Headnote :- POCSO prosecution — age proof / medical test as fallback - On a third application for regular bail, the Court used Section 94(2) of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015 as a guide to the order in which age evidence should be considered. A school date-of-birth certificate or examination-board certificate comes first, followed, in its absence, by a municipal or panchayat birth certificate. Only in the absence of those documents is an ossification test or another current medical age test required. The prosecutrix's ninth-class mark sheet was issued in 2016–17, before the alleged incident on 4 January 2018. Both it and the school admission register recorded her date of birth as 4 November 2002. The Court found no overwriting in the photocopied register, mark sheet or headmaster's certificate. The father rejected the suggestion that she was twenty, and the mother's evidence was consistent with the school admission record. At this bail stage, the Court rejected the suggested adverse inference from the prosecutrix's refusal to undergo ossification testing and did not discard the record merely because the school was private. Defence counsel pressed for the age assessment despite the Bench's stated concern that it could prejudice the trial. The assessment was not a final determination for the trial.

Kidnapping and sexual-offence allegations — minor's call to meet / consent - Defence counsel cited S. Varadarajan v. State of Madras, AIR 1965 SC 942, and argued that the prosecutrix had telephoned the applicant and voluntarily asked him to take her away. The Court read her evidence as acknowledging only that she and the applicant were on speaking terms. A call or meeting did not itself show that this minor had insisted on leaving for marriage or agreed to sexual relations. On the evidence before it, the Bench distinguished S. Varadarajan, as well as Ashwani Kumar Saxena v. State of M.P., AIR 2013 SC 553, and Jabar Singh v. Dinesh, 2010 (2) ACR 1214 (SC). It rejected the submission that consent negated the IPC rape and POCSO allegations, without finally resolving the trial evidence.

Regular bail — trial-delay assertion / Section 436A CrPC - About two years in custody and the examination of three witnesses did not establish responsibility for, or unreasonable delay in, the trial. No trial-court order sheets had been produced to show witness attendance or whether the applicant had sought adjournments. The Court also found that no statutory right to release under Section 436A had accrued, referring to the stated minimum sentence of ten years. It rejected the third bail application and declined to fix a deadline for completing the trial on the limited record, while expecting the trial to proceed expeditiously according to law.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sandeep Chouhan's third application for bail under Section 439 CrPC arose from his arrest on 25 January 2018 in Crime No. 9/2018, registered at Indargarh Police Station, Datia, for offences under Sections 363, 366 and 376(2) IPC and Section 5/6L of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act. The alleged incident occurred on 4 January 2018. The case diary was available to the Court. By the bail hearing, the prosecutrix's mother (PW1), the prosecutrix (PW2) and her father (PW3) had testified. The applicant claimed that the prosecutrix was over eighteen and had consented, so the rape allegation could not stand. Counsel insisted on an age finding despite the Bench's warning that a finding at the bail stage might prejudice the trial court. The Bench therefore examined the age evidence while recognising the limited procedural setting.

Counsel challenged the school date of birth on several grounds: there was allegedly overwriting; the fourth-class mark sheet said to have been handed to the police was missing from the charge sheet; the mother said that a teacher had written the date; and the prosecutrix had declined a proposed ossification test. Counsel sought an adverse inference and later argued that a private school register was unreliable. The State relied on the mother's estimate that the prosecutrix was about fifteen, her evidence that she had supplied the date at admission, and the ages of the younger siblings. It denied any overwriting. The Court inspected the photocopied admission register recording 4 November 2002, a ninth-class mark sheet for the 2016–17 session recording the same date, and a headmaster's certificate. The father denied the suggestion that she was twenty, noting that he had married in 1999.

Counsel further submitted that the prosecutrix had called Sandeep and wanted him to take her away, relying on S. Varadarajan. The Court noted her testimony that they were on speaking terms but rejected the inference that a phone call established that she had insisted on being taken away. Finally, counsel relied on roughly two years in custody and the examination of only three witnesses to seek bail or a time-bound trial. No trial-court order sheets were furnished to explain the delay, witness attendance or responsibility for adjournments.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ashwani Kumar Saxena v. State of Madhya Pradesh, AIR 2013 SC 553, and Jabar Singh v. Dinesh and Others, 2010 (2) ACR 1214 (SC), were cited by defence counsel to challenge acceptance of the date of birth recorded by the private school. The Bench considered the argument and distinguished the present case: the ninth-class mark sheet pre-dated the alleged offence, recorded the same birth date as the register, and the alleged overwriting was not visible.

S. Varadarajan v. State of Madras, AIR 1965 SC 942, was cited to support the applicant's contention that the prosecutrix herself had called and insisted that he take her away. The Court considered that reliance but distinguished the case on the limited evidence recited in the order. The prosecutrix said that they spoke; this did not establish that she had insisted on leaving or consented to marriage contrary to law, much less to sexual activity.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed regular bail. IPC Sections 363 and 366 concerned the kidnapping and taking-away allegations; Section 376(2) and Section 5/6L POCSO Act were the registered sexual-offence provisions. Section 94(2) of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015 was reproduced as a guide to the sequence of age evidence: a school birth-date certificate or matriculation/equivalent certificate; in its absence, a birth certificate issued by a corporation, municipal authority or panchayat; and only in the absence of both, an ossification test or another current medical age test ordered by the competent Committee or Board. The proviso required the test to be completed within fifteen days. The Court held that the prosecutrix's minority was material to the consent submission. Section 436A CrPC was considered in relation to a possible statutory right to release based on time in custody. The Court said that none had accrued after about two years in custody for an offence carrying a stated ten-year minimum sentence.

4. Issues : (i) For this third bail application, did the contemporaneous school documents and witness evidence support minority despite alleged overwriting, the school's private status, a missing earlier mark sheet and refusal to undergo ossification testing? (ii) Did the prosecutrix's admitted conversations or alleged telephone invitation establish that she had voluntarily asked to be taken away or had given legally relevant sexual consent, in light of the age assessment and counsel's cited authorities? (iii) Did the applicant's time in custody and the stated trial progress establish sufficient delay, an entitlement under Section 436A, or a basis for fixing a deadline to complete the trial? The Court cautioned against making an age finding at the bail stage but addressed the question because counsel pressed for a finding.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court saw no overwriting in the photocopied admission register, the ninth-class mark sheet or the headmaster's certificate. The ninth-class mark sheet had been issued in 2016–17, before the January 2018 incident, which reduced the force of the suggestion that a birth date had later been contrived for the case. The Court weighed the parents' evidence, the father's rejection of the suggestion that the prosecutrix was twenty, and the plausibility of a student aged about sixteen being in tenth class. Applying the document-first sequence in Section 94(2) as a guide, it held that ossification testing was not required while the specified documentary material existed. Refusal to undergo that medical test therefore did not displace the school record. For the purpose of deciding bail, it found that the prosecutrix was a minor at the time of the incident and held that a minor's consent was immaterial to the defence submission.

On the taking-away contention, the Court distinguished being on speaking terms and making a call to meet from insisting that the applicant take a minor away for marriage or consenting to sexual relations. It distinguished S. Varadarajan and the two age authorities on the evidence before it. It therefore refused to treat the asserted consent as negating the prosecution at this stage.

The delay argument failed because no trial-court order sheets had been produced to show whether witnesses attended or the applicant sought adjournments. The examination of only three witnesses and custody since January 2018 did not, without that record, enable the Court to determine responsibility for delay. It stated that no statutory entitlement under Section 436A had arisen, referring to the stated minimum sentence of ten years and the period in custody. For the same lack of evidence, it did not fix a deadline for the trial, although it expected the trial to conclude expeditiously in accordance with law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the third application for regular bail. No release under Section 436A CrPC was ordered.

Sandeep Chouhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 7471/2020, 19/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (824) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 498A IPC — cruelty without dowry demand - The two limbs of the statutory explanation are alternatives. Clause (a) covers wilful conduct likely to drive a woman to suicide or cause grave injury or danger to her life, limb or mental or physical health. Clause (b) covers harassment directed at an unlawful demand for property or valuable security, or arising from non-fulfilment of that demand. Aluri Venkata Ramana v. Aluri Thirupathi Rao, SLP (Crl) No. 9243/2024, order dated 12 December 2024, explained the broader protection introduced by the 1983 amendment. Drawing on U. Suvetha and Arvind Singh, it rejected dowry demand as an indispensable ingredient. Applying that test, the Court rejected the husband's argument that allegations of physical and mental harassment because his wife had a girl child could not support Section 498A merely because no dowry was demanded. The allegations remained to be tested at trial.

Matrimonial complaint — absence of earlier FIR / credibility at threshold - The wife's failure to complain between the 2009 marriage and 2021 did not make later allegations of domestic cruelty inherently false. The Court reasoned that violence within the home may go unreported while a woman attempts to preserve the marriage. That explanation defeated the proposed automatic inference at the quashing stage; it was not a final credibility finding that every alleged incident occurred.

FIR quashing — face-value test / investigation autonomy - Neeharika Infrastructure v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, was quoted on the police's authority to investigate cognizable offences and the sparing exercise of the power to quash. Where the FIR discloses no offence, investigation need not continue. While the material remains incomplete, the Court must not inquire into the reliability of the allegations or conduct a mini trial. The wife's two FIRs alleged identifiable assaults, threats and, in one, cruelty. The High Court declined to decide the truth of those allegations or stop the investigation.

Counter FIR — shared encounter / disputed rival accounts - The husband's FIR No. 503/2021 and the wife's FIR No. 504/2021 both placed him at her parental home on 2 August 2021 in connection with his scooter, but differed on who assaulted whom. His own account therefore partly corroborated the setting, but the disputed assault could not be resolved under Section 482. Her earlier FIR No. 274/2021 concerned 3 July and was lodged then, so it could not be a counterblast to his 2 August FIR. Neither circumstance warranted quashing either of her FIRs.

Informant malice — cognizable allegations / inherent powers - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, discussed the limited purposes of Section 482, the R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal categories, the distinction between an absence of legal evidence and contested evidence, and the caution against stifling a legitimate prosecution. Where an FIR alleges a cognizable offence, the informant's alleged malice is secondary and cannot, by itself, justify quashing. The material collected during investigation and evidence adduced at trial determine the fate of the accused. On this record, the rival FIR did not establish the wife's malice, and both quashing applications were dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A common order decided Sandeep Shakya's MCRC Nos. 35841 and 40764 of 2021, each seeking quashing of an FIR lodged by his wife, respondent 2. The first challenged Crime No. 274/2021, registered at Padav Police Station, Gwalior, under IPC Sections 294, 323 and 506. The wife alleged that, at their matrimonial house on 3 July 2021, he argued over trivial matters, abused her, struck her with fists and blows, and threatened to kill her if she told her parents. She informed an uncle before reporting the incident. The second challenged Crime No. 504/2021, registered at Gwalior Police Station under Sections 294, 323, 506 and 498A read with 34 IPC. It alleged harassment by the husband, his parents and his younger brother because the couple had a daughter rather than a son. The allegations included hair-pulling and assault on 3 July, and threats to drive her from the home and arrange his remarriage. It further alleged that, on 2 August at her parental home, he abused and slapped her, twisted her right hand, slapped two relatives who intervened, and threatened her as he left by scooter.

The husband said that they had married in 2009 and that she had made no complaint until 2021. He said there had been no dowry demand and characterised both FIRs as malicious retaliation for his own Crime No. 503/2021. In his FIR, he alleged that, after he reclaimed his scooter from his brother-in-law's home on 2 August, her relatives demanded that he return it, abused and assaulted him, and threatened him. The High Court compared the dates and accounts. Her first FIR had already been lodged on 3 July. Her second FIR and his FIR concerned 2 August, and each placed him at her parental home in connection with the scooter, although their accounts of the assault differed sharply. The Court also noted medical support for the reported assault in Crime No. 504/2021.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aluri Venkata Ramana v. Aluri Thirupathi Rao and Others, Supreme Court order dated 12 December 2024 in SLP (Criminal) No. 9243/2024, was quoted for the history and ingredients of Section 498A IPC. The quoted decision explained that the 1983 amendment addressed cruelty to married women beyond dowry deaths. Wilful conduct capable of serious physical or mental harm under clause (a) is an alternative to harassment for an unlawful property demand under clause (b). It reproduced U. Suvetha v. State on the ingredients requiring a married woman, cruelty or harassment, and the husband or his relative as the actor. It also reproduced Arvind Singh v. State of Bihar on the statutory treatment of painful or distressing conduct. The Bench's consideration of Suvetha and Arvind Singh was confined to those reproduced passages. It used the propositions incorporated through Aluri to reject the husband's argument that the absence of a dowry demand precluded an offence, without deciding guilt.

Neeharika Infrastructure Private Limited v. State of Maharashtra and Others, (2021) 19 SCC 401, was quoted at length. Its relevant test preserves police power and duty to investigate cognizable offences; if no offence at all appears, investigation need not proceed. FIR quashing is exceptional and sparing, and a court at this stage does not examine whether allegations are reliable or genuine, weigh incomplete evidence, or intrude on police investigation. The FIR need not be an encyclopaedia; the court assesses whether the stated facts disclose a cognizable offence, subject to the recognised parameters in R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab and State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal. The present Bench applied that threshold rather than deciding the rival assault accounts.

Before Neeharika, paragraph 12 listed XYZ v. State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha. The Court cited them collectively without developing independent holdings from them.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar and Others, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted extensively on the limits of Section 482. It explained the three statutory purposes of inherent jurisdiction and the need to exercise it cautiously and exceptionally. It also set out the categories summarised in R.P. Kapur, AIR 1960 SC 866, including a legal bar, allegations which do not constitute an offence when taken at face value, and a manifest absence of supporting legal evidence. It distinguished an absence of evidence from evidence whose credibility requires evaluation at trial, then reproduced the illustrative Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, categories, including a demonstrably malicious prosecution. It qualified this account by explaining that, where allegations disclose a cognizable offence, the informant's alleged malice is secondary and cannot by itself terminate the proceedings. The material gathered during investigation and evidence adduced at trial determine the outcome. The Bench applied that qualification to reject an inference of malice drawn solely from the husband's rival FIR. The additional cases nested in the Renu Kumari quotation supported its general caution; the present Court did not independently apply each of them.

3. Statutes considered : Section 498A IPC was reproduced with its explanation. Clause (a) concerns wilful conduct likely to lead to suicide or cause grave injury or danger to the woman's life, limb or mental or physical health. Clause (b) addresses coercive harassment linked to unlawful demands for property or valuable security. The husband or a relative must be the alleged actor. Dowry demand is not an ingredient in every case, although the alleged conduct must satisfy one of the statutory alternatives; absence of a dowry demand does not automatically prove cruelty. Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent jurisdiction to quash proceedings, to be exercised cautiously to secure justice or prevent abuse without trying contested facts. Sections 294, 323 and 506 IPC were recorded in both FIRs, and Sections 498A and 34 in the second.

4. Issues : (i) Could the Section 498A FIR survive without an allegation of dowry demand, given the separate wilful-conduct and unlawful-demand limbs and the alleged harassment because the couple had a daughter? (ii) Did the absence of police complaints during most of the marriage render the July and August 2021 allegations inherently false? (iii) Did the competing FIRs, their dates and the shared account of the scooter encounter show a retaliatory counterblast, or did they raise factual disputes for trial which could not be decided under Section 482? (iv) Did the husband's allegation of the wife's malice independently justify quashing when the FIRs alleged cognizable assaults, threats and cruelty? These questions concerned whether the proceedings should continue at the threshold, rather than final criminal liability.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied the express alternatives in Section 498A. Wilful conduct of the serious character described in clause (a) can constitute cruelty even without an unlawful property demand under clause (b). Aluri Venkata Ramana reinforced this interpretation by explaining the statutory purpose and ingredients. The wife's allegation of physical and mental harassment because she bore a girl child could not be excluded merely on the ground that there was no dowry demand.

The long interval between the marriage in 2009 and the police reports in 2021 did not itself disprove cruelty. The Court observed that a woman may tolerate domestic mistreatment and avoid formal complaints to preserve her marriage; the absence of earlier FIRs cannot automatically establish falsity. The Court then applied the face-value standard stated in its Supreme Court citations and in Neeharika, declining to inquire into credibility or conduct a mini trial. The two FIRs alleged specific acts of abuse, assault and threats, with cruelty also alleged in Crime No. 504/2021.

On the counterblast plea, chronology was decisive for Crime No. 274/2021. It concerned the incident on 3 July and was lodged that day, before the husband's 2 August Crime No. 503/2021, so it could not have been lodged in retaliation for his later report. In relation to Crime No. 504/2021, the rival August FIRs both placed the husband at the wife's parental home with his scooter but accused different people of assault. His own report thus partly supported the location and encounter rather than conclusively defeating her account. The correctness of the rival assault accounts was a disputed question of fact which could not be decided under Section 482.

Finally, Renu Kumari cautioned against treating the informant's alleged malice as an independent ground for quashing when the report discloses a cognizable offence. The Court noted the assault allegations and medical support for the second FIR, and found no basis to infer the wife's malice from the husband's FIR alone. It left the truth of the evidence, the participation of the persons accused and ultimate proof of the offences for investigation and trial. Both connected quashing applications consequently failed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the applications. Neither Crime No. 274/2021 nor Crime No. 504/2021 was quashed. The Court made no order of acquittal or conviction and no final determination of the three rival FIRs; investigation and any ensuing criminal process remained subject to law.

Sandeep Shakya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 35841/2021 & 40764/2021, 07/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (825) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — face-value complaint / no defence mini trial - XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, and State of T.N. v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, cautioned against a roving factual assessment while investigation remained incomplete. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterated Bhajan Lal's standard of sparing quashing and the prohibition on judging the genuineness of allegations. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, preserved intervention where allegations, taken at face value, fail to constitute an offence, or where a legal bar or manifest abuse is shown, while prohibiting premature assessment of credibility. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, stated the exception where no offence is disclosed. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, rejected detailed scrutiny of the defence at the Section 482 stage. The complaint alleged that a schoolteacher had submitted the complainant's land and loan documents to a bank, and a Section 202 witness linked him to that submission. The allegation that a later loan of Rs 2.9 lakh had been obtained through forgery and diverted could not be rejected on his bare denial.

Section 482 CrPC — defence document exception - Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, stated the ordinary rule against assessing the accused's defence or disputed defence documents when considering quashing. It recognised a limited exception for a public document or one whose veracity the complainant does not contest. The applicant produced no such undisputed material establishing his asserted lack of connection with the transaction. His status as a government-school teacher did not displace the witness's account that he had submitted documents to the bank. The Court applied the face-value threshold, rather than a categorical bar to all defence material.

Complaint process — prima facie sufficient ground / Section 202 witnesses - Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary, (2010) 7 SCC 578, explained that "sufficient ground" in Sections 203, 204 and 209 CrPC means a prima facie basis to proceed, rather than proof for conviction. A Section 202 inquiry is restricted to whether process should issue; the Magistrate does not weigh the evidence meticulously as at trial. The complainant need examine only the witnesses she regards as material, rather than every named witness. Non-examination of some witnesses does not itself deprive the Magistrate of jurisdiction if a prima facie case remains. Vijay Kakodiya's Section 202 evidence linked the applicant to the documents, and the order issuing process was sustained. The order declaring him an absconder was noted separately and did not replace the prima facie test.

Cognizance — Section 468 CrPC limitation / offences above three years - The applicant relied on the transaction in 2007, the complaint filed on 25

November 2010 and cognizance taken on 13 March 2015. He conceded, however, that Sections 420, 467, 468 and 409 IPC carry imprisonment exceeding three years, so the Section 468 limitation bar he invoked did not apply. The quashing application was dismissed, and the interim order of 13 September 2019 was vacated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sandeep Shrivastava filed MCRC No. 37369/2019 under Section 482 CrPC to quash Complaint Case No. 352/2015, pending before the Additional Chief Judicial Magistrate at Lakhnadaun, Seoni. He contended that cognizance was time-barred and denied any connection with the alleged forgery, pointing to his employment as a teacher at Government Primary School Rahlon Khurd. Chando Bai, respondent 1, had complained under IPC Sections 409, 420, 467, 468 and 120-B. She alleged that she and her sons Vishwanath and Baijnath jointly owned 5.150 hectares in Rahlon Khurd, recorded in their names under khasra numbers 101/1, 190, 192 and 320. Seeking funds for farming in about 2007, she presented loan documents. She said that respondent 2, a branch manager, repeatedly told her that the Union Bank Dhuma branch would sanction the loan and retained the submitted papers after describing them as irrelevant.

According to the complaint, a recovery officer later told her that Rs 2.9 lakh was outstanding in her name, although she denied taking that loan or receiving its proceeds. She alleged that, about two months before complaining, she had learned that the applicant and bank officers had used forged or fabricated papers to withdraw and share the amount. Documents obtained through a right-to-information request allegedly bore forged signatures. Vijay Kakodiya, examined under Section 202 CrPC, stated that the applicant had submitted the complainant's documents. The High Court noted that the applicant had no official bank duty to receive those materials. It also noted an order dated 24 July 2019 declaring him an absconder, even though he had obtained a certified copy to challenge the proceedings. That observation did not replace the separate assessment of whether process should issue.

The applicant maintained that the allegations were false, denied his connection with the transaction and sought quashing of the entire proceeding. He further contended that the conduct in 2007, the complaint on 25 November 2010 and cognizance on 13 March 2015 established a limitation bar. He conceded, however, that the charged offences under Sections 420, 467, 468 and 409 carry imprisonment exceeding three years. The Bench addressed the Section 482 standard, the threshold for issuing process and that concession. An interim order dated 13 September 2019 remained in force until the final dismissal.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted on a High Court exceeding its Section 482 jurisdiction by evaluating disputed allegations before investigation was complete. In that case, allegations involving inappropriate pictures, blackmail and a contested settlement required investigation; the settlement's voluntariness could not be assumed. The present Bench applied the principle against a roving inquiry to the contested bank-document allegation, while keeping the distinct facts of the cited case separate. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin and Others, (2018) 5 SCC 718, was quoted briefly against premature assessment before investigation was complete. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, quoted the Bhajan Lal caution that the categories are not a watertight code and that quashing is rare and sparing, rather than an inquiry into the reliability of FIR or complaint allegations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was quoted for a distinct qualification: ordinarily the High Court does not weigh an accused's defence or the truth of his documents at quashing, but an appropriate public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute may be considered. The cited passage names Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. as sources of that exception, without independent discussion of their facts. The current applicant's unsupported denial and occupation were not treated as such decisive undisputed proof. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, was quoted for the need to avoid deciding reliability, which is reserved for trial, and to prevent an accused from prematurely terminating a legitimate complaint. It also preserved the sparing power to intervene where allegations, even if accepted, do not constitute an offence, where a legal bar exists, or where malicious abuse is demonstrated. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, reinforced the power to quash when allegations taken at face value or uncontroverted material disclose no offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, criticised minute examination of a disputed defence after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, order of 30 June 2021 in Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, cautioned that a Section 482 court must not scrutinise material as a trial court would and that an FIR need not be encyclopaedic. The Bench applied the shared principle against a mini trial while retaining the exception where allegations taken at face value disclose no offence. Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha were cited as taking a similar view, without individually developed ratios in this order.

Shivjee Singh v. Nagendra Tiwary and Others, (2010) 7 SCC 578, was quoted extensively and applied to the order issuing process. "Sufficient ground" under Sections 203, 204 and 209 means prima facie satisfaction that proceedings should continue, rather than proof sufficient for conviction. Its discussion of Chandra Deo Singh, Kewal Krishan and Mohinder Singh described the narrow Section 202 inquiry: assessment of a trial defence and detailed appraisal of evidence belong to later stages. It further construed the proviso to Section 202(2) in context. Failure to examine every witness named by the complainant does not by itself deprive the Magistrate of jurisdiction if the material witnesses examined make out a prima facie case. The present Court found the complainant's account and Vijay Kakodiya's evidence sufficient to meet that threshold.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the request to quash the complaint. It restrained the High Court from trying contested defence facts while permitting intervention if uncontroverted allegations disclosed no offence or a recognised legal bar applied. Sections 200 and 202 concerned preliminary complaint evidence; the witness was examined under Section 202. Sections 203 and 204 governed dismissal of the complaint and issue of process respectively, and Section 209 appeared in the quoted explanation of "sufficient ground". The proviso to Section 202(2) was discussed through Shivjee Singh: it concerns examination of material witnesses, and not every failure to examine a named witness automatically creates a jurisdictional defect. Section 468 provided the basis for the limitation objection. The applicant conceded that IPC Sections 420, 467, 468 and 409 carried punishments exceeding three years, so the limitation period he invoked did not apply to the complaint.

4. Issues : (i) Did the complainant's account, taken with preliminary witness evidence at face value, make a prima facie case connecting this applicant to alleged forged banking documents, despite his denial and teaching post, so that Section 482 quashing was inappropriate? (ii) What level of "sufficient ground" and witness examination under Sections 202–204 was required for issuing process, as distinct from proof for conviction? (iii) Did the dates of the alleged transaction, complaint and cognizance trigger the Section 468 limitation bar in light of the specified offences' punishments?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench applied the Supreme Court's limits on Section 482 jurisdiction. XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Gourishetty Mahesh, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh disfavoured premature factual appraisal or a mini trial of the disputed defence. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui preserved a narrow exception for a public or undisputed defence document; M. Srikanth and Gourishetty Mahesh preserved quashing where the accepted allegations disclose no offence. Here, the complaint alleged that the applicant had submitted the land and loan papers; a bank loan was later shown in Chando Bai's name with signatures she alleged were forged; she had received no proceeds; and the applicant and branch manager had shared the amount. Vijay Kakodiya's Section 202 statement specifically linked the applicant to submission of the documents. His status as a schoolteacher with no bank duty to accept the papers did not displace that allegation. His denial required examination of evidence, rather than a factual conclusion under Section 482. The Court noted the absconder order as a separate circumstance. It held that the complaint and witness evidence, if accepted, provided a basis for process, without finding that the applicant had in fact forged documents or received the funds.

Shivjee Singh established prima facie sufficient ground as the threshold for issuing process. The Magistrate need not determine whether the evidence proves guilt or weigh it as at a full trial. Not every witness named by a complainant must be examined if material preliminary evidence supports proceeding. In light of Vijay Kakodiya's account and the complaint narrative, the Court found no error in issuing process. It did not rely only on suspicion unconnected with the alleged acts.

The limitation submission failed on counsel's concession that IPC Sections 420, 467, 468 and 409 were punishable by imprisonment exceeding three years, for which the Section 468 limitation period invoked was inapplicable.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. Complaint Case No. 352/2015 and the order issuing process against Sandeep Shrivastava were not quashed. The interim order of 13 September 2019 was vacated.

Sandeep Shrivastava v. Chando Bai and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 37369/2019, 23/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (826) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 mandamus — FIR request / statutory alternative - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police duty to register an FIR on information disclosing a cognizable offence from the remedy when the police do not act: a complaint under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognised Article 226 intervention in rare cases where a mala fide investigation, abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII are clearly established. Even then, a court cannot direct how the police investigate. The Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016, held that mandamus may be declined for failure to use Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200, subject to the Whirlpool exceptions. Lalita Kumari's statement of police duty does not itself confer an unqualified right to a writ. The Court dismissed this writ seeking an FIR direction, with liberty to approach the Magistrate, without deciding whether the unspecified affidavit allegation constituted an offence.

Magistrate remedies — Section 156(3) registration and investigation control - Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, set out a written approach to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by a Section 156(3) application to the Magistrate if registration or investigation remained unsatisfactory. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed that, on prima facie satisfaction, the Magistrate may direct registration, require and monitor proper investigation, and recommend a change of investigating officer to senior police if necessary. The Magistrate cannot investigate personally. Divine Retreat Centre, reproducing Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, also explained the complaint inquiry under Sections 190 and 200. On finding a prima facie case, the Magistrate may direct investigation and a report. A complaint disclosing no offence may be dismissed under Section 203, while a prima facie disclosure of an offence may lead to process. These available remedies supported the liberty to approach the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sandeep Singh Rajawat filed Writ Petition No. 4266 of 2025 under Article 226, seeking a direction to the police to register an FIR. Counsel submitted that the petitioner had approached the respondents for registration but no action had followed. The State opposed the request, arguing that a writ seeking an FIR direction was not ordinarily maintainable because the petitioner had an efficacious complaint remedy before the trial Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, also referred to as Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023.

The Court framed the issue as whether a writ seeking a direction to the police to register an FIR was maintainable. It quoted Supreme Court decisions distinguishing the police duty from the complainant's remedies, explaining the Magistrate's registration and investigation powers, and defining exceptional writ control. It also quoted a Gwalior Division Bench decision on alternative remedies. The decision concerns the appropriate forum and remedy; it does not determine the merits of any public-employment or false-affidavit offence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee and Others v. Union of India and Others, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted at length. It recognised the police's duty under Section 154 when the facts disclose a cognizable offence, while explaining the aggrieved person's complaint remedy before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 if the police do not register an FIR. The quoted decision distinguished Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary, which addressed police action, from All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari, which addressed the remedy when the police fail to act. That distinction was applied here. Aleque Padamsee's separate sanction direction related to its own litigation.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and Others, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted on the exceptional exercise of Article 226 power where mala fide investigative conduct, abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII are clearly established. Even then, the court may insist on lawful process but cannot direct police methods. It separately directed complainants alleging ordinary police inaction to Sections 190 and 200. Its quotation of Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, explained the complaint inquiry. On evidence establishing a prima facie case, the Magistrate may direct investigation and a report instead of immediately issuing process. A complaint disclosing no offence may be dismissed under Section 203, while a prima facie disclosure of an offence may lead to cognizance and process. The present Court applied the ordinary complaint remedy.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Others, (2008) 2 SCC 409, set out successive remedies: a written approach to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3) if the FIR remained unregistered or the investigation was deficient. The Magistrate may order registration or proper investigation and monitor it. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage and Others, (2016) 6 SCC 277, applied Sakiri Vasu's alternative-remedy approach. It required prima facie satisfaction before the Magistrate issued directions, recognised the power to recommend a change of investigator to senior police, and emphasised that the Magistrate cannot investigate personally. The Bench quoted these propositions to explain recourse to the ordinary statutory forum rather than a routine FIR writ. It did not prejudge a future Section 156(3) application.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.A. No. 247/2016, a Gwalior Division Bench decision dated 20 December 2016, was reproduced as High Court precedent. It held that mandamus under Section 154 may be denied where the informant has not used Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200, unless an exception identified in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, applies. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, concerning the police duty to register an FIR, from an entitlement to a writ without using those alternative remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was the writ jurisdiction invoked. Section 154 CrPC imposes the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence; Section 154(3) provides for a written approach to the Superintendent of Police. Section 156(3) permits the Magistrate, on the relevant prima facie basis, to require registration or proper investigation and monitor it, while leaving investigation to the police. Sections 190 and 200 provide the alternative complaint and cognizance procedure, with dismissal under Section 203 if the inquiry reveals no offence, as discussed in the Gangadhar passage. Chapter XII governs police investigation in the discussion of exceptional intervention. The order's operative liberty refers to Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS, 2023.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Article 226 should be used to compel police registration when the petitioner asserted inaction on his request, despite alternative statutory routes. (ii) How the Section 154 duty differs from a complainant's remedies before the Superintendent of Police and Magistrate, including a complaint inquiry and Section 156(3) investigation control. (iii) Whether the exceptional writ power for demonstrated mala fide investigative abuse or the qualified alternative-remedy exception was engaged on this record.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the police's obligation from the petitioner's choice of forum. Aleque Padamsee held that information disclosing a cognizable offence calls for an FIR, while police inaction is addressed by approaching the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200. Divine Retreat Centre and its Gangadhar quotation explained the Magistrate's options after examining a complaint. The complaint may be dismissed if no offence appears; if the applicable prima facie threshold is met, cognizance, process or a direction for police investigation may follow. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe also provided for a written approach under Section 154(3) and an application under Section 156(3), including monitoring of the investigation. The Magistrate cannot investigate personally.

The Bench also quoted Divine Retreat Centre's rare Article 226 exception for clearly established mala fide or abusive investigation and Shweta Bhadauria's qualification preserving the Whirlpool exceptions. The petitioner asserted that the police had not acted. The Court applied the ordinary statutory remedy and left him at liberty to approach the Magistrate.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition with liberty to the petitioner, if he wished, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS, 2023 for redress.

Sandeep Singh Rajawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 4266/2025, 17/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (827) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial murder proof — complete chain / suspicion cannot replace proof - Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, required each incriminating circumstance to be firmly proved, consistent only with guilt and conclusive. Together, the circumstances must form a complete chain excluding a reasonable hypothesis of innocence. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, and Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, reinforced the need for reliable links and the distinction between conjecture and proof. John David also reproduced related formulations of the complete-chain requirement. The child's death by drowning was supported by unchallenged medical evidence, but this did not establish homicide or the accused's responsibility for the death. Once the last-seen and sandal-recovery links failed, a quarrel and threat at a marriage procession could not fill the gaps. C.T. Ponnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 11 SCC 391, was relied on for the insufficiency of a solitary circumstance. The Court held that the evidence was consistent with an accidental fall into an unprotected well at ground level and acquitted the appellant of murder.

Last seen — short time gap, prosecution burden and corroboration - Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, Mahavir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 6 SCC 716, and State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, required an interval sufficiently short to exclude a realistic possibility of intervention by another person. Jagroop Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 768, illustrated why an overnight gap may still be acceptable on the supporting facts of a particular case. Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, kept the initial burden on the prosecution. After a last-seen link is proved, Section 106 of the Evidence Act may apply to facts specially within the accused's knowledge, but that link is not conclusive without other circumstances. Kanhaiya Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 4 SCC 715, rejected an inference of guilt from last-seen evidence or a failure to explain alone. Here, Gulab delayed disclosure despite meeting the missing child's father. His account placed the pair first at a boundary wall and later under a tree absent from the spot map; his account of women drawing water also raised a timing discrepancy. Shivlal saw the pair from behind, and his conduct after the death was implausible. The Court found that last-seen was not proved beyond reasonable doubt.

Recovered article — identification of deceased's sandal - The old chappal allegedly recovered on the appellant's disclosure was never subjected to an identification test or identified by any witness in court as belonging to the child. Recovery of an unidentified object could not connect him to Naval Kishore's death. The proposed corroborative link therefore failed independently of the last-seen evidence. The decision addressed the object's identity and probative connection.

Motive — family quarrel / missing evidentiary links - Witnesses described Komal striking the appellant with a chappal in a marriage procession after ear-pulling, followed by a threat. The Court found that this weak motive, standing alone, did not prove that the appellant had pushed Komal's nine-year-old son into the well. With no reliable last-seen account and no identified sandal, it set aside the life sentence under Section 302 IPC and ordered the appellant's release if he was not required in another case.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sangram appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the Additional Sessions Judge, Pichhore's judgment in Sessions Trial No. 140/2009 dated 19 June 2010. He had been convicted of Naval Kishore Pal's murder under Section 302 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment, a fine of Rs 500 and three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Naval, aged about nine, had come with his mother Vimla and siblings to a family wedding. His elder relative Jairam reported on 5 May 2009 that Naval had gone missing on 4 May and that a body had been found in Harbhajan's well. The police registered a merg inquiry under Section 174 CrPC, followed by a murder FIR and charge sheet after learning of a quarrel between Sangram and Naval's father Komal at the wedding procession. The prosecution alleged that a resentful Sangram had pushed the child into the well. Sangram denied guilt; thirteen prosecution witnesses and two defence witnesses were examined.

The post-mortem doctor, Dr Rohit Bhadkariya (PW8), described a laceration below the nose and upper lip, and a contusion and swelling in the right parietal region. He concluded that death was caused by asphyxia due to drowning. As he explained, his report mistakenly recorded the date as 5 April instead of 5 May 2009. The defence did not challenge the cause of death in cross-examination. A tibia bone preserved for diatom examination was returned because it was broken, so the test could not be performed. The appellate Bench accepted drowning as the cause of death, excluded suicide on this record, and separately considered whether the child had fallen or been pushed into the well. Proof of drowning did not establish murder.

The alleged motive arose when someone pulled Komal's ear in the wedding trolley. Witnesses said that Sangram tried again, Komal struck him with a chappal, and Sangram threatened to "see" him. The prosecution relied on Shivlal (PW1) and Gulab (PW7) to place Sangram with Naval near the well on 4 May. Shivlal said that he had seen them from behind, walking towards the well. After learning that his great-grandson's body had been found, however, he left for Lohagarh and did not join Komal's family until 8 May. Gulab claimed a sighting at a boundary wall or under a sheesham tree, but the spot map showed an unprotected well at ground level, without a boundary wall or the tree. He met Komal after learning that the child was missing but did not disclose the claimed sighting; his police statement was recorded eight days later. His account of women fetching water there at 10 a.m. also conflicted with the alleged discovery of the body, the merg report at 11 a.m. and the panchnama at noon. The final alleged link was an old sandal recovered on Sangram's disclosure, which was never identified by a test or in court as Naval's. The appeal challenged the completeness of the circumstantial chain; the State defended the conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, set out five requirements: firmly established circumstances, consistency only with guilt, conclusive tendency, exclusion of innocent hypotheses, and a chain leaving no reasonable ground for innocence. The Bench quoted its distinction between "must be proved" and "may be", drawing on Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade as reproduced within Sharad, and applied it to the disputed last-seen and recovery links. Pudhu Raja v. State, (2012) 11 SCC 196, emphasised reliable, clinching evidence for each link and that grave suspicion cannot substitute for proof. Ram Singh v. Sonia, (2007) 3 SCC 1, likewise warned that failure of an important link breaks the chain and conjecture cannot fill the gap. Inspector of Police v. John David, (2011) 5 SCC 509, restated the complete-chain requirement and reproduced State of U.P. v. Ram Balak's discussion of other established formulations, including C. Chenga Reddy, Padala Veera Reddy and Sharad. The present Court treated these authorities as reinforcing the same standard and found that the prosecution had failed to exclude an accidental fall.

Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, was quoted on the need for a last-seen interval so short as to exclude plausible intervention by another person. Its quoted passage referred to Bodhraj, Rambraksh and Anjan Kumar Sarma. Mahavir Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 6 SCC 716, and State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, reiterated the time-gap and evidentiary qualifications; Satish also noted the positive witness evidence in that case. Jagroop Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 11 SCC 768, showed that an overnight interval did not automatically invalidate last-seen evidence where the search and post-mortem timing in that case supported it. Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, kept the initial burden of proof on the prosecution and discussed the special-knowledge burden under Section 106 of the Evidence Act after last-seen evidence, while making clear that the circumstance was not conclusive without corroboration. Kanhaiya Lal v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 4 SCC 715, required a further connection with the crime and rejected guilt based on a failure to explain alone. The High Court applied these initial-proof and corroboration safeguards before drawing any inference against Sangram. It found the two eyewitnesses unreliable in material respects.

C.T. Ponnappa v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 11 SCC 391, was quoted for the proposition that a solitary proved circumstance cannot establish guilt in a circumstantial case without a complete chain. That case concerned gunshot residue rather than a well. The Bench applied its broader rule on an incomplete chain to the weak motive remaining after the other links failed. The nested cases within the long quotation from John David were not individually analysed by the present Bench.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC supplied the appeal from conviction. Section 302 IPC was the murder charge and conviction under review, and the prosecution had to prove that the drowning resulted from culpable homicide by the appellant beyond reasonable doubt. Section 174 CrPC framed the initial police death inquiry; a murder FIR followed on the prosecution theory. Section 106 of the Evidence Act arose in the quoted Ashok last-seen principle: facts specially within an accused's knowledge may call for explanation after the prosecution proves a close and credible last-seen link, but the provision does not replace the initial burden or repair a missing chain. The diatom test failed because the sample was broken, and death by drowning was accepted on the unchallenged medical evidence, rather than on a statutory presumption.

4. Issues : (i) Was Naval's death established as drowning and, separately, as a homicide attributable to Sangram rather than an accidental fall? (ii) Did the wedding-procession dispute and threat constitute a sufficiently strong motive and, if not, what corroboration was required? (iii) Were PW1 and PW7 reliable last-seen witnesses with an adequately close, meaningful link to death, considering their conduct, discrepancies and the spot map? (iv) Was the recovered sandal proved to belong to Naval, and did all proved circumstances together exclude innocence under the Supreme Court's chain standard? The appeal concerned the existing murder conviction, sentence and custody.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench accepted PW8's unchallenged medical conclusion that drowning caused death, despite the corrected date in the report and the unavailable diatom test. The injuries did not independently establish that Sangram had pushed the child. With no evidence of suicide, the remaining question was whether the death was accidental or homicidal. Applying Sharad, Pudhu Raja, Ram Singh and John David, each prosecution link had to be proved by reliable evidence and form part of a chain incompatible with a reasonable explanation of accidental death. A speculative motive could not substitute for a failed last-seen or recovery link.

Witnesses described the ear-pulling, chappal strike and threat at the wedding, but the Court found no strong motive to kill Komal's child. The principles on time gap and corroboration in Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan, Ashok, Mahavir Singh, Jagroop Singh, Satish and Kanhaiya Lal required both a trustworthy sighting and a connection excluding a realistic intervening event. Gulab knew that the child was missing and met Komal, yet did not tell him of the claimed sighting. His account changed from a boundary wall to a sheesham tree absent from the spot map, while the well was at ground level and unprotected. His account of water being drawn at 10 a.m., the discovery of the body and the reporting sequence also raised a serious inconsistency, and his police statement was delayed. Shivlal's sighting from behind and departure to Lohagarh despite learning that his great-grandson was dead undermined his reliability. The Bench held that last-seen was not proved beyond reasonable doubt. That failure of proof prevented Section 106 from being used to shift the prosecution's initial burden on the basis of a conjectured encounter.

The old sandal was not identified in a test or by any trial witness as belonging to Naval. The Court therefore rejected its recovery as a proved incriminating link, without needing to decide every aspect of the disclosure procedure. Only the wedding quarrel remained, leaving the prosecution without a complete chain. C.T. Ponnappa reinforced that a solitary circumstance could not support a conviction. The spot map showed a well at ground level without a protective boundary. The Bench concluded that the child had fallen accidentally, that the alleged murder was unproved, and that the Section 302 conviction could not stand.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal appeal. The judgment and sentence dated 19 June 2010 in Sessions Trial No. 140/2009 were set aside, and Sangram was acquitted under Section 302 IPC. As he was in jail, the Court ordered his immediate release unless he was required in another case. It directed that he receive a free copy of the judgment and that the trial-court record be returned with a copy for compliance. The life sentence, Rs 500 fine and default term consequently ceased with the conviction being set aside.

Sangram v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 647/2010, 25/03/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (828) Prev Next

Headnote :- Successive regular bail — co-accused parity / disclosure and independent scrutiny - Later coordinate-Bench bail orders for Vishnu Bhadoriya and Sonu Khangar, and the trial court's consequent bail to Somendra Rajawat, did not by themselves establish a change warranting Sanjay Bhadoriya's release on his third Section 439 CrPC application. His first application had been rejected on merits and that rejection had not been brought to the coordinate Benches' notice. The Court expressly rejected a negative-parity rule, yet required full material disclosure as a matter of judicial discipline and considered the present application independently, rather than automatically following orders made without the earlier refusal. Omission of details from the first short bail order was not a new circumstance.

Bail order — restraint in recording trial merits - Vaman Narain Ghiya v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 2 SCC 281, was invoked to avoid an elaborate discussion of evidence in a bail order which might prejudice the trial. The Bench warned counsel of that risk if he pressed for a detailed ruling on the merits. Counsel nevertheless insisted. The Court then examined the FIRs filed before it and rejected the inaccurate factual submissions.

Witness intimidation — bail factors and victim's interest - Counsel invoked Sanjay Chandra v. CBI, (2012) 1 SCC 40, against treating refusal of bail as punishment. Virupakshappa Gouda v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 5 SCC 406, distinguished that case's context and required attention to the accusation, supporting evidence, punishment and risk of threatening or influencing witnesses. Its quotation incorporated the factor lists in Chaman Lal and Prasanta Kumar Sarkar. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 11 SCC 129, was quoted on the victim's role and the public interest in an effective criminal process, without reversing the presumption of innocence. The FIR here alleged that the applicant and armed co-accused entered the complainant's home, threatened the family to secure changes in testimony in an earlier case involving the complainant's son, fired shots and assaulted the family. The 2016 FIR confirmed that the son was a victim, contrary to counsel's assertion. The Court regarded the alleged coercion as serious interference with justice and rejected bail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sanjay Bhadoriya's third application for bail under Section 439 CrPC arose from his arrest on 4 April 2018 in Crime No. 218/2018, registered at Cantt Police Station, Guna, for IPC Sections 307, 294, 458, 195-A, 427 and 34 and Arms Act Sections 25/27. His first application, MCRC No. 15055/2018, had been dismissed on merits on 24 April. A second application, MCRC No. 17597/2018, was dismissed as withdrawn on 14 May. Later, coordinate Benches granted bail to Vishnu Bhadoriya and Sonu Khangar on 31 May and 4 June in MCRC Nos. 20814 and 21014/2018, and the trial court granted bail to Somendra Rajawat alias Shetti on 20 June. Sanjay sought identical treatment. He argued that the later orders and the omission of some factual details from his own earlier short order amounted to a change in circumstances. The Court found that the coordinate orders did not refer to his earlier rejection on merits. It assessed his application independently, rather than applying a negative-parity rule.

The present FIR alleged that Vishnu, Somendra and others had assaulted the complainant's son and relatives in 2016, and that the pending trial prompted an attempt to force changes in their testimony. On the night of the present incident, it alleged a threatening telephone call to the son, followed by a late-night visit to the family home by Sanjay and three co-accused. Vishnu and Somendra allegedly carried firearms; Sanjay and Sonu carried lathis. The group allegedly threatened to kill the family if their statements were not changed and fired shots, from which the family members took shelter. They then allegedly climbed the boundary, broke doors and windows, and struck the complainant and his sons before fleeing when the police arrived. These were allegations considered at bail, rather than findings at trial.

Counsel asserted that the complainant and his relatives had no connection with the 2016 Crime No. 303/2016, and that the witness list in a separate Section 302 case also omitted them. The Bench asked whether an affidavit had been filed to support the first assertion; none had been filed. It examined the 2016 FIR, lodged by Vikash Agrawal, which named Satyam as a victim. The present complainant identified Satyam as his son. The witness list in the separate murder case did not address the alleged coercion concerning Crime No. 303/2016. Counsel also relied on FIR No. 196/2018, lodged by Sonu Khangar after an alleged assault by the complainant's side, to argue that the present case was a counterblast. In explaining that FIR, counsel described Sonu's employer Vishnu as Sanjay's business partner. The Court treated this as an admission of an association with a co-accused in both the earlier and present cases. Counsel insisted on a detailed order on merits despite the warning that such discussion might affect the trial. The State opposed release.

2. Precedents — Considered : Vaman Narain Ghiya v. State of Rajasthan, (2009) 2 SCC 281, was cited by the Court for restraint in detailed bail merits discussion and elaborate documentation. The Bench warned that a detailed ruling could prejudice the trial; the applicant's counsel expressly requested one anyway. The precedent explained the caution, not a final evidentiary standard for guilt.

Sanjay Chandra v. Central Bureau of Investigation, (2012) 1 SCC 40, was cited by counsel for the principle that refusal of bail should not punish a person who has not been convicted. The Bench quoted Virupakshappa Gouda and Another v. State of Karnataka and Another, (2017) 5 SCC 406, which acknowledged Sanjay Chandra but rejected automatic application of observations made in a different factual setting. Virupakshappa required attention to the nature and manner of the alleged crime and the circumstances of the particular case. Its discussion incorporated Chaman Lal v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 525, on the accusation, likely sentence, supporting evidence, apprehended witness tampering or threats, and prima facie support. It also quoted Prasanta Kumar Sarkar v. Ashis Chatterjee, (2010) 14 SCC 496, listing grounds to believe the accusation, gravity, sentence, flight, conduct, recurrence, witness influence and the risk of thwarting justice. The present Bench particularly considered the alleged threats to witnesses, intrusion into the home and firing of shots.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat and Others, (2018) 11 SCC 129, was quoted on the shift toward recognising victims as stakeholders and the social interest in fair, effective prosecution, including victim participation and compensation. The Court used it to emphasise that witness coercion can undermine delivery of justice. The order's final assessment remained a bail-stage application to the allegations and documents before the Bench.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the application for regular bail. The registered offences were IPC Sections 307, 294, 458, 195-A, 427 and 34 and Arms Act Sections 25/27; Section 195-A made the alleged pressure on witnesses especially relevant. The FIR in Crime No. 303/2016 was considered to test counsel's assertion that the present complainant's family had no connection with the earlier case, rather than to decide the earlier charges. Section 302 IPC arose only in a distinct pending murder case whose witness list counsel produced. The Bench explained that this other case was not the asserted source of the intimidation.

4. Issues : (i) Did subsequent bail of co-accused, obtained without disclosure of Sanjay's earlier merits rejection, require parity or constitute a sufficient new circumstance in a third bail application? (ii) Could a claimed omission of factual detail in the earlier short bail order justify rehearing on that basis, and how much merits discussion was appropriate? (iii) Did the allegation of coercion of the 2016 case's witnesses have a real evidentiary connection to the complainant's family, despite counsel's denial and reliance on other FIRs and a separate murder witness list? (iv) How should the presumption against punishment before conviction be balanced with prima facie accusation, threats, witness influence and victim or public interests at this bail stage?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench declined to follow the later co-accused bail orders mechanically. It stated that negative parity does not apply as a rule, but judicial discipline requires counsel to disclose all relevant facts, including an earlier rejection of a co-accused's bail application. Because the later coordinate orders did not mention Sanjay's first dismissal on merits, the Court assessed his application independently. The lack of detail in the earlier bail order was not a changed circumstance. Citing Vaman Narain Ghiya, the Court initially cautioned against a detailed discussion which could prejudice the trial.

The earlier FIR, arising in 2016, identified Satyam as a victim of Vishnu's alleged assault, and the present complainant identified Satyam as his son. This documentary link contradicted counsel's assertion, unsupported by an affidavit, that neither the complainant nor his family was involved. The witness list in the separate Section 302 case was irrelevant to the alleged pressure to change testimony in Crime No. 303/2016. Counsel's own account of FIR No. 196/2018 associated the applicant with Vishnu as business partners; it did not conclusively establish that the present case was a fabricated counterblast. The Court found sufficient support for the intimidation allegation for the purpose of deciding bail, rather than proof beyond reasonable doubt.

Sanjay Chandra's warning against punitive detention before trial was considered through Virupakshappa Gouda's requirement to assess the risks in the particular case. Under the Chaman Lal and Prasanta Kumar Sarkar factors, witness influence and the risk of thwarting justice were central here. Dinubhai's discussion of victims reinforced the importance of protecting a fair process, without permitting conviction on accusation alone. The Court regarded the alleged visit with firearms and lathis, death threats linked to earlier testimony, indiscriminate firing and assault inside the house as direct interference with the delivery of justice and a serious risk to witnesses' freedom. It held that the case was unsuitable for bail. These were provisional reasons given in deciding a third bail application; the trial remained free to assess the offences and evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the third application for regular bail.

Sanjay Bhadoriya v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 22796/2018, 04/07/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (829) Prev Next

Headnote :- Juvenility — 1999 offence / pending appeal under 2000 act - A Juvenile Justice Board inquiry found that Babua alias Rajiv Singh had been about seventeen years and five months old on 30 July 1999. The Juvenile Justice Act, 1986 then set the male-juvenile age threshold at sixteen, but the 2000 Act raised it to eighteen. Section 20 and its Explanation extend the later definition to pending trials, revisions and appeals as though it applied on the offence date. Devilal v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 989/2007, judgment dated 25 February 2021, was quoted at length. It explained that such proceedings may reach a finding of guilt, but the ordinary court must refer the matter to the Board instead of imposing an adult sentence on the juvenile. Devilal's incorporated discussion of Mumtaz, Pratap Singh, Bijender Singh, Dharambir, Kalu, Hari Ram, Satya Deo and Jitendra Singh addressed the legal fiction, a claim made after conviction and the appropriate juvenile disposition. Repeal under the subsequent 2015 Act did not undo the accepted claim in a pending case, in light of Section 25 of that Act. Babua was treated as a juvenile despite the pre-2000 offence and his present adult age.

Juvenile convicted in regular court — conviction retained / sentence sent to board - The Court affirmed the Section 302 IPC findings against both Sanjay Singh and Babua for two deaths, on the basis of the unchallenged eyewitnesses and post-mortem evidence. The adult Sanjay's two life terms and five-year Arms Act term were affirmed. Babua's sentence was set aside while his conviction was retained. Under Section 20 of the 2000 Act, Section 15(d) and Devilal, the jurisdictional Juvenile Justice Board was to determine an appropriate fine within six months. Babua, who was already on bail, had to appear on 22 July 2022, and his bail bonds were discharged. The Court noted his substantial earlier custody as an undertrial and after conviction. This was a distinct sentencing outcome, rather than an acquittal of the juvenile or a reduction of the adult's sentence.

Common appeal — homicidal deaths, accused-wise evidence and abatement - The doctor described sharp and penetrating injuries including Virendra's severed neck and Raghunandan's gunshot and penetrating wounds, and opined two homicides. Ramrani, Sushila, Preeti and Guddi attributed knife blows to Babua and the beheading and shot to Sanjay; counsel conceded cross-examination had not discredited them. The Court sustained the findings while preserving different adult and juvenile consequences. Rajendra Singh, appellant 3, had died during the appeal; his appeal had already abated on 16 June 2022 and no new merits relief was ordered for him.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Criminal Appeal No. 696/2011 challenged the Additional Sessions Judge, Gohad's judgment dated 29 July 2011 in Sessions Trial No. 56/2000. The trial court had convicted Sanjay Singh, Babua alias Rajiv Singh and Rajendra Singh of two murders under Section 302 IPC. On each count, it imposed life imprisonment and a fine of Rs 1,000, with a stated three-year term of rigorous imprisonment in default. Sanjay and Babua also received five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 1,000, with one year's imprisonment in default, for Arms Act Sections 25(1)(a) and 27. The sentences were concurrent. Rajendra died during the appeal, which had been dismissed as abated in his case by order dated 16 June 2022. The present consideration of the merits and sentence therefore concerned the two surviving appellants.

The prosecution alleged that, on 30 July 1999, Virendra Singh went to fetch water and was surrounded by Rajendra, Sanjay and Babua. The weapons attributed to them included a gun, knife, country-made pistols and sword, according to their respective alleged roles. They pursued Virendra into Abhilakh's house, dragged him out and attacked him.

Eyewitnesses attributed the beheading to Sanjay and the penetrating knife wounds to Babua, with Rajendra also involved. Raghunandan was then shot and struck, dying at the scene. Ramrani reported the deaths and a background dispute over Rajendra's missing buffaloes. During panchayat negotiations, Virendra had temporarily handed over animals, and Rajendra had threatened the family. The police seized weapons, obtained post-mortems, sent articles to the forensic laboratory, obtained Arms Act sanction and filed charges. Rajendra initially absconded and was later named in a supplementary charge sheet. These were prosecution details; the appellate findings rested on medical and eyewitness evidence.

Dr A.K. Mudgal (PW12) documented deep incised and penetrating wounds, severed neck structures and shock from vital-organ injuries in Virendra. He recorded gunshot and penetrating wounds with shock in Raghunandan and classified both deaths as homicide. Ramrani (PW5), Sushila (PW6), Preeti (PW7) and Guddi (PW8) described the attacks and the respective roles. Counsel did not substantially challenge the trial court's finding of guilt and conceded that cross-examination had not undermined those witnesses. The principal appellate contention concerned Babua's age. At the High Court's direction, a Juvenile Justice Board report dated 12 March 2014 found that he had been approximately seventeen years, five months and twenty-four days old at the offence date; counsel's later submission described his age as seventeen years, five months and twenty-six days. Both versions placed him below eighteen and above sixteen. He had been on bail after the inquiry. The question was whether the eighteen-year threshold under the later 2000 Act applied to his pending appeal despite the sixteen-year threshold for males under the 1986 Act at the time of the 1999 incident.

2. Precedents — Considered : Devilal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Supreme Court judgment dated 25 February 2021 in Criminal Appeal No. 989 of 2007, was the controlling authority. It considered a person who had been over sixteen but below eighteen at the time of an offence governed by the 1986 Act. Section 20 of the 2000 Act allows pending proceedings to continue before an ordinary court. If that court finds the person guilty, however, it must record the finding without imposing an adult sentence and refer the matter to the Juvenile Justice Board. The Explanation deems the eighteen-year definition applicable to pending trials, revisions and appeals even where the person is now an adult. The quoted Devilal passage discussed how the 2015 Act's Section 25 preserves the relevant inquiry despite repeal of the 2000 Act. Applying that legal framework to Babua, the Bench affirmed his guilt while setting aside his adult sentence.

Devilal quoted Mumtaz alias Muntyaz v. State of U.P. on the legal fiction in Section 20 and reviewed Pratap Singh v. State of Jharkhand and Bijender Singh v. State of Haryana. These explained why a male who had crossed sixteen under the old law could remain before an ordinary criminal court yet receive a juvenile disposition under the 2000 Act. It quoted Dharambir v. State (NCT of Delhi) and Kalu v. State of Haryana on claims of juvenility even after conviction and the inclusion of appeals among pending cases. It also quoted Hari Ram v. State of Rajasthan, as reaffirmed in Satya Deo alias Bhoorey v. State of U.P., on applying the age definition retrospectively to pending proceedings despite the person's adulthood by the commencement of the 2000 Act. These authorities were incorporated through Devilal's reasoning or noted as submissions. Devilal further considered Jitendra Singh v. State of U.P. on the practical disposition of a juvenile offender who is now an adult. Given the person's age and the grave offence, admonition, probation under parental or institutional care and placement in a special home may be unrealistic, leaving a fine as a feasible order for the Board. The present Court relied on that discussion and Section 15(d) of the 2000 Act to remit only the determination of an appropriate fine for Babua. The Board was required to fix its amount.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC supplied the conviction appeal. Section 302 IPC governed the two murder convictions and minimum life sentence invoked for the adult Sanjay; Arms Act Sections 25(1)(a) and 27 governed the additional conviction and five-year sentence of Sanjay and Babua. Section 299 CrPC explained the initial charge sheet while Rajendra absconded.

Under the 1986 Juvenile Justice Act, a male above sixteen at the time of the 1999 offence fell outside the juvenile definition. The Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2000 raised the threshold to eighteen under Section 2(l). Section 20 and its Explanation govern pending criminal proceedings. They permit an ordinary court to reach and record a finding of guilt, while requiring disposition by a Board under the juvenile law instead of an adult sentence. Section 7-A was invoked in counsel's submission on age. Section 15(d) was cited for a fine as an available Board order. Section 25 of the 2015 Act appeared in the controlling Devilal discussion as preserving the accepted pending claim despite repeal of the 2000 Act.

4. Issues : (i) Were the two deaths homicidal and, although largely not disputed on appeal, did reliable evidence sustain the two surviving appellants' convictions and differentiated roles? (ii) Was Babua, aged between seventeen and eighteen on 30 July 1999 according to the Board inquiry, entitled to the 2000 Act's juvenile definition in this still-pending appeal although he did not qualify as a male juvenile under the 1986 Act? (iii) If guilt stood, what distinct sentences or Board disposition followed for adult Sanjay and Babua, considering Section 20, earlier custody and the now-adult status? (iv) What was the effect of Rajendra's death and prior abatement?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench examined the medical record despite counsel's limited challenge to the findings of guilt. Dr Mudgal's reports showed lethal antemortem cutting, penetrating and gunshot injuries to Virendra and Raghunandan, establishing homicidal death. The four eyewitnesses identified the respective acts: Babua inflicted penetrating wounds on Virendra, Sanjay severed his neck and shot at Raghunandan, and others attacked. Counsel conceded that cross-examination had yielded nothing making those witnesses unreliable. The Court therefore affirmed the two Section 302 findings against the surviving appellants and their recorded Arms Act convictions. Rajendra's already-abated appeal was neither revived nor decided afresh on the merits.

Under Devilal's reading of Section 20, an ordinary court could complete the pending appeal and retain a finding of guilt, but the under-eighteen definition and juvenile disposition under the 2000 Act applied as though the Act had been in force at the time of the incident. On the quoted saving analysis, repeal under the 2015 Act did not remove that benefit. Babua's conviction was therefore affirmed, but the adult sentence imposed by the trial court could not stand. The Court noted his custody as an undertrial from 4 November 1999 to 25 April 2004 and after conviction from 29 July 2011 to 8 January 2014. It directed the Board to fix an appropriate fine under Section 15(d) in light of Devilal.

Sanjay was an adult whose guilt had been affirmed and who had no basis for juvenile relief. The Bench affirmed his two life sentences and the five-year term of rigorous imprisonment under the Arms Act, retaining the trial court's direction that the sentences run concurrently. The different outcomes followed each accused's statutory status, rather than different findings on the two killings.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Sanjay Singh's appeal; he remained in jail to serve the balance of the affirmed life and Arms Act sentences. Babua alias Rajiv Singh's appeal was allowed only as to sentence. His conviction was maintained, his sentence set aside, his bail bonds discharged, and the matter referred to the jurisdictional Juvenile Justice Board to determine an appropriate fine within six months. He was directed to appear there on 22 July 2022. Rajendra Singh's appeal had already abated because of his death. The Court directed that the appellants receive immediate free copies of the judgment and that the trial record be returned, with transmission to the Board for compliance.

Sanjay Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 696/2011, 22/06/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (830) Prev Next

Headnote :- Framing charge — strong suspicion and limited sifting - A revision against charges under IPC Section 304 Part II and Motor Vehicles Act Sections 184 and 185 was dismissed. At the stage of framing charges, the court considers the prosecution material and documents at face value to determine whether they disclose the ingredients of the alleged offence and whether the accused might have committed it. The court does not conduct a roving inquiry or require proof sufficient for conviction. Sheoraj Singh Ahlawat v. State of U.P. set out the governing principles, quoting Onkar Nath, Som Nath Thapa and Mohanlal Soni on the prima facie existence of the ingredients and strong suspicion founded on the material. It also discussed Debendra Nath Padhi on excluding a mini-trial based on defence material and Rumi Dhar on the comparable approach at discharge. Prafulla Kumar Samal permits limited sifting of the evidence and consideration of broad probabilities; discharge may be appropriate where two views are equally possible and the material raises only some suspicion, rather than grave suspicion.

Alcohol odour and fatal motorcycle crash — prima facie material, not conviction proof - The prosecution alleged that Sanjeev drove a motorcycle after consuming alcohol and drove rashly or negligently. He allegedly failed to negotiate a curve, causing the motorcycle to fall into a drain and Jeevan Ahirwar, who was riding with him, to suffer fatal injuries; Deepak escaped by jumping. The doctor's Pre-MLC recorded a smell of alcohol from Sanjeev's oral cavity. The Court considered this notation together with the alleged driving and accident as prima facie material for framing charges. It expressly left open whether the medical observation would suffice for conviction. State through P.S. Lodhi Colony v. Sanjeev Nanda was cited on alcohol's effect on coordination, judgment, reflexes and vision, and the resulting danger on the road. The trial must be decided on the evidence received at trial.

Limited revision outcome — trial unaffected - The Sessions Court's charge order dated 5 May 2022 in ST No. 14/2022 was sustained, and Criminal Revision No. 2104/2022 was dismissed. The High Court expressly directed that its observations would have no bearing on the final outcome and that the trial court must decide the case strictly on the evidence received at trial. The decision concerns the sufficiency of the material to frame charges; it neither affirms guilt nor finally determines the prosecution under Section 185.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sanjeev Ahirwar challenged, under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC, the order dated 5 May 2022 passed by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Sironj, District Vidisha, in Sessions Trial No. 14/2022, framing charges under Section 304 Part II IPC and Sections 184 and 185 Motor Vehicles Act. According to the prosecution account, Sanjeev rode a motorcycle with Jeevan Ahirwar and Deepak alias China Ahirwar. He allegedly had consumed alcohol and drove rashly and negligently. Near Chaudakhedi junction, he allegedly failed to control the motorcycle at a curve, and it fell into a drain. Sanjeev and Jeevan suffered serious injuries; Deepak jumped from the vehicle, and Jeevan died of his injuries. A doctor recorded a smell of alcohol from Sanjeev's oral cavity in his Pre-MLC. Police filed a charge sheet, and the Sessions Court framed the stated charges. These were allegations and preliminary material, not trial findings. Sanjeev argued that the smell of alcohol from his oral cavity, without sufficient scientific evidence, could not establish that he was under the influence of alcohol. He also argued that this was simply an accident and could not sustain the Section 304 Part II charge. The State submitted that driving after consuming liquor endangers vehicle occupants and road users and that the charge order was justified. The High Court considered the revision on this limited record.

2. Precedents — Considered : Paragraphs 86–87 of State through P.S. Lodhi Colony v. Sanjeev Nanda, (2012) 8 SCC 450, were quoted on the danger of drunken driving and alcohol's effect on consciousness, vision, depth perception, coordination, judgment and reflexes. The quoted passage also rejected the contention in that case that the driver was not beyond the limit prescribed by the Motor Vehicles Act or that the victims were at fault. The order refers to the case as "State of Sanjeev Nanda."

Sheoraj Singh Ahlawat and Others v. State of U.P. and Another, (2013) 11 SCC 476, was quoted extensively on the standard for framing charges or ordering discharge. The passage quoted from Onkar Nath v. State (NCT of Delhi) requires the court to consider whether the prosecution material, taken at face value, discloses the ingredients of the offence and a ground for presuming its commission. Strong suspicion founded on that material may suffice, without an assessment of whether the evidence is sufficient for conviction. The quoted discussion in Sheoraj traces support through State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy, State of Maharashtra v. Som Nath Thapa and State of M.P. v. Mohanlal Soni: it is enough for framing a charge that the accused "might have" committed the offence, whereas conviction requires a finding that he "has" committed it. No detailed assessment of the material's probative value is undertaken at that stage. Mohanlal Soni specifically distinguishes sufficient ground to proceed from sufficient proof to convict.

The quotation from Sheoraj also discusses State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi, which confines the accused's submissions at the stage of framing charges to the police or prosecution record and excludes the production of defence evidence at that stage, as that would turn the proceeding into a mini-trial. It refers to Rumi Dhar v. State of W.B. on strong suspicion at discharge under Section 239. It also quotes Union of India v. Prafulla Kumar Samal on Section 227: the judge may sift and weigh the evidence for the limited purpose of determining whether a prima facie case exists, consider broad probabilities and basic infirmities, and discharge the accused if two views are equally possible and the material raises only some suspicion, rather than grave suspicion. The judge may not, however, conduct a roving inquiry as though conducting the trial. The High Court applied these principles on strong suspicion to the Pre-MLC and the alleged crash.

3. Statutes considered : The charge order was challenged in revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC. Section 304 Part II IPC was the culpable-homicide provision under which the charge was framed. The revision determined only whether that charge could proceed on the prima facie record, leaving open whether knowledge, causation or the offence as a whole would ultimately be proved. Motor Vehicles Act Section 184 concerned dangerous driving, and Section 185 concerned driving by a person under the influence of alcohol or drugs. Charges had been framed under both provisions.

4. Issues : (i) Did the doctor's notation of a smell of alcohol, considered with the alleged rash or negligent motorcycle crash and fatal injury, provide material giving rise to strong or grave suspicion sufficient to sustain the Section 304 Part II charge? (ii) Did Sanjeev's contention that further scientific proof was absent require the charges to be quashed at this preliminary stage, or was that a matter for trial? (iii) Did the characterisation of the incident as an accident require the connected charges under Motor Vehicles Act Sections 184 and 185 to be set aside? (iv) What limits did review at the stage of framing charges impose on the weighing of evidence and on the trial court's eventual decision?

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor specifically recorded a smell of alcohol from Sanjeev's oral cavity in the Pre-MLC. The High Court held that this was prima facie material indicating that he was under the influence of alcohol at the time of the accident. It expressly distinguished that preliminary assessment from the question whether the observation alone could justify a conviction. The Court also referred to the allegation that he drove negligently and that the motorcycle crash caused Jeevan's fatal injuries. Considering these circumstances together, it held that the Sessions Court had made no error in framing a charge under Section 304 Part II.

Applying Sheoraj Singh Ahlawat and the authorities cited in it, the High Court reiterated that a charge may be framed when the prosecution material supports grave suspicion that the accused might have committed the charged offence. The court may assess the record for prima facie ingredients and basic infirmities, but cannot undertake a meticulous or roving assessment of its evidentiary value as though deciding whether to convict. Sanjeev's contention that the odour was scientifically insufficient to establish that he was under the influence of alcohol was therefore left for trial and did not determine the outcome at the stage of framing charges. The passage from Sanjeev Nanda explained the danger and physiological effects of drunken driving; it did not replace proof of this accused's precise intoxication level or mental state.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the criminal revision and sustained the charge order dated 5 May 2022. It expressly stated that none of its observations would affect the final outcome. The trial court must decide the case strictly on the evidence received at trial. No conviction, sentence, acquittal or final liability under the Motor Vehicles Act was determined.

Sanjeev Ahirwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.R. no. 2104/2022, 20/06/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (831) Prev Next

Headnote :- Successive Section 482 petition — post-charge-sheet challenge maintainable - The petitioners had earlier sought quashing of the FIR while the investigation was pending. One petition was dismissed after counsel declined to argue; another was withdrawn with liberty to challenge the charge sheet, which had meanwhile been filed. The State's objection to a third petition was rejected because the present challenge concerned the charge sheet filed after completion of the investigation, rather than the record available while the investigation was pending. The investigation against co-accused Keshav Upadhyay, a company employee, had separately been quashed in the context of a compromise and a finding that the dispute was civil. That result did not automatically apply to the company directors, as the allegations against them might involve different ingredients. The Court considered the merits and then dismissed the present petition.

Section 482 record — unproved private defence documents cannot resolve factual disputes - The directors relied on contractual default, an asserted right of forfeiture, notices concerning the remaining amount, a claimed revocation of an agreement to sell to a third party, and a later settlement. The Court held that their private documents were not part of the charge-sheet record, were not public documents and required formal proof. At the stage of framing charges, the accused had no right to introduce defence documents. In exercising its inherent powers in this case, the Court would neither treat the private assertions as established nor go beyond the prosecution documents accompanying the charge sheet. The defence concerning payment and default, and the validity of the later transaction, were therefore matters for trial.

Villa transaction — civil features and conditional compromise do not themselves extinguish criminal allegations - The complainant allegedly paid Rs 17 lakh as an advance, and the lender disbursed Rs 45 lakh, toward the price of Rs 1,06,60,000 for a villa. Yet possession was withheld, and an allotment or agreement to sell was made in favour of a third party. The directors asserted that the buyer had defaulted and relied on a settlement dated 25 November 2016 under which the cases were to be withdrawn. The Court held that failure to perform a settlement term alone did not justify quashing the FIR. A transaction governed by a civil contract may also disclose prima facie ingredients of a criminal offence. Applying Sau. Kamal Shivaji Pokarnekar v. State of Maharashtra, the Court refused to stifle the proceedings by resolving disputed merits at the initial stage, while directing that its observations must not prejudice the trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sanjeev Srivastava and other directors of M/s Assotech CP Infrastructure Private Limited petitioned under Section 482 CrPC to quash the charge sheet filed by Police Station Morar, Gwalior, in Crime No. 683/2015 under IPC Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471, and Criminal Case No. 818/2019 before the ACJM, Gwalior. The police registration also included Section 34. The complainant allegedly agreed to buy Villa A-4 in Windsor Hills, City Centre Extension, Gwalior, for Rs 1,06,60,000. An advance of Rs 17 lakh was paid to Keshav Upadhyay, a company employee and co-accused. A tripartite arrangement dated 17 December 2012 with Dewan Housing Finance Corporation provided financing of Rs 85 lakh, of which Rs 45 lakh was disbursed to the company. The complainant alleged that Rs 62 lakh had thus been paid without vacant possession being handed over. He further alleged that, after property values rose, the directors sought to alienate the villa and executed an allotment dated 1 June 2015 in a third party's favour.

In Keshav's separate MCRC No. 12512/2015, the investigation against him was quashed by order dated 3 April 2017 on the ground that the dispute was civil. The later discussion recorded the complainant's no-objection following a compromise. The directors' first petition to quash the FIR, MCRC No. 2442/2017, was dismissed on 5 December 2018 after counsel said he was unprepared and declined to argue. The Court pointed out that the allegations against the directors could involve ingredients different from those concerning Keshav. The directors withdrew MCRC No. 51893/2018 on 14 May 2019 with liberty to challenge the charge sheet, which had by then been filed. They brought that challenge in the present MCRC No. 30937/2019. They asserted that the complainant had defaulted, that the contract permitted forfeiture of 10% of the advance, and that notices had called on the complainant to collect the remaining amount. They admitted the execution of an agreement to sell to a third party but asserted that it had been revoked. They also relied on a compromise dated 25 November 2016 stipulating withdrawal of the civil and criminal cases. The Court distinguished the allegations from the directors' unproved private defence documents.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sau. Kamal Shivaji Pokarnekar v. State of Maharashtra was quoted and applied. The quoted passage held that, where a complaint prima facie discloses the ingredients of the alleged offences, the truth of the allegations must be determined at trial. Courts should not stifle proceedings at the initial stage of issuing process by deciding the merits of the accused's defence, and the civil character of an allegation alone does not require quashing. Although the Supreme Court case concerned issuance of summons, the High Court applied its principles on considering allegations at face value and on the coexistence of civil and criminal aspects to refuse quashing of this charge sheet. The Supreme Court quotation records counsel invoking State of Karnataka v. M. Devendrappa and Anr. The High Court based its rulings on successive petitions and private documents on the procedural sequence and its stated principles governing the stage of framing charges and the exercise of inherent powers. Keshav Upadhyay's earlier High Court order was distinguished by reference to his role and the later discussion of the compromise; it was not treated as requiring the same result for the directors.

3. Statutes considered : The inherent powers under Section 482 CrPC were invoked to quash the charge sheet and the pending criminal case. The charge sheet under review included IPC Section 420, concerning cheating, and Sections 467, 468 and 471, concerning the allegations of forgery and use of documents. The police registration also included Section 34. The parties' civil suit and settlement were factual matters; they did not provide independent statutory grounds automatically requiring quashing.

4. Issues : (i) Did the dismissal of the earlier petition and withdrawal of the subsequent petition bar a fresh Section 482 challenge to the charge sheet filed later? (ii) Could the directors rely on the quashing of the investigation against Keshav and on private papers concerning agreements, payments and forfeiture, outside the prosecution charge sheet, to establish without formal proof that the dispute was exclusively civil? (iii) Did the alleged conditional settlement and withdrawal of the civil suit compel withdrawal or quashing of the FIR? (iv) Did the alleged advance and lender payments, failure to hand over possession and attempted alienation to a third party prima facie permit criminal prosecution despite the contractual dispute? (v) What effect, if any, would these preliminary observations have on the trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : The State's objection to maintainability was overruled. The first petition was filed while the investigation was pending and further evidence could still be collected. The second was withdrawn with liberty to challenge the charge sheet after it had been filed. The present challenge therefore concerned a different procedural record following completion of the investigation. The order concerning Keshav, a company employee, did not automatically determine the directors' liability; the earlier order itself had noted that the allegations against them might involve different ingredients.

The directors' private documents were not part of the charge sheet, were not public documents and required formal proof. The Court declined to treat the disputed assertions concerning buyer default, forfeiture, notices and revocation as proved in the Section 482 proceeding. At the stage of framing charges, an accused could not introduce defence documents for an assessment as though at trial. In this proceeding, the Court confined itself to the prosecution material.

The alleged failure to perform a conditional settlement did not itself justify quashing the FIR, even if the civil suit had been withdrawn. The allegations, taken at face value, were that Rs 62 lakh had been received without possession being handed over and that alienation to a third party had been attempted. The Court noted the sanctioned loan of Rs 85 lakh and the disbursement of Rs 45 lakh. It calculated that Rs 40 lakh remained to be disbursed by the lender and Rs 4,60,000 remained payable by the complainant. On that account, the transaction could not be classified as purely civil merely because contractual questions arose. Following Pokarnekar, the Court held that the civil aspects did not prevent trial of the prima facie criminal allegations. It would neither resolve disputed merits nor require proof sufficient for conviction on a petition for quashing.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the Section 482 petition; the charge sheet and Criminal Case No. 818/2019 remained pending. The High Court expressly confined its observations to the limited scope of interference at this stage. It directed the trial court not to be prejudiced by those observations and to decide the case strictly on the evidence adduced at trial. No quashing, conviction or relief enforcing the settlement was ordered.

Sanjeev Srivastava and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 30937/2019, 19/08/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (832) Prev Next

Headnote :- Counter-FIR and claimed retaliation — forty-minute sequence does not establish falsity - Following an altercation arising from a matrimonial dispute at the wife's parental home, Sant Kumar Namdev lodged Crime No. 350/2020 at 15:00, and his brother-in-law lodged Crime No. 351/2020 at 15:40. Sant contended that the later FIR was a counterblast. Both accounts acknowledged his visit and a confrontation; which party was the aggressor could be determined only through testimony and cross-examination. The High Court held that the timing of the FIRs, earlier apprehensions of false implication, SBI employment and asserted absence of criminal history could not replace an examination of whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclosed an offence.

Section 482 and charge stage — no factual mini-trial, but material-based strong suspicion - The Court relied on several Supreme Court decisions in declining to resolve witness contradictions, credibility, the counterblast claim and defence allegations in its inherent jurisdiction. These were XYZ v. State of Gujarat; S. Martin; Ajay Kumar Das, quoting the caution in Bhajan Lal; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, recognising a narrow exception for public documents or documents whose veracity the complainant does not dispute; Gourishetty Mahesh; M. Srikanth; CBI v. Arvind Khanna; and Kunwar Singh. The additional list of decisions on similar law was not discussed individually. On framing charges, the Court quoted M.E. Shivalingamurthy on limited sifting, grave rather than some suspicion, the prosecution record and exclusion of defence documents; Soma Chakravarty on suspicion founded on material, rather than suspicion alone; Shiv Charan Bansal on considering the ingredients at face value without weighing evidence as though at trial; and Fatehkaran Mehdu on review of a charge under Section 397, which does not involve the final test of guilt. The challenged order was sustained. These findings were preliminary, not conclusive.

House entry, threats, insult and hurt — prima facie allegations - Sant asserted that the incident occurred outside the house, that the threats were empty and that the abusive words were not necessarily obscene. His wife Laxmi's Section 161 statement alleged that he entered the house and her room, threatened her, and then abused and struck her brother with his fists and a plastic chair. Stones were allegedly thrown after her brother went outside. The Court found prima facie material for Sections 452 and 294, while leaving the intention behind the threats under Section 506 and the precise nature of the alleged obscenity to trial. It observed that Section 323 had not been specifically challenged and that the medical findings and chest pain also provided prima facie support for the allegation of hurt.

Police investigation — accused cannot prescribe its course - Sant complained that the investigating officer had ignored his representations and defence version before filing the charge sheet. Through Prabal Dogra, the Court incorporated the distinction drawn in Manohar Lal Sharma between rare judicial monitoring to ensure a fair investigation and impermissible supervision of the officer's conclusions. It also incorporated Lalita Kumari on the duty to register an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence and the limited scope of a preliminary inquiry. It quoted Romila Thapar, including its discussion of Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar, Divine Retreat Centre and Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, on the absence of an accused's entitlement to choose the investigating agency or method, subject to exceptional judicial intervention where mala fides are demonstrated. The Court found no error in the officer's failure to adopt the approach sought by Sant in his defence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sant Kumar Namdev petitioned under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR dated 9 May 2020 in Crime No. 351/2020 at Police Station Budhar, Shahdol, initially under IPC Sections 294, 323 and 506, and the JMFC's order framing charges under Sections 294, 323, 452 and 506 (two counts, Part II). His wife Laxmi was living at her parental home amid matrimonial litigation. Her brother Shivkant Namdeo alleged that Sant came to the house and threatened to kill Laxmi if she did not return with him. Sant allegedly abused and struck the brother with his fists, blows and a chair, and threw stones after the brother went outside, causing complaints of pain or injury to the fingers, wrist or hand and chest. Laxmi, her parents and others allegedly witnessed the incident or intervened. The medical account described abrasions to the right index finger and thumb, swelling of a finger, a bruise in the left cubital region, left-hand tenderness and left-chest pain without a visible external injury. The order first referred to five injuries and later to six, including chest pain. These were preliminary medical observations of simple injuries caused by a blunt object.

Sant's FIR in Crime No. 350/2020 had been lodged at 15:00, forty minutes before his brother-in-law's FIR at 15:40. He said that he had come because a child was ill, that his brother-in-law assaulted him, and that he fled to his vehicle, whose glass was damaged, and faced threats. He alleged that the later FIR was retaliatory, referred to contradictions and earlier representations predicting false implication, asserted that he had no criminal history and was employed by SBI, and complained that the police had disregarded his version. His Section 482 grounds also denied entry into the house, any intention to criminally intimidate and the use of obscene language. At the hearing, newly engaged counsel first sought an adjournment, then time to prepare, and ultimately stated that he had no instructions to argue. The Court condemned the conduct as bench hunting, considered the written application and case diary, and heard the State.

The judgment reproduces Sant's FIR. The surrounding account records its material contents, including his visit to the parental home, contact by telephone, confrontation, escape and alleged damage to the car.

2. Precedents — Considered : On the limits of factual inquiry under Section 482, XYZ v. State of Gujarat was quoted on the error of conducting a roving inquiry while investigation was pending and prematurely relying on a disputed settlement. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin concerned premature assessment of the merits. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand quoted Bhajan Lal's caution that quashing powers must be exercised sparingly, without examining the reliability of the FIR or exercising inherent powers arbitrarily. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar explained the general bar on weighing the accused's defence documents, with a narrow exception for public documents or documents whose veracity the complainant does not dispute, referring to Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh addressed sparing intervention where the allegations at face value disclose no offence, a legal bar exists or sufficient material shows a malicious prosecution, while rejecting an assessment of reliability as though at trial. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana stated that quashing may be justified where the uncontroverted allegations and evidence collected disclose no offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna rejected findings based on minute examination of disputed defence facts. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, held that Section 482 does not permit detailed scrutiny of the merits as though at trial and that an FIR is not an encyclopedia. Paragraph 33 lists Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha.

On investigation, the Court quoted its own decision in Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, incorporating Manohar Lal Sharma on the distinction between monitoring and supervising an investigation. Oversight to ensure a timely and fair investigation differs from directing the officer's opinion and compromising the independence of the trial. The quoted passage from Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P. required registration of an FIR where the information disclosed a cognizable offence. It permitted a preliminary inquiry only to determine whether a cognizable offence was disclosed, not to test the information's truth, and listed illustrative contexts and requirements concerning records and time limits. Romila Thapar v. Union of India was directly quoted on the absence of an accused's right to choose the agency or manner of investigation. Its discussion of Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar, Divine Retreat Centre and State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights explained both the restriction and the possibility of exceptional constitutional intervention where justified; it did not impose an absolute bar on relief for a fair investigation. Other authorities listed within Romila Thapar were supporting citations, not independent holdings in the present case.

On framing charges, M.E. Shivalingamurthy v. CBI set out principles drawn from P. Vijayan: limited sifting of the evidence, consideration of broad probabilities and basic infirmities, discharge where two views are possible and one raises only suspicion rather than grave suspicion, and no roving inquiry or introduction of defence documents under Section 227. It cited Sudershan Chakkar and Debendra Nath Padhi. Soma Chakravarty v. State through CBI distinguished the possibility of commission of an offence, supported by material at the stage of framing charges, from proof sufficient for conviction, and rejected bare suspicion without supporting material. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Shiv Charan Bansal cited Ramesh Singh and Dipakbhai Jagdishchandra Patel on strong suspicion founded on material capable of becoming evidence at trial, without weighing the accused's probable defence. State of Rajasthan v. Fatehkaran Mehdu explained the limited scope of review of a charge under Section 397: the question is strong suspicion, not final guilt. These authorities were used to reject a premature trial of the two FIR accounts while preserving discharge where the requisite material is absent.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent jurisdiction to consider quashing; Section 397 arose through the authority on review of charges. Laxmi's and the complainant's statements under Section 161 CrPC supported the preliminary account of entry into the house and assault. Sections 154 and 173(2) arose in the incorporated reasoning on registration of an FIR and the investigation report. Section 227 appeared in the quoted standards governing discharge and defence material. IPC

Section 294 concerned the alleged abusive speech; Section 323 concerned simple hurt, read with Section 319's definition of hurt as including bodily pain; Section 452 concerned house trespass after preparation for hurt or assault; and Section 506 concerned the alleged threats. The Court treated the statement concerning entry into the house under Section 452 and the injury record as prima facie material, leaving disputed intention, words used and truth to trial.

4. Issues : (i) Did the forty-minute interval after Sant's FIR, matrimonial hostility, employment, claim of no criminal history or earlier fear of false implication establish that the later FIR was retaliatory or false and liable to be quashed under Section 482? (ii) Did the FIR and Section 161 statements, taken at face value, support the charged entry into the house, threats, abusive language and hurt, or raise disputed questions requiring testimony and findings on intention? (iii) Could Sant compel the investigating officer to adopt his representations and investigate in the manner sought in his defence? (iv) Could the charge order be sustained on strong suspicion founded on material, within the limited standards for framing charges and revisional review, without a roving inquiry as though at trial? (v) What followed from counsel's refusal to argue, and what protection remained for the trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : Both FIRs arose from Sant's admitted visit to his wife's parental home and a confrontation. The forty-minute interval between their registration could not establish which side was the aggressor. The contradictory accounts had to be tested through evidence and cross-examination. Earlier apprehensions of false implication indicated strained relations. The Court also noted a pending case under Section 498-A, which undermined the application's broad assertion of no criminal background, without determining guilt in that case. Sant's claim of government employment and an asserted clean record did not determine whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclosed a cognizable offence. On this disputed record, the Court could not treat one account as a counterblast or falsehood under Section 482. It relied on the quoted Supreme Court decisions in declining to conduct a roving inquiry into reliability, while preserving the possibility of quashing where uncontroverted allegations disclose no offence.

