, decided 22.03.2024) was treated as barring simultaneous prosecution under those provisions. The adopted order distinguished Manik Hiru Jhangiani v. State of M.P. (Criminal Appeal No. 3864/2023, decided 14.12.2023), which concerned the former Prevention of Food Adulteration Act. It also found the applicants' reliance on Rajkumar Tinkar distinguishable. Section 89 was not treated as conferring blanket immunity from all IPC offences. Roop Singh's FIR under Sections 420, 272 and 273 IPC was not quashed; this judgment did not recite its individual factual allegations.

Adulterated food represented as pure / distinct cheating allegation - The incorporated Neelkamal reasoning held that selling adulterated milk as pure to unsuspecting purchasers can prima facie constitute cheating under Section 420 IPC, even if the FSSA displaces prosecution under Sections 272 and 273 IPC. It followed Rohit Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh (M.Cr.C. No. 14294/2021, decided 23.02.2024), which in turn discussed Manish Gupta v. State of M.P. (M.Cr.C. No. 11462/2021, decided 01.04.2021). It also relied on State of Madhya Pradesh v. Rameshwar, 2009:INSC:456 : (2009) 11 SCC 424, for the narrower proposition that, absent a bar, a special statute does not exclude general criminal law where independent criminal conduct is alleged. The adopted order left consideration of any FSSA charge to the trial court. Roop Singh's application was dismissed on those terms.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Roop Singh Kushwah and others applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 156/2021 at Police Station Pahadgarh, District Morena, registered under Sections 420, 272 and 273 IPC. Their counsel expressly conceded that the case was governed by the same-day order in Neelkamal Sharma and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. No. 46662/2022. The High Court reproduced the substance of that order and dismissed Roop Singh's application on its terms. The detailed dairy search, milk sample and powder concerned the companion Neelkamal matter; they were not findings of fact about the Roop Singh applicants.

In the incorporated Neelkamal order, police and a Food Safety Officer inspected a dairy on 19 April 2022. The quoted account describes the seizure of powder, semi-prepared milk, ghee and other articles, including a tanker said to contain adulterated milk. A Food Analyst reportedly identified a milk solution as an adulterant under Section 3(1)(a) FSSA and the powder as maltodextrin capable of use as an adulterant. The police in that case registered offences under Sections 420, 272, 273 and 34 IPC. The applicants contended that the FSSA displaced IPC prosecution, while the State defended the FIR. These were the facts and competing positions in the cited companion matter, not independently established facts of Crime No. 156/2021.

2. Precedents — Considered : Neelkamal Sharma and Others v. State of M.P. and Others (M.Cr.C. No. 46662/2022, order of 08.04.2025) is the immediate authority expressly adopted. It distinguishes food-adulteration offences from an independent allegation that a seller deceives purchasers by presenting adulterated food as pure. The present Court held that Roop Singh's case was covered and dismissed the application on the same terms, without restating that FIR's facts. The incorporated order addressed Ram Nath v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Others, 2024:INSC:138 : (2024) 3 SCC 502, as a Supreme Court decision specifically concerning Sections 272 and 273 IPC. It quoted Ram Nath's express limitation to those offences and its observation that Section 59 FSSA is more stringent where the same conduct attracts both. Section 89 FSSA therefore prevails to the extent of inconsistency concerning those food offences. Sushil Kumar Gupta v. State of West Bengal (Criminal Appeal No. 1798/2024, decided 22.03.2024) was likewise read as concerning Sections 272 and 273 and prohibiting simultaneous prosecution under both regimes for that subject matter. The High Court distinguished the applicants' attempt to extend those holdings to a separate Section 420 allegation, while preserving their force for Sections 272 and 273. The applicants also relied on the co-ordinate-bench decision in Rajkumar Tinkar v. State of M.P. (M.Cr.C. No. 2159/2012, decided 03.04.2024), which the incorporated order distinguished.

Manik Hiru Jhangiani v. State of M.P. (Criminal Appeal No. 3864/2023, decided 14.12.2023), cited by the State, was distinguished. It concerned prosecution under Sections 7/16 of the former Prevention of Food Adulteration Act after the FSSA had come into force; it did not decide whether an independent cheating allegation survived the Section 89 override. The adopted order relied on Rohit Jain v. State of M.P. (M.Cr.C. No. 14294/2021, decided 23.02.2024), which in turn quoted Manish Gupta v. State of M.P. (M.Cr.C. No. 11462/2021, decided 01.04.2021), on the prima facie possibility of cheating where adulterated or substandard food is presented as pure. The older Manish Gupta quotation also spoke broadly of Section 272 IPC. The adopted order qualified that aspect in light of Ram Nath: registration under Sections 272 and 273 might be incorrect, while Section 420 was retained. State of Madhya Pradesh v. Rameshwar and Others, 2009:INSC:456 : (2009) 11 SCC 424, was quoted both within the Manish Gupta extract and again by the incorporated court. It rejected a categorical claim that the M.P. Co-operative Societies Act, 1960 excluded the general criminal process where there was no statutory bar and a conspiracy to cheat the bank was alleged.

3. Statutes considered : Section 89 of the Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006 overrides other laws to the extent of inconsistency. In the incorporated analysis, Sections 272 and 273 IPC concern adulteration of food or drink intended for sale and the sale or exposure for sale of noxious or unfit food. Section 59 FSSA provides the corresponding, more stringent food-safety offence. Section 3(1)(a) FSSA appeared in the Food Analyst's description in Neelkamal. Section 420 IPC concerns cheating by deception and was treated as a distinct allegation where adulterated food is offered as pure. Section 34 IPC formed part of the Neelkamal FIR only; it was not among the listed Roop Singh offences. Section 482 CrPC was the basis of the quashing jurisdiction.

4. Issues : (i) Did Section 89 FSSA and the Supreme Court rulings on overlapping food-adulteration offences require quashing the entire FIR, including the separate Section 420 IPC allegation? In the companion reasoning, the applicants invoked the priority of the special law, while the State maintained that cheating could still be investigated.

(ii) Could the Section 420 allegation survive at the threshold where the incorporated companion case described adulterated milk being presented as pure, and what question about possible FSSA charges was reserved for the trial court?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court adopted Neelkamal's analysis and result. In that order, Section 89 FSSA was read with Ram Nath and Sushil Kumar Gupta as giving the FSSA priority where Sections 272 and 273 IPC concern the same food-adulteration conduct. The incorporated order acknowledged that registration under those two IPC provisions might be incorrect. It confined the Supreme Court holdings to the offences they considered and did not treat either Ram Nath or Sushil Kumar Gupta as foreclosing a separate allegation of cheating under Section 420 IPC. Manik Hiru Jhangiani concerned prosecution under a different historical statute and was distinguished.

The incorporated court treated the alleged false representation that adulterated milk was pure as capable of deceiving purchasers and prima facie supporting an offence under Section 420. The Food Analyst's result and the powder were recited as contextual material in that companion case. Following Rohit Jain and Manish Gupta on cheating, and applying Rameshwar's principle against automatic exclusion of general criminal law, it held that Section 89's inconsistency rule did not completely bar IPC cheating. This proposition depends on facts supporting deception and the ingredients of the offence. It is neither a final finding of cheating nor authority for duplicate prosecution under Sections 272 and 273 IPC.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Roop Singh Kushwah and the other applicants' Section 482 CrPC application to quash Crime No. 156/2021 on the terms and conditions of the same-day Neelkamal Sharma order. In that order, the FIR was not quashed because the Section 420 cheating allegation remained. The trial court in that case could consider framing a charge under the FSSA if the statutory offence was disclosed.

Roop Singh Kushwah and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 4492/2022, 08/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (812) Prev Next

Headnote :- Framing of charge / agency-based breach of trust / prima facie standard - The Court applied the Supreme Court's charge-stage authorities: Ajay Kumar Parmar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2013 SC 633; Soma Chakravarty v. State (Th. CBI), 2007 AIR SCW 3683; P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, 2010 Cri LJ 1427; State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, AIR 1977 SC 2018; Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, AIR 1979 SC 366; Niranjan Singh v. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya, AIR 1990 SC

1869; and Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460. At the initial stage, the court may sift the prosecution record only to identify the offence ingredients and sufficiently strong or grave suspicion. It does not determine guilt, conduct a roving evidentiary inquiry or resolve disputed authenticity as at trial. The complainant's FIR and Section 161 CrPC statement specifically alleged that Arun Yadav had been appointed an agent to sell vehicles and account for the receipts. On those allegations and consideration of the charge sheet as a whole, the Magistrate's prima facie view that Section 409 IPC was attracted could stand.

Criminal revision / premature weighing of charge-sheet material - Applying the restraints on charge-stage review and Amit Kapoor's principles on sparing interference under Sections 397 and 482 CrPC, the Court held that the revisional court had exceeded its jurisdiction. It had scrutinised the genuineness of stock documents and required a handwriting-expert determination before allowing the Section 409 IPC case to proceed. The disputed signature could be tested at trial; it did not justify a detailed inquiry into the truth of the prosecution allegation at this preliminary stage. The order directing a Section 406 IPC trial in place of the Magistrate's Section 409 course was quashed, and committal to the Sessions Court was restored.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Royal Automobiles Private Ltd. complained that it was an authorised Mahindra vehicle dealer in the Gwalior division and had appointed Ashok Rawat and Arun Yadav as agents to sell vehicles through its Karera outlet. The FIR alleged that they sold three vehicles for cash, represented the transactions as financed by Mahindra Finance, and failed to credit the dealer's sale proceeds within the agreed seven to ten days. According to the complaint, an inquiry with the finance company revealed that it had not financed those sales. Partial deposits of ₹13,510 and ₹50,000 were made on 11 July and 29 October 2013, respectively. An affidavit promising payment of the alleged balance of ₹8,95,202 within three months was not honoured. These matters remained allegations at this procedural stage. Police registered Crime No. 432/2014 under Section 406 read with Section 34 IPC.

The Assistant Public Prosecutor applied for the material to be treated as also disclosing the aggravated offence under Section 409 IPC and for committal to the Sessions Court. The JMFC, Karera allowed the application on 29 October 2018. Arun Yadav challenged that order in Criminal Revision No. 163/2018 before the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Karera. On 31 January 2019, the revisional court allowed the revision, concluding after examining the documentary evidence that Section 409 was not made out and directing a trial under Section 406. The dealer invoked Section 482 CrPC to challenge the revisional order.

The dealer submitted that revision could correct legal flaws but could not be used to reassess the evidentiary record. It relied on the express allegation of agency in the FIR. Arun Yadav submitted that no document appointing him as an agent had been filed and that the JMFC should have referred the disputed signatures on a stock-acceptance document to a handwriting expert. The question for the Court was the permissible scope of preliminary assessment, rather than the genuineness of the signatures or ultimate proof of entrustment and appropriation.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ajay Kumar Parmar v. State of Rajasthan, AIR 2013 SC 633, was quoted on the distinction between judicial screening by a Magistrate under Section 190 CrPC and impermissible weighing of acceptable evidence at that stage. The screening concerns the complaint, case diary and witness statements under Sections 161 and 164 CrPC. Soma Chakravarty v. State (Th. CBI), 2007 AIR SCW 3683, supplied the provisional charge test: material suggesting that the accused might have committed the offence can justify a charge, whereas conviction requires proof beyond reasonable doubt. Prosecution material is taken as true for this limited inquiry. The present Court used these rules to reject a premature decision on credibility and authenticity. P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala, 2010 Cri LJ 1427, and State of Bihar v. Ramesh Singh, AIR 1977 SC 2018, were quoted on the distinction between mere suspicion and grave or strong suspicion at the charge stage. A judge may sift material and discharge the accused if the grounds are insufficient. Strong suspicion arising from the prosecution case may, however, justify proceeding even though it is not proof at trial. Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal, AIR 1979 SC 366, added that the judge may weigh the record to the limited extent necessary to identify a prima facie case, considering broad probabilities and basic infirmities without a roving inquiry as at trial.

The order names the 1990 authority as "Niranjan Singh vs. K.S. Punjabi vs. Jitendra Bhimraj Bijjaya"

(AIR 1990 SC 1869). The quoted passage permits the judge, at the charge stage, to sift the record to determine whether facts taken at face value constitute the offence, without marshalling the evidence as at the end of trial. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander & Anr., (2012) 9 SCC 460, was quoted at length. It distinguishes the tentative opinion on charge under Section 228 from the definite opinion on discharge under Section 227, and strong suspicion at the initial stage from final guilt. Its principles governing restrained interference under Sections 397 and 482 require examination of the uncontroverted allegations and prosecution documents for the basic offence ingredients. They caution against meticulous assessment of proof, a full inquiry or reliance on extraneous defence material, while permitting intervention where an express bar, patent legal defect or abuse of process warrants it. A civil claim does not, by itself, displace allegations that also constitute a crime. The present Court applied these combined Supreme Court principles to the revisional order's treatment of the agency allegation and disputed stock signature.

3. Statutes considered : Section 406 IPC was the provision under which police registered the ordinary criminal breach-of-trust case and the revisional court directed trial.

Sections 397 and 482 CrPC concerned, respectively, the revisional order under challenge and the petition before the High Court. Exercising Section 482, the Court corrected what it regarded as an impermissible preliminary inquiry by the revisional court into the truth of prosecution documents. It directed committal for trial before the Sessions Court, leaving proof at trial unresolved.

4. Issues : (i) Did the FIR, Section 161 statement and charge sheet permit a prima facie view at the preliminary stage that the alleged vehicle-sales agent's handling of cash proceeds attracted Section 409 IPC, without first obtaining documentary proof of appointment or a handwriting-expert finding on the disputed stock record? The accused challenged the agency basis; the dealer relied on its express allegation and the limited scope of charge-stage review.

(ii) Did the revisional court, when reversing the Magistrate's committal course in favour of a Section 406 trial, exceed its proper role by evaluating the genuineness of charge-sheet material and demanding expert verification rather than assessing the prosecution material as a whole at face value? The petition also raised the scope of the High Court's corrective power under Section 482.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court drew together the Supreme Court authorities' common charge-stage rule and its qualifications. A judicial officer must identify the offence ingredients and determine whether the record provides sufficient ground to proceed, sifting the material only for that purpose. Strong or grave suspicion may justify proceeding; mere suspicion or an inherently insufficient prosecution case may justify discharge. Neither a charge nor committal determines guilt. At this stage, the court must not undertake the detailed balancing of credibility, disputed document authenticity and probabilities reserved for trial. The quoted Amit Kapoor principles also caution against pre-trial quashing once a factual foundation for an offence has been alleged. They nevertheless preserve intervention where basic ingredients are absent, an express bar applies or abuse of process is established. The FIR and the complainant's Section 161 CrPC statement specifically alleged that Arun Yadav had been appointed an agent to sell the vehicles. The prosecution alleged cash sales, false descriptions of financing and failure to remit the receipts. The agency allegation supported the Magistrate's provisional assessment under Section 409. The revisional court instead evaluated the correctness and genuineness of the documents and reasoned that the stock-acceptance signature should first be referred to a handwriting expert. The High Court found that requirement unwarranted at this stage: it made the alleged agency depend on resolving a disputed document as at trial, despite the FIR and statement. The revisional court should have considered the charge sheet as a whole without a roving inquiry into the truth of the allegations. This was a prima facie procedural holding. The merits of the agent's defence, the question of expert examination at trial and ultimate culpability remained open.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court quashed the Second Additional Sessions Judge's order dated 31 January 2019 in Criminal Revision No. 163/2018. It upheld the JMFC, Karera's order, identified in the concluding paragraph as dated 29 October 2018, and directed committal to the Sessions Court for trial. The Section 482 CrPC petition was disposed of.

Royal Automobiles Private Ltd. v. Arun Yadav and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 39637/2019, 03/12/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (813) Prev Next

Headnote :- Seized property / loss in court-controlled custody / compensation - In Smt. Basava Kom Dyamogouda Patil v. State of Mysore, AIR 1977 SC 1749, the Supreme Court held that seized property may be in custodia legis even while physically held by another custodian under the court's direction. If it is lost or stolen, no prima facie showing of due care is made and its value is ascertainable, payment of that value may be ordered in an appropriate case. Applying this reasoning, the Court directed the State to pay ₹80 lakh for gold and silver ornaments seized in a criminal case, kept in the treasury and found missing before their ordered interim release. This was the value attributed to the seized ornaments by the respondents themselves. The ruling concerned the identified seized property, rather than the entire value of everything originally alleged to have been stolen. An earlier interim custody order had contemplated a three-fourths and one-fourth distribution subject to civil succession proceedings. The Court nevertheless directed release of the ₹80 lakh compensation according to the parties' shares only upon their obtaining succession certificates. The State's duty to pay and the identity of the ultimate recipients were separate questions.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The petitioners sought ₹80 lakh compensation under Article 226 of the Constitution for gold and silver ornaments seized in criminal cases and later found missing from the treasury where they had been kept under court control. The cases arose from a violent incident at a house. The judgment recounts the prosecution's allegation that intruders murdered Basanti Devi, injured Rameshchand and removed valuables. The writ concerned the seizure, official custody, subsequent non-production and assessed loss of the ornaments. The original cases included offences under Sections 302, 396, 307 and 460 IPC.

After trial, the petitioners applied for release under Sections 451 and 457 CrPC. An order dated 19 November 2013 provided for joint interim custody of the ornaments on a ₹30 lakh personal bond. In M.Cr.C. No. 10372/2013, the order dated 18 March 2016 modified that arrangement because Satish Goyal would not execute a joint bond. After valuation, three-fourths of the ornaments were to be given to the petitioners in interim custody on appropriate bonds. Satish Goyal could establish his share before the competent succession court and seek corresponding interim custody. The earlier order expressly permitted the trial court to recall and reallocate the ornaments if a later succession determination required it. These were temporary custody arrangements, not a final declaration of ownership.

On 28 March 2016, the trial court required the treasury to produce the ornaments for valuation and delivery, but they were not produced. It sought assistance from the District and Sessions Judge on 4 July 2016. By 6 July, a departmental inquiry concerning the former Malkhana Nazir had been instituted because the ornaments could not be traced. Following the inquiry, Crime No. 290/2017 was registered at Police Station Padav under Section 409 IPC concerning the missing property, valued at ₹80 lakh. The Court recorded that the ornaments had gone missing from the treasury and were not recoverable. The petitioners also complained of police inaction in finding those responsible.

2. Precedents — Considered : Smt. Basava Kom Dyamogouda Patil v. State of Mysore and another, AIR 1977 SC 1749, was the material Supreme Court authority quoted and applied. It rejected the view that a court could exercise authority over articles produced before it only if they remained in its physical possession. An order directing police to retain and value the articles could place them in custodia legis. Where articles forming the subject of an offence were lost, stolen or destroyed, the court was not powerless to order their return or, in an appropriate case, payment of their value, particularly where the State made no prima facie showing of due care. The value had to relate to the recovered and seized articles and be supported by the record, rather than represent the total value stated in the original theft complaint. In Basava, the Supreme Court used the charge sheet and police report to assess the recovered property at approximately ₹10,000 and ordered the State to pay that amount. It also noted the absence of a plea that the loss had occurred despite due care or through circumstances beyond the State's control. The present Court applied the same reasoning concerning custody and value to the seized ornaments kept in the treasury and later found missing when the trial court sought production. It treated the respondents' own valuation of ₹80 lakh as the ascertained value of those ornaments. The earlier order in M.Cr.C. No. 10372/2013 (18 March 2016) provided for interim custody subject to determination of shares by the competent succession court.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the writ jurisdiction for the petitioners' claim to compensation for the official loss of property seized in criminal proceedings. Sections 451 and 457 CrPC were the basis of their earlier trial-court application for interim custody or release of the ornaments. The judgment explains that delivery could not take place because the treasury failed to produce them. The original violent-crime provisions and the cited warrant process under Section 299 CrPC were background matters only. Succession certificates were required to establish the competing recipients' shares before disbursement; no specific succession-law provision was interpreted.

4. Issues : (i) Should the State pay the assessed value of gold and silver ornaments seized in a criminal case, retained in official custody under court control and found missing when the trial court ordered interim release? The petitioners sought ₹80 lakh. The issue concerned responsibility for the property actually seized, rather than compensation for every item originally alleged to have been stolen.

(ii) Were the petitioners alone entitled to receive the full sum despite Satish Goyal's competing asserted succession share, or did distribution require a determination by the competent succession forum?

5. Ratio / Findings : The controlling question was the State's liability for the loss of the seized ornaments. Acting on earlier judicial directions, the trial court had required their production, valuation and temporary release. The treasury did not produce them; an official inquiry found them missing, and an FIR followed. Quoting and applying Basava, the Court gave legal significance to official retention under court control and rejected the result that disappearance of the case property would leave the claimant without compensation. Basava's principle concerned articles actually recovered and seized, with an ascertainable value, and treated due care as relevant to the State's resistance in an appropriate case. The Court did not derive the value from an untested total claimed by the petitioners. It relied on the respondents' own assessment of ₹80 lakh and directed respondent No. 1 to pay that amount.

The Court distinguished the duty to pay from beneficial entitlement to the money. The earlier interim custody direction had provisionally allowed the petitioners three-fourths of the ornaments, subject to Satish Goyal's right to seek a succession declaration. Both groups claimed shares in this writ, and Satish Goyal had filed W.P. No. 27299/2018 claiming one-fourth. The Court expressly declined to determine their competing entitlement in this proceeding. Compensation was to be released according to the shares established by succession certificates. The provisional interim allocation therefore did not automatically become the final allocation of compensation.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the writ petition and directed respondent No. 1, the State Government, to pay ₹80 lakh compensation for the missing seized ornaments. The amount was to be released to the petitioners and Satish Goyal only upon their obtaining succession certificates for their respective shares, and in accordance with those certificates.