Laxmi's Section 161 statement expressly placed Sant inside the house and her room, where he threatened her. It described the subsequent abuse and assault of her brother with fists and a plastic chair, followed by stones after her brother went outside. The Court therefore found prima facie support for Section 452 rather than accepting Sant's assertion that the entire incident occurred outdoors. Whether he intended to carry out the threats under Section 506 and whether the language attracted Section 294 were questions for trial, although the alleged abusive words provided prima facie material under Section 294. Section 323 had not been specifically challenged in his petition. The medical marks and chest pain, together with Section 319's definition of hurt as including bodily pain, also provided prima facie support for that charge.

Prabal Dogra and Romila Thapar established that an accused has no entitlement to dictate the police's method, choice of agency or treatment of defence representations. Lalita Kumari supported registration where the allegations disclose a cognizable offence and confined preliminary inquiry to that threshold. The order recorded no finding of a mala fide investigation warranting exceptional intervention. The authorities on charges required strong suspicion founded on material actually on record, permitted limited sifting, and rejected both unsupported suspicion and a mini-trial based on defence material. Considering the circumstances together, the Court found no ground for interference and declined to decide credibility or guilt finally. It condemned counsel's conduct as bench hunting and decided the matter on the written grounds and case diary after hearing the State, instead of granting an adjournment.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the Section 482 application; neither Crime No. 351/2020 nor the JMFC's charge order was quashed. The Court expressly directed that its findings at this limited stage must not prejudice or influence the trial judge, who must decide the case solely on the evidence adduced at trial.

Sant Kumar Namdev v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 52736/2023, 06/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (833) Prev Next

Headnote :- Suspect's control of investigation — no entitlement to chosen method or agency - Sant Kumar Patel and others sought certiorari under Article 226 to quash an FIR dated 9 December 2023, alleging that the complainant's documents were fabricated and that the police investigation was deficient. The Court considered whether a suspect could demand investigation in a particular manner or by a particular agency and whether the High Court could supervise the investigation. Romila Thapar v. Union of India, incorporating Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar, Divine Retreat Centre and the constitutional caution in Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, supported the absence of an accused's ordinary right to choose the investigator or method, or to be heard during investigation. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki was separately quoted, including its discussion of W.N. Chadha, Rajesh Gandhi, Sri Bhagwan Samardha and Narender G. Goel, on the limited role of an accused during investigation and the remedies available at trial. The quoted authorities preserved exceptional constitutional directions where mala fides were substantiated. The Court found no basis for intervention in this petition.

Court monitoring versus supervision — investigator forms independent opinion - Applying Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, the Bench distinguished rare monitoring to ensure progress, fairness and freedom from interference from directions controlling the officer's investigative course or conclusion. Supervision may shape the police report in advance and prejudice the trial court's independent assessment. The Court refused to direct a particular manner of investigation at the suspects' request. It acknowledged that, if a closure report were filed, the Magistrate could identify lapses and direct further investigation.

Fabricated-document allegation — disputed facts cannot be tried on writ record - The order records the petitioners' assertion that the complainant had fabricated documents, without setting out the underlying offence or identifying the particular documents. Whether the documents were fabricated was disputed and required evidence. Paragraph 15 refers to Section 482, although the proceeding and prayer were expressly under Article 226. The Court declined to conduct a mini-trial, found no ground for interference and dismissed the writ. It made no affirmative finding that the documents were genuine or that the petitioners had committed an offence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sant Kumar Patel and other petitioners filed Writ Petition No. 5790/2024 under Article 226 of the Constitution. They sought certiorari quashing an FIR dated 9 December 2023, suitable mandamus or other relief, and costs. Counsel asserted that the FIR had been registered on fabricated documents and that the police were not investigating properly despite the petitioners' representations pointing out discrepancies. The High Court heard counsel and identified two legal questions: whether suspects could demand investigation in a particular manner or by a particular agency, and whether the Court could supervise the investigation. The order does not set out the underlying offence in detail or record a finding of proof.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar and Others v. Union of India and Others, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted extensively. Its discussion adopted the rule in Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat that accused persons have no say in the appointment of the investigating agency; the principle in Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India that an accused has no ordinary right to prescribe the manner of investigation or mode of prosecution; and E. Sivakumar v. Union of India, citing Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki and Narender G. Goel, on the absence of a right to be heard as a matter of course in a writ seeking transfer or independent investigation. Romila Thapar described the restriction in Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala on replacing an investigator during investigation through inherent powers, while preserving appropriate directions under Article 226 where mala fide exercise of investigative power was demonstrated. It quoted the Constitution Bench in State of W.B. v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, West Bengal, on sparing and exceptional constitutional directions transferring investigation to CBI where necessary for credibility, public confidence, complete justice or enforcement of fundamental rights, rather than as a routine response to allegations. The decision in Romila Thapar stressed the need for specific material facts rather than vague accusations and referred to available remedies before the jurisdictional courts.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626, was separately quoted. Its discussion of Union of India v. W.N. Chadha explained that the investigating officer gathers material before submitting the report under Section 173(2). A proposed accused is therefore not entitled to prior notice or participation as a matter of course and cannot dictate the method of investigation. CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi denied an accused's choice of investigating agency while recognising the possibility of further investigation where the local investigation was unsatisfactory. Sri Bhagwan Samardha, referring to Ram Lal Narang, discussed further investigation under Section 173(8) after a report had been filed. The quoted passage stated that the accused need not be heard before such a direction. Narender G. Goel reiterated that evidentiary objections could be tested at trial and did not confer a right to be heard during investigation. These passages were cited to define the limits of a suspect's participation; they did not direct further investigation in this writ. The Court also referred to its own decision in Prabal Dogra for the same principle that an accused has no say in the investigation.

Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary and Others, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was quoted at paragraphs 38–39. Court monitoring seeks proper progress, a free and fair inquiry and public confidence, without directing the mode of investigation. Supervising the execution of the investigation or formation of the officer's opinion, however, risks binding or influencing the trial and is impermissible. In rare and compelling cases, monitoring may ensure fairness and timely progress. The High Court applied this distinction in refusing directions requiring the investigation to follow the petitioners' chosen course, while recognising the Magistrate's powers if a closure report were subsequently filed.

3. Statutes considered : The writ was filed under Article 226, seeking certiorari to quash the FIR and broadly worded relief by way of mandamus. Section 173(2) CrPC appears in the Supreme Court extracts concerning the police report and the risk of premature court supervision. Section 173(8) appears in the extracts on further investigation after a report. Sections 202 and 204 appear in W.N. Chadha's discussion of participation before process is issued.

4. Issues : (i) Could the petitioners, as suspects, direct the manner of investigation or choose another investigating agency on general allegations of fabricated documents and police inattention? (ii) Could the High Court supervise the police officer's steps and opinion during an ongoing investigation, as distinct from rare monitoring to ensure fairness? (iii) Could the FIR be quashed on this record by deciding whether the complainant's documents were true or fabricated? (iv) What relief could be granted on the Article 226 prayer, having regard to the qualified exceptional jurisdiction concerning mala fides or a fair investigation?

5. Ratio / Findings : Relying on Romila Thapar and Dinubhai, the Court held that an accused has no ordinary right to select the investigating agency, compel investigation in a chosen manner or require prior participation in its course. The quoted authorities preserved exceptional constitutional directions where genuine mala fides or compelling concerns about fairness were demonstrated. The Court nevertheless found no ground to interfere on the petitioners' allegations of fabricated documents and their complaints to the police.

Manohar Lal Sharma distinguished monitoring for a free, fair and timely investigation from supervising its conduct or dictating the officer's report, which could prejudge issues for trial. The Court refused to direct the police to follow the petitioners' preferred line of inquiry during investigation. It observed that, if a closure report were filed, the Magistrate could identify lapses and direct further investigation at that later procedural stage. The truth of the complainant's documents was disputed and could not be resolved through a mini-trial in the writ. The Court neither held the documents genuine nor decided the petitioners' guilt. Although one paragraph used Section 482 language, the proceeding and relief remained expressly those of a writ under Article 226.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has found no case for interference and dismissed the writ petition. It ordered no transfer or court supervision of the investigation and made no final finding on the documents' authenticity or the merits of any offence. Sant Kumar Patel and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 5790/2024, 30/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (834) Prev Next

Headnote :- Rash and negligent act / Section 304-A IPC - The Court observed that proof that Kashiram died after a bullock's leg pressed his chest and private part at a crowded cattle-feeding function did not prove that appellant Santosh's own rash or negligent act caused the death. Sukhram Niware (PW/2) stated that Santosh's brother had driven Santosh's pair of bullocks from behind. The doctor described injuries to the ribs, sternum, trachea and testis that were compatible with pressure from a bullock's leg. This established the injury mechanism, not Santosh's personal conduct. The High Court set aside the conviction and acquitted him.

Witness credibility / material change - Tamesh Niware (PW/5), who was 12 at the time of the incident, admitted that he arrived after hearing noise and saw Kashiram already on the ground. He then changed his account to claim that he had witnessed the incident. The Court found him unreliable because of that material change.

Reasonable doubt / appellate scrutiny - Ruplal's allegation that Santosh was in a hurry conflicted with Sukhram's statement that Santosh's brother had driven the bullocks. At a gathering with many cattle and people, the prosecution failed to connect the fatal act to Santosh beyond reasonable doubt. The appeal was allowed, the sentence of one year of simple imprisonment and fine of Rs. 5,000 was set aside, and the bail and surety bonds were discharged.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : At a cattle-feeding and children's felicitation function in Mohgaon on 19 October 2009, hundreds of people and cattle gathered. Kashiram, who headed the ritual, asked Santosh to wait before taking his pair of bullocks through. The prosecution alleged that Santosh pushed him and rashly drove the pair, causing a bullock's leg to fall on Kashiram's chest and resulting in his death. A death inquiry, FIR, scene map, inquest and postmortem preceded the charge sheet under Section 304-A IPC. After hearing final arguments in the first trial, the Judicial Magistrate considered that Section 304 Part II might apply and committed the case to Sessions. The Sessions Court framed a charge under Section 304 but convicted Santosh under Section 304-A on 29 May 2015. It sentenced him to one year of simple imprisonment, a fine of Rs. 5,000 and three months' imprisonment in default. Santosh appealed under Section 374 CrPC. No one appeared for him at the appeal hearing; the High Court examined the trial record and heard the State.

2. Statutes considered : The criminal appeal was brought under Section 374 CrPC. Section 304-A IPC was the offence of conviction and the sole charge on which the appellate court acquitted Santosh. The record also describes the Magistrate's earlier view that Section 304 Part II IPC might be made out and the Sessions Court's framing of a charge under Section 304 IPC. Those procedural antecedents were recounted; they were not used to uphold a different offence on appeal. The Court ordered discharge of the bail and surety bonds after acquittal.

3. Issues : Did the prosecution prove beyond reasonable doubt that Santosh's rash or negligent driving caused Kashiram's death, when his bullocks were present but a prosecution witness attributed the driving from behind to Santosh's brother? Could Tamesh's claimed eyewitness account be relied on after he admitted arriving on hearing noise and seeing Kashiram already lying on the ground, then changed his account to claim direct observation? Proof of the death and the mechanism of pressure remained distinct from proof of the accused's conduct.

4. Ratio / Findings : Ruplal Niware described Santosh's impatience and alleged that his bullocks ran over Kashiram. In cross-examination, he could not describe the particular bullocks. He acknowledged the dense gathering of animals, the initial impression of a normal death, the absence of prior enmity and his later understanding that a stampede had occurred. Sukhram Niware stated that Santosh's brother drove Santosh's bullocks from behind, causing the animal to step on Kashiram's chest and private part. Sukhram also acknowledged that the death had initially been regarded as accidental. The doctor found a depressed sternum, fractured left ribs and sternum, a fractured trachea and a damaged right testis, and accepted that a bullock's leg could cause those injuries. That medical evidence supported heavy pressure and death; it did not identify who had set the animals moving. Tamesh first admitted in cross-examination that, when he arrived after hearing noise, Kashiram was already lying on the ground. His later claim that he personally saw the incident led the Court to reject his reliability. The Court found that the bullocks did not rush because of any rash or negligent act by Santosh, but had been driven by his brother. Santosh's ownership of the animals and presence at the incident did not discharge the prosecution's burden to prove his charged personal negligence beyond reasonable doubt. The outcome remains confined to the evidence and accused before the Court. The conclusion applies the standard of proof beyond reasonable doubt to the alleged personal rash or negligent act and its causal connection with the death under Section 304-A.

5. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court has allowed the criminal appeal. It set aside the judgment and sentence dated 29 May 2015 passed by the First Additional District Judge, Waraseoni, in Sessions Trial No. 244/2012 and acquitted Santosh under Section 304-A IPC. As he was on bail, his bail and surety bonds were discharged, and he was no longer required in this case. A copy of the appellate judgment and the trial record were directed to be sent back for information and compliance.

Santosh v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 1791/2015, 19/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (835) Prev Next

Headnote :- Fair trial / Section 273 CrPC - The Court observed that the prosecutrix, Sukarlal and Phoolwati were examined while appellant Santosh was absent. The order sheet recorded neither his undertaking to allow examination in his absence nor counsel's assumption of responsibility for cross-examination in those circumstances. Section 273 requires evidence to be taken in the accused's presence, or in his pleader's presence when personal attendance is lawfully dispensed with. Relying on Atma Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2019) 20 SCC 481, the High Court held that Santosh's valuable right to observe and effectively cross-examine those material witnesses had been violated. The conviction could not stand.

Identification / unknown assailants - Although the FIR named Santosh, the prosecutrix conceded that the assailants had previously been unknown to her. She claimed that Phoolwati had supplied their names from a physical description. Phoolwati's testimony did not substantiate either that description or the claim that she had seen them. Sukarlal named no attacker and said that he could identify them if they were present. The accused's absence during the testimony prevented dock identification. The medical evidence of injuries and the rejection of the motorcycle-accident defence did not remedy the lack of proof of identity.

Appellate relief / remand - Atma Ram explains remedial re-examination and the exceptional nature of retrial. The High Court considered remand but declined it because about ten years had elapsed and because of the nature of the injuries. It set aside the convictions and sentence under Sections 323 (two counts) and 354 IPC, acquitted Santosh of the charges against him and cancelled his bonds. The special-statute charges formed part of the trial history, but the convictions under appeal were under the IPC provisions.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The prosecutrix and her fiancé Sukarlal said that three men had teased and assaulted them on a hill behind Rakhad Mohalla, Sarni, on 4 December 2013. She described abuse, blows and threats; Sukarlal said that he was injured while intervening. Crime No. 575/2013 included Sections 354, 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC and a provision of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act. The charge sheet and later charges referred to additional IPC and special-statute provisions. Co-accused Sunil alias Lefty and Sandeep were later declared absconding. On 20 August 2019, the Special Judge at Betul convicted Santosh under Section 323 IPC on two counts and Section 354 IPC, imposing the terms and fines set out in paragraph 1 of the judgment. He appealed under Section 374(2) CrPC. The High Court reviewed the testimony of the prosecutrix (PW/2), Sukarlal (PW/3), Phoolwati (PW/1), medical and investigating witnesses, the FIR, the scene map and the trial order sheet of 3 October 2017.

2. Precedents — Considered : Applied: Atma Ram and Others v. State of Rajasthan, 2019:INSC:516, (2019) 20 SCC 481. The decision was quoted extensively in paragraph 26 and applied in paragraph 27 on the effect of examining witnesses in an accused's absence, prejudice, and the appellate power to order remedial re-examination or retrial. Atma Ram distinguishes the Section 299 setting in Jayendra Vishnu Thakur, where evidence from an earlier proceeding could not be read against an accused who had actually been in custody rather than absconding, and the witnesses were unavailable for meaningful cross-examination. It discusses Chapter XXXV irregularities, Sections 461, 386 and 391 CrPC and the exceptional nature of retrial, taking account of the interests of the accused and victims. The quoted Atma Ram passage invokes S.L. Kapoor, A.R. Antulay and Ukha Kolhe, among others, as part of the reasoning in that Supreme Court decision. In the present case, the High Court used Atma Ram to identify the seriousness of the lost opportunity, then independently decided against remand. Sections 366 –368, concerning death-sentence confirmation, form part of the long Atma Ram quotation; they were not the basis of jurisdiction in this appeal.

3. Statutes considered : The appeal against conviction was brought under Section 374(2) CrPC. Section 273 CrPC supplied the decisive rule requiring the accused's presence: unless expressly otherwise provided, evidence must be taken in the accused's presence, or in his pleader's presence if personal attendance is dispensed with. Its proviso addresses a minor woman complainant in a sexual offence while preserving cross-examination. Sections 323 (two counts) and 354 IPC were the actual convictions overturned.

4. Issues : Could the conviction stand when the central witnesses were examined in Santosh's absence and the trial order sheet did not record a lawful procedural basis for proceeding in that way? Was Santosh reliably identified as one of three previously unknown attackers, despite his name appearing in the FIR, the unsupported account that Phoolwati supplied the names from a description, Sukarlal's non-identification and the missed dock identification? If the conviction could not stand, was remand or acquittal the proper appellate response after roughly ten years, taking the actual injuries into account? The Court also assessed the defence's account of a minor motorcycle accident against the scene map, but rejection of that account was not a substitute for affirmative prosecution proof of identity.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor recorded the prosecutrix's small shoulder abrasion, cut above the right eye and knee pain or swelling, as well as Sukarlal's pain and swelling. In cross-examination, he acknowledged that a fall could have caused the injuries. The spot map did not show a road, and the High Court rejected the accused's account of a motorcycle accident as implausible in light of that map. It then distinguished the occurrence from the identity of the assailants. The prosecutrix had not known them before the event but named them in the FIR. Phoolwati's testimony did not support the prosecutrix's assertion that she had given Phoolwati physical descriptions from which Phoolwati supplied the names, or that Phoolwati had seen the assailants. Sukarlal described three men without naming them and offered to identify them if they were presented. The prosecutrix and Sukarlal could not identify Santosh in the dock because they testified in his absence. The order sheet of 3 October 2017 recorded neither an undertaking to allow examination in his absence nor counsel's assumption of responsibility for cross-examination in those circumstances. Applying Section 273 and the fair-trial principle explained in Atma Ram, the Court held that the examination was improper and the convictions could not be sustained. Atma Ram permits remedial de novo examination in suitable cases; it does not make every irregularity automatically fatal without contextual analysis. The High Court therefore considered remand separately. Given the ten-year interval since December 2013 and the nature of the injuries, it found remand inappropriate on these facts. This was not a finding that no assault had occurred or a general rule that naming a previously unknown attacker in an FIR always fails. It concerned the failure of fair procedure and reliable identification in this case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has allowed the appeal. It set aside Santosh's two convictions under Section 323 IPC and his conviction under Section 354 IPC, together with the Special Judge's judgment and sentence dated 20 August 2019. The concluding paragraph states that he was acquitted of all charges levelled against him. The Court declined to send the matter back for another trial. His bail and surety bonds were cancelled, he was no longer required in this matter, and the judgment and trial record were ordered to be returned for compliance.

Santosh v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.A. no. 7257/2019, 10/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (836) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 364-A kidnapping for ransom — essential link and proof beyond reasonable doubt - Bhure alias Balram Jatav and Shripal appealed against their life sentences under IPC Section 364-A and Sections 11/13 of the Madhya Pradesh Dakaiti Aur Vyapharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam. The Court set out the elements of abduction or detention, apprehension of death or hurt, and compulsion or ransom. It relied on Malleshi v. State of Karnataka for abduction, continuing detention and a communicated ransom demand; Shyam Babu v. State of Haryana for threatening detention and compulsion; and Suman Sood v. State of Rajasthan for detention and ransom. Those principles did not overcome the gaps in proof. No payer was examined, and there was no reliable account of who paid the alleged Rs 1 lakh ransom, to whom or where. Ramswaroop's account of release after payment conflicted with the officer's unsupported account of release following a police encounter. The alleged later sale to another gang further unsettled the identity of the alleged ransom recipient. The convictions could not stand.

Identification and investigative gaps — no TIP or reliable corroborating record - Both abductees first encountered the alleged miscreants during the incident. Neither Shripal nor the other accused underwent a test identification parade. The dates and places of Bhure's and Shripal's arrests, and their arrest memoranda, were not proved. The trial record also lacked proof of an incriminating seizure or Section 27 disclosure, the identity of participants in the claimed encounter, or documents supporting it. Mullu did not promptly report the abduction or ransom demand, and the initial missing-person report and FIR named no assailant. The High Court relied on these cumulative deficiencies rather than the absence of a TIP alone. The unappealed acquittal of three other co-accused remained intact; Santosh Kumar Dohare's appeal had abated on his death.

Article 21 compensation after malicious prosecution and long incarceration - The Bench found deliberate false implication and police collaboration in the account of an imaginary encounter. It described Bhure's custody as nearly twelve years and Shripal's imprisonment as nearly fifteen years. The Court applied Hardeep Singh Anand v. State of M.P. and the Supreme Court's enhancement of compensation in Hardeep Singh, alongside Rudul Sah, Ravikant S. Patil, D.K. Basu and Anita Thakur. Public-law monetary redress for a patent and incontrovertible violation of fundamental rights is compensatory, not punitive. It is additional to a civil damages claim and payable by the State. Each surviving appellant was awarded Rs 3 lakh, payable within three months and adjustable against any later civil damages. The State could recover the amount from erring persons. Proof of actual consequential loss was left to a civil suit. The award rested on specific constitutional findings on this record; it did not establish that every acquittal automatically attracts compensation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Criminal Appeal No. 460/2004, brought under Section 374(2) CrPC, challenged the judgment dated 8 June 2004 passed by the Special Judge (M.P.D.V.P.K. Act), Bhind, in Special Sessions Trial No. 53/2003. Santosh Kumar Dohare, Bhure alias Balram Jatav and Shripal had been convicted under IPC Section 364-A read with Sections 11/13 of the Madhya Pradesh Dakaiti Aur Vyapharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam. They were sentenced to life imprisonment, a fine of Rs 10,000 and imprisonment in default. Santosh died during the appeal, and his appeal was dismissed as abated. Roope, Mahipat and Prayagnarayan were acquitted at trial, and their acquittal was not appealed. Samrath and Malkhan Singh had been shown as absconding. The appeal on the merits therefore concerned Bhure (appellant 2) and Shripal (appellant 3).

The prosecution alleged that five unknown persons took Ramswaroop and Mullu from the irrigation fields on the night of 25–26 January 2003 and detained them. Mullu was allegedly released after about four days with a demand for Rs 1 lakh in ransom and a death threat; Ramswaroop was allegedly released later after payment. Harmukh initially made a missing-person report, and Crime No. 20/2003 was registered under IPC Section 364. Charges were later framed under Section 364-A and the state Act. The trial court examined Harmukh PW1, Mullu PW2, Ramswaroop PW3, FIR recorder Rajesh Sharma PW4 and investigating officer Chandrapal Singh Tomar PW5. Radheshyam, Tulsiram and Hiralal testified for the defence. The defence emphasised Mullu's delay in reporting, the failure to examine the alleged payer, the contradiction between the ransom-payment and police-encounter accounts, the absence of a test identification parade, and the unproved links concerning arrest and recovery. The State defended the convictions. After considering the surviving appellants' prolonged custody, the High Court also addressed compensation under Article 21.

2. Precedents — Considered : Malleshi v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 8 SCC 95, was quoted for the definitions of kidnapping and abduction under IPC Sections 359 and 362, the use of force or deceitful inducement, the continuing nature of abduction or detention, and the ransom purpose under Section 364-A. It stated that a ransom demand must be communicated. Shyam Babu v. State of Haryana, (2008) 15 SCC 418, was cited for the statutory combination of kidnapping, a threat or reasonable apprehension of hurt or death, and compulsion or ransom. Suman Sood v. State of Rajasthan, (2007) 5 SCC 634, was quoted for detention for ransom and the meaning of ransom as a sum demanded for the release of a captive; it expressly referred back to Malleshi. The High Court stated the elements and then tested, rather than presumed, proof of identity, detention, threat and ransom demand or payment on this record. It did not reject the applicability of Section 364-A or lay down a universal requirement of direct proof of actual payment in every prosecution.

For compensation, the Bench quoted its earlier decision in Hardeep Singh Anand v. State of M.P., (2008) 5 MPHT 172. That judgment had applied Rudul Sah v. State of Bihar to monetary relief for a violation of Article 21, State of Maharashtra v. Ravikant S. Patil to unwarranted handcuffing, and D.K. Basu v. State of W.B. to public-law compensation. Such compensation is compensatory, not punitive, and is additional to a civil action, with the amount depending on the particular case and potentially adjustable against civil damages. In Hardeep Singh v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 2250/2011, by order dated 5 December 2011, the Supreme Court subsequently increased the compensation in that case from Rs 70,000 to Rs 2 lakh because it was inadequate for the proven suffering. Those figures formed part of the comparative reasoning; they were not the award in this appeal. Anita Thakur v. State of J&K, (2016) 15 SCC 525, was quoted for State liability in public law for patent and incontrovertible police misconduct or violation of fundamental rights, subject to a high standard of proof and without a defence of sovereign immunity. Its citations to Saheli, Joginder Kaur, Vidhyawati and Nilabati Behera formed part of that quoted synthesis; they were not independently analysed as holdings in the present appeal. On this record, the Bench made its own finding of deliberate malicious prosecution and ordered Rs 3 lakh to each surviving appellant.

3. Statutes considered : The appeal against conviction was brought under Section 374(2) CrPC. Section 428 appeared in the trial court's custody certificate. IPC Section 364-A, quoted in the judgment, concerns kidnapping, abduction or continued detention accompanied by a threat, reasonable apprehension of hurt or death, or actual hurt or death, to compel conduct or payment of ransom. It is punishable by death or life imprisonment and fine. Sections 359 and 362 IPC were discussed through the definitions of kidnapping and abduction in Malleshi; the original FIR invoked Section 364. Sections 11/13 of the M.P.D.V.P.K. Act were the linked state Act charges. The Court's list of deficiencies included the lack of proof that any disclosure statement under Section 27 of the Evidence Act had been recorded. Article 21 of the Constitution governed the right to life and personal liberty and the decision on public-law compensation. Actual damages for malicious prosecution beyond the fixed constitutional sum were left to a possible civil suit.

4. Issues : (i) Did the prosecution prove beyond reasonable doubt that Bhure and Shripal were the abductors or detainers and that the threats and ransom elements of Section 364-A and the linked state Act charge were established? (ii) What weight should be given to the delayed or absent report, lack of test identification, inconsistent explanations for Ramswaroop's release, failure to examine the payer, and missing documentation of the police encounter, arrests, recoveries and disclosures? (iii) Could compensation under Article 21 be awarded in this appeal after the Bench found deliberate false implication and unusually long imprisonment, and what relationship would it have to civil damages and recovery from erring persons? (iv) What relief was specific to the two surviving appellants, given Santosh's death and the final acquittal of the others?

5. Ratio / Findings : Mullu PW2 said that five men took both victims, that Shripal and Samrath demanded Rs 1 lakh with a death threat in Rampura, and that he was released after about four days. The Court noted the absence of a reliable, prompt police report from him about his captivity or the ransom demand, as well as inconsistencies in his account of the timing. Ramswaroop PW3 said that payment of Rs 1 lakh preceded his release, but also asserted that Shripal had sold him to Pahalwan's gang for Rs 1 lakh. The investigating officer said that the police freed Ramswaroop in an encounter on 26 March 2003. Neither account explained the release mechanism described in the other. The officer did not identify the encounter participants, give sufficient particulars of its date and place to link an appellant to it, explain its outcome or produce supporting documents. The Ex. P2 panchnama named no miscreant involved in the encounter. The prosecution did not examine the brother said to have paid the ransom, identify who paid whom and where, establish the source of the money or whether a mediator was involved, or reconcile which gang held Ramswaroop. Harmukh, a brother, did not claim that he had paid. The Court treated these as central contradictions in the ransom chain rather than minor variations.

Identification and investigation also failed. The witnesses first saw the alleged abductors during the incident, but no TIP was held for Shripal or the accused. Ramswaroop identified Bhure in court, and his claimed acquaintance with Shripal dated only from the abduction. The dates and places of Bhure's and Shripal's arrests, the arrest memoranda and the witnesses to the arrests were not proved. There was no documented incriminating seizure or disclosure under Section 27. Mullu said that the police had beaten Santosh. On the evidence as a whole, the Bench held that the prosecution had miserably failed to prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt and found that Bhure and Shripal had been falsely implicated. The other trial acquittals and the abatement of Santosh's appeal remained outside this decision on the merits.

The trial certificate and custody history showed that Shripal had been in jail since 5 July 2003. Bhure had been in custody in 2003 and, after conviction, until he was granted appellate bail on 26 March 2015. The Court characterised their confinement as about fifteen and twelve years, respectively. After discussing Hardeep Singh Anand and the Supreme Court's enhancement in Hardeep Singh, Rudul Sah, D.K. Basu, Ravikant S. Patil and Anita Thakur, the Bench concluded that the complainant had maliciously implicated them and that the police had joined in an account of an imaginary encounter. Its specific finding of deliberate mala fide prosecution and prolonged deprivation of liberty warranted constitutional compensation. Rs 3 lakh each was fixed as public-law compensation under Article 21; proof of the exact further pecuniary loss was reserved for a civil suit. The amount could be adjusted in such a suit, and the State could recover it from erring persons. The holding rests on the Court's particular factual findings and the high standard described in Anita Thakur, rather than acquittal alone.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has allowed the appeal for Bhure alias Balram Jatav and Shripal. Their convictions under Section 364-A and the M.P.D.V.P.K. Act, and the life sentences imposed by the judgment dated 8 June 2004, were set aside. Both were acquitted of all charges. Bhure's bail and surety bonds were discharged, and Shripal was ordered to be released immediately unless wanted in another case. Santosh's appeal had already abated following his death; the unchallenged trial acquittals of Roope, Mahipat and Prayagnarayan were unaffected. The State was directed to pay Rs 3 lakh each to Bhure and Shripal within three months, adjustable against any later civil damages award. It could recover the amount from erring persons.

Santosh Kumar Dohare and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 460/2004, 24/05/2018, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Vivek Agarwal & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (837) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers / FIR quashing — face-value allegations and investigation - The Court observed that the High Court's power under Section 482 CrPC is wide but exceptional. Where a cognizable offence is disclosed, investigation must ordinarily proceed. An FIR may, however, be quashed where its uncontroverted allegations, taken in their entirety, disclose no offence, or where an express legal bar, inherent improbability or sufficiently established abuse justifies intervention. Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, and State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, were invoked against premature interference. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan reproduced Swapan Kumar Guha on the need to gather evidence and Jeffrey J. Diermeier on the cautious exercise of inherent jurisdiction. S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, and State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, set out the Bhajan Lal and abuse-of-process limits. Those exceptions did not justify quashing this FIR, which alleged a later assault and threat.

Quashing / no mini-trial — defence and factual disputes - Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, sets out a structured prima facie test under Sections 397/482 without a meticulous assessment of proof. It also explains that a predominantly civil controversy does not immunise separately disclosed criminal conduct. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, State of Orissa v. Saroj Kumar Sahoo, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, 30.06.2021, caution against resolving disputed facts or stalling investigation through a roving inquiry. An FIR is not an encyclopaedia. The Court applied that limit to the applicant's contested claim that he was in his office and left the evidence to be tested at trial.

Quashing / qualified exceptions and reasoned review - M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, confirms that intervention is justified when allegations accepted at face value do not disclose an offence. M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, guards against both routine interruption of an inquiry and harassment through inherently improbable accusations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, permits narrow consideration of defence documents that are public or of undisputed veracity. The order identifies no such decisive document for the asserted office alibi. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336, requires reasons addressing the particular facts when deciding whether to interfere.

Alibi / trial proof - The first applicant's claim that he was in his office was treated as an alibi requiring proof beyond reasonable doubt; it could not be accepted merely on assertion at the FIR-quashing stage. He may prove it at trial, where the prosecution's case and the defence can be tested.

Divorce / later independent criminal allegation - The earlier divorce and alimony decree did not determine whether the former spouses were involved in a separate alleged roadside confrontation on 12 December 2023. The Court held that the FIR's allegations of abuse, assault with fists and blows, and a threat prima facie disclosed offences under Sections 294, 323 and 506/34 IPC. It deprecated the unsupported general allegation that the informant misused her position as a woman and dismissed the Section 482 petition. The trial court must decide independently, without being prejudiced by this threshold order.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Santosh Kumar Mishra (applicant No. 1) and respondent No. 2 were previously married. Counsel for the applicants reported that the trial court had passed a decree of judicial separation and that an appellate compromise decree in First Appeal No. 2347/2018 had dissolved the marriage. The latter was said to require payment of ₹5,00,000 as permanent alimony and specified monthly, weekly and yearly payments for their daughter Akshita, including maintenance, food, tuition, school transport and activities. According to FIR No. 0497/2023 at Police Station City Kotwali, Satna, the informant was returning from Bloom School on 12 December 2023 when, near Balaji Marbles, her former husband and his second wife Nikki arrived in a car. The informant alleged that Nikki forced her scooter to stop, abused her filthily, scuffled with her, struck her with fists and blows, and pushed her onto the road, causing injuries. She alleged a threat that she would be killed in future and said that Anoop Pandey and passers-by witnessed the occurrence. These are FIR allegations, not facts proved by this order. The applicants denied that any incident had occurred. Counsel asserted that the first applicant was in his office at the relevant time, that the informant continued to make accusations after the divorce, and that she was misusing her position as a woman. They invoked Section 482 CrPC in MCrC No. 4794/2024 to quash the FIR for offences under IPC Sections 294, 323 and 506 read with Section 34.

2. Precedents — Considered : Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, disapproves quashing an FIR before proper investigation unless continuing it would itself be an abuse of process. Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, protects statutory investigation where the allegations disclose a cognizable offence, subject to the exceptional case of malicious or vexatious prosecution. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, explains why public justice requires material to be gathered after an offence is disclosed. Its excerpt reproduces State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha on the threshold for investigation and Jeffrey J. Diermeier v. State of W.B. on the three purposes and restrained exercise of inherent power. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, rejects a roving inquiry into the merits and premature reliance on a disputed settlement while serious allegations remain to be investigated. It reinforces leaving the present dispute to the proper process; it does not establish that any settlement in this case was coerced. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, is quoted briefly against assessing the case before investigation ends.

S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, quotes Bhajan Lal's categories of allegations that disclose no offence at face value and proceedings manifestly attended by mala fides. It discusses the sparing but effective protection available against untenable prosecution. Its embedded Medchl Chemicals, Zandu Pharmaceutical Works and Shakson Belthissor passages illustrate the limited exception and protection of an apparently innocent person; they are not separately applied to decide the applicants' facts. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336, calls for a reasoned analysis of the factual setting rather than abstract citation. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, sets out the cautions governing Sections 397/482: consider the uncontroverted record, the ingredients of the offence, legal bars and patent abuse, without testing the likelihood of conviction, reliability or external defence material at the threshold. It also distinguishes a purely civil wrong from facts supporting both civil and criminal remedies and qualifies Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia through P.P. Sharma. The long list of cases embedded in its paragraph 27.15 is not treated as separate holdings of this High Court. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, repeats Bhajan Lal's caution against testing the genuineness of an FIR in a Section 482 inquiry.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, states the ordinary rule excluding defence documents and the narrow exception for public documents or documents of undisputed veracity, referring to Yin Cheng Hsiung and Harshendra Kumar D. The present order identifies no conclusive document within that exception for the office alibi. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, recognises sparing interference where no prima facie offence is disclosed or a legal bar is shown, but rejects premature assessment of reliability and the stifling of legitimate prosecution. Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, surveys the purposes and limits of inherent power, available statutory remedies, the Bhajan Lal categories, the basic factual foundation principle in Indian Oil Corpn. v. NEPC India Ltd., and the caution in State of Orissa v. Saroj Kumar Sahoo against forecasting conviction. Its extended discussion confines Madhavrao's reasoning on special features to its facts and explains the limiting force of State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, particularly in disputes with a civil component. The High Court did not infer that the earlier divorce gave the applicants a settlement-based right to quash a later assault allegation.

M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, confirms that allegations accepted at face value, or uncontroverted supporting material, making out no offence may justify quashing. M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, balances the need to avoid premature obstruction of an inquiry against intervention where an inherently improbable allegation would turn criminal process into a means of harassment. The quoted passage refers to L. Muniswamy on preventing proceedings from becoming a weapon of harassment or persecution. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, forbids resolving disputed defence facts through minute scrutiny at the Section 482 stage. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, order of 30 June 2021, likewise rejects appraisal as if at trial and states that an FIR need not narrate all the evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973, was invoked to prevent abuse of court process or secure justice by quashing the FIR. It requires exceptional and careful exercise of jurisdiction, rather than a trial of defence evidence. The quoted Amit Kapoor passage also discusses the distinction from revision under Section 397 and the framing of charges under Section 228. A passage quoted through Padal Venkata Rama Reddy states Bhajan Lal's distinctions concerning investigation under Sections 156(1) and 155(2) and a police report under Section 173(2). These procedural references supplied context; they were not separate determinations concerning the registration of this FIR or the charge. The FIR named Sections 294, 323 and 506 read with Section 34 of the Indian Penal Code, 1860 (obscene abuse, causing hurt, criminal intimidation and common intention).

4. Issues : (i) Taking the informant's allegations as they stood, should the High Court exceptionally quash FIR No. 0497/2023 under Section 482 despite the alleged roadside abuse, assault and threat? This required an inquiry into a prima facie offence and abuse of process, rather than a prediction of conviction. (ii) Could the first applicant's assertion that he was in his office be accepted as an alibi to negate the FIR before evidence was tested, and what remained open for trial? (iii) Did the prior divorce and compromise decree have any legal bearing on a separate alleged post-divorce incident? (iv) Did counsel's general suggestion that the informant was misusing her status as a woman establish any reason to discredit the complaint?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first examined the limits of Section 482 jurisdiction through a substantial series of Supreme Court decisions. Their common premise is that the FIR allegations and the permitted record must be assessed at face value, with intervention where no offence, a legal bar, patent improbability or demonstrable abuse is shown. The same precedents require restraint where a cognizable offence is disclosed and disputed matters call for investigation or trial. In particular, Mohd. Akram

Siddiqui identifies a narrow exception for public documents or documents of undisputed veracity. The Court held that a plea of alibi must be proved beyond reasonable doubt and cannot be evaluated in this FIR-quashing proceeding. It reserved the first applicant's ability to prove it before the trial court. The earlier divorce resolved the marital relationship but did not resolve whether the later roadside conduct occurred. Because the FIR concerned that later independent incident, dissolution of the marriage did not itself justify quashing. The Court deprecated and rejected the sweeping allegation that respondent No. 2 was misusing her position merely as a woman. Taking the uncontroverted FIR allegations of abuse, physical attack and threat, it found a prima facie case under Sections 294, 323 and 506 read with Section 34 IPC. This is a threshold holding under limited inherent jurisdiction; it is neither a factual verdict that the alleged incident occurred nor a finding of guilt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR No. 0497/2023 in its entirety. The FIR and ensuing process were left to proceed. By way of caution, the Court expressly directed the trial court to decide the case without being influenced or prejudiced by this order, which concerned only the limited standard for quashing.

Santosh Kumar Mishra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 4794/2024, 16/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (838) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 / FIR-registration mandamus — police duty and alternative statutory remedy - The Court observed that the police must register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence. That statutory duty does not, however, ordinarily confer an immediate writ remedy against police inaction. Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police duty from the informant's remedy under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. It explained that Ramesh Kumari addressed the former, while AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari addressed the latter. Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016, 20.12.2016, applies the rule of alternative remedy to a mandamus under Section 154, subject to the recognised Whirlpool exceptions. It explains why Lalita Kumari's rule on the duty to register an FIR does not itself determine entitlement to a writ. The writ was dismissed with liberty to approach the Magistrate.

Police inaction / magistrate route - Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, provides for recourse first to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and then to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). The Magistrate may direct registration and proper investigation and monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, follows that remedy and explains that the Magistrate may, if necessary, recommend a change of investigating officer but cannot investigate personally. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, through Gangadhar and AIIMS Employees' Union, identifies the complaint route under Sections 190/200 and the Magistrate's powers to enquire, direct investigation, issue process or dismiss the complaint. The Court directed no FIR or investigation in the present case; it preserved the petitioner's recourse under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS.

Fair investigation / exceptional writ control - Divine Retreat Centre, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognises rare intervention under Article 226 upon a clear showing that investigative power has been exercised mala fide and that Chapter XII has not been complied with. Such intervention is confined to enforcing lawful process rather than prescribing investigative steps. Counsel's citations of Lalita Kumari and Shaikh Ansar Ahmad were arguments; the Court applied the authorities on writ maintainability and remedies before the Magistrate.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The petitioners said that they had lodged a complaint with the authorities. According to counsel, statements had also been recorded, but the enquiry had not concluded and no FIR had been registered. In Writ Petition No. 18039/2024 under Article 226 of the Constitution, they sought production of records relating to Annexures P-4 and P-6 and a mandamus directing respondents 1–4 to register an FIR against respondents 5–10. They also sought a direction to the Director General of Police to transfer the matter to an independent agency for a fair enquiry, alleging that respondent 4 had refused to enquire despite the material supplied. Petitioners' counsel relied on what the order calls Lalta Kumari and Lalita Kumari, Shaikh Ansar Ahmad Md. Husain, and the Division Bench decision in Smt. Laxmi Sharma to support police action. State counsel accepted the general duty to register an FIR for a cognizable offence but argued that police inaction should be taken to a Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, identified in the order with Section 223 BNSS. The Court heard both sides and framed the central question as the maintainability of a writ seeking police registration. After surveying Supreme Court and Madhya Pradesh precedent, it dismissed the writ while preserving the Magistrate route. The order does not set out the underlying incident, complaint contents, actual statement transcripts or any finding on the private respondents' conduct.

2. Precedents — Considered : The three Supreme Court decisions cited by the petitioners as Lalta/Lalita Kumari and Shaikh Ansar Ahmad appear in counsel's submissions. The Judge did not separately analyse their merits or adopt their full reasoning. Their relevance to the police duty is addressed only through the Court's discussion of other authorities and the Division Bench's express distinction. Smt. Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted and applied to distinguish the uncontroversial duty to register an FIR upon cognizable information from the judicial remedy when the police fail to act: a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200. The quoted Supreme Court passage explains that Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary concern the police response to cognizable information. AIIMS Employees' Union (Regd.) v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359, address the procedure and remedy before the Magistrate when the police fail to act. The High Court used this distinction to refuse a direct registration writ while preserving recourse to the Magistrate; it did not hold that registration is optional for the police.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted for two related but distinct rules. Its paragraph 42 invokes Gangadhar and AIIMS Employees' Union for the complaint remedy under Sections 190 and 200. The Gangadhar passage explains that a Magistrate can enquire under Chapter XV, direct police investigation upon prima facie material, dismiss a complaint under Section 203 if no case is disclosed, or take cognizance and issue process. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted for recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) CrPC and an application under Section 156(3) when registration or a proper investigation is lacking. The Magistrate has authority to order and monitor investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, was quoted as following Sakiri Vasu. The effective remedy lies with the Magistrate, who may, on a prima facie basis, direct registration or proper investigation and recommend a change of officer if needed, but cannot personally investigate.

The Court also quoted the Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016, decided on 20 December 2016. It holds that a mandamus under Section 154 can be declined if the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, unless one of the recognised exceptions in Whirlpool v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, applies. It expressly distinguishes Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, which concerns the police duty to register an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence, from an entitlement to bypass the remedies and obtain mandamus. The embedded authorities form part of the Supreme Court's quoted reasoning on these propositions.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked for mandamus and a direction to an independent agency to conduct a fair enquiry. The Court treated the availability of ordinary criminal procedure remedies as central to the exercise of that writ jurisdiction. Section 154 CrPC concerns registration on receipt of cognizable information, and Section 154(3) permits recourse to the Superintendent of Police if the police fail to act. Section 156(3) CrPC permits a Magistrate to direct police registration or investigation where prima facie warranted. Sections 190 and 200 provide a complaint and cognizance route, while Section 203 permits dismissal after inquiry where appropriate. The Court's operative liberty specifically refers to Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023.

4. Issues : Could petitioners who say that their complaint and recorded statements led to no FIR obtain a direct order under Article 226 commanding police registration despite the available remedies through the police hierarchy and Magistrate? An associated request concerned whether the alleged refusal to conduct an enquiry justified a writ directing an independent agency. The Court quoted the exceptional mala fide standard, but made no direction for an independent agency.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first distinguished the police's statutory obligation from the judicial remedy available to an aggrieved complainant. Aleque Padamsee affirmed the duty to register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence but pointed to Sections 190 and 200 if the police do not act. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe set out successive statutory remedies through the Superintendent of Police and Magistrate, with power to order registration and investigation and to monitor its propriety. Divine Retreat Centre recognised exceptional writ control over mala fide investigative abuse, confined that control to statutory process, and reiterated the Magistrate complaint route in ordinary cases of police inaction. The binding Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria expressly distinguished Lalita Kumari's rule on police duty from an automatic entitlement to writ mandamus, while preserving recognised exceptions to the usual alternative-remedy rule. Applying those principles, the Court made no direction for registration or transfer. The refusal concerned the procedural route, and the petitioners were left to seek relief before the Magistrate.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the writ petition. It expressly granted the petitioners liberty, if they so desire, to approach the appropriate Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS for redress of their grievance.

Santosh Kumar Mishra and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, W.P. no. 18039/2024, 25/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (839) Prev Next

Headnote :- SC/ST Act / Section 18 anticipatory-bail bar — prima facie act offence - The Court observed that, at the pre-arrest bail stage, the High Court can examine the allegations to decide whether they disclose a prima facie offence under the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. Merely citing provisions of the Act does not foreclose that inquiry. Counsel relied on Atendra Singh Rawat v. State of M.P., 2019 (2) MPLJ (Cri) 481, for this threshold proposition. In light of the Section 250 M.P. Land Revenue Code order against the complainant party and the alleged location of the incident on the disputed plot, the possibilities of false or excessive implication or private defence remained open. On this limited assessment, the Court held Section 18 inapplicable and granted conditional anticipatory bail, expressly without commenting on the merits. The appellant had to appear before the investigating/arresting officer by 10 January 2024 and furnish a bond of ₹1,00,000 with one surety in the same amount. He had to attend interrogation and comply with the conditions under Section 438(2) CrPC. The order would lapse if he failed to appear. The complainant had been informed of the appeal under Section 15-A of the Act and was to be informed of the grant of bail in light of Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, 18 March 2021.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appellant Santosh Sen apprehended arrest in Crime No. 08/2023 at Police Station AJK Guna, District Guna. The FIR named IPC Sections 294, 323, 336, 34 and 506 and Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. By order dated 9 June 2023, the Special Judge (Atrocities), Guna, rejected his application for anticipatory bail. He appealed under Section 14-A(2) of the Act. The State reported that the complainant had been informed of the appeal as required by Section 15-A, and the case diary was before the High Court. Counsel for the appellant argued that an order under Section 250 of the M.P. Land Revenue Code had found that the complainant party had encroached on the appellant's land. He submitted that the alleged incident occurred on that plot and that the criminal accusation was made to overcome the revenue order. He relied on Atendra Singh Rawat concerning the Section 18 threshold and offered cooperation. He also claimed that the risks of flight or interference with evidence were low and that the trial was likely to take a long time. These were submissions, not final findings of fabrication or innocence. The State opposed the appeal, contending that Section 18 made anticipatory bail unavailable. The Court heard the parties and considered whether the appeal could be entertained at the threshold in light of the land order, then allowed it on conditions.

2. Precedents — Considered : Atendra Singh Rawat v. State of M.P., 2019 (2) MPLJ (Cri) 481, was cited by appellant's counsel for the proposition that Section 18 does not bar pre-arrest bail where the allegations do not make out a prima facie SC/ST Act offence. Aparna Bhat and Others v. State of M.P.,

Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, was mentioned by the Court solely in directing intimation of the grant of bail to the complainant.

3. Statutes considered : The appeal against the Special Judge's refusal of anticipatory bail was brought under Section 14-A(2) of the SC/ST Act. The restriction in Section 18 was the controlling question. The Court examined whether a prima facie offence under the Act was disclosed and held the bar inapplicable on its limited assessment of these facts. Section 15-A required the complainant to be informed of the appellate proceeding; the State reported that this had occurred, and further intimation of the grant of bail was ordered. Section 250 of the M.P. Land Revenue Code was relevant as the stated basis of the existing encroachment order. The High Court did not adjudicate title or possession afresh. Section 438(2) CrPC supplied the further standard conditions for the anticipatory bail granted.

4. Issues : Did the Section 18 SC/ST Act bar prevent consideration of the anticipatory-bail appeal merely because offences under the Act were listed, or could the Court examine whether the allegations disclosed a prima facie offence under the Act? If the bar did not apply, did the existing revenue order and the location of the reported incident justify conditional anticipatory bail on the case as then presented?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court stated that it could examine the allegations to see whether a prima facie SC/ST Act offence was made out. This threshold determination preceded application of the Section 18 bar. On its assessment of the present record, an order under Section 250 had been passed against the complainant party, who, according to the Court's brief discussion, had not vacated the disputed land. The alleged criminal incident was said to have occurred on that plot. The Court reasoned that the possibilities of false or excessive implication or the appellant's exercise of private defence could not be ruled out. It consequently held that the statutory bar on anticipatory bail would not apply. The holding concerns the qualified prima facie inquiry under Section 18 and its application to this land-possession dispute. It does not lay down a blanket rule that a revenue order defeats an SC/ST prosecution.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court has allowed the appeal for anticipatory bail.

Santosh Sen v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.A. no. 8061/2023, 29/12/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (840) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation / suspected accused's control - The Court observed that a person suspected in an FIR has no right to choose the investigating agency or officer, prescribe the method of investigation or demand that the police accept his proposed defence at the inquiry stage. The Court quoted Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, on the choice of agency and its reliance on Narmada Bai and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt. It also quoted the discussion of E. Sivakumar, which explains that an accused does not automatically have a right to be heard when an impartial investigation is ordered. Romila Thapar's discussion of Divine Retreat Centre preserves rare process directions under Article 226 where investigative power is shown to have been exercised mala fide.

Article 226 / monitoring versus supervision - Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was applied to distinguish constitutional monitoring of a legally justified investigation from supervision of police choices. The High Court declined to direct the investigating officer's methods or test the disputed factual defence in the writ proceeding and dismissed the petition. This ruling does not withdraw the exceptional public-law jurisdiction explained in the quoted authorities.

Alibi / forum and evidentiary stage - The suspected accused said that he was at home during the incident, occupied with a forthcoming marriage function. The Court treated this as an alibi requiring cogent and reliable evidence before the trial court.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Santosh Singh Rajawat was a suspected accused in Crime No. 248/2022 registered at Police Station Gole Ka Mandir, District Gwalior. In a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution, he sought an order directing a decision on his representation (Annexure P/1) and a fair inquiry, with other appropriate relief. His counsel asserted that he had been falsely implicated because he was at his house at the time of the alleged offence. He was said to have been occupied with purchases and the Mahila Sangeet function connected with the planned marriage of Yogeshwar, described in the order as the son of Santosh. The High Court heard his counsel, considered his position as a suspected accused and the limits on intervention in investigation, and dismissed the petition. The wedding-function account was his asserted defence, not a judicial finding about the occurrence.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, paragraphs 23–27, at length. Romila Thapar considered whether named accused or persons purporting to represent them could insist on changing an investigating agency and whether a special or court-monitored investigation was justified. It rejected an accused's entitlement to select an agency. The quoted passage cited Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat for the rule that an accused has no say in the appointment of an agency and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India for the absence of a right to prescribe the manner of investigation or prosecution. Within that discussion, E. Sivakumar v. Union of India explained that an accused need not be heard as a matter of course in a writ seeking impartial investigation, invoking Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki and Narender G. Goel. Romila Thapar also quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala on the inability of an interested accused, complainant or informant to choose the agency or an officer during an investigation. It preserved an aggrieved person's rare recourse under Article 226 when investigative power is shown to have been exercised mala fide. The High Court used these principles to reject the suspected accused's attempt to steer the police inquiry. Other decisions, including W.N. Chadha, appear as supporting references within the Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt quotation.

Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was expressly cited by the High Court for the constitutional court's power to monitor an investigation without supervising its manner. The Court applied that distinction to refuse the petitioner’s requested interference.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked to seek a decision on the representation and a direction for a fair inquiry. Crime No. 248/2022 identified the pending police matter. The plea of alibi was an evidentiary defence requiring cogent, reliable proof at trial; it did not confer a threshold entitlement to control the inquiry.

4. Issues : Could a suspected accused invoke Article 226 to have the police conduct a fair inquiry in the particular manner implied by his representation, when his factual basis was an asserted absence from the scene? This raised the limits on an accused's participation in agency selection and the method of investigation, and the separate distinction between constitutional monitoring and supervision. Could the asserted whereabouts be accepted in the writ proceeding instead of being tested as an alibi at trial?

5. Ratio / Findings : Treating the petitioner as a suspected accused, the Court applied Romila Thapar's principle that an accused cannot dictate the investigating agency or the way an officer conducts a criminal inquiry. The Court stated that constitutional courts cannot supervise an investigation. It distinguished the permissible monitoring function recognised in Manohar Lal Sharma from a direction prescribing police methods. The petitioner's explanation that he was at home for a family function was treated as a plea of alibi requiring cogent, reliable evidence before the trial court. The High Court therefore declined to turn that disputed defence into an instruction controlling the ongoing investigation. This was a procedural refusal of writ relief. It was not a final finding that the alibi was untrue, that the petitioner was present at the scene, or that the prosecution had proved any offence.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court has dismissed the writ petition as lacking merit.

Santosh Singh Rajawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 12572/2022, 11/07/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (841) Prev Next

Headnote :- Statutory cognizance bar / Section 195 CrPC - The applicants sought quashing of Crime No. 0345/2021 under Section 482, arguing that only a complaint could initiate action. The Court dismissed their petition. The respondents submitted that Section 195's complaint requirement for an offence under Section 186 IPC restricts the court's taking of cognizance, rather than registration of an FIR or police investigation. The FIR also alleged an offence under Section 189 IPC, which the Court expressly held was outside the Section 195 bar. The respondents treated any later objection to cognizance as distinct from the FIR challenge.

Complaint definition / non-cognizable report - The explanation to Section 2(d) CrPC treats a police report that discloses a non-cognizable offence after investigation as a complaint, and the officer making it as the complainant. The Court quoted Ushaben v. Kishorbhai Chunilal Talpada, (2012) 6 SCC 353, for the principle that the police are not prevented from investigating allegations of both cognizable and non-cognizable offences. The order recorded the respondents' reliance on Zaid Pathan for the registration/cognizance distinction and their further citation of Ramesh Mendola.

Inherent jurisdiction / result - The allegations that the applicants obstructed a Child Welfare Committee hearing, pressed for action on a society file and threatened its chair were not tested for guilt. The Court found no basis for interference with the FIR at the Section 482 stage and dismissed the petition.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Applicants Sarika Shrivastava and others sought to quash the FIR dated 7 July 2021, Crime No. 0345 at Kotwali, Chhindwara, under Sections 186, 189 and 34 IPC, and any consequent proceedings. The FIR account, reproduced from counsel's submission, alleged interruption of a Child Welfare Committee hearing concerning a juvenile on 15 June 2021. Applicant No. 2, described as a teacher, allegedly arrived with his wife and a society file. He insisted that the chair sign and seal it despite the ongoing hearing, and threatened the chair and a female participant when asked to return later. Applicant No. 1, described as a news correspondent, allegedly arrived with microphones, recorded the proceedings on a mobile phone and questioned the chair. The alleged pressure concerned recognition of a foster-care society with purported deficiencies. These were allegations in the criminal process, not facts found after trial. The applicants' principal legal ground was that Section 195 CrPC required a complaint by an authority or court and therefore precluded an FIR. The respondents opposed quashing and distinguished investigation from cognizance.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court quoted Ushaben v. Kishorbhai Chunilal Talpada and Others, (2012) 6 SCC 353, paragraphs 14–19. Ushaben discussed Section 198-A and Sections 498-A and 494 IPC, the meaning of a complaint under Section 2(d), and the absence of a bar on police investigation where a complaint contains allegations of both cognizable and non-cognizable offences. The present Court applied that principle concerning investigation of mixed offences. Ushaben's discussion of Babubhai Madhavlal Patel was quoted as a factual distinction within the Supreme Court's reasoning, rather than independently analysed here. The respondents also relied on two Madhya Pradesh coordinate-bench orders. Zaid Pathan and Others v. State of M.P., MCrC 32779/2020, decided on 22 December 2020, was cited for the distinction between registration of an FIR and later cognizance: an FIR may be registered, while an order taking cognizance solely on a final report may be challenged where a complaint is required. They also cited Ramesh Mendola v. State of Madhya Pradesh, MCrC 32126/2022, decided on 28 June 2022.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to seek quashing of the FIR. The applicants relied on Section 195 CrPC as a bar concerning Section 186 IPC; the respondents distinguished its restriction on court cognizance from FIR registration. The Court expressly held that Section 189 IPC, another offence alleged in the FIR, was outside the Section 195 bar. Section 2(d) CrPC defines a complaint as an allegation to a Magistrate for action, excluding a police report. Its explanation, however, treats a police report that discloses a non-cognizable offence after investigation as a complaint and the reporting officer as the complainant. The quoted Supreme Court decision concerned Sections 198-A CrPC and 498-A and 494 IPC in its own setting; those were not offences alleged against the present applicants.

4. Issues : Did the asserted Section 195 requirement of a complaint by an authority or court make FIR registration and police investigation under Sections 186, 189 and 34 IPC unlawful at the threshold, warranting quashing under Section 482? This required distinguishing FIR registration and investigation from a court's later decision on cognizance and recognising the independent allegation under Section 189. A related question concerned the relevance of Section 2(d)'s explanation treating a police report as a complaint when it discloses a non-cognizable offence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court read Section 2(d), including its explanation, as permitting a police report that discloses a non-cognizable offence after investigation to be treated as a complaint in the stated circumstances. The respondents distinguished Section 195's restriction on cognizance from FIR registration, despite the allegation under Section 186. The Court expressly noted that Section 189 was not covered by the Section 195 bar. Applying Ushaben, it stated that the police could investigate non-cognizable allegations along with cognizable allegations in a case involving both. The respondents' reliance on Zaid Pathan identified the possible later remedy if a court improperly took cognizance on a final report where a complaint was required. The Court expressed no conclusion on the alleged facts or ultimate charge.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC because no case for interference was made out. The FIR and investigation were left to proceed according to law.

Sarika Shrivastava and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 12179/2022, 22/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (842) Prev Next

Headnote :- Anticipatory bail / conditional grant - The Court observed that Saroj Devi's first application under Section 438 CrPC concerned allegations of an armed confrontation with the police in Crime No. 151/2021 under Sections 307, 353, 336, 332 and 34 IPC and Sections 25/27 Arms Act. Counsel stressed that she was not alleged to have fired a gun herself, disputed her involvement, referred to a pending habeas corpus petition containing allegations against the station officer, noted co-accused Shadilal's regular bail, and offered her cooperation. The State opposed the application. Without commenting on the merits, the High Court granted anticipatory bail if she appeared before the investigating or arresting officer by 18 January 2022 and furnished a personal bond of Rs. 1,00,000 with one surety in the like amount. She had to attend interrogation and comply with Section 438(2). The order would lapse and the police could take her into custody if she failed to appear by the deadline.

Complainant notice - The Court directed intimation of bail to the complainant in light of Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Saroj Devi apprehended arrest in Crime No. 151/2021 at Police Station Ater, Bhind, involving Sections 307, 353, 336, 332 and 34 IPC and Sections 25/27 of the Arms Act. The account presented at the hearing was that the police approached co-accused Shadilal over an illegal gun on 1 October 2021. He allegedly fired three shots at the officers, causing no injury. He and then the applicant allegedly instigated her daughter to fire from a roof. Those shots missed, and the police fired four shots in return. The applicant was also alleged to have pelted stones to help Shadilal escape, injuring Constable Abhishek's right palm. She contested her implication, referred to the recovery recorded by the police, and relied on Writ Petition No. 10479/2020, a pending habeas corpus case containing allegations concerning her daughter's rings and mobile phone and SHO Atul Bhadauriya. Counsel said that Shadilal had obtained regular bail on 22 November 2021, that the applicant was not alleged to have fired a gun and was a woman, and that she would cooperate and would neither abscond nor tamper with evidence. The State opposed the application; the case diary was available.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court cited Aparna Bhat and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, solely to direct intimation of the grant of bail to the complainant. The applicant cited Shadilal's prior regular-bail order, MCrC No. 56651/2021 dated 22 November 2021, as a fact supporting parity. The pending habeas writ formed the background to her submission of false implication; it was not a binding finding of police misconduct.

3. Statutes considered : Section 438 CrPC governed the first application for protection from arrest, and subsection (2) supplied the continuing conditions. Section 439 CrPC was mentioned only because the co-accused had received regular bail under it. The registered allegations included IPC Sections 307, 353, 336, 332 and 34 and Arms Act Sections 25/27; their ingredients were neither decided nor converted into findings of guilt. The separate habeas corpus proceeding and the order passed in it were cited as facts, without disposal of that writ. The applicant was directed to appear by a fixed date and furnish a bond and surety to the investigating/arresting officer.

4. Issues : Was conditional anticipatory bail appropriate pending investigation on the record and submissions then available, despite allegations of gunfire at the police and injury to a constable from stone pelting? The factors advanced included the absence of an allegation that the applicant had personally fired a gun, her offer of cooperation, her being a woman, the claim of retaliatory implication and Shadilal's regular bail. A further operational question concerned securing her attendance and cooperation in the investigation and informing the complainant of the bail decision.

5. Ratio / Findings : After hearing the State's opposition, the Court considered the circumstances without commenting on the merits and allowed the application on express conditions. The grant provided conditional pre-arrest protection on this record. It was not an exoneration, a determination that the SHO had falsely implicated the applicant, or a finding that the allegations of instigation and stone pelting had been disproved. Protection was expressly conditional on her appearing before the investigating/arresting officer by 18 January 2022. The bond, surety in the like amount, availability for further interrogation and compliance with Section 438(2) required her participation in the process. The order directed intimation to the complainant by reference to Aparna Bhat.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court has allowed the first application for anticipatory bail.

Saroj Devi v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 1145/2022, 11/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (843) Prev Next

Headnote :- Seized material / non-production - A complainant-witness sought a direction to produce articles said to belong to deceased Chhunna alias Prem Kumar and to recall the identification and seizure witnesses. The deceased had been identified from clothing, photographs and a black thread tied at the waist; the prosecution also alleged that clothing had been recovered from the accused persons. The Court held that, although seized objects may be incriminating, their non-production in court alone does not automatically invalidate the seizure or require acquittal. State of Rajasthan v. Sahi Ram, (2019) 10 SCC 649, was quoted for that contextual assessment. Vijay Pandey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2019) 18 SCC 215, illustrated the distinct failure to link a tested narcotic sample to the seized material.

Sessions trial / complainant's role - The applicant was a witness to identification of the body and to investigative proceedings, but counsel identified no authority entitling the applicant to challenge non-production or obtain recall through this Section 482 application. Conducting a Sessions trial is primarily the public prosecutor's duty; a complainant may assist. The application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Saroj Sharma moved an application under Section 482 CrPC concerning a Sessions trial arising from the death of Chhunna alias Prem Kumar. In the relief set out on the first page, the applicant asked for a direction to the respondents to produce the deceased's seized articles before the trial court and for the identification and seizure-panchnama witnesses to be recalled for further statements. Counsel said that, despite the trial court's repeated letters to the authorities, the objects had not been produced. According to counsel, this had prevented the applicant and seizure witnesses from identifying them in court. The charge sheet indicated that the applicant had identified the deceased's body from clothing, photographs and a black thread tied at the waist. The prosecution also alleged that the deceased's clothing had been recovered from the accused persons.

2. Precedents — Considered : Applied: State of Rajasthan v. Sahi Ram, 2019:INSC:1096, (2019) 10 SCC 649, paragraphs 15–16, was quoted to show that non-production of alleged contraband was not, by itself, the sole ground for acquittal in the cases surveyed. Deficiencies in proof of seizure, the explanation of custody or the link between the tested samples and seized material were additional considerations. The Court used that limited proposition in the present dispute over seized clothing, which was not contraband. Vijay Pandey v. State of Uttar Pradesh, 2019:INSC:837, (2019) 18 SCC 215, was quoted separately: a laboratory report alone could not prove that the tested sample was the one seized from the accused; the prosecution had to establish the link between them.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to seek directions for production of the articles and recall of the witnesses. The Court's decisive procedural premise was that a Sessions prosecution is conducted by the public prosecutor. The request for recall appeared in the relief and submissions and was refused on the basis that the applicant had shown no standing, as part of the Court's refusal to interfere. The NDPS discussion arose in the cited Supreme Court decisions, rather than as the statutory basis of the present trial.

4. Issues : Could a complainant or identification witness invoke inherent jurisdiction to compel the investigating authorities to produce seized articles and recall the identification and seizure witnesses in a Sessions trial conducted by the public prosecutor? Did non-production of clothing allegedly recovered from the accused, even after repeated letters, by itself invalidate the seizure or justify a court direction? The related distinction concerned identification of the body from photographs, clothes and thread, as opposed to the separate allegation that the deceased's clothes had been recovered from the accused persons.

5. Ratio / Findings : From the charge sheet, the Court noted that Saroj Sharma's own evidence concerned identification of the body and that the alleged recovery from the accused persons could be an incriminating circumstance. The applicant was also a witness to investigative proceedings. Asked to identify the applicant's competence to challenge the investigating officer's failure to produce the objects, counsel could point to no authority or locus. The Court stated that conducting a Sessions trial is primarily the public prosecutor's duty and that the complainant's role is to assist. It accepted that production of incriminating articles can be important, but held that non-production alone was insufficient to discard the seizure. Sahi Ram's assessment of several NDPS cases did not permit automatic acquittal merely because the exhibits had not been produced. Vijay Pandey illustrated a distinct failure of proof where the seized and laboratory-tested samples could not be linked. The Court's refusal to interfere rested on the applicant's attempt to direct the conduct of the trial and the insufficiency of non-production alone as a basis for interference.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the Section 482 application because no case for interference was made out. The trial remained with the public prosecutor, subject to lawful trial-court control. There was no acquittal, conviction, finding on the ultimate identification of physical objects, or adjudication of the alleged recovery's final evidentiary weight.

Saroj Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 10246/2025, 11/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (844) Prev Next

Headnote :- Civil suit and criminal process / forged agreement - Nattho Bai alleged that she had not executed an agreement to sell jointly owned land, although the applicants had produced such an agreement in a pending civil suit and two of them were witnesses to it. The JMFC ordered registration of an FIR and investigation into cheating, forgery, use of a forged document and conspiracy under Section 156(3) CrPC. The civil suit did not bar a parallel criminal inquiry. Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State and Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon distinguish the respective standards of proof and reject any automatic binding effect of findings in one forum on the other, while preserving the limited relevance of earlier judgments under Evidence Act Sections 40–43.

Section 482 / prima facie offence - The allegations of a forged agreement used in litigation, reinforced in the record by a police status report describing it as apparently forged, disclosed a cognizable offence on their face. The Court applied the threshold stated in its cited Supreme Court quashing authorities and declined to determine authenticity or guilt before investigation.

Mala fides / disputed fact - Applying Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, the Court held that the complainant's alleged hostility was insufficient by itself where a cognizable offence was disclosed. It could not adjudicate the disputed allegation of mala fides at this stage. The application challenging the Magistrate's order of 27 July 2024 was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nattho Bai, respondent No. 1, asserted joint ownership and possession of agricultural land bearing survey No. 206/min-2, measuring 0.7000 hectares, at village Sasera, Gwalior. She alleged that she had never executed an agreement to sell it, yet the applicants had filed an agreement in Civil Suit No. 431A/2023 before the Eighth Additional District Judge. Applicants Dinesh Singh and Satendra Singh were named as witnesses to the agreement. Her complaint alleged that the forged document was being used to grab the land. A police status report dated 14 June 2024 described the agreement as apparently forged on a prima facie assessment. On 27 July 2024, the JMFC, Gwalior, allowed the application under Section 156(3) CrPC in Case No. UN CR/540/23 and directed registration of an FIR and investigation under Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120B IPC. Sarvendra Kumar and others invoked Section 482, arguing that the pending civil suit and the complainant's alleged mala fides invalidated that direction. The State opposed the application. The High Court heard submissions at the admission stage, rather than evidence at a trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kishan Singh (Dead) through LRs v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, was quoted on concurrent civil and criminal proceedings and their different standards of proof. It drew on the Constitution Bench decision in Iqbal Singh Marwah and discussed K.G. Premshanker and Evidence Act Sections 41–43. Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), (2009) 5 SCC 528, was quoted separately on the limits of the binding effect of a civil judgment and its relevance under Sections 40–43, and on the need to decide whether to stay proceedings according to the facts of each case. Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon, SLP (Cr.) No. 9778/2018, decided 2 April 2024, was quoted with its examination of Karam Chand, K.G. Premshanker, Vishnu Dutt Sharma, Satish Chander Ahuja, Iqbal Singh Marwah and M.S. Sheriff.

The Court then listed XYZ v State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v Arvind Khanna, Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha in support of the Section 482 threshold: quashing on the ground that no offence is disclosed requires that the uncontroverted allegations fail to disclose an offence. Those authorities were listed without individual analysis of their facts. Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted at length on restraint in exercising inherent jurisdiction and the secondary importance of an informant's mala fides where the allegations disclose a cognizable offence. R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab was referred to within the passage quoted from Renu Kumari.

3. Statutes considered : Section 156(3) CrPC governed the Magistrate's order for registration and investigation. Section 482 CrPC supplied the applicants' challenge and the High Court's limited threshold review. The alleged IPC offences were Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120B, concerning cheating, forgery, use of a forged document and conspiracy. Evidence Act Sections 40–43 were discussed through the Supreme Court authorities as possible routes for relevance of a previous judgment in an appropriate later proceeding. The pending civil suit's outcome and title questions remained open.

4. Issues : Did the civil suit concerning the property and agreement preclude the criminal court from referring a complaint alleging fabrication and use of that agreement for investigation? Was the uncontroverted allegation that Nattho Bai had never executed the agreement, despite its production by the applicants in their civil suit, sufficient to disclose a cognizable offence at the Section 482 threshold? Could the alleged mala fide motive be adjudicated or, by itself, invalidate the Section 156(3) direction before investigation? The court was not asked to determine competing evidence of signatures as a trial judge or choose which litigant owned the land.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court held that civil and criminal proceedings can run in parallel. Their different burdens of proof and evidentiary records prevent findings in one proceeding from automatically binding the other, subject to the specific Evidence Act rules where relevant. The complaint's allegation that a forged agreement had been prepared and used in a civil suit disclosed a cognizable offence. The police status report describing the agreement as apparently forged formed part of the account presented by counsel. The Court used the listed Supreme Court quashing authorities to assess the allegations at face value, rather than to decide whether the agreement would ultimately be proved forged. The alleged personal hostility or mala fides was a disputed fact that the Court could not determine in this proceeding under its inherent powers. Under Renu Kumari, where the allegations disclose a cognizable offence, the informant's possible animus alone does not defeat investigation. None of the circumstances shown justified interference with the Magistrate's direction.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The JMFC's order of 27 July 2024 directing registration of an FIR and police investigation under Section 156(3) remained operative.

Sarvendra Kumar and Others v. Nattho Bai and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 48591/2024, 20/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (845) Prev Next

Headnote :- Arrest and investigation / judicial control - The Court held that a complainant cannot obtain a direction under Article 226 requiring the police to arrest persons named in the complainant's FIR or file a charge sheet merely because the FIR has been registered. D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra on the discretion under Section 41 CrPC: the investigating officer must assess the need for arrest in the circumstances; a cognizable accusation does not automatically require arrest. Directing arrest or a particular conclusion would amount to supervising the investigation.

Timely completion / Section 173(1) CrPC - The statute requires investigation without unnecessary delay. In Crime No. 483/2019, concerning alleged IPC cheating and forgery and Prize Chits Act offences, the police had not finished investigating. The High Court directed the investigating officer to conclude it as early as possible, decide whether an offence was made out, and take necessary lawful steps toward a closure report or charge sheet according to the result. The petitioner could make a further grievance to the Gwalior Superintendent of Police. No deadline, arrest order or compulsory charge sheet was imposed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sarvendra Singh made a complaint alleging cheating, forgery and use of forged documents. On that basis, Police Station Hazira, Gwalior, registered Crime No. 483/2019 under Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471 read with Section 34 IPC and Sections 5 and 7 of the Prize Chits and Money Circulation Schemes (Banning) Act, 1978. He complained that the police had neither arrested the accused nor concluded the investigation. His writ petition under Article 226 sought expeditious investigation by respondents Nos. 2 and 3. The Court separately addressed the demand for arrest advanced during argument.

2. Precedents — Considered : Applied: D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively. That decision disapproved directions by a High Court to record statements, arrest, seize property and file a charge sheet, or to conduct the investigation from a particular angle. It explained that the police may close a case or file a charge sheet according to the result of a lawful investigation. Within that decision, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, describes arrest under Section 41 CrPC as discretionary and requiring regard for liberty, rather than as a mechanical consequence of an FIR. D. Venkatasubramaniam also quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala on hearing persons likely to be adversely affected by drastic judicial directions concerning investigation. The Supreme Court's further discussion of inherent power under Section 482 concerned its own procedural setting; Sarvendra Singh had invoked Article 226. The High Court applied the stated limit on supervision of investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution supplied the writ route. Section 173(1) CrPC required investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay and supplied the affirmative direction. Section 41 CrPC appears in the quoted M.C. Abraham passage for police arrest discretion. The FIR cited IPC Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471 with Section 34, and Sections 5 and 7 of the 1978 Prize Chits and Money Circulation Schemes (Banning) Act. A final report could be a closure report or a charge sheet depending on the investigation; neither result was mandated by the order.

4. Issues : Should the High Court direct arrest of the alleged perpetrators at the complainant's request while investigation into the FIR remained unfinished? Could the investigation remain pending indefinitely, and what direction for expedition could lawfully be made under Section 173(1) without prescribing its means or result? The Court distinguished a command to perform a specific discretionary police act from enforcement of the statutory obligation to complete investigation without unnecessary delay.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court refused to direct arrest. D. Venkatasubramaniam, drawing on M.C. Abraham, explains that an investigating officer may investigate before deciding whether arrest is necessary and that even a report of a cognizable offence creates no automatic duty to arrest. Directing arrest and the filing of a charge sheet would amount to supervising the police investigation and pre-empting the conclusion the officer must reach. Section 173(1), however, imposes a statutory duty to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. The officer could not leave the investigation pending, but had to decide whether the evidence disclosed an offence, promptly submit the appropriate final report and take the steps required by law. Investigative discretion remained subject to the statutory duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay.

6. Relief : The High Court finally disposed of the writ with a direction to the investigating officer to conclude the investigation into Crime No. 483/2019 as early as possible and take the necessary steps under law. The request for a direction to arrest was refused, and no charge sheet was ordered. Sarvendra Singh remained free to submit a grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, who was to consider it according to law.

Sarvendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 3851/2020, 24/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (846) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / parents-in-law - The Court observed that the FIR did more than merely name relatives. The wife alleged that her husband and his parents repeatedly demanded Rs. 5 lakh and taunted her; that the parents-in-law denied her adequate food and compelled her to do all the housework; that she was reproached after the birth of a daughter; and that her phone contact was restricted and the father-in-law broke her mobile. Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260, treats such allegations of harassment by close family members as triable, while cautioning against implicating distant relatives without supporting material. The High Court found a prima facie case against the two parent applicants and left the question of guilt for trial.

Quashing / disputed defence material - A private declaration dated 4 May 2023 did not conclusively disprove the alleged ouster on 5 May 2023. It required proof and itself referred to strained relations. The purported disowning intimation of 2021 was undermined by the shared address and the later account of continued residence together. The other letters to the police bore no acknowledgment of receipt. The Court considered Abhishek v. State of M.P. on careful scrutiny of malicious prosecutions, but found no ground to quash the FIR, charge sheet or pending JMFC proceeding. The order does not state the exact penal sections of the FIR and charge sheet.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Applicants No. 1 and 2 were the father-in-law and mother-in-law of respondent No. 2, who had married their son Sanjeev Kumar on 10 December 2022. In her FIR in Crime No. 169/2023, she alleged that matters were normal for four months, after which her husband and parents-in-law demanded Rs. 5 lakh and taunted her about dowry. She alleged that her parents-in-law denied her adequate food, compelled her to do all the housework and restricted communication with her parents. She further alleged that her husband abused and assaulted her during pregnancy, that the family criticised her for giving birth to a daughter, and that applicant No. 1 broke her mobile. According to her, the demand and harassment culminated in her expulsion on 5 May 2023, with a threat to kill her if she returned without the money. She went to her parental home with her daughter. The applicants applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR dated 3 June 2023, the charge sheet dated 26 June 2023 and the proceedings before the JMFC, Bhopal. They relied on a written declaration dated 4 May 2023, addressed to nobody, stating that she had left because of disputes with her in-laws; a purported notice of 2021 disowning the son and his wife; and notices to the police in 2023 bearing no acknowledgment of receipt.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted paragraphs 12–14 of Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, (2015) 11 SCC 260. Taramani reproduced Kailash Chandra Agrawal's caution, with reference to Kans Raj, against casually implicating distant relatives without attributing specific roles. It also held that allegations of dowry harassment by a husband and his parents, forcing the complainant to leave the matrimonial home, raise a triable issue and do not warrant quashing. The quoted passage from Kailash Chandra cited K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa on the established principles governing quashing. The applicants relied on Abhishek v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Criminal Appeal No. 1457/2015, decided 31 August 2023, to seek closer scrutiny where a complaint appears manifestly frivolous or motivated by vengeance, including consideration of circumstances beyond the FIR. The High Court considered that submission and the writings produced, but did not accept those documents as establishing exoneration.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the request to quash the FIR, charge sheet and ensuing proceeding. The allegations concerned dowry demand and matrimonial cruelty, and the order identified Crime No. 169/2023. The defence writings were private documents or purported communications to the police, whose proof and receipt were in dispute. They were not public orders conclusively determining that the family had separated. The Court did not decide the burden at trial, the standard for conviction or the final admissibility of evidence.

4. Issues : Did the wife's specific allegations against her parents-in-law disclose a prima facie case, or had relatives been implicated indiscriminately? Could the one-day difference between an unaddressed departure letter and the alleged date of ouster in the FIR, or the earlier disowning notice, conclusively disprove their involvement at the Section 482 stage? Did the case appear manifestly malicious on the closer scrutiny discussed in Abhishek? The Court was not determining the exact date of departure, whether the incident concerning the child or the phone could be independently proved, or the applicants' guilt.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court read the FIR as alleging specific acts by the parents-in-law: taunts, repeated demands for money, deprivation, restrictions on communication and the breaking of a phone, in addition to assaults by the husband. Taramani Parakh supported a trial on such allegations against the husband and parents; the caution concerning distant relatives could not be applied mechanically. The private declaration of 4 May was addressed to nobody, referred to strained relations and required proof. The complainant could explain the one-day difference in dates at trial, and a plausible explanation could be relied on. The purported disowning notice dated 31 May 2021 did not explain why the son remained at the same Mehrauli address. Applicant No. 1's later letter dated 5 May 2023 expressly stated that they lived in the same house. The later notices also bore no acknowledgment of receipt. The judge described these circumstances as the planned preparation of a false defence indicating a guilty mind. This was an assessment on the prima facie case in the present application, rather than a final finding of criminal guilt. Even on the scrutiny sought by the applicants under Abhishek, the defence papers did not displace the triable complaint.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court found a prima facie case warranting prosecution of applicants Nos. 1 and 2 and dismissed the Section 482 application. It declined to quash Crime No. 169/2023, the charge sheet and the pending proceeding before the JMFC, Bhopal. The accused could prove their documents at trial and address the discrepancy in dates.

Satendra Kumar and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 40838/2023, 13/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (847) Prev Next

Headnote :- False promise of marriage / consent - The Court observed that a promise of marriage made falsely from the outset to obtain sexual relations, and directly connected with the woman's decision to engage in them, differs from a promise made genuinely but subsequently broken. It relied on Deepak Gulati, Uday, Sonu alias Subhash Kumar, Pramod Suryabhan Pawar and Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar on misconception of fact under Section 90 IPC and consent under Section 375 IPC. The High Court read the Section 164 statement as describing a relationship over roughly three years, meetings at hotels and a New Year outing after the first incident. It held that the subsequent refusal to marry amounted, at most, to a breach of promise and did not show that consent had been procured by a promise that was false when made.

Quashing / allegations in FIR and Section 164 statement - The FIR and the Section 164 statement described the first incident as forcible and recorded assurances of marriage afterwards. The Section 164 account also referred to an invitation to a birthday party before that incident and further physical relations afterwards. The Court quashed Crime No. 48/2021 under Sections 376 and 376(2)(n) IPC and all consequential proceedings in exercise of its powers under Section 482 CrPC.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A B.A. second-year student alleged that she had known Satendra Rathore since Class XII, when he followed her and proposed marriage. According to the FIR, he took her to Krishna Restaurant on 9 December 2020 and forcibly raped her on the pretext of marriage; after she protested, he assured her that they would marry. Her statement under Section 164 CrPC described an invitation to a birthday party at Krishna Hotel, a first act that she alleged was forcible, continued contact, a New Year outing, another meeting at a hotel involving physical relations on 4 January 2021, and a refusal to marry on 9 January. She also stated that he had physical relations with her on several occasions over about three years. Counsel for the applicant disputed that her consent had been obtained under a misconception of fact, relying on the length of their contact. The State argued that the earlier stalking had put her under pressure, while the complainant argued that continued reliance on a promise could still vitiate consent. Rathore sought quashing of the charge sheet and proceedings in Crime No. 48/2021, Police Station Kotwali, Morena, under Sections 376 and 376(2)(n) IPC.

2. Precedents — Considered : Deepak Gulati v. State of Haryana, AIR 2013 SC 2071, was quoted for the distinction between a promise made falsely at the outset with a mala fide motive and a genuine intention to marry that was later frustrated. Tilak Raj v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 2016 SC 406, was quoted in relation to an adult relationship on a different factual record. Uday v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 4 SCC 46, was quoted at length on the assessment of consent in the circumstances of each case and the two requirements under Section 90: consent given under a misconception of fact, and the accused's knowledge or reason to believe that consent was given because of that misconception. Sonu alias Subhash Kumar v. State of Uttar Pradesh, AIR 2021 SC 1405, supported quashing where the FIR alleged only a subsequent refusal to marry, without alleging that the promise was false from the outset. Pramod Suryabhan Pawar v. State of Maharashtra was quoted for the requirements of bad faith when the promise was made and a direct connection between the false promise and the woman's decision to engage in sexual relations; it referred to Anurag Soni and Deepak Gulati. Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar v. Naval Singh Rajput, cited as 2019 (3) MPLJ (Cri.) SC 52, was quoted for the distinction between consensual relations and deception. These authorities were applied to consent alleged to have been given on a promise of marriage.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the quashing request. The FIR concerned offences under Sections 376 and 376(2)(n) IPC and was ultimately quashed. The prosecutrix's statement recorded under Section 164 CrPC was partly reproduced and was central to the Court's analysis. The principle of misconception of fact under Section 90 IPC and the consent requirement under Section 375 IPC were explained through the Supreme Court passages quoted. The State's submission that the earlier stalking undermined free consent was recorded.

4. Issues : Whether the complaint and the Section 164 statement disclosed a promise known to be false when made and directly responsible for the giving of consent, or only a subsequent breach after a continuing relationship. Whether, on that reading, prosecution under Sections 376 and 376(2)(n) amounted to an abuse of process warranting relief under Section 482.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court emphasised the friendship, conversations on mobile phones, a meeting at a hotel on 9 December 2020, continued conversations, a New Year outing, another meeting at a hotel on 4 January 2021 and the refusal to marry on 9 January. It also read the Section 164 statement as describing physical relations on several occasions over roughly three years. On that account, it held that the record did not show that the applicant had made a knowingly false promise of marriage at the outset. The Court treated the prolonged meetings and requests for marriage as inconsistent with the claim that consent had been obtained under the alleged misconception. It characterised the case as, at most, a breach of promise and held that prosecution under Section 376 on that basis would be an abuse of process. Deepak Gulati, Uday and Pramod Pawar require an assessment of the facts, the intention when the promise was made and the direct connection with consent, rather than the mechanical application of a period of time. The Court reasoned, on the facts before it, that three years were sufficient for a prudent woman to understand the position. The statement and FIR described the first act as forcible.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application under Section 482. It quashed FIR Crime No. 48/2021 at Police Station Kotwali, Morena, under Sections 376 and 376(2)(n) IPC and all consequential criminal proceedings, including the challenged charge sheet.