Ruchi Agarwal and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 5466/2017, 03/09/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (814) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation / accused's role / Section 482 CrPC - In Romila Thapar and Others v. Union of India and Others, W.P. (Criminal) No. 260 of 2018, decided 28.09.2018, the Supreme Court held that an accused cannot select the investigating agency or demand a particular manner of investigation, including court monitoring. Allegations of mala fides require concrete particulars, although exceptional constitutional intervention remains available on a properly established basis. Following that authority and Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, ILR 2017 MP 2881, the Court refused the accused applicants' request to have police investigate a murder FIR from their alibi perspective or adopt their documents. On these facts, Section 482 did not authorise the Court to supervise a disputed investigative assessment.

Alibi / defence documents at investigation stage - The FIR specifically attributed the fatal gunshot to applicant No. 1. The applicants' claim that they were absent was a defence requiring cogent evidence; the investigating officer could not be compelled to rely on their documents. The Court also observed that the accused may use a prosecution document in defence even if it has not been exhibited. These observations addressed a premature request to direct investigation. They did not determine the truth of the alibi or the applicants' guilt. Proceedings under Sections 82–83 CrPC had been initiated. The Section 482 application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The case arose from FIR Crime No. 38/2020 at Police Station Pichore, District Shivpuri. The complainant, Bhagwat Singh Chauhan, reported that he, his brother, his nephew Raghvendra Singh and others were at their agricultural field at about 4 p.m. on 19 December 2019 while crops were being irrigated. According to the report, Golu alias Rudra Pratap Singh (applicant No. 1), Banti (applicant No. 2) and other armed persons arrived. Applicant No. 1 allegedly fired at Raghvendra Singh's chest from close range, and further shots were fired towards those present. Raghvendra Singh died while being taken to Jhansi Hospital.

Counsel for the applicants submitted that police had found co-accused Meharwan Singh to be elsewhere and had not filed a charge sheet against him. Yet, according to the applicants, police had not examined documents showing that they too were absent. Police had filed a charge sheet against co-accused Sanju alias Sanjay Bundela, treating the applicants as absconding. Proceedings under Section 82 CrPC had begun, and further investigation concerning them remained pending under Section 173(8). The applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC, seeking a direction for a free, fair and impartial investigation that considered their defence material and asserted alibi. Later in the judgment, the Court recorded that proceedings under Sections 82 and 83 had been initiated.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar and Others v. Union of India and Others, Writ Petition (Criminal) No. 260 of 2018, decided 28 September 2018, was quoted at length and applied as the governing Supreme Court authority. Drawing on Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat, it states that accused persons cannot choose the investigating agency. Drawing on Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India, it states that they have no right to prescribe the manner of investigation or mode of prosecution. Its reference to E. Sivakumar v. Union of India explains that an accused is not entitled, as a matter of course, to a hearing on a writ seeking impartial investigation or an exceptional transfer to the CBI. The quoted discussion of Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala distinguishes intervention under inherent jurisdiction to change an investigator midstream from appropriate Article 226 directions where a mala fide exercise of investigative power is established. The Constitution Bench passage in State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights cautions that CBI transfers under Articles 32/226 require sparing and cautious exercise in exceptional circumstances, rather than a routine response to allegations. Romila Thapar also requires concrete particulars of mala fides. A vague assertion and disagreement about the sufficiency of incriminating material do not justify court monitoring or investigation directed by the accused. Ordinary remedies of bail, discharge or quashing remain available at the proper stages. These authorities occur within the Supreme Court passage reproduced by the present Court. Its actual application was to reject the applicants' request to prescribe an investigative viewpoint, rather than to order or decide a CBI transfer. Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, ILR 2017 MP 2881, was also quoted and followed. That earlier High Court reasoning distinguishes the police duty to register a cognizable FIR from an accused's request for a Section 482 court to test the reliability of FIR allegations, case-diary statements or a medical report during investigation. It treats investigation as the officer's function, subject to a properly demonstrated case of bias, extraneous consideration or mala fides, and leaves disputed evidentiary questions for trial. The present Court applied that approach in refusing to prescribe how the applicants' alibi documents should be assessed. The Romila Thapar extract also mentions further authorities within its quotation of Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt and its discussion of judicial limits.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 was the provision under which the applicants sought an inherent-jurisdiction direction. On the facts presented, the Court held that persons accused in the FIR could not use it to dictate the investigating officer's treatment of their defence or require supervision of investigation from their preferred perspective. Section 173(8) formed part of the procedural context: further investigation concerning these applicants remained pending.

4. Issues : (i) Could accused persons seeking Section 482 intervention require police to investigate a murder FIR from their asserted alibi perspective and rely on documents they supplied, particularly when police had treated a co-accused's absence differently?

(ii) Did the proffered alibi and disputed investigative assessment justify a judicial direction during pending investigation, or were those matters for proof and legally available later-stage defences?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished fair investigation from an accused's power to control it. Romila Thapar holds that an accused cannot select an agency or dictate the manner of investigation, while preserving constitutional directions in a properly established case of mala fides or exceptional circumstances. Prabal Dogra similarly declines Section 482 supervision over an officer's assessment of disputed material, subject to demonstrated bias or extraneous consideration. By supplying documents said to show their absence, the applicants did not acquire a right to require investigation from their preferred viewpoint.

The FIR specifically alleged that applicant No. 1 fired the fatal shot. The Court also observed that the accused could use a prosecution document in defence even if it remained unexhibited. The initiation of proceedings under Sections 82–83 formed part of the context in which interference was refused.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC.

Rudra Pratap Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 48237/2020, 03/12/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (815) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence — last seen together / Section 106 Evidence Act - The prosecution must first prove the association and a sufficiently close connection in time; last seen together is not conclusive by itself. Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, Mahavir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 6 SCC 716, and Jagroop Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 768, were considered on the time gap and the possibility of an intervening event. Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, was applied to explain the limited role of facts especially within the accused's knowledge, once the prosecution has established the necessary foundation and those facts are considered with other circumstances. The deceased had been taken to the appellant's house, and his body was recovered buried there the next day. The appellant's account that the deceased had then visited another witness had not been put to that witness. The Court held that the last seen link was proved. This did not displace the prosecution's ultimate burden.

Discovery — Section 27 Evidence Act / articles in an open place - Applying State of H.P. v. Jai Chand, the Court held that public access to a recovery site does not, by itself, destroy the evidentiary value of an accused-led discovery. The appellant specified separate locations, led the police there and picked up the deceased's clothes and belongings, which the widow identified. The material link was his knowledge of where those particular articles lay. Accessibility had to be assessed in the full factual setting of the recovery; it was not an automatic ground for exclusion.

Circumstantial evidence — complete chain / conviction - Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, set out the five conditions requiring firmly proved and conclusive circumstances that exclude a reasonable hypothesis of innocence. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, reinforced that suspicion cannot replace proof and that a missing important link breaks the chain. The Court considered together the last seen evidence, concealment of the body in the appellant's room, identified recovered articles, medical evidence of ligature strangulation and the viscera report recording a tranquilliser. It found the chain complete and affirmed the convictions under Sections 302 and 201 IPC. That conclusion rested on the circumstances proved in this appeal.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sabir Khan appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment and sentence dated 8 July 2011 of the Special Judge/Additional Sessions Judge, Guna, in Sessions Trial No. 283/2010. He had been convicted under Sections 302 and 201 IPC. For murder, he was sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5,000, with one year of rigorous imprisonment in default. For causing disappearance of evidence, he received seven years of rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 5,000, again with one year in default. He challenged the completeness of the circumstantial chain, particularly the proof that Naushad's body had been recovered from a room in his house.

Naushad's widow, Neelu Bano (PW 1), described the appellant as a friend who regularly visited. She stated that on 13 November 2010 he took Naushad away twice, the second time at about 2:30 p.m. At about 3 p.m., she spoke to Naushad while he was at the appellant's house. He told her that the appellant wanted him to stay until 10 p.m. Her later calls did not connect. The appellant visited her house, first to ask about Naushad and later to offer his phone for a call. The next morning, she and others went to the appellant's house and then approached the police. Her missing person report named the appellant as the person who had taken Naushad away. The defence challenged her account, suggesting that she and others had caused the death and buried the body to implicate him. She acknowledged a disputed financial claim between the two men and testified that the appellant disclosed the burial after police had beaten him.

Investigators stated that the appellant led them to a locked room in his house, where Naushad's body was exhumed. Neelu Bano, Salma (PW 2), Dr Anil Mishra (PW 3), investigating officer Devendra Singh (PW 7), D.K. Sharma (PW 8) and forensic scientist S.P. Sharma (PW 10) gave evidence about the recovery from different vantage points. The appellant's disclosure also led to the recovery of a pant, cap, belt and slippers at specified open locations; the widow identified the articles. A strip marked Trika 0.5 mg, with one of its four pills remaining, was seized from the house. The later viscera report recorded lorazepam, a tranquilliser. Dr D.S. Rana (PW 5) found an ante mortem ligature mark and subcutaneous haemorrhage, and identified strangulation/asphyxia as the cause of death. At the post mortem on 15 November, he estimated that death had occurred 36 to 48 hours earlier. The appellant called no defence witness. In his statement under Section 313 CrPC, he accepted that Naushad had come to his house but claimed that Naushad had then gone to Salma's house. That suggestion was not put to Salma. The High Court examined each circumstance and the evidence as a whole.

2. Precedents — Considered : On last seen evidence, Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, was quoted on the need to consider the interval between the last sighting and death. Where that interval permits another person to intervene, the inference is unsafe without other positive evidence. Mahavir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 6 SCC 716, stated the same requirement of a close time gap. Jagroop Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 768, illustrated that discovery the next morning, considered with the medical timing, need not defeat the prosecution version. The Court applied those authorities to the afternoon departure, discovery the next day in the appellant's own room and the post mortem timing. Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, was quoted on the prosecution's initial evidentiary burden and the limited operation of Section 106 Evidence Act where facts lie especially within the accused's knowledge. Last seen gains force only when considered with surrounding incriminating circumstances and a failure to explain. The Court assessed the appellant's claim that Naushad went to Salma's house, noting that this account had not been put to her.

On discovery, State of H.P. v. Jai Chand, (reported in the judgment as (2013) 10 SCC (Cri) 773), was quoted for the rule that recovery of an article from an open place accessible to others is not, by that fact alone, vitiated under Section 27 Evidence Act. The Court applied that rule to the appellant's disclosure of particular locations, his production of the articles and their identification. It did not hold that every object found in a public place is automatically admissible or incriminating.

On the cumulative test, Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, was quoted at paragraph 153. Each circumstance must be fully established, point only to guilt, be conclusive, exclude other reasonable hypotheses and form an unbroken chain consistent, in human probability, with the accused having committed the act. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, required reliable and clinching proof, warning that even grave suspicion cannot substitute for it. Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, reiterated the need to prove every link and avoid conjecture. John David explained that the loss of an important link breaks the chain. It also reproduced a discussion from State of U.P. v. Ram Balak, which included C. Chenga Reddy v. State of A.P. and other cases. The Court applied the combined test after examining each issue and held that the proved chain was reasonably consistent only with the appellant's guilt.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided the route for appealing against conviction and sentence. Section 313 CrPC gave the appellant an opportunity to answer the incriminating circumstances. The Court assessed his explanation against the prosecution evidence and his failure to put to Salma the claim that Naushad had visited her house; it did not treat silence as a substitute for the prosecution case. Section 106 of the Evidence Act arose through Ashok, concerning facts especially within an accused's knowledge once the prosecution establishes a sufficient foundation. Section 27 of the Evidence Act was considered through Jai Chand in relation to discoveries at open locations. Sections 302 and 201 IPC were the offences of conviction. The Court affirmed both convictions after finding the homicide and concealment circumstances proved. It observed that life imprisonment was the minimum sentence under Section 302 and found no ground to alter either sentence.

4. Issues : (i) Did the prosecution prove that Naushad's death was homicidal by ligature strangulation and that he was last seen with the appellant within a sufficiently close and corroborated sequence, despite the claimed onward visit to Salma? (ii) Was the body proved to have been exhumed from a room in the appellant's house despite the absence of ownership documents and the suggested alternative attribution to the widow? (iii) Did discovery and identification of Naushad's belongings retain probative force when they lay in open places, and what use could be made of the pill strip and viscera finding? (iv) Did all the firmly proved circumstances, considered together, exclude a reasonable hypothesis of innocence under the governing Supreme Court test and justify affirming the conviction and sentence under Sections 302 and 201 IPC?

5. Ratio / Findings : The post mortem evidence established an ante mortem ligature mark with underlying haemorrhage and death by strangulation. In cross-examination, Dr Rana explained the approximate interval of 36–48 hours and that a ligature mark need not extend around the back of the neck. The Court treated the death as homicidal. It did not treat the case as involving a dispute over accidental or natural death.

On last seen evidence, the widow's account was corroborated by the missing person report naming the appellant and by Salma's evidence. In his Section 313 CrPC statement, the appellant accepted that Naushad had been in his house but claimed that he had then gone to Salma's house. That account had not been put to Salma. Applying the authorities on a close time gap, the Court considered the afternoon association on 13 November together with recovery of the body from the appellant's room the next day and the medical timing recorded on 15 November. It found the last seen circumstance proved. Its reasoning depended on the further links; it did not treat last seen alone as conclusive or transfer the entire burden under Section 106.

The Court found the location of the body proved by the converging evidence of the widow, Salma, the recovery witnesses, the investigating officer and the forensic scientist. It regarded the defence suggestion that the widow had arranged burial in the appellant's house as inconsistent with denying recovery there. The absence of documentary proof of title did not negate the unchallenged recovery evidence. The investigating officer also acknowledged that the room had been locked from outside and that relatives lived in the house. The Court concluded beyond reasonable doubt that the body had been buried in the appellant's room and dug out by him.

The appellant disclosed the locations of the deceased's clothes and belongings, then pointed them out and picked them up at more than one open place. The widow identified them. Applying Jai Chand, the Court held that open access alone did not invalidate the recovery, emphasising the appellant's specific knowledge of where the particular articles lay. It assessed the discovery evidence as a whole. A partly used Trika strip was recovered from his room, and the subsequent viscera report recorded lorazepam. The Court treated the timing and those findings as corroborating its inference that Naushad had been tranquillised before strangulation.

Finally, the Court applied the five-condition test for circumstantial evidence in Sharad Birdhichand Sarda, reinforced by Pudhu Raja, Ram Singh and John David. In its assessment, the homicidal death, close last seen sequence, concealment of the body in the appellant's room, accused-led discovery of identified belongings and toxicology evidence formed an uninterrupted chain. That chain pointed to his responsibility and excluded a reasonable explanation consistent with innocence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. It affirmed the judgment and sentence dated 8 July 2011 in Sessions Trial No. 283/2010, including the convictions under Sections 302 and 201 IPC, life imprisonment and the seven-year term, with the respective fines and default sentences. It found no ground to interfere with either sentence, noting the minimum life term for murder. The appellant was in jail and was directed to undergo the remaining sentence. A copy of the judgment was to be supplied to him immediately, free of cost. The trial court record was to be returned with a copy of the judgment for information and compliance.

Sabir Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 788/2011, 10/05/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (816) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers — Section 482 CrPC / no mini trial - An application to quash an FIR and charge sheet must be assessed on the uncontroverted allegations and the applicable legal threshold. The Court cannot decide whether the complainant is truthful or accept disputed exculpatory material. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, were considered for the limits on a roving factual inquiry or scrutiny of the kind undertaken at trial. The Court could not determine whether the complainant's lawyer brother had induced false allegations or assess her earlier exculpatory writings in inherent jurisdiction. It expressly disclaimed any finding on the merits of those competing accounts.

Quashing — face-value offence threshold / limited documentary exception - Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, discussing Bhajan Lal, requires the power under Section 482 to be exercised sparingly and prohibits inquiry into the reliability of FIR allegations. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh and M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, permit quashing when the uncontroverted allegations and supporting material, even if accepted, disclose no offence. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognises that, in an appropriate case, a public document or a defence document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute may be considered; this does not permit a general assessment of contested writings. The Court found that the FIR prima facie alleged cruelty under Section 498A IPC and that counsel had not challenged the allegations taken at face value. The allegations and proposed defence were left for trial, and the quashing application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sagar and the other applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC in MCRC No. 16026/2024 to seek quashing of FIR No. 13/2024 and the charge sheet in RCT No. 1168/2024 before the Judicial Magistrate First Class. The prosecution concerned Sections 498A, 406 and 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. They also sought a stay of the proceedings and protection against coercive action pending the petition.

Counsel argued that applicant no. 1 and the complainant's brother were both practising advocates and that the brother had allegedly misled respondent no. 2 into making a false complaint. Counsel relied on writings in which, according to the applicants, she had attributed an earlier complaint to her brother's advice and denied harassment. The applicants denied any dowry demand and referred to their visit to Jabalpur for a marriage ceremony attended by respondent no. 2. They asked the High Court to treat these circumstances as showing that the FIR was false and motivated. After hearing counsel, the Court examined the suggested inference from the brother's profession and the competing possibility that applicant no. 1, also a lawyer, might have obtained exculpatory writings. It immediately clarified that these observations were not findings on the facts or merits: disputed allegations and defence accounts could not be resolved in a quashing petition. Counsel did not separately argue that the FIR allegations, even if accepted as true, failed to disclose an offence. The Court found that cruelty was prima facie alleged and decided the petition on that basis.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted for its ruling that the High Court had erred in halting investigation and conducting a roving inquiry into serious allegations under Section 482 CrPC. The Supreme Court there considered a disputed settlement document allegedly procured by threat; the High Court could not rely on it to decide consent before investigation. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, reinforced that an assessment of the merits before investigation is completed is uncalled for.

Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, reproduced the caution in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal: the power under Section 482 is exceptional, must be exercised sparingly and with circumspection, and does not authorise inquiry into the reliability or genuineness of allegations in the FIR or complaint. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, stated the ordinary rule against assessing the accused's defence or the veracity of defence documents. It recognised an exception where, in an appropriate case, the document is a public document or its veracity is not disputed by the complainant.

State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, explained the limits of the jurisdiction and the grounds for intervention: the High Court should not determine evidentiary reliability or stifle a legitimate prosecution, but may intervene sparingly where allegations taken at face value disclose no offence, an express legal bar applies, or abuse of process is otherwise established on sound principles. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, reiterated that quashing is justified if the uncontroverted FIR allegations and supporting material make out no offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, disapproved findings on disputed facts and minute examination of the accused's defence after cognizance; defence evidence must be assessed at trial. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, order dated 30 June 2021, rejected meticulous scrutiny of the kind undertaken at trial under Section 482 and observed that an FIR need not be encyclopedic. The Bench applied these principles to the present case.

The judgment then cited Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, stating that they had laid down similar law. These authorities were cited for the test based on allegations taken at face value and the prohibition on conducting a mini trial.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the source of the High Court's inherent jurisdiction and the principal provision interpreted. It permits intervention to prevent abuse of process or secure justice, but does not ordinarily permit the Court to decide disputed factual defences or assess witness credibility as a trial court would. Sections 498A, 406 and 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were the provisions under which offences were alleged in the FIR and charge sheet.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the High Court, in a challenge to an FIR and charge sheet under Section 482 CrPC, could determine that the complainant's lawyer brother had instigated false allegations, or accept disputed prior writings and social conduct as disproving her complaint. (ii) Whether the FIR allegations taken at face value and the uncontroverted prosecution material failed to disclose a cognizable offence so as to permit exceptional quashing, or whether the proposed defence required investigation and trial. (iii) Whether the applicants were entitled to quashing and the requested interim protection when their counsel had not challenged the FIR allegations as failing to disclose the ingredients of an offence and the Court found that cruelty was prima facie disclosed.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying the Supreme Court authorities, the Court held that the jurisdiction under Section 482 must be exercised sparingly. Quashing on the ground that the allegations disclose no offence requires that the uncontroverted allegations, taken at face value, fail to disclose an offence. The Court acknowledged, through Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, that, in an appropriate case, a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute may exceptionally be considered.

The principal defence argument rested on an inference from the brother's profession as a lawyer. The Court rejected the assertion that his legal training itself showed a motive to spoil the complainant's life. It observed that applicant no. 1 was also a lawyer and that the contrary inference concerning the procurement of exculpatory writings was equally possible. It expressly qualified these remarks: the possibilities were mentioned to test the gravity of counsel's allegation, not to decide whether either side's account was true. The merits of the writings, the alleged false report, the marriage visit and any underlying cruelty remained for determination in the criminal proceedings.

Counsel had not argued that the FIR allegations, taken at face value, failed to disclose the ingredients of the alleged offences. The Court found that the FIR prima facie disclosed cruelty and declined to determine the truth of the complaint or the defence at this stage. It therefore found no basis to interfere with the FIR or charge sheet.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC and refused to quash FIR No. 13/2024 or the charge sheet in RCT No. 1168/2024.