Satendra Rathore v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 45389/2021, 28/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (848) Prev Next

Headnote :- Police investigation / arrest discretion - The Court observed that a complainant invoking Section 528 BNSS cannot require the High Court to direct the arrest of named persons or the filing of a charge sheet in Crime No. 339/2024. D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, quoted M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra on the cautious exercise of police discretion under Section 41 CrPC; an FIR does not itself mandate arrest. A direction requiring a particular arrest or prosecutorial result would amount to supervision of the investigation.

Completion without delay - Section 173(1) CrPC, identified in the order with Section 193 BNSS, requires investigations to be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the investigation registered at Police Station University, Gwalior as early as possible and take the steps required by law, including filing an appropriate closure report or charge sheet after assessing whether an offence was disclosed. The applicant could submit any further grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Satendra Singh Rajawat stated that Police Station University, Gwalior had registered Crime No. 339/2024 on his complaint but had taken no further action and had not arrested the persons he accused. His application under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita sought directions to the police respondents to arrest the private respondents and submit a charge sheet to the subordinate court. The application sought arrest and submission of a charge sheet, as the Court described in paragraphs 2–3. The Court considered the extent to which it could direct steps in the investigation while ensuring compliance with the statutory duty to complete it.

2. Precedents — Considered : Applied: D. Venkatasubramaniam and Others v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and Another, 2009:INSC:1132, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively. It disapproves of casual High Court directions to arrest, seize assets and file a charge sheet or to investigate from a specific angle, recognising that the police may either file a charge sheet or close the case after investigation. Within the quoted decision, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explains the discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC and the effects of unnecessary arrest on liberty and reputation. The quotation also invokes Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala on the need to hear persons affected by judicial orders directing investigation that have drastic consequences. D. Venkatasubramaniam addressed Section 482 CrPC in its original setting; this application invoked the current inherent-power provision, Section 528 BNSS.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was invoked for the application. The High Court quoted the requirement under Section 173(1) CrPC to complete investigation without unnecessary delay and identified Section 193 BNSS as the corresponding provision in the introductory line and operative discussion. Section 41 CrPC appears in the Supreme Court's quoted explanation of the discretion to arrest. A final report could be a closure report or a charge sheet, as the investigation lawfully warranted; Section 528 did not make the complainant's preferred result a statutory duty.

4. Issues : Whether an applicant on whose complaint an FIR was registered could obtain orders directing the police to arrest particular accused persons and prosecute them by filing a charge sheet, and whether the pending investigation nonetheless had to be concluded promptly under the statutory requirement to avoid unnecessary delay. The issue concerned the distinction between specifying the method and outcome of the police investigation and enforcing the obligation to reach a lawful conclusion.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Court held that a direction to arrest and file a charge sheet would amount to supervision of police decisions that depend on the material collected during investigation. Registration of an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence does not make arrest automatic, and the investigation may conclude with a closure report or prosecution. At the same time, Section 173(1) CrPC/Section 193 BNSS requires completion without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer could not keep Crime No. 339/2024 pending indefinitely and had to decide whether an offence was made out and submit the appropriate final report as soon as the lawful investigation permitted.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the Section 528 application. The investigating officer was directed to complete the investigation as early as possible and take the necessary steps under law, without a numerical deadline or a direction requiring a particular outcome. If the applicant had a grievance, he could approach the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, who was to consider it according to law.

Satendra Singh Rajawat v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 18520/2025, 28/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (849) Prev Next

Headnote :- Double murder / Section 300 thirdly - The Court observed that a land-cultivation dispute was followed by Laxman Singh Jatav's deliberate firing of a 12-bore gun at Archana and Veere alias Virendra, causing fatal injuries to the chest and internal organs. Applying Sections 299–300 IPC, Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab and Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, the Bench affirmed two convictions under Section 302. The Bench held that intentional infliction of the proved bodily injuries, objectively sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature, sufficed without a separate intention to cause death.

Attempted murder and hurt - The Bench affirmed Laxman's conviction on three counts under Section 307 for firing at the injured interveners Kailashi, Sultan and Jagdish, and Satish alias Vikram Singh Jatav's separate conviction under Section 323 for striking Dinesh with a lathi.

Private defence / proportionality - The complainant party's barehanded arrival and Leelawati's simple injuries did not justify Laxman's lethal gunfire. Kashi Ram v. State of Rajasthan was relied on for the limits of the right of private defence under IPC Sections 97–106. Both appeals against conviction were dismissed; Satish's bonds were cancelled and he was ordered to surrender, while Laxman remained in jail. The connected surety proceeding under Section 446 was closed without a separate order.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 29 June 2007, Dinesh's cultivation of land bought by his family led to a confrontation with Laxman Singh Jatav. Family members Kailashi Bai and Archana went towards Laxman's house after abuses were hurled. The prosecution stated that Laxman fired a 12-bore double-barrel gun at Kailashi and Archana and then at Veere alias Virendra when he intervened; Archana and Veere died. Sultan Singh and Jagdish Singh also suffered injuries during the incident. Satish alias Vikram Singh Jatav separately struck Dinesh with a lathi. The police registered Crime No. 62/2007, examined the injured persons, seized a gun, cartridges and a lathi, and obtained postmortem reports and other material. The Second Additional Sessions Judge, Dabra, in Sessions Trial No. 293/2007 convicted Laxman under Section 302 IPC on two counts and Section 307 on three counts, imposing life imprisonment and seven years' rigorous imprisonment respectively, with fines and default stipulations; the trial court directed his jail terms to run separately. Satish was convicted under Section 323 and sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500 with a default stipulation. Their two appeals were heard with a State proceeding under Section 446 CrPC against Satish's surety Sitaram, following an earlier failure by Satish to appear. Counsel from the legal-aid panel argued the matters when the appellants were unrepresented.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, supplied the four requirements for Section 300 Thirdly: proof of the existence of a bodily injury and its nature, both objectively established; intention to inflict the injury actually found; and the objective sufficiency of that injury to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra explained the progression from Section 299 to the clauses defining murder and, where appropriate, Section 304 Parts I and II. Anda v. State of Rajasthan reinforced the requirement that the injury be sufficient to cause death. Mahesh Balmiki, Pulicherla Nagaraju, Sangapagu Anjaiah, State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao were quoted on assessing intention from the weapon, location of injury, force and circumstances, without mechanically applying a single-blow rule. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak and the discussion of Exception 4 in Kanhaiyalal described a sudden mutual fight, absence of premeditation and absence of undue advantage; the Bench did not bring Laxman's offence within that exception. Moti Singh and Wassan Singh were cited by the defence on private defence; Kashi Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 3 SCC 55, was quoted on reading IPC Sections 97–106 together and limiting defensive force to an actual unlawful threat, drawing on Bishnas within the quotation. Other decisions appeared within the reproduced reasoning and were not separately applied to the facts of the present case.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 299 and 300 IPC defined culpable homicide and murder, with Section 300 Thirdly central to the decision. Section 302 was the basis of the two murder convictions; Section 307 was the basis of the three attempted-murder counts, and Section 323 was the basis of Satish's conviction for hurt. IPC Sections 97–106 governed the rejected plea of private defence. Sections 147–149 IPC appeared in the original FIR narrative, but the appellate disposition affirmed only the stated counts. The statements under Section 313 CrPC and the defence testimony were reviewed; Section 446 CrPC concerned the connected surety proceeding.

4. Issues : Whether Laxman's intentional gunfire, the fatal chest injuries and the medical evidence established two murders under Section 300 Thirdly rather than a lesser offence of culpable homicide; whether his firing at the interveners supported three counts under Section 307; whether Satish's lathi blow supported conviction under Section 323; and whether the approach to Laxman's home and Leelawati's injuries justified the exercise of private defence or required a different outcome. The appeals also required evaluation of the eyewitness accounts and defence evidence, and disposal of the matters concerning Satish's bail and the related surety proceeding.

5. Ratio / Findings : The postmortem reports attributed Archana's death to a firearm wound rupturing the heart and right lung and Veere's death to firearm damage to the left lung, with haemorrhage and shock; the Court held that the wounds were ante-mortem and sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Injured and other prosecution witnesses placed Laxman with the gun and Satish with a lathi. Leelawati, called as a defence witness, admitted in cross-examination that her husband owned the 12-bore gun and fired the fatal shots. The Bench found the eyewitness accounts trustworthy and, overall, corroborated by the medical evidence. It rejected the argument that the absence of an intention to kill excluded murder under Section 300 Thirdly, because the relevant intention was to inflict the proved fatal injury; the objective inquiry into sufficiency under Virsa Singh then completed the test for murder. Laxman's convictions for two murders and three counts of attempted murder were upheld. The Bench attributed only Dinesh's lathi injury to Satish and affirmed his conviction under Section 323. Leelawati had two simple wounds caused by a blunt object, but the visiting complainants were described as barehanded; the principles governing defensive force in Kashi Ram did not justify the firearm attacks in those circumstances.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Satish's and Laxman's criminal appeals, affirming the trial judgment and sentences dated 5 February 2011. Satish's bail and surety bonds stood cancelled and he was ordered to surrender to serve the unserved portion of his one-year sentence. Laxman remained in jail to serve the imposed terms. Copies were directed to be sent to the concerned jail and, with the record, to the trial court.

Satish alias Vikram Singh Jatav and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.A. no. 174/2011 & 799/2011; M.Cr.C. no. 7709/2014, 29/04/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (850) Prev Next

Headnote :- Last seen / circumstantial chain - The Court observed that several witnesses had seen nine-year-old Kallu alias Trilok Singh with Satish and three associates on the route from Arya Nagar towards Simariya, before the police recovered his buried body at the instance of the accused. The postmortem established death by manual strangulation. State of Rajasthan v. Kashi Ram, (2006) 12 SCC 254, treats the accused's failure to explain facts especially within his knowledge, after sufficiently proximate last-seen evidence has been proved, as an additional link in the chain, without shifting the prosecution's ultimate burden. The Bench held that the cumulative circumstances proved Satish's guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

Evidence screening - Jagdish Soni's claim at trial that he had seen the child with the group was rejected because he had not stated that fact in his police statement; the material observations of other witnesses were accepted. Mallikarjun v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, was quoted on minor discrepancies. The Court held that the contradictions in the police officers' accounts of the timing of the FIR and report did not affect the prosecution case.

Discovery / disposition - Recovery of the body from a covered pit in Simariya forest under Section 27 Evidence Act corroborated the chain of circumstances. The Court affirmed the conviction under Section 302/34 IPC read with Section 13 MPDVPK Act and the life sentence, dismissed Satish's appeal and directed the Jail Superintendent to inform him of the result.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Nathu Singh's son Kallu alias Trilok Singh, aged about nine, disappeared after leaving home to play on 11 March 2006. His father made a missing-person report in which no accused was named. During the inquiry, witnesses stated that they had seen Kallu with Satish Kumar Dubey (Jatav), who had worked near the family's home as a watchman, and with Pramod, Mukesh and Suresh. The group was seen near SRK School and on the route towards Simariya and Sheetla Mata Mandir. The police arrested the men, recorded memoranda and recovered Kallu's body from a pit covered with clay in Simariya forest. The postmortem attributed death to homicidal asphyxia caused by manual strangulation, with the time since death assessed at 6 –24 hours. Crime No. 188/2006 was initially registered under Section 365/34 IPC and Sections 11/13 of the Madhya Pradesh Dakaiti Aur Vyapharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam (MPDVPK Act); the subsequent charge sheet included Sections 302, 364-A and 34 IPC. The Special Judge in Trial No. 83/2006 acquitted Satish and two co-accused of the charge under Section 364-A/34 but convicted them under Section 302/34 read with Section 13

MPDVPK Act. Satish was sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 500, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, and appealed under Section 374 CrPC.

2. Precedents — Considered : Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, was quoted for the limited rule that absence of motive need not defeat credible direct evidence; the inference of murder in this prosecution rested on last-seen and recovery circumstances. Mallikarjun v. State of Karnataka, (2019) 8 SCC 359, was quoted on assessing whether discrepancies in the witnesses' accounts affected the core of the case; its quotation discussed Bakhshish Singh, Sunil Kumar Sambhudaya Gupta and Raj Kumar Singh as supporting authorities, without separately applying their holdings to the facts of this case. State of Rajasthan v. Kashi Ram, (2006) 12 SCC 254, paragraphs 23–24, was applied for the principle that failure to explain facts within special knowledge may provide an additional link under Section 106 Evidence Act after the last-seen circumstances have been proved. Kashi Ram itself states that the burden of proving the criminal charge remains on the prosecution and that a plausible explanation may discharge the limited burden concerning facts within special knowledge.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC and Section 13 MPDVPK Act formed the basis of the conviction affirmed on appeal. The trial acquittal under Section 364-A/34 IPC was described in paragraphs 4–5; that charge did not result in a conviction on appeal. Sections 365/34 IPC and 11/13 MPDVPK appeared in the history of the initial FIR. Section 27 Evidence Act concerned discovery of the buried body following the accused's memoranda. Section 106 Evidence Act concerned the possible inference from facts especially within the accused's knowledge after the prosecution had proved the foundational circumstances, without reversing the burden of proving murder. Sections 313 and 374 CrPC concerned the accused's statements and the appeal. The postmortem and police exhibits were considered as evidence.

4. Issues : Whether the circumstantial evidence placed Kallu last in the company of Satish and his associates sufficiently close to the time of death; whether recovery of the body and the medical finding of homicidal death completed proof beyond reasonable doubt; and whether the witnesses' omissions or the timing of the report undermined the chain of circumstances. A distinct issue was whether the defence evidence supported Satish's claim of police assault or fabrication. The strangulation was not proved by direct eyewitness testimony, and the trial acquittal for ransom kidnapping did not result in acquittal of murder.

5. Ratio / Findings : Sanjeevsingh Sikarwar and Guddu Ghuraiya stated that they had seen Satish and three others taking Kallu near the school; other witnesses had seen them in a jeep or going towards Simariya. The Court accepted the material parts of Chhiddaram's, Pulandar's, Navalsingh's, Virendra's and Raghuveer's accounts despite differences about the route, precise time, clothing or delayed disclosure. It specifically rejected neighbour Jagdish Soni's additional claim that he had seen Kallu with the group because that fact was absent from his recorded police statement. The father had named no suspect in the initial missing-person report. The witnesses and investigating officer described discovery of the body in a covered pit at Simariya, and Dr. P.L. Gupta found that death was homicidal and caused by manual strangulation. The Court treated these circumstances, together with the accused's failure to give a satisfactory explanation after the last-seen circumstances had been proved, as a complete chain under Kashi Ram. ASI Narwariya and SHO Dwivedi differed about the timing of submission of the report and registration of the FIR; the Court held that this did not affect the prosecution case, in view of the FIR on record and the time that had elapsed since Narwariya's retirement. Satish's claim that he had been beaten in custody was undermined by his own cross-examination and the evidence of the defence doctor. On the cumulative record, the Bench held that guilt was proved beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. The Special Judge's conviction dated 24 December 2009 under Section 302/34 IPC read with Section 13 MPDVPK Act, and the life sentence, fine and default term, stood affirmed. Satish was already in jail; the High Court directed the Jail Superintendent to inform him of the result and ordered that the trial record be returned with a certified copy.

Satish Kumar Dubey (Jatav) v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 240/2010, 22/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (851) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / parallel divorce case - The Court observed that the FIR under Sections 498-A and 506 read with Section 34 IPC alleged demands for a two-tola gold chain and a motorcycle, physical and mental harassment, and Kusum Prajapati's expulsion to her parental home. The existence or timing of her husband's divorce petition and the ex parte decree did not establish that the FIR was a counterblast or bar the criminal proceedings. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, and Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of West Bengal, (2002) 1 SCC 555, require independent adjudication according to the distinct standards of proof in civil and criminal proceedings.

Continuing cruelty / parental home - Citing Rupali v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, the Court noted that compelling a married woman to live at her parental home because dowry demands were not met can constitute cruelty. The applicants themselves asserted that the wife was living separately and did not deny that the minor daughter was with them. As evidence was already being recorded, the Court dismissed their application under Section 482.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Kusum Prajapati married applicant No. 1 Satish Verma on 17 April 2003. She alleged that he and his family members demanded a two-tola gold chain and a motorcycle that her parents could not afford to provide as further dowry, beat and harassed her, disregarded a request made at a family panchayat, and turned her out on 5 February 2017. She further alleged that her husband then assaulted her at her parental home and took away their daughter Akshita. Crime No. 115/2017 at Kotwali, Morena, was registered under Sections 498-A and 506 read with Section 34 IPC. The applicants were the husband, mother-in-law, younger brother-in-law and a maternal father-in-law, as described in the order. They stated that Kusum had voluntarily left on 14 December 2015, that the husband had sought mediation and filed a divorce petition under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act, and that an ex parte decree had subsequently dissolved the marriage. They characterised the FIR as a response to the divorce petition, contended that remote relatives had been falsely implicated, and acknowledged that evidence was already being recorded at trial. The order records their claim that the FIR report was lodged on 10 February 2017, after the alleged expulsion on 5 February.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi and Others, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted against drawing an adverse inference merely because the wife's FIR followed separation and the husband's divorce petition. Attempts at settlement may explain the timing, and the civil petition does not automatically terminate criminal proceedings. Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of West Bengal, (2002) 1 SCC 555, was quoted on the distinct standards and independent determination of civil and criminal proceedings, including its reference to the Constitution Bench decision in M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras. Rupali v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2019) 5 SCC 384, supplied the specific proposition that a woman forced to live at her parents' home after dowry-related expulsion can suffer cruelty there. No precedent was used to make a final individual finding against the brother-in-law or maternal father-in-law.

3. Statutes considered : The application for quashing was filed under Section 482 CrPC. Sections 498-A, 506 and 34 IPC were the offences stated in the FIR. The husband's divorce petition was filed under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act. Order IX Rule 13 CPC was mentioned in counsel's account of Kusum's unsuccessful application concerning the ex parte decree. Those civil proceedings did not bind the criminal court in its determination of the allegations.

4. Issues : Whether the sequence of the divorce petition and ex parte decree made the wife's FIR retaliatory or legally untenable; whether the allegations of dowry-related expulsion and separate residence could disclose continuing cruelty; and whether the Court should quash the proceedings when evidence was being recorded, on the basis of disputed dates, characterisations and the alleged participation of the younger brother-in-law and maternal father-in-law.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that an FIR lodged after divorce litigation is not, for that reason alone, a counterblast. Pratibha and Kamaladevi require independent adjudication under the different standards applicable to civil and criminal proceedings; the existence of an ex parte decree does not negate a triable case under Section 498-A. The applicants themselves asserted that Kusum was living separately and did not deny that the daughter was residing with them. Rupali explains that forced residence at the parental home because of unmet dowry demands can itself constitute alleged cruelty; separation does not automatically end that allegation. The Court noted that evidence was already being recorded at trial and found no useful purpose in exercising inherent power to terminate the proceedings. The decision therefore refuses quashing at the threshold; it does not finally determine that all four applicants committed every alleged act.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. Crime No. 115/2017 and the ongoing trial remained pending.

Satish Verma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 10219/2017, 20/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (852) Prev Next

Headnote :- Assault on public servant / railway crossing - The Court observed that closing the crossing for railway safety formed part of the gateman's official duty. Saurabh insisted that it be opened for his tractor and, after crossing, returned and allegedly injured the gateman. The gateman's direct account, officers' prompt observations of bleeding, medical findings of a cut on the thumb and an abrasion on the ear, and the defence witness's admissions about the closed gate and quarrel supported the convictions under Sections 332 and 353 IPC.

Hostile witnesses / corroboration - The officers who were declared hostile for omissions in their accounts nevertheless confirmed the prompt report and visible injuries. The Court relied on the supportive portions of their evidence without treating their later observations or information received as eyewitness accounts of the assault. The doctor acknowledged that a nail could also have caused the ear abrasion.

Criminal revision / concurrent findings - Under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC, concurrent findings of fact cannot be interfered with unless they are contrary to the record and perverse. Saurabh did not explain why the ordinary trial court lacked jurisdiction merely because the incident concerned a railway gate. The convictions and the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and fine under Section 332, with no separate sentence under Section 353, were affirmed. The revision was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 17 December 2015, Bahadur Singh Meena was serving as gateman at railway Gate No. 405 in Antri Anantpaith Kalyani village. He stated that Saurabh arrived by tractor and pressed him to open the closed crossing. After obtaining permission from a superior, he opened it and allowed the tractor to pass. Saurabh allegedly returned on foot, demanded unhindered passage in future, abused Bahadur when told that the gate must be operated according to law, attacked him with a knife, bit his left ear and fled. Bahadur promptly reported the matter, leading to FIR No. 180/2015 under Sections 294, 353, 332, 324 and 506 Part II IPC. The JMFC convicted Saurabh under Sections 332 and 353 on 8 March 2017 and acquitted him of the other charges. Six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 500, with two months' imprisonment in default, were imposed under Section 332; no separate sentence was imposed under Section 353. Criminal Appeal No. 47/2017 was dismissed on 29 October 2021. Bahadur (PW-1) described the assault. Bhan Singh (PW-2) arrived later and saw the bleeding ear, expressly stating that he had not witnessed the assault. Junior Engineer Sanjay (PW-4) arrived within ten minutes, saw bleeding from the ear and palm, and supplied a duty certificate; Senior Section Officer Chauhan (PW-5) received the initial report and sent help. These officers were declared hostile because their accounts were incomplete, but supported parts of the prosecution case in cross-examination. Dr Soni (PW-6) recorded a recent, simple cut caused by a sharp object on the right thumb and an abrasion on the left ear, accepting that a nail could have caused the latter. Defence witness Somveer Rana (DW-1) claimed that there had only been a heated argument and an improper demand for money. He nevertheless acknowledged that the gate was closed, that Saurabh had demanded its opening and that the confrontation occurred at 2:23 p.m.; he could give no specific details of earlier closures and had made no complaint about them to a superior.

2. Statutes considered : Sections 332 and 353 IPC concerned hurt and assault or criminal force against the gateman in the discharge of his public duty. The Court sustained both convictions and retained the trial court's single sentence under Section 332, describing the offence under Section 353 as lesser. Sections 294, 324 and 506 Part II were charges of which Saurabh had been acquitted; those acquittals were not disturbed. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC governed the revision; the Court stated that concurrent findings could not be interfered with unless they were contrary to the record and perverse. The applicant claimed that only the Railway Magistrate had jurisdiction, but did not establish a supporting statutory basis.

3. Issues : (i) Whether the gateman's account and corroborating evidence proved the assault under Section 332/353 in the discharge of his official crossing duty, despite the partly hostile officers, the doctor's alternative explanation for the ear abrasion and DW-1's account. (ii) Whether the railway setting displaced the JMFC's jurisdiction. (iii) Whether the concurrent conviction and six-month sentence could be disturbed under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC.

4. Ratio / Findings : Closing the crossing when a train is due protects road users and forms part of the gateman's official duty. Even the defence witness acknowledged that Saurabh had insisted on opening the closed gate; no authority for that insistence was shown. Bahadur's account of the subsequent assault was supported by immediate observations of injury, prompt reports and medical findings. The Court accepted the cumulative evidence despite the doctor's acknowledgment that a nail could have caused the abrasion. The Court found no error in the concurrent findings under Sections 332/353. In revision, it could not interfere merely to substitute a different appreciation of the evidence: the findings had to be contrary to the record and perverse, and its review, undertaken by way of caution, found neither defect. Saurabh did not explain why the JMFC lacked competence merely because the altercation concerned a railway gate. The Court considered the sentence already imposed to be lenient and found no reason to alter it. The other acquittals remained undisturbed. The High Court stated the limits of revisional interference and examined the record.

5. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court affirmed the JMFC judgment dated 8 March 2017 and the appellate judgment dated 29 October 2021, the convictions under Sections 332 and 353 IPC, and the sentence of six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 500 under Section 332, without a separate sentence under Section 353. Saurabh was in jail and was directed to serve the remaining term; a free copy of the judgment was ordered. The criminal revision was dismissed.

Saurabh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 2874/2021, 24/11/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (853) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR registration / alternative remedy - The Court observed that Saurabh Dohare's application under Section 528 BNSS sought a direction to the police to register an FIR. Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, recognises the duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence but directs an aggrieved complainant to the remedy of a complaint before the Magistrate if the police fail to act. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, confines extraordinary intervention in investigation under Article 226 to the rarest cases where investigative powers have been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is established. It likewise identifies the ordinary Magistrate remedy.

Magistrate inquiry / police escalation - Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, explain recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) CrPC and, if necessary, to a Magistrate under Section 156(3). The Magistrate, on being prima facie satisfied, can direct registration or a proper investigation and monitor it, without personally conducting the investigation. The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench's Shweta Bhadauria distinguishes the police duty discussed in Lalita Kumari from entitlement to immediate writ relief without using the available remedies, subject to its stated Whirlpool exceptions. The High Court left Dohare free to complain to the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Saurabh Dohare stated that he had complained to the police but no FIR had been registered. He applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, seeking registration of an FIR against the persons identified in his application. State counsel opposed the application on the ground that, if the police had not acted, Dohare could approach the concerned Magistrate.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from the remedy for failure to perform that duty: the complainant may invoke Sections 190 and 200 CrPC before the Magistrate. The quoted passage discussed AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari on the remedy; Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary concerned the police duty rather than the complainant's procedural route. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, states that extraordinary intervention under Article 226 is confined to the rarest cases where investigative powers have been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is established, and that the ordinary remedy for police inaction is a complaint before the Magistrate. Its quotation from Gangadhar explains the inquiry, possible direction for investigation, dismissal or issue of process following a prima facie assessment. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explains recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and to a Magistrate under Section 156(3) CrPC for registration or proper investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, follows Sakiri Vasu, including the Magistrate's power to monitor the investigation without personally conducting it. The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench's Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016, distinguishes the statutory duty in Lalita Kumari from entitlement to a writ without using alternative remedies, subject to the stated Whirlpool exceptions.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was the inherent-power provision invoked, but the Court declined to direct registration of an FIR on that application. The Supreme Court passages discussed CrPC Sections 154(3), concerning a representation to superior police officers; 156(3), concerning a Magistrate's direction for investigation; and 190 read with 200, concerning complaint and cognizance procedure. The operative liberty was to pursue a private complaint under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS.

4. Issues : Whether an application under Section 528 BNSS seeking a direction to the police to register an FIR should be entertained on an allegation of non-registration, and which statutory remedy remained available before the Magistrate.

5. Ratio / Findings : The duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence does not make every failure by the police a case for an immediate High Court direction. Aleque Padamsee distinguished the police duty from the complainant's remedy for its breach. Divine Retreat Centre described the limited scope for extraordinary intervention in the rarest cases where investigative powers have been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is established. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe identify recourse to superior police officers and the Magistrate's power, on prima facie satisfaction, to direct registration or proper investigation and to monitor it, while the police conduct the investigation. The Madhya Pradesh Division Bench likewise distinguished the duty discussed in Lalita Kumari from ordinary writ maintainability where alternative remedies exist. In the present case, the Court accepted the State's objection based on the Magistrate remedy, dismissed the Section 528 application and reserved the complaint route.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 528 BNSS. Dohare was expressly left free, if he wished, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS for redress. No direction to register an FIR or finding on the underlying complaint was issued.

Saurabh Dohare v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 12754/2025, 08/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (854) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation / arrest and charge sheet - The Court observed that Saurabh's application under Section 482 CrPC sought directions to arrest the persons accused in Crime No. 204/2021 and file a charge sheet. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the Court recognised the police's statutory discretion in conducting an investigation. That decision's discussion of M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, rejects mechanical arrest under Section 41 merely because an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence has been registered. The quoted principle from Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, also cautions against orders seriously affecting persons without hearing them. An investigation may end in a charge sheet or a closure report; an order under Section 482 cannot predetermine arrest, seizure or prosecution.

Section 173(1) CrPC / completion without unnecessary delay - The Court observed that discretion over the outcome does not permit an investigation to remain pending indefinitely. Section 173(1) requires completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay. The officer must decide whether an offence is made out and expeditiously submit a lawful final report. The Court directed early completion of the investigation and the steps required by law, and left Saurabh free to place any grievance before the Superintendent of Police for consideration.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On Saurabh's complaint, Police Station Matabasaiya, Morena, registered Crime No. 204/2021 alleging offences under Sections 307 and 34 IPC. He stated that no further action had been taken by the police and the accused had not been arrested. His application under Section 482 CrPC asked the High Court to direct the police both to arrest them and to file a charge sheet.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted and applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, on the police's control over the manner of investigation and the restrained exercise of the High Court's power under Section 482. The quoted paras 25 and 31–32 state that arrest, seizure and filing a charge sheet are not inevitable consequences of every FIR and cannot be mechanically directed by a High Court. In that decision's quotation from M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, Section 41 CrPC permits arrest at the police officer's discretion after assessing its necessity. Arrest is not an automatic duty on receipt of information disclosing a cognizable offence, given its effect on liberty and reputation. D. Venkatasubramaniam also invoked Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on the opportunity of hearing before directions having serious consequences for affected persons. It confined inherent power to giving effect to orders under the Code, preventing abuse of the process of a court and securing the ends of justice, and warned against casual, unreasoned orders directing how the police should investigate. The present Court applied these principles in refusing to compel arrest and filing of a charge sheet; it did not adjudge the suspects innocent or the investigation satisfactory.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked for relief under the Court's inherent power, but it did not authorise supervision of the police's decision whether to arrest or file a charge sheet. Section 41 CrPC, as described in the Supreme Court quotation, permits but does not require a police officer to arrest every suspect in a cognizable case. Section 173(1) CrPC expressly requires completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay. After investigating, the officer must reach a lawful conclusion and submit a final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet.

4. Issues : Whether a complainant invoking Section 482 could require the arrest of named suspects and filing of a charge sheet because the FIR had been registered without the requested further action; and whether the Court could require timely completion of the investigation under Section 173(1) while leaving its outcome and the investigative steps to the police's judgment.

5. Ratio / Findings : The power and duty to investigate rest with the police. In light of D. Venkatasubramaniam and its quotation of the reasoning in M.C. Abraham, arrest is a discretionary measure to be exercised cautiously, rather than a mechanical step following registration of an FIR. An investigation may properly end without arrest or prosecution. An order compelling both arrest and filing of a charge sheet would dictate the course and result of an inquiry that depend on the evidence, and would therefore amount to impermissible supervision under Section 482. The Court declined that prayer. It distinguished the duty to complete the investigation in time from discretion over its outcome: Section 173(1) does not permit the officer to keep the matter pending indefinitely. The officer must decide as soon as possible whether an offence is made out and file the resulting final report without unnecessary delay.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court disposed of the application without directing arrest of the suspects or filing of a charge sheet. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the necessary steps under law, including submission of the lawful final report. Saurabh was left free to approach the Superintendent of Police, Morena, with any further grievance, which was to be considered according to law.

Saurabh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 3998/2022, 28/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (855) Prev Next

Headnote :- Sexual-offence FIR — limitation and reporting delay distinguished - Saurabh Tyagi sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 73/2024 under IPC Sections 376 and 376(2)(n), relying on delay in reporting. The Court held that Section 468 CrPC prescribed no limitation bar for offences punishable with imprisonment exceeding three years. Delay in lodging an FIR is a separate matter: Skoda Auto Volkswagen, Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid establish that delay alone does not render an FIR illegal or warrant quashing; explanations for delay and credibility are assessed on evidence. Prompt reporting assists investigation and reduces the opportunity for concoction, but does not guarantee truth.

Inherent quashing — no disputed-fact trial of consent or alleged extortion - The applicant denied any physical relationship and alleged that the prosecutrix had demanded money by sending a QR code on WhatsApp and filed a false FIR after he refused. The Court held that those assertions required proof at trial. It treated the allegation of a sexual offence involving consent obtained through a misconception of fact as one whose truth could not be decided through a mini-trial under Section 482. XYZ v. State of Gujarat warned against deciding contested questions of consent or coercion on disputed settlement material during investigation; S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh likewise prohibit detailed findings on disputed merits in quashing proceedings. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui preserved a narrow exception for defence documents that are public documents or whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. The Court required the asserted QR-code demand to be proved at trial.

Face-value threshold and exceptional quashing power - State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh and M. Srikanth recognise the power to quash proceedings when the allegations, accepted as true, do not disclose an offence, a legal bar exists, or sufficient material establishes abuse, while cautioning against stifling a legitimate prosecution. Ajay Kumar Das quoted Bhajan Lal on the sparing exercise of the power and the prohibition on an inquiry into the reliability of the FIR. The Court held that the specific allegations of rape could not be rejected by accepting the applicant's denial or allegation of blackmail without evidence. The application was dismissed, leaving guilt, consent and the defence for determination at trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Saurabh Tyagi filed Miscellaneous Criminal Case No. 13714 of 2024 under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime No. 73/2024 at Police Station Misrod, Bhopal City, registered for offences under IPC Sections 376 and 376(2)(n). Counsel submitted that the FIR was delayed, the allegations were false, there had been no physical relationship, and respondent 2 had sent a QR code to his WhatsApp account demanding money before filing the FIR when he refused. These were defence assertions, rather than facts found by the High Court. The Court described the FIR as containing a specific allegation of rape and referred conditionally to consent obtained through a misconception of fact. It considered whether delay in reporting, denial of physical relations or the alleged demand could justify quashing at this preliminary stage. No witness evidence or QR-code authentication was tried in this proceeding.

2. Precedents — Considered : Skoda Auto Volkswagen (India) Pvt. Ltd. v. State of U.P. and Others, (2021) 5 SCC 95, was cited for the prohibition on deciding disputed questions of fact or examining the reliability and correctness of allegations in a complaint when considering a petition to quash an FIR, and for the proposition that mere delay cannot by itself terminate criminal proceedings. Ravinder Kumar and Another v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, explained that the law fixes no deadline for lodging an FIR and that a delayed FIR is not illegal. Prompt reporting enables early investigation and reduces the opportunity for concoction, yet even a prompt FIR does not conclusively establish truth; there may be various genuine reasons for delay. Mohammad Wajid and Another v. State of U.P. and Others, AIR 2023 SC 3784, separately confirmed that delay in registration alone does not warrant quashing an FIR.

XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted at length. In that case, the High Court exceeded its jurisdiction under Section 482 by making premature findings about consent and a settlement alleged to have been obtained by coercion. Serious allegations of blackmail and interference were matters for investigation and trial.

Here, the decision supported refusal to adjudicate the truth of the applicant's denial and allegation of financial pressure. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, was quoted on the error of assessing the merits before investigation had been completed. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, quoted the caution in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal that the power to quash must be exercised sparingly and with circumspection, without an inquiry into reliability or arbitrary exercise of inherent power.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, described the normal rule against evaluating defence documents when considering quashing, and the exception in an appropriate case for public documents or documents whose veracity the complainant does not dispute, referring to Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, warned against a premature assessment of reliability but recognised sparing intervention where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence or no cognizable offence, an express legal bar exists, or sufficient material establishes abuse or malice. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, similarly recognised quashing where the uncontroverted allegations and supporting material disclose no offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, rejected detailed findings on disputed defences of the accused in a petition invoking inherent power after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, 30 June 2021, stated that an FIR is not an encyclopedia and that Section 482 does not permit scrutiny of evidence as at a trial.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR; its limits on examining disputed facts and its requirement to consider the allegations at face value governed the decision. Section 468 CrPC was addressed directly: it creates no limitation period barring prosecution for these offences because IPC Sections 376 and 376(2)(n) carry punishment exceeding three years. The Court's reference to consent obtained through a misconception of fact was conditional and contextual, rather than a determination that a particular promise or representation had been proved. The QR-code demand was a proposed defence requiring evidence, rather than an established charge of extortion.

4. Issues : (i) Did Section 468 provide a limitation bar to prosecution under IPC Sections 376 and 376(2)(n)? (ii) Could an unspecified delay in reporting, by itself, justify quashing this sexual-offence FIR? (iii) Could the High Court accept the applicant's denial of physical relations and assertion of a QR-code money demand to declare the complaint false in exercise of jurisdiction under Section 482? (iv) Did the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence requiring investigation and trial, or did the recognised exceptional grounds for quashing apply? These questions concern termination at a preliminary stage, rather than the applicant's guilt.

5. Ratio / Findings : The alleged offences are punishable with imprisonment exceeding three years, so Section 468 did not impose a limitation period on their prosecution. The Court separately held that delay in lodging an FIR alone does not render it illegal or establish abuse of process. Skoda Auto Volkswagen and Mohammad Wajid ruled out quashing merely for delay; Ravinder Kumar explained both the practical value of prompt reporting and the possibility of genuine reasons for delay, without treating promptness as a guarantee of truth.

The applicant's denial of physical relations and assertion of a WhatsApp QR-code demand required proof and could not be accepted as conclusive against the prosecution allegations in a petition under Section 482. The Court quoted XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh on the limits of that jurisdiction. A complaint that, taken at face value, fails to disclose an offence or is subject to a legal bar may be quashed, and public defence records or those whose veracity is undisputed may exceptionally be examined. Contested questions of fact and the credibility of the defence, however, must be decided through the ordinary process. The order stated that where consent was allegedly obtained through a misconception of fact and rape was specifically alleged, the Court could not test the correctness of those allegations through a mini-trial. On the allegations and the applicant's grounds, the Court found no basis for exercising its inherent power to interfere.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. FIR Crime No. 73/2024 remained in force; no order quashed or stayed it. The disputed matters remained for investigation and trial.

Saurabh Tyagi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 13714/2024, 10/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (856) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / dowry-linked ouster - The Court observed that the FIR alleged repeated demands for Rs 25 lakh by the husband and parents-in-law, assault and abuse, expulsion on 25 December 2022 without custody of the child, and continued residence at the parental home. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was applied for the principle that the mental trauma of expulsion and fear of returning can continue at the parental home even though no physical assault occurs at the parental home. The High Court's Amar Singh v. Vimla similarly treated a wife being compelled to reside at her parental home as cruelty. The Court considered the allegations at face value and rejected the bare contention that the length of the marriage or absence of dates for each earlier act made the allegations stale.

Delay and limitation / continuing cruelty - The Court observed that the complainant specified her expulsion on 25 December 2022 and alleged a renewed demand at her parental home on 12 February 2023, followed by the FIR on 28 February.

Family roles / Section 482 threshold - Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was applied: the caution against implicating distant relatives without a specific role does not displace triable allegations against a husband and his parents where specific harassment and forced departure are pleaded. Its discussion of Kailash Chandra Agrawal and Kans Raj explains that distinction. The present FIR attributed the demand to all three applicants, assault with a broom to the mother-in-law, dashing the complainant's head against a wall to the husband, and assault during pregnancy and expulsion to the applicants. The hospital admission in December 2022 and the supplementary explanation for the absence of miscarriage records were considered, while their evidentiary sufficiency was left open. The Court cited XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh and M. Srikanth.

Zero FIR / police-station territory - The Court observed that Mahila Thana, Vidisha, registered the report at serial No. 0 and transferred it to Gulabganj police station. A police station cannot refuse registration solely because it lacks territorial jurisdiction to investigate; it must transfer the FIR to the competent station. The territorial objection failed, and the application under Section 482 to quash Crime No. 25/2023 and consequential proceedings was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Respondent No. 2 married applicant No. 1, Saurabh Yadav, on 13 December 2015; applicants Nos. 2 and 3 were her mother-in-law and father-in-law. She had a daughter aged about six when she lodged FIR Crime No. 25/2023 on 28 February 2023. According to her allegations, after some time at the matrimonial home in Vidisha, the three applicants criticised the dowry as insufficient and demanded Rs 25 lakh, although her father had already given what he could. She alleged abuse and physical cruelty, which worsened after the daughter's birth. Specifically, she stated that the mother-in-law beat her with a broom, the husband dashed her head against a wall, and an assault by the applicants during her second pregnancy caused an abortion. She alleged that they threatened to burn her if she did not comply with their dictates. She complained of back and waist pain and lack of treatment. She stated that on 25 December 2022 the applicants assaulted and expelled her with only the clothes she wore and retained the child. She contacted her brother through a passerby's phone; he took her to Bansal Hospital, Bhopal, where spinal-cord infection and tuberculosis were found. She stated that the applicants did not contact her during treatment and that mediation by relatives had failed. On 12 February 2023, the applicants allegedly came to her parental home at Pawai, repeated the demand for Rs 25 lakh and threatened separation and death; the mother-in-law allegedly threatened to remarry her son. These are FIR allegations attributed to the complainant, rather than final findings that each event occurred. The FIR alleged offences under Sections 498-A, 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The applicants sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of the FIR and consequential proceedings.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted and applied on the meaning of cruelty under Section 498-A: physical or verbal matrimonial cruelty can cause mental trauma that continues when the wife, expelled or driven away, takes shelter at her parental home and fears returning. Applying that principle, the Court treated the alleged dowry-related expulsion on 25 December and continued residence at the parental home as continuing cruelty, rather than an event whose effects ended at the matrimonial home. Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla, Cr.R. No. 2376/2020 (MP High Court, 22 June 2021), was cited for the view that compelling a wife to reside at her parental home amounts to cruelty.

Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was quoted in detail. Its discussion of Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2014) 16 SCC 551, and Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, cautions against mechanically implicating distant relations without a particular role. The position of a husband, his parents or close family differs where the complaint attributes specific demands and harassment to them. Taramani also states that allegations of cruelty and forced separation which, taken at face value, raise triable issues should proceed to trial, leaving actual harassment to proof; proceedings that are, on their face, an abuse of process may still be quashed. Its quoted paragraph named K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa as authorities on quashing. The High Court applied the principle concerning triable issues to these allegations against the husband and his parents, rather than treating their relationship alone as establishing culpability.

At paragraph 14, the High Court named XYZ v. State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha. It invoked them collectively for the stated proposition that quashing under Section 482 requires the uncontroverted allegations not to make out an offence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the limited jurisdiction to quash proceedings. Section 498-A IPC was the principal cruelty offence considered in the Court's reasoning on continuing mental trauma; Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3–4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were also alleged in the FIR. The Court's conclusion that the allegations were sufficient for prosecution at this stage was not a conviction on any count. The issue of the police station's territorial jurisdiction was treated as one of registration and transfer: Mahila Thana, Vidisha, could record the information at serial zero and send it to Gulabganj for investigation.

4. Issues : (i) Whether an FIR described as having been lodged eight years after marriage and without precise dates for every earlier incident was delayed or time-barred despite the specified expulsion on 25 December 2022 and alleged renewed demand on 12 February 2023. (ii) Whether the wife described specific roles of the husband and his parents sufficient to raise triable allegations of cruelty and dowry demands, or merely named them in general terms. (iii) Whether asserted deficiencies in the police medical examination in March 2023, the hospital records of December 2022 and the supplementary statement could negate the FIR at the Section 482 stage. (iv) Whether initial registration at Mahila Thana, Vidisha, at serial No. 0 was invalid for lack of territorial jurisdiction despite transfer to Gulabganj.

5. Ratio / Findings : A complainant cannot necessarily recall the precise date of each episode of matrimonial cruelty over the years; the absence of those particulars does not negate the specifically alleged expulsion on 25 December 2022. The Court read the FIR as a whole as alleging expulsion for failure to meet a dowry demand and continued residence at the parental home without custody of the child. Applying Rupali Devi on continuing mental injury and Amar Singh on compelled residence at the parental home, it rejected the applicants' arguments of delay and limitation at this stage.

The complaint attributed a demand for Rs 25 lakh to the three applicants, who were close family members, and described their separate alleged acts of assault, abuse, threats, harm during pregnancy and expulsion. In light of Taramani Parakh, the Court distinguished unsupported naming of distant relatives from specific allegations raising triable issues. It considered the admission to Bansal Hospital on 28 December 2022 as supporting the alleged history of treatment for back and spinal problems, despite the later police examination on 6 March 2023. It noted the alleged miscarriage and the complainant's supplementary statement explaining the absence of records. That statement concerned the unavailability of miscarriage records, rather than a retraction of the cruelty allegations exonerating the applicants. The truth and evidentiary weight of the rival accounts remained for trial, rather than a mini-trial under Section 482.

Finally, Mahila Thana had recorded the FIR at serial zero and transferred it to Gulabganj. The police station receiving the information could not refuse to register an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence merely because it lacked territorial jurisdiction to investigate; the proper course was to transfer it. Taking the allegations at face value, the Court found them sufficient for prosecution and found no basis to interfere.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC. FIR Crime No. 25/2023 at Gulabganj under the five IPC sections and Sections 3–4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, and consequential proceedings, were not quashed.

Saurabh Yadav and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 9436/2024, 07/05/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (857) Prev Next

Headnote :- Counter FIRs / rival aggressor accounts - The Court observed that Sayra Bano's Crime No. 34/2020 alleged an incident at 10:30 a.m. on 1 February 2020, while the challenged Crime No. 119/2024 described a confrontation over plots at 9 a.m. that morning. The competing complaints did not establish which side attacked first. Determining the aggressor, the validity of title documents, or the truth of the alleged boundary damage or gunfire required factual adjudication, which was not permissible in quashing proceedings under Section 482 CrPC / Section 528 BNSS.

Inherent powers / Renu Kumari threshold - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted and applied: Section 482 preserves powers to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process and secure the ends of justice, but its exercise is exceptional and is distinct from appeal or revision. Its discussion of R.P. Kapur, AIR 1960 SC 866, and Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, identifies categories involving allegations that disclose no offence on their face, a legal bar, no legal evidence, manifest improbability and clear mala fides. It distinguishes absence of evidence from disputed reliability of evidence. Once a cognizable offence is disclosed, the informant's alleged malice assumes secondary importance and cannot by itself terminate the prosecution. The Court cited XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh and M. Srikanth.

FIR delay / prior effort to obtain registration - The Court observed that the challenged FIR was registered about four years after the occurrence in February 2020. However, respondent No. 4 had approached the High Court in MCrC No. 40034/2022 after police inaction, and registration followed the resulting order. Skoda Auto Volkswagen (India) Pvt. Ltd. v. State of U.P., reported here as (2021) 5 SCC 795, and Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, reject delay alone as a ground for quashing. Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, explains the value of prompt reporting without treating promptness as conclusive proof of truth or delay as illegality. The Court rejected the contention that delay by itself required quashing and left credibility to be assessed on evidence.

Disputed defence / disposition - The Court observed that the applicants' allegation of retaliatory registration was disputed. The claims about forged lease papers, a disabled licensed rifle and the other side's aggression appeared in the complainant's account; they were not established facts. The FIR alleged an attack, abusive language, boundary damage and threats. The Court could not determine the reliability of the rival accounts in exercise of its inherent jurisdiction. It found no case for interference and dismissed the application to quash FIR Crime No. 119/2024 under Sections 323, 294, 506, 147 and 148 IPC and consequential proceedings.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants sought quashing of FIR Crime No. 119/2024, registered on 16 March 2024 at Kotwali, Sheopur, for offences under Sections 323, 294, 506, 147 and 148 IPC and consequential proceedings, invoking Section 482 CrPC / Section 528 BNSS. The allegation concerned a disputed confrontation on the morning of 1 February 2020 near the plots claimed by the complainant at Survey Nos. 201 and 202, beside a hutment attributed to Nanne Khan. According to the account placed before the Court, the complainant's son, Firoz, was having work done by a JCB when Sayra Bano and several other named persons allegedly compelled the driver to remove the machine, called others, attacked Firoz, used obscene abusive words within others' hearing, damaged a boundary wall, entered the plot, attempted to take possession and threatened to kill the complainant party if it returned. The complainant side alleged that the police had not acted on its report and that political and media pressure had instead led to a false FIR against it, including a disputed allegation that the complainant had fired a licensed .315-bore rifle. It asserted that the complainant was absent and that his rifle, kept in an almirah, had been damaged in an earlier fall and could not fire. The account also disputed the opposing side's leases for Survey Nos. 313 and 316 and alleged attempted occupation through forged documents. These were conflicting allegations and submissions, rather than findings on ownership, forgery, the rifle's operation or assault. Sayra stated that she had lodged Crime No. 34/2020 against respondent No. 4 under Sections 323, 504, 436, 506 and 34 IPC, alleging an incident at about 10:30 a.m. the same day; counsel conceded that the version of the complainant in the challenged FIR placed the incident at approximately 9 a.m. Counsel also relied on the roughly four-year delay. The Court noted respondent No. 4's earlier MCrC No. 40034/2022 after police inaction and that registration followed a High Court order.

2. Precedents — Considered : Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted extensively and adopted as the framework under Section 482. It describes three purposes: giving effect to an order under the Code, preventing abuse of the process of a court and securing the ends of justice. Although wide, inherent power must be exercised exceptionally and cautiously, and is distinct from appellate or revisional review of facts. Its quoted discussion of R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, covers a manifest legal bar, allegations accepted in their entirety but constituting no alleged offence, and absence of legal evidence or evidence manifestly failing to prove the charge. The judgment emphasises that the last category differs from legal evidence whose reliability requires assessment at trial. Its discussion of Bhajan Lal lists illustrative categories involving allegations disclosing no offence or no cognizable offence, uncontroverted allegations disclosing no offence, absurd or inherently improbable allegations, a legal bar and malicious institution of proceedings, while warning against routine quashing. Renu Kumari also explains that an informant's alleged mala fides assume secondary importance once the report discloses a cognizable offence; the evidence gathered and led will determine guilt. Its internal references to Janata Dal, Raghubir Saran, Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma, Rupan Deol Bajaj, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Satvinder Kaur, Rajesh Bajaj, M. Devendrappa, Awadh Kishore Gupta and Saroj Kumar Sahoo occur in that quoted explanation and receive no distinct application by the present Court. The High Court applied these principles to the competing accounts of who was the aggressor and the allegation of a retaliatory FIR, limiting its inquiry to the allegations at face value without conducting a mini-trial.

At paragraph 5, the Court also collectively invoked XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. No. 709/2021; Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha. It stated only their common proposition that uncontroverted allegations which fail to make out an offence can warrant quashing, and that the Court cannot examine the accused's defence at that stage. Skoda Auto Volkswagen (India) Pvt. Ltd. v. State of U.P., reported in the order as (2021) 5 SCC 795, was applied to reject mere reporting delay and examination of disputed facts as grounds for quashing an FIR. Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, explains why immediate reporting is ideal, while recognising that delay may have genuine causes and promptness does not guarantee truth. Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, reiterates that delay alone does not warrant quashing.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 323, 294, 506, 147 and 148 IPC were the offences alleged in the challenged FIR. The counter-FIR was described as alleging offences under Sections 323, 504, 436, 506 and 34 IPC; its validity or prosecution was not disposed of. Survey numbers, the rifle's condition and the genuineness of property documents were matters of factual dispute; no statutory determination of title was made.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the parties' two reports about the morning of 1 February 2020 enabled the High Court to identify the aggressor and quash the later FIR on the applicants' allegation that it was a counter-case or retaliation. (ii) Whether the allegations of assault, unlawful assembly, abuse, interference with property and threats, accepted at face value, failed to disclose an offence or fell within a recognised exception permitting exercise of inherent power; and whether the disputed plot documents, the rifle account and the applicants' allegation of malice could be determined at this preliminary stage. (iii) Whether the interval of approximately four years between the event and registration itself required quashing, given the complainant's intervening approach to the High Court after alleged police inaction.

5. Ratio / Findings : Counsel's concession placed both reports on the same morning, although at 9 and 10:30 a.m. The Court inferred from the competing accounts that an incident had taken place, but the central question of who initiated the confrontation remained disputed. Section 482 / Section 528 did not permit it to resolve that question by preferring one account. The complainant's allegations about a false gunshot charge, a damaged rifle and plot-title documents, and the applicants' reliance on their counter-FIR, did not become established facts through the petition. Renu Kumari, including its discussion of R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal, permits an examination of the allegations at face value and exceptional intervention to prevent abuse. It does not permit weighing evidence that may or may not support the charges after full proof. Applying the collectively cited Supreme Court cases, the Court held that disputed defences fell outside that preliminary inquiry. It found no ground, on the face of the allegations, to terminate the charged proceedings.

The applicants' contention that four years of delay required quashing also failed. The Court noted that respondent No. 4 had earlier approached it in MCrC No. 40034/2022 because the police had not acted, and the impugned FIR was registered in compliance with a High Court order. It therefore declined to treat the registration date as showing only unexplained inaction. Skoda Auto, Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid establish that mere delay is not an automatic ground for quashing and that genuineness requires factual assessment. Considering the record as a whole, the Court found no case for interference.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC / Section 528 BNSS. FIR Crime No. 119/2024 under Sections 323, 294, 506, 147 and 148 IPC and consequential proceedings were not quashed.

Sayra Bano and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 54489/2024, 18/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (858) Prev Next

Headnote :- Minor's induced departure / subsequent adult marriage - The Court observed that the birth certificate submitted by Seema stated her date of birth as 16 October 2005; she was below eighteen when her parents reported her missing on 21 September 2023. The non-cognizable report filed by the petitioners described her first departure and marriage to petitioner No. 2 during minority, her return through the police, and a later court marriage after she attained eighteen. Anversinh alias Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v. State of Gujarat, (2021) 3 SCC 12, was applied for the stated principle that, if a minor leaves home on the inducement of an accused, offences under Sections 363 and 366 IPC would be made out. The High Court rejected the plea that she had merely been held captive by her parents. The later marriage after adulthood did not remove the issue of the earlier alleged kidnapping. The Court refused to quash the FIR and dismissed the writ petition. It also found no foundation for the allegations of assault by the police or parents, or for the requested protection and directions governing the recording of statements. An erroneous location in the accompanying affidavit led to a separate direction to the Gujarat Law Secretary to examine whether the notary's licence should continue, following due process under the Notaries Act; the Court did not itself cancel the licence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Seema Bhojne and the other petitioners invoked Article 226 in Writ Petition No. 7782/2024. They sought recording of petitioner No. 1's police statement at the High Court, with counsel present or by video conference; police protection and freedom from pressure when any judicial statement under Section 164 CrPC was recorded in Damoh; quashing of the FIR concerning petitioners Nos. 2–4 if those statements disclosed no crime; and directions restraining the police and private respondents from harming them or interfering with the asserted marriage of petitioners Nos. 1 and 2. Counsel alleged that her parents had filed a false missing-person (Gum Inshan) report on 21 September 2023, claiming that she was a minor and had been kidnapped, although they had kept her captive. The petitioners relied on Annexure P/2, a birth certificate stating her date of birth as 16 October 2005; that date made her under eighteen when the missing-person report was lodged. Counsel asserted her marriage to petitioner No. 2, beating of petitioners Nos. 3–4 by the police, and closure of the missing-person report. The petitioners had also filed non-cognizable report No. 43/2024 from Shivaji Nagar, Buldhana, lodged by Vishal Gautam Savdekar. That report describes the girl leaving home twice: she first married Sanjay Ramesh Bhojne, petitioner No. 2, before turning eighteen, was returned through Tendukheda police, and married him again in court after attaining adulthood.

2. Precedents — Considered : Anversinh alias Kiransinh Fatesinh Zala v. State of Gujarat, (2021) 3 SCC 12, was the Supreme Court authority expressly applied. The judgment states, in substance, that if a minor leaves home on the inducement of an accused, offences under Sections 363 and 366 IPC would be made out. Both minority and inducement qualify the proposition; the Court did not declare that every voluntary departure of a minor amounted to kidnapping. Applying the stated rule to the petitioners' own birth certificate, the account of the first marriage during minority and the subsequent return through the police, it rejected the contention that the parents had merely held petitioner No. 1 captive and refused to quash the FIR.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the jurisdictional basis for the requests for mandamus, protection and conditional quashing. Sections 363 and 366 IPC were the kidnapping and abduction provisions invoked in the Court's application of Anversinh. The Notaries Act was expressly invoked to require due process before any potential administrative action against the notary; the Court did not cancel the licence itself.

4. Issues : Whether the petitioners' documents and the later marriage after adulthood justified treating the original missing-person or kidnapping allegation as false and quashing the case, despite the birth date establishing minority on 21 September 2023 and the submitted report describing the first marriage during minority; whether there was a factual foundation for police protection, a specified venue and procedure for recording statements, and restraint on the family or police; and whether the apparent error in notarial verification required administrative examination with procedural safeguards.

5. Ratio / Findings : The date of birth recorded in Annexure P/2, 16 October 2005, made petitioner No. 1 a minor when the missing-person report was lodged on 21 September 2023. The non-cognizable report filed by the petitioners themselves recorded her first departure, marriage to petitioner No. 2 during minority, return through the police, and another marriage only after she attained eighteen. The Court considered this inconsistent with counsel's explanation that she had been held captive by her parents, and described the initial event as kidnapping by petitioners Nos. 2–4. Applying the limited proposition in Anversinh concerning a minor's induced departure, it refused to quash the earlier allegation on the basis of the later marriage after adulthood. This was the Court's conclusion on the writ material, rather than a conviction after trial. It separately found no foundation for the claim that the police had treated petitioners Nos. 2–4 improperly or that petitioner No. 1 had been beaten by the police or her parents. It therefore declined the requested directions on recording statements, protection and non-interference. The Court criticised the notary's casual verification because the affidavit placed Ahmedabad in Maharashtra despite his Ahmedabad, Gujarat, seal. It directed the Gujarat Law Secretary to consider whether the licence should continue, expressly subject to due process under the Notaries Act. The referral left the licence question for administrative decision and did not itself cancel the licence.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the petition under Article 226. No FIR was quashed, no mandamus for protection or a particular statement-recording procedure was issued, and no order declaring the marriage valid or barring parental involvement was made. A copy of the order and affidavit was directed to be sent to the Gujarat Law Secretary, Department of Law and Legislative, for necessary information and compliance with the direction to examine the notary's licence through statutory due process.

Seema Bhojne and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 7782/2024, 15/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (859) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 after charge sheet and trial progress - The Court held that filing of the charge sheet on 7 July 2018, after the petition was filed on 2 July under Section 482, and the subsequent framing of charges and examination of the prosecutrix did not prevent a decision on the merits. Satish Mehra permits sparing exercise of the power to quash even after charges are framed where the material, accepted in its entirety, discloses no offence, without determining guilt. Anand Kumar Mohatta, drawing on Joseph Salvaraj, rejects the contention that filing a charge sheet bars quashing; Ravikant Dubey similarly addresses a trial at an advanced stage.

Consent on a marriage promise and subsisting first marriage - The Court held that the prosecutrix's account under Section 161 acknowledged her marriage in 2011, separation in 2012 without divorce, and repeated sexual relations with the petitioner in his room over eight months. No coercion in developing that relationship was alleged. She knew that her first marriage subsisted and that another marriage was not then legally possible. On the Court's assessment of these allegations, her consent could not be attributed to a promise of marriage giving rise to a misconception of fact under Section 90. The later refusal to marry, allegedly based on caste, did not by itself establish a deceitful intention at the outset. Deepak Gulati, Uday, Tilak Raj, Pramod Suryabhan Pawar and Dr Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar explained that distinction; the finding in Yedla Srinivasa Rao that a girl of tender age had consented through fraud was considered on its different facts. The inquiry depends on the facts and requires a false intention at the inception of the promise and a causal connection with consent, rather than merely an unfulfilled future promise.

Quashing and the separate assault allegation - The Court held, on its assessment of the complainant's allegations and statements, that an offence under Section 376 IPC was not disclosed. It quashed the FIR in Crime No. 103/2018 under Sections 376 and 323 IPC and all consequential criminal proceedings.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Senjeet Singh sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of FIR Crime No. 103/2018 at Police Station Maharajpura, Gwalior, under Sections 376 and 323 IPC and all consequential proceedings. He filed the petition on 2 July 2018; the charge sheet was prepared and filed on 7 July during its pendency. At the hearing, the State submitted that charges had been framed and the prosecutrix examined, as indicated by endorsements showing that documents had been exhibited. Respondent No. 2 had earlier appeared through counsel, but no one appeared for her at this hearing; the petitioner and the State were heard. In her FIR of 3 March 2018, the complainant, a beautician, stated that she had befriended him about eight months earlier, that he had promised marriage and repeatedly had sexual intercourse with her, including at his room behind Chawla Market shortly before the FIR. When he called her again and asked for sex, she refused until they married; she alleged that he refused marriage and beat her. Her statement under Section 161 CrPC added that she had married Sunil Shrivas in 2011, left him after a family dispute in 2012, studied through Class 10 and repeatedly visited the petitioner's room. She alleged that he refused marriage because they belonged to different castes and assaulted her with fists and blows, causing injuries. Her statement under Section 164 recounted the other facts but omitted the first marriage. The petitioner's counsel submitted that there had been no divorce, referred to a pending case under Section 498-A IPC and the Dowry Prohibition Act against the husband and to a marriage card, and argued that she knew she could not marry the petitioner while her first marriage subsisted. He also stressed the absence of any allegation that force was used to take her to his room. The State argued that whether consent was free or given under a misconception was a question for trial, particularly after the charge sheet and subsequent trial proceedings.

2. Precedents — Considered : Satish Mehra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2012) 13 SCC 614, was quoted at length on the sparing exercise of Section 482 where the prosecution allegations and investigation material, accepted in their entirety at face value, disclose no offence. That power survives the framing of charges and does not authorise a determination of guilt. Anand Kumar Mohatta v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), decided 15 November 2018, was quoted on the continuing availability of Section 482 after a charge sheet or while an application for discharge is pending. It relied on Joseph Salvaraj A. v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 7 SCC 59, to explain that the FIR, charge sheet and documents may be examined to determine whether the ingredients of an offence are prima facie disclosed. Ravikant Dubey v. State of M.P., 2014 Cr.L.R. (M.P.) 162, was the coordinate-bench authority that an advanced trial and recording of witness evidence do not automatically exclude relief under Section 482. Deepak Gulati v. State of Haryana, AIR 2013 SC 2071, distinguished a deceitful promise of marriage made at the outset to induce intercourse from an honestly intended promise subsequently broken, and required consideration of the woman's informed choice and other possible reasons for consent. Tilak Raj v. State of Himachal Pradesh, AIR 2016 SC 406, was quoted on its own facts involving an adult, mature complainant and a relationship lasting two years, where the evidence did not show that a promise of marriage had induced consent. Uday v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 4 SCC 46, required scrutiny of the particular facts, rejected a rigid formula, considered awareness that an inter-caste marriage might not take place and the absence of proof of initial deception, and stated the two conditions under Section 90: a misconception and the accused's knowledge or reason to believe that consent resulted from it. Its quoted discussion refers to State of H.P. v. Mango Ram on meaningful voluntary choice and to Rao Har Narain Singh and Vijayan Pillai as approved approaches; these are references within the quotation, rather than separately applied facts. Abid Ali v. State of M.P., MCRC 1363/2016 (18 May 2017), was the coordinate-bench example of voluntary, repeated intimacy despite avoidance of marriage, leading to quashing under Section 376. Yedla Srinivasa Rao v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 615, was also quoted: dishonest intention from the outset, persuasion of a girl of tender age by an assurance of marriage, and fraud causing her consent can vitiate that consent. Age, education, social setting and evidence matter. Pramod Suryabhan Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, reported in the order as (2019) SCCC 608, reiterated the requirement of a false intention at the inception of the promise and that the misconception must form the basis of the woman's choice, as distinct from a later breach, drawing on Deepak Gulati. Dr Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar v. State of Maharashtra explained the distinction by reference to a conscious, continuing adult relationship on its own facts and the test of whether allegations disclose an offence at face value. The Court considered these authorities together and applied them to this complainant's subsisting marriage and voluntary relationship.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the High Court's inherent power to prevent abuse of process and secure the ends of justice, and was exercised after the charge sheet and progress of the trial. Sections 161 and 164 CrPC concerned the prosecutrix's two recorded accounts; the first included her prior marriage, while the second omitted it. Sections 375 and 376 IPC concerned consent and the alleged rape; Section 90 IPC provided the rule on misconception of fact, including the accused's knowledge or reason to believe that consent resulted from that misconception.

4. Issues : Whether the pending challenge under Section 482 became untenable because a charge sheet was filed shortly afterwards, charges were framed and the prosecutrix apparently examined; whether the complainant's own allegations and statements, considered with the stated circumstances, disclosed that intercourse over eight months rested on consent vitiated by a promise of marriage false from its inception within Section 90, so as to prima facie disclose an offence under Section 376; and whether the whole FIR under Sections 376 and 323 and consequential proceedings should be quashed. The State urged determination of consent at trial, while the petitioner relied on her subsisting first marriage and the absence of coercion.

5. Ratio / Findings : The petition could be considered on its merits despite the intervening charge sheet and progress of the trial. Satish Mehra, Anand Kumar Mohatta and Ravikant Dubey permit examination at those stages of whether the material, taken at face value, prima facie discloses the ingredients of an offence. Intervention remains exceptional, and the material is not weighed to determine guilt. On the Court's reading, the complainant knew that her first marriage remained undissolved and that she could not marry this petitioner while it subsisted. Her repeated visits to his room and intercourse over about eight months were described without coercion or pressure in developing the sexual relationship. The Court held that, in those circumstances, the alleged promise of marriage could not give rise to a misconception of fact under Section 90. Consent was voluntary for the inquiry under Section 376, notwithstanding the alleged subsequent refusal, caste explanation and assault. The precedents required a distinction between a knowingly false promise from the outset that actually induced consent, particularly on the vulnerable facts of Yedla, and subsequent inability or unwillingness to marry after a conscious relationship.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed the petition under Section 482. It quashed the FIR in Crime No. 103/2018 at Maharajpura, Gwalior, under both Sections 376 and 323 IPC and all consequential criminal proceedings. This was quashing, rather than a trial acquittal or a determination of the petitioner's ultimate factual guilt after evidence.

Senjeet Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 25681/2018, 11/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (860) Prev Next

Headnote :- POCSO minor prosecutrix and closed cross examination - The Court held that the child witness had attended on successive occasions. On 23 October 2021, her examination-in-chief ended around 12:20 p.m., and counsel for the defence had been present during it. The chosen lead advocate did not attend for cross-examination despite repeated calls. His associate sought deferral without giving a reason, although the Court had previously warned that failure to cross-examine on the next date would close that right. Neither the asserted later arrival at 4:20 p.m. nor the accused's claim that counsel acted contrary to instructions required the child to attend again. They could change counsel or complain to the Bar Council. On these facts, closure under Section 309 was upheld and interference under Section 482 refused. The State had invoked POCSO Sections 33 and 35.

Section 309 CrPC, attended witnesses and exceptional adjournment - The Court held that examination from day to day is the norm once witnesses are being examined. Where a witness is present, an adjournment without examination requires special reasons recorded in writing. Under the quoted proviso, absence or non-readiness of a party's pleader permits an appropriate order dispensing with examination. Vinod Kumar addressed cross-examination immediately after examination-in-chief and fairness to both sides. Akil and Shambhu Nath Singh explained the stringent rule applicable when witnesses attend; Swaran Singh, Gurnaib Singh and Mohd. Khalid warned of harassment, influence and misconduct resulting from unjustified deferrals. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni emphasised timely public justice. The Court applied these authorities in rejecting the repeated, unexplained obstruction on this record.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants challenged under Section 482 CrPC the order of the Special Judge (POCSO Act), Bhind, dated 23 October 2021 in ATR No. 41/2020, closing their right to cross-examine the minor prosecutrix. She appeared on 16 September 2021 but could not be examined because of a reference following an advocate's death. She appeared again on 9 October; defence counsel was not ready to cross-examine her, and the trial court warned that failure to do so on the next date would close the right. On 23 October, her examination-in-chief began at noon and ended around 12:20 p.m. The judgment records that counsel for the applicants was present during the examination, but their chosen lead advocate, Neeraj Shrivastava, did not appear to conduct cross-examination despite repeated instructions. His associate insisted that only he would conduct it and later sought deferral without giving a reason. The trial court closed the right under Section 309. The applicants asserted that Shrivastava appeared at 4:20 p.m., sought a final opportunity to avoid irreparable prejudice, and stated that their lawyer had requested adjournments without their instructions. The State opposed the application, relying on the child's repeated attendance, the statutory procedure for a child witness and alleged deliberate obstruction.

2. Precedents — Considered : Akash Batham and Others v. Santoshi, CRR 380/2017 (MP High Court, 21 April 2017), was quoted on refusal of an unsubstantiated request for adjournment when a witness attended and counsel, although offered the post-lunch session, persisted in seeking delay. The absence of a Bar Council complaint was noted in that case. Kuldeep Singh Tomar v. State of M.P., MCRC 5816/2018 (8 March 2018), was quoted for the principle that conducting a criminal trial from day to day is the rule and adjournment the exception. Vinod Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2015) 3 SCC 220, was extensively quoted: ordinarily, cross-examination should finish on the day examination-in-chief ends, or continue the next day if examination runs late. Departure from Section 309 requires special recorded reasons. Prolonged intervals expose witnesses to pressure and undermine fairness to both the accused and the prosecution. Its quoted discussion incorporates Gurnaib Singh, Talab Haji Hussain, Swaran Singh and Shambhu Nath Singh. Talab Haji Hussain concerns conduct by the accused that endangers a fair trial within the quoted Gurnaib passage; the present judgment also directly quotes Swaran, Gurnaib and Shambhu later. Akil v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2013) 7 SCC 125, quoted a Delhi High Court circular summarising the rule of prompt sessions trials under Section 309 and the requirement for special reasons recorded in writing. Kerala practice rules and local administrative targets appeared within that quotation; they were not imposed as independent directions on the Bhind court. Krishnan v. Krishnaveni, (1997) 4 SCC 241, was summarised on public justice and completion of trial before witnesses' memories fade, in view of practices of delay and influence. Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668, was directly quoted on repeated adjournments that exhaust witnesses or expose them to threats and inducements, resulting in a miscarriage of justice. Gurnaib Singh v. State of Punjab, (2013) 7 SCC 108, was directly quoted on active control by the trial court, adherence to the statute, and the duties of the Bench and Bar to prevent procrastination. State of U.P. v. Shambhu Nath Singh, (2001) 4 SCC 667, was quoted at length on the successive requirements of Section 309: once examination begins, trial must proceed from day to day; postponement beyond the following day requires recorded reasons; and where a witness attends, adjournment without examination requires special reasons in writing. Counsel's convenience alone is not such a reason. Mohd. Khalid v. State of West Bengal, (2002) 7 SCC 334, was quoted on the impropriety of deferring cross-examination after examination-in-chief except for compelling reasons. Its passage directly refers to Shambhu Nath Singh and quotes N.G. Dastane v. Shrikant S. Shivde on advocates' duty to make arrangements and the possibility that repeated dereliction amounts to misconduct. The present judgment applied these authorities to the unexplained delay on this record, without excluding legitimate fair-trial exceptions.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the jurisdiction to review the trial order; relief was refused on the record. Section 309(1) CrPC requires continuous proceedings from day to day once examination of witnesses has begun, unless an adjournment beyond the following day is necessary for recorded reasons. The proviso to Section 309(2) concerning witnesses in attendance requires special reasons recorded in writing for adjournment without examining a present witness. The additional provisos quoted restrict adjournments requested by a party to circumstances beyond its control, exclude an advocate's engagement in another court as a ground, and permit recording of the statement and appropriate orders dispensing with examination when a party or counsel is absent or unready. The quoted text also includes a proviso for expeditious rape trials and other limits on remand and sentencing, which were not separately resolved in this case. The State relied on POCSO Act Section 33 concerning examination of a child and Section 35's 30-day period for evidence and completion of trial within one year as far as possible.

4. Issues : Whether Section 482 should be exercised to restore the applicants' right to cross-examine after repeated attendance of the minor prosecutrix, a prior warning, completion of examination-in-chief and an unexplained failure of their chosen lead counsel to attend for cross-examination; how Section 309's requirements for proceedings from day to day and examination of witnesses in attendance applied to the request for a final defence opportunity; and whether blaming counsel or his asserted arrival at 4:20 p.m. justified requiring the child to attend again. The issue concerned management of this trial, rather than guilt, the content or credibility of the child's testimony, or a general waiver of the right to defend.

5. Ratio / Findings : In light of the quoted Section 309 and the Supreme Court authorities considered, a court should examine a witness who attends rather than routinely defer cross-examination. Once examination has begun, expedition is the rule; adjournment without examining a present witness requires genuine special reasons recorded in writing. The chosen lawyer's failure to appear when required, his associate's unexplained request and the earlier non-readiness despite a warning were insufficient here. The accused could not require the minor prosecutrix to attend repeatedly through such tactics. If counsel acted against their instructions, they could replace him or approach the Bar Council; that assertion alone did not override the child's interest or establish error in the closure order. The Court held that where an oblique request to defer cross-examination is designed to defeat the purposes of a criminal trial, the accused or counsel are responsible for the resulting closure. On the conduct in this case, it found no basis to interfere. The State's submissions on the POCSO timelines remained distinct from the Court's analysis under Section 309.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. The order dated 23 October 2021 closing the applicants' right to cross-examine the prosecutrix remained undisturbed.

Shadab Ansari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 47659/2022, 12/12/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (861) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 498-A, non-dowry cruelty and ritual-related assault - The Court held that the complaint specifically alleged that the husband, his younger brother and his mother had filthily abused the wife and assaulted her with fists and blows, causing injuries, because her family had not organised the Hath Dhulai ritual. Even if a demand to perform that ritual were not a dowry demand within Explanation (b), Section 498-A Explanation (a) separately covers wilful conduct likely to cause grave injury or danger to mental or physical health.

Civil restitution notice and criminal proceedings - The Court held that the husband's notice for restitution of conjugal rights, issued before the FIR, did not by itself establish that the complaint was false and retaliatory. Kishan Singh, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam and Prem Raj were considered on the different standards of proof in civil and criminal proceedings and the absence of automatic binding force between findings in the two proceedings, subject to the rules on relevance and limited conclusiveness in Evidence Act Sections 40–43 and any exception arising in the particular case. The Karam Chand formulation quoted in Prem Raj was explained in light of later Constitution Bench law and was not adopted as an unqualified rule. Pratibha confirms that civil matrimonial proceedings alone do not warrant quashing an FIR that discloses a prima facie offence.

Face-value Section 482 assessment - The Court held that the denial of the incident, the claimed absence of external injury and the assertion that the FIR was a counterblast raised matters requiring evidence. A specific allegation of assault by all three applicants could not be disbelieved by conducting a mini trial under Section 482. Pratibha precludes quashing on extraneous considerations when the FIR itself discloses an offence. The application to quash Crime No. 136/2023 under Sections 294, 323, 498-A and 34 IPC and the pending criminal proceedings was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shahnawaz Ansari, the complainant's husband, his younger brother and his mother applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR No. 136/2023, registered at Police Station Ranjhi, Jabalpur, under Sections 294, 323, 498-A and 34 IPC, and the pending RCT No. 8204/2023 before the JMFC. A charge sheet had been filed. The wife alleged that, since her marriage about eight months earlier, all three had treated her cruelly and pressed her parents to arrange a Muslim ritual called Hath Dhulai. She alleged that, on 25 February 2023 around 8 p.m., all three abused her over that issue and struck her with fists and blows, injuring her back, neck and left wrist. The applicants submitted that the accusations were false and that no external injury had been found. They contended that the FIR was a counterblast because it followed a notice in the husband's proceeding for restitution of conjugal rights, and that a request to perform a ritual could not amount to a dowry demand.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kishan Singh (Dead) through LRs v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, was quoted on the different standards of proof —preponderance of probabilities in civil proceedings and proof beyond reasonable doubt in criminal proceedings—and the ordinary absence of binding force between findings in the two proceedings. It expressly qualified that principle by recognising that prior judgments may be relevant under Sections 41–43 of the Evidence Act. The excerpt directly invoked Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah on the different burdens of proof. It also explained that Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam had treated the broad Karam Chand position as inconsistent with the Constitution Bench decision in M.S. Sheriff and the later decisions in K.G. Premshanker and Vishnu Dutt Sharma. The present Court relied on this line of authority to reject an automatic bar arising from civil proceedings. Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2009) 5 SCC 528, was separately quoted at length. Its passage from K.G. Premshanker states that a prior judgment may be relied on where Evidence Act Sections 40–43 make it relevant; a Section 41 judgment has the conclusive force prescribed by that provision; res judicata may govern civil suits; and CrPC Section 300 governs a retrial after a conviction or acquittal that satisfies its conditions. Relevance and effect depend on the particular case; there is no absolute exclusion. The decision rejects automatic binding force in either direction and notes the residual exclusion under Section 43 and its exceptions. Its longer excerpt from Iqbal Singh Marwah concerns court complaints under Sections 340/341/343 CrPC, delays arising from civil appeals and the different standards of proof. P. Swaroopa Rani was quoted there for the proposition that civil and criminal proceedings may continue simultaneously, with any stay depending on the circumstances. The present judgment applied the principle that the proceedings are independent and that findings in one are not automatically binding in the other. Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon, the Supreme Court decision of 2 April 2024 in SLP (Cr.) 9778/2018, was also quoted. The passage first records counsel's reliance on the older formulation in Karam Chand that civil findings bind criminal courts. It then refers to Vishnu Dutt Sharma and Satish Chander Ahuja on the later law and treats the Constitution Bench reasoning in Iqbal Singh Marwah as settling the different burdens of proof and the absence of automatic final or binding effect. The discussion of M.S. Sheriff within that excerpt favours timely criminal proceedings in the public interest, while expressly rejecting a hard-and-fast rule of priority and recognising the special circumstances of a particular case. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was directly quoted: a matrimonial FIR cannot be quashed under Section 482 on extraneous inferences about delay or the husband's filing of civil divorce proceedings when its allegations disclose a prima facie offence. The complainant's attempts at settlement explained the delay in that case. This Court applied Pratibha to reject the applicants' counterblast contention, which required consideration of evidence, and their attempt to disbelieve the allegation of assault.

3. Statutes considered : Section 498-A IPC and its Explanation were reproduced. Clause (a) covers wilful conduct of the specified seriousness that is likely to drive a woman to suicide or cause grave injury or danger to her life, limb or mental or physical health. Clause (b) separately covers harassment to coerce compliance with an unlawful demand for property or valuable security, or harassment because of non-fulfilment of that demand. The Court reasoned that the alleged beating over the ritual could constitute cruelty despite the applicants' denial of a dowry demand. Section 482 CrPC governed the limited review for quashing on the basis of uncontroverted allegations, a charge sheet having already been filed. Evidence Act Sections 40–43 were discussed through the Supreme Court authorities as qualifications governing the relevance and conclusiveness of prior judgments. Section 41, in particular, can give a qualifying judgment the conclusive effect prescribed by that provision. The husband asserted that he had instituted proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights.

4. Issues : Whether the alleged assault on the wife over Hath Dhulai could disclose cruelty under Section 498-A when the applicants asserted that the ritual was not dowry; whether a prior notice for restitution of conjugal rights and civil matrimonial proceedings established that the FIR was a false counterblast or legally barred prosecution; and whether the applicants' denial of the incident and submission that there was no external injury permitted quashing of the FIR and the pending criminal case. The Court assessed whether the allegations, taken at face value, met the threshold for proceeding, leaving proof of the facts and individual offences to trial.

5. Ratio / Findings : Section 498-A Explanation (a) operates independently of the harassment linked to a demand under Explanation (b). The Court described an assault on a woman over non-performance of Hath Dhulai as causing mental injury and applied that reasoning to the specific allegations of abuse and beating by the three applicants. It was not necessary to classify the ritual as dowry to reject the challenge at this stage. Civil and criminal cases are decided on their own evidence and under different standards of proof. Neither the husband's notice for restitution of conjugal rights nor a presumption of retaliation based on the timing displaced the FIR. The cited Supreme Court decisions preserved the statutory relevance of certain prior judgments under Evidence Act Sections 40–43. Here, however, the applicants relied on a proceeding and notice rather than a binding determination. Pratibha also cautioned against reliance on extraneous material and findings on credibility in a Section 482 review. The claimed absence of external injury and the assertion that no incident had occurred raised disputed questions of fact, whereas the FIR specifically alleged that each applicant had assaulted the wife. On the uncontroverted allegations, the Court found no basis for quashing.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. FIR No. 136/2023 and the related charge-sheet proceedings in RCT No. 8204/2023 continued; criminal liability was not finally determined.

Shahnawaz Ansari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 43223/2023, 08/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (862) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482, disputed defence and document exception - The Court held that a quashing petition could not determine whether the complainant had falsely accused her in-laws, used a phone late at night or been assaulted. The Jio usage statement was in her husband's name and did not establish that she had used the phone. The husband's ownership of an industry and the parents' age or occupation did not confer immunity. It was not shown that the finding in proceedings for maintenance under Section 125 CrPC governed the Section 498-A prosecution. XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh were relied on for the limits of review on allegations taken at face value and the prohibition against a mini trial. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui permitted consideration, in an appropriate case, of a defence document that was public or whose veracity the complainant did not dispute.

Section 498-A, cruelty independent of dowry - The Court held that cruelty through wilful conduct under Explanation (a), affecting mental or physical health, does not depend on a dowry demand under Explanation (b). The wife's specific allegations of food deprivation, abuse, assault, humiliation over the children's fees and eviction supported prosecution of her husband and his parents at the prima facie stage. Drawing on Meera and Taramani Parakh, the Court rejected automatic leniency because the mother-in-law was elderly or the father-in-law was an advocate. The truth of disputed allegations remained for trial.

Omnibus case against married sister-in-law and accused-wise relief - The Court held that the collective allegations naming Nazia Khan did not specify an act of her own sufficiently to require her to face trial. The narrow power to quash on allegations taken at face value, explained in Satish Mehra, and the caution against over-implication in Kans Raj, Monju Roy and Chandralekha, applied according to the facts, supported quashing for her alone. The FIR in Crime No. 04/2021 and the consequential trial were quashed as to Nazia. The Section 498-A/34 prosecution against Shahnaz Ahmed, Iqbal Ahmed and Ashfaq Ahmed continued, and the interim order was vacated.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The four applicants were the complainant's mother-in-law Shahnaz Ahmed, father-in-law Iqbal Ahmed, married sister-in-law Nazia Khan and husband Ashfaq Ahmed. They applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR dated 24 August 2021 in Crime No. 04/2021, Mahila Thana, Narsinghpur, and the consequential proceedings. The complainant stated that she had married Ashfaq on 1 November 2007 and had two children. She alleged recurring harassment from March 2019, including disputes over household work, food deprivation, physical assault, filthy abuse and expulsions from the home. When she sought money for school fees, she was allegedly insulted. Her husband moved with her and the children to Gadarwara in October 2020. She described an incident on 16 July 2021, as her in-laws prepared to go to Bhopal, involving abuse, assault and her expulsion from the home. Her brother then took them to Kareli. She explained that she had delayed reporting because she did not want to spoil her family life. The applicants denied the allegations. They relied on the parents' ages of about 64 and 71 and asserted that they lived separately. They submitted that Nazia had married in 2003, had two children and lived about 200 km away. They challenged the complainant's character and alleged late-night phone use, contended that the husband's industry enabled him to meet the school fees, denied any dowry demand and insisted that a preliminary enquiry should have been held. The State and the complainant opposed the application. These defence assertions were disputed and were not accepted as established facts.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, disapproved premature quashing through a roving inquiry into disputed coercion and settlement. Its investigative context concerning a sexual offence was relied on by analogy against resolving the truth of this complainant's allegations. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, rejected a premature assessment of the merits during investigation. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterated the warning in Bhajan Lal that inherent powers to quash must be exercised sparingly and do not permit an inquiry into the reliability of the FIR. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, stated the ordinary bar against weighing an accused's defence documents, while preserving an exception in an appropriate case for a public document or one whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, balanced protection from baseless prosecutions against the need to avoid stifling legitimate cases. Absence of an offence on allegations taken at face value, a legal bar or sufficient material showing malicious use of process may justify exceptional quashing; weighing disputed evidence does not. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, described the power to quash when even the accepted allegations and supporting evidence fail to disclose an offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, rejected a detailed adjudication of a disputed defence under Section 482 after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal 709/2021 (30 June 2021), rejected meticulous scrutiny resembling a trial and stated that the FIR is not an encyclopedia. Paragraph 16 also listed Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha. These authorities supported the Court's prima facie assessment of the case against the parents and husband and its refusal to accept their disputed personal explanations. Meera v. State by Inspector of Police, Criminal Appeal 31/2022 (11 January 2022), was invoked on the duty of a mother-in-law and her family to care for a daughter-in-law rather than harass her over jewels or other issues. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was quoted in support of continuing a prosecution against a husband and his parents on sufficiently stated allegations of cruelty despite factual disputes, while distinguishing distant relatives against whom individual material was lacking. The quoted passage referred to Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa on the established standard for quashing. The detailed dowry complaint reproduced in that authority concerned its own facts. Satish Mehra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2012) 13 SCC 614, was quoted on the exceptional power under Section 482 to assess allegations at face value, including after charges have been framed. Its excerpt included the categories in Kapur concerning a legal bar, non-disclosure of an offence and abuse of process; the power to secure the ends of justice explained in L. Muniswamy; and the requirement of judicial scrutiny before framing a charge in Century Spinning. Ravikant Dubey v. State of M.P., 2014 Cr.L.R. (M.P.) 162, was quoted as a coordinate-bench decision that the progress of a trial and examination of witnesses do not by themselves defeat maintainability. Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, warned against finding guilt from close relationship or conjecture in dowry-death cases. Its trial context required proof beyond reasonable doubt, distinct from the present inquiry into whether the allegations, taken at face value, justified proceedings. Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, required a tangible individual role for distant relatives and careful scrutiny, while cautioning against weighing a matrimonial complaint in golden scales. It quotes Kans Raj and Raja Lal Singh, the latter in turn referring to Kamesh Panjiyar. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, cited in the order as 2013 (1) UC 155, quashed very general accusations against relatives, including a married sister-in-law, on its facts of long delay and uncertainty about co-residence. The present Court applied its concern about specificity to Nazia; the six-year delay discussed in Chandralekha concerned that case, not this FIR. These last authorities supported distinguishing her position from the more particular allegations against the other three applicants.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the inherent jurisdiction to quash, to be exercised sparingly on the FIR's uncontroverted allegations rather than through a trial of disputed facts. Section 498-A IPC and its Explanation were reproduced. Clause (a) covers wilful conduct of the specified seriousness that is likely to drive a woman to suicide or cause grave injury or danger to her life, limb or mental or physical health. It operates independently of clause (b), which concerns harassment over an unlawful demand for property or valuable security. The Court expressly held that a dowry demand is not a sine qua non for cruelty under clause (a).