Sagar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 16026/2024, 20/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (817) Prev Next

Headnote :- Witness evidence — related or interested eyewitnesses / careful scrutiny - Kinship with a deceased person does not make sworn testimony inherently unreliable, nor does it impose an invariable requirement of independent corroboration. P. Venkateswarlu v. State of A.P., (2002) 10 SCC 46, required caution in assessing whether a related eyewitness's account is natural, consistent and supported by the record. Abhishek Sharma v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2024) 13 SCC 660, explained that even partisan evidence, if intrinsically reliable after careful scrutiny, can sustain a conviction without an inflexible requirement of corroboration. Applying those principles, the Court examined the account given by the victims' relatives in light of their claimed vantage point, extensive cross-examination, the prompt dehati nalish and FIR, the medical evidence of injuries and the other evidence. Their failure to intervene in the axe assault was not treated as a ground for automatically rejecting their testimony. The Court found their account of the material events credible.

Murder appeal — cumulative ocular, medical and forensic assessment - The Court assessed the related eyewitnesses' account together with the multiple incised injuries to the victims' heads and faces, the consistent evidence of seizure of an axe from the appellant, and the FSL report detecting human blood on it. On this evidence, the absence of hair traces or a specific blood-group result did not undermine the eyewitness testimony or medical findings. A defence witness's account of unidentified assailants was rejected because her version changed during her testimony and conflicted with the unchallenged evidence of a prosecution witness who described her presence and conversation with the appellant. These findings rested on the evidence in this case. The convictions for two murders under Section 302 IPC and the concurrent life sentences were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sahab Singh challenged, by way of a criminal appeal, the judgment dated 24 November 2018 of the Additional Sessions Judge, Pichhor, District Shivpuri, in Sessions Trial No. 17/2017. He had been convicted on two counts under Section 302 IPC for the murders of Bhagwati Lodhi and Deva Pal. On each count, he was sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 2,000, with a default clause; the life sentences were directed to run concurrently. The appeal challenged the identification of the appellant, the reliability of the prosecution eyewitnesses and the supporting forensic evidence.

According to the prosecution, both women worked as Anganwadi workers and were carrying a midday meal to their workplace on 21 September 2016. Bhagwati's husband Jasrath (PW 1) and Deva Pal's brother-in-law Halke Pal (PW 2) were walking behind them. When the women stopped to clear bushes obstructing the path, the appellant allegedly emerged with an axe and repeatedly struck both, causing their deaths at the scene. The alleged motive was his longstanding demand for part of Bhagwati's salary after helping her obtain appointment; she had stopped making these payments during the preceding two years. A dehati nalish and merg report were prepared, and an FIR was registered. Investigation, the filing of a charge sheet and trial followed.

The defence disputed the eyewitnesses' presence or reliability, arguing that close relatives would have tried to save the women, that the alleged motive relating to recruitment was stale, and that the seized axe had no traces of hair or identification of a specific blood group. Phoolwati (DW 1) testified that three unidentified persons had attacked the women; the prosecution evidence also referred to her presence near the pond. The State relied on Jasrath and Halke's accounts, the seizure witnesses, the post mortem reports and the FSL evidence. The appellate court examined the eyewitness, medical, forensic and defence evidence separately and then considered it together.

2. Precedents — Considered : P. Venkateswarlu v. State of A.P. and Others, (2002) 10 SCC 46, was quoted for the observation that those present at an occurrence are often relatives or persons sharing an interest with the deceased; the safeguard is cautious scrutiny of their evidence. A natural and consistent account supported by the record is not rejected merely because of that relationship. The Bench applied this standard to Jasrath, Halke and the seizure witnesses, examining whether their accounts had been materially shaken or were improbable.

Abhishek Sharma v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), 2023:INSC:924 : (2024) 13 SCC 660, was quoted for the principle that interested or even partisan testimony is not necessarily unreliable, and that no invariable rule requires independent corroboration in material particulars before such testimony can sustain a conviction. Its intrinsic reliability and probability require careful scrutiny; credible testimony may suffice in the circumstances of the particular case. The Court applied this principle to the relatives' consistent account under extensive cross-examination and its agreement with the early reports and other evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC was the provision under which the appellant was convicted separately for the murders of Bhagwati and Deva Pal. The Court considered whether the prosecution evidence established both murders and whether the two life terms, fines and direction for concurrent sentences warranted appellate interference. The dehati nalish, FIR, medical reports and FSL report were assessed as evidence.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Jasrath and Halke's relationship to the deceased, failure to intervene and the alleged contradictions made their identification of the assailant armed with an axe unsafe, or whether their testimony remained reliable on careful scrutiny. (ii) Whether the medical and forensic evidence sufficiently supported the prosecution despite the absence of hair on the axe and a specific blood-group result. (iii) Whether Phoolwati's account of unidentified assailants created reasonable doubt, and whether the findings of guilt for the two murders and the concurrent sentences required interference on appeal.

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr Rituraj (PW 18) proved the post mortem reports Ex P/24 and Ex P/25. Bhagwati had three incised injuries above the shoulder, with fractures of the head and jaw; Deva Pal had three such injuries and one on her right hand, also with craniofacial fractures. The Court held that both deaths were homicidal. It rejected the contention that hair must have remained on the axe. Given the multiple blows and substantial bleeding, the sequence of injuries could not be inferred, nor could it be assumed that any hair traces would have remained. This assessment concerned the evidence in the case and did not state a general forensic rule.

Jasrath described watching from a safe distance, approaching after the assailant had fled and finding both victims dead. His extensive cross-examination disclosed no material inconsistency; his account agreed with the dehati nalish and FIR. Halke supported his account on the material facts. The Court treated the defence suggestion that Jasrath alone was present as acknowledging Jasrath's presence, while failing to dislodge Halke's account. No material discrepancy between Halke's testimony and his police statement was demonstrated. Applying P. Venkateswarlu and Abhishek Sharma, the Court carefully examined the related witnesses' evidence rather than rejecting it on account of their relationship or invariably requiring independent corroboration. It found their presence and account natural and reliable. It did not rely on the hearsay accounts of Maneesha and Anrath Pal as direct proof. Pramod (PW 4) and Sunil Pal (PW 16) gave consistent accounts of the appellant's apprehension and his production of an axe at his house. The investigating officer's evidence regarding seizure was not materially shaken. FSL report Ex P/23 confirmed human blood on the axe; the relevant documents were not challenged in cross-examination. The Court relied on the recovery and FSL result as corroboration. It did not consider the defence criticism concerning the absence of blood-group identification sufficient to displace the other evidence.

Phoolwati (DW 1) was related to Jasrath and was near the scene of the incident, as shown in the spot map. Her account of three unknown assailants changed during her testimony, including her later uncertainty about whether the appellant was involved. The Court also noted her strained relationship with Bhagwati. Saiyam Pal (PW 5) said that he was travelling with Phoolwati, saw the incident and heard her urge the appellant to stop; his account of her presence and conversation with the appellant was not challenged. The Bench found her contrary account unreliable. Considering the credible eyewitness, medical and forensic evidence together, it concluded that the appellant had murdered both women. It also considered the absence of an apparent motive for the witnesses to implicate him falsely; that circumstance did not replace the positive evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal against both conviction and sentence. It affirmed the two convictions under Section 302 IPC and the two life terms, each with a fine of Rs. 2,000 and its default clause. The life terms were to run concurrently, as ordered by the trial court. The Court directed that a copy of the judgment be supplied to the appellant through the jail authority and that another copy, together with the record, be returned to the trial court for information and compliance.

Sahab Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 704/2019, 14/07/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (818) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal writ — fair investigation / victim and accused rights - Nasima v. State of U.P., SLP (Cri) No. 551/2022, explained that investigation under Section 2(h) CrPC involves collecting evidence to ascertain whether an offence has occurred. Fair investigation is indispensable to discovering the truth and ensuring a fair trial, while protecting the victim's rights and citizens' fundamental rights. Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2016) 4 SCC 160, recognised the constitutional court's duty to remedy a genuinely unfair investigation, even after trial has begun, but required a foundation beyond imagined suspicion. The Court examined the widow's objections concerning a police constable's apparent death by hanging in light of the panchnamas, the specialist's post mortem findings and the scientific officer's report. It found no sufficient basis to transfer the investigation.

CBI investigation — Article 226 power / state consent - State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, was considered for the High Court's constitutional power to direct a CBI investigation within a State even without its consent under Section 6 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act. Federalism and separation of powers do not curtail judicial review. The power must nevertheless be exercised sparingly and in exceptional circumstances to secure a credible investigation, justice and fundamental rights. State of Punjab v. CBI, (2011) 9 SCC 182, illustrated such an extraordinary case, in which the local police could not investigate fairly. The Court did not regard mere dissatisfaction or suspicion as sufficient to satisfy that standard in the present case.

Investigation transfer — stage and exceptional necessity - Vinay Tyagi v. Irshad Ali, (2013) 5 SCC 762, recognised the superior courts' power to direct further, fresh, de novo or reinvestigation, or to transfer investigation between agencies, when the ends of justice demand it. That power must be exercised sparingly. State of Punjab v. CBI and Dharam Pal showed that the filing of a charge sheet, commencement of trial or examination of witnesses is not, by itself, an absolute bar where a sound basis establishes the need for an independent agency. Here, the death in 2017, the State's documented inquiries and explanations, and the absence of any substantiated serious irregularity did not justify transfer to the CBI in 2024. The petition was dismissed because the supporting material was insufficient, rather than for want of constitutional jurisdiction.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sakesh Singh filed Writ Petition No. 8973/2017 under Article 226, seeking a direction to the Superintendent of Police, Rewa, to transfer the investigation into her husband Jail Pal Singh's death to the CBI. Her husband was a constable and was found hanging in a locked room on 15 March 2017. His father made a representation that day seeking an inquiry, and a marg case was registered at Gurh Police Station. The post mortem attributed death to asphyxia caused by hanging. The petitioner maintained that there had been no domestic reason for suicide and suspected deficiencies in the police inquiry. She and her relatives sent representations, including a request to the Home Minister for CID investigation on 14 April 2017 and communications to senior State and Union authorities. A State Minister also requested a fair inquiry.

The petitioner questioned the opening of the locked door without the landlord or an Executive Magistrate, part of the body touching the floor, the asserted inability to see inside from outside, and the post mortem being conducted without the family present and by only one doctor. She also pointed to differences between earlier party photographs showing liquor consumption while the deceased wore a shirt and trousers, and later photographs showing his body in a vest and shorts. The State filed a return and an additional return. It stated that a carpenter had opened the room, which was locked from inside, in the presence of three witnesses and had signed the door-opening panchnama; five persons had signed the body panchnama. According to the State, the scarf or muffler had stretched under the body's weight, explaining its position. It also stated that family members are not admitted to the mortuary; forensic specialist Dr Chakresh Jain had found no injury other than a neck ligature mark and had opined that death was due to hanging; and senior scientific officer Dr R.P. Shukla had inspected the scene that day and supported the conclusion of suicide. The Court considered these materials in light of the petitioner's suspicions, the passage of more than seven and a half years, and the governing constitutional standard.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nasima v. State of Uttar Pradesh, Supreme Court order dated 21 April 2022 in SLP (Cri) No. 551/2022, was quoted for the definition of investigation under Section 2(h) CrPC as the authorised collection of evidence to ascertain whether an offence has occurred. It described fair investigation as the backbone of criminal justice and as protecting a victim's rights and every citizen's fundamental rights. The Bench accepted that purpose but found no sufficient basis on the present record to infer that the investigation was unfair.

State of Punjab v. CBI, (2011) 9 SCC 182, upheld transfer where the local police's inability to investigate fairly made an independent agency necessary. It also explained that the filing of a charge sheet did not automatically render the constitutional petition infructuous. The quoted judgment relied on the caution in State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights that the power must be exercised only in exceptional situations; the present Bench applied that standard but found no comparable circumstances. Vinay Tyagi v. Irshad Ali, (2013) 5 SCC 762, recognised the superior courts' jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC and Article 226 to order further, fresh, de novo or reinvestigation, or to change the investigating agency, for the ends of justice. The power must be exercised sparingly and with circumspection. The present petition was under Article 226; the discussion of Section 482 formed part of the quoted precedent and did not describe the jurisdiction invoked in this petition.

State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571, was reproduced at length. The Constitution Bench held that ordinary law cannot curtail judicial review under Articles 32 and 226, and that a High Court may direct a CBI investigation into a cognizable offence within a State without its consent under Section 6. Such a direction violates neither federalism nor separation of powers. The power was grounded in the protection of Article 21 and fair, impartial investigation for both accused persons and victims. The Constitution Bench also cautioned that CBI directions are exceptional measures, to be used sparingly and cautiously to ensure credibility, complete justice or enforcement of fundamental rights. The Court accepted that it had the power, while requiring a sufficient factual basis for its exercise.

Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana, (2016) 4 SCC 160, was quoted on a victim's plea for fair investigation supported by a genuine foundation. Constitutional courts may direct another agency to investigate or order further investigation even after trial has begun and witnesses have been examined. Grave suspicion must, however, have a concrete basis and cannot rest on imagination. The Bench applied that qualification: contemporaneous records answered the alleged anomalies, which did not establish that the inquiry was a sham or that an exceptional need for transfer existed. The authorities were applied to the distinct questions of the purpose of investigation, constitutional power, procedural stage and factual necessity; they did not establish a general entitlement to CBI investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution conferred the High Court's writ jurisdiction and the power to protect fundamental rights through an exceptional transfer of investigation. Article 21 was considered through the Constitution Bench authority as protecting the right of both the accused and the victim to fair investigation. Articles 32 and 226, the federal allocation of police powers and Section 6 of the Delhi Special Police Establishment Act were discussed in Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights to explain why the absence of State consent does not bar a constitutional court's direction for CBI investigation. Section 2(h) CrPC defined the scope of investigation in Nasima. Section 482 CrPC was referred to in State of Punjab and Vinay Tyagi as a separate jurisdiction of the superior courts; the petition itself invoked Article 226.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the constitutional court could direct CBI investigation under Article 226 despite the State police's ordinary jurisdiction and the statutory consent framework, and what exceptional standard governs that relief. (ii) Whether the perceived defects in the inquiry into the constable's apparent death by hanging disclosed a concrete failure of fairness or credibility warranting an independent agency, in light of the scene records, medical evidence and the State's explanation. (iii) Whether the procedural stage or the time elapsed since the death in 2017 affected the power to transfer investigation or the exercise of discretion, and what relief was warranted on the actual record.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court recognised fair investigation as central to criminal justice and accepted that Article 226 permits a direction for CBI investigation, even without State consent, in an exceptional case. State of Punjab, Vinay Tyagi and Dharam Pal showed that completion of investigation or commencement of trial does not automatically bar the exercise of jurisdiction. The power must be exercised sparingly and according to the facts. The decisive question was whether the petitioner had provided a sufficient factual basis for transferring the investigation from the local police.

The State's contemporaneous door-opening panchnama recorded that the room was locked and identified the witnesses and the carpenter who opened it; the body panchnama bore five witnesses' signatures. The Court considered the explanation that the scarf had stretched, allowing part of the body to touch the floor. The forensic specialist's post mortem recorded a neck ligature mark, no other injury and asphyxia due to hanging. A senior scientific officer's inspection of the scene supported suicide. The Court noted the photographs of a liquor party on the preceding day and of the later hanging scene, but did not infer homicide from the differences in clothing or the other circumstances alleged. The relatives' absence from the mortuary and the post mortem being conducted by one specialist did not, on the material referred to, establish that the inquiry was unfair.

More than seven and a half years had elapsed. The Court held that the petitioner had not made out a prima facie case for transfer of the investigation to the CBI, and that the suspicions expressed in her representation were not sufficiently serious or supported to justify such a transfer.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition under Article 226.

Sakesh Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 8973/2017, 17/09/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (819) Prev Next

Headnote :- Attempt to murder — Section 307 IPC / injury and intent - State of M.P. v. Harjeet Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 1190 of 2009, order dated 19 February 2019, was applied to distinguish the assailant's act, intention or knowledge from the injury ultimately caused. Hurt within Section 319 may suffice, without grievous or life-threatening injury under Section 320, if the requisite murderous intention or knowledge is accompanied by an overt act. The quoted Supreme Court discussion drew on R. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 9 SCC 27, Jage Ram v. State of Haryana, (2015) 11 SCC 366, and State of M.P. v. Kanha alias Omprakash, Criminal Appeal No. 1589 of 2018, decided 4 February 2019. The location and severity of an injury may indicate intent but are not indispensable legal requirements; the weapon, words, motive, acts and surrounding circumstances may also reveal intent. Allegations of an attack with a sword and knife, including blows to the head, together with rod assaults and a stated threat to kill, supported the Section 307/34 charge despite the applicants' assertion that neither victim had sustained a bony injury. The finding was confined to the framing of charges.

Common intention — late arrival of a participant / charge-stage inference - The FIR alleged that Sanu telephoned Ubesh during the attack and Ubesh then arrived carrying an iron rod and assaulted both brothers. His arrival after the confrontation began did not alone establish that he was outside any shared intention under Section 34 IPC. The Court left whether he shared the necessary intention to the trial court on the evidence; it did not finally decide joint liability in revision.

Framing of charge — Section 34 compared with Sections 147, 148 and 149 IPC - Five persons were alleged to have assaulted the injured. Although the trial court had framed Section 307 with Section 34, the High Court directed it to reconsider whether the prosecution allegations instead called for charges under Sections 147, 148 and 149, or whether Section 34 had rightly been used. Membership, common object and shared intention could not be finally resolved on this revision record. The criminal revision was dismissed with that express reconsideration direction; the direction did not itself substitute a Section 149 charge or decide guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Salman and the other applicants filed Criminal Revision No. 3473/2018 under Sections 397 and 401 of the Code of Criminal Procedure against the order dated 19 June 2018 of the First Additional Sessions Judge, Ashok Nagar, in Sessions Trial No. 162/2017. The trial court had framed charges under Section 307 read with Section 34 IPC on two counts, Sections 452, 294 and 506-B IPC, and Section 25(1-B)(B) of the Arms Act.

According to Subham Yadav's FIR of 18 May 2007 at 00:28, his elder brother Rahul had returned from the market and asked him to park a vehicle near their home. After a dispute over moving the vehicle, Sanu Bagula, Salman, Sanu Musalman (described as Salman's younger brother) and Akhtar left and returned armed. The account described Sanu Bagula as carrying a sword, Salman a knife, and Sanu Musalman and Akhtar iron rods. Subham and Rahul had entered their house; the FIR alleged that Sanu Bagula, Salman and Akhtar entered and dragged the brothers outside. It attributed to Sanu Bagula words urging that both be killed and a sword blow towards Subham's head. Rahul allegedly sustained finger injuries while intervening to prevent a further sword blow. The account attributed rod assaults on Subham to Sanu Musalman and Akhtar, and knife blows to Rahul's head, left hand and wrist to Salman. Sanu then allegedly telephoned Ubesh, who arrived with an iron rod and assaulted both brothers. Witnesses came on hearing the brothers' cries, after which the assailants fled. These are prosecution allegations as recited in the revision, not findings at trial.

The police filed a charge sheet, and the trial court framed the charges set out above. The applicants contended that neither victim had sustained a bony injury and that Section 307 was therefore not attracted. They separately argued that Ubesh had arrived only after the incident began and therefore neither belonged to the alleged unlawful assembly nor shared its common object. The State was represented by the Public Prosecutor. The revision concerned whether the charges were sustainable at this stage and whether the appropriate basis of group liability required reconsideration.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted and applied State of Madhya Pradesh v. Harjeet Singh and Another, Supreme Court order dated 19 February 2019 in Criminal Appeal No. 1190 of 2009, in considering Section 307. Harjeet Singh distinguished "hurt" under Section 319 IPC from "grievous hurt" under Section 320: grievous hurt is not a prerequisite where the act, circumstances and intention or knowledge attract Section 307. The injury actually caused may assist in determining intent but is not, by itself, determinative of whether the act amounts to an attempt to murder. The High Court applied that distinction to reject the contention that the asserted absence of a bony injury necessarily barred the charge.

The passage from Harjeet Singh quoted R. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 9 SCC 27. R. Prakash concerned a blow to the temporal region and held that subsequent blows to other parts of the body did not exclude the application of Section 307. Its broader principle was that intention accompanied by an overt act may attract the provision even without an injury capable of causing death. Intention may be inferred from the wounds or other circumstances, and the act must be distinguished from its result. The present Court applied that principle as reproduced in Harjeet Singh, rather than treating each wound as independently decisive.

Jage Ram v. State of Haryana, (2015) 11 SCC 366, also appeared in the reasoning quoted from Harjeet Singh. Its test required the prosecution to establish the intention to commit murder and the act done by the accused. The nature of the weapon, words spoken during the incident, motive, part of the body struck, and nature and severity of the blows may indicate intention; an injury capable of causing death is not essential. State of M.P. v. Kanha alias Omprakash, Criminal Appeal No. 1589/2018, decided 4 February 2019, was quoted for the principle that grievous or life-threatening hurt is not a sine qua non. The weapon, force of the blows and other surrounding circumstances may disclose intention. These authorities stated overlapping principles, rather than separate categorical rules based on injury. The Bench applied their common approach, examining intention and the act, to sustain the charge in light of the alleged weapons and active assaults.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC conferred jurisdiction in criminal revision against the order framing charges. Section 307 IPC defines attempt to murder by reference to an act done with such intention or knowledge and in such circumstances that, if death resulted, the act would amount to murder. Its text distinguishes the basic punishment, the greater punishment where hurt results, and the special provision for life convicts. The Bench reproduced the section and its illustrations, and examined the intention or knowledge and the act rather than treating the absence of a fracture as conclusive. Sections 319 and 320 IPC arose in the Supreme Court passage to distinguish hurt from grievous hurt.