4. Issues : Whether the specific allegations of household deprivation, abuse, assault, humiliation over school fees and eviction disclosed cruelty under Section 498-A by the husband and his parents without a dowry demand; whether the defences based on personal history, age, occupation, separate residence and the usage bill could be resolved under Section 482; whether an adverse finding in maintenance proceedings controlled the distinct criminal prosecution; and whether the married sister-in-law's inclusion without a specific act satisfied the prima facie threshold as to her. The Court had to distinguish disputed matters requiring proof at trial from the absence of sufficiently particular allegations of an offence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court assessed the allegations at face value under Section 482 and rejected a mini trial of credibility. The husband's Jio usage statement identified him as the subscriber and did not establish that the wife had made the alleged late-night calls. His ownership of an industry did not rule out cruelty. The parents' admitted travel to Bhopal neither established nor disproved the alleged incident, and age or membership of the legal profession conferred no immunity. The Court's rhetorical question as to why a wife would make a false report after fourteen years formed part of its preliminary assessment; it did not create a legal presumption of truth or determine credibility finally. Section 498-A clause (a) can apply to sufficiently grave harm to mental or physical health without a dowry demand under clause (b). There were sufficiently specific allegations against the husband and his parents to require a trial. It was not shown that the adverse Section 125 finding bound the criminal case against the sister-in-law. She was, however, discharged on a separate ground: the allegations of her own role remained collective and general. Her marriage and residence elsewhere were matters asserted by the defence. Kans Raj, Monju Roy, Chandralekha and Satish Mehra supported the narrow exercise of the power to quash after assessing her individual position. All relatives, and all applicants, could not be treated alike when the specificity of the allegations against them differed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court quashed the FIR in Crime No. 04/2021 and the consequential criminal trial only as to applicant No. 3, Nazia Khan, who was discharged. The applications of applicants Nos. 1, 2 and 4—Shahnaz Ahmed, Iqbal Ahmed and Ashfaq Ahmed—were dismissed, and their prosecution under Section 498-A/34 IPC was directed to continue. The interim order dated 21 October 2021 was vacated.

Shahnaz Ahmed and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 49017/2021, 11/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (863) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 petition to compel FIR registration - The petitioner sought a direction to the police to register an offence on his complaint. The Court held that filing a criminal complaint before the competent Magistrate was an efficacious alternative remedy and dismissed the writ petition with liberty to file such a complaint. Divine Retreat Centre, through its discussion of Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, directs a complainant alleging police inaction to the remedies under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. It preserves the power to issue directions under Article 226 in the rarest cases where investigation powers have been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII is established. Even then, the Court may insist on compliance with the lawful process but cannot direct how the investigation is to be conducted. The Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria similarly permits refusal of mandamus under Section 154 where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the four alternative-remedy exceptions recognised in Whirlpool. It distinguishes the question of the duty to register an FIR in Lalita Kumari from an entitlement to seek writ mandamus directly.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Writ Petition No. 19988/2022 under Article 226, Shailendra Rajput sought a direction to the respondent authorities to register an FIR on his complaint, together with any other appropriate relief. State counsel objected to maintainability on the ground of an alternative remedy, citing Sakiri Vasu, Aleque Padamsee, Divine Retreat Centre and the Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria. The Court framed the question whether an Article 226 petition seeking registration of an FIR was tenable. It quoted Divine Retreat Centre and Shweta Bhadauria and found that the petitioner could file a criminal complaint before the competent court.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted the Supreme Court decision in Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542. Paragraphs 41–42 distinguish the rare exercise of Article 226 power at the instance of an aggrieved person, where the High Court is convinced that investigation powers have been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII CrPC is established, from an ordinary case of police inaction on information received. Even in such a rare case, the writ court may insist on observance of the statutory process but cannot direct the manner of investigation. The quoted passage relies on Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra: following police inaction, the complainant may invoke Sections 190/200 before the Magistrate, who may examine the complaint, dismiss it under Section 203 if no offence is disclosed, issue process where warranted or direct investigation in accordance with the statutory procedure. The Court also quoted Shweta Bhadauria

v. State of M.P., Writ Appeal 247/2016, a Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision. It permits refusal of mandamus to compel the police to register an FIR under Section 154 when the informant has not used the alternative remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200, unless one of the four recognised exceptions in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks applies. Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P. concerns the duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence; it does not confer an automatic right to bypass alternative remedies and obtain writ mandamus.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked as the basis of public-law jurisdiction. Its exceptional exercise remained available under the rule quoted from Divine Retreat Centre, although relief was refused here because filing a criminal complaint was an efficacious remedy. CrPC Sections 154(3) and 156(3) provide the alternatives of recourse to a superior police officer and a Magistrate's direction for investigation, as discussed in Shweta Bhadauria. Sections 190 and 200 govern a complaint to a Magistrate following police inaction. The quoted discussion of Gangadhar also refers to enquiry under Chapter XV, investigation under Chapter XII and dismissal under Section 203 if the material discloses no offence.

4. Issues : Whether the Court should entertain a direct petition under Article 226 for mandamus to register an FIR despite the available statutory remedies of complaint and investigation; and whether, on the facts pleaded, the cited exceptional public-law power displaced the restraint arising from an alternative remedy.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered a criminal complaint before the competent Magistrate an efficacious remedy. Applying Divine Retreat Centre and the binding Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria, it declined to entertain the writ petition. Ordinary police inaction is addressed through the specified statutory remedies. An Article 226 direction remains possible in the clear, exceptional circumstances of mala fide investigation, abuse of power and noncompliance with the statutory process. Such a direction must require observance of lawful process and cannot prescribe how the investigation is to be conducted.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition with liberty to file a criminal complaint before the competent court. It issued no direction to register an FIR or conduct a police investigation.

Shailendra Rajput v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 19988/2022, 03/09/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (864) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 340 CrPC and distinct collateral prosecution direction - The Court held that, under Pritish, a court may consider a complaint under Section 340 for an apparent offence affecting its proceedings if an inquiry is expedient in the interests of justice. Neither a preliminary enquiry nor a hearing of the proposed accused is mandatory at that initial stage; guilt is determined in the subsequent proceedings before the Magistrate. Here, the trial judge instead directed the police to register an offence over the allegedly mala fide municipal demolition and conspiracy, rather than making a complaint about false evidence given in court. Section 340 did not justify that unrelated direction after the earlier order summoning additional accused under Section 319 had been quashed.

Trial scope, public-servant demolition and Section 99 - The Court held that the trial for murder and attempted murder arising from shots fired during an official demolition did not determine the validity of the demolition order. The municipal personnel acted under an existing order that had not been separately challenged. The qualified restrictions in Section 99 on private defence against acts of public servants done in good faith undermined the trial judge's collateral premise that the demolition necessarily justified the shooting. As the State's appeal against the shooters' acquittal was pending, the High Court confined relief to the unauthorised directions and did not decide the merits of that appeal.

Judicial strictures against witnesses and non-parties - The Court held, on the authorities of Niranjan Patnaik, Manish Dixit, Amar Pal Singh, State of Gujarat v. R.A. Mehta and Om Prakash Chautala, that damaging remarks must be supported by the record, necessary for deciding the case and preceded by an opportunity for the affected person to explain. The trial judge revived a theory on which an order under Section 319 had already been quashed and issued criminal and departmental directions against officials and witnesses outside the charges being tried. The reasoning of the same-day companion order was expressly incorporated. Paragraphs 77, 79 and 80 of the trial judgment dated 21 February 2018 were set aside as against Shailendra Shukla, and his Section 482 application was allowed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shailendra Shukla's MCRC No. 10066/2018 was decided as expressly covered by the same-day order in MCRC No. 9246/2018. The present judgment reproduces that order's complete reasoning in 26 paragraphs. In the companion case, Anand Singh Parihar challenged paragraphs 77, 79 and 80 of the judgment dated 21 February 2018 passed by the 3rd Additional Sessions Judge, Rewa, in Sessions Trial 382/2014. On 26 July 2014, a municipal team had arrived to demolish a dilapidated house in Rewa pursuant to a demolition order. Rajbhan Singh allegedly fired shots during the drive, injuring Neeraj Singh and fatally shooting Rajlallan Singh. Rajbhan and Ranveer were prosecuted under Sections 302/307 read with 34 IPC and an Arms Act provision. The trial court had earlier exercised Section 319 to summon municipal officials and others as accused for alleged conspiracy and abetment in the events surrounding the demolition. The High Court quashed that order on 15 December 2017 in Criminal Revision 3463/2017. The subsequent trial judgment acquitted the shooters but asserted that the allegedly mala fide demolition and conspiracy with the deceased had provoked the exercise of private defence. It directed the police to register offences under IPC Sections 452, 429, 325, 119, 120-B and 109 against officials and witnesses, including Anand and Shailendra, and also directed departmental action. Meanwhile, on 20 March 2023, the State obtained leave to appeal the acquittal in Criminal Appeal 4450/2023. The High Court expressly refrained from deciding the merits of that appeal. Adopting the companion order's reasoning, it granted the present petitioner the same relief from the same impugned paragraphs.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253, was extensively quoted in the companion order on CrPC Sections 195(1)(b), 340 and 341. A preliminary enquiry under Section 340 is discretionary. The central requirement is the court's opinion that an inquiry into an apparent offence affecting its proceedings is expedient in the interests of justice; even that opinion does not make a complaint automatic. The proposed accused need not be heard before the complaint is made, but has a right to be heard during the ensuing pre-trial procedure before the Magistrate under Sections 238 –240 and may appeal under Section 341. Pritish includes the Constitution Bench's caution in M.S. Sheriff against expressing an opinion on guilt at the stage of deciding whether to make a complaint. The High Court explained this procedure for offences involving false evidence in court and distinguished the actual direction concerning demolition, which neither made a Section 340 complaint nor found that false evidence had been given (incorporated paragraphs 9–12). Niranjan Patnaik v. Shashibhusan Kar, (1986) 2 SCC 569, reproduced the three questions in State of U.P. v. Mohammad Naim that govern disparaging judicial remarks: whether there was an opportunity to explain, whether the evidence supported the remarks and whether they were necessary for deciding the case. Fairness and restraint must accompany judicial independence. Manish Dixit v. State of Rajasthan, (2001) 1 SCC 596, required an opportunity to be heard before castigating remarks carrying serious consequences were made. Amar Pal Singh v. State of U.P., (2012) 6 SCC 491, concerned intemperate remarks against a judicial officer, institutional credibility and the superior court's measured corrective role. The Court drew on its principle of restraint. State of Gujarat v. Justice R.A. Mehta was also considered on judicial restraint. Om Prakash Chautala v. Kanwar Bhan, (2014) 5 SCC 417, addressed reputation under Article 21 and the requirement of audi alteram partem before damaging judicial comments. Its excerpts quote Teesta Setalvad on persons who were not made parties and the threefold test in Mohammad Naim. These authorities supported the conclusion that the trial judge's collateral strictures and directions for prosecution and departmental action were unwarranted and beyond jurisdiction. They did not displace the specific rule in Pritish that a hearing is not required before a Section 340 complaint is made.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the basis for invoking inherent jurisdiction in the present and companion cases to remove the unauthorised directions. Section 319 CrPC had been used to summon additional accused in the trial, but that order had already been reversed in revision; the test under that provision was not reconsidered. Sections 195(1)(b), 340 and 341 CrPC govern the limited procedure for a court complaint concerning offences affecting the administration of justice, the opinion on expediency, the optional preliminary enquiry and the appeal. The later procedure before the Magistrate was discussed through Sections 238–

243 and 343. The companion order discusses apparent false-evidence offences under IPC Sections 192–196 and then states that the trial order was not a complaint concerning Sections 193–196. Section 99 IPC was reproduced, including the restrictions on private defence against a public servant's act done in good faith under colour of office where no serious apprehension arises, the opportunity to seek protection from public authorities, the limit on harm inflicted and the explanations concerning knowledge and authority. IPC Sections 302, 307/34 and Arms Act Section 28 concerned the separate trial of the shooters and the pending appeal. The proposed registration under IPC Sections 452, 429, 325, 119, 120-B and 109 was the collateral direction set aside.

4. Issues : Whether, in its judgment acquitting the accused in the shooting case, the trial court could direct prosecution and departmental action against municipal officials and witnesses over the demolition when the Section 319 summoning order had already been quashed and the demolition issue was outside the charges tried; how the proper procedure under Section 340 for a complaint concerning an offence affecting court proceedings differed from the actual direction to register an offence with the police; whether the official demolition order and Section 99 supported the trial judge's collateral premise of private defence and conspiracy; and whether adverse findings against affected non-parties met the requirements of necessity, evidence and opportunity to explain. The merits of the State's appeal against acquittal were left open.

5. Ratio / Findings : Pritish establishes that a court may make a complaint under Section 340 without a mandatory preliminary enquiry or prior hearing of the proposed accused if it forms the statutory opinion on expediency, subject to safeguards in the proceedings before the Magistrate. The trial judge did not follow that procedure. Instead, he directed prosecution over demolition conduct outside the charges in the shooting case, after the order summoning the officials under Section 319 had already been quashed. The municipal team was carrying out an existing official order that had not been invalidated in the proper forum. The murder trial could not serve as a collateral review of that municipal decision. Referring to Section 99, the Court found no basis on the record for treating the officials as acting in bad faith or for treating the demolition as conferring a right of private defence so as to proceed against the witnesses. It refrained from deciding whether the shooters had been rightly acquitted because the State's appeal was pending. The Court also found untenable the supposed conspiracy between the deceased and the officials to create the circumstances of his own fatal shooting; other tenants had vacated without resistance. Independently of the defect in the direction for prosecution, harmful judicial comments require an opportunity to explain, evidentiary support, necessity and restrained expression. The unauthorised criminal and departmental directions disregarded the earlier revision order and exceeded the proper scope of the trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the present Section 482 application. Expressly incorporating the reasoning and relief in MCRC 9246/2018, it set aside the directions against Shailendra Shukla in paragraphs 77, 79 and 80 of the judgment dated 21 February 2018 in Sessions Trial 382/2014. The companion order set aside the directions for criminal prosecution and departmental action against Anand and others. The pending State appeal against the shooters' acquittal remained undetermined.

Shailendra Shukla v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 10066/2018, 28/06/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (865) Prev Next

Headnote :- Successive bail appeal — intervening evidence and provisional assessment - The Court allowed the fifth appeal for bail under Section 14-A(2) of the SC/ST Act after the prosecutrix had been examined and had not supported the prosecution, and a newly received DNA report had not detected the appellant's profile on the vaginal slide or other incriminating articles. The State fairly acknowledged both developments. Considering them, the allegations and the appellant's custody since 31 January 2021, the Court ordered his release without deciding the merits of the trial.

Pandemic decongestion — Article 21 and individual release - The Supreme Court's orders dated 23 March and 7 April 2020 in In Re: Contagion of COVID 19 Virus in Prisons, Suo Motu W.P.(C) 1/2020, were quoted and applied. The first addresses Article 21 and prison overcrowding by directing State and Union Territory High Powered Committees to determine appropriate categories for parole or interim bail, having regard to the offence, sentence and other relevant factors. Its reference to offences punishable with imprisonment up to seven years is illustrative and creates neither an automatic exclusion nor an entitlement. The second requires arrangements to ensure that released prisoners are not stranded, including transport or temporary shelter. The High Court directed a medical examination, a COVID test if advised by the doctor, appropriate treatment if the appellant tested positive, and arrangements by the local administration for his return home if cleared.

Victim intimation and release conditions - The complainant had been informed of the appeal under Section 15-A of the SC/ST Act but did not appear. In light of Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 329/2021, decided on 18 March 2021, the Court directed that she be informed of the grant of bail. Release required a personal bond of Rs 1,00,000 with a surety in the same amount, an undertaking to comply with COVID directions, compliance with the other conditions under Sections 437/439 CrPC and supply of a copy of the order to the police station having jurisdiction. The order provided that breach or bail jump would cause it to cease to have effect and expressly directed the police to take the appellant back into custody in the circumstances specified.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shakeel Khan was arrested on 31 January 2021 in Crime No. 18/2021 at Police Station Pohri, Shivpuri, for alleged offences under Sections 376 and 506 IPC and the SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act provisions listed in the order as Sections 3(1)(va), 3(2)(5), 3(1)(w)(2) and 3(5a). The Special Judge, Atrocities, Shivpuri, rejected bail on 5 February 2021. The fourth statutory appeal had been dismissed on 13 July 2021 in CRA 3842/2021; CRA 5115/2021 was the fifth appeal under Section 14-A(2). The complainant was informed of its pendency under Section 15-A but did not appear. State counsel appeared, and the case diary was available. The appellant relied on developments since the previous bail decision: the prosecutrix had been examined at trial and had turned hostile, and a DNA report showed no profile of the appellant on the vaginal slide or other incriminating articles. Counsel also urged that the trial was likely to be delayed, that there was no risk of absconding or tampering and that the appellant remained in custody. State counsel opposed bail but, after reading the testimony and DNA report, conceded those developments in the evidence. The High Court considered the second wave of COVID-19, cited two Supreme Court orders on contagion in prisons and granted conditional release on 9 September 2021.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Supreme Court's order dated 23 March 2020 in In Re: Contagion of COVID 19 Virus in Prisons, Suo Motu W.P.(C) No. 1/2020, was reproduced in material part. Having regard to Article 21 and the danger posed by prison overcrowding during COVID-19, the Supreme Court directed every State and Union Territory to constitute a High Powered Committee comprising the chair of the State Legal Services Committee, a senior Home/Prison official and the Director General of Prisons. The committee was to determine the categories of prisoners who might be released on parole or interim bail and the duration of release. The quoted order refers, by way of illustration, to prisoners convicted or under trial for offences punishable with imprisonment up to seven years. It then leaves the categories to the committee, having regard to the nature and severity of the offence, the sentence or charge and other relevant factors. The High Court considered decongestion during the second wave alongside the appellant's custody and the developments in the evidence.

The Supreme Court's further order dated 7 April 2020 in the same suo motu case was separately quoted. It required Union and State authorities to ensure that released prisoners were not stranded, provide transport home or the option of temporary shelter during lockdown, and arrange safe transit through the Directors General of Police. The Union could issue directions under the Disaster Management Act, 2005 or other law. The High Court gave effect to that order by requiring a medical examination before release, a test if advised by a doctor, hospital treatment if the appellant tested positive, and arrangements to take him home if no infection was suspected or his test was negative. Aparna Bhat and Others v. State of M.P., Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, decided on 18 March 2021, was invoked for intimation of the grant of bail to the complainant.

3. Statutes considered : Section 14-A(2) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act governed the appeal against the Special Judge's refusal of bail. Section 15-A concerned notification to the complainant. The State stated that she had been informed of the appeal, and a separate intimation after the bail order was directed. Sections 437 and 439 CrPC were referred to for the ordinary bail conditions. Article 21 of the Constitution underlies the Supreme Court's quoted direction on safety in prisons during COVID. The Disaster Management Act, 2005 was mentioned in the quoted safe-transit order as a possible basis for Union directions.

4. Issues : Whether the fifth appeal for bail warranted a different provisional outcome after the prosecutrix's trial testimony and the DNA report, despite dismissal of the fourth appeal and the serious offences registered; how custody and prison decongestion during the second wave should be considered in that individual assessment; and what steps for safe release, compliance and intimation to the complainant should accompany any grant.

5. Ratio / Findings : The developments identified by the Court went beyond a repetition of the earlier bail arguments. The prosecutrix had since been examined and had not supported the prosecution, and the DNA profile of the appellant was not found on the identified exhibits. The State conceded those facts after examining the material. The Court considered the allegations and detention since 31 January 2021 and expressly weighed the need to decongest prisons during the second wave of COVID, citing the Supreme Court's committee direction based on Article 21. Its pandemic-related assessment concerned the custodial risk at that time. The Supreme Court's further direction on transit formed the basis of the medical examination, testing, hospital and transport conditions. Section 15-A and Aparna Bhat accounted for intimation to the complainant. The provision that breach would cause the order to cease to have effect was an express condition imposed in this case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the fifth appeal for bail under Section 14-A(2) of the SC/ST Act.

Shakeel Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, Cr.A. no. 5115/2021, 09/09/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (866) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR registration — police duty and complainant's remedy - The Court held that the allegation that the police had not registered the petitioner's FIR did not warrant a direct mandamus under Article 226 when he could approach the Magistrate. Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence under Section 154 CrPC from the remedy following police default: a complaint under Sections 190 and 200. It explains that Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary concern the police duty to register an FIR, whereas AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari concern the procedure available to the complainant. The decisions address different questions and disclose no conflict requiring a direct writ.

Investigation grievance — statutory escalation and magistrate's role - Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, permits an informant to approach the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and then the Magistrate under Section 156(3) for registration of an FIR, proper investigation and judicial monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reiterates that remedy before the Magistrate, subject to prima facie satisfaction. It explains that the Magistrate may direct proper investigation and, if necessary, recommend a change of investigating officer, but cannot investigate personally.

Article 226 exception — clear investigative abuse and process rather than method - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, preserves rare intervention by the High Court at the instance of an aggrieved person on a clear showing of mala fide investigation, abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII CrPC. Intervention is limited to insisting on observance of the statutory process and cannot prescribe how the police must investigate. Its quotation from Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre describes the Magistrate's inquiry into a complaint, dismissal under Section 203 where warranted, and the issue of process or investigation under the Code. Shweta Bhadauria, the Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision in W.A. 247/2016, permits refusal of mandamus under Section 154 where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have been bypassed, subject to the recognised alternative-remedy exceptions in Whirlpool. It distinguishes the duty in Lalita Kumari to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from an entitlement to seek a writ directly.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shakti Singh Thakur filed Writ Petition No. 15955/2024 under Article 226, seeking directions to the official respondents to act against respondents 4–7 and register an offence. He alleged that he had approached the authorities for registration of an FIR but no action had been taken.

He also sought Rs 10 lakh as compensation from specified respondents for mental and physical suffering allegedly caused by false litigation, a declaration that the private respondents and their relatives had no right over the identified property, and a direction that they be imprisoned if they later filed a petition for possession. The State submitted that a complaint before the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, corresponding in its submission to Section 223 BNSS, was an efficacious remedy. The Court framed the question whether a writ direction to register an FIR was maintainable, quoted four Supreme Court authorities and a Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision, and dismissed the petition with liberty to file a complaint before the Magistrate.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee and Others v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted in substantial detail. It recognises the police duty to register an FIR when the information discloses a cognizable offence, while distinguishing that obligation from the procedure available to an aggrieved person after police inaction: a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The quotation also includes the sanction question and the three-month direction in Aleque's own litigation. This Court applied its distinction concerning the remedy for police inaction.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, paragraphs 41–42, was quoted on both the exceptional power and its limits. An aggrieved person may obtain directions under Article 226 in rare cases where investigation powers have clearly been exercised mala fide, abused and used contrary to Chapter XII CrPC. The High Court may insist on observance of the statutory process but cannot dictate investigative steps. For ordinary police inaction, the informant must use Sections 190/200. The quoted passage from Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre explains the Magistrate's inquiry into a complaint and recording of evidence under Chapter XV, dismissal under Section 203 when no offence is disclosed, the issue of process when a prima facie offence appears, or a direction for police investigation under Chapter XII. AIIMS Employees' Union is mentioned in support. The present Court applied the ordinary remedy before the Magistrate.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, paragraph 11, was quoted on a written complaint to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) following refusal to register an FIR, followed, if the result is unsatisfactory, by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). The Magistrate may order registration and proper investigation and monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, was separately quoted and follows Sakiri Vasu. It directs the complainant seeking registration of an FIR or proper investigation to the Magistrate under Section 156(3), rather than directly to the High Court. On prima facie satisfaction, the Magistrate may grant relief, including, where necessary, recommending a change of investigating officer to the superior police authority. The Magistrate may monitor the investigation but cannot personally conduct it. Both authorities support the statutory alternative on which the petition was dismissed.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., the Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision in Writ Appeal 247/2016, decided on 20 December 2016, was quoted as the controlling local authority. Mandamus compelling registration under Section 154 may be declined when the informant bypasses Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200, unless one of the four recognised alternative-remedy exceptions in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, applies. It distinguishes the police duty in Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from an entitlement to seek a writ directly without using the available remedies. Lalita Kumari was considered through the Division Bench quotation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked for writ relief, subject to the qualified principles concerning alternative remedies and rare cases of investigative abuse. Section 154 CrPC concerns the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence; Section 154(3) provides recourse to the superior police officer. Section 156(3) permits a Magistrate, on prima facie satisfaction, to direct or monitor investigation. Sections 190 and 200 provide the route of complaint and cognizance following police inaction. In the quotation from Divine Retreat, Chapter XV governs the Magistrate's inquiry, Section 203 provides for dismissal if the complaint discloses no offence, and Chapter XII governs investigation. These provisions explain the alternative remedies. State counsel expressly identified Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023 as the contemporary complaint provision corresponding to Section 200 CrPC, and the Court referred to it in granting liberty.

4. Issues : Whether a direct petition under Article 226 for mandamus compelling the police to register an FIR should be entertained merely on an allegation of inaction, despite the remedies of a complaint and a Magistrate's direction for investigation; whether the exceptional writ power concerning demonstrated mala fide abuse of Chapter XII powers had any stated basis in this record; and what liberty should accompany dismissal.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court accepted the State's objection based on an alternative remedy. It applied the distinction in Aleque Padamsee between the police duty under Section 154, which is not extinguished by a failure to act, and the informant's remedy under Sections 190/200. That Supreme Court decision expressly reconciles the apparently differing decisions on the duty to register an FIR and the remedy following a failure to do so. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe provide for further recourse under Sections 154(3) and 156(3) and the Magistrate's power, on prima facie satisfaction, to order or monitor an investigation without conducting it personally. Divine Retreat preserves a narrow exception under Article 226 for clear mala fide abuse and noncompliance with Chapter XII, while confining intervention by the High Court to observance of lawful process. Shweta Bhadauria makes restraint based on an alternative remedy subject to the Whirlpool exceptions and explains that Lalita Kumari does not itself determine entitlement to a writ. On this petition, the Court applied the ordinary remedy before the Magistrate.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the writ petition with express liberty to the petitioner, if he so desired, to approach the competent Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS for redress. It did not direct registration of an FIR or supervise an investigation. The claims for Rs 10 lakh compensation, a property declaration and a direction for prospective imprisonment were not granted.

Shakti Singh Thakur v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 15955/2024, 26/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (867) Prev Next

Headnote :- Death in judicial custody — inadequate inquiry and fresh fact-finding - The Court held that the JMFC's conclusion that death resulted from ordinary cardio-respiratory failure did not account for the ante-mortem injuries recorded in the postmortem of an undertrial lodged in Morena District Jail. The inquiry's concluding paragraph relied on the absence of a witness despite public notice, the improbability of an outsider entering the jail and the doctors' opinion of natural death. The District and Sessions Judge was directed to conduct a fresh inquiry, record witnesses' statements anew and make specific findings on the injuries and medical response. If suspicious circumstances were found, responsibility was to be fixed; the person prima facie responsible for the injuries was also to be identified.

Prisoner life and health — Article 21 protection - Re: Inhuman Conditions in 1382 Prisons, (2017) 10 SCC 658, quoting Kewal Pati, recognises that a prisoner retains constitutional rights and that the next of kin are entitled to compensation when an unlawful custodial death is established. Its directions require documentation of natural and unnatural deaths in prisons and review and correction of deficiencies in medical care. Paragraph 58.8 expressly recognises a prisoner's health as a human right. The High Court applied that framework to the unexplained ante-mortem injuries and the failure to provide first aid in jail despite the complaint of chest pain.

Public-law compensation — independent remedy with proof limits - Nilabati Behera v. State of Orissa, (1993) 2 SCC 746, recognises monetary amends under Articles 32/226 for an established violation of Article 21 as a public-law obligation of the State. The remedy is independent of a tort suit or penal proceedings and must be exercised with restraint. Sube Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2006 SC 1117, requires a patent, incontrovertible and gross constitutional wrong, with attention to death, medical evidence or visible corroboration, before compensation is awarded in writ proceedings. Civil and criminal remedies remain available even when that additional public-law threshold is not met. Referring to State of M.P. v. Shyamsunder Trivedi, (1995) 4 SCC 262, it explains the difficulty of obtaining evidence of custodial violence and the need for preventive safeguards, without treating every allegation as proved. On the basis of the custodial death, unexplained documented injuries and lack of first aid in jail, the Court directed the State to pay the widow Rs 3 lakh. It expressly left the merits of the fresh inquiry open and preserved her right to a separate civil suit. The State was given liberty to recover the amount from a defaulting officer in accordance with law. No officer's fault or precise mechanism of death was finally determined.

Judicial-inquiry accountability — conditional referral - Vishnu Prasad Sharma v. State of M.P., Madhya Pradesh High Court CRA 9761/2018, decided on 11 January 2019, described glaring irregularities in another custodial-death inquiry and directed vigilance scrutiny of the CJM. In the present case, the District and Sessions Judge's report must also be sent to the Principal Registrar. The Principal Registrar must forward it for vigilance inquiry into the former JMFC only if the District and Sessions Judge finds that the earlier inquiry was not conducted in accordance with law. The petitioner may approach the Human Rights Commission regarding the jail authorities and jail doctor. Neither disciplinary responsibility nor criminal liability for assault was determined.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shakuntala's husband, Ramesh Jatav, was arrested by Bhagchini Police Station, Morena, on 30 March 2015 in Crime No. 45/2015 for alleged offences under IPC Sections 392 and 120-B and Sections 11/13 of the MPDVPK Act. He was an undertrial in Morena District Jail and died on 25 July 2015. Shakuntala stated that their son had met him in jail that day and found him apparently well, with no complaint of chest pain. She suspected the circumstances of his death because the postmortem recorded ante-mortem injuries. She said that she had been denied access to the body before the postmortem and that her requests for an inquiry had gone unanswered. She also alleged that he had been falsely implicated in the underlying robbery case. In WP No. 20840/2017, she sought an inquiry, compensation and possible employment for her adult son. The State and Jail Superintendent submitted that Ramesh had complained of chest pain, had been taken by jail ambulance to the District Hospital and had died of cardio-respiratory failure, as stated in the medical-board opinion and the JMFC's judicial inquiry dated 24 August 2015. The State also referred to another criminal case registered against him in 2014. The return described Annexure R1 as a pre-MLC, but the Court clarified that it was the medical officer's intimation to the police of the death. Paragraph 17 of the JMFC's inquiry, reproduced in the judgment, rejected assault because no witness had come forward after public notice and entry by an outsider seemed impossible. It then relied on the doctors' conclusion of heart and respiratory failure. The High Court found that the unexplained injuries and the failure to provide medical attention in jail had not been sufficiently examined.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nilabati Behera v. State of Orissa, (1993) 2 SCC 746, paragraphs 32–35, was quoted at length on the distinct nature of constitutional compensation. An established infringement of Article 21 may warrant monetary amends under Article 32 or 226 on the basis of the State's strict public-law responsibility, without confining the victim to a private tort suit. The remedy vindicates the public duty to protect life and is independent of, and may coexist with, civil damages or prosecution of the offender. The State may seek indemnity or take lawful action against the wrongdoer. The quoted rule requires an established infringement, suitable redress and restraint to prevent writ proceedings from becoming a disguised civil action for damages. Rudul Sah is identified within Nilabati as a foundational example of monetary relief. Lord Denning's lecture is quoted on adapting public-law remedies. The High Court applied the principle that constitutional compensation was available for a custodial death accompanied by unexplained injuries and failure to provide first aid, while preserving a civil suit and granting the State liberty to recover the amount.

Re: Inhuman Conditions in 1382 Prisons, In Re, (2017) 10 SCC 658, was extensively quoted. Paragraph 45 draws on Kewal Pati v. State of Bihar for the principle that imprisonment does not extinguish constitutional rights and that unlawful loss of life in prison warrants relief to the next of kin. Paragraph 48 collects fifteen High Court examples of compensation: deficient medical care in custody (Nina Rajan Pillai; Santosh Kumari; State of J&K v. Sajad Ahmad Dar); ante-mortem injuries or torture (Bheduki Buragohain; Madhuben Adesara; Sabu; Ravindra Nath Awasthi; Mst. Madina); shootings or attacks in custody (Kewalbai; Tmt. Rohini Lingam; Amandeep; Mrs. Meena Singh; Lawyers for Justice); a prisoner found tied and hanging (Banalata Dash); and a dangerous compelled recovery (Dukhuram). These illustrations were recounted by the Supreme Court. Paragraph 58.1 requests High Courts to identify the heirs of inmates who died unnatural deaths and award suitable compensation unless adequate compensation has already been paid. Paragraph 58.2 requires dissemination of guidance on prisons and custodial deaths and documentation of every natural and unnatural death; paragraph 58.3

calls for clearer NCRB categories of death. Paragraphs 58.4–58.7 concern staff training, counsellors, contact with family and lawyers, and SLSA audits of prison conditions. Paragraph 58.8 recognises prisoner health as a human right and requires States to review and remedy deficiencies in medical facilities. Paragraphs 58.9–58.11 concern boards of visitors, study of open prisons and records of deaths of children in care institutions.

Sube Singh v. State of Haryana and Others, AIR 2006 SC 1117, paragraphs 21–22 and 24, sets out the caution governing public-law compensation and the complementary remedies. Before awarding compensation for custodial death, torture or another Article 21 violation, the court must examine whether the wrong is patent and incontrovertible, sufficiently gross to shock the conscience, and supported by death, a medical report, visible marks, scars or disability. Allegations that lack sufficient corroboration or are exaggerated may instead be addressed through civil or criminal proceedings. That limit does not excuse illegal detention or custodial violence, which remains actionable. Its quotation from State of M.P. v. Shyamsunder Trivedi, (1995) 4 SCC 262, reiterated in Abdul Gafar Khan and Munshi Singh Gautam, cautions against an unrealistic demand for direct eyewitness evidence of police custodial violence because of concealment. The passage concerns appreciation of evidence in such cases. Paragraph 24 of Sube Singh lists preventive measures, including training, supervision, compliance with the arrest safeguards in D.K. Basu, transparent records and independent inquiry. The High Court referred to it when considering the postmortem injuries and the failure to provide medical care, while expressly leaving definitive causation and individual responsibility to the fresh inquiry.

Vishnu Prasad Sharma v. State of M.P., a coordinate Bench decision of the Madhya Pradesh High Court in CRA 9761/2018, decided on 11 January 2019, 2019 MPLJ Online 1, was quoted concerning another custodial-death inquiry in which significant records were missing and findings appeared potentially coloured. That Bench directed the Principal Registrar (Vigilance) to inquire into the CJM's conduct and permitted an approach to the Human Rights Commission. In the present case, the Court directed that a finding in the fresh inquiry that the earlier JMFC inquiry had not been conducted lawfully would trigger forwarding of the report for vigilance scrutiny.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the public-law jurisdiction to direct a fresh inquiry and award compensation. Article 21 protected life and health in prison and formed the basis of Nilabati, Re: Inhuman Conditions and Sube Singh. Articles 32 and 226 appear in those Supreme Court passages as constitutional routes for distinct monetary redress; civil suits and criminal prosecutions remained available. The quoted passage from Sube Singh refers to the arrest safeguards in D.K. Basu. The Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015 is mentioned within the national direction in Re: Inhuman Conditions concerning records of deaths of children in care institutions.

4. Issues : Whether the JMFC's brief conclusion of natural death sufficiently addressed the documented ante-mortem injuries and the absence of first aid for chest pain when the availability of a jail doctor was uncertain; whether a fresh, independent judicial inquiry was required to determine causation, the medical response and prima facie responsibility; whether the custodial death, unexplained injuries and failure to provide care justified immediate public-law compensation under Article 226 despite the pending factual inquiry, while preserving civil remedies; and whether deficiencies in the original inquiry should lead to conditional judicial-vigilance oversight.

5. Ratio / Findings : The postmortem recorded ante-mortem injuries for which neither the State nor the JMFC provided an explanation based on conflict between inmates, assault by officials, medical treatment or another identified cause. The JMFC's conclusion that outsiders could not enter, no witness had alleged a beating and the doctors had found cardio-respiratory failure did not address injuries sustained in custody. The High Court drew a strong inference that Ramesh had been beaten inside the jail, but later expressly refrained from prejudging the fresh inquiry. It did not identify an assailant or finally attribute the physiological cause of death to the injuries. The evidence of Jiledar Singh and the hospital doctor, Dr Rakesh Sharma, described a complaint of chest pain, transfer to the jail gate and hospital, unrecordable pulse and blood pressure on arrival, first aid at the hospital, an ECG and the declaration of death. The inquiry did not answer why Ramesh had not first been taken to the jail dispensary or given first aid in jail, or whether a jail doctor was present. Even on the State's account of natural death, the Court regarded this as a deficiency in medical care in custody. It directed the District and Sessions Judge to conduct a fresh inquiry, record witnesses' statements afresh and make specific findings. Re: Inhuman Conditions supplied the constitutional principles concerning life, medical care in prison, documentation and relief to the next of kin. Nilabati established an independent public-law remedy, while Sube Singh required attention to the certainty, seriousness and corroboration of an Article 21 violation. The High Court considered the undisputed death in jail, medically recorded injuries and absence of treatment sufficient to direct immediate payment of Rs 3 lakh by the State, without determining all the facts to be examined in the fresh inquiry. The widow retained her right to claim civil damages. Under Vishnu Prasad Sharma, a further finding that the JMFC's inquiry was unlawful would lead to a vigilance referral, rather than an automatic disciplinary conclusion. The antecedent criminal cases did not relieve the prison authorities of their duty.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court found the JMFC's inquiry unsatisfactory and directed the District and Sessions Judge, Morena, to conduct a fresh inquiry, inspect the records and re-record witnesses' statements. The Judge was to make specific findings about the ante-mortem injuries and who was prima facie responsible for causing them, examine the jail dispensary, availability of a doctor and absence of first aid, and fix responsibility if the death was found suspicious. The report was to be sent to the High Court's Principal Registrar and the Principal Secretary, Home Department. The State was directed to pay Shakuntala Rs 3 lakh, without prejudice to her right to a civil suit and with liberty to recover the amount from defaulting officer(s) in accordance with law. If the fresh inquiry found that the earlier JMFC proceedings were contrary to law, the Principal Registrar was to forward the report to the Principal Registrar (Vigilance) for inquiry against the former JMFC, Rajesh Jain. Shakuntala was free to approach the Human Rights Commission regarding the jail officials and the doctor in the jail hospital.

Shakuntala v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 20840/2017, 06/02/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (868) Prev Next

Headnote :- Trial court's witness-management power — prosecution sequence subject to just decision - The Court held that Sections 225, 226 and 301 CrPC, under which the Public Prosecutor conducts a Sessions prosecution, do not displace the court's power under Section 311 or its responsibility to secure material evidence. Mina Lalita Baruwa v. State of Orissa, (2013) 16 SCC 173, reconciles the limits on a private person's participation in the prosecution under Section 301(2) with the trial court's independent power under Section 311. In that case, a material discrepancy between a statutory witness's testimony and a document he had prepared required action by the prosecutor, recall of the witness or questions by the court, without unfair prejudice. Here, in his second application for bail in a murder case, the applicant complained that the cited eyewitnesses had not been examined. The prosecutor wished to examine other witnesses first, but then stated that Shivendra and Rakesh Kevat would be included on the next date. The High Court directed the trial court to call eyewitnesses at the beginning of the trial and issue summons itself if the prosecutor failed to request them. Their examination-in-chief was to be recorded when they were present, even if defence counsel was then unready to cross-examine.

Witness protection and timely evidence — pressure risk without presumed hostility - Mahendra Chawla v. Union of India, Supreme Court, formulated the Witness Protection Scheme, which the High Court invoked to emphasise the need for vigilance. Ramesh v. State of Haryana, (2017) 1 SCC 529, explains that witnesses may turn hostile because of intimidation, inducement, political, family or monetary pressure, delays, or even inaccurate recording by the police under Section 161. Its discussions of Krishna Mochi, Zahira Habibullah Sheikh, Sakshi and Sanjeev Nanda reinforce the need for protection, fair testimony and careful use of credible portions of hostile testimony. The High Court reasoned that unjustified delay in examining known eyewitnesses could expose them to the culture of compromise. The trial judge should therefore not remain a mute spectator to the prosecutor's choice of sequence. The bail application was dismissed as withdrawn, with directions concerning the conduct of the trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shambhu was arrested on 16 November 2021 in Crime No. 204/2021 at Indar

Police Station, Shivpuri, for alleged offences under Sections 302, 201, 147, 148 and 149 IPC. His first application for bail under Section 439 CrPC, MCRC 22080/2022, was dismissed on 5 May 2022. In this second application, he chiefly complained that the prosecution was not examining the witnesses cited as eyewitnesses. On 26 September 2022, the High Court asked State counsel why Rakesh Kevat was not being summoned. At the hearing, State counsel reported that the Public Prosecutor preferred to examine other witnesses first and had not included Shivendra and Rakesh Kevat in the current list, but intended to include them for the trial date of 13 October 2022. The applicant's counsel then sought leave to withdraw the bail application. Before permitting withdrawal, the judge addressed the danger of delaying eyewitness evidence, quoted Mina Lalita Baruwa and a long passage from Ramesh on witnesses turning hostile, cited Mahendra Chawla, and issued directions to the trial court.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mina Lalita Baruwa v. State of Orissa and Others, (2013) 16 SCC 173, paragraphs 18–21, was quoted in material part. That case concerned a victim's grievance that the oral testimony of statutory witness PW18 conflicted with an exhibit he had prepared, and that the courts had mechanically rejected the grievance by reference to Section 301 CrPC. The Supreme Court distinguished the restricted participation of private counsel under Section 301(2) from the court's wide power under Section 311. That power includes recall, examination and necessary questions by the court to clarify vital evidence essential to a just decision. The trial judge and prosecutor should act to keep the record accurate without causing prejudice, as a crime affects both society and the victim.

Mahendra Chawla and Others v. Union of India, described in this order as the Supreme Court's decision formulating the Witness Protection Scheme, was cited on the importance of witness protection. Ramesh and Others v. State of Haryana, (2017) 1 SCC 529, paragraphs 39–49, was extensively reproduced. It recognises several reasons for retraction. A witness may justifiably disown a statement inaccurately or forcibly recorded by the police under Section 161; fear, family or political pressure, inducement, money and social dynamics can also subvert later testimony. Its passage from Krishna Mochi v. State of Bihar stresses fear of powerful offenders. Zahira Habibullah Sheikh (5) v. State of Gujarat describes witnesses as vital to a fair trial and explains the State's duty to enable safe, truthful testimony, particularly against political, muscle or money power. Sakshi v. Union of India discusses screens, sensitive questioning through the presiding officer during cross-examination, and breaks for vulnerable rape or child witnesses. Those safeguards formed part of the Supreme Court quotation; they were not ordered for Shivendra or Rakesh in this murder trial. State v. Sanjeev Nanda explains that hostile testimony may be scrutinised and its credible portion used, citing State of U.P. v. Ramesh Prasad Misra and K. Anbazhagan. With Manu Sharma and Zahira, it cautions courts against remaining mute spectators when intimidation or manipulation affects the truth. Ramesh also lists threats, inducement, stock witnesses, protracted trials, procedural hassles and gaps in protection, and reproduces observations of the Malimath Committee, the Law Commission and sociologists about pressure and a culture of compromise. The High Court applied this general risk to the unexplained scheduling delay; it did not find that the two witnesses were hostile or compromised.

3. Statutes considered : The second application for regular bail was made under Section 439 CrPC. Sections 225 and 226 CrPC describe the conduct of a Sessions prosecution, while Section 301 defines the Public Prosecutor's role and the limited participation of a privately instructed pleader. Section 311 empowers a court at any stage to summon, examine or recall a person, and requires it to do so when that person's evidence appears essential to a just decision. The High Court relied on this power to direct the summoning and sequence of the cited eyewitnesses despite the prosecutor's preferred order.

4. Issues : In a second bail application based on delay in examining cited eyewitnesses, whether the Public Prosecutor alone could postpone their examination in favour of corroborative witnesses, or whether the trial court should itself summon material witnesses and regulate the sequence of their examination; how delayed examination and the risk of pressure on witnesses affect a fair trial and witness protection; and what directions could be issued when the applicant sought withdrawal rather than pressed the bail prayer.

5. Ratio / Findings : State counsel acknowledged that the prosecutor had chosen to examine other witnesses first and omitted Shivendra and Rakesh

Kevat from the current list, although they were cited as eyewitnesses. He stated that they would be included on 13 October. The judge found no satisfactory reason for giving preference to potentially corroborative testimony over eyewitness evidence. Mina Lalita Baruwa explains that the prosecutor's conduct of the prosecution under Section 301 does not make the trial court passive: under Section 311, the court can address vital omissions and exercise its own powers concerning witnesses to secure a just decision without undue prejudice. Sections 225 and 226 likewise do not prevent judicial control of the sequence in which witnesses are examined. Mahendra Chawla and Ramesh explain the importance of timely testimony: delay can increase exposure to pressure and compromise. Ramesh also recognises that changed testimony may reflect an inaccurate earlier police record rather than improper influence. The Court therefore expressed concern; it did not find that these witnesses had already been compromised. It directed the trial judge to call them early, reject requests from the prosecution or defence inconsistent with that direction, and record their examination-in-chief when they attended even if defence counsel was then unready to cross-examine. The bail application was disposed of on withdrawal, with the directions concerning the trial and the conditional obligation to issue summons forming part of that disposal.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the second application for regular bail as withdrawn. The trial court was directed to examine eyewitnesses at the outset, disregard contrary requests from the prosecutor or defence, call the eyewitnesses itself if the prosecutor failed to request their examination, and record the examination-in-chief of witnesses present even if defence counsel was unready to cross-examine. The Public Prosecutor was expected to request summons, bailable warrants or warrants. If no such request was made, the trial court was to summon Shivendra and Rakesh Kevat.

Shambhu v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 45036/2022, 28/09/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (869) Prev Next

Headnote :- Special leave refusal — non-merger does not create recall jurisdiction - The Court applied Kunhayammed v. State of Kerala, (2000) 6 SCC 359, as affirmed in Khoday Distilleries Ltd. v. Sri Mahadeshwara Sahakara Sakkare Karkhane Ltd., (2019) 4 SCC 376: refusal of leave does not cause the High Court judgment to merge in a Supreme Court appellate judgment, whether the refusal is speaking or non-speaking. A speaking refusal's declaration of law can bind under Article 141 and its other findings bind the parties and lower forum by judicial discipline; appellate merger arises after leave is granted. Although SLPs by the State and several affected witnesses and the State's review petition were dismissed, the applicant concerned said he had not filed an SLP and was heard on his own contention. The absence of merger did not remove Section 362 CrPC's independent bar on altering the final appellate judgment.

Signed criminal judgment — substantive recall versus genuine denial-of-hearing recall - Section 362 CrPC bars review or alteration of a signed final judgment except to correct a clerical or arithmetical error or as expressly authorised by law. Mohd. Zakir v. Shabana, (2018) 15 SCC 316, prohibits correction on merits even where the error is patent; Sooraj Devi v. Pyare Lal, (1981) 1 SCC 500, citing Sankatha Singh, rejects use of Section 482 inherent power to override that prohibition. Vishnu Agarwal v. State of U.P., AIR 2011 SC 1232, relying on Asit Kumar v. State of W.B., distinguishes recall of an order passed without an affected party's required hearing from merits review. The applicants sought to delete paragraphs 22–23 of the final 2017 acquittal judgment ordering proceedings for allegedly false evidence. The Court held that an advance hearing was not required before initiating proceedings under Section 340. The application therefore sought reconsideration on merits rather than a permissible procedural recall. It was also filed nearly two years after judgment.

Perjury complaint — two conditions and deliberate material falsehood - Section 340 read with Section 195(1)(b)(i) requires a prima facie offence connected with the court proceedings and a finding that an inquiry is expedient in the interests of the administration of justice. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, (1992) 3 SCC 178, with K. Karunakaran, urges care and a prima facie case reasonably supported by the material. State Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Pankaj Chaudhary, (2019) 11 SCC 575, discusses Amarsang Nathaji, (2017) 1 SCC 113, Iqbal Singh Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, and Chajoo Ram to require deliberate, conscious, material falsity rather than every inconsistency; expediency looks chiefly to impact on the administration of justice, not only injury to a litigant. The Court said its 2017 appellate judgment had applied both conditions to the particular witness and investigation record and could not be reopened under Section 362. Its reproduced earlier finding of tainted investigation included Dayal Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2012 SC 3046, on investigators' diligence, honesty and accountability.

Preliminary inquiry and notice — optional stage before complaint - Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253, states the participation of a would-be accused is not required when a court decides whether an inquiry is expedient under Section 340. Amarsang Nathaji and State of Goa v. Jose Maria Albert Vales, (2018) 11 SCC 659, confirm that a preliminary inquiry is optional if the court can form a prima facie opinion on existing material; a complaint is not automatic even then. Sections 341 and 343 provide later appellate and Magistrate processes. The 2017 direction initiated the court-complaint process on a prima facie view, and the lack of an earlier hearing or preliminary inquiry did not vitiate it in this case; both connected Section 482 petitions were dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The Fifth Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior convicted Kallu, Naval Singh alias Navla, Ballu alias Balram, Ramratan, Jaswant and Ramras in Sessions Trial 30/2004 on 8 November 2004 of kidnapping/conspiracy provisions including IPC Sections 364-A, 363 and 365 read with Section 120-B and MPDVPK Act Section 13. Dayaram was convicted by the Special Judge in Sessions Trial 15/2010 on 18 July 2012 under IPC Sections 363 and 364-A and MPDVPK Act Sections 11/13. Five criminal appeals ended in a common High Court judgment on 25 September 2017 acquitting all seven. That judgment nevertheless found named prosecution witnesses and investigating officers had deliberately given false evidence, criticised a purportedly fabricated kidnapping case and directed the trial court to initiate proceedings against eleven named persons, including Shanti Swaroop Sharma, Vijay and Ajay Choudhary, Jaishankar/Vicky, Atal Bihari, Purshottam Bajpai, Vikas/Vijay, S.S. Sikarwar, S.S. Chouhan, Manoj Sharma and Ramesh Dande. On 26 July 2019, the Supreme Court dismissed the State's SLP and the SLPs of several persons whose prosecution had been directed. The State's Review Petition (Criminal) Nos. 45–49 of 2010 was dismissed on 21 January 2020. The first applicant said he personally had not filed an SLP. MCRC 35271/2019 and the connected MCRC 42189/2019 of S.S. Sikarwar invoked Section 482 to recall paragraphs 22–23 of the 2017 judgment, especially the perjury directions. Counsel argued that dismissal of the SLPs in limine did not cause merger of the judgment, and that the lack of a hearing before the adverse observations warranted recall. The first petition was filed on 20 August 2019, nearly two years after the appellate judgment.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kunhayammed v. State of Kerala, (2000) 6 SCC 359, was relied upon by the applicant. Khoday Distilleries Ltd. v. Sri Mahadeshwara Sahakara Sakkare Karkhane Ltd., (2019) 4 SCC 376, was quoted by the Court as reaffirming Kunhayammed: refusal of special leave, speaking or otherwise, does not merge or replace the lower decision; the declaration of law in a reasoned refusal binds under Article 141 and findings other than declarations of law bind the parties and the lower court in later proceedings by judicial discipline. Once leave is granted and an appellate order made, merger follows; the quoted principle also distinguishes when High Court review jurisdiction is lost after appellate invocation and addresses the timing of review in relation to refusal of special leave. The judge accepted this legal distinction and heard on merits the applicant who had not filed an SLP, but held that it did not confer power under Section 482 to recall the judgment on merits.

Mohd. Zakir v. Shabana, (2018) 15 SCC 316, was quoted for Section 362's strict bar: even a patently erroneous final order cannot be reheard or corrected on merits under the guise of clerical correction. Correction must follow a lawful appellate or other procedure. Vishnu Agarwal v. State of U.P., AIR 2011 SC 1232, quotes Asit Kumar v. State of W.B., to distinguish a procedural recall where an affected person lacked an opportunity of hearing from review, which reconsiders a merits error. The Court considered that genuine exception but found the applicants had no right to a hearing before initiation under Section 340. Sooraj Devi v. Pyare Lal, (1981) 1 SCC 500, quoted near the conclusion, holds that Section 482 inherent power does not fall within Section 362's exception for express statutory authority and cannot circumvent what the Code prohibits, referring to Sankatha Singh. Those authorities led to refusal to reopen the earlier paragraphs, with delay also noted.

K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, (1992) 3 SCC 178, quoted Section 340's requirements of an offence connected with the court proceedings and expediency in the interests of justice and, through K. Karunakaran v. T.V. Eachara Warrier, the two requirements of a prima facie case which, if unrebutted, has a reasonable likelihood of establishing the specified offence and an independent need for prosecution in the interests of justice. State Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Pankaj Chaudhary, (2019) 11 SCC 575, was then quoted extensively. It recites Amarsang Nathaji v. Hardik Harshadbhai Patel, (2017) 1 SCC 113, that contradiction alone is insufficient without deliberate false statement or fabrication, and that a preliminary inquiry may be held but is optional where the court can form the necessary opinion. It discusses the Constitution Bench Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370: expediency turns on the effect on administration of justice rather than merely the extent of private injury; even an injurious forged document may have slight effect in a case supported by voluminous other evidence. Chintamani Malviya is mentioned as reiteration. Its Chajoo Ram v. Radhey Shyam passage demands deliberate, conscious, material falsehood, a reasonably probable conviction and care against mechanical action on inconclusive or innocent inaccuracies. These were used to identify the two conditions the earlier appellate court said it had considered, not to decide the proposed accused person's criminal guilt now. S.K. Viwambaran, Mohd. Naim and Manish Dixit were counsel-cited on adverse strictures without developed quotations or separate analysis here. Dayal Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, AIR 2012 SC 3046, appears within the earlier acquittal judgment reproduced in paragraph 31, stressing investigators' and doctors' diligent, truthful and fair duties and the seriousness of flagrant omissions. The present Court used the reproduced account to show that the original direction followed consideration of the relevant material. It did not retry the kidnapping case or determine any new liability of the police.

British v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253, rejects an automatic right of a would-be accused to participate before the court decides whether an inquiry is expedient under Section 340, because that step does not approach a determination of guilt. Amarsang Nathaji, quoted again directly, explains that a preliminary inquiry is optional and a complaint does not follow automatically even if a prima facie offence appears. State of Goa v. Jose Maria Albert Vales, (2018) 11 SCC 659, confirms that clauses (a)–(e) of Section 340(1) may be taken without a mandatory preliminary inquiry; it highlights Section 341 appeal against making or refusing a complaint and Section 343 procedure before the receiving Magistrate, including possible adjournment while the underlying appeal is pending. These authorities answered the applicant's no-hearing and no-inquiry objection.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked as the source of inherent jurisdiction, but it cannot override Section 362's prohibition once the appellate criminal judgment was signed; Section 362 saves express statutory exceptions and clerical/arithmetical correction, neither of which permitted deletion of reasoned paragraphs. Sections 195(1)(b)(i) and 340 govern a court complaint for specified offences affecting justice committed in or in relation to its proceedings: the court determines whether there is a prima facie offence and whether an inquiry is expedient in the interests of justice, may hold a preliminary inquiry if needed, records its opinion, and can complain to a competent Magistrate. Section 341 provides appeal against making/refusing the complaint; Section 343 governs the Magistrate's procedure, including the power under subsection (2) to adjourn the case while an appeal concerning the underlying judicial proceeding is pending. IPC Section 193 perjury is discussed in the K. Karunakaran extract; Sections 199/200 IPC appear in the Amarsang quotation as false-statement context and were not newly adjudicated charges in these MCRCs. Article 141 of the Constitution appears in Khoday's rule concerning a declaration of law in a speaking order refusing special leave. The IPC kidnapping/conspiracy and MPDVPK charges describe the acquitted appeals, not issues reconsidered in this proceeding.

4. Issues : Whether refusal of SLPs by other participants and the State merged the 2017 criminal judgment in a Supreme Court judgment or otherwise affected a non-SLP applicant's ability to seek relief; whether asking to erase its adverse factual observations and prosecution directions was a genuine procedural recall based on denial of a required hearing or a prohibited merits review under Section 362 despite Section 482; whether Section 340 required a separate preliminary inquiry and advance hearing for these prospective accused, and whether the earlier decision had at least addressed prima facie offence and expediency; and whether nearly two years' delay independently weakened the petitions. The correctness of acquittals, ultimate guilt for perjury and the underlying land or kidnapping claims were not being tried anew.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the distinction concerning non-merger in Kunhayammed and Khoday. It heard the applicant who said he had not filed an SLP. It nevertheless treated Section 362 as an independent statutory bar to changing paragraphs 22–23 of the signed 2017 judgment. Mohd. Zakir and Sooraj Devi foreclosed merits correction under either Section 362 or inherent Section 482 power. Vishnu Agarwal and Asit Kumar allow a genuine procedural recall where an affected party was denied a required hearing. That ground was unavailable here because the court-complaint stage under Section 340 involves only a prima facie inquiry in the interests of justice, not a determination of guilt. Pritish, Amarsang and State of Goa permit decision on existing material without a mandatory preliminary inquiry or participation by the would-be accused; later Section 341/343 procedures remain available. On the separate Section 340 thresholds, K.T.M.S. Mohd. and Pankaj Chaudhary, with Iqbal Singh Marwah and Chajoo Ram, require a prima facie case of deliberate material falsehood and expediency assessed by reference to the administration of justice. The judge said those matters had been assessed in 2017, quoting paragraph 22's detailed criticisms: a proposed eyewitness Girraj Chourasia was neither traced nor examined; the spot map of a populated place was prepared on the instructions of a person who was not an eyewitness and bore no independent signatures; police did not trace the ransom letter source or arrange a trap; forest-hideout and recoveries were inadequately explained; a money-ownership affidavit and change of investigating officer raised further doubts; independent witnesses were not examined. The earlier judgment inferred a motive to grab land, a false allegation of kidnapping, a deliberately tainted investigation and false witness testimony, citing Dayal Singh for investigative honesty. This 2020 Court used the quoted reasoning only to reject the claim that the two Section 340 conditions or evidentiary basis had simply been ignored, while refusing to reopen whether those factual conclusions were right.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application. The connected application filed by S.S. Sikarwar was also dismissed.

Shambhu Singh Chauhan and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; S.S. Sikarwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 35271/2019 & 42189/2019, 06/03/2020, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Sheel Nagu & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (870) Prev Next

Headnote :- Successive anticipatory bail — withdrawal order and change in circumstances - The Court held that the applicant's first application under Section 438 CrPC had been dismissed as withdrawn and not pressed on 26 November 2015, without further liberty to revive the prayer. The later Bench declined to reinterpret or review that coordinate Bench order, counsel having raised no objection when withdrawing the application. On the same day, the Bench hearing the first application had just refused anticipatory bail to the similarly placed Panchayat Secretary by a detailed order on merits. Both the Sarpanch and the Secretary attended the Gram Sabha that approved the disputed mutation resolution, and the applicant showed no distinguishing feature. The subsequent setting aside of the Gram Sabha proceeding under Section 44 of the M.P. Land Revenue Code, the claimed noncompletion of mutation, the delay in filing the charge-sheet, the co-accused's eventual regular bail and the assertion that custody was unnecessary did not persuade the Court that the circumstances had materially changed. The State relied on the case diary to allege prima facie concerted action and a need for custodial interrogation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shanti Devi, the Sarpanch of the concerned Gram Panchayat, apprehended arrest in Crime No. 67/2015 at Alampur Police Station, Bhind, for alleged offences under Sections 420, 467 and 468 IPC concerning a Gram Sabha mutation resolution. Her first application for anticipatory bail, MCRC 10886/2015, was dismissed by a coordinate Bench on 26 November 2015 as withdrawn and not pressed, without liberty to revive the prayer. The present judge recorded that, on the same day, that Bench had rejected the application for anticipatory bail of co-accused Panchayat Secretary Anand Dubey by a detailed order on merits, after which Shanti Devi's counsel chose not to press her application. In MCRC 27606/2017, her second application under Section 438, counsel submitted that the earlier order could not extinguish her right to apply on the basis of subsequent events. Counsel described a paper prepared by the Patwari and placed before the Gram Sabha by the Secretary, and contended that she had no role involving dishonesty or forgery. According to her, the proposed mutation had not been effected and a competent revenue authority under Section 44 of the M.P. Land Revenue Code had set aside the Gram Sabha order. Counsel also relied on the asserted duration of the investigation without a charge-sheet, the Secretary's later regular bail and the absence of any need for custodial interrogation. The State opposed the application, submitting that the case diary prima facie showed that the Sarpanch, Secretary and Patwari had acted together dishonestly on the basis of inadequate old revenue records, and that custody was required for interrogation. These were competing submissions, not final findings of guilt or title.

2. Statutes considered : Both applications sought pre-arrest bail under Section 438 CrPC. In the repeat application, following the earlier withdrawal without liberty, the Court required a material change in circumstances and refused to review the coordinate Bench's order.

3. Issues : Whether the later application under Section 438 could secure pre-arrest bail after the first had been voluntarily withdrawn without liberty to renew the prayer; whether the asserted revenue outcome, the claim that mutation had not been effected, the applicant's separate role, the co-accused's regular bail and the time spent in investigation amounted to a material subsequent change; and whether the prima facie case alleged by the State and its claimed need for custodial interrogation justified refusal.

4. Ratio / Findings : The judge declined to use a fresh bail proceeding to revise the coordinate Bench's 2015 order permitting withdrawal without liberty to renew the prayer; counsel had not objected at that time. The sequence of the earlier proceedings was material. Anand Dubey, the similarly placed Secretary, had been refused anticipatory bail on merits on the same day. No materially distinct role was shown for the Sarpanch, as both had been present when the disputed resolution was passed. The Court also considered the present application on merits. Counsel's reliance on the reversal of the revenue order, the claim that mutation had not been completed and the later grant of regular bail did not persuade it that the circumstances governing pre-arrest relief had materially changed. The State relied on case-diary material alleging that the officials had acted together dishonestly and that custodial interrogation was required; the order recorded that opposition. The Court found that no change in circumstances had been made out and dismissed the application on merits as well as in light of the earlier order granting no liberty to renew.

5. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the second application for anticipatory bail.

Shanti Devi v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 27606/2017, 25/01/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (871) Prev Next

Headnote :- Personal bias / Section 482 — personal impleadment prerequisite - The Court applied State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222; Federation of Railway Officers Association v. Union of India, AIR 2003 SC 1344; J.N. Banavalikar v. Municipal Corporation of Delhi, AIR 1996 SC 326; A.I.S.B. Officers Federation v. Union of India, JT 1996 (8) SC 550; and Om Prakash Chautala v. Kanwar Bhan, (2014) 5 SCC 417: clear allegations of personal mala fides against an officer cannot be adjudicated without joining that officer personally and giving him an opportunity to answer. The latter authority discussed Teesta Setalvad, Babu Chakraborthy and Dilip Kumar Deka on avoiding adverse judicial remarks against unheard persons. The SDM had not been joined in his personal capacity. The allegations of his property interest and a staged attack were therefore not considered; their truth or falsity was not adjudicated.

Temporary patta / mutation / derivative title - The 1972 five-year patta over recorded forest land expired in 1977. Applying Krishna Bahadur Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, WP 17922/2015, decided 16 April 2024, the Court held that the 26 June 1984 circular did not revive an expired patta or confer bhumiswami rights automatically without an order by the competent authority. The three persons originally entered in the revenue records were neither heirs nor transferees of Bilson Tirkey. Their 1983–84 entries purportedly rested on a non-existent order. State of A.P. v. Star Bone Mill and Fertiliser Company, (2013) 9 SCC 319, including its treatment of Gurunath Manohar Pavaskar, Nair Service Society and Chief Conservator of Forests, supplied the rule that a revenue entry is not title and a transferor cannot convey a better title. The Additional Collector's contrary decision upholding the deeds could not establish title.

Prior revenue adjudication / criminal proceeding - The Additional Collector's order of 14 October 2019 was incorrect in its treatment of the patta and circular and did not bind the criminal case. Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2009) 5 SCC 528, and Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon, SLP (Cr.) 9778/2018, decided 2 April 2024, were applied: civil and criminal proceedings have different proof standards; earlier judgments may be relevant under Evidence Act Sections 40–43 and exceptional statutory rules, but findings of fact in one proceeding do not automatically bind the other. Their discussion of Iqbal Singh Marwah, K.G. Premshanker, M.S. Sheriff, Vishnu Dutt Sharma and the rejected broad Karam Chand proposition explains that distinction. Proceedings may continue concurrently; priority or a stay depends on the circumstances.

FIR / suspect's pre-audience - Anju Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2013) 6 SCC 384, discussing W.N. Chadha and Samaj Parivartan Samudaya, was applied: Sections 154 and 156(3) CrPC do not ordinarily contemplate a hearing for a suspect before registration of an FIR or investigation; requiring it would compromise prompt fair investigation. The quoted precedent recognises that a higher court reversing dismissal of an application may need to hear the suspect, depending on the facts. It creates no general entitlement to a hearing before registration. None of the applicants was entitled to a hearing at the FIR stage. They had not challenged the SDM's 25 January 2020 revenue order, so any pre-order hearing question was immaterial here.

False document / ownership declaration - Mohd. Ibrahim v. State of Bihar, (2009) 8 SCC 751, quoted by the Court, distinguishes a dishonest seller conveying in his own name from impersonation or purported authority of another: the former conduct alone does not amount to making a false document under Section 464 IPC or forgery under Sections 467 and 471. Ram Narayan Popli v. CBI, (2003) 3 SCC 641, was then used for Section 420 deception and inducement, Sections 463–468 forgery, and Section 471 knowing use. The High Court nonetheless inferred a prima facie false document and forgery from statements in these deeds denying government lease status and asserting exclusive ownership, in the setting of an allegedly forged earlier mutation entry and absence of title.

Civil claim / quashing standard / good faith - Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, was applied for cautious Section 482 scrutiny of uncontroverted allegations and offence ingredients, without a mini-trial, while permitting prosecution where civil and criminal elements coexist. The alleged chain of transfers of government land and the declarations disclosed a prima facie criminal element. Section 52 IPC requires due care and attention for good faith; the subsequent purchasers' bare assertion of bona fide belief did not overcome their failure to verify title from the records. Four Section 482 petitions were dismissed and interim orders vacated; guilt, each purchaser's knowledge and the reliability of the evidence were not finally determined.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Four connected Section 482 CrPC applications, M.Cr.C. Nos. 7431, 9859, 12289 and 17457 of 2020, arose from FIR No. 45 of 30 January 2020 at Civil Lines Police Station, Chhatarpur, invoking IPC Sections 420, 467, 468, 469 and 471. The applicants in the common order were Sharad Agarwal, Alpana Awasthi with others, Manisha Mishra with others, and Ramswaroop Choubey. The Court used the first application as the factual lead while dismissing all four. Khasra No. 336, 5.261 hectares, had appeared as forest land in 1943–44 through 1952–53. A five-year temporary patta was granted to Bilson Tirkey on 7 January 1972 and was not extended after 1977. The complaint attributed to the Tehsildar, following the SDM's communication, alleged that in 1983–84 Ramsewak, Sarman Devi and Ramswaroop had their names entered as bhumiswamis on the strength of a non-existent revenue order, whereas the State's name should have been restored. They were shown neither as Bilson's heirs nor as persons who had received title under a deed from him. The table in the judgment traced successive transfers: Sarman Devi to Sheikh Jahoor Mansoor, Ramswaroop to Santosh Kumar, Sheikh Jahoor to Premchand Gupta, Santosh Kumar to Prem Kumari and Alpana Awasthi, Ramsewak to Laxmi Prasad Awasthy, Prem Kumari and Premchand Gupta to Richa Barsaiyan, Richa to Manisha Mishra, Laxmi Prasad Awasthy and Manisha to Sharad Agarwal, Sharad to Prakhar Samajothan Pragati Samiti through Ajay Singh Bhadoriya, and that society to Ajay Kumar Tiwari. Applicants relied on the Additional Collector's 14 October 2019 order in Revenue Case 29/A-21/2019 –20 accepting the deeds, asserted no hearing before the SDM's 25 January 2020 order, and alleged the SDM's personal interest and a separate attack staged by the SDM himself. Those claims were submissions, not findings accepted in this order. The respondent and State stressed the absence of title in the first three persons entered in the revenue records and alleged false statements in the sale deeds that the land was not government lease land. The applicants sought quashing or deletion of their names and consequent proceedings, arguing that the dispute concerned civil title and relying on Mohd. Ibrahim's distinction concerning a false document. The SDM's revenue order itself was not challenged in these petitions.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 222, required personal impleadment and an opportunity to answer allegations of mala fides; Federation of Railway Officers Association v. Union of India, AIR 2003 SC 1344, required clear rather than vague bias allegations and joinder of the person concerned; J.N. Banavalikar v. Municipal Corporation of Delhi, AIR 1996 SC 326, and A.I.S.B. Officers Federation v. Union of India, JT 1996 (8) SC 550, similarly excluded findings of personal malice without joining the person accused. Om Prakash Chautala v. Kanwar Bhan, (2014) 5 SCC 417, supplied the related restraint against adverse judicial observations about an unheard non-party, citing Teesta Setalvad v. State of Gujarat, State of W.B. v. Babu Chakraborthy and Dilip Kumar Deka v. State of Assam. The latter in turn mentioned State of U.P. v. Mohd. Naim, Jage Ram and R.K. Lakshmanan v. A.K. Srinivasan. On these authorities, the Court rejected the submission alleging personal bias without deciding its merits. Krishna Bahadur Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, WP 17922/2015 and connected cases, decided 16 April 2024, a High Court precedent, construed the 26 June 1984 circular: the temporary patta had to subsist on that date and conferral of bhumiswami rights required an order by the competent authority. The principle precluded reliance on Bilson's expired patta. State of A.P. v. Star Bone Mill and Fertiliser Company, (2013) 9 SCC 319, stated the principle that a transferor cannot convey a better title than he possesses and distinguished fiscal revenue records from title. Its reproduced discussion of Gurunath Manohar Pavaskar v. Nagesh Siddappa Navalgund treated revenue entries as raising a presumption of possession, while Nair Service Society v. K.C. Alexander and Chief Conservator of Forests v. Collector qualified presumptions based on possession where the facts or a competing title are known. The first mutation and ensuing deeds did not themselves establish title.

Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, held that findings of fact in civil and criminal proceedings do not automatically bind the other forum, because civil cases require a preponderance of probabilities and criminal cases proof beyond reasonable doubt, subject to statutory relevance under Evidence Act Sections 41–43. Its discussion of Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam, Vishnu Dutt Sharma, M.S. Sheriff and K.G. Premshanker rejected the earlier general proposition in Karam Chand that civil-court findings bind the criminal court. Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2009) 5 SCC 528, was separately quoted: K.G. Premshanker requires examination of relevance and effect under Sections 40–43, and Section 300 CrPC addresses prior conviction/acquittal; a previous judgment is not universally conclusive. P. Swaroopa Rani confirmed possible concurrent proceedings. Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon, SLP (Cr.) 9778/2018, decided 2 April 2024, reviewed Karam Chand, K.G. Premshanker, Vishnu Dutt Sharma, Satish Chander Ahuja and the Constitution Bench in Iqbal Singh Marwah, quoting M.S. Sheriff: criminal proceedings may ordinarily deserve precedence, but no rigid rule governs a stay or makes one forum's findings universally binding. The High Court used this line to reject the claim that the Additional Collector's order was conclusive.

Anju Chaudhary v. State of U.P., (2013) 6 SCC 384, explained the ordinary exclusion of pre-FIR hearing to a suspect under the CrPC scheme, quoting Union of India v. W.N. Chadha on the risk of frustrating investigation and Samaj Parivartan Samudaya v. State of Karnataka on absence of a right to a hearing during investigation before registration. It acknowledged that a higher court reversing dismissal of an application may need to hear the suspect in the circumstances of the case; this is not an absolute right. The Court applied the no-hearing rule to FIR registration. Mohd. Ibrahim v. State of Bihar, (2009) 8 SCC 751, quoted in full relevant part, drew a crucial Section 464 distinction: a person who conveys another's property in his own name, even while dishonestly asserting ownership, does not on that basis alone make a document purporting to have been made by another or with another's authority; without a false document, forgery under Sections 467 and 471 cannot follow. Ram Narayan Popli v. CBI, (2003) 3 SCC 641, a three-judge decision, set out deception and induced delivery for Section 420, the respective document offences, knowledge or reason to believe for use under Section 471, and the false-document plus specified intent elements of forgery. Its distinction concerning when a false description amounts to impersonation was relevant to the present case. The High Court concluded that the specific declarations in these deeds concerning government-lease status and ownership, coupled with lack of title and the alleged false mutation, disclosed a prima facie case involving a forged document. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, was adopted as the standard for cautious exercise of the power to quash: test uncontroverted allegations and ingredients, avoid factual trial and consideration of external defence materials, respect legal bars and abuse-of-process exceptions, and do not quash merely because the same transaction gives rise to civil remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the four applications and the limited review of the FIR on its allegations taken at face value. IPC Sections 420, 467, 468, 469 and 471 were the FIR offences; Section 470 appeared in the SDM's request and the applicants' legal argument. The Court examined Section 420's deception and inducement, Sections 463–464's making of a false document with requisite intent, the forgery specified in Section 467, Section 468's cheating purpose and Section 471's knowing use. Section 52 IPC defined good faith by due care and attention, which the Court used in assessing the claimed bona fide purchases. Evidence Act Sections 40–43 concerned limited relevance or conclusiveness of prior judgments; the presumption of possession under Section 110 was discussed in Star Bone Mill. The 26 June 1984 Madhya Pradesh revenue circular concerning possible conferral of bhumiswami rights was applied through Krishna Bahadur Singh; the judgment identified no automatic title transfer from an expired temporary patta.

4. Issues : (i) Could allegations of personal bias and ulterior conduct by the SDM be assessed without making him a respondent in his personal capacity? (ii) Did Bilson's expired patta, later mutation and the 1984 circular establish title in the first three vendors or validate the sale chain, and did the Additional Collector's view bind a criminal court? (iii) Did the applicants have a right to be heard before FIR registration or before the SDM's unchallenged revenue order? (iv) Did the alleged deeds and entries disclose false-document, forgery and cheating ingredients at the Section 482 stage in light of Mohd. Ibrahim and Ram Narayan Popli? (v) Did the claimed civil nature and subsequent purchasers' asserted good faith justify quashing despite prima facie criminal allegations?

5. Ratio / Findings : (i) Because the SDM was not personally joined, the Court, following P.P. Sharma and companion authorities, refused to entertain untested allegations against him. The five-year patta ended in 1977. The 1984 circular was non-retrospective in the manner explained in Krishna Bahadur Singh, required a patta subsisting on that date and an order conferring bhumiswami rights, and did not create Bilson's title here. No deed or inheritance linked Bilson to Ramsewak, Sarman Devi or Ramswaroop. The allegedly fictitious mutation of their names could not constitute a document of title; Star Bone Mill's rule precluded passage of better title by later registered deeds. The Additional Collector's order was therefore considered erroneous. In addition, under Kishan Singh, Syed Askari and Prem Raj, the Collector's findings did not automatically bind a criminal prosecution; a previous judgment's possible relevance under the statute does not make it conclusive proof in another forum. (iii) Anju Chaudhary excluded a general pre-registration hearing for suspects; none was owed before this FIR. The SDM's 25 January order was not under challenge, so alleged lack of hearing before it did not decide Section 482 relief. (iv) The Court quoted Mohd. Ibrahim's distinction between an untrue assertion of one's own ownership and Section 464's separate requirement that the document purport to have been made by another or with another's authority, and the ingredients explained in Popli. It nevertheless treated the declarations in the sale deeds asserting exclusive ownership and denying government-lease status, in the alleged chain of transfers of government land, as disclosing a prima facie case involving forged documents and illegal gain. (v) Amit Kapoor required a restrained inquiry on the allegations taken at face value, not a mini-trial; a civil title remedy would not itself remove criminality. Under IPC Section 52, an assertion of bona fide purchase without checking earlier records did not establish due care; those records had shown forest land and no intervening release by the State or valid title in the original vendors. The Court found no ground to interfere with the FIR. Whether the prosecution ultimately proves knowledge, deception, forgery and individual participation remains for later stages.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed all four connected M.Cr.C. petitions. Interim orders were vacated.

Sharad Agarwal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Alpana Awasthi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Manisha Mishra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Ramswaroop Choubey v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 7431/2020 & 9859/2020 & 12289/2020 & 17457/2020, 06/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (872) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial prosecution / distant relations - A vague group allegation of ₹4 lakh demand and harassment in the FIR and Section 161 statement did not identify any act by applicants 4 and 5, Mridula and Ram Kumar Mishra, persons living separately and connected through the husband's maternal aunt, rather than members of his household. Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, warns that dowry accusations against relations require proof of overt acts and that indiscriminate implication can weaken genuine prosecution; Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, adopted its caution while requiring tangible specific material before distant relations are summoned, without weighing genuine dowry allegations in golden scales. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, 2013 (1) UC 155, quashed extremely general allegations against separately situated relations in its own setting; K. Subba Rao v. State of Telangana, (2018) 14 SCC 452, required specific instances of involvement, while recognising the restraint against intervention at an interlocutory stage unless there is abuse of process, citing Bhajan Lal and Kailash Chandra Agrawal. Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2010 SC 3363, calls for careful pragmatic scrutiny of accusations against separately living relatives; Neelu Chopra v. Bharti, (2009) 10 SCC 184, requires particulars identifying each accused's acts, rather than repetition of statutory language; Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., (2012) 10 SCC 741, rejects casual naming without allegations of active involvement, drawing on G.V. Rao. Applying the qualified principle common to these authorities, the Court quashed the prosecution only of the two distantly connected applicants.

Divorce litigation / criminal case independence - Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of W.B., (2002) 1 SCC 555, explained the distinct civil and criminal standards and, with the qualified rule in the Constitution Bench decision in M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, rejected quashing merely because civil proceedings were pending. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, applied Section 482 and the approach in Bhajan Lal to allegations taken at face value: a wife need not lose criminal recourse because she tried reconciliation before complaining after her husband petitioned for divorce; civil and criminal cases may proceed independently. Here, the timing of the complaint after the divorce petition and the divorce decree under appeal, accompanied by a restraint on remarriage, were not grounds to end the prosecution of the husband and parents on allegations of dowry demand and cruelty taken at face value. The civil court's finding about the alleged affair did not bind the criminal court.

Section 482 / defence facts and differentiated result - A mediator's account of the complainant's language and the applicants' disputed adultery assertion were matters for the trial court, not for factual adjudication in this quashing petition. The uncontroverted complaint alleged renewed ₹4 lakh demand and mental and physical harassment by husband Sharad Sharma and parents Indra Sharma and Vinesh Chandra Sharma. It justified their continuing prosecution under IPC Sections 498-A, 294, 506/34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Section 4 at this stage, while the absence of material identifying any individual act justified quashing as to Mridula and Ram Kumar Mishra.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Respondent No. 2 stated that she married applicant No. 1 Sharad Sharma on 8 February 2015. Her FIR of 5 April 2017 alleged marriage expenditure and gifts including ₹13,51,000 cash, gold, silver and household goods; all named applicants allegedly taunted her for insufficient dowry, sought a further ₹4 lakh, abused and assaulted her on refusal, and eventually excluded her from the matrimonial home. She said her father tried persuasion and three reconciliation proceedings at Mahila Thana Padav had not resolved matters. The Magistrate's 2 May 2017 order took cognizance against five applicants under IPC Sections 498-A, 294, 506 and 34 and Section 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act in Criminal Case 1554/2017. They petitioned under Section 482 CrPC to quash that order and prosecution. At a 31 January 2022 hearing, the High Court sought clarification of applicants 4 and 5's relationship. Respondent No. 2's subsequent filing showed mother-in-law Indra Sharma's real sister was Mamta Mishra, who was not accused; Ram Kumar Mishra was Mamta's devar and Mridula Mishra his wife, Mamta's devarani. Thus the two were remote connections, not husband Sharad's parents or siblings; their cause-title addresses showed separate residence in Gwalior. The FIR and Section 161 statement alleged the collective demand and harassment against all but identified no specific conduct by these two. Sharad, Indra and Vinesh Chandra Sharma were the husband and parents-in-law. They contended that the wife had a relationship with Vaibhav, that a divorce decree contained a civil finding in their favour, and that a mediator had recorded her and her brother's insulting language toward his parents. They characterised the FIR as retaliation for Sharad's divorce petition. The State and complainant maintained that the allegations warranted prosecution; an FIR after the divorce filing alone did not prove a counterblast. The divorce decree was under First Appeal 277/2020, with a 19 February 2020 interim restraint on Sharad remarrying. These competing assertions were not treated as proven facts of the criminal charges.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, cautioned against treating all in-laws and other relations as culpable merely by association in dowry death cases; overt acts attributed to persons other than the husband must be proved beyond reasonable doubt in a trial. The High Court used its warning against implicating relatives without particulars when assessing the case before trial; it did not apply the trial burden to make a finding of innocence. Monju Roy v. State of West Bengal, (2015) 13 SCC 693, reaffirmed caution and required specific, tangible material before summoning distant relations while recognising that genuine allegations of dowry demand and harassment in a case of unnatural death should not be weighed unrealistically; its excerpt discussed Kans Raj and Raja Lal Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2007) 15 SCC 415, the latter mentioning Kamesh Panjiyar. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, 2013 (1) UC 155, quashed general allegations against relatives amid long delay and uncertain cohabitation in its own facts; this Court applied the requirement of specific allegations without treating this case as involving that six-year delay. K. Subba Rao v. State of Telangana, (2018) 14 SCC 452, explained that interdiction at an interlocutory stage is exceptional but warranted for abuse of process, and required specific involvement rather than bald assertions against distant maternal uncles; it cited State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal and Kailash Chandra Agrawal. Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, AIR 2010 SC 3363, required circumspection and attention to whether accused relatives lived apart and actually visited or participated, without assuming all complaints false. Neelu Chopra v. Bharti, (2009) 10 SCC 184, rejected a complaint naming penal sections without identifying the offences and acts of each accused. Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., (2012) 10 SCC 741, distinguished casual naming from active involvement and cited G.V. Rao v. L.H.V. Prasad on avoiding needless matrimonial litigation. The High Court considered these authorities in substance and applied them to the absence of allegations identifying individual acts by the two distantly connected applicants.

Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of West Bengal, (2002) 1 SCC 555, distinguished proof by probabilities in civil cases from proof beyond reasonable doubt in criminal cases and held that pending civil litigation by itself cannot end criminal proceedings. It reproduced the Constitution Bench's M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397, favouring prompt criminal adjudication in its context while expressly disavowing an inflexible priority rule; the possibility of conflicting results alone does not make the decision of one forum binding on the other. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, found that the High Court had improperly gone beyond FIR allegations and relied on extraneous circumstances when quashing, invoked Bhajan Lal's illustrations, and rejected an automatic adverse inference from the wife's complaint after unsuccessful settlement efforts and a divorce petition. Applying these, the present Court refused to deem this FIR a counterblast solely from chronology. The civil finding about the alleged affair and the divorce decree, which had not attained finality, did not bind the criminal court or settle the criminal issues.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the petition invoking inherent jurisdiction against cognizance and consequent proceedings. The Court tested the uncontroverted allegations at that limited stage and declined to decide disputed defence facts. Section 161 CrPC concerned the complainant's police statement and the absence in it of specific allegations against applicants 4 and 5. IPC Sections 498-A, 294, 506 and 34 and Section 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were the offences of which cognizance was taken; the Court did not separately construe each offence's elements but assessed the alleged dowry demand, harassment, abuse and the allegations against the group as the basis for continuing or quashing the prosecution. Civil and criminal standards of proof were compared through Kamaladevi and M.S. Sheriff, while guilt remained for the criminal court.

4. Issues : First, did the FIR and Section 161 statement disclose enough specific material to prosecute Mridula and Ram Kumar Mishra, given their remote connection and separate residence, or would their inclusion on a collective allegation without distinguishing their acts amount to an abuse of process? Second, did a divorce action filed before the FIR, a later decree under appeal and a civil finding about the wife's alleged relationship require quashing the case against Sharad and his parents as retaliatory or as having been resolved by the civil proceedings? Third, could contested reconciliation conduct and alleged adultery be decided on a Section 482 petition instead of trial, and did the remaining allegations taken at face value justify continuation?