Section 34 IPC was the basis of the Section 307 charges actually framed. Sections 147, 148 and 149 IPC were the alternative provisions concerning rioting, an armed assembly and common object that the High Court directed the trial court to consider in view of the allegation of five assailants. The operative charge and reasoning concern Section 307/34.

4. Issues : (i) At the stage of framing charges, did the asserted absence of a bony injury preclude a charge under Section 307 IPC despite the FIR allegations of armed blows, including to the head, and threatening words? (ii) Did Ubesh's alleged arrival after a telephone call conclusively exclude shared intention or collective liability, or did his alleged participation leave that question for determination on the trial evidence? (iii) Since the prosecution alleged an assault by five persons, should the trial court reconsider whether Section 34 was the appropriate basis of the attempt-to-murder charges or whether charges under Sections 147, 148 and 149 should be framed?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found that the FIR attributed an active role to the accused and rejected the contention that Section 307 requires a fracture or other grievous injury. Section 307 requires an act accompanied by the specified murderous intention or knowledge in the relevant circumstances. Applying Harjeet Singh and the Supreme Court analysis reproduced in it, the Court held that the seriousness of a wound may assist in inferring intent, but neither an injury capable of causing death nor an injury to a vital part is indispensable. The alleged attack with a sword, a knife and rods, the alleged blows to Rahul's head and other parts, the alleged sword blow towards Subham's head, and the expressed threat to kill provided a basis for the trial court's Section 307/34 charges at that stage.

The separate submission concerning Ubesh rested on his later arrival. The Court noted the specific FIR allegation that Sanu had summoned him, that he had arrived with an iron rod and that he had attacked both brothers. On those allegations, his later arrival alone could not end the inquiry into shared intention at the stage of framing charges. Whether he actually shared that intention was expressly left for the trial court to determine after recording evidence.

The trial court had framed the charge with the aid of Section 34, although the prosecution alleged five assailants. The High Court did not itself find that there was an unlawful assembly or apply Section 149. It directed the trial court to reconsider whether charges under Sections 147, 148 and 149 were made out or whether the charge with the aid of Section 34 had been correctly framed. The Section 307 charge thus survived the challenge based on injury, while the statutory basis and evidence concerning group liability remained open for consideration by the court framing charges. The dismissal was expressly subject to this direction for reconsideration.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision with the observations and direction in paragraph 10. The trial court's Section 307/34 charge was not set aside on the ground of the asserted absence of a bony injury. The trial court was directed to reconsider whether charges under Sections 147, 148 and 149 IPC should be framed in light of the alleged assault by five persons, or whether Section 34 had been correctly applied. The Office was directed to send the order to the trial court for information and compliance.

Salman and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 3473/2018, 11/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (820) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR registration — police inaction / magistrate remedy - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police duty to register an FIR on information disclosing a cognizable offence under Section 154 CrPC from the remedies available to a complainant if the police fail to act. It directed recourse to Sections 190 and 200 before the Magistrate; the cases concerning the police duty did not displace that complaint remedy. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, explained the Magistrate's inquiry into a complaint and the power to direct investigation. Applying those authorities, the Court dismissed the Section 482 application seeking police penal action over the alleged illegal seizure of a financed vehicle, with liberty to approach the Magistrate. It made no finding on the merits that the financier or other respondents had committed an offence.

Magistrate's investigation control — Sections 154(3) and 156(3) CrPC - Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explained that an informant may first approach the Superintendent of Police in writing and then the Magistrate under Section 156(3) if the FIR remains unregistered or proper investigation is not undertaken. On prima facie satisfaction, the Magistrate may direct registration of an FIR, order a proper investigation and monitor that investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed that remedy and the Magistrate's power to recommend a change of investigating officer when necessary. The Magistrate cannot, however, investigate personally. The Court relied on this effective alternative remedy in declining relief under its inherent powers.

Criminal-side writ — exceptional investigation intervention / alternative remedy - Divine Retreat Centre recognised that a direction under Article 226 may be issued in a rare case where mala fide investigation, abuse of power and breach of Chapter XII CrPC are clearly established. Even then, the High Court may insist on observance of the lawful process but cannot prescribe how the police should investigate. The Gwalior Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016, held that mandamus for registration may be denied where Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been invoked, subject to the four Whirlpool exceptions. It distinguished Lalita Kumari's ruling on the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from an entitlement to bypass alternative remedies. The present application was under Section 482, and no exceptional factual basis for direct intervention was found.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sameer Khan filed Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 5092 of 2024 under Section 482 CrPC. The relief clause asked the High Court to direct State respondents 1 and 2 to take suitable criminal penal action against respondents 3 and 4. In argument, counsel said a vehicle financed by respondents 4 and 5 had been seized by them illegally and that police should act against the financiers. The allegation of illegality remained the applicant's contention.

The State opposed the application, submitting that the applicant could complain of police inaction to the competent Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, and also referring to the corresponding BNSS complaint provision. The High Court framed the legal question as whether Section 482 could be invoked to obtain registration of an FIR. It considered Supreme Court decisions on the police's statutory duty, the complaint and investigation remedies before a Magistrate, and the limits of direct High Court intervention, together with a Gwalior Division Bench decision on writ mandamus. The proceeding invoked inherent powers and was not a writ petition.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee and Others v. Union of India and Others, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted for the distinction between two questions. Information disclosing a cognizable offence requires police registration under Section 154 CrPC; if the police fail to act, the aggrieved person may proceed before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200. Aleque Padamsee explained that Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2006) 2 SCC 677, and Lallan Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2006) 12 SCC 229, concerned the police duty, rather than the procedure for obtaining redress. It distinguished those cases from All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359, which addressed the complaint remedy before the Magistrate. These authorities appeared within the quoted passage to explain that distinction; they were not individually applied to the vehicle allegation. Aleque Padamsee's separate direction about governmental sanction arose in its own litigation. The Court applied the distinction between registration duty and the remedy for police inaction in refusing a direct police direction.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and Others, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted on two limits. Exceptional intervention under Article 226 may be justified where a mala fide exercise of investigative power, abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII are clearly established. The court may insist on the lawful process but cannot dictate the police's investigative method. Ordinarily, a person complaining of police inaction may approach the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200. The reproduced passage from Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre explained that, after receiving a complaint and recording evidence, the Magistrate may direct police investigation and submission of a report instead of immediately issuing process. If no offence appears, the complaint may be dismissed under Section 203; where an offence is prima facie disclosed, cognizance and process may follow. The Bench relied on the alternative remedy and did not find that the applicant had established the rare exception for writ intervention.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Others, (2008) 2 SCC 409, set out the sequence of remedies: a written application to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed, if that does not produce a satisfactory result, by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3) for registration or proper investigation. The Magistrate may supervise the investigation to ensure that it is properly conducted. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage and Others, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed Sakiri Vasu and required the Magistrate's prima facie satisfaction. It permitted a recommendation to senior police officers for a change of investigating officer where necessary. Investigation itself remains the police's function, and the Magistrate cannot undertake it personally. The decision also explained the institutional reason for directing ordinary complainants to the statutory forum.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Gwalior Division Bench, W.A. No. 247/2016, decided 20 December 2016, was quoted for the principle that mandamus requiring police action under Section 154 may be declined if the informant has not used Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200, unless the four exceptions described in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, apply. It also distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, which concerned the police duty to register an FIR, from an automatic entitlement to mandamus without recourse to the alternative remedy.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the jurisdiction invoked, but the Court held that an application seeking a direction to register an offence or take penal action was unsuitable where the complaint remedies remained available. Section 154 CrPC concerns the recording of information disclosing a cognizable offence, while Section 154(3) permits a written approach to the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) empowers the Magistrate, on prima facie satisfaction, to direct registration or proper investigation and to monitor it, without investigating personally. Sections 190 and 200 provide the complaint and cognizance remedy emphasised in Aleque Padamsee and Divine Retreat Centre. The latter's quotation also describes dismissal under Section 203 where the complaint discloses no offence after inquiry. Chapter XII governs police investigation. Article 226 arose only in the quoted decisions on exceptional writ intervention and Shweta Bhadauria's mandamus test; this applicant invoked Section 482, not Article 226. The operative paragraph identified the complaint remedy as "Section 200 of Cr.P.C./223 of BNSS".

4. Issues : (i) Whether the applicant could obtain a High Court direction under Section 482 requiring police criminal action over the alleged unlawful seizure of his financed vehicle, or was required to pursue the statutory remedies for police inaction. (ii) What distinguished the police's duty under Section 154 on receiving information disclosing a cognizable offence from the informant's remedies for registration, investigation or inquiry into a complaint, including recourse to the Superintendent of Police and the Magistrate. (iii) Whether the precedent concerning exceptional control of investigation under Article 226 displaced the ordinary alternative-remedy principle in this Section 482 application.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered whether a Section 482 application seeking FIR registration was maintainable. It did not doubt the police duty under Section 154 where information disclosing a cognizable offence is supplied. The distinction drawn in Aleque Padamsee was that, if the police fail to perform that duty, the complainant should approach the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200. Divine Retreat Centre and the passage from Gangadhar explained how the complaint is examined and when an investigation may be directed.

Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe explained a further sequence of statutory remedies: an approach to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3) if registration or investigation remains deficient. On prima facie satisfaction, the Magistrate may direct and monitor proper investigation and recommend a change of investigating officer, but cannot investigate personally. The Court relied on the availability of these remedies in holding that the requested direction to the police under Section 482 was unwarranted.

The exception in Divine Retreat Centre for an Article 226 case involving a clearly mala fide or abusive investigation was narrower than ordinary dissatisfaction with police inaction. Shweta Bhadauria also preserved the possible application of the Whirlpool exceptions to the alternative-remedy rule and distinguished Lalita Kumari's ruling on the police duty to register an FIR from an unconditional entitlement to a writ.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application as not maintainable for the requested direct police-action relief. Sameer Khan was given liberty to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223

BNSS if he considered that an offence had been committed. The Magistrate remained free to assess any complaint according to law.

Sameer Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 5092/2024, 02/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (821) Prev Next

Headnote :- Anticipatory bail — voluntary deposit / alleged public money - Ramesh Kumar v. State of NCT of Delhi, (2023) 7 SCC 461, did not impose an absolute bar on considering a voluntary payment or deposit before bail. In an exceptional case alleging misappropriation of public money, a court may consider, in the larger public interest, an accused's offer to account for all or part of the sum before finally considering bail. That approach is unwarranted in cheating complaints involving private parties' money. Applying that qualified principle to alleged fictitious wheat procurement and transport involving public disbursement, the Court conditionally granted anticipatory bail to the applicant, who claimed to be a transporter's computer operator. He was required to deposit Rs 10 lakh with the Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation and appear before the investigating officer with the receipt by 28 September 2024. Failure to deposit the sum or appear by the deadline would automatically terminate the order.