5. Ratio / Findings : The clarified relationship showed that the two distantly connected applicants were the devar and devarani of the husband's maternal aunt, rather than close relations of Sharad and his parents. Their separate residences reinforced the need for a specific role. Both FIR and Section 161 statement used an omnibus assertion that all five demanded ₹4 lakh and caused mental and physical harassment, without identifying an act by either remote applicant. The Supreme Court authorities required tangible material identifying individual involvement in such a setting; the Court found insufficient basis to put those two to trial and quashed their prosecution. As to husband and parents, a complaint following a divorce petition did not necessarily demonstrate a counterblast. The wife's earlier attempts at reconciliation provided a plausible explanation for the timing of her complaint; the Court did not lay down a general presumption excusing every delay. Kamaladevi and Pratibha precluded quashing merely because civil divorce litigation also existed, and the appealed decree had not attained finality. Civil findings about the asserted affair did not bind the criminal case, while their truth and a mediator's report about the wife's conduct were contested matters for the trial court. At the Section 482 stage the uncontroverted ₹4 lakh demand and physical and mental harassment allegations supplied a prima facie case against Sharad, Indra and Vinesh; deciding their defence or credibility would exceed the limited inquiry. The Court distinguished between the accused according to their alleged roles and relationships; it did not treat all five as exonerated or convicted together.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court partly allowed the Section 482 application. Criminal Case 1554/2017 and prosecution were quashed only as to applicant 4 Smt. Mridula Mishra and applicant 5 Ram Kumar Mishra. The quashing request was dismissed for applicant 1 Sharad Sharma, applicant 2 Smt. Indra Sharma and applicant 3 Vinesh Chandra Sharma; the proceedings against them pursuant to the cognizance order continue.

Sharad Sharma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 6385/2017, 15/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (873) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder / Section 300 thirdly - Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, requires the prosecution to prove the injury, its nature, the intention to inflict that particular injury and its objective sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature to cause death; a further subjective intent to kill or knowledge that the injury was sufficient to cause death is not required by that clause. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079/2005, sets out the alternatives of intention and knowledge under Section 299, the further inquiry into Section 300's clauses and exceptions, and the distinction between Section 304 Part I and Part II where the offence is not murder. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, explains sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature as a high probability of death, with the weapon and site of injury being relevant. On the evidence of multiple abdominal and other firearm wounds, the postmortem opinion and the accepted account of the shooting, the Court affirmed the convictions under Section 302/34 for Shami Ulla's murder. It declined to reduce the offence on the asserted absence of a separate intention to kill.

Murder classification / injury circumstances and Exception 4 - Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319; Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444; Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799; State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639; and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, require intention to be assessed in context and reject automatic reduction from Section 302 to Section 304 merely because only one blow was struck. Kanhaiyalal discussed Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram; Bavisetti discussed State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, requires, for Exception 4, a sudden mutual fight without premeditation, in the heat of passion and without taking undue advantage or acting cruelly. Those cases were considered for their tests; the present coordinated attack involving multiple shots on an unarmed group without a prior altercation did not satisfy the exception.

Section 34 / participation and concert - The prosecution must establish a criminal act by several persons in furtherance of their shared intention. Each need not inflict a separate fatal blow, but merely accompanying the assailant is insufficient. Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra, 2012 (9) SCALE 345, distinguishes common intention without an individually attributed overt blow from participation without concert; Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., AIR 2012 SC 3539, and Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753, stress plan and proof of actual participation. Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 1083, recognises that concert may be formed even on the spur of the moment; Hem Raj v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1990 SC 2252, and Dashrathlal v. State of Gujarat, 1979 Cri LJ 1078 (SC), exclude association alone.

Private defence / proportionate necessity - Kashi Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 3 SCC 55, reads IPC Sections 97–106 together, relying on Bishnas v. State of W.B., (2005) 12 SCC 657, for a defensive response, rather than retaliation, within the limits of reasonable force, including property protection. The Court found no impending unlawful armed force from the unarmed occupants of the field and instead an armed ambush with multiple shots, rejecting the appellants' property-defence and sudden-provocation accounts.

Injured testimony / attempted murder / dying declaration - The materially consistent account of injured eyewitnesses Amjad and Firoj Ulla was corroborated by MLCs, radiographs, surgery, postmortem and forensic material; serious treatment and advice not to speak explained Firoj's delayed police statement. Both surviving victims suffered multiple potentially fatal firearm injuries, sustaining two separate counts under Section 307/34. Rafat Ulla's appeal abated upon verified death in custody; the surviving appellants' appeal was dismissed and convictions and concurrent sentences affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appeal under Section 374 CrPC challenged the convictions recorded by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Guna, on 25 February 2011 in Sessions Trial 370/2009. The trial court had imposed life imprisonment and ₹10,000 fine each under IPC Section 302/34 for Shami Ulla's murder, ten years' rigorous imprisonment on each of two Section 307/34 attempted-murder counts concerning Amjad Ulla and Firoj Ulla with ₹5,000 fine per count, and ₹5,000 fine under Section 427/34 for motorcycle damage, with default stipulations and concurrent imprisonment. Jail verification of 24 March 2022 established appellant 2 Rafat Ulla had died in custody; his appeal was dismissed as abated. The remaining appellants contested culpability. On 4 July 2009 at about 2:30–3 p.m., Amjad, Firoj and Shami went to cultivate an agricultural field. The prosecution alleged Shaukat Ulla, Rafat Ulla, Jan Hasan and Abid Khan arrived armed and fired repeatedly, injuring all three; Abid also damaged Amjad's Pulsar motorcycle with stones. Others intervened. At District Hospital, Guna, Amjad lodged Dehati Nalishi Ex. P1, which formed the basis for Cantt. Guna FIR 269/2009 (Ex. P33), initially for attempted murder and damage. The wounded were examined and referred to Indore; Shami died in hospital on 6 July. Murder was added and a charge sheet filed on 30 October 2009. Twenty prosecution witnesses testified, the accused denied the allegations under Section 313 CrPC and called no defence witness. On appeal they challenged the treatment of the Dehati Nalishi as an FIR, the roughly one-month delay in recording a witness statement, the reliance on interested witnesses and discrepancies in their accounts, asserted private defence of agricultural property and absence of murderous intention, and later objected to lack of Shami's dying declaration. The State defended the convictions. The medical evidence included Dr Yogesh Dwivedi's same-day MLCs recording multiple gunshot entries on Shami and both survivors; radiographs by Dr Sitaram Singh Raghuvanshi showed firearm injuries and projectiles; Dr Ashish Agrawal described Firoj's urgent abdominal surgery and ICU admission and treated Shami, who died following surgery. Dr A.K. Lachhewal attributed death to firearm injuries to vital organs and complications, finding the wounds sufficient in the ordinary course of nature. The investigating officer described spot recoveries and seizure of a gun and cartridges from Rafat; the judgment reports a positive FSL result. Jan Hasan remained absconding and his case was not adjudicated in this appeal.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, is the central Section 300 Thirdly authority: the prosecution must objectively establish the particular injury and its nature, prove intention to inflict that very injury rather than accident or a different injury, then objectively establish that it was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The burden remains on the prosecution; subjective intent to cause death or foresee fatal sufficiency is not an additional Thirdly element. The Court applied that test to the firearm wounds and the medical cause of death. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079/2005, set out a structured inquiry under Sections 299 and 300, including the five murder exceptions and application of Section 304 Part I when intention is the dominant element and Part II when only knowledge is established. The excerpt also distinguished the particular knowledge required by clause Secondly from a mere probability; the Court focused on Thirdly here. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, explained ordinary-course sufficiency and the significance of the weapon or the site targeted. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejected a universal single-blow rule; Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, listed factors indicating intention without making the list exhaustive, including weapon, vital site, force, provocation, premeditation, prior enmity and number of blows. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, assessed weapon, target and force in a crowbar injury. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, discussed Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram in rejecting automatic reduction after one blow and restating Exception 4. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, similarly required surrounding circumstances, citing State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam and reproducing Virsa Singh's distinction between intent to inflict the actual injury and the degree of its gravity. These authorities collectively supported classification of the homicide in its factual context; this prosecution concerned multiple firearms rather than a single blow. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, explained the cumulative conditions of Exception 4 concerning sudden fight, heat of passion, absence of premeditation and absence of undue advantage, distinguishing mutual combat from one-sided provocation. The Court found no prior quarrel and an armed ambush, so rejected that reduction.

On common intention, Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra, 2012 (9) SCALE 345, was discussed for concert and the distinction between absence of a separately attributed overt blow and absence of common intention; Shyamal Ghosh v. State of W.B., AIR 2012 SC 3539, described the antecedent plan and action in its pursuance; Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753, placed on the prosecution the burden of proving actual joint participation and concert. Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 1083, allowed meeting of minds to develop at the scene while requiring concert. Hem Raj v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1990 SC 2252, illustrated acquittal of nonparticipating associates when only one assault was proved; Dashrathlal v. State of Gujarat, 1979 Cri LJ 1078 (SC), rejected liability for mere accompaniment. In the present case, these principles were applied to assailants found to have been present and firing. Kashi Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 3 SCC 55, required integrated reading of IPC Sections 97–106. Its passage drew on Bishnas v. State of W.B., (2005) 12 SCC 657, and quoted criminal-law texts on anticipated attack, defensive force rather than revenge, and reasonable proportionality even in defence of property; the present Court found no factual foundation for using deadly force in defence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the conviction appeal; Section 313 governed accused examination at trial. IPC Section 299 defines culpable homicide by intended death, an intended injury likely to cause death, or knowledge of likely death. Section 300's clauses define when culpable homicide is murder, with clause Thirdly addressing intentionally inflicted bodily injury objectively sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course, and Exception 4 addressing a sudden fight without premeditation or undue advantage. Sections 302 and 304 determine murder versus lesser culpable homicide punishment. Section 307 applied to the two living gunshot victims and Section 427 to the damaged motorcycle. Section 34 imposed joint liability for an act by several persons in furtherance of common intention; it did not make association alone sufficient. IPC Sections 97–106 governed private defence of person or property and the necessary force limits. Section 149 was mentioned illustratively in the Section 34 exposition, but no unlawful assembly count was under appeal. The testimony, MLCs, postmortem, seizure and FSL evidence formed part of the proof.

4. Issues : (i) Was Shami's death homicidal, and did the proven deliberate firearm injuries satisfy Section 300 Thirdly rather than a Section 304 category or Exception 4? (ii) Did the coordinated shooting of Amjad and Firoj and the medical assessment of the likelihood of death support two Section 307/34 attempts? (iii) Were common intention and participation proved against the surviving appellants, rather than inferred from company alone? (iv) Did the property-defence or sudden-provocation explanation fit a necessary, proportionate response or an unpremeditated fight? (v) Did witness relationship, the delayed police statement, FIR-origin objection, minor discrepancies or the missing dying declaration undermine the credited account? Rafat's appeal separately raised abatement after death.

5. Ratio / Findings : The postmortem attributed Shami's death to gunshot damage of vital organs and complications, and regarded the wounds as sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. This matched the injured brothers' account of a concerted armed attack. Under Virsa Singh, proof of the intention to inflict the particular bodily injuries and their objective sufficiency to cause death sustained Section 300 Thirdly; the judges found no need for a separate intention to bring about death. The use of firearms, the multiple wounds and the targeting of vital regions supported a finding of intentional assault under the authorities requiring consideration of the surrounding circumstances. The Court did not apply the single-blow cases mechanically to a repeated shooting. The accepted injured-witness accounts identified the shooters and Abid's separate damage to the motorcycle. Firoj's one-month police-statement delay was explained by serious referral and advice not to talk; the Court found his cross-examination materially intact. Their relationship did not lead the Court to reject either injured witness. The MLCs, radiographs, urgent treatment, postmortem and reported positive FSL supported the account; minor differences in Safi and Arif's accounts were not fatal. For the two survivors, numerous gunshot entries, Firoj's internal injury and surgery, and the doctor's assessment that death was probable supported intentional attempts under Section 307 on two counts, rather than an inference from Shami's death alone.

Section 34 liability rested on the accepted finding that the appellants arrived together armed and fired, together with Abid's damage to the motorcycle, rather than their mere association. The discussion insists on a proved joint act and shared intention, with no need for each person to fire the decisive fatal projectile. Private defence failed: unarmed cultivators were attacked by persons who arrived with firearms; no antecedent altercation or necessity for lethal defence was shown. On the Court's facts, the ambush was planned and the circumstances did not establish a sudden mutual fight or the absence of undue advantage required for Exception 4. Shami's survival under care until 6 July did not make a dying declaration mandatory in a case supported by accepted direct and medical evidence; its absence did not require acquittal. These are appellate findings on this evidence, including individual participation and intent, not universal presumptions arising from injury or failure to record a dying declaration.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed Rafat Ulla's appeal as abated following verified death in jail. The surviving appellants' appeal was dismissed; the trial court's 25 February 2011 judgment and concurrent life imprisonment, two ten-year attempted-murder terms, fines and default stipulations were affirmed. Any appellant on bail was directed to surrender immediately; bail and surety bonds were cancelled. The record was to be returned to the trial court and a copy sent to the jail. The judgment did not decide the case of absconding Jan Hasan.

Shaukat Ulla and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 210/2011, 11/04/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (874) Prev Next

Headnote :- Court-document forgery / Section 195(1)(b)(ii) - Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, approving Sachida Nand Singh, limits the requirement of a court complaint to the enumerated offences committed in respect of a document after it has been produced or admitted in evidence, while it is in custodia legis. An age certificate alleged to have been fabricated beforehand and then used in two bail applications was outside the bar because of when the alleged forgery occurred. On the Collector's report that the centre said to have issued the certificate had no X-ray machine and had issued no such certificate, the High Court's earlier direction to its Principal Registrar to lodge an FIR, rather than file a court complaint under Section 195, was permissible. That direction was expressly prima facie and left the police to investigate the certificate's authenticity and the doctor's possible role; it was not a final finding of forgery.

Recusal objection / prior prima facie referral - The judge's earlier direction, based on the evidence, for police investigation of a document submitted in a bail matter did not itself make the Court an aggrieved complainant or establish bias in the later Section 439 hearing. The applicant's asserted Section 195 error failed on Iqbal Singh Marwah, and counsel conceded that no prior conclusive adverse finding had been made, withdrew the recusal request and apologized. The Court rejected the attempt to select a forum on that premise and declined bail in light of the alleged attempt to obtain it through the suspect certificate.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sher Singh was arrested on 13 July 2021 in Crime 409/2020 at University Police Station, Gwalior, under IPC Sections 420, 466, 467, 468 and 471. This was his first Section 439 CrPC regular-bail application in that forgery prosecution, M.Cr.C. 60190/2021. The background was a different case, Crime 241/2020 at Myana, Guna, alleging IPC Sections 363, 366-A and 376 and POCSO Sections 5/6 concerning a prosecutrix whose school record gave 13 March 2004 as date of birth. In his first bail application in that case, M.Cr.C. 37338/2020, the applicant submitted an Aadhaar record showing a different date of birth and a certificate purportedly issued by a medical officer at UPHC Sironj, Vidisha. On 5 October 2020 the judge noted that Aadhaar was not a certificate of date of birth and that no basis, ossification test, X-ray film or report supported the purported medical age certificate, ordered the Vidisha Collector to inquire, and refused bail in that application. A second application, M.Cr.C. 48215/2020, relied on the same certificate. The Collector's report of 25 November 2020, reproduced in the present judgment and placed before the Court in December, relayed the investigating committee's conclusion that the centre said to have issued the certificate lacked an X-ray machine and had not issued such a certificate; police investigation of the document was recommended. The report did not conclusively determine whether the doctor had given a false account. On 8 December 2020 the judge, expressly relying prima facie on the report, directed the Principal Registrar to give police the report and annexures and lodge an FIR over filing an allegedly forged certificate; police could check the document's genuineness and investigate the doctor if appropriate. That second bail application in the POCSO case was also dismissed. At the outset of the present forgery-case bail hearing, counsel demanded recusal because the same judge had directed the FIR. He argued that Section 195 CrPC required a court complaint for a forged document filed before a court and that the earlier direction to lodge an FIR was therefore erroneous. The judge asked counsel to distinguish forgery preceding court filing from forgery during court custody. Counsel acknowledged he had not examined the governing Supreme Court law, ultimately accepted that the earlier order had made no final finding against Sher Singh and apologized for the recusal request.

2. Precedents — Considered : Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, is the controlling Supreme Court authority. Its Constitution Bench paragraph 33 approved Sachida Nand Singh and held that Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC applies to the listed document offences only if they are committed after a document has been produced or given in evidence in a court proceeding, while it is in court custody. The High Court applied that temporal distinction to the certificate said to have been made before the two bail applications in the POCSO case were filed, permitting a police FIR rather than requiring the court's formal complaint. This did not conclusively prove when or by whom any forgery occurred; it answered the applicant's contention that the statute imposed an absolute bar on the facts underlying the referral. Sachida Nand Singh appears within the quoted Constitution Bench holding. A reference to Independent Thought v. Union of India, (2017) 10 SCC 800, occurs in the reproduced 5 October 2020 order about the minor prosecutrix and the refusal of bail in the separate POCSO case.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the present regular-bail request. Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC was substantively construed as a limited restriction requiring a court complaint for cognizance of specified document offences committed while the document is in custodia legis, not a general ban on FIR investigation of a document forged before filing. The earlier bail applications and police referral supplied procedural background. IPC Sections 420, 466, 467, 468 and 471 were the forgery-case FIR offences; the elements of those offences were not tried in this order. IPC Sections 363, 366-A and 376 and POCSO Sections 5/6 belonged to the distinct underlying sexual-offence proceeding in which the disputed certificate was used. Aadhaar, school and purported medical age material were described as factual background, without a fresh final determination of age in this application.

4. Issues : Did Section 195(1)(b)(ii) prohibit an FIR when a certificate was allegedly forged before being filed in a bail case, or did the requirement of a court complaint apply only to forgery while the document was in judicial custody? Did the same judge's earlier prima facie direction for police inquiry require recusal or amount to an adverse final determination, and should bail be granted in the ensuing forgery case? The genuineness of the document and the possible role of the medical officer remained for police investigation and any later proceedings, not final resolution in this application.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied the temporal distinction in Iqbal Singh Marwah. The suspect certificate was alleged to have existed when attached to the 2020 bail applications, rather than having been forged after production in court. Therefore Section 195(1)(b)(ii) did not require a court complaint to the exclusion of an FIR, and the earlier instruction to the Principal Registrar was legally tenable. The Collector's report and the committee's account supplied a prima facie reason for investigation: no X-ray equipment at the named centre and denial that it issued age certificates. The earlier order itself allowed police to check whether the certificate was genuine and whether a doctor had falsely issued it or given an inaccurate account; it did not make a conclusive judicial finding of the applicant's guilt. Counsel accepted that limitation and withdrew the claim that the judge was an aggrieved complainant. On these facts, the recusal request lacked its asserted legal and factual foundation. The Court treated attempting to secure bail with the suspect certificate as serious misconduct, declined sympathy in the present bail application and warned against forum shopping and unprepared submissions.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the first application for regular bail in Crime 409/2020. No recusal was ordered, and the FIR lodged under the earlier direction to the Registrar remained undisturbed. Counsel's apology was recorded and he was advised to prepare and present factual and legal issues with greater care.

Sher Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 60190/2021, 15/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (875) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR inaction / Article 226 and alternate process - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguished the police duty to register cognizable information under Section 154 CrPC, as in Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary, from the remedy available to the complainant when the police fail to act; it explained the Magistrate complaint route under Sections 190 and 200, drawing on All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, similarly directed complainants alleging ordinary police inaction to that statutory remedy, while preserving intervention under Article 226 in the rarest cases where investigative powers have been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is established, limited to ensuring lawful process rather than directing how the investigation should be conducted. Applying those distinct propositions, the High Court declined to issue a writ directing investigation of the petitioner's allegations concerning a cheque given as security.

Registration / magistrate investigation oversight - Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, prescribed an approach to the SP under Section 154(3), followed, if necessary, by an application under Section 156(3) for registration or proper investigation. A Magistrate may direct and monitor a proper inquiry after prima facie satisfaction. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed this route, including a possible recommendation to the SP for a change of investigating officer, while leaving the investigation itself with the police. The passage from Gangadhar quoted in Divine Retreat Centre also described examination of a complaint under Sections 190 and 200, possible investigation and dismissal under Section 203. These remedies remained open to the petitioner, whose writ was dismissed with liberty to approach the competent Magistrate under Sections 156(3), 200 and 202.

Alternative remedy / exceptional writ qualification - Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., WA 247/2016, decided 20 December 2016, was followed for denying routine mandamus to register an FIR when the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been exhausted, subject to the recognized Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, exceptions. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, which addresses the duty of the police to register an FIR rather than a right to bypass statutory remedies through mandamus.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shirish Yadav filed Writ Petition 14723/2022 under Article 226 concerning a written police complaint of 21 June 2022. He alleged that respondents 3 and 4 retained signed papers and blank cheques, including a cheque allegedly handed over as security in a 2016 agreement, and feared misuse. His prayers asked for the records, proper police inquiry and investigation and action against those respondents, return of the cheque and signed papers, and restraint against misuse. Counsel submitted that police had taken no action on his complaint. The State appeared through a Government Advocate. The judge identified the question of the appropriate remedy: whether a writ under Article 226 should direct the police to register an FIR. The Court surveyed Supreme Court and Division Bench authorities and dismissed the petition with liberty to approach the Magistrate.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, affirmed the police duty to register a cognizable offence but distinguished what police must do from which remedy an informant must use if they do not. It treated All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359, as supporting a Magistrate complaint under Sections 190 and 200. It explained that Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2006) 2 SCC 677, reiterated by Lallan Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2006) 12 SCC 229, concerned the police's statutory duty rather than the procedure for seeking judicial redress. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognized exceptional intervention under Article 226 in the rarest cases where investigative powers have been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is established, but limited the High Court to ensuring lawful process rather than specifying how officers should investigate. For ordinary police inaction it applied Gangadhar and the remedy before the Magistrate under Sections 190/200. The passage from Gangadhar explained inquiry under Chapter XV, possible police investigation, dismissal under Section 203 where no offence appears, and issuance of process where a prima facie case is disclosed.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, set out the more specific steps: complain in writing to the SP under Section 154(3), then apply to a Magistrate under Section 156(3) if the FIR is still not registered or proper investigation is not conducted. A Magistrate who is satisfied may order registration or investigation and monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reaffirmed this remedy in place of a routine petition under Article 226, recognizing the Magistrate's power to recommend a change of investigating officer to the SP if necessary, but not to investigate personally; the quoted decision did not dictate an officer change in this case. Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., WA 247/2016, decided 20 December 2016, was the binding Division Bench explanation that mandamus may be declined where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been exhausted unless one of the recognized Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, alternative-remedy exceptions applies. Its quotation distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1: compulsory police registration of qualifying information does not itself establish entitlement to immediate writ mandamus without regard to available remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked for relief directing police investigation, return of the cheques and signed papers, and protection against misuse; the request was assessed in light of the available statutory remedies. Section 154 CrPC concerns registration of cognizable information; subsection (3) permits an approach in writing to a superior police officer after refusal. Section 156(3) enables a Magistrate, on appropriate satisfaction, to order registration and proper police investigation and monitor its course without personally taking over investigation. Chapter XII investigation and Chapter XV complaint procedures were distinguished.

4. Issues : Whether the petitioner's assertion of police inaction on his 21 June 2022 written complaint entitled him to an Article 226 command for FIR registration, inquiry or investigation against the private respondents despite the statutory remedies before the SP and the Magistrate. Whether the exceptional writ power reserved for the rarest cases of mala fide exercise of investigative powers, with a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII, altered the ordinary route on the material described.

5. Ratio / Findings : Information disclosing a cognizable offence places a statutory duty on the police to register an FIR, but Aleque Padamsee distinguishes that duty from an automatic entitlement to mandamus on a complainant's writ petition. Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 provide remedies when the police fail to act. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Tambe explained the Magistrate's powers to secure and monitor investigation, and Divine Retreat Centre preserved a limited public law power of intervention in the rarest cases where investigative powers have been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII is established, without permitting the High Court to manage the police's investigative methods. The rule in Shweta Bhadauria concerning alternative remedies, subject to recognized exceptions, distinguished Lalita Kumari; the writ was treated as an ordinary inaction complaint with no exceptional facts found.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Article 226 petition. Shirish Yadav was expressly left at liberty, if he wished, to approach the competent Magistrate under Sections 156(3), 200 and 202 CrPC for redress.

Shirish Yadav v. Union of India and Others, W.P. no. 14723/2022, 08/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (876) Prev Next

Headnote :- Victim age / documentary hierarchy - Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, extended the age-determination sequence in Rule 12(3) of the Juvenile Justice Rules, 2007 to child victims. The sequence gives priority to a matriculation or equivalent certificate, then, in its absence, the birth record from the first school attended, followed, in its absence, by a municipal or panchayat certificate; medical opinion is sought only when those documents are unavailable. The Court relied on the Class V record proved by the headmaster, which gave the date of birth as 4 April 2001. He testified that the register carried the same date, and the grandmother's unchallenged estimate of age supported that evidence. State of Chhattisgarh v. Lekhram, (2006) 5 SCC 736, treated a school entry made in the discharge of public duty as admissible under Section 35 Evidence Act and capable of corroborating other evidence, without making every such entry conclusive. Murugan v. State of T.N., (2011) 6 SCC 111, emphasised documents made ante litem motam, while allowing inquiry into the informant, the source of the entry and the need for corroboration. It cited Umesh Chandra, Radha Krishna Singh and Madan Mohan Singh's review of further authorities. The ossification report was not proved and could not be read against the appellant. The doctor's estimate of 15–16 also indicated minority. The Court held that the prosecutrix was under 18 on 8–9 June 2014.

Minority / consent and factual defence - Having found that the prosecutrix was a minor, the Court treated her alleged willingness to accompany the appellant or consent to sexual intercourse as immaterial to the rape charge. She described being induced by a promise of marriage, travelling to and living with him in Jaipur, sexual intercourse, and their return before they were recovered together. She admitted that he had previously given financial assistance to her household, but denied that the case had been fabricated to avoid repayment.

Aggravated rape / lesser included offence - The prosecution did not allege that the appellant had raped a woman knowing her to be pregnant, as required by the charged Section 376(2)(h) IPC. Nor did it allege that the rape had caused grievous bodily harm, maiming, disfigurement or endangerment of life under clause (m). The convictions under those aggravated provisions were set aside. The Court held that the graver charge included the basic element of rape and, on the facts proved, substituted a conviction under Section 376(1), although no separate charge under that subsection had been framed.

Statutory minimum / sentence and relief - After the conviction was altered, the approximately five years already served did not justify limiting the sentence to the period undergone, as the appellant had requested. The Court applied the then minimum of seven years under Section 376(1). It imposed seven years' rigorous imprisonment, a fine of ₹5,000 and six months' imprisonment in default. The three-year term under Section 363 and the five-year term under Section 366, with their original fines and default terms, remained unchanged. The sentences were to run concurrently. The appeal was allowed only to that extent, and the appellant was already in jail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The appellant appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the Additional Sessions Judge, Pichhore's judgment dated 30 April 2015 in Sessions Trial 89/2014. The trial court had imposed three years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹100 fine under IPC Section 363, five years and a ₹200 fine under Section 366, and ten years and a ₹400 fine under Section 376(2)(h)/(m), each with a specified term of imprisonment in default. On 9 June 2014, the grandmother, Shantibai, reported that the prosecutrix had disappeared overnight and that the appellant was also missing from the village. The prosecutrix and her siblings had been living with their grandmother after their father's death and their mother's departure. FIR 150/2014 initially invoked Sections 363/366; rape and POCSO Sections 3/4 and 5/6 were added later. The girl and the appellant were recovered on 21 August 2014. Medical and school material was collected, and the trial court framed charges under Sections 363, 366, 376(2)(h)/(m) IPC and POCSO Section 4. The recited conviction, however, concerned the three IPC counts; the appellate account records no POCSO conviction. Fifteen prosecution witnesses testified, and Shishupal testified as DW1 along with another defence witness. The girl said that he had persuaded her with a promise of marriage. She described travelling on foot and by bus and train through Sunaj, Ashoknagar and Guna to Jaipur, where they rented lodging, stayed for about a month and had sexual intercourse. They then went to Bareilly before returning. The grandmother and brother described her disappearance and later recovery; two recovery witnesses said that she and the appellant had been apprehended together. The defence alleged a financial grievance: the appellant had paid ₹15,000 for a pump and helped with treatment for the grandmother's injury, and the family had difficulty repaying him. The prosecutrix admitted the transactions but denied that the case had been concocted. The headmaster proved a Class V progress report recording her date of birth as 4 April 2001. He testified that the school admission register carried the same date, entered on information from the parents. The grandmother's estimate that she was 13 was not challenged in cross-examination. An ossification report had been obtained but was not proved. The examining doctor assessed her age as 15–16 and recorded no fresh external injury. The doctor's description of prior sexual activity remained medical testimony; it was not a judicial reason for disbelieving the prosecutrix or implying lawful consent. The appellant disputed minority, relied on consent and false implication, and sought a sentence limited to the nearly five years spent in jail since arrest. The State supported the conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, (2013) 7 SCC 263, applied the then age-determination sequence in Rule 12(3) of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Rules, 2007 to victims as well as children in conflict with law. A matriculation or equivalent certificate took priority, followed, in its absence, by a birth certificate from the first school attended, and then, if unavailable, by a birth certificate from a public authority. An opinion from a duly constituted Medical Board was to be sought only if those documents were absent. The order reproduces the rule and Jarnail Singh's explanation that each preceding document takes priority. The present Court relied on the school progress report proved by the headmaster and his testimony about the register, and did not rely on the unproved ossification result.

State of Chhattisgarh v. Lekhram, (2006) 5 SCC 736, held that a school register entry made in the discharge of public duty was admissible under Section 35 Evidence Act. Admissibility did not make it infallible; its weight depended on corroborating parental information and the circumstances. Here, the grandmother's evidence of age and the headmaster's testimony supported the entry. Murugan v. State of T.N., (2011) 6 SCC 111, treated records made before the dispute as potentially reliable under Section 35, while emphasising that the court may examine who supplied the information, its source, the entry's authenticity and the need for corroboration. It referred to Umesh Chandra v. State of Rajasthan, State of Bihar v. Radha Krishna Singh, and Madan Mohan Singh v. Rajni Kant. The last of these reviewed Brij Mohan Singh, Birad Mal Singhvi, Updesh Kumar, State of Punjab v. Mohinder Singh, Vishnu and Satpal Singh.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided for the appeal. The convictions under IPC Sections 363 and 366, relating to kidnapping and abduction, remained intact. The charged Section 376(2)(h) required rape of a woman known to be pregnant, while clause (m) required rape causing grievous bodily harm, maiming, disfigurement or endangerment of life. The prosecution case did not support either aggravating circumstance. A conviction for the basic rape offence under Section 376(1) was substituted on appeal, although no separate charge under that subsection had been framed. The Court applied the statutory minimum of seven years applicable at the relevant time. Section 35 Evidence Act governed the admissibility of the school records; their source and evidentiary weight were separately assessed. Rule 12(3) of the 2007 Juvenile Justice Rules, made under the 2000 Act and applied to child victims by Jarnail Singh, supplied the relevant sequence of evidence. The ossification report remained unproved and could not be read against the appellant.

4. Issues : Did admissible and reliable evidence establish that the prosecutrix was under 18 on the date of the incident, despite the unproved ossification report and the doctor's separate estimate? If she was a minor, could the claims of consent, the promise of marriage and the financial-transaction defence displace the kidnapping and rape findings? Were the pregnancy-based and injury-based aggravated rape clauses proved? Could the appellate court substitute a conviction under the basic Section 376(1) when only the aggravated subsections had been charged? What sentence could be imposed in light of the then minimum and the nearly five years already undergone?

5. Ratio / Findings : The headmaster proved the Class V school record and testified that the admission register carried the same date of birth, entered on parental information. Although he had not brought the register, the Court accepted his evidence and the grandmother's unchallenged estimate of age. Jarnail Singh gave the available school source priority over medical opinion under the historical Rule 12 hierarchy. Lekhram and Murugan required attention to admissibility under Section 35 and the evidentiary foundation, rather than treating all entries as conclusive without support. The ossification report was not proved, and the Court expressly declined to read it against the appellant. The doctor's estimate was 15–16; neither that estimate nor the unproved report established adulthood. The Court found that the prosecutrix was a minor. Her account of travel and sexual intercourse, her recovery with the appellant and the absence of a convincing explanation of false implication supported the core findings. She admitted receiving financial help but denied malicious fabrication. In the Court's reasoning, her minority made alleged willingness or consent immaterial to the rape charge. The question of aggravation was separate. There was no allegation of pregnancy known to the appellant or of rape causing grievous bodily harm, maiming, disfigurement or endangerment of life. The convictions under Section 376(2)(h)/(m) therefore could not stand. The then minimum of seven years precluded limiting the sentence to the period already undergone, as the appellant sought. The findings under Sections 363 and 366 were retained.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed the appeal in part. It set aside the conviction under Section 376(2)(h)/(m) and the accompanying sentence of ten years and a ₹400 fine. In their place, it convicted the appellant under Section 376(1) IPC and imposed seven years' rigorous imprisonment, a ₹5,000 fine and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The three years and ₹100 fine under Section 363 and the five years and ₹200 fine under Section 366, with their original default terms, remained intact. The terms of imprisonment were to run concurrently. The trial judgment was otherwise affirmed, and the appellant was in jail.

Shishupal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 596/2015, 01/08/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (877) Prev Next

Headnote :- Public servant sanction / reasonable nexus - Devinder Singh v. State of Punjab through CBI, (2016) 12 SCC 87, summarised the principles under Section 197 CrPC. A genuine connection with official duty is construed liberally, even where the officer exceeds authority, but an unrelated crime cannot be protected by a fanciful claim of official duty. Sanction is required for an assault intrinsically connected with the official task. D.T. Virupakshappa v. C. Subash, (2015) 12 SCC 231, required sanction for an alleged police assault connected with investigation, while expressly leaving the merits and the possibility of later government sanction open. Om Prakash v. State of Jharkhand, (2012) 12 SCC 72, drawing on K. Satwant Singh and Ganesh Chandra Jew, applied the test of a direct or integral connection with duty, as distinct from an independent objectionable act. Its discussion of excess in police encounters was specific to that context. Here, the complainant's own account placed the alleged filthy abuse and fist blows during the forest officials' interception of a tractor carrying sand from a forest river. No mining lease was alleged. The officials' interception and seizure served the protection of forest property, and the High Court found a reasonable nexus requiring previous sanction before cognizance under IPC Sections 294/323.

Sanction stage / cognizance consequence - Devinder Singh permits the need for sanction to be considered at cognizance and, where necessary, raised or reconsidered at charge, on appeal or after evidence. The competent executive authority decides whether to grant sanction on an objective assessment of the material. The passage quoted from K. Kalimuthu v. State by DSP, (2005) 4 SCC 512, in this judgment records only an advocate's response, rather than an independent holding. In the setting stated in this complaint, the JMFC's conclusion that the alleged blows and language could not be connected with duty was held to be materially erroneous.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Forest officials Shiv Kumar Tiwari and others applied under Section 482 CrPC to challenge the order dated 17 December 2019 by which the JMFC, Kotma, took cognizance under IPC Sections 294 and 323 on a private complaint, and the resulting proceedings. The complainant said that, on the instructions of his employer, Mohd. Shahid Ali, he drove a tractor carrying sand collected from Kevai River for construction under Gram Panchayat Dongariya Kala. According to him, forest staff stopped him on 9 February 2017, demanded the tractor key, pulled him down when he refused, abused and beat him, and asked him to call his employer. He alleged that the officials demanded ₹50,000 and threatened a false case when Mohd. Shahid protested. He said that the police took no action on his report, so he filed a complaint under Section 200. The Magistrate recorded statements under Sections 200 and 202 and took cognizance. The officials submitted that their forest offence report, POR 4315/25, which the order dates as 9 September 2017, concerned illegal extraction and carriage of sand from forest compartment PF566 under Indian Forest Act Sections 33(1)(b), 41 and 42. They had also submitted a report for confiscation of the tractor-trolley. They alleged that the complainant's party forcibly took back the vehicle and material, leading to a separate report under IPC Sections 384, 353, 332 and 186. These competing accounts and their stated dates were submissions, rather than final findings of guilt. The respondent argued that filthy abuse and fist blows could never form part of official duty. The High Court considered the complainant's own statement that he had extracted sand from a river in the forest area, that the officials had questioned its source and stopped the vehicle, and that no mining lease was claimed. It then examined whether the alleged excess had a reasonable connection with official duty requiring sanction under Section 197.

2. Precedents — Considered : Devinder Singh v. State of Punjab through CBI, (2016) 12 SCC 87, set out a detailed synthesis in nine parts. Sanction protects honest public service; it cannot be used to conceal crime. An act reasonably connected with duty may remain protected despite an excess of authority, and no universal factual rule determines that connection. An assault may require sanction if intrinsically linked to the task, but a pretended connection is insufficient. The competent authority must decide sanction objectively. The need for sanction may be considered at cognizance, raised at charge or on appeal, or examined during inquiry or on fuller evidence. The Court applied the test of a genuine connection to the officials' forest seizure.

D.T. Virupakshappa v. C. Subash, (2015) 12 SCC 231, held that an alleged assault or detention during police investigation had an essential connection with duty and required prior sanction. It set aside the process without deciding the merits and left recourse to government sanction open. The present judge applied that reasoning by analogy to an alleged excess during enforcement; it was not proof that the allegations in the forest complaint were false. Om Prakash v. State of Jharkhand, (2012) 12 SCC 72, reiterated the test of a direct or integral connection. It cited K. Satwant Singh and Ganesh Chandra Jew on why excess does not automatically remove protection. In its separate police-encounter setting, it cautioned against unlawful killing while also recognising protection against prosecution for defensible actions closely connected with duty. The present Court applied the reasonable-nexus reasoning; the broader encounter observations did not confer immunity for every alleged assault by a forest officer. K. Kalimuthu v. State by DSP, (2005) 4 SCC 512, also appears in the judgment, but the quoted passage records the prosecution advocate's submission that sanction did not apply in that case.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to challenge cognizance and the proceedings. Section 197 CrPC governed previous sanction where a public servant was accused of an act done while acting or purporting to act in the discharge of official duty. The Court examined whether the alleged conduct had a reasonable connection with duty; official status alone was insufficient. Sections 200 and 202 CrPC governed the private complaint and examination of witnesses before cognizance. Indian Forest Act Sections 33(1)(b), 41 and 42 appeared in the officials' separate forest offence report, while IPC Sections 384, 353, 332 and 186 appeared in their alleged counter-report. The absence of a claimed mining lease formed part of the forest-enforcement context; it was not a final conviction of the tractor driver for a mining offence.

4. Issues : Were the alleged insulting language, fist assault and accompanying demand during the forest officials' interception and seizure of a sand-laden tractor reasonably connected with the discharge or purported discharge of their duty, so as to require previous sanction under Section 197? Could the Magistrate take cognizance under Sections 294/323 without sanction on the categorical basis that abuse and assault could never form part of official duty?

5. Ratio / Findings : On the complainant's own account, the vehicle carried sand taken from a forest river, no lease was claimed, and the officials stopped him and questioned the source of the sand. Their duty to protect forest property provided an official basis for interception and seizure. Applying Devinder Singh's test to these facts, the Court held that the alleged insult and blows during that encounter were reasonably connected with the discharge or purported discharge of official duty, even if the officials exceeded their authority. That connection required prior sanction. The Court rejected the Magistrate's categorical separation of the allegations from official duty and held that taking cognizance without sanction was materially illegal. The requirement provides for executive scrutiny before prosecution; it does not decide on the merits that abuse, blows or an unlawful demand are authorised. Devinder Singh permits reconsideration if later material changes the assessment of the connection with duty, but the complaint material here was sufficient to decide the question at the outset.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application. It set aside the order dated 17 December 2019 by which the JMFC, Kotma, took cognizance in the unregistered criminal case of 2019. The private complaint was dismissed, and the cognizance was held to be bad for want of sanction under Section 197 CrPC.

Shiv Kumar Tiwari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 11760/2020, 16/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (878) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 21 / prison decongestion and bail - In Re: Contagion of COVID 19 Virus in Prisons, Suo Motu WP(C) 1/2020, order of 23 March 2020, treated overcrowding during COVID-19 as an Article 21 concern and directed State and Union Territory High Powered Committees to identify categories eligible for parole or interim bail, considering offence nature, sentence and severity. The example concerning punishment of up to seven years did not itself grant release to every prisoner. The High Court considered second-wave decongestion and this applicant's individual Section 439 circumstances, including alleged 65-litre liquor seizure and custody, and granted bail without a merits finding or identified committee category. The absence of the case diary led to checks of criminal antecedents and earlier pandemic parole before release rather than an assumption that either was absent.

Safe transit / conditions of release - The Supreme Court's 7 April 2020 order in the same matter directed the Union and States to ensure released prisoners had transport or shelter options and safe transit during lockdown, contemplating Disaster Management Act directions. The High Court applied it through medical examination, conditional testing, treatment if positive, and local administration transport home when medically cleared. Release required a ₹1 lakh personal bond and like surety; the order prescribed compliance with pandemic instructions and provided for its own loss of effect upon specified violations, antecedents, prior temporary parole or bail jump. Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, was cited to direct notification of the complainant, without further discussion of its ratio. The release was to remain operative through trial subject to conditions.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shiv Narayan applied for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC following arrest on 17 July 2021 in Kumbhraj Police Station Crime 193/2021, Guna, alleging IPC Section 353 and M.P. Excise Act Section 34(2). Counsel referred to a seizure of 65 litres of country liquor, custody since arrest, likely trial delay, no antecedents, no pandemic parole and a limited risk of absconding or interference with the prosecution case. The State opposed but could not verify antecedents because the case diary was unavailable. The Court therefore decided on the application averments and facts in the impugned order, during the second COVID-19 wave, by video conference. It quoted the Supreme Court's March 2020 prison-decongestion order and April 2020 safe-transit order, then imposed individual bail, medical, travel and verification conditions.

2. Precedents — Considered : In Re: Contagion of COVID 19 Virus in Prisons, Suo Motu WP(C) 1/2020, Supreme Court order of 23 March 2020, invoked Article 21 to address infection risk in crowded prisons and required State and Union Territory High Powered Committees composed of legal-services, Home/Prison and prison leadership to decide classes appropriate for parole or interim bail. The up-to-seven-year punishment description was an example; categorization also depended on the offence, sentence, gravity and other factors. The Supreme Court's further order of 7 April 2020 required the Union and States to prevent released prisoners from becoming stranded, providing transport home or a temporary shelter option and safe transit; Union action under the Disaster Management Act was contemplated. The High Court applied that concrete implementation principle by ordering medical examination, treatment or clearance and local administration arrangements to send the applicant home. Aparna Bhat v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, was cited in one sentence for intimation of bail to the complainant. Its other reasoning was not reproduced or materially analysed, and the order considered it only for that limited purpose.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed regular bail and Section 437's ordinary conditions were retained by reference. M.P. Excise Act Section 34(2) and IPC Section 353 were the registered offences, not interpreted on their ingredients in this order. The COVID-19 instructions of central, State and local government became conditions of this bail order, subject to the order's stated lapse consequences.

4. Issues : Should bail be granted on the facts of this case during the second pandemic wave with an alleged substantial liquor seizure, short custody and an unavailable case diary? How should the Court implement medical screening and safe transit for release under the Supreme Court's decongestion directions while verifying antecedents and earlier temporary parole?

5. Ratio / Findings : The judge weighed the allegations, custody and prison decongestion concern, and ordered release without commenting on trial merits. The March Supreme Court order placed committee-based population reduction in an Article 21 setting; it did not remove the need for individual bail assessment. In the absence of the case diary, State counsel could not confirm criminal history. Accordingly, the trial court was required to verify antecedents before releasing Shiv Narayan and withhold release if more offences were registered; it also had to verify any earlier pandemic temporary parole and withhold release if present. The April order guided the arrangements for transit: a competent doctor would examine him, test if medically necessary, arrange hospital care if positive, and local authorities would send him home if cleared. A bond, like surety, pandemic-rule compliance and police-station copy were ordered.

The order states that violations of pandemic instructions or bail conditions and bail jump would cause this order automatically to lose effect; that is the wording and scope of this particular bail order, not a general adjudication of every statutory bail-cancellation procedure. Complainant intimation followed the brief Aparna Bhat citation.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the first application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC, subject to verification of criminal antecedents and prior pandemic temporary parole before release; the specified disqualifying findings would preclude release under the order.

Shiv Narayan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 37526/2021, 18/08/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (879) Prev Next

Headnote :- Corruption sanction / administrative satisfaction - State of Maharashtra v. Mahesh G. Jain, (2013) 8 SCC 119, treats sanction under Section 19 as an administrative decision based on prima facie satisfaction, which may be shown by the order or by evidence. Its validity is not tested through a hypertechnical review of the merits. Mohd. Iqbal Ahmed, AIR 1979 SC 677, and State of Rajasthan v. Tarachand, AIR 1973 SC 2131, place on the prosecution the burden of proving the facts put before the authority. The High Court found the signed order and the identifying witness sufficient, despite the author's non-examination.

Corruption sanction / appellate failure of justice - Nanjappa v. State of Karnataka, (2015) 14 SCC 186, distinguishes the Special Judge's power to act where sanction is invalid from the restriction under Sections 19(3)–(4) on appellate interference without failure of justice. State of Bihar v. Rajmangal Ram, (2014) 11 SCC 388, Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1, and State of Mizoram v. C. Sangnghina, (2019) 13 SCC 335, reinforce that standard and the timing of objection. State of Karnataka v. Ameerjan, (2007) 11 SCC 273, cautions against pedantry while preserving the sanction's protective purpose. A wrong date for the completed trap was treated as a typing error without any demonstrated failure of justice.

Official duty / Section 197 CrPC - S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31, requires a reasonable nexus with official duty and permits protection for an excess that remains connected to that duty. Choudhury Parveen Sultana v. State of W.B., (2009) 3 SCC 398, CBI v. B.A. Srinivasan, (2020) 2 SCC 153, Parkash Singh Badal and Rajib Ranjan v. R. Vijaykumar, (2015) 1 SCC 513, exclude protection for unlawful gain or conspiracy for which office is used as a cloak. The demand for payment for demarcation had no reasonable nexus with official duty; adding the conspiracy charge did not require sanction under Section 197.

Charge alteration / fair trial - Nallapareddy Sridhar Reddy v. State of A.P., (2020) 12 SCC 467, explains the power under Section 216 to alter a charge before judgment, the required direct nexus with the record and the safeguards against prejudice under Sections 216–217. The same allegations supported altered charges, seven chosen witnesses were further cross-examined, and defence evidence was heard; the appellants showed no lost opportunity. A new trial was unnecessary, and conviction did not itself establish prejudice.

Hostile witness / corroborated portions - Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 11 SCC 111, Radha Mohan Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 2 SCC 450, Arjun v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2017) 3 SCC 247, and Ramesh Harijan v. State of U.P., (2012) 5 SCC 777, permit either side to rely on dependable portions of hostile testimony after careful scrutiny. The complainant denied the demand, but admitted material signatures, an offer to the Patwari, transfer of the treated notes and the officers' presence. The Court tested these matters against the trap evidence and record; it did not accept his earlier statements wholesale.

Illegal gratification / directed receipt and capacity - Chaturdas Bhagwandas Patel v. State of Gujarat, (1976) 3 SCC 46, explained, in the context of former Section 161 IPC, that actual power to perform the promised official act is unnecessary where a public servant induces a belief that assistance will be given. The Patwari also had an actual role in demarcation. Hazari Lal v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1980) 2 SCC 390, permits receipt to be proved through the surrounding circumstances and distinguishes mere recovery in Sita Ram and Suraj Mal. The recorded demand, coordinated officers, instruction to pay the Kotwar, matched tainted notes and positive tests on his hands and pocket established the prosecution case despite negative officer tests and the Kotwar's unappealed acquittal.

Demarcation record / forged rejection defence - Under the State circular, the Revenue Inspector lacked power to finally reject the demarcation application. The original seized file lacked decision sheets, the later defence papers conflicted and were not proved to predate the trap, and the Tahsildar received a report of pendency after it. The Court found the purported early rejection and website entry unproved, held the later papers fabricated, and affirmed the work-related corruption findings.

Recorded voice / refused sample - The Court assessed the recorder, transcript, identification and related evidence together with the Patwari's written refusal to provide a specimen voice sample.

Forged court exhibit / Section 195 boundary - Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, confines Section 195(1)(b)(ii) to specified document offences committed while the document is in court custody and makes a complaint under Section 340 dependent on expediency in the interests of justice. Because the officers' documents were found forged before production, the High Court directed the trial court to lodge an FIR; that direction was separate from the perjury referral.

False evidence / Section 340 referral - K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, (1992) 3 SCC 178, calls for care; State (NCT of Delhi) v. Pankaj Chaudhary, (2019) 11 SCC 575, and Amarsang Nathaji v. Hardik Harshadbhai Patel, (2017) 1 SCC 113, require a prima facie case of deliberate falsehood and expediency in the interests of justice; a preliminary inquiry is optional. State of Goa v. Jose Maria Albert Vales, (2018) 11 SCC 659, confirms that such an inquiry is not obligatory. Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253, holds that a prospective accused has no right to participate at that preliminary stage.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : These connected appeals challenged the judgment of the Special Judge (Prevention of Corruption Act), Gwalior, dated 29 October 2021 in Special Case 300013/2016. Revenue Inspector Anand Kumar Shukla and Patwari Shiva Bhadoriya were each convicted of IPC Section 120-B (two years' rigorous imprisonment, ₹2,000 fine), Prevention of Corruption Act Section 7 (three years, ₹4,000 fine), and Section 13(1)(d)/13(2) read with Section 120-B (four years, ₹4,000 fine), with stated default terms and concurrent substantive sentences. Co-accused Kotwar Basarat Khan was acquitted; no appeal challenged his acquittal.

According to the complaint, Aslam Khan and his brother sought demarcation of five bighas in Kulaith. An application and fee were lodged on 23 May 2014, with 13 June shown as the target date. He alleged Shukla referred him to Bhadoriya and told him to pay what she demanded; she allegedly sought ₹15,000 at ₹5,000 per bigha and agreed to ₹7,000. He complained to the Lokayukta unit on 24 June. Police supplied a digital recorder, obtained a recording of a conversation on 25 June, opened the sealed recorder, prepared a transcript and a Section 65-B certificate. The 27 June trap was suspended when Bhadoriya could not be reached, and the treated notes were resealed. On information of a further appointment, the trap was renewed on 30 June at Jan Mitra Kendra, amid a local fair. The complainant gave a signal. Both officials and Basarat Khan were inside; the prosecution said Bhadoriya instructed payment to him. The numbered ₹7,000 notes were recovered from his kurta. His fingers and the pocket tested positive for phenolphthalein, as did the complainant's fingers; both appellants' fingers tested negative. The demarcation file was seized from Shukla. Its originals were returned after self-attested copies had been made. Call records, a written refusal by Bhadoriya to supply a voice sample, service and revenue records, panch testimony and forensic records were also produced.

The original 2017 charges were altered under CrPC Section 216 in July 2019 to include Section 120-B and the relevant Prevention of Corruption Act combinations against both appellants and Section 8 read with conspiracy against Basarat Khan. After that alteration the accused selected witnesses for further cross-examination and called defence witnesses. On appeal they challenged sanction (which recited 27 instead of 30 June as trap date), lack of separate Section 197 sanction, alteration of the charges without a new trial, the complainant's hostile account, whether any demarcation work remained, Bhadoriya's competence and voice identification, and proof of conspiracy. They asserted the land application had been rejected before the trap and uploaded online, and that the ₹7,000 went to Basarat for unpaid drumming at a wedding. The High Court examined the alleged rejection documents, the seizure and the conduct of the parties. It also raised whether alleged later fabrication of official records required an FIR and whether the complainant's testimony before the Court warranted a complaint under Section 340.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sanction: State of Maharashtra v. Mahesh G. Jain, (2013) 8 SCC 119, was applied to the prosecution's burden of proving a valid administrative sanction based on relevant facts. Such sanction may be proved by the order itself or by evidence. The authority must reach prima facie satisfaction; the Court does not sit in appeal over the merits of its material. Mohd. Iqbal Ahmed v. State of A.P., AIR 1979 SC 677, sets out two modes of proof: the sanction order may state the facts and satisfaction, or other evidence may establish the facts placed before the authority. State of Rajasthan v. Tarachand, AIR 1973 SC 2131, applied the same burden and explained, through the Privy Council's Gokulchand Dwarkadas Morarka principle and Madan Mohan Singh, that the offence facts need not appear in a particular form if proved by other evidence. The High Court relied on the witness who identified the sanctioning authority's signature, the text of Ex. P.15 and the absence of an earlier objection demanding the maker's examination. State of Karnataka v. Ameerjan, (2007) 11 SCC 273, cautions against construing sanction pedantically but also stresses its protective purpose; the Court applied both sides and treated the wrong trap date as a typing error that caused no prejudice.

Nanjappa v. State of Karnataka, (2015) 14 SCC 186, was quoted at length for the distinction between a Special Judge's ability to hold the prosecution defective for want of valid Section 19(1) sanction and the restriction under Section 19(3)–(4) on reversal by an appellate or revisional court absent actual failure of justice, taking into account whether an objection should have been raised earlier. State of Bihar v. Rajmangal Ram, (2014) 11 SCC 388, describes sanction as a filter for honest public servants while Section 19(3) and CrPC Section 465 balance that protection against inconsequential errors; Parkash Singh Badal v. State of Punjab, (2007) 1 SCC 1, emphasises failure of justice related to the error and timing of objection; State of Mizoram v. C. Sangnghina, (2019) 13 SCC 335, requires a reasoned finding of failure of justice before reversing on an irregularity. The High Court applied these principles without treating every mistake as immaterial. No failure of justice arising from the date discrepancy was shown.

Official duty: S.K. Zutshi v. Bimal Debnath, (2004) 8 SCC 31, states the test of reasonable connection under CrPC Section 197 and a useful question whether omission of the complained-of act could itself be dereliction; even excessive performance may be protected if genuinely connected. Choudhury Parveen Sultana v. State of W.B., (2009) 3 SCC 398, explains that abuse of official power outside lawful duty cannot claim that protection. CBI v. B.A. Srinivasan, (2020) 2 SCC 153, distinguishes actual or purported discharge from office used as a cloak for unlawful gains. Parkash Singh Badal explains that conspiracy and other inherently unlawful acts are not official functions merely because status supplies opportunity. Rajib Ranjan v. R. Vijaykumar, (2015) 1 SCC 513, states the same for conspiracy, misconduct and fabricated records while cautioning that the rule must be properly applied to the facts. The High Court applied the reasonable-nexus principle drawn from these authorities to bribery and the conspiracy charge, not to all alleged official misconduct indiscriminately.

Charge: Nallapareddy Sridhar Reddy v. State of A.P., (2020) 12 SCC 467, explains the wide but judicially controlled Section 216 power, including a new charge after completion of evidence and argument before judgment. It draws on P. Kartikalakshmi for the court's exclusive power, Anant Prakash Sinha for the need for ingredients supported by the record and a fair trial, and Jasvinder Saini for the procedural protections under Sections 216–217. An alteration must be read and explained, and actual prejudice may call for adjournment or retrial. The High Court applied the tests of direct nexus and prejudice to the same underlying material and opportunities actually extended.

Hostility and proof: Rameshbhai Mohanbhai Koli v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 11 SCC 111, and Radha Mohan Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 2 SCC 450, establish that a hostile witness's evidence is not erased from the record and dependable portions supporting either side may be used after careful scrutiny. Rameshbhai draws on C. Muniappan and other decisions to distinguish material contradictions from trivial discrepancies. Arjun v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2017) 3 SCC 247, reiterates cautious use and the usual search for corroboration, quoting Paramjeet Singh and related authorities. Ramesh Harijan v. State of U.P., (2012) 5 SCC 777, applies the same approach to signatures on recovery records, while cautioning through Balaka Singh that truth may be separated from falsehood only where that separation is possible, and through Appabhai against treating minor embellishment as fatal. The High Court used the complainant's admitted conduct and signatures with other evidence while rejecting his alternative payment account. Hazari Lal v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1980) 2 SCC 390, holds that the transfer of tainted money may be inferred from a reliable chain of surrounding events, not necessarily directly seen; it distinguishes Sita Ram and Suraj Mal, where mere recovery without dependable proof of voluntary receipt did not suffice. The High Court used it for circumstantial receipt through Basarat rather than for an independent presumption based solely on recovery from an appellant. Chaturdas Bhagwandas Patel v. State of Gujarat, (1976) 3 SCC 46, in the context of former Section 161 IPC, says a public servant may induce payment by representing capacity to assist even without actual power or intent; the Court used this to reject Bhadoriya's competence defence, also finding that as Patwari she had a real demarcation role.

False documents and court process: Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, limits the Section 195(1)(b)(ii) bar to listed offences committed after a document comes into court custody; its Section 340 discussion makes a complaint depend on expediency in the interests of the administration of justice, rather than the victim's loss alone. The Court applied the custody distinction to its finding that the documents were made outside court and directed an FIR. Dhananjay Sharma v. State of Haryana, (1995) 3 SCC 757, explains the grave effect of false affidavits and evidence on judicial administration, citing Chandra Shashi.

For the complainant's possible false evidence, K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India, (1992) 3 SCC 178, requires care, a prima facie likelihood of establishing the offence and expediency in the interests of justice. State (NCT of Delhi) v. Pankaj Chaudhary, (2019) 11 SCC 575, sets out the two Section 340 preconditions and quotes Amarsang Nathaji v. Hardik Harshadbhai Patel, (2017) 1 SCC 113: a contradictory statement alone does not establish deliberate falsehood. The court must find intentional falsity and expediency in the interests of justice; a preliminary inquiry is optional. The quoted discussion also invokes Iqbal Singh Marwah and Chajoo Ram's caution against frequent perjury complaints on doubtful or innocent inaccuracies. State of Goa v. Jose Maria Albert Vales, (2018) 11 SCC 659, confirms that preliminary inquiry is not obligatory; Pritish v. State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253, holds that a prospective accused has no right to be heard at the preliminary expediency stage. The Court adopted these threshold principles, dispensed with another preliminary inquiry, and directed a complaint; the ensuing proceedings before the trial court remain separate from proof of guilt.

3. Statutes considered : Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 Sections 7 and 13(1)(d) read with 13(2) supplied the bribery and misconduct convictions, with IPC Section 120-B as the participation charge. Section 19(1) made competent prosecution sanction a precondition; Sections 19(3)–(4) restrict appellate or revisional interference on account of defects without failure of justice and require consideration of when the objection was raised. CrPC Section 197 protects specified public servants for an offence reasonably related to actual or purported official duty, a nexus absent for a bribe demand or criminal conspiracy here; no independent Section 197 sanction was required. Sections 216(1)–(5) authorise charge alteration before judgment, require explanation to accused, provide for continuation, adjournment or a new trial according to the question of prejudice, and address any additional sanction; Section 217 concerns recall after alteration. IPC Section 120-B was added to the officers' charges; Section 8 PC Act was the Kotwar's altered charge, but his acquittal was not before the Court. Section 114 of the Evidence Act was discussed through Hazari Lal's circumstantial inference, and was not treated as an automatic substitute for foundational proof in this case. CrPC Section 91 arose in the unsuccessful trial request for original demarcation records. Section 129 of the M.P. Land Revenue Code and the 28 January 2014 departmental circular explained the Inspector's field role and the Tahsildar's authority to make the final demarcation decision. CrPC Section 195(1)(b)(ii) was analysed in relation to fabrication before production in court, as distinct from an offence committed while the exhibit is in court custody. Section 195(1)(b)(i) and Section 340 supplied the judicial complaint procedure for intentional false evidence, including a discretionary preliminary inquiry and an expediency finding. CrPC Section 465 was discussed in the Supreme Court sanction quotation.

4. Issues : (i) Did the sanction order, proved through identification of its signer rather than examination of the sanctioning authority, show proper application of mind; did its wrong trap date occasion failure of justice on appeal? (ii) Did Section 197 require further sanction when the officials' bribery and conspiracy related to work they were authorised to do? (iii) Did Section 216's 2019 alteration of the 2017 charges, after prosecution evidence and accused examination, require a fresh trial or was meaningful defence opportunity provided? (iv) Which portions of the complainant's hostile testimony remained reliable, and did the surrounding trap evidence establish demand, directed payment and conspiracy notwithstanding no recovery from or positive tests on the two officials? (v) Did a previously rejected application, an allegedly uploaded order, lack of the Patwari's final decision authority, and absence of scientific voice comparison defeat the prosecution? (vi) Did the record show fabricated official documents made before filing in court, and did Section 195 bar an FIR? (vii) Was there sufficient material and expediency in the interests of justice to direct a Section 340 complaint concerning the complainant's testimony without a further preliminary inquiry or his prior participation? Sentencing and the Kotwar's acquittal were considered, but his separate guilt was not an appeal issue.

5. Ratio / Findings : Sanction: the order identified the facts and was proved by a witness identifying the sanctioning authority's signature. Failure to examine that authority was not automatically fatal, especially without the defence raising the issue while proof was being led. The mistaken reference to a trap on 27 June was treated as a typing error in the sequence of the suspended attempt and the 30 June recovery. No specific failure of justice was shown. The Court upheld Section 19 sanction, recognising both valid prior satisfaction and the appellate restriction rather than treating absence of a valid sanction before the Special Judge as invariably harmless.

Section 197: demarcation was an official function, but obtaining illegal gratification for performing it was not an official duty or an excess reasonably connected to such duty. The reasonable-nexus test concerns the alleged act, rather than merely the office held by the accused. The conspiracy allegation likewise did not become an official act. Thus the additional statutory sanction objection failed.

Alteration: the trial court reformulated the same allegations, read and explained the added charges, offered the opportunity for re-examination and further cross-examination, allowed the accused's chosen witnesses to be further tested and received defence evidence. The appellants identified no charge they had been unable to answer and no opportunity they had lost. A notation that earlier charges were cancelled did not convert a permitted alteration into an automatic fresh trial; later conviction was not itself evidence of prejudice.

Hostility: Aslam Khan denied a bribe demand and asserted he paid Basarat's drumming dues, but admitted the application, many signatures on the complaints and trap records, his offer of money to Bhadoriya, handing over treated notes to Basarat and both officers' presence. The Court tested his denial and alternative explanation against his sustained cooperation with the trap, panch evidence and documents. The complainant's conduct and corroborated admissions could be relied on despite his hostility. Trap evidence explained two attempts, storage and return of treated money, numbered recovery from Basarat and the chemical results, including negative results for the officers. The Court accepted the circumstantial evidence of payment at the officials' direction. Basarat's unappealed acquittal was left undisturbed even though the Court considered its trial reasoning implausible.

Pending work: The alleged 15/16 June rejection was contradicted by the original seized seven-page file without order sheets, a 5 July communication of continuing pendency, inconsistent notes about an objection versus a damaged map, unserved notice, unproved and undated list of rejected cases, and no computer record establishing upload. The Revenue Inspector could not finally reject the application under the circular. The Court found the documents Ex. D.2–D.6 prepared later after the originals had been returned, and the list Ex. D.1 unreliable; neither displaced the finding concerning the purpose of the bribe. It regarded the Patwari as involved in demarcation, but also applied Chaturdas to explain why exact competence to make the final order was not essential where payment was induced through official position. A recording of the conversation was made and transcribed, call records showed relevant contacts, and she refused in writing to supply a comparison sample.

Conspiracy and guilt: Shukla's referral to Bhadoriya, her negotiation of the bribe, joint presence and direction to pay Basarat provided the chain of circumstances from which the Court found their common design proved beyond reasonable doubt. It affirmed their IPC Section 120-B and Prevention of Corruption Act convictions and concurrent sentences. The sentence challenge failed in view of the Court's assessment of corruption's seriousness.

Consequential process: the alleged official defence documents were, on the Court's findings, fabricated outside the judicial proceeding and then filed to support a false rejection story. The bar under Section 195(1)(b)(ii), concerning documents in court custody, therefore did not apply. The Court directed the trial court to lodge an FIR against the two appellants for forging the official records; that direction for a separate investigation was not an additional conviction in these appeals. The complainant's material change from complaint and trap participation to exculpatory trial account prompted the Court to infer deliberate false testimony and consider judicial administration. Applying the two Section 340 conditions, it found a prima facie case and expediency, dispensed with further preliminary inquiry and directed the trial court to make a complaint.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both criminal appeals, filed respectively by Shiva Bhadoriya and Anand Kumar Shukla. The Special Judge's 29 October 2021 conviction and sentence were affirmed: the four-year, three-year and two-year rigorous imprisonment terms and respective fines and default terms remained in force, with substantive sentences concurrent. Shukla, already in jail, was to serve the remaining sentence. Bhadoriya's bail bonds were cancelled; she had 15 days to surrender, failing which the trial court could issue a warrant. The trial court was directed separately to lodge an FIR regarding the officers' allegedly forged official demarcation records and to make a Section 340 CrPC complaint concerning Aslam Khan's court evidence. Basarat Khan's unappealed acquittal remained outside the disposition. Free judgment copies were to be furnished and the trial record returned for information and compliance.

Shiva Bhadoriya and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 6664/2021 & 6678/2021, 12/09/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (880) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail condition / public money - Ramesh Kumar v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2023) 7 SCC 461, permits exceptional consideration, in the larger public interest, of an accused's voluntary offer to account for all or part of allegedly misappropriated public money before bail is finally decided. The quoted rule does not warrant the same approach in a private cheating dispute. Applying it to alleged fictitious procurement and transport entries, the Court noted over four months' custody, the applicant's ₹10 lakh offer and his potential responsibility for the entries despite his claim of pressure. Release required deposit of that sum with Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation and production of the receipt, together with a ₹1 lakh personal bond and a surety in the same amount. The Court cited Aparna Bhat v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2021) 16 SCC 179, for the consequential direction to notify the complainant; it did not adopt a further test for bail from that authority.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shiva Singh, a computer operator at a society, sought regular bail under Section 483 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, in Crime 61/2024 registered at Dharkundi police station, Satna. He had been arrested on 28 June 2024. The alleged offences were under Sections 406, 417, 420, 467, 468, 471 and 120-B IPC and Section 13(1)(b) of the Prevention of Corruption Act read with amended Section 13(2). The prosecution alleged that no food-grain had actually been purchased, although the computer records showed purchases worth about ₹90 lakh and transportation of grain that did not exist. Defence counsel stated that public money of ₹92.64 lakh had been misappropriated by more than eight people. The applicant claimed that he had been compelled to enter false information. The Court regarded his own act of making the entries as potentially significant despite the alleged pressure, without determining the accusation at the bail stage.

The applicant relied on an anticipatory-bail order dated 6 September 2024 in favour of co-accused Samrat Singh, who had undertaken to deposit ₹10 lakh. Another co-accused, Dhananjay Dwivedi, had refused a deposit, argued the case on merits and been denied bail on 3 October. The order records the applicant's offer to deposit ₹10 lakh and his reliance on custody of more than four months. The State opposed release. The differing earlier orders provided factual context; parity alone was not held to determine this application.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ramesh Kumar v. State (NCT of Delhi); 2023:INSC:596; (2023) 7 SCC 461, paragraph 26, was quoted and applied. It left open an exception for alleged misappropriation of public money where an accused voluntarily offers to account for the whole or part of that money. In such a case, the court may consider, in the larger public interest, whether the amount should be returned to the system before the application for anticipatory or regular bail is finally considered. The decision expressly distinguished private disputes concerning money allegedly obtained by cheating. The Court applied that limited exception to the alleged public procurement loss and the applicant's undertaking, together with its assessment of custody and his potential responsibility for the entries. It required actual payment and production of the receipt before release.

The Court cited XYZ (sic Aparna Bhat and Ors.) v. State of Madhya Pradesh; 2021:INSC:192; (2021) 16 SCC 179, only for intimation of the grant of bail to the complainant. The order did not reproduce or analyse any passage or broader ratio from that judgment; its treatment was confined to the consequential notification direction.

3. Statutes considered : Section 483 BNSS conferred jurisdiction to consider regular bail. The charge description referred to the 2018 amendment, without substantive interpretation. The public-money condition rested on the Ramesh Kumar precedent and the Court's discretion in granting bail; it was not a judicial determination of the proceeds. The bond and surety requirements, operation of the order until the end of trial and its loss of effect upon bail jump were the operative release terms.

4. Issues : Could the applicant be granted regular bail on the basis of custody recorded as exceeding four months and a voluntary deposit of ₹10 lakh towards alleged misappropriation of public money, despite his claim that he had been compelled to make the false computer entries? How did the Supreme Court's exceptional category concerning public money, as distinct from private claims of cheating, apply? What payment, bond and post-release conditions should govern?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court reproduced the qualified rule in Ramesh Kumar and treated the allegation as involving public funds. It recorded custody of more than four months and considered the applicant's own offer to deposit ₹10 lakh. On this provisional record, his explanation of pressure did not make the inaccurate entries irrelevant to his potential responsibility. The earlier co-accused orders reflected different positions concerning deposit and the merits; they did not become a mechanical rule of parity. Exercising its discretion to grant bail, the Court permitted release only after deposit of the specified sum with Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation Limited and production of proof before the trial court, in addition to security. In view of Aparna Bhat, it also directed intimation to the complainant.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for regular bail subject to deposit of ₹10 lakh with the Madhya Pradesh State Civil Supplies Corporation Limited and production of the receipt.

Shiva Singh v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 46413/2024, 25/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (881) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent powers / cognizable allegations - Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, and State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, caution against prematurely stopping police investigation where an offence is disclosed. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan also quotes Swapan Kumar Guha on disclosure depending on the facts, and Jeffrey J. Diermeier on careful exercise of the power to prevent abuse of process. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, and State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, reject a roving inquiry or assessment of the merits before investigation is complete. S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, illustrates Bhajan Lal's categories concerning absence of an offence and manifest malice. The Court applied the test of taking allegations at face value to the specific accusations concerning a car demand, cruelty and ornaments.

Quashing / prosecution record and stage - Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, requires careful and exceptional exercise of powers under Sections 482/397. The prosecution allegations must be considered as a whole to determine whether they disclose an offence, without predicting conviction or marshalling evidence; a civil aspect does not itself extinguish criminality. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterates Bhajan Lal's caution against examining reliability. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, recognises exceptions for absence of an offence, a legal bar and clear malice, but cautions against prematurely ending a legitimate prosecution. Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, reproduces the Bhajan Lal categories and confines Madhavrao's special treatment of civil disputes. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, preserves quashing where even the uncontroverted allegations disclose no offence. M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, protects against absurd harassment while cautioning against frequent interference. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, CrA 709/2021 (30 June 2021), reject detailed assessment of a disputed defence and explain that an FIR need not be an encyclopaedia. Applying these principles together, the Court declined to quash the triable case.

Defence documents / limited exception - Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, permits consideration of a defence document that is public or whose veracity the complainant does not dispute, in an appropriate quashing case. Amit Kapoor and CBI v. Arvind Khanna otherwise exclude contested material produced by the accused and minute findings of fact. The applicants' photographs, WhatsApp exchanges, gifted phone and transfers were private material requiring proof and could not establish falsity at this stage.

Matrimonial relatives / specific allegations - Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, applies the ordinary test of whether a case is triable, while cautioning against merely omnibus allegations against relatives. Its discussion distinguishes Neelu Chopra, Manoj Mahavir Prasad Khaitan and Geeta Mehrotra on their facts. Here, the alleged demand and beating by the husband, and the sister-in-law's alleged insistence on a car and involvement with jewellery, disclosed specific prima facie roles. The credibility of those allegations remained for trial.

Unjoined official / personal allegation - The Court declined to decide the applicants' personal accusation that the investigating officer had colluded with the complainant, because the officer had neither been impleaded in her personal capacity nor given an opportunity to be heard.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant's husband, Shiva Soni, and her sister-in-law, the co-applicant, sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of FIR 259/2023, dated 18 September 2023, registered at Cantonment police station, Jabalpur, under Sections 498-A and 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, together with proceedings in RCT 9490/2023 before the JMFC. The complainant, respondent 2, married applicant 1 on 10 May 2023. She alleged that within days he demanded a Creta car, that she discussed the demand with her in-laws and applicant 2, that she was harassed for dowry, and that her gold ornaments or streedhan were taken. She alleged that her signatures were obtained on blank stamp papers and that she returned to her parents after an altercation over dowry. She also described an incident on 29 June when her husband and in-laws sought to take her back. She feared for her safety and alleged that they beat and abused her, threatened divorce and remarriage, and obtained her signatures on an agreement. In her Section 161 statement, the Court noted a specific accusation that her husband beat her over the car demand and that the sister-in-law insisted that her parents provide a car because nothing had been given in dowry.

The applicants denied cruelty and any demand for dowry. They relied on cohabitation of roughly twelve days, the timing of the September FIR and an earlier July complaint which, they asserted, gave a different account and had not been supplied to them. They alleged that investigating officer Kamla Patel had colluded with the complainant to obtain a new complaint and FIR, and argued that the original complaint disclosed no cognizable offence. They produced photographs showing a cordial relationship before and after marriage, WhatsApp messages, a gifted phone and payments made by the husband to the complainant. They maintained that these materials disproved the dowry demand. The State was represented.

2. Precedents — Considered : FIR and investigation restraint: Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, disapproved of premature quashing of an FIR without proper police investigation, unless continuation itself would abuse the process. Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, holds that an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence ordinarily permits statutory investigation; interference on the ground of alleged malice is exceptional. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, quotes State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha on the need to complete investigation where the facts disclose an offence, and Jeffrey J. Diermeier on the three purposes of Section 482, its wide but non-arbitrary power and its cautious exercise to prevent injustice. The High Court applied these principles in declining to decide disputed accusations at the threshold. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, disapproved of quashing before investigation through a roving inquiry into a disputed, allegedly coerced settlement and serious allegations. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018)

5 SCC 718, rejects a premature assessment of the merits.

S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, reiterates two Bhajan Lal categories: allegations which, even if accepted in their entirety, disclose no prima facie offence; or proceedings that are manifestly malicious and motivated by private vengeance. It requires sparing intervention, while recognising the need to protect a person from wholly untenable complaints and abuse, drawing on Medchl Chemicals, Zandu Pharmaceutical Works and Shakson Belthissor. The Court examined whether the present FIR fell within an exception for absence of an offence or abuse and concluded that it did not. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336, requires a judge to set out the facts, apply the relevant quashing principles and give reasons. The High Court then described the parties' allegations and explained why they raised a triable case.

Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, provides the comprehensive framework under Sections 397/482 and at the charge stage reproduced by the Court. It requires assessment of whether the uncontroverted prosecution facts prima facie satisfy the offence, permits intervention for inherent improbability, a legal bar or patent injustice, and balances personal freedom against prosecution. A meticulous evidentiary inquiry or prediction of acquittal is impermissible; ordinarily, the prosecution record must be used rather than external material supplied by the accused. A civil claim and a criminal offence may coexist. The quoted discussion confines Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia's reasoning concerning civil disputes; it does not authorise a conviction-probability test in every case. The High Court followed this rule concerning the procedural stage. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, likewise cites Bhajan Lal's rejection of a rigid formula and the prohibition on inquiries into the genuineness of FIR allegations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, permits appropriate consideration of a document produced by the accused if it is public or its veracity is not disputed by the complainant. The applicants' private photographs, messages and payments required proof and did not establish that exception. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, distinguishes cases of abuse, inherent improbability, an express bar and absence of an offence from an attempt to use Section 482 as a substitute for trial. The Court treated the contested explanations as matters for trial.

Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, sets out the broad inherent power, its exceptional exercise and its relationship with specific statutory remedies. It reproduces Bhajan Lal's seven illustrative categories, Indian Oil Corporation's warning against stifling a legitimate prosecution where the basic factual ingredients are pleaded, and State of Orissa v. Saroj Kumar Sahoo's restraint on assessing probabilities. Through State of Bihar v. P.P. Sharma, it explains that Madhavrao does not impose a universal duty to estimate the prospect of ultimate conviction; genuine disputes that are predominantly civil and involve settlement considerations have their own context. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, retains the exceptions concerning allegations that disclose no offence at face value and uncontroverted evidence. M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, cautions that interference may obstruct inquiry, but also requires intervention against absurd, inherently improbable accusations used to harass. Its quoted supporting authorities, L. Muniswamy and Kurukshetra University, explain that balance. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, rejects High Court findings on minute, disputed matters of defence even after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, CrA 709/2021, order of 30 June 2021, explains that Section 482 does not permit scrutiny of the kind undertaken at trial and that an FIR need not be an encyclopaedia. The Court relied on these principles in leaving credibility and contested documents for trial.

Matrimonial relative: Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, permits quashing where allegations are absurd or disclose no case. Where allegations of matrimonial cruelty raise a triable case, however, the Court does not assess the reliability of the version or counter-version. It also cautions against omnibus allegations targeting relatives who are generally uninvolved in the couple's affairs. The decision quotes Amit Kapoor and distinguishes Neelu Chopra, Manoj Mahavir Prasad Khaitan and Geeta Mehrotra on their facts. The High Court applied that qualified rule to the specific car-demand and jewellery allegations against the sister-in-law, as well as the husband's alleged conduct.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC confers inherent jurisdiction on the High Court to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process and secure justice, subject to restraint appropriate to the procedural stage and the recognised exceptions. Section 397 concerning revision, Section 228 concerning charge, and Sections 173(2), 156(1) and 155(2) arose in the quoted Supreme Court framework, particularly the distinction between investigation of an FIR and review of a charge. They were not separate requests for relief here. The complainant's Section 161 statement supplied further specific allegations at this stage, rather than sworn proof of guilt. Sections 498-A and 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were the FIR offences. The Court found prima facie allegations of cruelty, dowry demand and participation, without finally determining the statutory ingredients. The application sought quashing of both the FIR and the pending trial proceedings.

4. Issues : Did the FIR and the complainant's Section 161 account, accepted for the threshold inquiry, allege facts capable of constituting cognizable offences concerning dowry cruelty and related conduct against the husband and the sister-in-law individually? Could the brief cohabitation, delay, allegedly inconsistent earlier complaint, cordial photographs, messages, gift and bank transfers establish falsity without testing the evidence? Could the personal accusation that the investigating officer had conspired with the complainant justify a finding against an official who had neither been impleaded nor heard?

5. Ratio / Findings : The power under Section 482 is broad, but cannot be used at the FIR or charge-sheet stage to decide whether a witness is truthful or defence documents outweigh her account. The starting point is to take the allegations at face value. Genuine cases involving absence of an offence, a legal bar, inherent improbability or clear abuse remain exceptions; investigation or trial must not be stifled where material facts plausibly disclose criminal conduct. Here, the husband allegedly demanded a car shortly after marriage, beat the complainant over that demand and took her ornaments. The sister-in-law was not implicated merely because of her relationship: the Section 161 account attributed to her an insistence on a car for her brother, and the complaint alleged her participation in taking the gold ornaments. Alleged family discussions, signatures on blank papers, return to the parental home, fear, abuse and threats provided further context. These uncontroverted allegations were capable of constituting a cognizable offence.

The Court declined to take judicial notice of the applicants' private photographs, WhatsApp messages, gifted phone or transfers as conclusive material. They required proof and an opportunity to be tested; no exception for a public or undisputed document was established. Nor did the asserted earlier complaint, the time interval or the twelve days at the matrimonial home establish on their face that all stated ingredients were absent. The personal accusation that investigating officer Kamla Patel had colluded with the complainant could not be determined against her without impleading her in her personal capacity and giving her an opportunity to explain. Applying Taramani Parakh's caution to the sister-in-law individually, the Court found specific material allegations rather than a purely omnibus accusation.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. FIR 259/2023 and RCT 9490/2023 before the JMFC, Jabalpur, were not quashed. Proof of cruelty, dowry demand, the jewellery allegations, the applicants' private records and the contested investigative facts remained for determination in the competent criminal proceedings.

Shiva Soni and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 55076/2023, 17/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (882) Prev Next

Headnote :- Rape / promise of marriage and misconception - Pramod Suryabhan Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 3 SCC (Cri) 903, applies Sections 90 and 375 IPC and distinguishes a promise made dishonestly from a promise made in good faith but later broken. Bad faith when the promise was made and an immediate or direct nexus between the resulting misconception and the woman's agreement to the particular sexual act are necessary. Its discussion of Deepak Gulati, Uday, Anurag Soni and Yedla Srinivasa Rao preserves the requirements concerning the accused's knowledge and the woman's active, reasoned choice.

Successive acts / independent consent - The Court observed that consent to an initial encounter does not constitute consent to every later encounter. On the face of the FIR, the complainant alleged demands concerning her salary and relocation, violence and her decision to end the proposed marriage. The applicant then allegedly threatened exposure and self-harm and induced her to visit Jabalpur on 21 November 2020, when another sexual act occurred. The Court found that the question of consent to the later act prima facie fell within Section 90.

Inherent powers / no roving trial - Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, and XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, call for restraint in interfering with investigation and deciding disputed consent. S. Khushboo, (2010) 5 SCC 600, and M. Srikanth, (2019) 10 SCC 373, preserve the exceptions where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence or the proceedings manifestly abuse the process. Amit Kapoor, (2012) 9 SCC 460, Ajay Kumar Das, (2011) 12 SCC 319, Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, and M.N. Ojha, (2009) 9 SCC 682, require a careful balance without predicting conviction. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, (2019) 13 SCC 350, confines consideration of documents produced by the accused to appropriate cases involving public or undisputed material. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, CrA 709/2021 (30 June 2021), reject minute factual scrutiny at the quashing stage. Applying these authorities, the Court refused the applicant's request to disbelieve an FIR that raised triable allegations and dismissed the petition.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shivam Gupta applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime 12/2021, dated 27 March 2021, registered at Mahila Thana, Katni, and the resulting proceedings under Sections 376(2)(n), 294, 323 and 506 IPC. The complainant, respondent 2, was an adult woman employed as a police constable. Their families had arranged a proposed marriage. The FIR reproduced in the judgment stated that they became close through telephone conversations and that the applicant first had sexual intercourse with her on 5 April 2020 after assuring her of imminent marriage. It also described subsequent encounters. She alleged that he demanded that she transfer her salary to his family or leave her job and move to Jabalpur, beat and abused her when she refused, gave her abortion pills during a pregnancy, and threatened to circulate their joint photographs and obstruct another marriage when she decided to end the match. The FIR identified 21 November 2020 as the last encounter. She stated that he summoned her to Jabalpur after cutting his wrist; she went to persuade him, stayed overnight and intercourse occurred despite the changed relationship and the pressure. She reported the case four months later.

The applicant argued that an adult constable familiar with the law had voluntarily maintained the relationship and had herself ended the marriage arrangement. He submitted that a later failure to marry could therefore not amount to a misconception under Section 90. Respondent 2 argued that the demands, violence and threats showed exploitation and an intention to deceive her from the beginning. The Court subsequently examined consent as it related to successive acts during the relationship. The parties relied on Deepak Gulati, Tilak Raj, Uday, Pramod Suryabhan Pawar, Sonu and three M.P. High Court decisions, including Senjeet Singh. In its later reasoning, the Court quoted and applied Pramod and an extensive series of decisions on Section 482.

2. Precedents — Considered : Pramod Suryabhan Pawar v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 3 SCC (Cri) 903, is the central substantive authority reproduced by the High Court. It reads Section 375 IPC and Explanation 2 with Section 90. Consent requires an active, unequivocal, reasoned and voluntary choice concerning the specific sexual act; the absence of physical resistance alone does not establish consent. Section 90 excludes consent given under fear or misconception where the person doing the act knows or has reason to believe that consent was given on that basis. A promise made in good faith but later unfulfilled differs from a false promise made without an intention to marry when it was given. For a misconception based on a promise of marriage, the promise must have been dishonest at inception and of immediate relevance, or bear a direct nexus, to the woman's decision to engage in that act. Pawar's quotation explains Dhruvaram Sonar and Kaini Rajan on active deliberation; Anurag Soni and Deepak Gulati on initial dishonesty as distinct from unforeseen failure; Yedla Srinivasa Rao on a sustained deceptive promise; and Uday on both the woman's misconception and the accused's knowledge. In Uday, love and known family opposition could sever the nexus between the promise and consent. The High Court applied this framework, acknowledged that there might have been consent at the outset, and distinguished the later alleged pressure and intercourse.

On the separate question of quashing, Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, rejects premature intervention before proper investigation in the absence of abuse. Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, generally leaves allegations disclosing a cognizable offence to police investigation, while recognising intervention in exceptional cases of malicious proceedings. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, quotes Swapan Kumar Guha on the need for investigation once an offence is disclosed, and Jeffrey J. Diermeier on the three purposes of inherent jurisdiction and its cautious, non-arbitrary exercise. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, rejects a roving inquiry and an assumption of consent where allegations of coercion and a disputed document require investigation. The High Court applied that warning, specific to the procedural stage, to the present allegations. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, likewise disapproves of deciding the merits before investigation is complete.

S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, refers to Bhajan Lal's categories concerning allegations that disclose no offence even at face value and proceedings that are manifestly malicious. Through Medchl Chemicals, Zandu Pharmaceutical Works and Shakson Belthissor, it explains the need both to avoid stifling a legitimate prosecution and to prevent harassment through wholly untenable proceedings. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336, requires the judge to set out the factual context and reasons for interference. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, states the broad test under Sections 397/482 and at the charge stage. The uncontroverted prosecution allegations must be assessed as a whole; intervention is permissible where ingredients are absent, allegations are inherently absurd, a legal bar applies or serious injustice arises. The Court must not predict conviction, marshal evidence or ordinarily rely on external material produced by the accused. Its discussion confines Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia's special-facts doctrine to predominantly civil disputes; likely acquittal is not a universal test for quashing.

Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterates Bhajan Lal's flexible categories and the restraint required in examining the reliability of FIR allegations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognises a narrow exception for defence documents that are public or whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. No such document formed the basis of the applicant's plea, as recorded in this order, that the allegations were false. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, preserves the categories of no offence, an express bar and demonstrated abuse, while reserving assessment of reliability for trial. Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, sets out Bhajan Lal's seven illustrative categories and Indian Oil's requirement of a basic factual foundation. Through Saroj Kumar Sahoo, it rejects an assessment of probabilities; through P.P. Sharma, it explains that Madhavrao does not universally permit an early prediction of conviction. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, confirms that quashing is justified where the uncontroverted material truly discloses no offence. M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, cautions against frequent obstruction of proceedings, while also rejecting tolerance of patently absurd harassment. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, rejects detailed findings on a disputed defence under Section 482, even after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, CrA 709/2021, 30 June 2021, explains that examination of an FIR is not trial scrutiny and that an FIR need not be encyclopaedic. These authorities supported the High Court's refusal to decide whether the informant was lying or the applicant's account would prevail.

3. Statutes considered : Section 375 IPC, particularly the description concerning absence of consent and Explanation 2's requirement of voluntary agreement to the specific act, was read with Section 90's exclusion of consent under fear or misconception and its condition concerning the accused's knowledge. The registered charge was repeated rape under Section 376(2)(n). Sections 294, 323 and 506 IPC were the accompanying FIR charges, concerning allegations of abuse, beating and intimidation. Section 482 CrPC conferred inherent jurisdiction to prevent abuse and secure justice; it did not authorise findings on reliability of the kind required at trial.

4. Issues : Did the FIR, taken at face value, allege a misconception under Section 90 or a non-voluntary sexual act sufficient to resist quashing, despite the first encounter following the families' marriage arrangement and the woman's eventual decision to end it? What did the false-promise test require concerning the applicant's original intention, causation and knowledge of the misconception? Could earlier voluntary intimacy constitute consent to an encounter alleged to have occurred after pressure, violence, threats and the breakup? Could the High Court, on a petition under Section 482, accept the applicant's denial and determine the complainant's credibility instead of allowing the criminal process to test the matter?

5. Ratio / Findings : Pramod Suryabhan Pawar requires more than subsequent non-marriage to establish a misconception under Section 90 based on a promise. The false promise must have been made without a bona fide intention to marry at the time, and the misconception must directly cause the woman's agreement, with the requisite knowledge on the accused's part. The High Court expressly acknowledged that the first encounter after the marriage arrangement might have been consensual. It then considered the alleged changes during the relationship: pressure to transfer her salary or leave her job and move to Jabalpur, physical abuse, the complainant's decision to discontinue the relationship, threats to defame her through photographs and to harm himself, and the later Jabalpur visit and intercourse. Consent must be assessed separately for each act. On these particular allegations, the Court stated that the applicant's intentions became dishonest during the relationship and that the question of consent to the later act prima facie fell within Section 90.

The petitioner's contention that the allegations were false required an assessment of the informant's reliability and the factual significance of the relationship. Section 482 permits quashing where an FIR truly discloses no offence or abuses the process. It does not permit such a detailed, roving inquiry where the account, if proved, can establish a cognizable offence. The complainant's age and occupation did not by themselves establish consent to the later alleged act, and her decision to end the marriage plan did not automatically resolve that question. The Court declined to determine the defence version before trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482; FIR Crime 12/2021 and the related criminal proceedings were not quashed.

Shivam Gupta v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 32728/2021, 30/06/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (883) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abduction / forced movement - Section 362 IPC covers a person who is compelled by force or induced by deceit to go from any place. According to the FIR and Section 161 statement, the applicant called the complainant outside, forced him into a car and took him away against his will while he was restrained and beaten. At the anticipatory-bail stage, the Court treated this account as a prima facie allegation of abduction. It rejected the claim of voluntary release because the complainant's father and two companions allegedly intercepted the car and secured his release.

Anticipatory bail / conduct and profession - The Court rejected the applicant's profession as a practising advocate as a ground for special treatment; counsel identified no statutory privilege or exemption. His professional duty to uphold the law did not lessen the alleged seriousness. A notice under Section 41A CrPC and non-arrest during investigation did not determine the later bail request. The applicant had not attended court when the charge-sheet was filed, faced allegations of forcible abduction, and had described himself as a student in a withdrawn Section 482 petition despite Bar membership since 2020. The Court regarded that unexplained inconsistency as adverse to the claim that he had approached it with clean hands and declined anticipatory bail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shivam Yadav filed his first application for anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC in Crime 87/2024, registered at Sanjeevani Nagar police station, Jabalpur, under Sections 294, 323, 365, 506 and 34 IPC. The complainant, an LL.B. student whose father practised law, alleged that on 5 March 2024 the applicant telephoned him and asked him to come outside. The applicant said they were going to Abhay Rana's house and, when the complainant objected, forced him into an i20 car. The complainant alleged that the applicant abused him and assaulted him with punches or kicks while Som Thakur and Yash Garg held him. He contacted his father, who arrived with Ayush Patel and Shobhit Mishra, after which he was released. He alleged that he was threatened with death on release. The State disputed the applicant's claim that the release was voluntary, stating that the father and his companions had intercepted the vehicle and witnessed the beating.

The applicant submitted that he was a practising lawyer and a member of the District Bar Association, had not been arrested during investigation and had received a notice under Section 41A CrPC. Counsel relied on Supreme Court authorities concerning non-arrest and bail, but admitted that the applicant had not appeared before the Magistrate when the charge-sheet was filed. Counsel described the accusations as not grievous and denied that they disclosed abduction. The Court also examined an earlier quashing petition under Section 482, withdrawn by the applicant on 2 April 2024. Its cause title described him as a student, although the identification document filed with the bail application showed Bar Association membership since 2020. Counsel could not explain that description. The applicant offered to attend court in future and assured the Court that he would not mislead it.

2. Precedents — Considered : Counsel cited Siddharth v. State of U.P., (2022) 1 SCC 676; Aman Preet Singh v. CBI, (2022) 13 SCC 764; Mahdoom Bava v. CBI, 2023:INSC:263; and Satender Kumar Antil v. CBI in support of relief after the Section 41A notice and non-arrest during investigation. The Court based its assessment on the text of Section 362, the particular allegations, the applicant's non-appearance and his conflicting descriptions of his professional status.

3. Statutes considered : Section 438 CrPC governed the first application for anticipatory bail. Section 41A was relevant because notice had been issued during investigation. Section 362 IPC defines abduction as compelling a person by force, or inducing a person by deceitful means, to go from any place. Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC concerned the allegations of abuse, hurt, intimidation and common intention. The Court considered witness statements under Section 161 CrPC at the provisional bail stage.

4. Issues : Did the alleged forced entry into a car and movement against the complainant's will prima facie satisfy the definition of abduction under Section 362 for the purpose of anticipatory bail? Was his release voluntary, or did it result from interception by his father and others? Did the Section 41A notice and non-arrest during investigation, or the applicant's profession, warrant pre-arrest protection despite his non-appearance when the charge-sheet was filed? What weight should be given to his unexplained earlier description as a student while claiming to have approached the Court with clean hands?

5. Ratio / Findings : Considering the FIR and Section 161 account at the bail stage, the Court found that the complainant had been forced to move from outside his home into a vehicle and towards another place. This prima facie satisfied the definition in Section 362. The State's account, supported in the order by the complainant, his father and the accompanying witnesses, attributed his release to their interception and intervention rather than a voluntary decision by the applicant. The alleged beating heightened the concern. The Court rejected counsel's request for special treatment based on the applicant's profession as a lawyer. No legal privilege to commit an offence had been identified, and a lawyer's duty to uphold the law made his profession no ground for leniency on these allegations. The Court acknowledged the Section 41A notice and non-arrest during investigation, but weighed the admitted non-appearance when the charge-sheet was filed and the overall circumstances; it did not treat the notice as conclusive.

The Court examined the applicant's assurance that he would not mislead it. It compared the description of him as a "student" in the earlier quashing petition's cause title with the Bar ID showing membership since 2020. Counsel could not explain the discrepancy. The Court therefore regarded the submission that the applicant had approached it with clean hands as false. This was a discretionary assessment of the record for anticipatory bail.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the first application for anticipatory bail.

Shivam Yadav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 27233/2024, 05/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (884) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abetment of suicide / instigation and mens rea - Sections 107 and 306 IPC: Sanju @ Sanjay Singh Sengar, (2002) 5 SCC 371, and Kishori Lal, (2007) 10 SCC 797, explain the modes of abetment as instigation, conspiracy followed by an act or illegal omission in pursuance of it, and intentional aid. Mens rea is indispensable to instigation. Chitresh Kumar Chopra, (2009) 16 SCC 605, permits an inference of instigation from an intentional continuing course of conduct that leaves the deceased no option. A reasonably certain tendency to incite the consequence must nevertheless be shown; words spoken in anger without that intention are insufficient. Praveen Pradhan, (2012) 9 SCC 734, treats intention and the particular circumstances as decisive and rejects a rigid formula. Applying these principles, the Court found that the note and witness evidence could support a prima facie prosecution; it did not record a final conviction.

Abetment of suicide / continuing humiliation - UDE Singh, AIR 2019 SC 4570, distinguished repeated, calculated humiliation that destroys the victim's self-esteem from a single instance of teasing or insult. The Court applied that principle to Dr Shivani Nishad's alleged repeated threats to falsely implicate the deceased in rape and eve-teasing, send him to jail and compel his family to sell their home and leave the colony, together with daily taunts and his fear that his career would be ruined. The suicide note specifically implicated her. The Court relied on witness statements to infer Rani Nishad's shared participation, although the note did not specifically attribute the rape threat to her. These allegations supported a case under Section 306 IPC only prima facie.

Abetment of suicide / limits of harassment inference - Gangula Mohan Reddy, (2010) 1 SCC 750, and M. Mohan, (2011) 3 SCC 626, require clear mens rea and a positive act, described as active or direct conduct intended to push the deceased into suicide, for conviction. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, cautions against treating an unusually sensitive response to ordinary discord as abetment. Amalendu Pal, (2010) 1 SCC 707, requires direct or indirect incitement and a positive act sufficiently close to the death; harassment alone is insufficient. Ramesh Kumar, (2001) 9 SCC 618, excludes words spoken in anger without the intended consequence. The Court considered these limits but regarded the alleged continuing false rape threats and degrading pressure as materially more than ordinary neighbour discord at this preliminary stage.

Quashing / prima facie assessment - Praveen Pradhan, (2012) 9 SCC 734, and Amit Kapoor, (2012) 9 SCC 460, explain that quashing does not require a firm finding on the merits or a detailed assessment of the evidence. Instigation may be inferred from a course of conduct. Reading the suicide note and witness statements together, the Court found sufficient material against both applicants, despite the differing specificity of the allegations against each. It refused to quash Crime 39/2023 under Section 306 IPC in exercise of Section 482 CrPC. Counsel identified no statutory exemption from trial based on applicant 1's profession as a doctor; guilt remained open.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Chandra Shekhar @ Pawan Ahuja died by hanging on 20 December 2022 at Bamhani, Mandla. Police recovered a signed suicide note written in red ink from his trouser pocket and conducted an inquest and postmortem. The note described a long-running neighbourhood dispute and cases involving the deceased and his mother, Shanti Ahuja, Dr Shivani Nishad, Shivani's mother Rani Nishad and other neighbours. It stated that the criminal cases had affected his coaching studies in Indore and prospects of employment. It specifically attributed to Shivani repeated demands that the family sell their home and leave the colony, accompanied by threats to falsely accuse him of rape and eve-teasing and have him jailed. He described fear, the loss of self-respect and of his will to endure, difficulty in selling the house, expenditure on the cases and concern for his mother. He identified Shivani and Kailash Nandanwar as persons who should be punished, apologised to his mother and also described himself as weak. On the note and the statements of Shanti, Anees Memon, Mahendra Ramtekkar, Govind Thakur, Anmol Verma, Amit Ahuja and Ankit Rai, police registered Crime 39/2023 under Section 306 IPC at Bamhani.

Shanti's statement traced the neighbourhood dispute to garbage being dumped in a drain over about ten years. She described cross-complaints in 2020, her son's lack of direct involvement, repeated taunts by five neighbours that mother and son were shameless or ought to have died despite the registered cases, and several threats of a false rape case attributed specifically to Shivani. She stated that her son feared harm to his PSC prospects and was depressed, and that his father had taken him to Bamhani. Her statement placed that move in October 2022, while the note described his living there after the threats. She recounted a further quarrel with both applicants on 28 November 2022 and a telephone call informing her son. He returned to Balaghat on 8 December, distressed over the criminal cases and rape threat. She also referred to his father's account on 17 December of plans to sell the house. The father discovered the death on 20 December. The Court recorded that other witnesses made similar allegations.

Shivani and Rani applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR and proceedings. Their counsel argued that the ingredients of Section 107 were absent even if the allegations were accepted, and that Shanti caused trouble in the society and was the subject of residents' complaints. Counsel relied on M. Mohan and Gangula Mohan Reddy. The State opposed the application, submitting that continuous threats of a knowingly false rape and eve-teasing case and repeated humiliation had destroyed the deceased's self-esteem. It relied on UDE Singh. The applicants had mistakenly impleaded the deceased as respondent 2 instead of his mother. The Court noted that they had not explained how he could be served or how proceedings against him could be maintained, and then considered the merits. The petition's reference to 'Section 107 of Cr.P.C.' reflected counsel's formulation; the definition of abetment reproduced and analysed by the Court was Section 107 IPC.

2. Precedents — Considered : Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605, defined instigation as goading, urging or provoking. Literal words commanding suicide are unnecessary; a reasonably certain tendency to incite the consequence may emerge from an accused's acts, omission or continuing conduct that leaves the person no option. A word spoken in anger or emotion without the intended consequence is excluded. The High Court applied that framework to the continuing threats, without requiring an express exhortation to die. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734, treated the instigator's intention and the factual circumstances as central. It permitted an inference without direct evidence or a rigid formula and confined the quashing court to a tentative view, referring to the presumption under Section 228 CrPC. The High Court applied that tentative approach. Sanju @ Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371, set out the three routes under Section 107: instigation, conspiracy accompanied by the required further conduct, and intentional aid. It required mens rea for instigation. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797, also explained the three alternatives, the meaning of incitement, the distinct character of abetment, and the link under Section 109 to a proved specific offence where no other punishment provision applies. The Court used these principles as the legal framework for Section 306.

Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750, required clear mens rea and an active or direct act intended to push the deceased into suicide for conviction. It cautioned against conviction where the person was hypersensitive to ordinary petulance and domestic discord. M. Mohan v. State represented by the Deputy Superintendent of Police, (2011) 3 SCC 626, similarly required a mental process of instigation or intentional aid, a positive act and clear mens rea for conviction. The applicants relied on both authorities. The Court set out their principles but found prima facie material of more sustained and grave conduct. State of West Bengal v. Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73, required care in assessing whether cruelty had actually induced suicide and warned against treating a hypersensitive response to ordinary discord as proof. The Court considered that caution as a limit on the inference; it did not exonerate the applicants at this preliminary stage.

Amalendu Pal @ Jhantu v. State of West Bengal, (2010) 1 SCC 707, required proof of direct or indirect incitement and a positive act sufficiently proximate to the occurrence; harassment alone does not sustain conviction. Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618, excluded a remark made in anger without the necessary intention and reiterated the caution concerning ordinary discord. At the quashing stage, Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, requires a tentative assessment rather than evaluation or marshalling of the record to decide the merits. The Court also cited Kumar @ Shiva Kumar v. State of Karnataka, Criminal Appeal 1427/2011, decided 1 March 2024, as laying down the same principles governing abetment. UDE Singh v. State of Haryana, AIR 2019 SC 4570, provided the central analogy. The quoted Supreme Court reasoning distinguished a single teasing episode from incessant humiliating references to a girl's broken engagement, coordinated taunts, destruction of her self-esteem and a final incident that exhausted her tolerance. On those proved facts, it sustained the abetment findings. The High Court compared the alleged continuing false rape threats, social disgrace and harm to the deceased's career and self-esteem, particularly Shivani's identified role, with the sustained, calculated pressure in UDE Singh. It applied the precedent at a prima facie quashing stage, without importing the conviction finding or factual setting of that case into the present one.

3. Statutes considered : Section 306 IPC punishes a person who abets another's suicide. Section 107 IPC defines abetment through instigation, conspiracy accompanied by conduct in pursuance of it, or intentional aid by an act or illegal omission. Its explanations address wilful misrepresentation or concealment as instigation and prior or contemporaneous facilitation as aid. In assessing Rani's alleged role from the witness statements, the Court used the phrase 'sharing the common intention'. Section 482 CrPC provided the applicants' recourse to inherent jurisdiction for quashing the FIR and proceedings. The Court made a tentative assessment of whether the allegations supported the ingredients of Sections 306/107.

4. Issues : (i) On the note and investigative witness statements, did the alleged persistent false rape and eve-teasing threats, pending cases and public taunts satisfy the instigation requirement under Section 107 for a prima facie case under Section 306? Or did they amount only to ordinary quarrels or harassment without the positive, intended and sufficiently connected conduct required by Supreme Court authority? (ii) Did the absence of a specific rape-threat allegation against Rani in the note prevent proceedings against her where witness accounts allegedly implicated her in continuing taunts and shared intention? (iii) Could the Court quash the FIR and proceedings under Section 482 on the applicants' competing account that Shanti was a troublemaker, or did the record require the tentative assessment prescribed in Praveen Pradhan and Amit Kapoor? (iv) Did Shivani's medical profession exempt her from the ordinary IPC trial process?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first set out Sections 306 and 107 and distinguished the substantive standards for an eventual conviction from the preliminary question raised by this Section 482 application. Chitresh Kumar Chopra and Praveen Pradhan permitted an inference of intentional instigation from continuing conduct and the surrounding circumstances without literal words directing suicide. Sanju and Kishori Lal explained the statutory modes and the mental requirement. The Court also considered Gangula Mohan Reddy, M. Mohan, Orilal Jaiswal, Amalendu Pal and Ramesh Kumar: mens rea and a positive act are necessary, harassment alone is insufficient, the conduct must have a meaningful temporal and causal connection, and an unusually sensitive response to routine social or domestic friction does not itself prove abetment. At the quashing stage, Praveen Pradhan and Amit Kapoor called for a tentative view.

The Court considered the suicide note at length. It described prolonged litigation and anxiety about studies and employment, and attributed to Shivani repeated demands that the family sell the house and leave, backed by threats of a false rape and eve-teasing accusation and imprisonment. The Court regarded the prospect of a young job aspirant being branded a rapist and jailed on a false allegation as capable of destroying his social standing, self-esteem and career. Shanti's statement added repeated taunts by the neighbours that the deceased and his mother were shameless and that he had not died despite the cases, Shivani's recurring rape accusation threat, the deceased's distress and the further events during November and December 2022. Applying UDE Singh's distinction between a single insult and prolonged degrading pressure, the Court regarded these allegations as more than an empty threat or ordinary neighbour discord. The continuing pattern, rather than an isolated incident in October, November or December, supported a prima facie offence under Section 306 against Shivani.

The note did not specifically attribute a rape or eve-teasing threat to Rani. The Court relied on Shanti's and other witnesses' allegations of daily taunts and both applicants' involvement to find sufficient material of shared intention for prosecution. The applicants' description of Shanti as notorious and responsible for the neighbourhood disturbance remained a contested defence position and did not justify ending the case on this preliminary record. Counsel's request that Shivani be spared trial because she was a doctor failed because no IPC exemption based on that status was identified. The Court found sufficient material to prosecute both applicants. The truth of the allegations, intent, participation, proximity and guilt remained for ordinary adjudication.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime 39/2023 and the proceedings under Section 306 IPC against Shivani and Rani Nishad. No exemption or protective condition was granted to the doctor applicant. The prosecution could proceed; the order neither convicted either applicant nor finally determined the allegations against neighbours who were not applicants.

Shivani Nishad and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 27101/2023, 07/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (885) Prev Next

Headnote :- Common intention / Section 34 IPC - Liability for a joint criminal act requires proof of shared intention and participation in furtherance of it. Every participant need not inflict an injury, but mere presence or accompaniment does not establish the necessary connection. Suresh Sankharam Nangare, 2012 (9) SCALE 345, Shyamal Ghosh, AIR 2012 SC 3539, Mrinal Das, AIR 2011 SC 3753, and Ramashish Yadav, AIR 1999 SC 1083, were considered on concert, participation and the possibility of a common purpose forming at the scene. Hem Raj, AIR 1990 SC 2252, Dashrathlal, 1979 CrLJ 1078 (SC), Rajagopalswamy Konar, 1994 CrLJ 2195 (SC), and Sheikh Nabab, 1993 CrLJ 43 (SC), illustrate the limits of liability where another participant's common purpose or act is not proved. No injury-causing act or shared intention to commit murder was proved against Gorelal. The alleged later shoe blow had no corresponding injury; he was unarmed, wept beside Ramesh and assisted in the inquest. His conviction under Section 302 or 302/34 was reversed, while Shivcharan remained individually liable.

Murder / Section 300 thirdly - Virsa Singh, AIR 1958 SC 465, requires proof of the existence and nature of the injury, intention to inflict that particular injury, and its objective sufficiency to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. Anda, 1966 CrLJ 171, explains that the weapon and the part of the body struck may show that sufficiency; intention to kill is not an additional requirement of clause Thirdly. Arun Nivalaji More, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079 of 2005, distinguishes the intention and knowledge grounds under Section 299, the murder clauses in Section 300 and, where murder is excluded, the alternatives under Section 304 Part I and Part II. The Court applied these tests and confirmed the conviction under Section 302. It relied on Shivcharan's deliberate lathi blows to vital parts of the head and face and the medically established fatal parietal fractures.

Murder or lesser homicide / contextual assessment - Mahesh Balmiki, (2000) 1 SCC 319, Pulicherla Nagaraju, (2006) 11 SCC 444, Sangapagu Anjaiah, (2010) 9 SCC 799, Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao, (2008) 15 SCC 725, reject automatic reduction of an offence to Section 304 merely because there is a single injury. The weapon, vital part struck, force, attendant quarrel and other circumstances determine intent. The Court considered the Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar, Leela Ram and Vedanayagam illustrations reproduced within those authorities, and applied the contextual principle to multiple lathi blows, rather than a single-blow case. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak, (2003) 9 SCC 322, and the Exception 4 test reproduced in Kanhaiyalal require a sudden mutual fight without premeditation, in the heat of passion, with no undue advantage or cruelty. No attack by Ramesh on Gorelal or mutual fight was established here, and the Court retained the classification as murder.

Private defence / reasonable apprehension and necessary force - Sections 96, 97 and 99–101 IPC confine defensive force to what is necessary. Causing death under Section 100 depends on a reasonable apprehension of death, grievous hurt or another enumerated assault. Rizan, AIR 2003 SC 976, places the defence burden at a preponderance of probabilities. Madan Mohan Pandey, (1991) CrLJ 467 (SC), treats the weapon as relevant to excess; Arjun, AIR 2012 SC 2181, requires force commensurate with the threatened injury; and Ranjitham, (2011) 13 SCALE 221, rejects exact mathematical measurement or an invariable requirement of physical injury. The Court rejected Shivcharan's claim that he acted to defend his father. The deceased was eating, no weapon or injury corroborated the alleged aggression, and repeated fatal lathi blows were not shown to be necessary. Gorelal was acquitted because his own act or common intention was not proved, while Shivcharan's life sentence and fine were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Gorelal owned about 30 bighas of land and had allotted four to his son Ramesh. Ramesh's demand for more land led to family quarrels. He was Shivcharan's brother and Vimlabai's husband. On 5 January 2008, Gorelal visited Ramesh and sought return of the land. During the altercation, Gorelal tore his own clothes and left. The prosecution alleged that later, while Ramesh was eating at the door of his house, Shivcharan and Gorelal arrived and Shivcharan repeatedly struck him with a lathi on the head, mouth, face, back and limbs. Vimlabai stated that Ramesh fell and Gorelal then struck his head with a shoe. The Court understood this as occurring after death or collapse and found no medical injury attributable to the shoe blow. Ramesh died at the scene. The FIR was lodged on 6 January at Cantt police station, Guna. Inspector L.C. Shrivas prepared the inquest and scene records, recovered blood-stained and plain earth and two teeth, seized a blood-stained lathi from an accused's house, recorded witness statements and sent the articles for forensic examination. The postmortem recorded several facial and limb injuries, depressed fractures of both parietal bones and a linear fracture of the right parietal bone. Fatal skull and brain injury had been caused by a hard, blunt object.

On 23 June 2009, the Special Judge/Additional Sessions Judge, Guna, in Sessions Trial 99/2008 convicted Shivcharan under Section 302 IPC. In describing the trial conviction, the appellate judgment refers to Gorelal's conviction under Section 302 or 302/34. Each was sentenced to rigorous imprisonment for life, a fine of Rs 1,000 and six months' additional rigorous imprisonment in default. Both appealed under Section 374 CrPC. They challenged Vimlabai's testimony as that of an interested witness, relied on alleged contradictions and Ramesh's drunkenness, and pointed out that several witnesses arrived after the assault and two did not support the prosecution. Shivcharan asserted that Ramesh attacked Gorelal and that he used lawful force to defend his father. Gorelal submitted that the only act attributed to him was a shoe blow after Ramesh had died. The State sought affirmance. The appellate Bench framed questions concerning the death, the perpetrator, common intention, the classification of the homicide and private defence. The judgment labels both men appellant 1 and describes Shivcharan as deceased in one passage; elsewhere it identifies their respective roles.

2. Precedents — Considered : On common intention, Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra, 2012 (9) SCALE 345, states that Section 34 may apply without an overt blow being individually attributed to the accused if a common purpose is proved. Participation without that shared purpose is insufficient; prior concert or a meeting of minds is essential. Shyamal Ghosh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2012 SC 3539, describes a plan formed before the act and conduct in pursuance of it. Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753, places on the prosecution the burden of proving that multiple participants acted on prior concert. Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 1083, recognises that common intention may develop at the spur of the moment, provided there is a meeting of minds. The Bench considered these authorities with Section 34 and assessed Gorelal's role individually, without inferring a plan merely from the family relationship and his arrival with Shivcharan. Paragraph 26 separately cites Bijay Singh v. State of M.B., 1956 CrLJ 897, on presence and prior concert.

Hem Raj v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1990 SC 2252, illustrates the acquittal of persons whose participation in murder was disbelieved, while the person proved to be the sole assailant remained liable. Dashrathlal v. State of Gujarat, 1979 CrLJ 1078 (SC), rejects liability through mere accompaniment. In Rajagopalswamy Konar v. State of Tamil Nadu, 1994 CrLJ 2195 (SC), a family land dispute led to an attack in which one accused stabbed and another caused only simple stick injuries. The latter's conviction under Section 302/34 was not sustained, but his separate liability under Section 324 was retained. Sheikh Nabab v. State of Maharashtra, 1993 CrLJ 43 (SC), declined to sustain a conviction where the alleged overt act was not proved. The High Court applied this group of authorities in requiring proof of Gorelal's own participation in a shared intention to commit murder, and acquitted him.

On homicide classification, Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, sets out four elements under Section 300 Thirdly: the existence of an injury, its nature, intention to inflict the particular injury found, and the sufficiency of that injury to cause death in the ordinary course of nature. The last question is objective. Intention to cause death or to cause an injury known to be fatal is not an additional element of Thirdly; an unintended or accidental different injury may negate the third element. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 CrLJ 171, emphasises the high probability of death from the intended injury. The weapon or the part of the body struck may indicate that sufficiency. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeals 1078–1079 of 2005, describes the successive inquiries under Sections 299 and 300, the exceptions, and the distinction between intention under Section 304 Part I and knowledge alone under Part II where Section 300 murder is excluded. The Court considered these principles before assessing the postmortem and assault evidence concerning the multiple deliberate blows that caused fatal head injuries. Paragraph 32 also discusses Section 300 Secondly and refers to 'Shri Ahirwar'.

Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejects the proposition that a single blow necessarily falls outside Section 302. The location of the injury, weapon, manner of assault, restraint of the victim and surrounding circumstances may support murder, Section 304 or another offence. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, interprets Exception 4 to Section 300 as requiring a sudden mutual fight without premeditation, in the heat of passion, and without unfair advantage or cruel or unusual conduct. A mere quarrel is insufficient. Pulicherla Nagaraju @ Nagaraja v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, identifies a non-exhaustive set of factors bearing on intent: the weapon and its source, the vital part struck and force used, chance or planning, prior enmity, provocation, heat of passion, undue advantage and the number of blows. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred intent from a crowbar blow to a vital part of the skull causing fractures, rather than applying a rule based only on the number of injuries. The High Court applied the contextual approach to the several lathi blows and fatal skull fractures, without finding the alleged fight in which Shivcharan claimed to have rescued his father.

State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, reproduces Arun Raj v. Union of India, (2010) 6 SCC 457, on the absence of an automatic single-blow rule and on intent inferred from the weapon and vital part struck. It also reproduces Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 10 SCC 604, concerning a forceful wooden-pestle injury to the head and the absence of grounds for Exception 4, and Leela Ram on single-blow classification and the four cumulative requirements of Exception 4. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, likewise rejects automatic application of Section 304 Part II merely because there is a single injury, requiring consideration of premeditation, weapon, assault and the other evidence. Its extended quotation discusses State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam, (1995) 1 SCC 326, where an intentional knife injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death supported Section 302 despite being a single injury. It also reproduces Virsa Singh's distinction between intent to cause the precise injury and the objective seriousness of that injury. In paragraph 50, the Bench expressly turned from this body of law to the evidence. The illustrations concerned single-blow decisions, whereas Shivcharan's case involved several blows. The Court applied the contextual analysis, rather than the factual results of those single-blow cases.

On private defence, Madan Mohan Pandey v. State of U.P., (1991) CrLJ 467 (SC), treats the weapon as relevant to whether the right was exceeded. Rasikbhai Ram Singh Rana v. State of Gujarat, 1999 (1) Guj CR 176, is a Gujarat High Court authority, cited for the defence's responsibility to establish its version; it is not a Supreme Court holding. Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, AIR 2003 SC 976, requires a reasonable and probable account of self-defence showing the need to repel an attack or a continuing reasonable apprehension. The accused must establish the plea on a preponderance of probabilities from the whole record. Arjun v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 2012 SC 2181, requires reasonable apprehension and force commensurate with the threatened injury; causing death requires reasonable fear of death or grievous hurt. Ranjitham v. Basavaraj, (2011) 13 SCALE 221, cautions that defensive force cannot be measured with mathematical precision and that absence of physical injury does not, by itself, defeat a defence supported by reasonable apprehension of danger to life or grievous hurt. Having considered these protections, the Bench found no credible aggression or weapon on Ramesh's part, no injury to the accused and repeated lethal lathi blows. It rejected the plea on the evidence, without denying the doctrine categorically.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided the convicted appellants' right of appeal, and Section 161 governed the recording of investigative witness statements. Section 34 IPC attributes a joint criminal act to each participant where shared intention and participation are proved; it does not create a separate offence. Sections 96 and 97 IPC preserve defence of one's own or another's body or property, subject to Section 99, including the prohibition on excessive harm and the absence of a right where there is time to obtain public protection. Section 100 permits causing death for specified serious assaults reasonably threatening death or grievous hurt, and for the other listed categories. Section 101 confines force to harm other than death where those categories do not apply. Section 8 of the Evidence Act, concerning motive and relevant previous or subsequent conduct, was reproduced. The Court assessed Gorelal's weeping after the event and participation in the inquest, and Shivcharan's absence, as conduct. Section 299 IPC defines culpable homicide through intention to kill, intention to cause an injury likely to be fatal, or knowledge of likely death. Section 300 Thirdly covers intentional infliction of the particular injury sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, subject to the exceptions; Section 302 prescribes the punishment for murder. Section 304 Part I and Part II were discussed as possible alternatives based on intention or knowledge if murder were excluded. Section 304-A and Section 324 arose in general distinctions and precedent examples, rather than as charges against these appellants.

4. Issues : (i) Did the medical and eyewitness evidence prove a homicide caused by deliberate fatal injury, and establish Shivcharan as the lathi assailant despite the defence challenge to interested witnesses and witnesses who arrived later? Did Section 300 Thirdly sustain murder, or should the offence be reduced under Section 304/Exception 4? (ii) Did Gorelal participate in the lethal act or act with a proved common intention under Section 34, given that the sole shoe blow attributed to him followed Ramesh's fall and had no corresponding injury, and having regard to his conduct after the death? (iii) Did Shivcharan's assertion that Ramesh attacked Gorelal satisfy the burden on a preponderance of probabilities for defence of another under Sections 96–101, with reasonable apprehension of serious harm and force confined to necessity? Each appellant separately challenged the trial conviction and sentence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench framed the questions, set out the statutory provisions and extensive Supreme Court guidance, and then assessed the evidence. The doctor found depressed fractures of both parietal bones, a linear fracture of the right parietal bone and fatal skull and brain trauma caused by a hard, blunt object within 24 hours of autopsy. Vimlabai described Shivcharan arriving with a lathi and striking Ramesh on the head, mouth and other parts of the body. The injuries and seized articles were consistent with a violent assault by a blunt object. The Court recognised that several named witnesses arrived after the incident, that the child Bharti was grazing goats and was not an eyewitness, and that Mangal Singh and Munnalal did not support the prosecution. It found that Shivcharan caused the fatal head injuries. Virsa Singh's test of intention to inflict the particular injury and its objective sufficiency to cause death, together with Anda and the contextual authorities, explained why Section 300 Thirdly and Section 302 were sustained despite the arguments on intent and classification. Multiple lathi blows to vital parts and the severity of the skull injuries did not justify an automatic reduction under Section 304.

The evidence against Gorelal was more limited. Vimlabai placed his shoe blow after Ramesh's collapse, and the doctor found no corresponding shoe injury. No witness stated that Gorelal caused a fatal injury or acted with a proved shared intention. He had no weapon. Puran Dheemar found him weeping beside Ramesh. He remained for the inquest and was a witness to a scene record, whereas Shivcharan was absent. These circumstances did not prove common intention or an act of participation attributable under Section 34 beyond reasonable doubt. The earlier examples in paragraph 21 of assistance from a distance, instructions or deliberate omission show why each participant need not commit identical overt violence; they did not supply the missing evidence against Gorelal. The Court found that the prosecution had failed to prove either Section 302 or 302/34 against him.

Shivcharan's alternative claim that Ramesh attacked Gorelal was examined under the burden on a preponderance of probabilities described in Rizan and under Sections 99–101. On the accepted account, Ramesh was sitting at his door and eating. No weapon attributed to him was recovered, and no injury or medical report showed harm to either accused. The Court found no circumstance establishing an attack by Ramesh on Gorelal or a need to rescue him. Repeated lathi blows to the head caused fatal fractures and were not shown to be a necessary or rational response in defence. Arjun's requirement of force commensurate with the threatened injury and Madan Mohan Pandey's emphasis on the weapon supported rejection of the plea. Ranjitham's caution against rigid measurement did not sustain a defence unsupported by a credible, reasonable apprehension of death or grievous hurt. The Court therefore affirmed Shivcharan's individual murder conviction while reaching the opposite conclusion in Gorelal's case.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court allowed Gorelal's appeal and acquitted him, setting aside his conviction under Section 302 or Section 302 read with 34 IPC and the sentence of rigorous imprisonment for life, fine of Rs 1,000 and default term. It directed that he be informed through the jail superintendent and released forthwith if not required in another crime. Shivcharan's appeal was dismissed. His conviction under Section 302 and the trial sentence of rigorous imprisonment for life, a fine of Rs 1,000 and six months' further rigorous imprisonment in default were confirmed, and he was to be informed in jail. The common appeal was disposed of with the modification to the trial judgment. A copy of the appellate judgment and the trial record were to be sent back immediately.

Shivcharan and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 445/2009, 17/08/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (886) Prev Next

Headnote :- Forensic evidence / government expert report - Under Section 293(1) CrPC, a qualifying Government scientific expert's report on material duly submitted for examination may be used in a criminal proceeding without automatically requiring the report's author to give oral evidence. The court retains the power under subsection (2) to summon and examine the expert. The Court reproduced the categories of experts covered by the provision, noted that the accused had not sought cross-examination of the scientific officer, admitted FSL Ex. P.12 and considered the human sperm and semen found on the child's anal slide, swab and underwear and on the appellant's underwear.

Child sexual-offence proof / no injury - Dastagir Sab v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 3 SCC 106, explains that semen on the victim's clothing can corroborate the account of the offence and that injury is not indispensable to proof of rape. The absence of injury alone cannot defeat reliable ocular evidence. The Court applied that principle by analogy in the boy's case under Section 377 IPC and, in the alternative, Sections 3/4 POCSO. Despite the absence of external or internal injury, it accepted his account of the night assault, his prompt disclosure to his father and the next-day report, together with the admitted FSL findings on the anal samples and underwear. On that combined evidence, it affirmed guilt beyond reasonable doubt and the sentences.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On the night of 8 October 2014, a boy went to a temple in his village. He stated that Shivkumar induced him to go towards a field, tied his hands when he resisted, removed his clothes and committed an unnatural sexual act. The boy returned around midnight in tears and immediately told his father, Khilan. They reported the incident the next day, 9 October, at about 13:30; the police station was about 20 km away. The boy was medically examined, and an anal slide, swab samples and his underwear were collected. Articles including the appellant's underwear were sent for forensic examination. The police recorded witnesses' statements and collected a school admission register, a caste certificate, material from the scene and FSL Ex. P.12. The narrative describes the boy as ‘about 15’, while both school records reproduced by the Court give 11 August 1997 as his date of birth. On those dates, he would have been about 17 years and two months old at the time of the incident; both accounts place him below 18.

The Special Judge for the SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, Guna, framed charges under Sections 363 and 377 IPC, Sections 3/4 POCSO and Section 3(2)(v) of the SC/ST Act. As described in the appeal, the trial judgment of 19 June 2015 convicted the appellant under Sections 363 and 377 IPC and Sections 3/4 POCSO, but imposed no separate POCSO sentence. The appeal's opening summary does not include POCSO in the conviction description, whereas paragraph 8 does. The operative appellate paragraph refers to Sections 363 and 377 ‘or in the alternative’ Sections 3/4 POCSO. The trial sentences described were seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 2,000 under Section 363, and ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 5,000 under Section 377, with unspecified default imprisonment.

The appeal under Section 374 CrPC was initially listed for consideration of an application to suspend Shivkumar's sentence on the grounds of custody and expected delay, but both sides agreed to a final hearing. He relied on the absence of external or internal injury and alleged false implication. Counsel later objected that the FSL officer had not been examined. The State supported the conviction. The High Court assessed the boy's account and cross-examination, Khilan's evidence of the disclosure, the two school registers, the medical report, the seizure witnesses and the forensic report.

2. Precedents — Considered : Dastagir Sab v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 3 SCC 106, was the only Supreme Court authority applied by the High Court. The quoted paragraphs treat semen on the victim's garment as corroborative evidence and reject bodily injury as a necessary element of proof of rape. Where the ocular evidence is overwhelming, absence of injury cannot be the sole ground for concluding that rape did not occur. The High Court applied that evidentiary test to the boy's alleged anal assault under Section 377 IPC and POCSO's provisions on penetrative sexual assault. It relied on the semen and sperm found on the anal slide and swab and on the child's and appellant's underwear, the boy's consistent account and his prompt disclosure.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC governed the appeal from conviction. Section 293(1) permits a document purporting to be a report signed by a specified Government scientific expert, on material duly submitted for examination, to be used as evidence in a criminal inquiry, trial or proceeding. Section 293(2) permits the court to summon the expert if it thinks fit. Subsection (3) deals with attendance through a responsible officer who is conversant with the matter, unless the court directs the expert to attend personally; subsection (4) lists the qualifying experts. The judgment reproduces clause (e), covering the Director, Deputy Director and Assistant Director of a Central or State FSL, but its conclusion cites Section 293(4)(a), which concerns the Chemical Examiner. The Court also relied on the absence of an application by the accused to cross-examine the expert; it did not hold that every challenge to a Government report is automatically waived in all cases.

Section 363 IPC concerned the kidnapping charge, and Section 377 governed the alleged unnatural sexual act. Sections 3 and 4 POCSO were invoked for penetrative sexual assault and its punishment, though the trial order, as described, imposed no separate sentence for that offence. Two witnesses who produced the school admission registers proved the recorded birth date, and the Court treated the boy as a minor.

4. Issues : (i) Could FSL Ex. P.12 be used as evidence under Section 293 CrPC although its scientific officer had not been called, where the defence had made no application for cross-examination? (ii) Did the absence of external or internal injury make the boy's account of anal assault unreliable, or did his testimony, immediate disclosure to his father, next-day FIR and the semen findings prove the relevant offences beyond reasonable doubt? (iii) Should the trial conviction or sentences be altered on appeal?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted the records proved by Amod Tiwari and Suresh Kirketta, which gave 11 August 1997 as the boy's date of birth, and concluded that he was a minor on 8 October 2014. It regarded his account as specific: the appellant took him from the temple, tied him and committed an unnatural act. The boy explained why the incident was not reported during the night. He told Khilan immediately on returning, and the FIR was lodged the following day. His father supported the account of immediate disclosure. Nothing emerged in cross-examination to undermine that evidence, and no motive of enmity was identified. The defence suggestion that the two had been friends did not establish a reason for false implication. The doctor found no external injury.

On the defence objection that the analyst had not been examined, the Court quoted Section 293 in full. As no application had been made to call the officer, it read Ex. P.12 in evidence. The report showed human sperm and semen stains on the boy's anal slide, swab and underwear and on the appellant's underwear.

Applying Dastagir Sab, the Court rejected the contention that absence of bodily injury conclusively disproved an otherwise credible account of sexual assault. The findings on the anal samples and clothing provided independent corroboration, and the disclosure to the father further supported the testimony. Taken together, the Court held that the evidence established guilt beyond reasonable doubt. In stating its conclusion on guilt, it referred to Sections 363 and 377 IPC or, in the alternative, Sections 3 and 4 POCSO. Having regard to the nature of the conduct, it found no reason to interfere with the sentence.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the Special Judge's judgment and sentence of 19 June 2015 in Special S.T. 109/2014. The appellant, who was already in jail, was directed to serve the remaining terms.

Shivkumar v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 550/2015, 05/12/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (887) Prev Next

Headnote :- Police inaction / magistrate route - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty to record information disclosing a cognizable offence from the informant's remedy when officials fail to act: Sections 190 and 200 CrPC permit a complaint before the Magistrate. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, explains recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by the Magistrate under Section 156(3), who can direct registration and proper investigation and monitor its progress. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, cited as (2016) 6 SCC 277, applies that procedure to non-registration and deficient investigation. It permits the Magistrate to consider recommending a change of investigating officer through the proper authority, without conducting the investigation personally. Applying these principles, the Court dismissed the buyer's petition under Section 528 BNSS concerning an already registered case of misappropriation at a showroom and his unanswered complaint. It left him free to approach the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS.

Fair investigation / exceptional Constitutional control - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognises exceptional directions under Article 226 where mala fide exercise of investigative power and a clear case of abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII CrPC are demonstrated, while prohibiting the court from dictating the method of investigation. The Court also considered the Division Bench ruling in Shweta Bhadauria: the availability of ordinary remedies before police authorities and the Magistrate may justify declining mandamus for FIR registration, while recognised exceptional writ grounds remain available. The police duty described in Lalita Kumari does not determine the maintainability of a writ petition.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shivraj Singh Dhakad stated that he had deposited cash to purchase a car but had not received the vehicle. He claimed that he too was a victim and that no action had been taken on his written complaint to the station house officer. Under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023 (BNSS), he asked the High Court to direct a free, fair, proper and impartial investigation in the registered crime. The State opposed the petition on the ground that a petition for FIR registration was not maintainable. The Court framed its central question as the maintainability of a direction to register an FIR. The prayer recorded in paragraph 1, however, sought a fair investigation of an already registered case.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, recognises that police must register an FIR on information disclosing a cognizable offence. Failure to perform that duty does not, by itself, make a direct High Court direction the ordinary remedy for a complainant: the informant can file a complaint before the Magistrate under Sections 190/200 CrPC. The quoted Supreme Court passage distinguishes the police duty discussed in Ramesh Kumari from the remedy explained in AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari. It also mentions Lallan Chaudhary as reiterating the police duty. The Court adopted the distinction between the registration duty and the remedy for its breach.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, preserves rare intervention under Article 226 where investigative power is exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII CrPC requirements is made out. The High Court may insist on lawful process but cannot prescribe how the police investigate. In ordinary cases of police inaction, the authority directs the informant to the Magistrate under Sections 190/200. It quotes Gangadhar's account of a complaint inquiry under Chapter XV: the Magistrate may order investigation, dismiss the complaint under Section 203, or issue process where a prima facie offence is disclosed. The High Court quoted this discussion to explain the limits of exceptional constitutional intervention and the ordinary statutory remedy.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2008) 2 SCC 409, explains the sequence of remedies: a written application to the Superintendent under Section 154(3) for non-registration, followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3) if the FIR remains unregistered or the investigation remains deficient. The Magistrate can order registration, direct proper investigation and monitor its progress. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, reported in this judgment as (2016) 6 SCC 277, follows Sakiri Vasu and discourages routine recourse to Article 226 for such complaints. It explains that a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied may direct proper investigation, consider recommending a change of investigating officer to the police superior and monitor the investigation, but cannot conduct it personally.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016, decided 20 December 2016, was the Division Bench authority of this High Court. Its quoted holding permits denial of mandamus for FIR registration where the complainant has bypassed Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 CrPC, while preserving the four exceptional grounds referred to in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. It distinguishes Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1: the police duty to register an FIR does not determine entitlement to High Court mandamus without first using the alternative remedy. The Court applied this principle in rejecting the present direct petition, without excluding exceptional writ jurisdiction.

3. Statutes considered : The quoted earlier Supreme Court and Division Bench precedents concern the police duty to register an FIR under Section 154 CrPC, recourse to the Superintendent under subsection (3), the Magistrate's power under Section 156(3) to supervise registration and investigation, the complaint and cognizance procedure under Sections 190 and 200, and possible dismissal after inquiry under Section 203. The Court's operative liberty expressly refers to Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 BNSS for a complaint before the Magistrate. Divine Retreat Centre discussed investigation under Chapter XII CrPC and rare intervention under Article 226. The present proceeding was under Section 528; that constitutional discussion formed part of the quoted authorities rather than an exercise of writ power in the operative order.

4. Issues : (i) Was a petition under Section 528 seeking a fair police investigation in already registered Crime 61/2025 an appropriate means of obtaining direct High Court relief when Shivraj also complained of police inaction on his separate written grievance? The State characterised the matter as a request for FIR registration, and the Court framed the question in those terms. (ii) What remedies before superior police authorities and the Magistrate are available for non-registration or deficient investigation, and may the High Court bypass them without an exceptional basis? (iii) What relief, if any, should be granted on the limited record?

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying Aleque Padamsee, the Court distinguished the substantive duty to register an FIR from the forum for seeking a remedy. Police should record information disclosing a cognizable offence, but the complainant's remedy for inaction lies in the statutory complaint procedure before the Magistrate. Divine Retreat Centre explained that, in rare cases where investigative power is exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse and non-compliance with Chapter XII is made out, the High Court may insist on lawful process under Article 226. It cannot dictate the police's method of investigation. Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Tambe identify further remedies under Sections 154(3) and 156(3), including Magistrate directions for registration and proper investigation and judicial monitoring within those powers. Shweta Bhadauria explains the relationship between those remedies and a request for constitutional mandamus, preserving exceptional grounds without equating the police duty in Lalita Kumari with an automatic right to direct writ relief. The Court treated recourse to the Magistrate as the proper next step. The prayer sought a fair investigation, while the judgment repeatedly framed the matter as a request for FIR registration. The operative result was dismissal with liberty to file a complaint before the Magistrate.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition under Section 528 BNSS. Shivraj was expressly left at liberty, if he wished, to approach the appropriate Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS for redress of his grievance.

Shivraj Singh Dhakad v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 15850/2025, 22/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (889) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR — matrimonial dispute — preliminary inquiry — registration without inquiry — The wife's FIR alleged a dowry demand and incidents of harassment, assault and threats by her husband and relatives within approximately two years of marriage. The accused sought protection under Article 226 from coercive action and challenged the FIR on the ground that the police had not conducted a preliminary inquiry. Applying Lalita Kumari and the reasoning adopted from Meera Yadav, the Court held that a preliminary inquiry may be desirable in a matrimonial case but is not a mandatory condition for valid registration of an FIR. When the information itself discloses a cognizable offence, registration cannot await verification of its truth. CBI v. Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi, discussed at length in the quoted Meera Yadav passage, reinforces that the illustrative categories for preliminary inquiry give the accused no right to demand one, and that its omission alone does not vitiate an FIR. That authority concerned a corruption/CBI case.

Writ challenge — relatives — specific allegations and no mini-trial — The FIR alleged that the brother-in-law abused the complainant, his wife assaulted her with fists and blows, and all petitioners took part in the later visit to Jevar, where a renewed dowry demand was followed by threats. The husband was alleged to have assaulted and threatened her. The Court held that these allegations were sufficiently specific at the investigation stage, despite the defence contention that they were omnibus allegations. An FIR is not an encyclopedia. Whether the alleged acts occurred and whether the allegations are reliable must be determined through investigation or trial, rather than by examining credibility under Articles 226/227 or Section 482 CrPC. The Court applied Neeharika Infrastructure's principle of restraint against premature quashing and judicial interference with the investigation of cognizable offences, and dismissed the writ petition.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shubham Gaur and two relatives filed Writ Petition No. 22848 of 2024 under Article 226. Petitioner 1 was the husband of respondent 2. Petitioner 2 was her brother-in-law, and petitioner 3 was petitioner 2's wife. They sought protection from coercive action and a direction for mediation to be arranged; the Court treated the petition as a challenge to the FIR for offences under Sections 85, 296, 115(2), 351(3) and 3(5) of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita, 2023, and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. According to the FIR, the marriage took place on 9 May 2022 and the complainant's father gave dowry said to be worth ₹10–12 lakh. She alleged subsequent taunts over insufficient dowry and a further demand for ₹2 lakh, harassment and assaults. Specifically, petitioner 2 used filthy abuse and petitioner 3 struck her with fists and blows. She alleged that she was assaulted and expelled from the matrimonial home on 13 June 2024, went to her parental house at Gwalior and then stayed at Jevar, Tikamgarh. Reconciliation efforts allegedly failed, and her belongings were returned by courier. She further alleged that on 14 July 2024 the petitioners and mother-in-law visited Jevar, where the husband slapped and abused her, demanded ₹2 lakh as a condition of keeping her, and the group left after threatening her life. The FIR was lodged on 18 July 2024. The petitioners argued that matrimonial allegations against close relatives must be specific, that the allegations against petitioners 2 and 3 were vague and omnibus, and that the FIR could not stand without a preliminary police inquiry.

2. Precedents — Considered : Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, is the Constitution Bench authority on Section 154 CrPC. Registration is mandatory if the information discloses a cognizable offence. Any permissible preliminary inquiry is confined to determining whether such an offence is disclosed, rather than testing the informant's truthfulness. Matrimonial and family disputes are illustrative categories in which an inquiry may be considered according to the circumstances; they do not create an obligatory procedure before registration. The Court invoked Lalita Kumari directly and adopted its detailed treatment in the earlier Meera Yadav decision. The lengthy passage from Meera Yadav discussed CBI v. Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi (Criminal Appeal No. 1045/2021, decided 8 October 2021). In that corruption/CBI case, the Supreme Court held that information adequately disclosing a cognizable offence permits registration without preliminary inquiry. Even where an inquiry is desirable, it is not thereby mandatory, nor does the accused acquire an automatic right to a hearing before the FIR is registered. The reproduced Supreme Court discussion traced P. Sirajuddin and Nirmal Singh Kahlon on preliminary safeguards, the controlling rule in Lalita Kumari, the desirability of inquiry in the particular context of Yashwant Sinha, State of Telangana v. Managipet's rejection of an accused's claimed right to inquiry, and Charansingh's approval of an appropriate inquiry before registration where justified. It also explained that the CBI Manual contains administrative instructions rather than a statutory amendment to the Code, and that K. Veeraswami does not give an accused an entitlement to explain disproportionate assets before registration of an FIR or filing of a charge-sheet. Applying the principle that a preliminary inquiry is not mandatory, the High Court held that its omission did not vitiate the matrimonial FIR. It then quoted and applied Neeharika Infrastructure Pvt. Ltd. v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 19 SCC 401, on judicial restraint at the FIR and investigation stage. Police ordinarily investigate cognizable allegations; quashing is exceptional, the FIR need not be an encyclopedia, and the court considers whether an offence is disclosed on its face without testing credibility, genuineness or the merits while investigation is in progress. The quoted discussion in Neeharika preserves the power to intervene where no offence is disclosed or recognised exceptional grounds exist, and refers to R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal as governing the parameters for quashing.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was invoked for the writ petition and the directions sought. The Court also referred to Article 227 and Section 482 CrPC when explaining why it could not conduct a premature mini-trial. Section 154 CrPC supplied the framework for registration and preliminary inquiry in the quoted precedents. The FIR listed BNS Sections 85 (cruelty allegation), 296, 115(2), 351(3) and 3(5), and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4.

4. Issues : (1) Does failure to conduct a preliminary inquiry before registering a matrimonial FIR invalidate its registration or warrant quashing, where the complaint is said to disclose cognizable offences? (2) Are the accusations against the husband and petitioners 2 and 3 so general that no investigation can lawfully proceed against them, or are sufficiently specific acts attributed to them at this preliminary stage? (3) Can the writ court assess the truth, credibility or ultimate proof of those accusations, or halt coercive investigative action before the statutory investigation, in light of the Supreme Court's limits on quashing?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished the desirability of a preliminary inquiry from a mandatory legal requirement. Lalita Kumari permits an inquiry in appropriate cases to determine whether a cognizable offence is disclosed. Where the information discloses such an offence, however, an FIR must be registered without first testing the truth of that information. The reasoning adopted from Meera Yadav and Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi explains why the omission of an inquiry alone cannot invalidate a registered FIR; a relative named in the FIR acquires no automatic right to an inquiry as a prerequisite to registration. The Court therefore rejected the objection based on the absence of an inquiry. On the specificity of the allegations, the Court identified the acts attributed to each petitioner and the later incident involving the group. The brother-in-law was alleged to have abused the complainant; his wife was alleged to have assaulted her; the husband was alleged to have assaulted and threatened her; and the petitioners were alleged to have gone to Jevar in connection with the renewed demand and threats. At this stage, these specific allegations prevented the challenge based on a purely vague, omnibus FIR from succeeding. The FIR need not set out all the evidence. Applying Neeharika Infrastructure, the Court could not test the complainant's truthfulness, weigh the reliability of proof or conduct a mini-trial under Articles 226/227 or Section 482.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition, finding no ground for interference.

Shubham Gaur and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 22848/2024, 20/08/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (890) Prev Next

Headnote :- Victim / complainant — private counsel's role at sessions trial — The petitioner, who claimed to be the complainant, sought exercise of the power under Section 311 CrPC / Section 348 BNSS after the trial court rejected his application. He conceded that he, rather than the Public Prosecutor, had filed the application and that Sections 225 and 301(2) CrPC entrust conduct of the Sessions prosecution to the prosecutor. The Court quoted and applied Rekha Murarka v. State of West Bengal: the victim's counsel has a meaningful but secondary role in assisting the prosecution, subject to the prosecutor's directions. The possibility of prosecutorial oversight does not entitle private counsel to make oral arguments or examine witnesses in parallel with the prosecutor. Counsel may convey proposed questions or points through the prosecutor, or bring a material issue left unaddressed to the judge's notice. If the judge finds merit in it, the judge may exercise the power under Section 311 CrPC or Section 165 of the Evidence Act. This preserves victim participation, prosecutorial independence, safeguards for the accused and trial fairness.

Witness recall — factual foundation — The Article 227 petition challenged the Additional Sessions Judge's order of 7 May 2025 in Sessions Trial No. 140/2016 refusing the complainant's application under Section 348 BNSS / Section 311 CrPC. On examining the application, the High Court found no allegation identifying a lapse by the Public Prosecutor and no assertion that an overlooked question or issue had been brought to the trial judge's notice. The limited procedure recognised in Rekha

Murarka requires a specific factual foundation for judicial intervention; merely citing Section 311 does not give a complainant a free hand to conduct the prosecution. On these omissions in the application, the Court held that the privately filed application could not be considered and dismissed the supervisory petition. The ruling does not abolish the judge's independent statutory power where a properly identified material omission warrants its exercise.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shubham Sharma filed Misc. Petition No. 2554 of 2025 under Article 227, seeking to quash the order dated 7 May 2025 of the Tenth Additional Sessions Judge, Morena, in Sessions Trial No. 140/2016 and to allow an application under Section 348 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, described in the petition as the counterpart of Section 311 CrPC. At an earlier hearing the High Court asked whether the recall application had been filed by the complainant or the Public Prosecutor. Counsel confirmed it was filed by the petitioner as complainant and fairly accepted that, under Sections 225 and 301(2) CrPC, the private party can assist but not conduct a Sessions prosecution. He nevertheless invoked paragraph 12.5 of Rekha Murarka, arguing that private counsel should have a remedy when a prosecution is inadequately contested. The High Court examined the application and found that it identified neither a lapse by the Public Prosecutor nor a material issue previously brought before the judge and left unaddressed.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted at length and applied Rekha Murarka v. State of West Bengal, Criminal Appeal No. 1727/2019, decided 20 November 2019. The Supreme Court's interpretation of the word 'assist' in the proviso to Section 24(8) CrPC and of Section 301(2) gives the victim's counsel a secondary role to that of the Public Prosecutor, whose primacy in a Sessions trial is reinforced by Section 225. The Supreme Court rejected an unrestricted independent right to make oral submissions or to examine and cross-examine witnesses: a parallel prosecution can disrupt the prosecutor's strategy, turn the case into a vindictive contest and weaken the accused's procedural safeguards. It also acknowledged the real possibility that overburdened prosecutors may overlook relevant matters and preserved meaningful victim participation. Ordinarily, counsel should convey proposed points and questions through the prosecutor. If an important omission remains despite that step, counsel may place the proposed question or point before the judge. If persuaded of its merit, the judge may invoke Section 311 CrPC or Section 165 of the Evidence Act. Even such an oversight by the prosecutor does not give private counsel an unbridled power to examine witnesses personally. Applying paragraph 12.5 of Rekha Murarka, the High Court required an identified factual foundation and intervention through the judge, and tested the complainant's application against those requirements.

3. Statutes considered : Article 227 of the Constitution supplied the High Court's supervisory jurisdiction over the trial court order. Section 348 BNSS, 2023, and Section 311 CrPC were the provisions invoked for the requested witness recall or examination; the Court analysed the claim through the Section 311 language of Rekha Murarka. Section 225 CrPC governs Sessions trial prosecution by a Public Prosecutor, and Section 301(2) confines a private pleader's role in that prosecution. The proviso to Section 24(8) CrPC, interpreted in Rekha Murarka, permits a victim's advocate to assist the prosecution; it does not displace the prosecutor. Section 165 of the Indian Evidence Act was discussed within the Supreme Court passage as a judicial means of clarifying an overlooked material point. The quoted discussion also referred to the victim's appeal proviso to Section 372 CrPC to explain why meaningful trial participation matters.

4. Issues : (1) Could the complainant, rather than the Public Prosecutor, seek recall and thereby obtain effectively independent control of witness examination in a Sessions trial? (2) What limited procedure does Rekha Murarka recognise if a prosecutor neglects a material question suggested by the victim's counsel? (3) Did this application identify a specific prosecutorial omission and a prior attempt to bring the relevant matter to the judge's notice, so that the exercise of the judicial power under Section 311 could be considered? (4) Did refusal of the application warrant interference under Article 227?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted counsel's concession that the Public Prosecutor has primacy in conducting a Sessions prosecution. It applied Rekha Murarka to preserve both effective assistance by the victim's counsel and the prosecutor's control of the trial. A claim that the Public Prosecutor might be ineffective is insufficient to transfer the making of oral submissions or examination of witnesses to a private complainant. The Supreme Court's distinction protects the accused and the integrity of a coherent prosecution. At the same time, the victim's counsel may draw attention to a material overlooked point through the prosecutor and, if it remains unaddressed, seek the judge's independent consideration. If the judge finds merit in it, the powers under Section 311 CrPC and Section 165 of the Evidence Act may be exercised to address the omission; counsel does not acquire those powers personally. On examining the petitioner's application, the Court found no specific allegation of a lapse by the prosecutor and no assertion that a material omission had first been brought to the trial judge's notice. It therefore held that the complainant's application under Section 311 could not be considered on the factual foundation presented and found no ground to interfere with its refusal in supervisory jurisdiction. This procedural holding concerns the particular application; it does not declare that a judge can never recall a witness at a victim's suggestion or that every private submission is forbidden.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Article 227 petition. The order of 7 May 2025 was not quashed, and the complainant's Section 348 BNSS / Section 311 CrPC application was not allowed.

Shubham Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.P. no. 2554/2025, 19/05/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (892) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail — recovery condition — The applicant, in custody since 8 July 2020 on allegations of cheating and conspiracy connected to KIFL Bazar OPC Pvt. Ltd.'s deposit scheme, offered to pay one-third of an asserted ₹37,17,337 company liability. In his third Section 439 CrPC application, he relied on custody and likely trial delay and invoked Sanjay Chandra v. CBI. Applying Dilip Singh v. State of M.P., the Court declined the payment offer: a court deciding bail or anticipatory bail cannot serve as the complainant's recovery agent.

Corporate nominee — prima facie criminal acts — The applicant contended that he was a nominee, rather than a director of the company, and had no civil liability during the director's lifetime. The Court held that civil liability was not the issue in the bail application. The supplementary statement described his role in forming the company and stated that he held 12,500 shares. Depositors' statements attributed to him and the co-accused the act of persuading them to deposit money on a promise that it would be doubled. The company was said to lack RBI registration and a banking licence. Considering these circumstances, the scale of the alleged cheating and the earlier rejection of a co-accused's bail application, the Court refused bail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shyam Goyal filed his third application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC in Crime No. 22/2020, Police Station Kampoo (STF), Gwalior, concerning alleged offences under Sections 420 and 120-B IPC and the added Sections 66D and 74 of the Information Technology Act. He had been arrested on 8 July 2020. The case diary was unavailable, but his counsel supplied the charge sheet already filed and asked the Court to decide the application on that basis. The applicant contended that Shailendra Kansana, rather than he, was the director of KIFL Bazar OPC Pvt. Ltd., and that he was a nominee without civil liability during the director's lifetime. Counsel offered to pay one-third of the stated company liability of ₹37,17,337. Counsel attributed ₹30,11,903 to Goyal and Fateh Singh and ₹7,05,434 to Kansana. The applicant relied on the period already spent in custody and the expected length of the trial. The State opposed bail. The Court considered these submissions separately from the statements attributing personal acts to Goyal and noted the earlier rejection of co-accused Fateh Singh Mahor's bail application.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sanjay Chandra v. CBI, cited in the order as (2011) SCC Cri 26, was relied on by the applicant in seeking bail on account of custody since July 2020 and the expected delay in trial. The Court recorded that reliance and refused relief on the alleged facts. Dilip Singh v. State of M.P. and Another, Criminal Appeal No. 53/2021 arising from SLP (Criminal) No. 10484/2019, order of 19 January 2021, was expressly applied for the principle that a court considering bail or anticipatory bail cannot act as a recovery agent for the complainant. The Court relied on that principle to reject the offered deposit. It also noted the earlier rejection of co-accused Fateh Singh Mahor's bail application.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed the third application for regular bail, in which the Court considered the payment offer and the prima facie case. Sections 420 and 120-B IPC and Sections 66D and 74 of the Information Technology Act were the alleged offences. The absence of RBI registration and a banking licence formed part of the circumstances considered in assessing the alleged solicitation of deposits. The Supreme Court's recovery-agent principle concerned the use of a monetary deposit in deciding bail; the Court was not making a final restitution or compensation order.

4. Issues : (1) Could the applicant's proposed deposit of one-third of the amount allegedly obtained by cheating be accepted as a basis or condition for bail? (2) Did his status as nominee rather than director, and his contention that a nominee has no civil liability during the director's lifetime, answer the prima facie allegations that he had personally induced depositors? (3) Having regard to the period of custody, the expected duration of the trial, the available charge sheet, the victims' statements and the rejection of the co-accused's bail application, was this a fit case for relief under Section 439? The Court was deciding whether to grant bail, rather than adjudicating the depositors' civil claims or determining final criminal responsibility.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying Dilip Singh, the Court rejected the proposed deposit at the outset because using bail to recover the complainants' money would make the Court a recovery agent. It then considered the merits separately. The applicant's claimed exemption from civil liability as a nominee did not answer the question of possible criminal liability for his own alleged conduct. Abhishek Gupta's statement described Goyal's involvement in setting up the company, his nomination and his holding of 12,500 shares. The statements of Wasid Khan, Raj Kumar Gupta and other depositors were said to implicate him, along with others, in inducing deposits by promising to double the money. The company allegedly accepted deposits without RBI registration or a banking licence. Considering the number of depositors allegedly cheated and the rejection of Fateh Singh Mahor's bail application, the Court held that this was not a fit case for bail.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the third application for regular bail.

Shyam Goyal v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 11130/2021, 12/03/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (893) Prev Next

Headnote :- Quashing — disputed defence — The prosecutrix alleged that Shyam Kushwah held her mouth, hands and legs while another man raped her at a co-accused's house on 25 February 2021. He sought quashing of the FIR lodged on 8 March, relying on his mobile-phone location, a recorded conversation, his asserted unfamiliarity with the place and the eleven-day delay in reporting the incident. Exercising jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC, the High Court applied the test of whether the uncontroverted allegations prima facie disclosed an offence. An alibi must be established by reliable evidence; the Court could not determine the disputed question of location at this stage. The audio recording could not be accepted without proof that it was unaltered and that the voices were those claimed. The Court declined to conduct a roving inquiry into guilt or the truth of the allegations while the investigation or prosecution proceeded.

Group rape — restraint by participant — The applicant contended that he had not personally raped the prosecutrix. On the allegation that he had held her while another person committed rape, the Court held that Section 376D does not require every participant personally to commit the physical act of rape. Sharing the common intention or participating with mens rea may suffice. This was an assessment of the FIR at the quashing stage, not a conviction or a finding of fact after trial.

Delayed FIR — sexual assault — The eleven-day delay did not, by itself, warrant quashing. The Court observed that the accused may obtain the benefit of delay if the prosecution fails to give a plausible explanation. It also observed that, after physical violation, the complainant may take time to decide whether to report the incident because the family's reputation is at stake. The credibility of the particular account remained to be tested.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shyam Kushwah applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR in Crime No. 127/2021 at Jhansi Road police station, Gwalior, for offences under Sections 376D and 506 IPC and Sections 3(1)(w)(ii) and 3(2)(v) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act. The prosecutrix alleged that, on 25 February 2021, she went to Mona Kushwah's house to recover her money. The applicant offered her money to do work, abused her when she refused, and held her mouth, hands and legs while another man raped her. Mona allegedly locked the room from outside, and the prosecutrix's mother later opened it. The prosecutrix reported the incident on 8 March 2021. The applicant relied on the eleven-day delay, denied visiting or knowing Mona's house, produced mobile call-location details and an audio CD of a purported conversation with the prosecutrix and her husband, and sought a fair investigation. The State contended that his defence required proof.

2. Precedents — Considered : In ¶7, the Court cited Supreme Court decisions requiring caution in exercising jurisdiction under Section 482. Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678, concerned premature quashing before proper investigation had been conducted; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221, held that investigation of an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence should ordinarily continue. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547, emphasised proper investigation and restraint in interference. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, cautioned against a roving inquiry into a disputed complaint of a sexual offence. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, rejected a premature assessment of the merits. S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600, discussed the Bhajan Lal grounds concerning failure to disclose an offence on the face of the allegations and proceedings instituted with mala fides. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336, required reasons addressing the particular case. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460, prescribed assessment of the prima facie record, sparing exercise of the quashing power and avoidance of detailed weighing of evidence. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterated the need for caution. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, stated that defence documents are ordinarily not considered, subject to the limited exception for public documents or documents whose veracity is undisputed. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, and Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437, addressed the scope of the power, the need for caution and prevention of abuse. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, concerned allegations which, taken at face value, fail to disclose an offence; M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, addressed inherently improbable allegations. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, held that a disputed defence must be tested at trial. In ¶8, the Court expressly referred to State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, 30 June 2021, on the prohibition against meticulous appraisal of evidence and the principle that an FIR is not an encyclopedia. Applying these principles to the offered alibi and recording, the Court then considered Section 376D and the delay in lodging the FIR in its own assessment of the case.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC supplied the inherent jurisdiction to quash proceedings where the allegations, taken at face value, fail to disclose an offence or a recognised exceptional ground of abuse of process appears. Disputed questions requiring proof are normally left to investigation or trial. Section 376D IPC was invoked for group rape. The Court rejected the contention that every participant must personally perform penetration where a participant shares the common intention or acts with mens rea. The passage quoted from Amit Kapoor referred to Sections 397, 228 and 173(2) CrPC and illustrative grounds for quashing; these formed part of the precedent discussion and were not independent charges or reliefs decided in the present case.

4. Issues : (1) Did the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence warranting continuation of the FIR despite the applicant's denial, claimed mobile-location alibi and recording? (2) Could the High Court authenticate the recording, determine the identity of the voices or decide the applicant's location and presence under Section 482? (3) Could Section 376D apply to a person alleged to have restrained the prosecutrix while another person committed rape? (4) Did the eleven-day delay between the incident and the report, without an explanation accepted at this stage, require quashing? The petition sought quashing of the FIR, not a decision on guilt after trial; no final finding on credibility was required.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying the authorities cited in the order, the Court held that, under Section 482, it cannot decide the truth of contested allegations or undertake a detailed appraisal of evidence when the FIR, taken at face value, discloses cognizable criminal conduct. The applicant's claim based on mobile location was a plea of alibi requiring cogent and reliable evidence; it was not a disputed fact to be decided in the petition invoking inherent powers. The recording could not be relied on without proof that it was unaltered and that the voices were those of the prosecutrix and her husband. The claimed conversation also indicated that the applicant knew the prosecutrix. On the specific allegation that he had restrained her while another man raped her, the Court held that personal penetration by every accused was not necessary to proceed under Section 376D where common intention or participation with mens rea was alleged. The eleven-day delay was not decisive. Failure to provide a plausible explanation may benefit the accused, while hesitation following sexual violation may explain some delay. Considering the defences and the reporting interval together, the Court found no ground for quashing. These observations did not establish that the prosecution had proved all the elements of the offences; the applicant remained entitled to contest the evidence at the proper stage.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 to quash the FIR in Crime No. 127/2021.

Shyam Kushwah v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 31640/2021, 15/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (894) Prev Next

Headnote :- Disciplinary inquiry — parallel corruption case — An assistant sub-inspector sought a stay of a departmental inquiry instituted in September 2020 while a Lokayukta case proceeded under Section 7 of the Prevention of Corruption Act on an allegation that he had demanded illegal gratification during an investigation. The disciplinary charge, reproduced in the judgment, alleged dishonest misuse of lawful authority and violation of Police Regulation 64(2)(3). The criminal charge sheet was not produced. The petitioner could not state whether it had been filed, though the State asserted that it had. Applying the Supreme Court decisions in B.K. Meena, M. Paul Anthony, Stanzen Toyotetsu and related cases, the Court held that departmental and criminal proceedings may proceed simultaneously. A stay requires a showing, on the facts of the case, that continuation of the inquiry would prejudice the criminal defence in a grave matter involving complicated questions of law and fact. That risk must be balanced against the need for prompt disciplinary proceedings. The factual connection between the proceedings and reliance on the circular did not establish grounds for a stay on this record.

Delay and distinct charges — An interim order passed in November 2020 had stayed the departmental inquiry for more than three years. The Court emphasised that the stay could not continue indefinitely and held that the departmental misconduct charge was distinct from the criminal allegation. It vacated the stay, dismissed the writ petition and directed completion of the inquiry within six months.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Shyam Sunder Manjhi, an assistant sub-inspector formerly posted at Jaso police station, filed a petition under Article 226 seeking a stay of the departmental inquiry dated 1 September 2020 and quashing of its charge sheet during the pendency of a Lokayukta corruption case. Crime No. 166/20 arose from an allegation that he had demanded illegal gratification while conducting an investigation; the State's return alleged that he had been caught accepting it. The departmental charge, as summarised by the Court, concerned misuse of lawful authority, dishonest behaviour and dereliction of duty contrary to paragraph 64(2)(3) of the Police Regulations. The petitioner contended that the two proceedings arose from identical facts. He relied on a General Administration Department circular dated 30 July 2023 concerning parallel departmental action during a Lokayukta investigation or trial and action on the investigating agency's recommendation after completion of the investigation. The State opposed a stay merely because the criminal case was pending. Neither side produced the Lokayukta criminal charge sheet. The petitioner could not confirm the stage of the criminal case, whereas the State asserted that the charge sheet had been filed. An interim order dated 2 November 2020 had already stayed the departmental inquiry for more than three years.

2. Precedents — Considered : Avinash Sadashiv Bhosale v. Union of India, (2012) 13 SCC 142, quoting Karnataka SRTC v. M.G. Vittal Rao, (2012) 1 SCC 442, explained that there is no legal bar to simultaneous proceedings, that a stay to avoid prejudice to the criminal defence is available only in cases involving complicated questions of fact and law, and that disciplinary proceedings should be concluded promptly. Stanzen Toyotetsu India Pvt. Ltd. v. Girish V., (2014) 3 SCC 636, required the gravity of the charge and likely prejudice to the criminal defence to be balanced against delay; gravity alone was insufficient without complicated questions of law and fact. State Bank of India v. Neelam Nag, (2016) 9 SCC 491, rejected a straitjacket formula. Shashi Bhushan Prasad v. CISF, (2019) 7 SCC 797, explained, through A.P. SRTC v. Mohd. Yousuf Miya and Ajit Kumar Nag, the distinct purposes and standards of proof in the two proceedings, and quoted the five factors in M. Paul Anthony. Depot Manager, A.P. SRTC v. Mohd. Yousuf Miya, (1997) 2 SCC 699, was separately reproduced on the need to assess prejudice on the facts of each case. Kusheshwar Dubey v. Bharat Coking Coal Ltd., (1988) 4 SCC 319, recognised that an appropriate stay may be sought, although the pendency of a criminal case creates no legal bar to disciplinary proceedings; earlier labour decisions were quoted in it. Kendriya Vidyalaya Sangathan v. T. Srinivas, (2004) 7 SCC 442, concerned analogous allegations of illegal gratification and the impropriety of granting stays as a matter of course. Capt. M. Paul Anthony v. Bharat Gold Mines Ltd., (1999) 3 SCC 679, stated the principles governing simultaneous proceedings, identical facts involving grave charges and complicated questions, and undue delay. State of Rajasthan v. B.K. Meena, (1996) 6 SCC 417, was reproduced at length on prejudice to the criminal defence, complexity, prompt disciplinary proceedings and the need to avoid routine stays. The Court applied these authorities to vacate the prolonged stay, without laying down that simultaneous inquiries must proceed in every case. Other authorities appeared within the quoted passages.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked to seek a writ of mandamus or an order staying the departmental inquiry. Section 7 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988 concerned the criminal allegation of demand or acceptance of illegal gratification; the ingredients of the offence and the petitioner's guilt were not adjudicated in this writ petition. Paragraph 64(2)(3) of the Police Regulations was the stated basis of the departmental misconduct charge. The different standards of proof and rules of evidence governing criminal trials and departmental inquiries were discussed through Shashi Bhushan Prasad and Mohd. Yousuf Miya.

4. Issues : (1) Must an inquiry into police misconduct be stayed because a Lokayukta investigation or trial under Section 7 arising from the same incident is pending? (2) Did the petitioner show that a grave criminal charge involving complicated questions of fact and law, common evidence and a concrete risk of prejudice to his criminal defence made a stay advisable? (3) What weight should be given to the interim stay lasting more than three years, uncertainty about the stage of the criminal case and the separately framed charge under Regulation 64? (4) Did the administrative circular relied on by the petitioner require a different outcome on this record?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that there is no legal bar to simultaneous departmental and criminal proceedings. Whether a stay is advisable depends on the facts of the case, including whether grave criminal charges involve complicated questions of fact and law and whether continuation of the departmental inquiry, particularly on common evidence, would prejudice the accused's criminal defence. Even where a stay is justified, undue delay in the criminal case weighs against its continuation. The petitioner did not contend that any complicated question was involved and could not establish the contents of the criminal charge sheet or the stage of the criminal case. The departmental charge concerned dishonest misuse of police authority and violation of Regulation 64(2)(3), which the Court held to be distinct from the criminal allegation of illegal gratification. KVS v. T. Srinivas supported the conclusion that corruption allegations do not automatically require a stay of departmental proceedings. The interim order passed in 2020 had stayed the inquiry for more than three years. The Court held that it could not continue indefinitely. The judgment refers to registration of the criminal case in 2000.

6. Relief : The High Court vacated the interim stay dated 2 November 2020 and directed the respondents to conclude the departmental inquiry within six months from the date of the order. It dismissed the writ petition and directed the Registry to communicate the order.

Shyam Sunder Manjhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 14437/2020, 23/11/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (896) Prev Next

Headnote :- Quashing — civil matrimonial proceeding — The husband and his parents sought quashing under Section 528 BNSS of an FIR and charge sheet under Section 85 BNS and Sections 3–4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The husband relied on his pending petition for restitution of conjugal rights and claimed that the wife's FIR was a counterblast. Applying Kishan Singh, Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam, Prem Raj, Pratibha and Vishnu Dutt Sharma, the High Court held that civil and criminal proceedings have different standards of proof and that findings in one are not automatically binding in the other, subject to the limited rules governing the relevance of previous judgments. The allegations in the pending petition under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act remained unproved and did not warrant quashing the FIR. The applicants withdrew their separate contention that this was a 'second FIR', conceding that the earlier written police complaint was not an FIR. That ground was dismissed as not pressed.

Dowry cruelty — expulsion and mental harm — The FIR alleged that a demand for ₹5 lakh and a vehicle was made after one month of marriage and that the wife was driven out about four months after marriage when her father could not meet the demand. Taken at face value, forcing the wife out of the matrimonial home for failure to meet a dowry demand could amount to mental cruelty. Rupali Devi recognises that the psychological harm may continue after she takes shelter in her parental home. The Court held that the parties' brief written compromise need not record every alleged atrocity and refused to quash the proceedings.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Siddharath (also spelled Siddharth in the FIR account) Upadhayay, his father and mother petitioned under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita to quash the FIR in Crime No. 61/2024 at Mahila Thana, Ashoknagar, and the charge sheet for offences under Section 85 of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The wife stated that she married the first applicant on 15 February 2023 and was treated well for one month. Thereafter, all the applicants demanded ₹5 lakh and a vehicle. When her father could not meet the demand, they drove her out on 12 June 2023. She reported the matter on 19 October 2024. The applicants contended that she had complained to Mungavali police in August 2024 and that the later FIR was a prohibited second FIR. They also relied on a written compromise of June 2024 to live separately and the husband's petition under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act for restitution of conjugal rights. They alleged that no preliminary inquiry had been conducted, that the case affected his PSC interview prospects and that the allegations were false. The Court granted time to produce the outcome of the earlier police inquiry, but the applicants could not establish it. They conceded that the earlier written complaint was not an FIR and did not press the second-FIR objection. The State opposed quashing. The remaining questions were whether the FIR was a counterblast to the civil proceeding and whether it alleged cruelty.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775 was applied for the different standards of proof in civil and criminal proceedings and the principle that findings in one are not binding in the other, subject to the limited relevance of judgments under Evidence Act Sections 41–43. Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), (2009) 5 SCC 528, examined K.G. Premshanker, the superseded general proposition in Karam Chand and the circumstances in which previous judgments may have limited evidentiary relevance. Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon, SLP (Criminal) No. 9778/2018, decided 2 April 2024, quoted the Constitution Bench decisions in Iqbal Singh Marwah and M.S. Sheriff in rejecting a general rule that findings in one proceeding bind the other. It also discussed the order in which proceedings may be taken up, depending on the circumstances of the case. Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi was quoted for the proposition that a husband's civil matrimonial petition cannot, by itself, bring a criminal complaint to an end. Vishnu Dutt Sharma v. Daya Sapra, Civil Appeal No. 3238/2009, reiterated the separate nature of the proceedings. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384 explained the continuing mental trauma relevant to cruelty under Section 498-A IPC; the Court applied that reasoning by analogy to the allegation under Section 85 BNS. Amar Singh v. Vimla, Criminal Revision No. 2376/2020 (MP High Court, 22 June 2021), was cited on the cruelty involved in compelling a wife to live in her parental home. Earlier decisions, including Iqbal Singh Marwah, K.G. Premshanker and M.S. Sheriff, appear in the quoted Supreme Court analyses, with their qualifications concerning the relevance of judgments. The superseded general statement in Karam Chand was not treated as governing law.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was invoked to seek quashing in exercise of the Court's inherent jurisdiction. Section 85 BNS and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were the provisions under which the charge sheet was filed; the judgment referred by analogy to Section 498-A IPC. Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act governed the husband's pending petition for restitution of conjugal rights, whose unproved pleadings could not determine the criminal allegations. Sections 40–43 of the Evidence Act, 1872 were discussed in the cited authorities as provisions governing the limited relevance of previous judgments, rather than as a rule making them automatically binding. Section 300 CrPC appeared in a quoted passage concerning a previous conviction or acquittal.

4. Issues : (1) Could the earlier written complaint to Mungavali police be treated as the first FIR so as to invalidate the later FIR at Mahila Thana? This objection was abandoned after the concession and dismissed as not pressed. (2) Did the husband's petition for restitution of conjugal rights and the asserted compromise to live separately establish that the FIR was a malicious counterblast or otherwise warrant quashing? (3) Taken at face value, did the allegations of a dowry demand and expulsion disclose sufficient cruelty against the applicants to permit the prosecution to continue?

5. Ratio / Findings : The applicants acknowledged that the earlier complaint was not an FIR and did not press the second-FIR objection. The Court stated that, where a police preliminary inquiry finds insufficient evidence, the police are obliged to supply the report to the complainant and file it before the Magistrate. No final outcome of the earlier complaint had been identified on the record. As to the civil and criminal proceedings, their different standards of proof and the limited relevance of previous judgments meant that neither the unproved pleadings in the pending restitution petition nor the counterblast contention determined the criminal case. A wife's decision to report the matter after the marriage had apparently reached an impasse did not, by itself, make her FIR an abuse of process. Taken at face value, the alleged dowry demand and expulsion within months of marriage constituted mental cruelty for the purpose of deciding whether to quash the proceedings. Rupali Devi supported the continuing emotional impact after the wife left the matrimonial home. A settlement note need not record every alleged atrocity. The Court examined whether the allegations were sufficient to permit the proceedings to continue, without deciding guilt, and declined to quash the FIR and charge sheet.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 528 BNSS. The withdrawn second-FIR objection was dismissed as not pressed. The FIR and charge sheet under Section 85 BNS and Sections 3–4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act remained in place.

Siddharath Upadhayay and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 14509/2025, 25/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (897) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail — parity tied to role — Sikandar appealed under Section 14A(2) of the SC/ST Act against the refusal of bail in a case of murder and an alleged attempt to conceal it. According to the record, he, Omkar and Gajendra assaulted Shyamlal with lathis and took him to hospital under the false identity of Nathuram, who had died years earlier. The other accused were alleged only to have furnished false information. The Sessions Judge granted Gajendra bail by relying on High Court bail orders concerning the latter group and stating that the charge sheet disclosed no specific role for him. On examining the charge sheet, including the reproduced extract, and the case diary, the High Court found that this comparison ignored the different roles. Applying Shri Mahadev Meena and Ramesh Bhavan Rathod, it held that parity requires a comparison of the accused's conduct and position in relation to the incident. Mere involvement in the same case or the use of similar weapons is insufficient. The gravity of the allegations, the prima facie material and the alleged concealment of the victim's identity defeated Sikandar's claim despite his period of custody and the possibility of trial delay.

Erroneous bail order — procedural review — The High Court found that the Sessions Judge's order granting bail to Gajendra ignored the specific assault allegations and relied on bail orders concerning persons accused only of furnishing false information. It directed registration of a separate case under Section 439(2) CrPC, service of a show-cause notice through the Superintendent of Police and a later hearing on whether the bail order should be recalled. Gajendra's bail was not cancelled at that stage. Drawing on Harjit Singh and Mahipal, the judgment distinguished scrutiny of an unlawful grant of bail from cancellation for a subsequent breach. It also directed transmission of the order for administrative consideration of the Sessions Judge's conduct, after referring to an earlier order on the binding force of unreported High Court judgments. These directions were separate from the decision on Sikandar's bail appeal.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sikandar Singh Narvariya, arrested on 19 February 2021, filed his first bail appeal under Section 14A(2) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act against the Special Judge's refusal of bail on 31 May 2021. Crime No. 21/2021 at Barohi, Bhind concerned allegations of murder and IPC offences relating to forgery, false records, public servants and evidence, as well as offences under Sections 3(2)(vi) and 3(2)(v) of the SC/ST Act. The State reported that notice had been given to the complainant under Section 15-A; no one appeared for him. According to the prosecution, Sikandar, Omkar alias Daplu and Gajendra beat Shyamlal with lathis, took him to J.A. Hospital, Gwalior, under the name of Nathuram, who had died in 2013, obtained a death certificate in that false name and did not bring the body back to the village. The injured Shyamlal died on 8 June 2020. The other co-accused were alleged to have given false information to the police, but not to have assaulted him. Sikandar relied on the Sessions Court's order of 10 August 2021 granting Gajendra bail, his own custody, completion of the investigation and the prospect of a lengthy trial. He also asserted that there was no risk of his absconding or interfering with the prosecution. The High Court compared Gajendra's bail order with the charge sheet, police statements and earlier High Court bail orders. The Sessions Judge had treated those accused only of giving false information as though they had also assaulted the victim and had stated that the charge sheet assigned no specific role to Gajendra.

2. Precedents — Considered : Shri Mahadev Meena v. Praveen Rathore, Criminal Appeal No. 1089/2021, 27 September 2021, was quoted and applied on the factors governing bail and the need to assess each accused's role when considering parity. It distinguished a co-accused granted bail because of a particular personal circumstance from an accused attributed a major role. Ramesh Bhavan Rathod v. Vishanbhai Hirabhai Makwana, (2021) 6 SCC 230, was separately quoted for the principle that parity requires consideration of the accused's role and position in relation to the incident and the victims. A comparison based merely on similar weapons or the same charge is insufficient. The decision also emphasised the need for reasons and consideration of the gravity of the offence. State of Kerala v. Mahesh, Criminal Appeal No. 343/2021, 19 March 2021, was quoted on the judicious exercise of discretion, prima facie material, seriousness and the risks of absconding or interference. Harjit Singh v. Inderpreet Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 883/2021, 24 August 2021, was quoted on bail discretion and the distinction between setting aside an unjustified grant and cancelling bail for subsequent misconduct or supervening circumstances. Sanjay Chandra was mentioned in the extract from State of Kerala on seriousness and the balance of relevant considerations. The earlier High Court bail orders concerning Upendra Jatav and Jarman Singh showed that, unlike Sikandar, they were not alleged to have assaulted the victim.

3. Statutes considered : Section 14A(2) of the SC/ST Act provided for the appeal against the Special Judge's refusal of bail; notice to the complainant under Section 15-A was reported. Section 439 CrPC governed the bail discretion discussed in the cited authorities. Section 439(2) was invoked for a separate show-cause proceeding concerning Gajendra's earlier grant of bail, which was not recalled by this order. The assessment at this interlocutory stage neither convicted anyone nor decided the separate cancellation proceeding.

4. Issues : (1) Was Sikandar similarly situated to Gajendra and the other accused granted bail, having regard to the different allegations of assault and false information and the Sessions Judge's description of the charge sheet? (2) Did the gravity of the allegations and the prima facie material, including the alleged use of a deceased person's name for hospital admission and the death certificate, warrant refusal of bail despite custody and possible trial delay? (3) Did the apparent factual error in Gajendra's bail order call for a separate review under Section 439(2), and what procedure would afford him an opportunity to be heard? (4) Did the Sessions Judge's conduct call for transmission of the order for administrative consideration? The latter two matters resulted in procedural directions, without a final cancellation of bail or disciplinary decision.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that bail granted to one accused cannot be extended mechanically to another on the ground of parity. The comparison must take account of each accused's alleged conduct and connection with the offence. The persons previously granted bail by the High Court were accused of giving false information after the death. By contrast, the charge sheet and witness statements identified Sikandar, Gajendra and Omkar as the alleged assailants who took Shyamlal to hospital under Nathuram's identity. The Sessions Judge's order granting Gajendra bail incorrectly treated these two groups alike and stated that the charge sheet assigned him no specific role. An order based on those errors did not entitle Sikandar to bail on parity. The alleged assault and elaborate concealment, assessed under the Supreme Court's bail principles, made his case unfit for release. As Gajendra's bail order itself appeared to disregard material facts, the Court directed notice and registration of a separate case under Section 439(2) to consider recall, preserving his opportunity to respond. The quoted authority distinguished correction of a perverse grant from cancellation for subsequent conduct. The direction to the Registrar General to place the order before the Chief Justice arose from the Sessions Judge's repeated departures from settled judicial discipline, including the earlier issue concerning unreported judgments. The criminal allegations remained for trial, and this order did not decide the separate show-cause case.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Sikandar's bail appeal under Section 14-A(2) of the SC/ST Act. It directed registration of a separate matter concerning Gajendra under Section 439(2), service of notice through the Superintendent of Police, Bhind, and listing for consideration of cancellation on 20 October 2021. Gajendra's bail was not cancelled by this decision. The Registrar General was directed to place the order before the Chief Justice for possible administrative action concerning the Sessions Judge. The order did not itself impose any administrative action.

Sikandar Singh Narvariya v. State of M.P. and Others, Cr.A. no. 5870/2021, 04/10/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (898) Prev Next

Headnote :- Homicidal death — medical qualification — Papitabai was found dead in her matrimonial home. The post-mortem report recorded ante-mortem contusions on the neck, chin, face and eyes, and gave the cause of death as asphyxia due to strangulation. Although the report stated that the final opinion would depend on the surrounding circumstances and evidence, the Court rejected the contention that the doctor was uncertain about strangulation. The pattern of injuries indicated a struggle and established that the death was homicidal.

Section 106 — foundation first — The prosecution proved four circumstances: the spouses lived under the same roof; they returned together from a family wedding; their relations were strained; and her strangled body was found in his house. State of T.N. v. Rajendran and Kalu v. State of M.P. permitted the Court, on that foundation, to require a cogent explanation of facts especially within the husband's knowledge. Shivaji Chintappa Patil cautions that Section 106 does not relieve the prosecution of its primary burden or make mere co-residence conclusive. The Court rejected the appellant's account that he found his wife dead on returning at 4 p.m., in view of the established death before her father's complaint at 9:45 a.m. His claim that he was taking her to hospital was inconsistent with leaving the body and failing to join the inquiry. The Court treated his false explanation under Section 313 as an additional link, rather than as a substitute for the circumstances already proved.

Circumstantial chain — absence after event — Witnesses described earlier beating or harassment, the appellant's departure with the deceased from a family function and his absence after her death. Several other witnesses turned hostile, including those concerning an alleged attempt to dispose of the body; the Court did not treat that episode as independently proved. It considered the appellant's arrest eight days later and his absence from the investigation together with the medical evidence and the circumstances proved concerning the matrimonial home. Applying Sharad Birdhichand Sarda, the Court found the chain complete beyond reasonable doubt and affirmed the conviction under Section 302 and the sentence of life imprisonment.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sitaram appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the Sessions Court's judgment of 15 January 2010 convicting him under Section 302 IPC of murdering his wife, Papitabai, and sentencing him to life imprisonment, a fine of ₹500 and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The couple married in 2002 and lived at Dabra. After being informed of her death on 16 December 2008, her father, Atar Singh, found her body at the appellant's house and reported the matter to the police. The post-mortem report described extensive ante-mortem contusions on the neck and face and gave the cause of death as asphyxia due to strangulation. The investigation also concerned an alleged demand for a motorcycle and ₹20,000 and earlier harassment. Charges were framed under Section 302 or, alternatively, Section 304B IPC; the appeal concerned the conviction under Section 302. Sitaram contended that the prosecution had not proved homicide, that the couple's children had not been examined and that an unknown intruder might have killed her. The Court examined the evidence of the doctor, relatives and hostile witnesses, the husband's presence and conduct, and his replies under Section 313. In those replies, he stated that he had returned home at about 4 p.m., seen Govind leaving and found his wife dead. In another reply, he claimed that he was taking her for treatment rather than disposing of her body. The Court assessed these replies against the earlier time of death and the absence of evidence that he had participated in the police inquiry.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of T.N. v. Rajendran, (1999) 8 SCC 679, was applied on the cumulative assessment of circumstantial evidence and an untrue explanation as an additional link in a case of strangulation within the home. Kalu v. State of M.P., (2019) 10 SCC 211, was quoted at length on the limited burden concerning facts especially within the accused's knowledge after the prosecution has established the necessary foundation. Its discussion of Hanumant, Tulshiram Sahadu Suryawanshi, Trimukh Maroti Kirkan, Mir Mohammad Omar and Shambu Nath Mehra cautions against displacing the prosecution's primary burden. Shivaji Chintappa Patil v. State of Maharashtra, (2021) 5 SCC 626, was expressly quoted to qualify the application of Section 106: co-residence and having last been seen together cannot, by themselves, establish guilt without the necessary prosecution evidence. Its extracts discuss Subramaniam, Gargi and Sawal Das. Omprakash v. State of Uttaranchal, (2003) 1 SCC 648 and Dara Singh v. Republic of India, (2011) 2 SCC 490 were cited on abscondence as relevant conduct, rather than proof of guilt by itself. Rohtush Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2013) 14 SCC 434 was quoted on an explanation under Section 313 and a false answer as an additional circumstantial link; Musheer Khan, Sunil Clifford Daniel and State of Maharashtra v. Suresh appear within its quotation. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116 was applied in the final assessment of the chain of circumstances.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC was the provision under which the murder conviction was affirmed and prescribed a minimum sentence of life imprisonment. Section 106 of the Evidence Act concerns facts especially within a person's knowledge. It applies only after the prosecution establishes the foundational circumstances and does not reverse the ultimate burden of proving guilt. Section 8 of the Evidence Act was referred to through Dara Singh in relation to abscondence as conduct; Section 114 was discussed in the passage quoted from Kalu on inferences from proved facts. Section 313 CrPC afforded the accused an opportunity to explain incriminating circumstances; a false answer could provide an additional link in an otherwise proved chain. Section 174 CrPC governed the initial inquiry into the death, and Section 374 governed the appeal.

4. Issues : (1) Was Papitabai's death homicidal despite the post-mortem report's qualification concerning the final opinion? (2) Did the prosecution establish a complete chain identifying Sitaram as her killer, having regard to their shared residence, strained relations, their presence together before the incident and the discovery of her body in his house? (3) At what stage could Section 106 require an explanation from him, and what weight could be given to his inconsistent replies under Section 313 and his absence after the death? (4) Did the possibility of an unidentified intruder or the non-examination of the children raise reasonable doubt in this case? The alternative dowry-death charge was not the conviction under appeal.

5. Ratio / Findings : The qualification that the final opinion depended on other circumstances did not negate the medical officer's finding of asphyxia due to strangulation. The multiple injuries to the neck and face supported a finding of homicidal violence. The prosecution proved that the appellant and deceased lived together, that he returned with her from a wedding, that their relations were strained and that her strangled body was found in his house. These circumstances supplied the necessary foundation; guilt was not presumed from the marriage alone. On that foundation, the manner of death called for an explanation of facts especially within his knowledge under Section 106, subject to the caution in Kalu and Shivaji Chintappa Patil that the prosecution's primary burden remained. The Court rejected Sitaram's account of returning at 4 p.m. in view of the established death before the complaint at 9:45 a.m. His claim that he was taking her for treatment was inconsistent with leaving the body and failing to join the police inquiry. As the witnesses had turned hostile, the alleged attempt to dispose of the body in a tempo was not itself proved. The Court instead considered his own reply and the other proved conduct. His absence from the scene and arrest eight days later were additional circumstances and were insufficient by themselves. A false reply under Section 313 likewise strengthened the chain only after the foundational facts had been established. Applying Sharad Birdhichand Sarda, the Bench found that the chain excluded any reasonable hypothesis consistent with innocence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the conviction under Section 302 IPC, life imprisonment, the fine of ₹500 and the term of imprisonment in default. Sitaram remained in custody to serve the remaining sentence. A free copy of the judgment was ordered to be supplied to him, and the trial record was directed to be returned. Sitaram v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 209/2010, 29/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (899) Prev Next

Headnote :- Acquittal appeal — leave and perversity — A private complainant sought leave under Section 378(3) CrPC to challenge the JMFC's acquittal of the respondents under Section 323 IPC after an alleged assault in a field during a long-standing land dispute. The High Court noted that the complaint lacked a supporting affidavit and quoted Priyanka Srivastava on the requirement of a sworn affidavit for an application under Section 156(3). It also examined the civil proceedings concerning title, in which the decree initially granted to the complainant had been reversed. Finding no perversity in the acquittal, the Court declined leave. Where the evidence permits two views, the appellate court cannot displace the trial court's reasonable view favouring the accused merely because it prefers another view.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sitaram Gadariya sought permission under Section 378(3) CrPC to appeal against the judgment of the JMFC, Ashoknagar, dated 20 September 2021 in RCT No. 1607/2017, acquitting the respondents under Section 323 IPC. He alleged that on 1 August 2016, while he and his relatives were spraying pesticides on farmland, the respondents insisted on harvesting the crops and assaulted him with fists and blows when he objected. After his police complaints failed to secure action, an earlier High Court order had indicated that he could file a private complaint under Section 200 CrPC, and he did so. He contended that the trial court had rejected his evidence on flimsy grounds. After receiving the trial record, the High Court noted that the private complaint lacked a supporting affidavit. It also considered the long-standing dispute over possession of the land. The decree for title and injunction granted in his favour in 2002 in Civil Suit No. 505-A/1998 had been set aside in RCA No. 79-A/2004; a second appeal was stated to be pending. The respondents had relied on the appellate civil decree as Exhibit D-2. The Court viewed the criminal case as an attempt to give a criminal character to the civil dispute after that reversal. Its finding governing the leave request was that no perversity had been shown in the acquittal.

2. Precedents — Considered : Priyanka Srivastava v. State of U.P., (2015) 6 SCC 287 was quoted for the specific requirement that an application under Section 156(3) CrPC seeking a Magistrate's direction for investigation be supported by a sworn affidavit and disclose the earlier approaches under Sections 154(1) and 154(3). The High Court referred to that decision after noting the absence of an affidavit supporting this complainant's private complaint under Section 200.

3. Statutes considered : Section 378(3) CrPC governed the request for leave to appeal in this case. Section 200 CrPC was the provision under which the private complaint was filed after the police failed to take action.

4.* Issues : (1) Did the applicant show a perverse finding by the trial court or any other ground for granting leave against the acquittal under Section 323? (2) Where the evidence reasonably permitted more than one view, could the High Court replace the trial court's view favouring the accused? (3) What bearing did the absence of an affidavit and the civil litigation concerning the land have on the request for leave?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court noted that the complaint lacked a supporting affidavit and quoted the safeguard applicable to applications under Section 156(3). It also considered the property dispute and the reversal of the complainant's civil title decree. On the facts of this case, it viewed the prosecution as an attempt to give a criminal character to that civil dispute. After examining the trial record, the Court found no perversity in the JMFC's acquittal. The availability of another possible view did not justify overturning the trial court's reasonable view favouring the respondents. The Court therefore affirmed the acquittal and refused leave.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court refused leave to appeal under Section 378(3) and dismissed the application. It affirmed the JMFC's judgment of 20 September 2021 acquitting the respondents under Section 323 IPC.

Sitaram Gadariya v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 55116/2021, 16/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (900) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abetment of suicide — intent and proximate act — Against the background of related FIRs, Shivam Yadav, who was absconding in an earlier assault case, died after coming into contact with an electrical installation in a field. His brother alleged that, on the preceding night, Sitaram Yadav and others abused and threatened them, saying that they would ruin Shivam's life and that it would be better for him to die than to keep running. In the Article 226 petitions seeking quashing of the FIR under Sections 306, 294, 506 and 34 IPC, the High Court accepted those allegations as true for the purpose of assessing whether an offence was disclosed. Applying Sections 306 and 107 and the Supreme Court decisions on instigation, it held that the alleged words, without any further overt act or facts showing an intention to bring about suicide, disclosed neither the necessary mens rea nor a positive act sufficiently connected with the suicide. Words spoken in anger without intending the consequence do not, by themselves, amount to instigation; a continued course of conduct may amount to instigation on different facts. The finding was confined to this record.

Obscenity — words and annoyance — Mukul, the sole eyewitness, stated in his written complaint and his account under Section 174 that the accused had used filthy abuse, but did not specify the obscene words or allege annoyance to those who heard them. Section 294 IPC requires an obscene act in a public place, or the utterance of obscene words in or near a public place, causing annoyance to others. Even if the allegations were accepted as true, these necessary ingredients were not disclosed.

Intimidation — intended alarm — Applying Vikram Johar on Sections 503/506, the Court held that a threat of injury must be accompanied by an intention to cause alarm or compel an act or omission. On the allegations concerning this exchange, it found no intention to carry out the threats so as to cause alarm or compel conduct, and held that Section 506 was not disclosed. It quashed Crime No. 571/2023 in its entirety in both writ petitions. Its separate direction to the Superintendent of Police, Niwari, to consider whether persons had knowingly sheltered the deceased while he was wanted in the earlier case was conditional. Costs of ₹20,000 were imposed on respondent 9, with directions for recovery and contempt proceedings in default.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : By a common order in Writ Petition Nos. 21097 and 22734 of 2023, the High Court considered Sitaram Yadav's challenge under Article 226 to the FIR in Crime No. 571/2023 at Prithvipur, Niwari, under Sections 306, 294, 506 and 34 IPC. The earlier Crime No. 171/2023 arose from a March assault on Sitaram's brother, Ajay Pratap Yadav; Shivam Yadav and others were accused and were reported to be absconding. Sitaram alleged that police officers were related to the accused in that case, that pressure was being exerted to compromise and that the later FIR was retaliatory. He also referred to an earlier writ petition seeking police protection. On 31 July 2023, Shivam was found dead near an electrical distribution installation, with a wire stuck to his hand. His brother, Mukul, alleged that, while taking him home the previous night, they met Sitaram, Munna and Ajay or Sanjay Yadav near a temple. He alleged that these persons abused and threatened them, saying that they would spoil Shivam's life and that it would be better for him to die than to run from pillar to post. The other witnesses largely repeated the account as hearsay. Mukul gave the same account of the roadside exchange in his statement under Section 174. Sitaram contended that, even if the FIR account were accepted, it disclosed no abetment, obscenity or intimidation.

2. Precedents — Considered : On restraint in quashing proceedings and the exception where the basic ingredients of an offence are absent, the Court discussed XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319; Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, including the limited exception for public documents or defence documents whose authenticity is undisputed; State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; M.

Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, 30 June 2021. It also referred to decisions taking a similar view, including Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha. On instigation, it quoted Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605 on goading, intention and a possible continued course of conduct; Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734 on the factual context and the tentative assessment at the quashing stage; Sanju v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371 on mens rea; Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750; Orilal Jaiswal, (1994) 1 SCC 73; M. Mohan, AIR 2011 SC 1238; Kishori Lal, (2007) 10 SCC 797; and Amalendu Pal, (2010) 1 SCC 707 on active incitement proximate to the suicide. It also quoted Amit Kapoor, (2012) 9 SCC 460 and Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618. Kumar alias Shiva Kumar v. State of Karnataka, Criminal Appeal No. 1427/2011, 1 March 2024, was referred to as laying down the same law. Vikram Johar v. State of U.P., (2019) 14 SCC 207, quoting Fiona Shrikhande and Manik Taneja, governed the separate analysis of the ingredients of criminal intimidation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was the writ jurisdiction invoked; the Court used the Section 482 CrPC standard of accepting the allegations as true as guidance on quashing. Section 306 IPC punishes abetment of suicide. Section 107 defines abetment by instigation, conspiracy accompanied by an act or illegal omission in pursuance of it, or intentional aid. Section 294 requires obscenity in the relevant public setting and resulting annoyance; the general allegation of abuse identified neither the obscene words nor resulting annoyance here. Sections 503 and 506 require a threat of injury with an intention to cause alarm, to compel an act which the person is not legally bound to do, or to compel omission of an act which the person is legally entitled to do. Section 34 was included in the FIR, and the Court found that the allegations did not disclose the offences read with that provision. Section 174 CrPC governed the witness statements in the inquiry into the death; the Court considered Mukul's direct account separately from the hearsay accounts. Sections 82–83 CrPC and the earlier allegations of assault and attempted murder formed the background to Shivam's status as a wanted accused.

4. Issues : (1) If the roadside words were accepted as alleged, did they amount to intentional instigation or aid of suicide with the necessary direct causal connection under Sections 107 and 306? (2) Did the general allegation of filthy abuse identify obscene words uttered in or near a public place and resulting annoyance under Section 294? (3) Did the alleged threats disclose an intention to cause alarm or compel conduct under Sections 503 and 506? (4) Could the charges be quashed on the allegations themselves without deciding witness reliability or the allegation of police bias? (5) What separate direction was appropriate concerning the alleged sheltering of an accused who was absconding?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court accepted Mukul's direct account for the purpose of deciding whether the alleged acts disclosed an offence. The accused were alleged to have threatened Shivam at the roadside and said that he would be better off dead, but no accompanying overt act or facts showing an intention that he take his own life were alleged. Sections 306/107 require the culpable mental process involved in instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid; the alleged words in this encounter did not disclose it. Section 294 was also not made out because the allegations specified neither the obscene words nor any resulting annoyance. Applying Vikram Johar, the Court found that the alleged threat did not disclose the intention required for Section 506: an intention to cause alarm or compel a person to act or refrain from acting. It held that, even on accepting the allegations as true, no offence under these provisions read with Section 34 was disclosed. Separately, the Court noted the witness accounts that Shivam had been sheltered while absconding in the earlier case. It directed the Superintendent of Police to consider whether that conduct disclosed an offence and to register an FIR only if he reached that conclusion.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court quashed Crime No. 571/2023 in its entirety under Sections 306, 294, 506 read with 34 IPC and allowed both writ petitions. The Superintendent of Police, Niwari, was directed to consider whether the named relatives, witnesses and in-laws had committed offences by knowingly sheltering an absconder, and to register an FIR if he concluded that an offence had been committed. Respondent 9 was directed to deposit costs of ₹20,000 with the Registry within one month. In default, recovery and contempt proceedings were directed.

Sitaram Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Ajay Pratap Yadav and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 21097/2023 & 22734/2023, 15/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (901) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation — no compelled arrest or charge sheet — After registration of Crime No. 375/2024 at Pohari, Shivpuri, the complainant invoked Section 528 BNSS seeking arrest, proceedings under Sections 82–83 against an absconding accused, expeditious investigation and filing of a charge sheet. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and its reliance on M.C. Abraham, the High Court refused to direct arrest or prescribe the outcome of the investigation. The quoted authority treated arrest under Section 41 CrPC as a matter of police discretion affecting liberty; not every investigation must end in arrest, seizure or a charge sheet. Judicial directions prescribing the manner of investigation without reasons or a hearing for those affected may have serious consequences.

Prompt completion — lawful report — The Court separately applied Section 173(1) CrPC and its counterpart, Section 193 BNSS, which require completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible, determine whether an offence was made out and take lawful steps to submit the appropriate final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet. The applicant remained free to approach the Superintendent of Police, Shivpuri, with any grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Siyaram Giri Goswami's complaint resulted in registration of Crime No. 375/2024 at Police Station Pohari, District Shivpuri. He applied under Section 528 BNSS, alleging that the police had taken no effective further action and had not arrested the accused. He sought compulsory arrest, proceedings under Sections 82–83 if the accused was absconding, and expeditious investigation so that justice could be secured without delay. The Court also addressed the request for a direction to file a charge sheet. The State appeared. The High Court distinguished directions prescribing the outcome of an investigation from the statutory duty to complete it without unnecessary delay.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488 was quoted at length and applied. It set aside a High Court order mechanically directing investigative steps, including recording statements, arrest, seizure and filing a charge sheet, without reasons or a hearing for the persons affected. Its extract relied on M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649 on police discretion under Section 41 CrPC: registration of a cognizable FIR does not require arrest of every accused, and the decision must be taken cautiously because it affects liberty. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542 appeared within the D. Venkatasubramaniam quotation on the need to hear affected persons before issuing judicial directions with drastic consequences. The quoted Supreme Court decision also explained that an investigation may result in a charge sheet or a finding that no case is made out, and that inherent jurisdiction cannot be used to direct police methods without the grounds required by the governing provision.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was the provision invoked by the complainant for exercise of inherent jurisdiction; the cited precedent discussed the corresponding power under Section 482 CrPC. Section 173(1) CrPC and Section 193 BNSS were referred to by the Court as requiring completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay and submission of the appropriate final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet.

4. Issues : (1) Could the High Court, at the complainant's request, direct the police to arrest the accused, initiate absconder proceedings and file a charge sheet after registration of an FIR? (2) Could it require completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay while preserving police assessment of the evidence and statutory discretion? (3) What remedy remained if the complainant continued to have a grievance?

5. Ratio / Findings : Registration of a cognizable case does not automatically require arrest or filing of a charge sheet. The police have the statutory duty to investigate and adopt lawful methods. An order compelling particular steps would improperly direct their assessment of the evidence and decisions affecting liberty. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Court refused to direct arrest or filing of a charge sheet. The investigation could not, however, be left pending indefinitely. The Court read Section 173(1) CrPC and Section 193 BNSS as requiring timely completion and a final report after the investigating officer determined whether an offence was disclosed. Its direction for prompt completion left open a closure report or prosecution and all steps required by law. The applicant could place any further grievance before the Superintendent of Police, who would consider it in accordance with law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the application, directing the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the necessary steps required by law. The applicant was given liberty to approach the Superintendent of Police, Shivpuri, with any grievance.

Siyaram Giri Goswami v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 1462/2025, 29/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (902) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abetment of suicide — threat, mens rea and charge — The applicants challenged a charge under Section 306 IPC in revision under Sections 397/401 CrPC after Lokendra, aged 17, hanged himself on 6 January 2022. The prosecution alleged that, at about 7 a.m., they threatened to cut him into pieces if he was seen in the village, throw his body into a river and kill his parents. A witness intervened, and the boy was found dead shortly afterwards. The State and complainant relied on the applicants having been seen near the place of incident, but conceded that no charge under Section 302 had been framed and that no background for the threat had been alleged. Applying Sections 306 and 107 IPC and the Supreme Court decisions on instigation, intention, positive action and inference from the circumstances, the Court found no allegation of earlier threats or enmity or any background from which an intention to bring about suicide could be inferred. It also observed that there was no evidence of threats having been given to the deceased's parents or other family members. Even if the prosecution account were accepted, the threat alleged in this case did not disclose abetment of suicide sufficient to put the applicants on trial. The charge order was set aside and the applicants were discharged.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In ST No. 32/2022, the First Additional Sessions Judge, Sabalgarh, Morena, framed a charge under Section 306 IPC on 17 February 2022. Lokendra, aged about 17, had died by hanging on 6 January. The post-mortem report gave the cause of death as asphyxia due to hanging, and the death was treated as suicide. After recording witness statements, the police registered an FIR and filed a charge sheet. The applicants were alleged to have threatened Lokendra at about 7 a.m. that, if he was seen in the village, they would cut him into pieces, throw his body into a river and kill his parents. Beedha, described as his uncle, objected and was abused. After Beedha went away, his niece reported that Lokendra had hanged himself. The applicants sought revision under Sections 397/401 CrPC. The State and complainant submitted that the applicants had also been seen near the place of incident, but conceded that the last-seen contention was of no significance without a charge under Section 302 and that no background for the threat had been put forward.

2. Precedents — Considered : Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2009) 16 SCC 605 explains that instigation may be inferred from acts, omissions or a continued course of conduct leaving no other option, but requires the necessary intention and reasonable certainty of inciting the consequence. Angry words without an intended consequence may be insufficient. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 9 SCC 734 emphasises intention and the circumstances of the case, without a rigid formula; the view at the quashing or charge stage is tentative, rather than a finding after trial. Sanju alias Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P., (2002) 5 SCC 371 concerns the modes of abetment under Section 107 and mens rea for instigation. Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., (2010) 1 SCC 750 and M. Mohan v. State, AIR 2011 SC 1238 discuss, as standards for conviction, positive or direct conduct and clear mens rea intended to drive a person to suicide. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P., (2007) 10 SCC 797 explains the distinct Section 107 alternatives of instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid. Amalendu Pal alias Jhantu v. State of W.B., (2010) 1 SCC 707 addresses direct or indirect incitement, an active role and positive action proximate to the suicide in the quoted analysis of conviction. Amit Kapur v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460 explains that a tentative view of the record suffices at the charge stage and that instigation may be inferred from the circumstances; its quotation discusses Ramesh Kumar v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2001) 9 SCC 618. The applicants also relied on Ramesh Kumar, whose passages were reproduced in this judgment through Amit Kapur. Iqbal Singh, Surender, Kishori Lal and Sonti Rama Krishna appeared within the extract from Praveen Pradhan, rather than as separate applications to the present facts.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC governed the revision against the charge order. Section 306 IPC punishes abetment of suicide; the suicide was treated as established for the limited purpose of considering the charge. Section 107 IPC defines abetment by instigation, conspiracy accompanied by an act or illegal omission in pursuance of it, or intentional aid by an act or illegal omission, with explanations concerning misrepresentation and facilitation. No charge under Section 302 IPC had been framed, so the proposed last-seen argument was immaterial to this revision. Section 228 CrPC appeared in the quoted Praveen Pradhan passage concerning the tentative assessment at the charge stage.

4. Issues : Did the alleged threat, shortly followed by a minor's suicide, disclose a prima facie case of intentional instigation or aid under Sections 107 and 306 IPC? Did the applicants' alleged presence nearby add anything when murder had not been charged? Could the charge stand on the allegations as a whole without any alleged motive, earlier threat, enmity or continued conduct? The Court was reviewing the charge and was not deciding guilt after trial.

5. Ratio / Findings : Abetment requires culpable instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid, assessed from the words and conduct in their context and connection with the suicide. The High Court accepted the prosecution allegations for this preliminary assessment. It found no alleged background for the severe threat and no evidence of earlier threats to Lokendra. It also observed that there was no evidence of threats having been given to his parents or other family members, or of enmity with the family. The words alleged without that background did not disclose an intention to make Lokendra commit suicide. The last-seen contention did not assist the charge under Section 306 when no charge under Section 302 had been framed. Even the allegations taken in their entirety therefore failed to disclose a case for trial under Section 306. The Court did not decide whether the threat independently constituted another offence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal revision. It set aside the First Additional Sessions Judge's order of 17 February 2022 framing a charge under Section 306 IPC in ST No. 32/2022 and discharged the applicants.

Siyaram Rathore and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, Cr.R. no. 796/2022, 05/05/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (903) Prev Next

Headnote :- Food Safety and Standards Act, 2006 — Section 66 — corporate offence and nominee — A Food Safety Officer took a sample of Fortune Soya Chunks at Satya Sai Agroils Private Limited's factory; the analyst reported that the food was unsafe. The complaint invoked Sections 3(zz), 26(2)(i) and 59 against S.K. Shukla as the company's nominee, but did not arraign the manufacturing company as an accused. The challenge under Section 482 CrPC to the Magistrate's cognizance order was confined to that omission. The High Court applied Section 66, under which the responsible person "as well as the company" is deemed guilty. It relied on Aneeta Hada's interpretation of a provision imposing liability for an offence by a company, Sharad Kumar Sanghi's decision concerning the absence of the company as an accused and vague allegations against its managing director, and its own earlier ruling concerning a food manufacturer. As no wrongdoing in a personal capacity was alleged against Shukla, he could not be prosecuted solely for the company's offence without the company also being prosecuted. The order dated 29 December 2014 was quashed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 23 July 2014, a Food Safety Officer inspected Satya Sai Agroils Private Limited's factory at Vidisha and took a sample of packaged Fortune Soya Chunks. The analyst reported that the sample was unsafe. The designated officer sent a copy of the report to the applicant, S.K. Shukla, and sanction was granted to prosecute by filing a complaint. The JMFC, Vidisha, took cognizance on 29 December 2014 in Criminal Case No. 3171/2014. In his application under Section 482 CrPC, Shukla confined his argument to whether he could be prosecuted as the manufacturing company's nominee when the company itself had not been made an accused. The State maintained that he could be prosecuted by virtue of his nomination alone. The Court found no allegation against him in a personal capacity.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aneeta Hada v. Godfather Tours and Travels (P) Ltd., (2012) 5 SCC 661 explains, in the quoted analysis of Section 141 of the Negotiable Instruments Act, that a company may be criminally liable and that the intention of those who constitute its directing mind may be attributed to it. The statutory fiction imposing vicarious liability on responsible functionaries requires the company to be arraigned as an accused. The High Court applied that requirement by analogy to Section 66 of the Food Safety Act. The extensive extract discusses corporate mens rea through Iridium India Telecom and Standard Chartered Bank, and the purpose and limits of statutory deeming provisions. Its conclusion rests on C.V. Parekh; it overrules Sheoratan Agarwal and overrules Anil Hada with the qualification stated in that decision. Sharad Kumar Sanghi v. Sangita Rane, (2015) 12 SCC 781 was quoted concerning allegations principally against a company that had not been arraigned as an accused, with no specific personal allegation against its managing director. The Court applied that distinction to the nominee. Managing Director v. State of M.P., MCrC No. 1301/2011 (MPHC, 20 February 2017), was followed. In that earlier ruling concerning a food manufacturer, the Court held that an officer could not be prosecuted solely in his official capacity without the manufacturing company being made an accused.

3. Statutes considered : Section 66(1) of the Food Safety and Standards Act provides that, when a company commits an offence under the Act, the persons in charge of and responsible for the conduct of its business, as well as the company, are deemed guilty. Its first proviso concerns the head or person in charge of a branch, unit or establishment nominated as responsible for food safety. The second provides a defence based on lack of knowledge or the exercise of due diligence. Section 66(2) separately deems a director, manager, secretary or other officer guilty where consent, connivance or attributable neglect is proved. The Court reproduced the whole section, but decided only the issue arising from the company's absence as an accused and the lack of any personal allegation against the nominee; it did not decide a due-diligence defence. Sections 3(zz), 26(2)(i) and 59 concerned the alleged unsafe-food offence. Section 36 was referred to in connection with sanction for prosecution. The applicant invoked Section 482 CrPC to seek quashing of the JMFC's order.

4. Issues : Can a nominated official be proceeded against on a complaint alleging that the company manufactured an unsafe food product when the company is not an accused and no act in a personal capacity is alleged against the official? How does the deemed liability for an offence by a company under Section 66 operate in light of the Supreme Court's requirement that the company be arraigned as an accused?

5. Ratio / Findings : The company was the identified manufacturer and the principal alleged offender; Shukla was prosecuted solely as its nominee. Liability under Section 66 presupposed an offence by the company. Applying the cited decisions on corporate liability and its own earlier ruling, the Court held that the nominee could not be prosecuted alone when the company had not been made an accused. No allegation against Shukla in a personal capacity provided a separate basis for his prosecution. The proceeding against him was therefore bad in law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application under Section 482 CrPC. It quashed, as against the applicant, the order dated 29 December 2014 by which the JMFC, Vidisha, took cognizance in Criminal Case No. 3171/2014.

S.K. Shukla v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 12658/2015, 22/03/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (904) Prev Next

Headnote :- Quashing — road accident — CCTV and disputed negligence — A car driver sought quashing of an FIR and prosecution under Sections 279, 337 and 304-A IPC by a petition under Articles 226/227. A passenger on a motorcycle had died in the accident. The driver asserted that the motorcycle struck the front right side of his car as he turned, contrary to the FIR's account that his car struck the motorcycle from behind. He also alleged that the police had suppressed CCTV footage. The footage was in fact listed in the charge-sheet, and the State produced two clips. The High Court viewed them in open court. One did not capture the impact; the other showed the motorcycle approaching from behind and coming into contact with the car's front right side during its right turn. The Court's limited examination disproved the allegation that the footage had been suppressed and addressed the discrepancy in the accounts of the impact. It did not finally decide whether the motorcycle was in the wrong lane or who was negligent. A driver turning right was expected to check for traffic coming from behind. On this record, the Court could not rule out the driver's contribution to the accident and found a prima facie case. Under the cited Supreme Court decisions on quashing, disputed facts raised in defence and detailed appreciation of evidence were matters for trial. Military service and possible harm to the driver's career did not justify quashing. The Court expressly confined its observations about the accident to the quashing issue and directed the trial court to make independent findings after evidence was recorded.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Crime No. 303/2023 was registered on 15 July 2023 at Gorabazar, Jabalpur, under Sections 279, 337 and 304-A IPC after a collision on 14 July injured the motorcyclist, who was the complainant, and killed the pillion passenger, Rohit Kewat. The car was driven by Army officer Soami Saran Bhatnagar. He stated that, as he turned right towards Ridge Road, the motorcycle came from behind on the wrong side and struck the front right side of his car. The FIR, however, stated that his car struck the motorcycle from behind. He alleged that the FIR was delayed and false, and that CCTV footage supplied to the police had been omitted from the charge-sheet. The State and the complainant opposed the petition. The Court found that the footage was listed in the charge-sheet and that the State had supplied a pen drive with its return. Of the two clips, one showed no collision. The clip from Hoshiyarsingh Gate showed the motorcycle approaching from behind and coming into contact with the front right side of the turning car. Both vehicles were travelling in the same direction. The Court left for trial whether the motorcycle was on the wrong side near the short divider at the junction of several roads or was trying to avoid the turning car.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted against a roving inquiry under Section 482 into contested allegations and premature factual findings. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, disapproved a detailed assessment before completion of the investigation. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, quoted Bhajan Lal's caution that quashing should be exercised sparingly, without an inquiry into the reliability of the allegations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, stated that the accused's defence documents should ordinarily not be weighed at this stage, while recognising an exception for public documents or documents whose veracity is undisputed. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, discussed quashing where the allegations taken at face value disclose no offence, a legal bar applies or the proceeding is maliciously instituted, while prohibiting a trial of evidence that would bring a legitimate prosecution to a premature end. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, recognised quashing where the uncontroverted FIR allegations and supporting evidence disclose no offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, rejected findings on minute details of disputed facts at the Section 482 stage. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021 (30 June 2021), rejected meticulous scrutiny before trial and held that an FIR need not be an encyclopaedia. The Court also referred to similar views in Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha. Drawing on these authorities, the Court stated that proceedings could be quashed only when the uncontroverted allegations did not make out an offence, and applied that restraint to the accident record.

3. Statutes considered : The petition was filed under Articles 226/227 of the Constitution. The Court considered the corresponding scope of interference under Section 482 CrPC without treating the writ petition as an application under that provision. Sections 279, 337 and 304-A IPC were the offences in the FIR, concerning rash driving, hurt caused by a dangerous act and death caused by negligence; the Court did not finally decide whether each ingredient was established. The Motor Vehicles Act and Rules were referred to concerning overtaking from the right; no numbered rule was specified. The charge-sheet and CCTV footage formed part of the prosecution material already available. The disputed manner of driving and lane position required evidence at trial.

4. Issues : Should the FIR and prosecution be quashed because the video showed contact at the car's front right side rather than the impact described in the FIR, because the motorcycle allegedly came from the wrong lane, because CCTV footage was said to have been omitted, or because the petitioner's Army career would suffer? The threshold inquiry was whether an offence was prima facie disclosed, rather than a conclusive apportionment of negligence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The CCTV footage had not been suppressed: it was listed in the charge-sheet and was before the Court. The clips supported a different account of the point of impact, but that discrepancy did not decide whether the driver, while turning right, had taken due care to check behind and give way to traffic passing him. The Court referred to overtaking from the right and observed a possible failure to use the side mirror. It declined to decide conclusively either the motorcycle's position near the divider or the petitioner's negligence. The material disclosed a prima facie case under the provisions invoked against him. Given the limited scope of interference in writ or inherent jurisdiction, the disputed facts and the defence account required trial. The petitioner's status as an Army officer did not justify an exception. The Court expressly stated that its observations about the precautions expected of the driver were provisional and made only to address the submissions for quashing; the trial court was to decide after evidence was recorded.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition, leaving the FIR and prosecution in place. The trial court was directed to make its own factual findings after recording evidence, without treating the High Court's provisional observations on negligence as final. Soami Saran Bhatnagar v. State of M.P. and Others, W.P. no. 20738/2023, 01/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (905) Prev Next

Headnote :- Recovery evidence — police witness and hostile panch witnesses — In a revision against concurrent convictions for housebreaking and theft of two laptops belonging to a BSF officer, the accused contended that recovery from a room in another person's house did not establish his exclusive possession. He also relied on the independent seizure witnesses having turned hostile. The investigating officer testified that a memorandum under Section 27 of the Evidence Act led to recovery from the room rented by the accused. The accused admitted his tenancy and his signature on the seizure memo. The laptops' detailed serial numbers matched the complainant's account and their identification in court. The independent witnesses admitted their signatures on the documents despite denying the recovery. Applying State, Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Sunil, Praveen Kumar and Yakub Abdul Razak Memon, the High Court held that official status or the absence of independent corroboration does not automatically discredit reliable police testimony about recovery. The court must assess that evidence on its own worth and consider any reasons to distrust it. Finding no perversity in the concurrent findings under the stated revisional standard, the High Court declined to admit the revision, affirmed the convictions and dismissed the application for suspension of sentence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Somnath Mukherjee filed a revision, stated to be under Sections 438 and 442 BNSS, against the JMFC, Dabra's convictions under Sections 457 and 380 IPC dated 9 November 2022, which had been affirmed on 29 June 2024 in Criminal Appeal No. 88/2022. For each offence, he was sentenced to one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs.1,000, with one month's simple imprisonment in default. The substantive sentences were to run concurrently. Deputy Commandant Gurpreet Singh left his quarter at the BSF Academy in February 2015. On returning on 13 March, he found his private Compaq laptop and official HP laptop missing. He later identified the laptops by their serial numbers, together with the chargers brought to court. The defence disputed whether the room in Bhadoriya's property was in the applicant's exclusive possession, relied on the independent recovery witnesses having turned hostile, and alleged false implication in several BSF-related cases in retaliation for an ATM-card dispute. State counsel referred to five other similar prosecutions. The defence replied that four had ended in acquittal and that the conviction in the remaining case was under revision.

2. Precedents — Considered : State, Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Sunil, (2001) 1 SCC 652 holds that a recovery document is not automatically tainted because it lacks independent signatures. The investigating officer's evidence must be assessed on its own worth, rather than presumed untrustworthy because of official status. The absence of independent witnesses may be considered where there is a concrete reason to suspect the truthfulness of the police account. Praveen Kumar v. State of Karnataka, (2003) 12 SCC 199 holds that Section 27 does not require independent witnesses to be present when a statement is made to the police. Seeking independent corroboration is a matter of prudential caution, rather than an inflexible rule, where the police evidence is independently reliable. Yakub Abdul Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1 states that a panch witness is not disqualified merely because a family member works in the police. Police testimony requires greater care in scrutiny, but cannot be rejected solely because independent witnesses were not examined. The High Court applied these principles in assessing PW-8's evidence together with the admitted signatures, tenancy and specific identification of the articles.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant was convicted under Sections 457 and 380 IPC for housebreaking and theft in a dwelling. I.A. No. 1899/2025 sought suspension of sentence and bail; it was disposed of as a consequence of the refusal to admit the revision.

4. Issues : Did the fact that the two independent seizure witnesses had turned hostile, the existence of multiple rooms in the landlord's house, and the defence account render the recovery unreliable despite the investigating officer's testimony and the corroborating circumstances? Was any perversity shown in the two courts' factual findings sufficient to warrant admission of the revision? What was the consequence for the pending request for suspension of sentence?

5. Ratio / Findings : PW-8 described the arrest, the memorandum under Section 27 and the seizure of two laptops from the room rented by the applicant. The applicant admitted that he was residing as a tenant and that Ex.P-8 bore his signature. PW-6 and PW-7 had turned hostile, but admitted the relevant signatures. PW-6 also acknowledged that the police had not pressured him and that documents should be read before signing. PW-3 identified the laptops and chargers in court; the complaint and seizure record contained the laptops' serial and book numbers. The Court held that PW-8's evidence could not be rejected merely because he was a police officer and applied the Supreme Court's principles requiring assessment of its reliability in the circumstances. The challenge to exclusive possession and the defence allegation of retaliation did not establish perversity in the concurrent findings of conviction. The Court stated that revision under Sections 397/401 CrPC did not permit reappreciation of factual findings that were not perverse.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal revision in limine and consequently dismissed I.A. No. 1899/2025 for suspension of sentence and bail. It affirmed the convictions and sentences upheld by the appellate court in 2024 and imposed by the trial court in 2022.

Somnath Mukherjee v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 4429/2024, 28/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (906) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation control — arrest and charge-sheet request — The informant sought directions under Section 482 CrPC to arrest the accused in Crime No. 118/2017 under Sections 307 and 147–149 IPC and to file a charge sheet. The suspected persons had not been impleaded. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam and its discussion of M.C. Abraham, the High Court refused to use its inherent jurisdiction to supervise investigative methods or direct arrest and the report to be filed. Arrest under Section 41 is discretionary and must be approached with caution because it affects liberty. Not every investigation must result in arrest, seizure or prosecution. The precedent also cautioned against directions with far-reaching consequences without reasons or a hearing for the persons affected. Separately, Section 173(1) CrPC required the investigation that had remained pending to be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer had to decide whether an offence was made out and file the appropriate final report. The Court directed early completion and necessary steps according to law, leaving open whether a closure report or charge sheet should be filed. It also permitted the informant to approach the Superintendent of Police, Guna, with a grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On Sonu Bhadoriya's complaint, Police Station Myana, Guna, registered Crime No. 118/2017 for alleged offences under Sections 307, 147, 148 and 149 IPC. He claimed that the police had taken no further action and had not arrested the accused. In his application under Section 482 CrPC, he sought directions for arrest and filing of a charge sheet. The suspected persons were not joined in the proceeding. The Court distinguished those impermissible requests to dictate investigative steps from the police's statutory obligation to complete the investigation that remained pending.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488 was quoted extensively and applied. The Supreme Court set aside mechanical High Court directions to record statements, arrest, seize property and file a charge sheet, issued without reasons or a hearing for those affected. It explained the police's responsibility and discretion in choosing investigative methods. An investigation may disclose no case and lead to a closure report; filing a charge sheet is not inevitable. The grounds for exercising Section 482 are limited to giving effect to orders under the Code, preventing abuse of the process of a court and securing the ends of justice. The quoted discussion of M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649 explained the discretion under Section 41 CrPC. Registration of an FIR for a cognizable offence does not automatically require arrest, and the power must be exercised cautiously because it affects liberty and reputation. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542 appeared within the extract concerning an affected person's opportunity to be heard before a judicial direction with drastic consequences. The present Court noted that the suspects had not been impleaded. M.C. Abraham and Divine Retreat Centre formed part of the Supreme Court discussion applied in this case.

3. Statutes considered : The application invoked the inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC, which the Court declined to use to direct arrest or filing of a charge sheet. Section 41 CrPC was discussed in the controlling Supreme Court extract as a discretionary power of arrest without a warrant. That discussion did not amount to granting or refusing arrest on an assessment of the evidence against a particular person in this case. Section 173(1) CrPC expressly requires every investigation under the Chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay. The Court applied it to require completion and a final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet.

4. Issues : Could an informant obtain directions under Section 482 requiring the arrest of suspects who had not been joined in the proceeding and the filing of a charge sheet before the police completed the investigation? Could the Court enforce Section 173(1)'s prohibition on unnecessary delay while leaving the police free to decide what the evidence supported? What remedy remained for a continuing grievance?

5. Ratio / Findings : Directing the police to arrest the accused and file a charge sheet would dictate steps that depended on police discretion and the evidence, and would amount to supervision of the investigation. Such a direction would also affect persons who had not been heard. Following D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Court refused that relief. A registered case could not, however, be left pending without a conclusion. Section 173(1) required completion without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer had to determine whether an offence was made out and file the appropriate final report. The Court directed early completion and necessary steps according to law, without fixing a deadline or requiring a charge sheet.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the application under Section 482 with a direction to the investigating officer to complete the investigation as early as possible and take necessary steps according to law. Bhadoriya was free to submit his grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Guna, for consideration according to law.

Sonu Bhadoriya v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 51038/2022, 06/12/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

****

Case Sr. no. (907) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — FIR for abduction, intimidation and rape — The applicant sought quashing of Crime No. 414/2020, contending that the prosecutrix had made no allegation of rape initially but had added it four days later. He also argued that the spot map's reference to Section 376 showed that the document had been antedated. The Court held that these submissions required an assessment of witness credibility and the timing of the spot map, both matters for trial. The investigating officer had to be given an opportunity to explain the discrepancy. The Court surveyed the Supreme Court's restrictions on premature quashing, while recognising exceptional grounds where allegations taken at face value disclose no offence, a legal bar applies, the allegations are absurd or the proceeding is malicious. Review under Section 482 did not permit conclusive findings on truthfulness or a detailed appraisal of evidence. The FIR under Sections 366, 506 and 376 IPC was not quashed, and the application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sonu Chitodiya (Jatav) applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR in Crime No. 414/2020 at Police Station Porsa, Morena, initially under Sections 366 and 506 IPC, with Section 376 added later. Counsel's principal submission was that the prosecutrix had not alleged rape in her first account but had made that allegation four days later. He asserted that the witnesses were untruthful and that the case had been concocted. He also submitted that the spot map mentioned Section 376 even though that provision had been added later, suggesting that the map was antedated. After hearing the applicant's counsel and examining the precedents on quashing at length, the High Court held that the truth of the prosecutrix's accounts and the timing of the spot map required scrutiny at trial. The investigating officer was to have an opportunity to explain the discrepancy. The Court gave no conclusive account of the incident or final finding on the evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan, (2018) 5 SCC 678 and Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2014) 15 SCC 221 counselled restraint in quashing an FIR before proper investigation where a cognizable offence was disclosed, while recognising exceptional intervention against abuse of process or malicious proceedings. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, (2012) 4 SCC 547 emphasised completion of a proper investigation into disclosed offences. Its quotations from Swapan Kumar Guha and Jeffrey J. Diermeier explained that disclosure depends on the particular facts and that inherent power, though wide, has limits. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337 and State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718 rejected premature roving inquiries and factual findings. S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal, (2010) 5 SCC 600 reproduced Bhajan Lal's grounds concerning allegations that disclose no offence when taken at face value and proceedings manifestly attended by mala fides. The extract also discussed other authorities on sparing intervention and the preservation of genuine complaints. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P., (2019) 2 SCC 336 required a reasoned application of quashing principles to the facts. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, (2012) 9 SCC 460 set out detailed cautions and exceptions for quashing charges under Sections 397/482: assessment of the uncontroverted record for a prima facie offence and its basic ingredients, patently improbable allegations, legal bars and abuse of process. It prohibited a trial on the merits at that stage and explained that the existence of a civil remedy does not by itself justify quashing. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319 quoted Bhajan Lal's warning that the power should be used sparingly. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350 distinguished the ordinary exclusion of disputed defence documents from the narrow exception for public documents or documents whose veracity is undisputed. Its extract cited Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226 balanced intervention where no prima facie offence is disclosed, a legal bar applies or sufficient material establishes mala fides against the need to avoid stifling a legitimate prosecution. Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy, (2012) 12 SCC 437 explained the sparing use of inherent powers, alternative remedies, the Bhajan Lal categories and the limits of Madhavrao's reasoning in the particular civil dispute. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373 reiterated that quashing is justified where the allegations taken at face value disclose no offence. M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682 recognised intervention against harassment based on inherently improbable allegations while cautioning against frequent premature obstruction. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686 and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021 (cited in this judgment as dated 30 July 2021), rejected detailed examination of disputed facts on the merits. Kunwar Singh observed that an FIR need not be an encyclopaedia. The Court applied the restraint reflected in these authorities to the applicant's challenges to credibility and the spot map.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the application invoking inherent jurisdiction. Section 173(2) CrPC and Sections 155(2) and 156(1) CrPC appeared in quoted general principles concerning police reports and investigation of cognizable offences. Their discussion was confined to those quoted principles, without a separate procedural ruling on this FIR.

4. Issues : Could the prosecutrix's allegation of rape four days after her first account establish her untruthfulness as a matter of law at the Section 482 stage? Did the spot map's reference to Section 376, when that offence was added later, establish antedating so conclusively that the FIR should be quashed without an opportunity for the investigating officer to explain? Did the uncontroverted allegations otherwise fail to disclose an offence under the provisions invoked, or bring the case within a recognised exception for abuse of process? The applicant's submissions required resolution of evidentiary disputes, rather than identifying a legal defect apparent from the allegations taken at face value.

5. Ratio / Findings : The recognised exceptional grounds for intervention at this stage included a case where the uncontroverted allegations disclosed no offence. The High Court could not decide whether the witnesses were truthful or the prosecutrix was reliable. The alleged development in her account after four days was not resolved against her in the application for quashing. The timing of the spot map was likewise a matter for trial, where the investigating officer had to be given an opportunity to explain the discrepancy. The Court therefore declined to stifle a legitimate prosecution by deciding contested credibility or document authenticity in advance.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. The FIR under Sections 366, 506 and 376 IPC was not quashed.

Sonu Chitodiya (Jatav) v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 47537/2021, 03/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (908) Prev Next

Headnote :- Attempt to murder — Section 307 IPC — intention and overt act — Suraj Sen was repeatedly stabbed by Sonu Kushwah after refusing a demand for ₹500 to buy liquor. Kushwah allegedly threatened to kill him. Counsel challenged the conviction under Section 307 on the grounds that the doctor had not described the injuries as dangerous to life and that independent witnesses had not supported the prosecution. The judgment also recorded a query report describing the injuries as dangerous to life. Applying Anjani Kumar Chaudhary and State of M.P. v. Kanha, the High Court held that a fatal or life-threatening injury is not a prerequisite for Section 307. Intention or knowledge may be inferred from the weapon, the words used, the parts of the body targeted, and the force and number of blows. The nine wounds to the head, face, ears and neck, the frontal fracture, the threat and the continued assault supported the conviction under Section 307.

Related and injured witnesses — The injured Suraj, his mother and his brothers were natural witnesses. Their relationship and the fact that two independent witnesses had turned hostile did not automatically make their evidence unreliable. The Court applied the Supreme Court's requirement of close scrutiny of interested or inimical testimony and distinguished kinship from a demonstrated interest in securing a conviction. It relied on the prompt Dehati Nalsi recorded at the hospital and the medical corroboration. The Court separately upheld the conviction under Section 329 IPC on the evidence of the demand for money and the assault following refusal. Both convictions were maintained. Neither provision prescribed a minimum sentence. Considering that fact along with the appellant's age, the date of the incident and his custody, the Court reduced the rigorous imprisonment on each count from ten years to seven years and enhanced the fines. The substantive terms were to run concurrently.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sonu Kushwah appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 19 March 2015 of the 14th Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, in ST No. 319/2014. The prosecution alleged that, on 18 December 2013 at about 8:30 p.m. near Shitla Mata Temple, he demanded ₹500 from Suraj Sen to buy liquor. When Suraj refused, he abused him, threatened to kill him and inflicted repeated knife injuries, continuing the assault after Suraj fell. Suraj's mother, Ramwati, called for help, and his brothers arrived. A Dehati Nalsi was recorded at the hospital at about 9:30 p.m., leading to an FIR under Sections 307, 327 and 294 IPC. Charges were framed under Sections 307, 329 and 504. The trial court acquitted the appellant under Section 504 and convicted him under Sections 307 and 329, sentencing him to ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹3,000 on each count. The defence challenged the reliability of the related witnesses, relied on the independent witnesses having turned hostile, and submitted that the doctor had not described any injury as life-threatening. It also sought credit for approximately five years and four months spent in custody. The judgment, however, recorded that the query report, Ex. P/14, described the injuries as dangerous to life. The State relied on the injured witness and the repeated assaults. The doctor recorded nine incised or lacerated wounds on the head, ears, face and neck, and a CT scan showed a depressed frontal fracture extending towards the orbit.

2. Precedents — Considered : Anjani Kumar Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2014) 12 SCC 286 was quoted for the requirement under Section 307 of intention or knowledge coupled with an act, and for the principle that injury to a vital part is not essential. Its extract referred to Mohan and Vasant Vithu Jadhav in explaining how intention may be inferred from words, weapons and acts in the circumstances of each case. State of M.P. v. Kanha alias Omprakash, (2019) 3 SCC 605 was quoted and applied for the principle that grievous or life-threatening hurt is not a sine qua non. Its discussion adopted Balram Bama Patil, Saleem and Jage Ram on inferring intention from the surrounding facts, the severity of wounds and the overt conduct. On witness evidence, Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220 required heightened scrutiny of genuinely interested or chance witnesses and recognised that contradicted testimony could be rejected. Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418 recognised the need for caution where hostility exists, while rejecting an inflexible requirement of independent corroboration. It quoted Darya Singh and Raghubir Singh. Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129 distinguished a natural witness who is a relative from an interested witness acting out of animus. Drawing on Hari Obula Reddy and Kartik Malhar, it allowed reliance on intrinsically reliable evidence of relatives after scrutiny. Shyam Babu v. State of U.P., (2012) 8 SCC 651 rejected automatic exclusion of truthful family witnesses; Mano Dutt and Dayal Singh appeared within its discussion. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52 discussed Dalip Singh and Hari Obula Reddy. Kinship alone does not establish false implication, but a concrete motive or suspicious testimony calls for care and may require corroboration in material particulars. Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195 brought together the principles on related and inimical evidence, including that enmity may explain either false implication or the assault itself. Kamta Yadav v. State of Bihar, (2016) 16 SCC 164 emphasised the significance of an injured eyewitness's presence and the need for deeper scrutiny of related testimony.

3. Statutes considered : Section 307 IPC required an act done with such intention or knowledge, and in such circumstances, that causing death by that act would amount to murder. If hurt results, the higher range of punishment under the provision is available. Section 329 IPC concerned the separate conviction for voluntarily causing grievous hurt in connection with extortion of the demanded property. The Court relied on Ramwati's prompt report and evidence of the ₹500 demand, refusal and ensuing assault, without an extensive separate exposition of the provision. The trial court acquitted the appellant under Section 504 IPC. The FIR's initial references to Sections 327 and 294 did not result in appellate convictions. Section 374 CrPC governed the appeal. The memorandum under Section 27 of the Evidence Act, the knife seizure and the omissions in the statement under Section 161 CrPC formed part of the evidentiary account, rather than separate rulings on admissibility or investigation. Neither provision under which the appellant was convicted prescribed a mandatory minimum sentence; this informed the modification.

4. Issues : (1) Could the conviction under Section 307 stand when counsel submitted that no injury had been medically declared life-threatening, in light of the accused's words, weapon, repeated blows, the parts of the body targeted and the actual wounds? (2) Did the fact that the independent witnesses had turned hostile, together with the family relationship of the injured and other eyewitnesses, make their evidence untrustworthy, or did the prompt report and medical corroboration support it after careful scrutiny? (3) Did the demand for ₹500 and the assault after refusal establish the separate count under Section 329? (4) Should the ten-year terms be reduced in view of the appellant's age, the incident in 2013 and the prolonged custody?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected a test under Section 307 based solely on the result of the assault. The nine wounds, including bone-deep head injuries, the frontal fracture, the large knife seized and the expressed threat to kill supported murderous intention and an overt act, irrespective of a particular description of danger to life. The injured Suraj's account remained reliable after cross-examination despite the identified omissions concerning the demand and abuse. His mother reported the incident within about an hour, and the medical evidence corroborated the essential assault. His brothers arrived on hearing the screams and witnessed part of the incident. The fact that two independent witnesses had turned hostile did not automatically discredit these natural witnesses; their credibility was examined with the care required by the cited decisions. The knife was recovered on the accused's memorandum. The Court found the offence under Section 307 proved beyond reasonable doubt. It separately found Section 329 established by Ramwati's prompt account and testimony that the demand for money preceded the assault. On sentence, the Court maintained both convictions but reduced the rigorous imprisonment on each count from ten years to seven years, increasing the fines from ₹3,000 to ₹10,000 on each count.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal in part. It affirmed the convictions under Sections 307 and 329 IPC and modified the sentence on each count to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default on each count. The substantive terms were to run concurrently. The appellant was in jail.

Sonu Kushwah v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 442/2015, 02/08/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (909) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation — arrest and report — Two and a half months after an FIR, the informant applied under Section 528 BNSS for directions to arrest the accused, file a challan after inquiry and initiate the process under Sections 84–85 BNSS. The accused had not been joined in the proceeding. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam and the principles from M.C. Abraham and Divine Retreat Centre quoted in that decision, the High Court held that registration of an FIR does not require immediate arrest. After considering the evidence, the investigating officer may file either a charge sheet or a closure report. The Court could not use its inherent jurisdiction to remove that discretion or issue directions with drastic consequences against persons who had not been heard. As to Section 193(1) BNSS, the passage of two and a half months did not, by itself, establish unnecessary delay warranting intervention at that point. The application was disposed of without a direction at that stage, with liberty to approach the Court again if the investigation was not completed within a reasonable period.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sourabh applied under Section 528 BNSS for directions to the respondent to arrest the accused, file a challan after due inquiry and initiate proceedings under Sections 84 and 85 BNSS. Counsel submitted that, although two and a half months had passed since the FIR, the police had neither arrested anyone nor filed a charge sheet. The accused were not made respondents. The Court considered whether it could direct arrest and filing of a charge sheet. It separately examined whether the elapsed period amounted to unnecessary delay under Section 193(1).

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam and Others v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and Another, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively and applied. The Supreme Court set aside a High Court order directing the recording of statements, arrest, seizure and filing of a charge sheet without adequate reasons or a hearing for the affected accused. Investigation is the police's statutory responsibility. It may disclose a case for prosecution or lead to the conclusion that no charge sheet should be filed. The inherent powers under the former Section 482 CrPC do not justify routine judicial control of particular investigative steps. Within the quotation, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649 explained the discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC and the need for caution because arrest affects liberty. A report of a cognizable offence does not by itself require arrest. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542 explained the requirement of a hearing before judicial orders with drastic consequences for a person's reputation. The present Court applied these principles to the suspects who had not been joined and to the ongoing investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was the basis for invoking inherent jurisdiction, corresponding to the former Section 482 CrPC discussed in the quoted decision. Section 193(1) BNSS concerned completion of investigation without unnecessary delay. The Court found no reason for intervention at that stage, after two and a half months, while preserving liberty to approach it later if the delay became unreasonable. The former Section 41 CrPC appeared in the quoted discussion of M.C. Abraham.

4. Issues : Could the Court, under Section 528 and at the informant's request, direct the police to arrest accused persons who had not been impleaded, initiate the process under Sections 84–85 and file a charge sheet before the investigation was complete? Did the passage of two and a half months since the FIR, without further facts showing delay, warrant a direction at that stage under Section 193(1) to complete the investigation? The Court left the necessity of arrest and the eventual outcome of the investigation to the police's judgment according to law.

5. Ratio / Findings : Compelling arrest would take away the investigating officer's discretion as to arrest. Requiring a charge sheet would exclude the lawful option of a closure report. Such directions would also risk prejudice to persons who had not been heard. The quoted Supreme Court principles precluded such directions dictating the investigative steps and outcome. The Court assessed the elapsed period separately. The passage of two and a half months was, by itself, insufficient at that point to establish unnecessary delay in the investigation, so the Court declined to issue an immediate direction under Section 193(1). It expressly preserved Sourabh's liberty to approach it again if the investigation was not completed within a reasonable time.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the application with liberty to approach it again if the investigation was not completed within a reasonable period.

Sourabh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 9722/2025, 05/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (910) Prev Next

Headnote :- Compromise-based quashing — serious allegations — The applicants sought quashing of a BNS FIR on the basis of compromise. The complainant alleged in the FIR that a group took him from a public place in a car, threatened him with a pistol, demanded ₹5 lakh, assaulted him and obtained ₹16,000 through Google Pay. They allegedly compelled him to hold the pistol while false videos were recorded containing self-incriminating statements and an account of voluntary payment. They then demanded the balance, threatening to circulate the video and falsely implicate him. The High Court considered whether these allegations described a simple private incident or offences that were heinous and against society. Considering the allegations together, particularly the abduction from a public place, the assault with the pistol butt and the forced video, it applied Gian Singh and Narinder Singh and declined to quash the FIR on compromise. The FIR remained in force, and the application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sourav Gurjar and others applied under Section 528 BNSS, 2023 / Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR in Crime No. 139/2025 at Police Station Bahodapur, Gwalior, registered under Sections 308(5), 127(2), 115(2), 296 and 3(5) BNS. According to the FIR, complainant Paras Rathore was with friends near Shiv Temple, Sagartal, on 11 March 2025 when persons in an unregistered white Glanza approached. Jashn allegedly called him into the car on the pretext of talks with Lalit. The driver, Deependra, took him towards Tighara Road, pointed a pistol and demanded ₹5 lakh. When Paras said that he had no money, some members allegedly urged that he be shot. Frightened, he said that he had only ₹16,000. The group then allegedly assaulted him, and Jashn struck near his eye with the pistol butt. They allegedly obtained ₹16,000 through Google Pay and compelled him to make statements in two videos portraying him as having come armed to kill Deependra and as having paid voluntarily. They demanded a further ₹4.84 lakh, threatening otherwise to circulate the video. They also warned that he would be implicated if he told anyone about the incident. The complainant contacted friends, returned home and told his father the next morning. I.A. Nos. 7249/2025 and 7250/2025 sought quashing on the basis of compromise.

2. Precedents — Considered : Gian Singh v. State of Punjab, (2012) 10 SCC 303 and Narinder Singh and Others v. State of Punjab and Another, (2014) 6 SCC 466 were expressly cited as the Supreme Court framework for deciding whether settlement justified exercise of the inherent power to quash, having regard to the nature and societal impact of the alleged offences. The High Court applied the limit concerning serious offences by examining the combined allegations of abduction from a public place, violence and forced videos containing self-incriminating statements.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS and the former Section 482 CrPC were the expressly stated bases for invoking inherent jurisdiction. The two interlocutory applications sought quashing on the ground of compromise.

4. Issues : Did the allegations in the FIR describe a simple private incident that could appropriately be concluded through compromise, or conduct sufficiently grave and against society to make quashing in inherent jurisdiction inappropriate despite the settlement applications?

5. Ratio / Findings : The FIR described abduction from a public place, followed by assault with a pistol butt, threats and extraction of money. It also alleged that the complainant was forced to make statements in videos falsely portraying him as having come to kill another person and as having paid voluntarily. The Court considered these connected allegations heinous and against society, rather than a merely private dispute. Applying Gian Singh and Narinder Singh, it held that compromise did not justify quashing the FIR on those facts.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 528 BNSS / Section 482 CrPC despite I.A. Nos. 7249/2025 and 7250/2025 seeking quashing on the basis of compromise.

Sourav Gurjar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 14536/2025, 04/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (911) Prev Next

Headnote :- Further investigation — Section 173(8) CrPC — State of A.P. v. A.S. Peter, (2008) 2 SCC 383, was considered: the police retain the statutory power to conduct further investigation after filing a charge sheet, without prior permission of the Magistrate being a legal prerequisite; reinvestigation stands on a different footing. Ram Lal Narang, reproduced in that authority, explains why informing the court and seeking formal permission are ordinarily desirable when fresh facts emerge after cognizance. Hasanbhai Valibhai Qureshi v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 5 SCC 347, was considered: defective investigation may be cured during trial, and the possibility of delay alone cannot defeat further investigation undertaken to ascertain the truth. The omission of a seized diary containing alleged acknowledgments of receipt from the charge sheet and handwriting examination warranted further investigation.

High Court inherent power — State of Punjab v. CBI, (2011) 9 SCC 182, was considered: the limits governing Section 173(8) and subordinate courts do not restrict the High Court's power under Section 482 to order fresh investigation or reinvestigation where necessary to secure the ends of justice. The passage quoted from Mithabhai Pashabhai Patel distinguishes further investigation, which continues the earlier investigation, from reinvestigation, which is ordinarily forbidden under the statutory framework. In the present case, the Court ordered further investigation, rather than de novo investigation.

Fair investigation — Nirmal Singh Kahlon v. State of Punjab, (2009) 1 SCC 441, recognized the accused's right to fair investigation under Article 21 and the victim's equal entitlement to it. Vinubhai Haribhai Malaviya v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 1, was considered for the requirement of a fair investigation before trial, so that actual offenders are brought to trial and the innocent are spared. The deliberate withholding of the complainant's seized diary, without depositing it in the malkhana or producing it before the court, could not be sustained by casually refusing further investigation. The subsequent discovery of its concealment constituted a fresh factual basis for that investigation. Any liability of an officer under Sections 201/120B IPC remained a matter for investigation; no conviction was recorded.

Trial management — The trial court's refusal on 7 December 2019 violated judicial discipline by disregarding the ongoing High Court proceedings concerning the diary. The order was set aside and the prosecution's application under Section 173(8) was allowed. The diary, already filed on 7 January 2020, was to be treated as charge sheet material, and the police were directed to file their report within three months. If further examination of prosecution witnesses concerning the diary was required, the trial court was to recall them suo motu under Section 311 CrPC.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In M.Cr.C. No. 9801/2021, the State invoked Section 482 CrPC against the order dated 7 December 2019 by which the First Additional Sessions Judge, Dabra, rejected its application under Section 173(8) in ST No. 26/2017. The complainant alleged that land had been sold to her by impersonating Bhagwanlal and that a further payment of Rs 35 lakh was taken without executing a sale deed. Offences under Sections 419, 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC were registered, and the underlying case also involved allegations of conspiracy. The police seized her personal diary, which allegedly recorded respondent No. 4 Satish Sharma's acknowledgment of receipt of money, but omitted it from the charge sheet against respondents 1–3 and kept the investigation pending against respondents 4–5. The seizure memo was included, and a photocopy of the diary remained in the police case diary; the original was neither deposited in the malkhana nor sent to the handwriting expert. Satish was later summoned under Section 319 CrPC. His earlier applications for anticipatory and regular bail brought the missing diary to the High Court's attention in M.Cr.C. No. 37198/2019. The reproduced orders dated 1, 4 and 21 October, 20 and 28 November and 30 December 2019, and 6 January 2020, recorded contradictory accounts of searches of police drawers, the belated recovery of the diary in an unsealed condition, official explanations, DGP affidavits, an SIT inquiry and the registration of Crime No. 07/2020 against an officer and others. The earlier bail application was dismissed, and the diary was ultimately filed in the trial court on 7 January 2020. The State sought further investigation into the diary, its suppression and the officers' conduct. The trial court refused permission while the related High Court proceedings were still pending.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Punjab v. CBI, (2011) 9 SCC 182, was quoted at ¶31: the limits on ordinary further investigation under Section 173(8) after a police report do not restrict the High Court's inherent power under Section 482 to order fresh investigation or reinvestigation to secure the ends of justice. Its quotation from Mithabhai Pashabhai Patel v. State of Gujarat distinguishes further investigation from reinvestigation and notes the ordinary limits on subordinate courts; it also reproduces the distinction stated in Ramachandran v. R. Udhayakumar. State of A.P. v. A.S. Peter, (2008) 2 SCC 383, was quoted at ¶33 for the police's continuing statutory power to conduct further investigation without prior permission of the Magistrate being mandatory, in contrast to reinvestigation without authority. R.P. Kapur, J.A.C. Saldanha and Ram Lal Narang appeared as supporting or contextual authorities in that discussion. The passage from Ram Lal Narang, reproduced through A.S. Peter, stresses that after cognizance the police should ordinarily inform the court and seek formal permission to preserve institutional comity, although the statutory power survives. Hasanbhai Valibhai Qureshi v. State of Gujarat, (2004) 5 SCC 347, was separately quoted at ¶33: the need to ascertain the truth and ensure a fair and effective trial can warrant further investigation to cure defects after cognizance, despite delay; it refers to Ram Lal Narang and expressly refrains from expressing a final opinion on the merits. Nirmal Singh Kahlon v. State of Punjab, (2009) 1 SCC 441, was quoted at ¶35 on the entitlement of both the accused and the victim to fair investigation, with reference to Article 21 and the State's obligations. Vinubhai Haribhai Malaviya v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 17 SCC 1, was quoted at ¶36 on fair investigation as the foundation of a fair trial and the need to identify the guilty and spare the innocent.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the High Court's inherent jurisdiction. Section 173(8) governed the police's continuing power to investigate and the State's application for further investigation after a report under Section 173(2). Section 36 CrPC appeared in the discussion of superior police officers' powers quoted from A.S. Peter. Section 319 CrPC formed the basis of Satish's earlier summons and the procedural context. Section 311 CrPC governed the recall of trial witnesses if further examination became necessary after production of the diary. Article 21 informed the discussion of fair investigation. Sections 201 and 120B IPC were identified as possible bases for prosecution if concealment or conspiracy were proved; no charge under those provisions was adjudicated here. Sections 82/83 CrPC and the bail provision in Section 439 formed part of the quoted chronology. The allegations of fraud, impersonation and forgery, and offences under Sections 406, 419, 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC, concerned the underlying criminal case, whose merits were not decided in this Section 482 order.

4. Issues : Whether the police and the High Court could require further investigation after the filing of the charge sheet and cognizance, despite the trial court's refusal; whether the deliberate withholding of the seized diary and the investigating officers' conduct justified further investigation into the evidence; whether possible delay or the ongoing trial prevented such investigation; and how the diary and the examination of prosecution witnesses should be dealt with once the diary formed part of the trial record.

5. Ratio / Findings : The charge sheet recorded the seizure of the diary but did not include it. A photocopy remained in the case diary, the original had not been deposited in the malkhana, no handwriting examination had been sought, and the police explanations of its rediscovery conflicted with contemporaneous entries. The earlier orders and subsequent compliance established, in the Court's view, that the diary had been deliberately withheld to protect Satish. The Court criticized the trial court for disregarding the pending High Court inquiry and thereby violating judicial discipline. Under State of Punjab v. CBI, the ordinary limits under Section 173(8) do not restrict the High Court's power under Section 482. Under A.S. Peter, the police retain the statutory power to investigate further after filing a charge sheet, without prior permission being a legal prerequisite. The quoted guidance in Ram Lal Narang nevertheless favours informing the court and seeking formal permission; the request made here was proper. Hasanbhai permits further investigation into newly revealed defects even if it may delay the trial. Nirmal Singh Kahlon and Vinubhai require fair investigation for both sides. The Court treated the discovery of deliberate withholding as a new fact warranting further investigation; it did not direct a de novo investigation. It identified the possible application of Sections 201 and 120B IPC to an officer, subject to investigation, without convicting anyone. The Court noted that the diary had already been filed on 7 January 2020 and directed that it be treated as part of the charge sheet or supplementary charge sheet. If further examination of prosecution witnesses concerning the diary was required, the trial court was to recall them on its own motion under Section 311.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the trial court's order dated 7 December 2019 and allowed the prosecution's application under Section 173(8). The police were permitted to conduct further investigation in accordance with the earlier High Court orders. The diary already filed before the trial court was to form part of the charge sheet or supplementary charge sheet. The police were directed to complete further investigation within three months from the date of the order and file their report. If further examination of prosecution witnesses concerning the diary was required, the trial court was directed to recall them suo motu under Section 311. The application under Section 482 was allowed.

State of M.P. v. Anil Sharma and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 9801/2021, 02/07/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (912) Prev Next

Headnote :- Speedy trial — witness process — Repeated non-execution of trial-court summons, bailable warrants and warrants, including against police witnesses, impedes the accused's right to a speedy trial. The Court contrasted the police report's emphasis on High Court warrants with the neglected trial-court process and the recorded reduction in unexecuted process after judicial scrutiny. The DGP was asked to address obligations and accountability in a personal affidavit.

Witness protection and trial management — Mahender Chawla v. Union of India, (2019) 14 SCC 615, was invoked for the Witness Protection Scheme. The Court observed that prompt examination protects witnesses from prolonged exposure to pressure from accused persons and that police must execute witness process efficiently. It rejected the DIG's slipshod report and directed the DGP to answer thirteen specific questions about scheme implementation, trial-court warrants, witness security, officers' defaults and the effect of delay on the right to a speedy trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In M.Cr.C. No. 46653/2021 styled State of M.P. v. Bhuribai, the High Court was considering police compliance with earlier concerns over unexecuted summons, bailable warrants and warrants for trial witnesses, including police personnel. An affidavit filed by an AIG, CID, enclosed the report dated 19 January 2022 of the former DIG, Chambal Range. The Morena SP attended by video conference. Police Headquarters circulars of 30 March and 3 April 2019 monitored High Court warrant execution, whereas the Bench's concern was trial-court process. The table on page 2 recorded pending perpetual arrest warrants falling from 3,738 on 7 December 2021 to 3,350 on 7 January 2022; arrest warrants against employees fell from 98 to 51 and against the general public from 307 to 104; bailable warrants against employees fell from 153 to 89 and against the general public from 254 to 178; summons against employees fell from 128 to 95 and against the general public from 222 to 206. The Court attributed some improvement to its scrutiny but rejected the DIG's general claim of efficiency. It quoted a 20 October 2021 bail order in a different matter, M.Cr.C. No. 47332/2021, in which an accused detained since 7 May 2017 was released after repeated failure to bring prosecution witnesses, including police officers, to trial; the quoted chronology also records delays due to COVID and an absconding co-accused. The SP reported that only one constable had been censured after an inquiry. The Bench regarded the institutional response as insufficient and rejected the DIG report.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mahender Chawla and Others v. Union of India and Others, (2019) 14 SCC 615, was identified at ¶3 as the Supreme Court decision formulating the Witness Protection Scheme. The Bench relied on that scheme when scrutinizing police measures and stressing the early recording of testimony to reduce witnesses' vulnerability to pressure. The 20 October 2021 order in M.Cr.C. No. 47332/2021 is an earlier High Court bail order quoted as an example of witness non-production and the accused's prolonged detention; it is not a Supreme Court authority or the operative order in the present matter.

3. Statutes considered : The decision concerns an accused's fundamental right to a speedy trial and witness attendance and security in criminal trials. It cites the Supreme Court Witness Protection Scheme by reference to Mahender Chawla. The 2019 Police Headquarters circulars were administrative measures whose application only to High Court warrants was questioned in the direction to the DGP; the Court did not finally determine a question of statutory interpretation.

4. Issues : Whether police inaction in executing trial-court process against prosecution witnesses, including police officers, undermined speedy trial and witness protection; whether circulars monitoring only High Court warrants could justify neglecting trial-court process; whether the report, censure and claimed improvements adequately addressed failures; and what explanation and account of corrective steps the DGP should provide.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found the DIG's report focused on the wrong class of warrants and gave a distorted account of the execution of process against trial witnesses, despite reductions after High Court scrutiny. Police must efficiently execute witness process without waiting for the Court to prompt them. Delayed attendance can violate the accused's speedy-trial right and leave witnesses exposed to pressure; the scheme in Mahender Chawla provided the recognized framework for witness protection. The SP's inability to recall the earlier bail criticism and the punishment of censure alone heightened the Court's concern. The Court rejected the DIG report as slipshod and directed a personal affidavit addressing each issue from the DGP.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court directed the DGP, Madhya Pradesh, to file a personal affidavit answering every one of the thirteen enumerated issues by 7 February 2022 and ordered the matter to be listed on 8 February 2022. A copy was to be supplied to the Additional Advocate General for communication through the Morena SP to the DGP. The former DIG's report was rejected.

State of M.P. v. Bhuribai, M.Cr.C. no. 46653/2021, 25/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (913) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 273 CrPC — evidence in accused's presence — Atma Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2019) 20 SCC 481, was considered: exceptions to the accused's presence must be found in the Code, such as Sections 299 and 317, or a valid dispensation from attendance with counsel present. The imprisoned accused here was not produced on either day of the investigating officer's examination and cross-examination, and no order, undertaking or consent dispensed with his attendance. Counsel's appearance did not imply waiver. The breach caused prejudice because the investigating officer's testimony was material and the accused had the right to observe the witness and assist in his defence.

Irregularity and cure — Atma Ram distinguished Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104, where witnesses from an earlier trial were unavailable and effective cross-examination impossible. Chapter XXXV and Section 461 CrPC distinguish irregularities that vitiate proceedings from breaches that can be remedied; re-examination in the accused's presence with cross-examination can remove the prejudice. The quoted Ukha Kolhe v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 1531, cautions that a complete retrial is exceptional. The existing conviction and death sentence were set aside, but the matter was remanded solely for the re-examination of investigating officer PW-20; no other evidence could be led.

Capital reference and limited remand — Atma Ram explained Sections 366–368 CrPC: a death sentence requires High Court confirmation, and the Court can direct additional inquiry or evidence, annul conviction or acquit even without a substantive appeal by the accused. Sections 386 and 391 provide related appellate evidence and retrial powers. In this combined reference and appeal the Bench directed the limited corrective procedure and an examination under Section 313 confined to any new facts emerging from PW-20's fresh evidence, with production and decision deadlines. The merits of guilt, POCSO and IPC charges, and capital sentencing were left for fresh adjudication by the trial court.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The High Court jointly considered Criminal Reference Capital No. 10/2022 under Section 366 CrPC and Chhatrapal Rawat's Criminal Appeal No. 12641/2022 against the judgment dated 5 December 2022 of the Special Judge (POCSO Act)/Second Additional Sessions Judge, Datia in Special Sessions Trial No. 15/2022. The trial court convicted him under Sections 363, 366, 376A and 302 IPC and Sections 5(l)/6 POCSO Act after the death of a nine-year-old girl missing from a wedding gathering in May 2022, and imposed death sentences under Section 376A, Section 302 and POCSO, along with lesser prison terms and fines for kidnapping-related counts. The narrative included a cousin child witness's account of the accused taking the girl away, postmortem findings of homicidal strangulation and possible sexual assault, seized clothing and biological samples, and forensic referrals. The accused was jailed but was not produced when investigating officer Kamal Kishore Goyal (PW-20) was examined on 17 October and cross-examined on 18 October 2022. The State conceded the absence, arguing that the defect could be remedied by recording fresh testimony rather than acquitting the accused. The reproduced trial order sheets show counsel appeared while the accused was absent and no reason, consent or dispensation was recorded; no video appearance was arranged.

2. Precedents — Considered : Atma Ram and Others v. State of Rajasthan, (2019) 20 SCC 481, was quoted at length and applied at ¶¶13,17–18. It treats the Section 273 presence right as valuable and recognizes express Code exceptions (including Sections 299 and 317 and dispensation with counsel present), while leaving a general implied-dispensation question unresolved where the accused objected. It distinguishes between irregularities under Section 461 that vitiate proceedings and curable defects under Chapter XXXV, requiring attention to prejudice and an effective cure. Atma Ram's discussion of Jayendra Vishnu Thakur v. State of Maharashtra, (2009) 7 SCC 104, explained why relying on evidence recorded earlier from witnesses who were now unavailable, against an accused who had been in custody and unable to cross-examine them, caused inherent prejudice; re-examining available witnesses with the accused present is different. The nested quotation from Jayendra Vishnu Thakur cites S.L. Kapoor v. Jagmohan and A.R. Antulay v. R.S. Nayak. Atma Ram also interpreted Sections 366–368 and 386, 391 CrPC to permit further evidence, acquittal, retrial and the more limited step of a de novo examination of specified witnesses in a capital reference and appeal. Its quotation of Ukha Kolhe v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 1531, described a complete retrial as exceptional and generally inappropriate simply to let prosecution repair evidence it failed to adduce; Ramanlal Rathi appears within that nested quotation, rather than as an independent holding of the present Court.

3. Statutes considered : Section 273 CrPC requires trial evidence in the accused's presence, or, when personal attendance is dispensed with, in counsel's presence, subject to express exceptions; its proviso permits protective measures for a young female sexual-offence complainant while retaining cross-examination. Sections 299 and 317 are identified in Atma Ram's quotation as exceptions, but no order dispensing with this prisoner's attendance had been made and no waiver had been established. Section 461 and Chapter XXXV address the consequences of irregularities. Sections 366–368 concern confirmation of a death sentence, further inquiry or evidence, and the High Court's powers on a reference; Sections 386 and 391 concern appellate relief and additional evidence. Section 313 governed any supplementary examination confined to genuinely new facts. The IPC and POCSO sections in the prior judgment identify charges and sentences, not fresh merits rulings here.

4. Issues : Whether examination and cross-examination of the material investigating officer while the imprisoned accused was absent violated Section 273; whether counsel's presence or implied consent cured the absence; whether the violation automatically required acquittal or total retrial; and the proper scope of relief in a death reference with a connected conviction appeal, including any further examination under Section 313.

5. Ratio / Findings : The prosecution had the accused in custody but offered no reason for failing to produce him; the trial judge recorded neither grounds under Section 317 nor consent from the accused or his counsel and made no arrangement for his appearance by video conference. The Bench found no implied waiver and concluded that the accused's absence during PW-20's material testimony prejudiced the right protected by Section 273. Following Atma Ram, it treated the defect as curable by re-examination with the accused present and full cross-examination, not as an automatic nullity warranting acquittal. The death reference and appeal gave the High Court sufficient power to remedy the defect. It set aside the judgment and sentences and confined remand to PW-20, prohibited other new evidence and any additional defence not previously taken, required new factual matters from his testimony to be put to the accused under Section 313, and directed the prosecution to secure both participants.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the trial judgment and sentences dated 5 December 2022 and remanded the matter for PW-20's evidence to be recorded afresh in the accused's presence. The witness and the accused were to be produced. Examination under Section 313 was confined to any new facts emerging from that evidence; no other evidence, application for new witnesses or new defence was permitted. A short adjournment to engage new counsel was permitted, with the next evidence date within ten days. The examination of PW-20 and any further examination under Section 313 were to be completed by 20 July 2026. Arguments were to be heard by 4 August 2026, and a fresh judgment was to be delivered by 19 August 2026; the trial record was to be returned immediately. The capital reference was answered on that basis, and the conviction appeal was disposed of. State of M.P. v. Chhatrapal Rawat; Chhatrapal Rawat v. State of M.P., Cr.Rf.C. no. 10/2022; Cr.A. no. 12641/2022, 19/06/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (914) Prev Next

Headnote :- Appeal against acquittal — Sambhaji Hindurao Deshmukh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 186, Bhim Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 10 SCC 461, and State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, (2005) 9 SCC 94, were considered: the appellate court may reappraise evidence but does not reverse an acquittal based on a reasonably possible view merely because another view exists. Erroneous assumptions about material facts, disregard of evidence and a perverse view permit interference. Here the trial court accepted untested affidavits and misread the municipal file and physical inspection; its acquittal was reversed.