Pre-arrest protection — operative conditions / complainant notice - Upon timely deposit and appearance, the applicant was to be released on a personal bond of Rs 1 lakh with one surety in the same amount, to the investigating officer's satisfaction. The Court directed that the complainant be informed of the bail grant, referring to Aparna Bhat v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2021) 16 SCC 179. Counsel mentioned a coordinate Bench's interim order protecting different petitioners from coercive action; the Court did not treat it as establishing parity.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Samrat Singh applied under Section 482 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, apprehending arrest in Crime No. 61/2024 at Police Station Dharkundi, District Satna. The FIR listed Sections 406, 417, 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B IPC, and Section 13(1)(b) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, as amended in 2018. The case diary was available. The prosecution account, as presented by the applicant's counsel, concerned a procurement centre that purportedly dispatched 18 trucks carrying 2,360 quintals of wheat on 8 May 2024 and five more carrying 1,500 quintals under transport biltys. It was alleged that the wheat had neither been procured nor transported, that several persons' IDs had been used, and that GPS records placed the listed trucks elsewhere, although documents showed unloading at a railway station and dispatch by rail rakes. These remained allegations at the bail stage.

Counsel submitted that the applicant was only the computer operator working for procurement transporter Shri M.P. Vishal. He denied that the applicant was the transporter and claimed false implication. The applicant offered to deposit an amount fixed by the Court to demonstrate bona fides, relying on Ramesh Kumar concerning deposits of public money. Counsel also referred to the interim order dated 22 August 2024 in Writ Petition No. 23452/2024, restraining coercive action against other accused until the next hearing. The State opposed bail, asserting that the applicant was a transporter, that Rs 92 lakh had been disbursed to 58 agriculturists and that eight persons had been implicated.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ramesh Kumar v. State of NCT of Delhi, 2023:INSC:596 : (2023) 7 SCC 461, was invoked by counsel and then quoted in the Court's reasoning. Paragraph 26 expressly declined to lay down an absolute rule against considering an accused's willingness to pay or deposit money before bail. In an exceptional case alleging misappropriation of public money, a court may consider the accused's voluntary offer to account for all or part of the alleged public funds before finally considering anticipatory or ordinary bail, if returning that money to the system would serve the larger public interest. The judgment distinguished cheating disputes involving private parties' money, in which that approach was unwarranted. The High Court applied this limited discretionary principle in imposing the Rs 10 lakh deposit condition in the present allegation involving public disbursement.

The Court also cited "XYZ (sic Aparna Bhat and Ors.) and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Another", 2021:INSC:192 : (2021) 16 SCC 179, for intimation of the bail grant to the complainant. The authority was used for notification. The coordinate Bench's interim order in another writ petition formed part of counsel's submission; this Bench did not develop or apply it as a precedent.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 BNSS, 2023 was the procedural basis of this anticipatory-bail application. The listed IPC provisions concern criminal breach of trust, cheating, forgery, use of forged documents and conspiracy. Sections 13(1)(b) and 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act formed part of the registered offence. The material legal question was whether the voluntary deposit offered could be imposed as an anticipatory-bail condition consistently with the public-money qualification in Ramesh Kumar. The bond and surety were operative conditions of release, rather than an interpretation of the charged offences.

4. Issues : (i) Whether, in the alleged fictitious wheat procurement and transport scheme involving public payments, the applicant should receive anticipatory bail on offering to deposit money, despite the State's opposition and the dispute over his role. (ii) How Ramesh Kumar's exceptional public-money qualification, excluding private cheating disputes, governed the proposed deposit. (iii) What conditions and deadline should attach to protection, and whether the complainant should be informed of the bail grant.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court noted the applicant's claim that he was a computer operator working with the transporter, rather than the transporter himself. It reproduced the distinction in Ramesh Kumar: an offer to account voluntarily for allegedly misappropriated public money may be considered exceptionally and in the larger public interest before bail is finally determined, whereas that approach is unwarranted merely to resolve a private money dispute. In light of the alleged false public-procurement records and the State's assertion of Rs 92 lakh disbursement, the Court applied that principle by requiring a deposit of Rs 10 lakh with the Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation as a condition of anticipatory bail.

Protection also required production of the deposit receipt and appearance before the investigating officer by 28 September 2024, together with a personal bond of Rs 1 lakh and one surety in the same amount to that officer's satisfaction. The deposit and appearance deadline were express conditions: failure to deposit the amount or appear by the deadline would automatically terminate the order. The Court cited Aparna Bhat for intimation to the complainant. The ruling applied the public-money principle, with its qualifications, to the particular bail record.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the anticipatory-bail application subject to deposit of Rs 10 lakh with the Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation Limited, production of the receipt and appearance before the investigating officer by 28 September 2024. Failure to satisfy either the deposit requirement or the appearance deadline would automatically terminate protection.

Samrat Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 38199/2024, 06/09/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (822) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR mandamus — police duty / informant's remedy - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police duty under Section 154 CrPC to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from the remedy available if the police fail to act. A complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 is the ordinary remedy; decisions requiring police registration do not, by themselves, confer a direct writ remedy. The Court applied that principle in dismissing this Article 227 petition seeking a police direction to register an FIR, with liberty to approach the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS. It decided neither the underlying offence nor the respondents' liability.

Magistrate control — complaint inquiry / investigation - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, reproduced Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, on the Magistrate's inquiry into a complaint. After recording evidence, the Magistrate may, on finding a prima facie case, direct police investigation and submission of a report. If no offence is disclosed, the complaint may be dismissed under Section 203; if an offence is prima facie disclosed, cognizance and process may follow. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, explained the written approach to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3) for registration or proper investigation, subject to prima facie satisfaction. The Magistrate may monitor the investigation and, if necessary, recommend a different investigating officer, but cannot investigate personally. The Court relied on these alternative remedies in disposing of the petition.

High Court writ restraint — exceptional investigation abuse / alternate remedies - Divine Retreat Centre reserved rare Article 226 action for a clearly demonstrated mala fide investigation, abuse of power and violation of Chapter XII CrPC, without allowing the court to prescribe investigative methods. The Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016, held that mandamus may be denied if Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the Whirlpool exceptions; it distinguished Lalita Kumari's police-registration duty from an entitlement to bypass such remedies.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sanat Kumar Soni filed Miscellaneous Petition No. 2445 of 2024, described as a petition under Article 227 of the Constitution read with Sections 156(3) and 200 CrPC. He sought registration of his complaint, a direction to the station house officer to lodge an FIR and investigate, and further appropriate relief. Counsel submitted that the petitioner had approached the respondents for FIR registration, but no action had been taken.

The State opposed the request for a direction to the police, submitting that an effective complaint remedy was available before the trial Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, referred to together with Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. The Court framed the question as whether a petition seeking a police direction to register an FIR was maintainable. It considered Supreme Court decisions distinguishing the police duty from the informant's remedy, the Magistrate's powers over registration and investigation, and the limits of High Court writ intervention, together with a Gwalior Division Bench ruling.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee and Others v. Union of India and Others, 2007:INSC:760 : (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted in detail. It affirmed the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence, while identifying Sections 190 and 200 CrPC as the complainant's remedy if the police fail to act. It reconciled Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2006) 2 SCC 677, and Lallan Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2006) 12 SCC 229, concerning police action, with All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359, concerning the procedure when police do not act. The earlier case's separate direction concerning governmental sanction related to its own litigation and was not applied to Soni's request. The Bench relied on the distinction between police duty and the remedy for inaction in refusing a direct FIR direction, without denying that duty.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and Others, 2008:INSC:341 : (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted for two related but distinct principles. The High Court may issue a direction under Article 226 in a rare case where a mala fide investigation involving abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII is clearly established, but cannot dictate the details of police investigation. Where the police simply take no action, the ordinary remedy is a complaint under Sections 190 and 200. Divine Retreat Centre reproduced Gangadhar's account of the Magistrate's inquiry: a police-investigation order and report may follow; the complaint may be dismissed under Section 203 if no offence is disclosed; or cognizance and process may follow a prima facie disclosure. The Court applied the principle requiring recourse to the alternative remedy.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Others, 2007:INSC:1243 : (2008) 2 SCC 409, set out a written approach to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3) if FIR registration or investigation remained unsatisfactory. The Magistrate may direct registration and a proper investigation, and monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage and Others, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed that remedy, the requirement of prima facie satisfaction, the discretion to recommend a change of investigating officer to senior police, and the prohibition on the Magistrate investigating personally. Its concern that High Courts should not routinely entertain FIR-registration and investigation requests reinforced recourse to the statutory remedy before the Magistrate.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. and Others, W.A. No. 247/2016, a Gwalior Division Bench decision dated 20 December 2016, was reproduced on alternative remedies and mandamus. It qualified the denial of mandamus under Section 154 by preserving the four exceptions in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. It also explained that Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, concerns mandatory police registration, rather than an automatic entitlement to a writ without using the alternative remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 227 was the constitutional provision named in the petition. Sections 154 and 154(3) CrPC govern cognizable-information registration and escalation to the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) concerns a Magistrate direction and monitoring of police investigation. Sections 190 and 200 provide the complaint and cognizance route; the Gangadhar quotation described Section 203 dismissal when the complaint fails to disclose an offence after inquiry. Chapter XII governs police investigation.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the petitioner's assertion that the police had failed to register an FIR justified the requested direction in this Article 227 miscellaneous petition. (ii) Which statutory remedies were available before the Magistrate for a complaint and, where appropriate, registration or investigation, as distinct from the police's initial duty under Section 154. (iii) How the narrow Article 226 exception and the qualification to the writ alternative-remedy rule stated in the authorities affected the request.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the distinction between the police duty and the appropriate judicial remedy. Aleque Padamsee recognised that information disclosing a cognizable offence requires registration, but that police inaction is pursued by a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200. Divine Retreat Centre and Gangadhar explained the Magistrate's inquiry and the available investigation and process options. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe provided a further remedy through the Superintendent of Police and Section 156(3): on prima facie satisfaction, the Magistrate may direct and monitor proper investigation but cannot conduct it personally. These authorities supported the conclusion that the petitioner's assertion of police inaction did not, by itself, require the High Court to register the complaint or direct registration of an FIR.

The rare Article 226 exception in Divine Retreat Centre and the Whirlpool qualification preserved in Shweta Bhadauria showed that the ordinary alternative-remedy rule was not an absolute jurisdictional bar. Shweta Bhadauria also distinguished Lalita Kumari's police-registration rule from an automatic entitlement to mandamus. The Court dismissed the petition seeking a direct FIR direction, while preserving recourse to the Magistrate. It decided the appropriate forum and remedy, without concluding that the police had acted lawfully or that the complaint lacked substance.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the miscellaneous petition, expressly leaving the petitioner at liberty, if he wished, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS for redress.

Sanat Kumar Soni v. Om Prakash Agrawal and Others, M.P. no. 2445/2024, 14/08/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (823) Prev Next