Defence evidence — Section 5 of the Prevention of Corruption Act required trial as a warrant case; Section 243 CrPC permitted the production of defence witnesses or the lawful issue of process to secure their attendance. Respondents had declined to lead evidence, yet affidavits of six persons accompanying written arguments were treated as proof without permission or cross-examination. The Court rejected that procedure. Khandesh Spinning and Weaving Mills Co. Ltd. v. Rashtriya Girni Kamgar Sangh, AIR 1960 SC 571, was considered as an analogy concerning proof by affidavit where specifically authorized and cross-examination under a different regime, not a basis for applying the CPC procedure for evidence by affidavit in this criminal trial.

Corruption attempt and document offences — Undated municipal notes claimed the submersible pump had already been removed, but the estimate included its removal, while the spot inspection record showed that it remained in the bore. Quotations bypassed the technical branch; a final bill for removal, cleaning, hand pump and platform work followed two days after the work order, with no installed hand pump on inspection. The Court found false documents and a concerted attempt to draw payment, despite payment being stopped after a complaint and before disbursement. It convicted Hari Singh under Section 15 Prevention of Corruption Act read with Section 120B IPC and contractor Kamal Kishore Puniyani under Sections 467, 468, 471, 420 and 120B IPC. Hari Singh's claim that he had obeyed his superiors did not establish good faith under Section 52 IPC, because he had failed to exercise due care despite the apparent contradictions in the file.

Sentence and relief — The Court declined to impose a sentence different from those awarded to the co-accused in the connected cases, noting that no notice of enhancement had been issued in those appeals. Hari Singh received six months' rigorous imprisonment and ₹10,000 fine on each of two counts. Puniyani received two years' imprisonment and a fine of ₹15,000 on each count of forgery or use of a forged document, and six months' imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000 under Section 120B; no separate Section 420 sentence was imposed. The sentences were to run concurrently, with the stated terms of default imprisonment, and surrender was directed by 31 March 2022. Administrative placement before the Chief Justice was directed concerning the trial judge's reliance on affidavits.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Criminal Appeal No. 959/2013 under Section 378 CrPC, the State challenged the acquittal dated 29 July 2011 by the Special Judge (Prevention of Corruption Act), Gwalior in Special ST No. 1/2010 of Executive Engineer Hari Singh Khairwar under Section 15 PC Act read with Section 120B IPC and contractor Kamal Kishore Puniyani under Sections 467, 468, 471, 420 and 120B IPC. A complaint alleged fabricated municipal water-supply maintenance files in relation to work valued at about ₹2 crore. This appeal examined the Rangiyana Colony file for an estimated ₹9,940: an undated request from a councillor for a hand pump because a bore had low yield; undated engineering notes claiming submersible-pump removal and bore cleaning; an estimate that nevertheless charged for removal, cleaning, new pump and platform; quotations addressed only to three contractors and all entered consecutively on 19 August 2003; unauthorized opening of quotations by an assistant engineer instead of the technical branch; executive approval, work order on 30 December 2003 and contractor bill on 2 January 2004. A subsequent stamped endorsement and measurement entry certified completion of the work; payment recommendations and cheques were prepared, but complaint and inquiry stopped payment. Investigating officer Virendra Singh Tomar's spot panchnama did not locate a hand pump and indicated the old submersible pump remained in the bore. Witnesses described missing technical scrutiny, maps and measurements, though the committee inquiry had limitations. Sanction for Hari Singh was proved; prosecution of other officers and connected appeals had separate histories. Trial court accepted affidavits filed by Puniyani with written arguments from six persons never examined as defence witnesses and inferred work was done; both respondents had earlier stated they would lead no defence evidence. The High Court reviewed the original file and unexhibited documents on which the respondents relied, and found that those documents did not support their defence. The quotation, measurement book, note and spot panchnama formed part of the record; the panchnama records that the submersible pump remained in the bore and no hand pump had been installed.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sambhaji Hindurao Deshmukh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 186, was quoted at ¶14 on the limits of interference with an acquittal, including the rule that a reasonably possible view favouring the accused should not be reversed merely because another view is possible. Bhim Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 10 SCC 461, was quoted at ¶15 for restraint unless the trial view is perverse, unsupported or one no reasonable person would reach; its supporting citations were embedded in the quotation. State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, (2005) 9 SCC 94, was quoted at ¶16 for reappraisal coupled with preservation of a reasonably possible view supporting acquittal. The Bench applied these three authorities to find this trial acquittal perverse because untested affidavits and contradictions in the work record had been mishandled. Khandesh Spinning and Weaving Mills Co. Ltd. v. Rashtriya Girni Kamgar Sangh, AIR 1960 SC 571, was quoted at ¶63 for oral and documentary proof and the use of proof by affidavit where specifically authorized and subject to conditions under Order XIX CPC in industrial proceedings, subject to cross-examination safeguards. The Court expressly said CPC did not govern the criminal trial; it used the authority only to show that even that analogy would not admit affidavits filed without permission along with final arguments.

3. Statutes considered : Section 378 CrPC governed appeal from acquittal. Section 5 PC Act prescribed the warrant-case procedure, and Section 243 CrPC provided for producing defence witnesses or issuing lawful process subject to its conditions, rather than relying on affidavits untested by cross-examination; Section 313 recorded each respondent's position on the defence. Section 3 Evidence Act and Order XIX CPC were discussed only as a rejected analogy to affidavit proof. Section 15 PC Act and Section 120B IPC supported the attempted corrupt act and conspiracy conviction of Hari Singh; Sections 467, 468, 471, 420 and 120B IPC formed Puniyani's convictions for the fabricated records of work and billing. Section 52 IPC defined good faith by due care and attention.

4. Issues : Did the State meet the exceptional acquittal-reversal threshold? Were the office records and inspection sufficient to show that the claimed pump work had not been done and that officials and contractor had advanced a false payment claim, despite no release of funds? Could the trial judge accept affidavits from persons not examined as defence witnesses, filed with final arguments in a warrant-case trial governed by Section 243? Did following superiors' instructions satisfy Section 52 good faith in the face of obvious inconsistencies? What sentence was appropriate after reversal in light of the treatment of co-accused in connected cases?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court reconstructed the procurement sequence and placed particular weight on the conflict between a note saying a pump was already removed and a bill including the removal cost; all quotations arrived consecutively, were opened without technical scrutiny, and a bill for work involving several components was submitted within two days. No hand pump was found and the pump said to have been removed remained in the bore. An undated councillor letter and summer-urgency explanation lacked support, and payment was stopped only after complaint. The affidavits on which the trial judge based its finding that the work had been completed had not been admitted through any procedure for defence evidence under the CrPC or tested by prosecution cross-examination. The judge's contrary assumptions about a simple two-day hand-pump installation ignored the full estimate and record. Under the three acquittal authorities, the trial court's view was perverse, rather than merely one of two possible views. The Court held that the file had been fabricated and the evidence sufficient to convict the two respondents on their respective charges notwithstanding non-payment. Hari Singh's assertion that he had followed his superiors' instructions did not satisfy the requirement of due care under Section 52 because obvious documentary anomalies fell within his checking function. The non-examination of the inquiry committee chair did not negate the evidentiary value of the other evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the State's appeal, set aside both acquittals and convicted Hari Singh under Section 15 PC Act read with Section 120B IPC, and Puniyani under Sections 467, 468, 471, 420 and 120B IPC. Hari Singh was sentenced to six months' rigorous imprisonment and ₹10,000 fine on each Section 15 and Section 120B count, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default on each count. Puniyani was sentenced to two years' imprisonment and a fine of ₹15,000 on each count under Sections 467, 468 and 471, and six months' imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000 under Section 120B, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default on each count. No separate sentence was imposed under Section 420. The sentences were to run concurrently. Bail bonds were cancelled, surrender was directed by 31 March 2022, and the trial record was to be returned. The Registry was directed to place the matter concerning the trial judge before the Chief Justice on the administrative side.

State of M.P. v. Hari Singh Khairwar and Others, Cr.A. no. 959/2013, 03/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (915) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence — Sharad Birdichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622, was invoked for a complete chain excluding any reasonable hypothesis consistent with innocence; the Bench accepted that principle and evaluated the prosecution independently of Section 313 admissions. The child brother's last-seen account, the accused's acknowledgment to the father that the child had been in his company, the movements recorded on CCTV, Y-DNA match and later flight collectively established guilt. Padman Bihar v. State of Odisha, 2025:INSC:751, Digamber Vaishnav v. State of Chhattisgarh, AIR 2019 SC 1367, Arun Shankar v. State of M.P., AIR 2024 SC 1920, and Dinesh Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2023) 20 SCC 49, were cited on the weakness of last-seen evidence and the need for temporal proximity; the Court accepted those limits but found the independent links decisive.

Electronic and scientific proof — Recordings from the DVRs of two shops were transferred to pen drives and accompanied by certificates under Section 65B of the Evidence Act. In the presence of counsel, the appellate court played Article A-2 in chambers, rejected the specific contention that the face was obscured, and assessed the father's unshaken identification and location evidence. The DNA report matched a Y-DNA profile in vaginal swab and slide with the accused's blood-derived profile; the suggested sample manipulation lacked proof, and the safe custody and transfer of the samples were not shown to have been compromised.

Section 313 CrPC — Pramila v. State of U.P., Darshan Singh v. State of Punjab, and Palvinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, (1952) 2 SCC 177, were considered: prosecution must first prove guilt; answers are read as a whole, not by selecting admissions and discarding the explanation. The Bench used the accused's admissions only to fortify its independent evidentiary findings, after examining his asserted family animosity. The convictions under Sections 366, 302 and 376AB IPC and Sections 5(m)(n)/6 POCSO were upheld.

Death reference — Ramnaresh v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2012) 4 SCC 257, was quoted for aggravating circumstances. The Bench said those factors did not fit, and declined to confirm the death sentence because no previous criminal antecedents or danger to society had been proved, commuting Section 302 punishment to life for the remainder of natural life plus ₹25,000 fine; the other sentences remained undisturbed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The High Court decided Criminal Reference Capital No. 8/2023 under Section 366(1) CrPC with Kallu Rathore's jail Criminal Appeal No. 369/2024 against the judgment dated 12 December 2023 of the 11th Additional Sessions Judge/Special Judge (POCSO Act), Gwalior in SC No. 164/2022. A girl aged about nine or ten went missing after being seen near a temple with Kallu, a relative of her family who promised her ice cream. Her father later asked Kallu about her; Kallu said she had left after the purchase. Her body, showing rape and fatal head trauma, was found concealed by bushes near a railway crossing. The boy brother, parents and other relatives testified; CCTV from two shops traced a man and child toward the area. Police recovered DVR footage and Section 65B certificates and submitted biological samples, clothing, nail scrapings, hair and a stone to FSL. The vaginal slide and swab produced a Y-DNA male profile matching Kallu's blood-derived profile. He was arrested after being untraceable. Trial conviction was under Sections 366, 302 and 376AB IPC and Sections 5(m)(n)/6 POCSO, with death for murder, life for rape and POCSO, and seven years for Section 366; fines and default terms accompanied the trial sentences. He disputed CCTV identification, the non-examination of the ice-cream vendor and other children, family animosity, sample integrity and reliance on his Section 313 admissions. No defence witness was called. The judgment uses child victim references without naming her.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sharad Birdichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1984 SC 1622, was cited by appellant at ¶21 for a complete chain of circumstantial evidence excluding any reasonable hypothesis consistent with innocence; the Bench accepted the principle and applied it to the aggregate evidence. Padman Bihar v. State of Odisha, AIR 2025 SCW 2538, Digamber Vaishnav v. State of Chhattisgarh, AIR 2019 SC 1367, Arun Shankar v. State of M.P., AIR 2024 SC 1920, and Dinesh Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2023) 20 SCC 49, were grouped in counsel's last-seen argument. Pramila v. State of U.P., (2022) 2 MPLJ (Cri) 34 (SC), Darshan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2024) 2 MPLJ (Cri) 191 (SC), and Palvinder Kaur v. State of Punjab, (1952) 2 SCC 177, were cited at ¶22 and expressly accepted for the prosecution's burden of proof and the requirement to read Section 313 answers as a whole; the Court then examined the accused's explanation.

3. Statutes considered : Section 366(1) CrPC required High Court confirmation of a death sentence imposed by the trial court. Section 313 CrPC governed questioning of the accused; the answers could supplement, but not replace, independent prosecution proof. Section 65B Evidence Act certificates accompanied the two shop CCTV recordings; the Court assessed their clarity and identification. Its disposition affected the Section 302 death sentence and left the convictions and punishments on the other counts intact.

4. Issues : Whether the prosecution established a complete chain despite objections to last-seen identification, the non-examination of other children and the vendor, the clarity of the CCTV footage, purported family animosity and suggested DNA sample misuse; what weight could be given to the accused's Section 313 answers while respecting his explanation and the prosecution's burden of proof; and whether death should be confirmed in the capital reference after aggravating and mitigating circumstances were considered.

5. Ratio / Findings : The 12-year-old brother consistently described the accused's ice-cream inducement; the evidence of the father and mother, together with the other evidence, corroborated that Kallu had said the victim had later left his company. The Bench played the second CCTV pen drive in chambers in both counsel's presence and found that a man with a clearly visible face was accompanying a child; the father's identification and the relevant place and time were not challenged effectively in cross-examination. The authenticity of the pen drives, accompanied by Section 65B certificates, was not materially challenged. The Y-DNA match from intimate samples to the accused's blood was considered together with sample custody, transfer and absence of substantiated manipulation. These links, plus his subsequent flight, completed the chain beyond reasonable doubt. Under the cited Section 313 authorities, the Bench first assessed the independent prosecution evidence and then treated the accused's admissions as reinforcement and rejected a bare animosity explanation. Convictions were upheld. For sentence, it quoted Ramnaresh's aggravating examples and said they did not fit, while no prior criminal record or danger to society was proved. It declined death confirmation and substituted natural-life imprisonment for murder.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court upheld the murder, rape, kidnapping-related and POCSO convictions. Confirmation of the death sentence was refused, and the sentence under Section 302 was commuted to life imprisonment for the remainder of the appellant's natural life with ₹25,000 fine, without a default sentence on that fine as stated by the Court. The sentences on other counts were left undisturbed. The capital reference and jail appeal were answered accordingly. Copies of the judgment were directed to be sent to the jail and the trial court for compliance.

State of M.P. v. Kallu Rathore; Kallu Rathore v. State of M.P., Cr.Rf.C. no. 8/2023; Cr.A. no. 369/2024, 17/07/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (916) Prev Next

Headnote :- Material omission in early account — A Dehati Nalishi lodged about two and a half hours after a village shooting specifically attributed the firing to Ramvir, Ghanshyam and Nathu, yet attributed no firearm, firing, surrounding of the house or stone throwing during firing to Kaushlendra. The later accounts attributing a gunshot to him differed as to whether he had struck Manohar, Mamta or Gomati. Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, and Tomaso Bruno v. State of U.P., (2015) 7 SCC 178, distinguish harmless variations from contradictions or omissions destructive of a material prosecution assertion. The Court held that this was a material omission, while recognising that an FIR need not be encyclopedic. The later recording of the injured witnesses' case diary statements was not alone a reason to reject them; medical treatment and the four deaths furnished a plausible explanation.

Common object — The prosecution described successive stages: bursting of crackers; an objection followed by abuse and initial stone throwing; gunfire; and the alleged surrounding of the house and stone throwing during the gunfire. The last stage, if proved, could demonstrate joining an unlawful assembly with the shooters' object. It was omitted from the early report, however; site plans did not depict stones and none was seized; witnesses did not reliably establish the later conduct. The earlier bursting of crackers and abuse did not show that the respondents foresaw the gunfire or shared a common object to commit murder or attempted murder. Kaushlendra likewise had no proved overt act during shooting. No Section 294 IPC charge had been framed, so the suggested abuse could not support a separate conviction.

State appeal against acquittal — State (Delhi Admn.) v. Laxman Kumar, (1985) 4 SCC 476; Bhim Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 10 SCC 461; State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, (2005) 9 SCC 94; and State of U.P. v. Nandu Vishwakarma, (2009) 14 SCC 501, with Chandrappa v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 4 SCC 415, recognised the appellate court's full power to reappraise the evidence, while requiring restraint where the acquittal reflects a reasonable view and the accused has the benefit of the double presumption of innocence. No perversity or material illegality was shown. The seven respondents' acquittal was affirmed and the State's Section 378 CrPC appeal dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This Section 378 CrPC State appeal challenged the 2nd Additional Sessions Judge, Morena's 20 May 2005 judgment in ST No. 37/2001, Crime No. 204/2000, insofar as it acquitted seven respondents: Mahendra Singh alias Kallu Singh, Kaushlendra Singh, Sindhi Singh, Dinesh Singh Tomar, Kallu alias Kalyan Singh, Mahesh Singh and Rajesh Singh Sikarwar. Three others, Nathu Singh, Ghanshyam Singh and Ramvir Singh, were convicted; their separate appeals and the State's appeal concerning Ramant Singh in the cross case (Crime No. 203/2000, ST No. 229/2003) were heard together and pronounced the same day following Nathilal, but those appeals were not disposed of by this judgment. A son's birth celebration at Ramant's home was interrupted by crackers, objection, abuse and stones; the prosecution alleged shooting and later encirclement. Keshav, Jaswant, Raghunath alias Chhote Singh and Mamta died from gunshot wounds; Gomati and Manohar had gunshot injuries, supported by postmortems, MLCs and X-rays. The deaths and injuries were effectively unchallenged. The prompt Dehati Nalishi Ex. P.1 attributed shooting to the three convicted men, without assigning any role to the seven respondents after the firing began. At trial, witnesses attributed a shot at Manohar to Kaushlendra and alleged stone throwing around the house during firing by other respondents.

The State characterized the early omissions as minor because FIRs need not be encyclopedic and subsequent statements contained the allegations. The respondents relied on the reasonable trial view and acquittal restraint.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nathilal & Ors. v. State of U.P. & Anr., 1990 Supp SCC 145, was relied on for the simultaneous hearing and same-day pronouncement of the cross-case and connected conviction appeals. Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, and Tomaso Bruno v. State of U.P., (2015) 7 SCC 178, were quoted to distinguish insignificant inconsistencies from omissions or variations that materially undermine the prosecution case. The Court applied them to the later allegation that Kaushlendra had a gun and fired it. Yogesh Singh's quoted paragraph itself refers to Rammi, Leela Ram, Bihari Nath Goswami, Vijay, Sampath Kumar, Shyamal Ghosh and Mritunjoy Biswas; Tomaso Bruno's quoted paragraph refers to Dayal Singh, Radhakrishna Nagesh and Umesh Singh. State (Delhi Admn.) v. Laxman Kumar, (1985) 4 SCC 476, recognised that an acquittal strengthens the presumption of innocence and that a reasonable view of the evidence should not be disturbed. Bhim Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 10 SCC 461, allowed independent reappraisal but cautioned against routine reversal merely because another view was possible; its quoted passage lists Mohanlal Hargovind Dass, Balraj Singh, Wasudeo Ramchandra Kaidalwar and Ram Kumar Pandey as earlier authorities referred to in that quotation. State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, (2005) 9 SCC 94, likewise required the view supporting acquittal to be unreasonable or perverse before interference. State of U.P. v. Nandu Vishwakarma, (2009) 14 SCC 501, quoted Chandrappa v. State of Karnataka, (2007) 4 SCC 415, on the appellate court's full power of review, the absence of a statutory restriction arising from expressions such as compelling reasons, the double presumption of innocence and the need to preserve a reasonable view supporting acquittal. The Bench applied those authorities after its own appraisal and found no perversity.

3. Statutes considered : Section 378 CrPC provided the State's acquittal appeal. Statements of several witnesses under Section 161 CrPC were recorded later: Gomati on 2 November, Rajabeti on 22 October, Manohar on 4 December and Kumher on 17 October 2000; delay alone was not decisive in the circumstances. Sections 147–149 IPC concerned alleged assembly, rioting and vicarious liability; murder and attempted murder were under Sections 302 and 307, with Section 34 also described in the opening acquittal account, while the detailed charge paragraphs use Section 149. Section 148 and Section 324/lathi allegations appeared in charge framing. No Section 294 charge for alleged abuse was framed. The medical evidence established the gunshot deaths and injuries but did not establish these respondents' criminal participation.

4. Issues : Whether a detailed, prompt first report's omission of Kaushlendra's possession of a gun or role after the firing began was material despite witnesses' later allegation, and whether delayed Section 161 statements or inconsistent victim identification changed that assessment; whether crackers, abuse or stones before firing established participation and a shared common object to commit murder or attempted murder, or whether stone throwing and surrounding during firing were reliably proved; and whether the trial acquittal was an unreasonable or perverse view warranting reversal on the State's appeal.

5. Ratio / Findings : The early report specifically named the three shooters and their victims but did not say Kaushlendra carried or fired a gun, returned with one, or acted during gunfire. Ramant could not explain the absence of these later assertions. Gomati, Rajabeti and Kumher varied over whom Kaushlendra had shot, while Manohar attributed a shot to him. The Bench regarded the substantive addition as a material improvement and inferred later deliberation, noting that Kaushlendra was the son of Ghanshyam, who had been convicted. It expressly declined to reject injured testimony merely on the dates of police recording: treatment and the four fatalities explained the delay. It nevertheless found no proved shot or contemporaneous overt act by Kaushlendra, and no shared common object or intention. For the other six, the Court separated the bursting of crackers, abuse and stone throwing before firing from the alleged encirclement and stone throwing after firing began. Throwing stones while shots were fired could indicate that a person had joined the unlawful assembly and shared its common object. However, Ex. P.1 did not allege that phase, some names were missing, the two site plans did not depict stones, no stones were seized, and witnesses were vague, silent or inconsistent about conduct during firing. Bursting crackers did not establish foresight of the shooting. The trial court's account was plausible on this evidentiary record and the State identified no perversity. An appellate court has the full power to reconsider facts and law but does not overturn a reasonable acquittal view simply because it could draw another conclusion.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal. The 20 May 2005 acquittal of all seven respondents in ST No. 37/2001 was affirmed, their bail bonds discharged, and the trial record ordered returned.

State of M.P. v. Mahendra Singh and Ors., Cr.A. no. 790/2005, 30/04/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (917) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 273 CrPC and material witness absence — The jailed accused was not produced when the two doctors who prepared his semen slide and collected his underwear and pubic hairs were examined, yet the trial court relied on their testimony in a prosecution that included an offence under Section 377 IPC. The third witness examined that day spoke only of a co-accused's mobile number and caused no prejudice. Counsel's no-objection without the accused's instructions could not cure the State's failure to produce him or meet the requirements of Section 317. Atma Ram v. State of Rajasthan, (2019) 20 SCC 481, supported re-examination of the two material witnesses in his presence under the broad death-reference and appeal powers; a full retrial remains an exceptional remedy. Expeditious listed evidence — The advance fixing of evidence dates and the opportunity actually taken to cross-examine witnesses complied with Sections 230–231 CrPC. No contemporaneous request for more preparation time, or later application for recall, was made on the ground that a witness had appeared on the first scheduled date. Gouri Shankar v. State of Punjab, (2021) 3 SCC 380, supported rejection of the allegation that the pace of examination alone had caused prejudice.

DNA report and defence stage — After the prosecution case was effectively reopened for the DNA report Ex. C-1, the trial court dismissed an objection without recording or answering it, exhibited the report under Section 293, supplemented the Section 313 examination and heard final argument on the day the report arrived. The defence challenged the failure to specify the biological source of the DNA on the clothing and bed-sheet and sought an opportunity to question the scientific officer. Sections 232–234 require a meaningful opportunity to present the defence and final arguments; the compressed sequence caused actual prejudice. The trial court must decide the objections by a reasoned order or examine the expert, give the accused a renewed opportunity to lead defence evidence, and allow at least a week to prepare final submissions.

Disposition — The conviction and death sentences in the Section 366 reference and Section 374 appeal were set aside, all findings of conviction wiped out, and the matter remanded for the two doctors' fresh evidence and proceedings from the DNA report stage. Four months were allowed; counsel of choice or qualified legal aid was directed if requested.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : CRRFC No. 9/2018 under Section 366 CrPC and Nandkishore alias Nandu's Criminal Appeal No. 6946/2018 under Section 374 concerned the judgment dated 13 August 2018 passed by the 1st Additional Sessions Judge, Datia in Special Sessions Trial No. 21/2018. Rishabh Gupta, a boy aged about ten, disappeared on 2 March 2018; his father reported calls by an unidentified person. Police viewed footage depicting him with Nandkishore and Ranu alias Dilip Sahu on a motorcycle, recovered a body packed in gunny bags from a canal following the recorded disclosures, and collected cloth, bed-sheet, biological, mobile/CDR and CCTV materials. The police alleged kidnapping for ransom, unnatural sexual assault, murder, destruction of evidence, POCSO and MPDVPK offences. Ranu was a juvenile ordered tried as an adult in Children's Court; that separate trial stalled after his flight from a special home, so the reference and appeal proceeded. Nandkishore was convicted under Sections 364A, 377, 302, 201 IPC, Sections 5/6 POCSO and Sections 11/13 MPDVPK Act; death sentences were imposed for kidnapping for ransom and murder, along with other terms of imprisonment and fines. He disputed the missing ransom demand in FIR, voluntary motorcycle boarding, CCTV hard disks, timing of recovery versus postmortem receipt, the stains and their source on the bed-sheet, the custody of samples, and the DNA report's unspecified source on clothing and bed-sheet. On 9 July 2018 the jailed accused was not produced when Dr S.S. Batham, Dr Dinesh Kumar and Rambihari Patsaria were examined. The doctors' testimony about the collection of the samples was relied on in the trial judgment. Prosecution testimony had otherwise been recorded according to a closely spaced schedule announced in advance. On 10 August, the awaited DNA report Ex. C-1 arrived; objections were labelled ineffective without reasons, the accused was further questioned under Section 313, and final arguments were heard that day. Judgment followed on 13 August.

2. Precedents — Considered : Atma Ram & Others v. State of Rajasthan, (2019) 20 SCC 481, was quoted at length and applied to the recording of evidence in the accused's absence contrary to Section 273: not every irregularity vitiates a case, material prejudice can be repaired by re-examination in the accused's presence, and Chapters XXVIII and XXIX provide broad High Court powers including further evidence or an exceptional retrial. The quoted Supreme Court passage distinguishes Jayendra Vishnu Thakur's irreparable lack of cross-examination under Section 299, and refers to S.L. Kapoor, A.R. Antulay, State of Haryana, Rajasthan SRTC, Ukha Kolhe and Ramanlal Rathi in its reasoning about natural justice and exceptional retrial. The quoted source's reference to four family murders concerns Atma Ram's facts, not the single child death in Nandu. Gouri Shankar v. State of Punjab, (2021) 3 SCC 380, was quoted in rejecting a complaint based solely on rapid witness examination, in view of the actual opportunity to cross-examine and the absence of an application for recall.

3. Statutes considered : Section 273 CrPC required evidence to be taken in the accused's presence or, if his personal attendance had validly been dispensed with, in his pleader's presence; the Court rejected the purported consent given by counsel alone when the jailed accused had not been produced. Section 317 requires a proper basis for dispensing with attendance and recorded reasons. Any informed instruction from the accused must also be assessed; such an instruction was absent here. Sections 230–231 govern fixed prosecution evidence dates and discretionary deferral/recall; Section 311 was used to recall the father. Section 293 permitted use of a government scientific report but did not excuse reasoned disposal of an objection or a fair opportunity to seek cross-examination of the scientific officer. Sections 232–234 structure consideration of acquittal after prosecution evidence, calling upon the accused to enter on his defence, and final arguments. Section 313 questioning cannot compress the subsequent opportunity to present the defence and final arguments after new evidence. Sections 366–368 govern capital confirmation and further inquiry/evidence; Sections 374, 386 and 391 concern appeal and additional evidence.

4. Issues : Whether trial testimony of three witnesses recorded while the jailed accused was absent caused prejudice requiring cure, and whether counsel's no-objection without the accused's instructions sufficed; whether prompt examination of available witnesses on fixed dates independently impaired cross-examination; whether admission of a late DNA report with an unexplained rejection of objection, immediate additional Section 313 questioning and same-day final argument denied a meaningful defence; and what tailored relief a High Court on a death reference and conviction appeal could order without deciding guilt.

5. Ratio / Findings : Rambihari addressed a co-accused's telephone and had no incriminating account against Nandkishore; his examination in the accused's absence caused no relevant prejudice. The two doctors' testimony established the collection of his forensic samples and had been relied on by the trial judge in relation to a sexual-offence count. The accused's presence was therefore important to enable him to observe the witnesses and instruct counsel for cross-examination. The State's failure to bring a jailed accused could not be held against him, and counsel's undertaking, given without the accused's instructions, did not establish that attendance had been dispensed with under Section 317. Atma Ram supported limited re-examination rather than treating the entire trial as incurably void. The other trial dates were announced, witnesses were cross-examined, and there was neither a timely objection about readiness nor a request for recall, so their efficient examination did not itself cause prejudice. In contrast, directing production of the pending DNA report implicitly reopened the prosecution case. The defence's objection to its source and reliability had to be recorded and decided with reasons; merely describing it as non-effective was insufficient. After the report was marked under Section 293, further questioning under Section 313 and final arguments on the same day left no preparation time for a material new report or renewed defence, contrary to Sections 233–234; on these facts prejudice was clear. Confirmation under Section 366 is a continuation of the trial and obliged the High Court to secure fair process.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the conviction and sentence dated 13 August 2018, and all findings of conviction stood wiped out. On remand, Drs Batham and Dinesh must be examined afresh in Nandkishore's presence; proceedings then resume at the 10 August DNA-report stage. He may file written objections, which must be decided by a reasoned order; an application to examine or cross-examine the scientific officer must be considered in accordance with law; he may seek defence evidence in light of the report. Only after compliance with Section 233 shall the case be fixed for final arguments, with at least one week allowed for preparation. The trial court shall decide without influence from its former findings, complete the exercise within four months from the date of receipt of a copy of this judgment, provide chosen or legal-aid counsel on request (the latter with at least 15 years' bar standing and criminal-law knowledge), and immediately provide this judgment free to the jailed accused.

State of M.P. v. Nandu (Nandkishore), Cr.Rf.C. no. 9/2018; Cr.A. no. 6946/2018, 26/07/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (918) Prev Next

Headnote :- Common intention — Section 34 IPC — participation and acquittal — The State appealed the acquittal of Ram Outar and Subhash Sharma on charges under Sections 148 and 302 read with Section 149 IPC after two men were killed in a field attack. It argued that Subhash drove the tractor bringing the assailants and that both respondents surrounded the victims and joined exhortations; others had been convicted on the same evidence. The Division Bench examined the eyewitness record and found no proved individual participation or attributable act of these respondents, while the trial court had also recorded an acquittal on the rioting charge. It explained that Section 34 requires a joint criminal act in furtherance of common intention and some conduct by each participant, though each accused need not cause a separate injury. A covert act or deliberate omission may suffice in the circumstances. Mere common intention or association without proof of an act did not establish their constructive liability here. It affirmed the acquittal and discharged bail bonds.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Criminal Appeal No. 542/2003 under Section 378 CrPC, the State challenged the judgment dated 4 February 2003 passed by the Sixth Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track Court), Bhind, in ST No. 347/2000. By that judgment, Ram Outar (also rendered Ramavtar in the judgment) and Subhash Sharma were acquitted on charges under Sections 148 and 302 read with 149 IPC. On 16 October 1999, Mataprasad and Tejram went to a field to plough; children brought breakfast. The prosecution alleged that accused persons arrived in a tractor-trolley driven by Subhash, some armed with firearms, surrounded the men, and Murari fired; both victims died. Harendra lodged a prompt FIR. The State asserted that Harendra and Shriprakash placed both respondents in the surrounding group, exhorting that the victims not escape, and relied on convictions of other assailants. The defence supported the trial acquittal. The judgment records associated appeals by Ashok and Murari being decided separately and a delinked appeal by other accused who had absconded and had been tried separately. Those matters were separate from the disposition of this State appeal.

2. Precedents — Considered : Suresh Sankharam Nangare v. State of Maharashtra, 2012 (9) SCALE 345 was cited on the requirement of a prearranged plan and prior concert under Section 34, and the relationship between proved common intention and an individual overt act; the Court's discussion required proof of participation, by an overt or covert act, by each person sought to be held liable. Shyamal Ghosh v. State of West Bengal, AIR 2012 SC 3539 was cited for the requirement of a plan and action in pursuance of it. Mrinal Das v. State of Tripura, AIR 2011 SC 3753 was cited for the prosecution burden of proving actual participation of more than one person and shared intention. Ramashish Yadav v. State of Bihar, AIR 1999 SC 1083 was cited on prior meeting of minds, which may develop at the spur of the moment. Bijay Singh v. State of M.B., 1956 CrLJ 897 was cited for presence and prior concert; the judgment states that presence is required at ¶16 and gives an illustration of remote assistance at ¶11. Hem Raj v. Delhi Administration, AIR 1990 SC 2252 was cited for the acquittal of alleged confederates whose participation was disbelieved, where only one assailant's participation was proved. Dashrathlal v. State of Gujarat, 1979 CrLJ 1078 (SC), addressed why merely accompanying an accused is insufficient. Rajagopalswamy Konar v. State of Tamil Nadu, 1994 CrLJ 2195 (SC), and Sheikh Nabab v. State of Maharashtra, 1993 CrLJ 43 (SC), illustrated the need to assess proven acts and shared intention rather than impose collective murder liability without the requisite foundation.

3. Statutes considered : Section 378 CrPC provided for the State's appeal against acquittal. Section 34 IPC was discussed as a rule attributing a criminal act done by several persons in furtherance of common intention to each proven participant, with no requirement that every participant cause an individual injury. The statements under Section 161 CrPC, FIR, postmortems and cartridge recoveries formed part of the evidentiary background.

4. Issues : Did the State show a basis to disturb the two respondents' acquittal by proving their participation and shared intention or common object, despite evidence that other persons fired fatal shots? Were Subhash's alleged driving of the tractor and both respondents' alleged surrounding of the victims and exhortation to the assailants established with sufficient reliability? Could liability under Section 34 be inferred merely from association when the trial court found no act attributable to them?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court explained that Section 34 requires a joint act in furtherance of shared intention and attributes that act to each participant. A participant's conduct may differ from the lethal act and may even consist of a deliberate omission in the circumstances. It nevertheless required a proven individual contribution to the joint action. On review of the trial record, Harendra's account did not establish Subhash's participation; the Bench found no proved overt act by either respondent and considered the rioting-charge acquittal. The medical evidence established both firearm deaths, and the eyewitnesses attributed the shooting to Murari and possession of a gun to Ashok. That evidence did not itself establish the participation of Ram Outar and Subhash. The State's tractor and exhortation theory did not displace the trial assessment. The Court dismissed the acquittal appeal for lack of merit. In paragraph 11, the Court stated that presence at the scene was not invariably necessary and gave examples of assistance from a distance. In paragraph 16, it stated that presence and prior concert were two necessary elements.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the State's appeal under Section 378 and affirmed the acquittal of Ram Outar and Subhash Sharma. Their bail bonds were discharged and further appearance before the Registry in this appeal was dispensed with. The trial record was directed to be returned.

State of Madhya Pradesh v. Ram Outar and Others, Cr.A. no. 542/2003, 30/04/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (919) Prev Next

Headnote :- Evidence — material contradictions and incident genesis — The FIR named unknown assailants although relatives later claimed to have identified the shooter and briefed the informant. The earlier complaint, letters and statements identified a fireworks dispute as the origin of the incident; trial testimony denied it and gave incompatible sequences of the first shots. The Court rejected the alleged eyewitness accounts as materially changed and unreliable, rather than treating the variations as minor lapses caused by the passage of time.

Place of occurrence — Bhagwati Prasad v. State of M.P., (2010) 1 SCC 697, was considered: a changed spot affects proof when the defence establishes a deliberate, substantial change bearing on the entire case. Blood on the roof, a shoe near the dilapidated building, movement of the body and uncertainty about the bullet's trajectory supported a materially different place of occurrence. These circumstances undermined the witnesses' claimed opportunity to see the incident and their account of who was the aggressor; the doctor could not conclusively establish the relative positions of the deceased and the shooter.

Unexplained accused-side injuries — Takhaji Hiraji v. Thakore Kubersing Chamansing, (2001) 6 SCC 145, rejected an automatic adverse inference: the injuries must be serious and sustained in the same occurrence, and their effect must be assessed in light of the witnesses' evidence and the competing defence version. Lakshmi Singh v. State of Bihar, (1976) 4 SCC 394, explained that suppression may indicate an untrue genesis, support a probable defence or create doubt, but minor injuries or otherwise cogent independent proof may make non-explanation immaterial. Four deaths and two gunshot injuries arising from the cross occurrence were supported by medical evidence but remained unexplained by these partisan witnesses; in this factual combination the prosecution account was unreliable.

Witnesses — Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, was considered: relationship alone does not make a witness interested; a motive for false implication or benefit from the result, and the consistency of the evidence, matter. The witnesses' position in the cross case, suppression of the casualties, alteration of the place of occurrence and improvements in their testimony supplied concrete grounds for close scrutiny and rejection of their evidence here. Matru v. State of U.P., (1971) 2 SCC 75, Kundula Bala Subrahmanyam v. State of A.P., (1993) 2 SCC 684, and Animireddy Venkata Ramana v. Public Prosecutor, (2008) 5 SCC 368, were considered on abscondence: flight alone does not prove guilt, but can have contextual weight. The relatives' absence during immediate investigation added to, but did not replace, the credibility analysis.

Private defence and acquittal — With no reliable evidence that Ramant fired, the trial court's finding that he had fired in private defence could not stand. The acquittal was maintained because the prosecution had failed to prove its case, and was expressly described as honourable. Gorle S. Naidu v. State of A.P., (2003) 12 SCC 449, was considered: an appellate court may review acquittal evidence, but the strengthened presumption of innocence, the possibility of two reasonable views and the requirement of compelling and substantial reasons limit interference; unjustified exclusion of convincing evidence can warrant intervention. Here, the acquittal was justified, but the stated basis for it required correction. The State's appeal was dismissed, the acquittal under Sections 148, 302 or alternatively 302/149 IPC was upheld, and the bail bonds were discharged.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Criminal Appeal No. 584/2008 under Section 378 CrPC, the State challenged the judgment dated 20 May 2005 passed by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Morena, in ST No. 229/2003, acquitting Ramant Singh on charges under Sections 148, 302 or alternatively 302/149 IPC. Leave to appeal was granted only against Ramant, not nine co-accused. On 16 October 2000 Brajesh suffered a fatal gunshot; Angad's 21:15 FIR named unknown assailants, despite later claims that relatives had seen Ramant fire and told him. Police at the scene also discovered three bodies by Ramant's house and injured persons; a fourth person, Mamta, subsequently died. The other dead were Keshav, Jaswant and Raghunath; Gomati and Manohar survived gunshot injuries. A cross FIR and ST No. 37/2001 followed, with convictions of Nathu, Ghanshyam and Ramvir and acquittal of several others recorded as cross-case context. The linked appeals were heard simultaneously and pronounced the same day in light of Nathilal v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 145; this judgment disposes of the appeal concerning Ramant. Ram Singh's private complaint and police charge sheet were tagged after Section 210 CrPC proceedings. At trial, the father Ram Singh, brother Mahesh and relative Munesh claimed to witness a street shooting; Angad was not an eyewitness. Rajesh and Kallu turned hostile, and Ramvir was examined as a court witness after a public prosecutor sought to drop him. The trial judge rejected the principal eyewitness accounts but reasoned that Ramant shot in private defence. On appeal Ramant argued that no reliable evidence established he fired at all.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nathilal v. State of U.P., 1990 Supp SCC 145, was invoked at ¶1 for coordinated hearing of cross-case appeals, with separate judgments pronounced on the same day. Bhagwati Prasad v. State of M.P., (2010) 1 SCC 697, was quoted and applied at ¶49: a discrepancy in the place of occurrence gains significance if the defence establishes a deliberate, substantial change affecting the whole story. Takhaji Hiraji v. Thakore Kubersing Chamansing, (2001) 6 SCC 145, was quoted for the controlling qualifications: non-explanation of injuries is not invariably fatal; serious injuries sustained in the occurrence, partisan evidence and a plausible defence affect its significance. Lakshmi Singh v. State of Bihar, (1976) 4 SCC 394, was quoted extensively for the inferences from unexplained serious injuries and the alternative outcomes, including no adverse effect where injuries are minor or independent prosecution proof is cogent; its references to Mohar Rai, Puran Singh and State of Gujarat v. Bai Fatima appeared within that quotation. Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, was quoted and applied at ¶51: relationship alone does not make a witness interested; benefit, animus or a motive for false implication, and the evidence's inherent reliability, probability and consistency, matter. The reproduced passage also refers to Kalki, Ganapathi, Dalip Singh, Jayabalan and other authorities. Matru v. State of U.P., (1971) 2 SCC 75, Kundula Bala Subrahmanyam v. State of A.P., (1993) 2 SCC 684, and Animireddy Venkata Ramana v. Public Prosecutor, (2008) 5 SCC 368, were quoted at ¶52 on abscondence: abscondence alone is weak evidence and may reflect innocent fear, but it can gain weight when considered with other circumstances; the Bench used the witnesses' immediate absence contextually. Gorle S. Naidu v. State of A.P., (2003) 12 SCC 449, was quoted and applied at ¶¶55–56 on reappraisal of acquittal evidence, the strengthened presumption of innocence, the possibility of two views and the need for compelling reasons for reversal.

3. Statutes considered : Section 378 CrPC provided the State's appeal against acquittal. Sections 148, 302 and 302/149 IPC were the charged alternatives; absence of reliable proof of Ramant's shot defeated direct murder liability, and the unappealed or upheld findings on lack of unlawful assembly/common object left the Section 149 route unavailable. The trial court exercised Section 311 CrPC to examine Ramvir as a court witness after the public prosecutor sought to give him up. The respondent was examined under Section 315 CrPC.

4. Issues : Did reliable evidence establish that Ramant fired the fatal shot, and could the State overturn his acquittal? Did the claimed witnesses suppress the fireworks origin, disagree about the first shooter, conceal the other four deaths and two injuries, shift the place of death, and falsely claim to have been in a position to witness the incident? What weight should be assigned to kinship, actual cross-case interest and immediate absence? If firing by Ramant was not proved, could the trial court nevertheless base the acquittal on private defence?

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr Parashar established Brajesh's homicidal firearm death, but could not fix the shooter's location from the bullet's downward path and gave several possible relative positions. Earlier records referred to fireworks, whereas the purported witnesses disowned that origin and gave materially different firing sequences. Angad's FIR named no assailant and claimed Mahesh, Ramvir and Rajesh could supply names, which was incompatible with the claim that Angad had immediately been informed that Ramant was the shooter. Ram Singh and Munesh were absent from initial police proceedings; Mahesh's Section 161 statement followed fifteen days later, his torch-repair detail was an improvement, and the trial court noted Munesh's hesitant demeanour. None reliably witnessed the killing. Physical evidence included blood on or flowing down from the roof of Brijlal's dilapidated house and a shoe near it; Brajesh's body had initially been moved and was eventually taken to a distant garden, while his admitted pistol was not recovered. The Court found a substantial, deliberate change in the claimed location affecting the prosecution theory; its assessment that Ramvir's shot could have hit Brajesh on the roof was a probable defence explanation supporting doubt, rather than a conclusive finding in this appeal that Ramvir had killed him. The four deaths and two gunshot injuries on Ramant's side were supported by medical evidence and arose from the same occurrence, yet the witnesses professed ignorance. Under Takhaji and Lakshmi Singh this combination, rather than non-explanation in isolation, undermined the prosecution. Their relationship alone would not make their evidence unacceptable under Mohd. Rojali Ali, but their concrete cross-case interest and material evasions rendered them unreliable. Their absence after the incident had contextual relevance under Matru, Kundula and Animireddy; it did not independently prove guilt. The prosecutor's effort to give up Ramvir, originally identified in the FIR as a possible source of assailant names, and the court's decision to examine him supported the conclusion that the real incident was being suppressed. With no other evidence that Ramant carried or fired a firearm, private defence did not arise as a basis for his acquittal. The Court reappraised the evidence under Gorle S. Naidu, found no ground to reverse the result, and corrected the unsupported finding that Ramant had fired the shot.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the State's appeal. The trial court's acquittal of Ramant under Sections 148, 302 or alternatively 302/149 IPC was maintained with the modification that he was honourably acquitted under Section 302 because the prosecution failed to prove he fired, rather than being acquitted on a finding of private defence. Acquittal on unlawful assembly/common object grounds was upheld. The bail bonds were discharged, no further appearance before the Registry was required, and the trial record was directed to be returned.

State of M.P. v. Ramant Singh, Cr.A. no. 584/2008, 30/04/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (920) Prev Next

Headnote :- Attempted corruption and conspiracy — The Court convicted Executive Engineer Karaiya under Section 15 of the Prevention of Corruption Act read with Section 120-B IPC after examining his participation throughout the municipal waterworks file. He authorized quotations despite an estimate charging removal of a pump that the undated note claimed had already been removed, approved the outcome of three quotations received in sequence on the same day from selected contractors and opened by an unauthorised Assistant Engineer without scrutiny by the Technical Branch, and issued a work order on 30 December 2003. The contractor billed on 2 January 2004; the purported measurement book reproduced the estimated items without recording dimensions; later spot inspection found the old submersible pump in place and no replacement hand pump. Disbursement was stopped following the complaint. Non-payment did not answer the alleged attempt.

Proof and acquittal appeal — The trial judge confined Karaiya's role to calling quotations and treated non-expert witnesses' broad assurances of regularity as decisive despite the documents. Those witnesses' opinions did not constitute expert evidence under Section 45 of the Evidence Act. Dayal Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 8 SCC 263, supported an independent, fair assessment notwithstanding investigative deficiencies. Sambhaji Hindurao Deshmukh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 186, Bhim Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 10 SCC 461, and State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, (2005) 9 SCC 94, require respect for a reasonable acquittal view, yet allow reversal for incorrect assumptions about material facts or perversity. The documentary misreading made this acquittal perverse.

Sentence — After a separate hearing, Karaiya received six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000 on each count, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default on each count. The substantive sentences were directed to run concurrently. The Court criticized similar co-accused terms as slight but followed parity because enhancement notice had not been given in their connected appeals. The bail bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender by 31 March 2022.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In State of M.P.'s Section 378 CrPC appeal, the High Court reviewed R.N. Karaiya's acquittal by the judgment dated 29 May 2013 passed by the Special Judge (Prevention of Corruption Act), Gwalior, in Special Sessions Trial No. 01/2010. A complaint alleged fabricated municipal water-maintenance files of around ₹2 crore and illegal gratification; Lokayukt and municipal inquiries led to prosecution. This appeal concerned a particular Rangiyana Colony file, Article A-1, for claimed replacement of a submersible pump with a hand pump for ₹9,940. Karaiya was Executive Engineer; a councillor's undated request and Sub-Engineer Narendra Bhadoria's undated note asserted a bore was cleaned and old pump removed, while the estimate also included a charge for its removal. Assistant Engineer Ajay Pandvia proposed calling quotations, Karaiya authorized calling them in July 2003, only three contractors were approached, all undated bids arrived on 19 August in sequential inward-register slots, and Pandvia opened them despite the Technical Branch's role. Karaiya approved the selected low quote on 3 September and signed the work order dated 30 December. Contractor Kamal Kishore Puniyani billed on 2 January 2004; Narendra and Pandvia certified by a stamp that the work was satisfactory and cited a measurement book that contained price items but no actual measurements. Payment was recommended and a cheque endorsement appeared, but the complaint stopped release and the file was closed. Investigator Virendra Tomar's spot panchnama showed no hand pump and the old submersible still inside the bore. Committee members examined thousands of files cursorily without their own site visits, while the accounts of a separate investigator and the spot witness differed. The trial judge acquitted Karaiya on the premise that he only permitted the calling of quotations and later irregularities lay with others. Co-accused conviction and acquittal appeals were heard simultaneously, but their dispositions are separate.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sambhaji Hindurao Deshmukh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 11 SCC 186, was quoted for full review coupled with respect for a properly appreciated trial acquittal, interference when material facts are wrongly assumed or evidence not properly assessed, and preservation of an acquittal based on one of two reasonable views. The quoted passage cites Ganesh Bhavan Patel, Babu, Awadhesh, Thanedar Singh and Raja Ram as supporting authorities. Bhim Singh v. State of Haryana, (2002) 10 SCC 461, likewise rejects routine reversal for another possible view but permits it when the trial result is perverse or unsupported; Mohanlal Hargovind Dass, Balraj Singh, Wasudeo Ramchandra Kaidalwar and Ram Kumar Pandey are referred to within its quoted passage. State of Punjab v. Ajaib Singh, (2005) 9 SCC 94, was cited for reappraisal and interference only if the acquitting view is unreasonable or perverse. Dayal Singh v. State of Uttaranchal, (2012) 8 SCC 263, was quoted for the criminal court's own responsibility to evaluate admissible evidence fairly and not let defective investigation decide the outcome. Its extensive quoted material references NHRC, Zahira Habibullah, K. Yarappa Reddy, Ram Bali and Karnel Singh; these authorities appear within the quotation on society's interest and the independent assessment of proof. The Court applied the acquittal cases to the mistaken view of Karaiya's actual role in the successive approvals and Dayal Singh to independent assessment.

3. Statutes considered : Section 378 CrPC governed the State's appeal from acquittal. The charge and ultimate conviction were under Section 15 Prevention of Corruption Act (attempted criminal misconduct as framed here) read with Section 120-B IPC concerning conspiracy. Sanction under Section 19 of the PC Act permitted the supplementary prosecution. Section 45 Evidence Act furnished the distinction between relevant expert opinion and an ordinary witness's unsupported conclusion: the court assessed Article A-1, measurement book Article B and Ex. P.21 itself. The co-accused's charges under Sections 420, 467, 468 and 471 IPC were described, but Karaiya was not convicted on them. Sentence on both counts was fixed after a separate hearing following conviction.

4. Issues : Whether Karaiya's participation ended with authorizing quotations or extended through approving selection and issuing the work order in a file bearing obvious anomalies; whether the stopping of payment or the witnesses' conclusory assurances displaced the documentary and spot-inspection evidence of an attempt to obtain payment for work not done; whether the trial court's contrary view was reasonable enough to withstand acquittal-appeal scrutiny; and what sentence should follow conviction when connected co-accused were given short terms without enhancement notice.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench compared the note asserting prior removal and cleaning with the estimate charging for removal; questioned the claim of a summer emergency in July and the unexplained replacement of the more effective submersible pump with a hand pump; and noted the absence of a record explaining the fate of municipal equipment. Karaiya approved the file without examining these inconsistencies, the restriction of quotations to three contractors, Pandvia's unauthorised opening of the quotations or the absence of Technical Branch scrutiny, then approved the selected quote and signed the order. The bill submitted two days later and the completion certificate were not supported by actual measurements; the court inspected the actual book rather than accepting Rajesh Sharma's statement that it contained measurements. The spot record placed the old pump inside the bore and found no replacement. The court recognized that evidence from a separate co-accused trial could not be read in this trial; it mentioned an earlier statement only while discussing departmental procedure, while relying on this record's documents and testimony for its conclusion. The trial judge's narrow premise that Karaiya only authorized calling bids disregarded his later approval and work order, and his reliance on a lay witness opinion rather than the file was contrary to Section 45's expert-opinion distinction. On cumulative evidence, the Bench found his participation in the attempted fraudulent payment and conspiracy to be proved beyond reasonable doubt even though no funds were disbursed. The acquittal was perverse rather than a reasonable view entitled to appellate restraint under Sambhaji, Bhim Singh and Ajaib Singh.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court set aside the acquittal and convicted Karaiya under Section 15 of the PC Act read with Section 120-B IPC. After hearing counsel on sentence, the Bench called the connected co-accused's six-month punishments too slight but declined a different term here because their appeals lacked notice for enhancement. It imposed six months' rigorous imprisonment and ₹10,000 fine for each count with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default on each count; substantive terms run concurrently. The bail bonds were cancelled, surrender before the trial court was directed by 31 March 2022, and the State's appeal was allowed.

State of M.P. v. R.N. Karaiya, Cr.A. no. 338/2014, 03/03/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (921) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 FIR mandamus — A police officer's duty under Section 154 CrPC to register information disclosing a cognizable offence does not, by itself, make a writ directing registration the ordinary remedy for police inaction. Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, and Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, direct aggrieved informants to the Magistrate under Sections 190/200. The latter recognises rare relief under Article 226 for clear mala fide abuse and noncompliance, without directing how the investigation is to be conducted. The MP Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria, W.A. No. 247/2016, applied the requirement to pursue alternative remedies, subject to Whirlpool's exceptions, and distinguished Lalita Kumari's registration duty from an independent entitlement to mandamus.

Remedial sequence — Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, described a written application to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application to the Magistrate under Section 156(3) for registration or proper investigation and for monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, reinforced the alternative remedy before the Magistrate and explained that the Magistrate may recommend replacing an investigator, but cannot investigate personally. The present writ was dismissed with express liberty to pursue a complaint under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Subhadra Jaiswal and the other petitioners filed Writ Petition No. 25390/2024 at Jabalpur under Article 226. They sought mandamus directing respondent authorities 2–5 to act on directions in an order dated 28 April 2023 and to decide representations dated 19 and 25 July 2024 after hearing private respondents 6–7. They also sought production of the records. Their counsel said that they had approached the police for registration of an FIR without result. State counsel objected that the proper remedy was a complaint before the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC, identified in the order as Section 223 BNSS.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, 2007:INSC:760 : (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted on the police duty to register cognizable information and the complaint remedy under Sections 190/200 when the police fail to act. The quoted discussion distinguishes Ramesh Kumari and Lallan Chaudhary, which concern the police's substantive registration duty, from the remedial procedure addressed in AIIMS Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari. The sanction-related direction concerned the facts of Aleque Padamsee, rather than the present petition. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, 2008:INSC:341 : (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted on rare Article 226 relief where a clear case of mala fide investigation and statutory abuse is shown. It also quotes Gangadhar and AIIMS on a complaint to the Magistrate under Sections 190/200, including the options to inquire, direct investigation, dismiss if no offence is disclosed, or issue process. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., 2007:INSC:1243 : (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted on recourse to the SP under Section 154(3), followed by directions from the Magistrate under Section 156(3) for registration, proper investigation and monitoring. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, followed Sakiri Vasu and described a possible recommendation to change the investigating officer, while leaving investigation itself to the police. Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016 (Division Bench, 20 December 2016), was quoted for denial of FIR mandamus where alternative remedies had not been exhausted, unless the exceptions in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1, applied. Its second proposition distinguishes Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, which concerns the duty to register rather than an automatic entitlement to a writ. The order refers to the four Whirlpool exceptions but does not enumerate them.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 confers public-law writ jurisdiction; the Court declined routine FIR mandamus in the presence of statutory remedies. Section 154 CrPC concerns registration of a cognizable FIR, with written recourse to the SP under subsection (3). Section 156(3) permits the Magistrate to direct and monitor investigation, but not to investigate personally. Sections 190/200 CrPC provide a private complaint and cognizance route. The operative liberty specified Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023.

4. Issues : Did the alleged failure to register an FIR justify mandamus and directions concerning the earlier order and representations under Article 226 despite the statutory remedies before the SP and Magistrate? How does the duty to register cognizable information differ from the remedy available when that duty is not performed? Was any rare public-law exception shown?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied the quoted Supreme Court and Division Bench authorities in directing ordinary redress to the Magistrate. The police must register a cognizable case when the facts disclose one, but a person alleging inaction can approach the SP and apply under Section 156(3), or make a complaint under Sections 190/200. Divine Retreat Centre reserves exceptional writ intervention for demonstrated mala fide investigative abuse and clear noncompliance with Chapter XII; Shweta Bhadauria recognises the Whirlpool exceptions.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition with liberty to the petitioners, if they so desired, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS for redress of their grievance.

Subhadra Jaiswal and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 25390/2024, 05/09/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (922) Prev Next

Headnote :- Cross-FIR investigation and police discretion — No charge sheet or closure report had been filed in the petitioner's assault/trespass FIR, Crime No. 229/2021, although the police had filed a charge sheet in the opposite party's cross-FIR, Crime No. 230/2021. He sought an order under Article 226 compelling a charge sheet in his case. D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, rejects judicial directions prescribing investigative steps or requiring arrest, seizure and a charge sheet; the police may conclude that the evidence makes out a case or that no case is made out. The quoted decision also emphasises notice to persons affected by drastic orders and caution in exercising inherent power. The Bench declined to order the predetermined result sought.

Timely completion — Section 173(1) CrPC requires investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer cannot leave the petitioner's FIR pending indefinitely and must determine the appropriate final report, whether a charge sheet or closure report, as early as possible. The Court disposed of the writ by directing completion and the necessary steps in accordance with law. It left the choice of report to the investigator and permitted the petitioner to take a grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Bhind.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Subhash Chandra Nagayach filed Writ Petition No. 23881/2022 under Article 226, seeking a direction to submit a charge sheet immediately. His report led Police Station Lahar, District Bhind, to register Crime No. 229/2021 under Sections 323, 294, 452, 506 and 34 IPC. The opposite party lodged Crime No. 230/2021 against him on the next day, 21 May 2021, under Sections 323, 294, 506, 34 and 325 IPC. The police had filed a charge sheet in Crime No. 230/2021, but had filed neither a closure report nor a charge sheet in Crime No. 229/2021. The petitioner therefore asked the High Court to compel the filing of a charge sheet in the case registered on his report.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively. It disapproved unreasoned High Court directions to record witness statements, arrest, seize and file a charge sheet, because the police have the statutory duty and discretion to investigate and may find either a prosecutable case or none. Its incorporated quotation from M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explains that arrest under Section 41 CrPC is discretionary and affects liberty and reputation; it does not follow mechanically from an FIR. The decision also invokes Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on a hearing for those exposed to drastic directions for investigation. D. Venkatasubramaniam's analysis of Section 482 confines inherent power to giving effect to orders under the Code, preventing abuse of process and securing the ends of justice. That case concerned an unreasoned order made without hearing the affected parties. The present Bench applied the principle against interference to the Article 226 request and did not issue the requested direction to file a charge sheet. The bank-account safeguarding and six-month directions in the quotation formed part of the order reversed in D. Venkatasubramaniam; they were not directions in the present case.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 provided jurisdiction for the present writ petition. Section 173(1) CrPC expressly requires every investigation under Chapter XII to be completed without unnecessary delay; the final report may be a charge sheet or closure report according to the evidence. Sections 323, 294, 452, 506, 34 and 325 IPC identify the allegations in the two cross-FIRs. The discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC and the inherent power under Section 482 CrPC arise in the quoted Supreme Court reasoning.

4. Issues : Did the filing of a charge sheet in the cross case, while the petitioner's FIR remained pending, justify an order compelling the police to submit a charge sheet and arrest the accused in his FIR? Could the statutory duty to complete the investigation promptly be enforced without controlling its conclusion?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Supreme Court authority leaves the method of investigation and the evidence-based outcome to the police; the High Court should therefore not direct arrest or the filing of a charge sheet. The charge sheet in the cross case did not predetermine the result in the petitioner's case. Section 173(1), however, does not permit unnecessary investigative delay: the officer must complete the inquiry, decide whether an offence is made out and submit the legally appropriate final report, either a closure report or charge sheet. The Court directed prompt completion and the necessary lawful action while preserving that discretion.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the writ by directing the investigating officer to conclude the investigation in Crime No. 229/2021 as early as possible and take the steps required by law. The petitioner could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Bhind, with any further grievance, to be considered in accordance with law. The specific request to compel a charge sheet was not granted.

Subhash Chandra Nagayach v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., W.P. no. 23881/2022, 03/11/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (923) Prev Next

Headnote :- Unexplained injuries and genesis — Subhash and three others were medically examined and arrested at hospital after the same fight over land in 1992. Subhash had multiple wounds to his head and elsewhere, with a suspected forearm fracture. Yet many prosecution witnesses denied or professed ignorance of injuries to the accused, although they themselves were being tried in the cross case. State of M.P. v. Gopi, 1993 Supp (1) SCC 514; Dashrath Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 408; Mono Dutt v. State of U.P., (2012) 4 SCC 79; Balwan Singh v. State of Haryana, (2005) 11 SCC 245; Ravishwar Manjhi v. State of Jharkhand, (2008) 16 SCC 561; and Takhaji Hiraji v. Thakore Kubersing Chamansing, (2001) 6 SCC 145, were considered. Failure to explain the injuries does not automatically require acquittal. Here it was material because the serious injuries arose in the same occurrence, the accounts were partisan and a competing narrative was probable.

Possession and private defence — Rame Gowda v. M. Varadappa Naidu, (2004) 1 SCC 769, requires a true owner to use lawful means to recover property from someone in settled possession, while distinguishing a fleeting trespass. Subramani v. State of T.N., (2002) 7 SCC 210, and Munshi Ram v. Delhi Administration, (1968) 2 SCR 455, allow a defence of property and person to be assessed on a probability standard from the record, even without an express plea. Witnesses acknowledged Subhash's cultivation, the asserted Collector's restoration order was not produced, and the Section 145 and encroachment judgments relied on by the defence supported his possession. The complainants might have attempted forcible removal. The Bench found private defence available, but also doubted whether Subhash had fired.

Result — Medical evidence showed pellets in three complainants, but the 12-bore gun was recovered at the scene rather than from Subhash, and the prosecution did not give a dependable account of how the fight between the parties began. The surviving appellants' convictions on their respective rioting, trespass, hurt, Section 3(1)(iv)/(v) SC/ST Act and Section 27 Arms Act counts were set aside. The earlier, unchallenged Section 307/149 acquittals were not reopened, and Onkar's appeal had abated. The bonds were discharged.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This appeal under Section 374 CrPC challenged the Special Judge (SC/ST Prevention of Atrocities), Guna's conviction dated 20 February 2004 in ST No. 78/1993. On 21 November 1992 at Chak Parsi Kheda, Ram Prasad, Madan and Prem, who belonged to the complainant party and claimed Government allotments, encountered Subhash Sharma and his companions cultivating the disputed fields. Witnesses said that Subhash fired a 12-bore gun several times, wounding all three, and that the others carried lathis, a farsa or pistols. Medical examination showed pellet-like wounds with black edges, and X-rays showed radio-opaque objects in the three injured persons. The trial court convicted Subhash under Sections 147, 447 and 148 and three counts under Section 324 IPC, Section 27 Arms Act and Sections 3(1)(iv)/(v) SC/ST Act. Ramkishan son of Puran was convicted under Sections 147/447 and those SC/ST provisions; Soma, Gajanand and the other Ramkishan were convicted under Sections 147/447. The trial acquittals on attempted-murder and several other counts were not appealed. Onkar died during the appeal, which abated as to him; Kajod had died before the trial ended, and Amra remained absconding. The defence maintained that Subhash was in settled cultivating possession, that the complainants sought to dispossess him forcibly, that the accused suffered grave injuries in the same occurrence, and that a right of defence arose. The prosecution claimed allotment and restoration of possession, but did not produce the asserted Collector's restoration order. Revenue records showed holdings of various tribal persons as well as Subhash's family, and the Patwari's 1992 demarcation placed Subhash in possession of certain allotted parcels. The defence exhibited a decision under Section 145 CrPC and several acquittals in encroachment cases. Several prosecution witnesses acknowledged that they themselves were facing trial in the cross case. Dr H.D. Sharma recorded numerous wounds to Subhash's head and elsewhere, and injuries to Soma, Gajanand and Kajod; the police admitted four accused to hospital and arrested them there. The 12-bore gun was seized from the scene, rather than from Subhash personally.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of M.P. v. Gopi, 1993 Supp (1) SCC 514, was quoted on the effect on eyewitness credibility of denying a grievous injury suffered by an accused in the same occurrence. Dashrath Singh v. State of U.P., (2004) 7 SCC 408, stated a contextual rule rather than a mechanical one, incorporating Bhaba Nanda Sarma and Takhaji Hiraji: the seriousness and timing of injuries, the quality of witnesses, a competing defence account and the origin of the fight all matter, and reliable prosecution evidence may still be accepted. Mono Dutt v. State of U.P., (2012) 4 SCC 79, similarly recognises exceptions to the normal expectation that same-occurrence injuries will be explained, first requiring consideration of their seriousness and timing. Balwan Singh v. State of Haryana, (2005) 11 SCC 245, makes the consequence depend on the facts and nature of the injuries. Ravishwar Manjhi v. State of Jharkhand, (2008) 16 SCC 561, considered grievous injuries requiring an explanation, distinguishing the minor injuries in its reference to Ayodhya Ram. Takhaji Hiraji v. Thakore Kubersing Chamansing, (2001) 6 SCC 145, expressly rejects an invariant rule and relates significance to serious injuries caused in the same episode and partisan or competing accounts. Rame Gowda v. M. Varadappa Naidu, (2004) 1 SCC 769, was quoted extensively on protecting settled possession even against a person with better title. It distinguishes inchoate or casual trespass and permits proportionate resistance to an intrusion. Subramani v. State of T.N., (2002) 7 SCC 210, addresses defence of person and property, the less onerous burden under Section 105 Evidence Act and concern about concealment of the incident's origin. Its quotation from Munshi Ram stresses that a person facing an immediate forcible intrusion need not first seek the authorities' help. Munshi Ram v. Delhi Administration, (1968) 2 SCR 455, was separately quoted for the principle that private defence may arise from cross-examination and defence evidence even without an express plea, and may be established on a preponderance of probabilities. The Bench ultimately doubted whether Subhash fired.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided jurisdiction over the conviction appeal; proceedings under Section 145 CrPC formed part of the defence account of possession. Sections 147, 148, 149, 447, 307 and 324 IPC concerned the unlawful-assembly, trespass, attempt and hurt charges, but the unappealed Section 307 acquittals were outside this appeal. Sections 3(1)(iv) and 3(1)(v) SC/ST Act were the land-related atrocity counts. Sections 25/27 Arms Act appeared in the charge-sheet, and Section 27 was included in Subhash's conviction. Section 105 Evidence Act, discussed through Subramani, requires the accused to establish a general-exception defence on probability; it does not shift the prosecution's burden to prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

4. Issues : Did the serious injuries suffered by Subhash and his companions in the same occurrence, and denied by prosecution eyewitnesses, undermine the account of how the incident began and the reliability of the prosecution case? Who was in effective possession of the parcels, and could an allotted holder forcibly remove someone in settled possession without lawful process? Could private defence of person and property arise without a formally pleaded exception, and what burden applied? Did the evidence nevertheless prove Subhash's use of the gun and the distinct surviving IPC, SC/ST and Arms Act convictions beyond reasonable doubt?

5. Ratio / Findings : Hospital and medical records established injuries to the accused, including multiple head wounds and a possible fracture for Subhash. Interested complainant witnesses denied or professed ignorance of those injuries although they faced trial for causing them. The cited Supreme Court decisions require a contextual assessment rather than automatic acquittal. Here the serious injuries in the same transaction, together with a credible dispute over who began forcible dispossession, made the failure to explain them indicative of concealment of the fight's genesis. Some witnesses acknowledged that Subhash was still cultivating the land; none produced the Collector's order said to have restored possession to the complainants. The Patwari's demarcation and earlier Section 145 and encroachment decisions supported the probability of settled possession. Rame Gowda prohibits even a rightful owner from forcibly evicting someone in settled possession as an encroacher, while distinguishing a new, casual intrusion. Under Subramani and Munshi Ram, defence of person and property can arise from cross-examination and documents without a specific plea, on a probability standard. The Court considered the complainant party's attempted forcible exclusion probable and found private defence available. Together with recovery of the gun from the scene rather than from Subhash, the admission of police enmity and the unreliable account of the incident's origin, these circumstances cast doubt even on the allegation that Subhash fired. The prosecution failed to prove the surviving charges beyond reasonable doubt. The merits of the unchallenged attempted-murder acquittals were not in issue.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal for the surviving appellants. It set aside all their impugned convictions and sentences on their respective counts under Sections 147/148/447/324 IPC, Section 3(1)(iv)/(v) SC/ST Act and Section 27 Arms Act, and acquitted them. The trial judgment of 20 February 2004 was set aside to that extent, and the bail and surety bonds were discharged. Onkar's appeal had already abated on his death, and the other trial acquittals had not been challenged.

Subhash and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 213/2004, 01/05/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (924) Prev Next

Headnote :- Revision merger — The applicant had already challenged the CJM's order of 18 April 2017 taking cognizance under Sections 406/420 IPC in a Sessions revision, which was dismissed on merits on 26 August 2017. His Section 482 petition identified the CJM order but did not challenge the revisional order. The High Court held that the earlier order had merged into the later one; merely stating that the challenge concerned the entire proceeding did not cure that omission.

Double jeopardy — A prior conviction under Section 138 Negotiable Instruments Act in respect of the same dishonoured cheque did not, by itself, bar a private complaint under Sections 406/420 IPC. Sangeetaben Mahendrabhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2012) 7 SCC 621, distinguishes identical offence ingredients from overlapping transaction facts under Article 20(2), Section 300 CrPC, Section 26 General Clauses Act and Section 71 IPC. The statutory presumption of liability, initiation by complaint and absence of a requirement to prove fraudulent intent when the cheque was issued distinguish Section 138 from the IPC offences. Kailash Chandra Jain v. Jai Kumar Jain followed that distinction in a case involving an earlier NI Act acquittal. The High Court affirmed both orders and dismissed the application for inherent-power relief.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Subhodh Mishra filed M.Cr.C. No. 24507/2018 under Section 482 CrPC to quash the order of 18 April 2017 by which the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Ratlam, took cognizance in Criminal Case No. 1324/2017 under Sections 406 and 420 IPC. He had earlier filed Criminal Revision No. 52/2017, which the Sessions Judge, Ratlam, dismissed on merits on 26 August 2017. He nevertheless did not expressly challenge the revisional order in the present application, arguing that his challenge to the entire criminal proceeding made a separate challenge unnecessary. On the substantive ground, he submitted that proceedings under Section 138 Negotiable Instruments Act concerning the same cheque had resulted in his conviction by the JMFC on 15 March 2018 in Criminal Case No. 1094/2012. He argued that prosecution on similar allegations was therefore barred by Section 300 CrPC and Article 20(2). The order decides the procedural challenge and double-jeopardy objection at cognizance, rather than the truth of the accusations of cheating or criminal breach of trust.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sangeetaben Mahendrabhai Patel v. State of Gujarat, (2012) 7 SCC 621, was quoted for the test of identical ingredients under Article 20(2), Section 300 CrPC, Section 26 General Clauses Act and Section 71 IPC. It explains that prosecution under Section 138 NI Act does not require proof of dishonest intention when the cheque is issued, whereas such intention may be relevant to the IPC offences. The NI Act provides for a presumption of antecedent liability, the possibility of adjusting a fine and commencement only by complaint, unlike IPC prosecution. Overlapping transaction facts do not make the offences identical. In Sangeetaben, the earlier NI Act proceeding was sub judice, whereas the present applicant asserted an actual conviction; the distinction between offence ingredients was nevertheless applied. Kailash Chandra Jain v. Jai Kumar Jain, M.Cr.C. No. 1415/2015 (MP High Court, 20 February 2017), was quoted as a subsequent application of that principle, holding that acquittal under Section 138 did not bar prosecution under Section 420.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant sought quashing through the inherent power under Section 482 CrPC. Section 300 CrPC bars retrial for the same offence after conviction or acquittal by a competent court, including its stated scope for an alternative charge on the same facts. Article 20(2) provides constitutional protection against double punishment. Section 26 General Clauses Act and Section 71 IPC were quoted through Sangeetaben to distinguish overlapping enactments and multiple punishment. Section 138 NI Act concerns dishonour of a cheque issued for an enforceable liability; Sections 406 and 420 IPC concern criminal breach of trust and cheating, with different ingredients. The IPC matter was brought by a private complaint under Section 200 CrPC.

4. Issues : Could a Section 482 challenge to the CJM's cognizance order succeed without a challenge to the Sessions Judge's subsequent revisional order on merits? Did a Section 138 conviction concerning the same cheque make the later private complaint under Sections 406/420 an impermissible second prosecution for the same offence?

5. Ratio / Findings : Once the revision against cognizance was dismissed on merits, the CJM order merged into the revisional decision, which had not been challenged. The applicant's description of his application as a broad challenge to the proceedings was insufficient. Independently, double jeopardy required identical legal ingredients, rather than merely the same cheque or overlapping allegations. The prior Section 138 conviction concerned statutory cheque dishonour, while the IPC case involved distinct elements, including dishonest or fraudulent intention relevant to cheating. The evidentiary requirements and manner of commencing proceedings under the NI Act also differ. Applying Sangeetaben, the Court held that the second complaint was not barred.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court affirmed the CJM order of 18 April 2017 and the Sessions revisional order of 26 August 2017, and dismissed the Section 482 application. The subsequent IPC complaint could proceed.

Subhodh Mishra v. Vaheed Ali, M.Cr.C. no. 24507/2018, 01/08/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (925) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 and family-specific allegations — After the husband, Suchit, died, his application abated. The wife's FIR alleged that he, the younger brother-in-law (applicant 2) and the mother-in-law (applicant 3) beat and expelled her on 3 April 2017 following dowry-linked instigation. Taking those specific allegations at face value, the Court declined to determine their truth or treat the defence's 2015 compromise as conclusive, and allowed the prosecution to continue against applicants 2–3. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337; Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226; CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686; State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal 709/2021; and Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260 guided the review of the allegations at face value without a mini-trial. The applicants invoked Kahkashan Kausar against omnibus implication, but that authority did not displace the specific allegations of their direct conduct.

Continuing cruelty — The wife alleged that she was expelled to her parents' home and later faced a demand for ₹1 lakh and an assault there. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, recognises the continuing mental trauma caused by dowry-linked expulsion; Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla was cited to similar effect. Her residence at her parental home did not, by itself, defeat a complaint under Section 498-A. Meera v. State, (2022) 3 SCC 93, was cited on cruelty by a mother-in-law, but the decision to continue the present prosecution against her rested on her alleged participation.

Distant relative — Against the uncle-in-law, Ramu (applicant 4), the FIR alleged only vague instigation, without a personal assault or specified act. Satish Mehra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2012) 13 SCC 614; Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207; Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693; and Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan supported intervention against a sham prosecution of a distant relative, even after trial had begun. Crime No. 337/2017 and RCT No. 906/2017 were quashed as to him alone.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suchit Chourasiya and three relatives sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 337/2017, Police Station Kotwali, Chhindwara, registered under Sections 498-A, 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 Dowry Prohibition Act, and of RCT No. 906/2017 before the JMFC. Suchit, respondent 2's husband, died on 27 April 2023. A death certificate was filed, his death was not disputed, his name was deleted and his application was dismissed as abated. The account gives 28 May 2013 as the marriage date. The wife alleged dowry-linked instigation by the younger brother-in-law (applicant 2), mother-in-law (applicant 3) and distantly related uncle-in-law (applicant 4). She also alleged that her husband drank, used sleeping pills and mortgaged her jewellery; that she was left at her parents' home around the birth of their son in 2014; and that she returned to the matrimonial home under a settlement dated 3 September 2015. She alleged that her husband and applicants 2–3 beat and expelled her on 3 April 2017, and that her husband demanded ₹1 lakh and beat her at her parental home on 28 May 2017. She said that she continued to reside there. The applicants denied the allegations, relied on the settlement and claimed that the relatives had been implicated generally. The respondents relied on specific allegations and the ongoing trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicants cited Kahkashan Kausar v. State of Bihar, (2022) 6 SCC 599, on omnibus accusations against relatives; the Bench instead distinguished the roles actually alleged. The general limits on Section 482 review were supported by quotations from XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, on avoiding a roving inquiry or treating a disputed settlement as conclusive; State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, on premature assessment during investigation; Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, on the caution expressed in Bhajan Lal; and Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, on the limited exception permitting consideration of public or undisputed defence documents. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, distinguished examination of the ingredients at face value from an evidentiary trial. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, concerned the absence of a prima facie offence, while CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, reserved disputed facts for trial. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, prohibited meticulous weighing of evidence and stated that an FIR need not be an encyclopedia. Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha were also listed as similar authorities without separately stated source ratios. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted on continuing mental cruelty after expulsion; Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla, Criminal Revision No. 2376/2020 (MP High Court, 22 June 2021), applied that reasoning. Meera v. State, (2022) 3 SCC 93, was cited on abuse by a mother-in-law. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, quoted Amit Kapoor's extensive framework for prima facie quashing, cautioned against omnibus allegations against an entire family, and distinguished Neelu Chopra, Manoj Mahavir Prasad Khaitan and Geeta Mehrotra. Satish Mehra v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2012) 13 SCC 614, was quoted on rare intervention even after charge where the material, if accepted, discloses no offence; R.P. Kapur and L. Muniswamy were incorporated in that quotation. Ravikant Dubey v. State of M.P. was cited on the maintainability of a Section 482 application even during an advanced trial. The applicants also invoked Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P., (2012) 10 SCC 741, and Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand, (2010) 7 SCC 667, concerning relatives. Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, and Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan were quoted on the need for specific material against distant relatives and against delayed, vague allegations against the entire family.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent power. The Court assessed the allegations against each person at face value, rather than trying the evidence or deciding the effect of the 2015 settlement. Section 498-A IPC concerns cruelty to a wife by her husband or his relatives, including the alleged mental trauma of compelled residence at her parental home following dowry-linked expulsion. Sections 506 and 34 IPC and Sections 3/4 Dowry Prohibition Act were included in the FIR and proceedings. The husband's death caused his application to abate.

4. Issues : Did the specific prima facie cruelty allegations against the younger brother-in-law and mother-in-law survive Section 482 review despite the settlement, denial and timing objections? Did the general allegation of instigation against the distant uncle-in-law disclose a triable case? What effect did the husband's death have on his pending application?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench first recorded that Suchit's application had abated. It prohibited a mini-trial or reliance on a contested defence. Public or undisputed defence records may be examined in an appropriate case, but the 2015 reconciliation did not answer the allegations of acts in 2017. The FIR specifically alleged that applicants 2–3 joined in the beating and expulsion and instigated dowry pressure; those allegations warranted trial. Applying the cited Rupali Devi principle, the trauma of compelled residence with parents following dowry-linked expulsion can continue after the physical expulsion. The assertion that the wife lived at her parental home therefore did not defeat Section 498-A. The Court discussed the mother-in-law's position as a woman by reference to Meera, but the decision to proceed against her rested on her specifically alleged conduct. Ramu, a distant uncle-in-law, was not assigned any personal assault or particularised conduct beyond generic instigation. Even accepting the allegations in their entirety, continuing the prosecution against him would be an abuse of process. The Court reached different outcomes according to the act attributed to each person, rather than applying a blanket rule to all in-laws.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed Suchit's Section 482 application as abated after his death and deletion of his name. It denied quashing to applicants 2 and 3, against whom the FIR and RCT continued. The application was allowed only for applicant 4, Ramu Chourasiya: Crime No. 337/2017 and the further proceedings in RCT No. 906/2017 were quashed as to him.

Suchit Chourasiya and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 45072/2018, 19/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (926) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 498-A IPC — continuing mental cruelty - Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted and applied for the principle that emotional distress caused by physical or verbal cruelty and forced departure from the matrimonial home can persist at the parental home even without new physical acts there. The FIR alleged that the husband and parents-in-law demanded Rs. 40 lakh, refused respondent no. 2 re-entry on 13 December 2021, and compelled her to return to her parents in Bhopal. At the Section 482 threshold, the Court treated the alleged dowry-linked exclusion and resulting mental trauma as continuing cruelty under Section 498-A, giving rise to a fresh cause of action from day to day.

Territorial investigation — parental-home nexus - The applicants' sole ground for quashing was that the alleged acts had occurred in Delhi and Mahila Thana, Bhopal, could neither investigate nor file a charge sheet. Counsel invoked Section 178 Cr.P.C. and Y. Abraham Ajith and others v. Inspector of Police, Chennai and another. Applying Rupali Devi to the alleged continuing psychological effect of the dowry-linked expulsion at the parental home in Bhopal, the Court found that part of the cause of action arose there. The police station had jurisdiction to investigate, and its charge sheet was not without jurisdiction on this ground.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants were Sudesh Gupta, described as respondent no. 2's mother-in-law; her husband, the father-in-law; and their son, respondent no. 2's husband. They applied under Section 482 Cr.P.C. in M.Cr.C. No. 46173/2022. They sought quashing of Crime No. 2/2022 at Police Station Mahila Thana, Bhopal, registered under Sections 498-A and 34 IPC, on the sole ground pressed: lack of territorial jurisdiction. The police had already filed a charge sheet, and the applicants challenged its territorial validity as well as that of the FIR.

The FIR narrative, as recounted by the Court, stated that respondent no. 2 married on 7 December 2014 at Bhopal and faced physical and mental harassment for dowry. It alleged a current demand of Rs. 40 lakh and prior transfers of Rs. 67 lakh to the husband and some family accounts. She alleged that her husband's treatment had caused her to lose her employment and suffer a loss of Rs. 10 lakh. The FIR attributed a demand of Rs. 15 lakh to the husband from March 2021 and a demand of Rs. 25 lakh to the in-laws, and stated that her marriage articles remained in the matrimonial home. It described continuous harassment from 7 August 2021. On 13 December 2021, when she sought to enter the matrimonial home, the parents-in-law allegedly insisted that she first arrange Rs. 40 lakh. She said she was refused entry, returned to her parents in Bhopal, and made two later telephone calls to her husband that went unanswered.

The applicants submitted that, even if the FIR allegations were accepted at their highest, all the acts occurred in Delhi. They therefore argued that Section 178 Cr.P.C. could not support investigation in Bhopal and that the charge sheet filed there was without jurisdiction. They cited two Supreme Court decisions. Counsel for the respondents opposed the application. The Court considered whether the alleged dowry-linked exclusion, compelling the wife to live at her parental home, could itself constitute continuing cruelty there. It resolved that territorial question and dismissed the application on 18 March 2024.

2. Precedents — Considered : Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., 2019:INSC:479 : (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted and applied. Its explanation of Section 498-A embraces both physical and mental cruelty. Abuse, humiliation or violence that drives a wife from the matrimonial home may cause emotional distress and fear of returning that persist at the parental home, even without further overt physical acts at the parental home. The present Court applied that continuing psychological effect to the alleged refusal of re-entry over dowry and the wife's resulting stay in Bhopal. It concluded that the FIR disclosed continuing mental cruelty in Bhopal for the purpose of territorial investigation.

Y. Abraham Ajith and others v. Inspector of Police, Chennai and another, Appeal (Criminal) No. 904/2004, decided 17 August 2004, and Manish Ratan and others v. State of M.P. and another, 2007 (1) JLJ 198, were cited by the applicants in support of their argument under Section 178 Cr.P.C. that the relevant acts occurred only in Delhi. Applying Rupali Devi to the alleged facts, the present Court rejected the contention that there was no connection with Bhopal.

3. Statutes considered : The applicants invoked the Court's inherent powers under Section 482 Cr.P.C. to quash the FIR and challenge the territorial validity of the filed charge sheet. They relied on Section 178 Cr.P.C. in their territorial argument; the Court resolved the dispute by finding that part of the continuing cause of action arose at the parental home. Section 498-A IPC governed the cruelty offence. Applying Rupali Devi, the Court recognised continuing mental trauma from dowry-linked expulsion even without renewed physical violence in Bhopal. The inquiry concerned the territorial competence of the police on the pleaded allegations, rather than a verdict on the monetary allegations.

4. Issues : (i) Even assuming that the alleged initial matrimonial acts occurred in Delhi, does a wife allegedly excluded for an unmet dowry demand experience continuing mental cruelty under Section 498-A at the parental home in Bhopal where she is compelled to stay? (ii) If part of that offence arises in Bhopal, does Mahila Thana have territorial competence to investigate Crime No. 2/2022 and file the charge sheet, thereby defeating the sole ground pressed for quashing under Section 482?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court identified the decisive issue as whether forced removal or exclusion from the matrimonial home over dowry could itself amount to cruelty that persisted at the parental home. It quoted Rupali Devi's explanation that mental distress can persist after physical abuse or abusive exchanges in the matrimonial home have ended. The absence of a new physical assault where the wife takes shelter does not necessarily end the psychological effects of the conduct that compelled her departure and left her afraid or unable to return.

Taking at face value the FIR's specific allegation that re-entry was refused on 13 December over a demand of Rs. 40 lakh, the Court held that the resulting compelled residence with her parents in Bhopal involved continuing mental cruelty under Section 498-A. It described a fresh cause of action arising each day while the dowry-linked exclusion persisted. Because part of the alleged cause of action arose within the territorial jurisdiction of Mahila Thana, Bhopal, the station could investigate, and its already filed charge sheet was not territorially invalid.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. Crime No. 2/2022 and the filed charge sheet were not quashed for alleged lack of territorial jurisdiction in Bhopal.

Sudesh Gupta and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 46173/2022, 18/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (927) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 — pending FIR — arrest and charge-sheet directions - The petitioners' complaint led to an FIR under Sections 420 and 406 IPC, but they sought arrests, additions of accused and offences, and completion of the investigation. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the Court declined to direct arrest, a predetermined charge sheet or the manner of investigation. That Supreme Court ruling explains that an investigation may end in a charge sheet or a no-case report. The passage it quotes from M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, treats arrest under Section 41 as a matter of police discretion that affects liberty and must be exercised cautiously. The incorporated passage from Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, explains why drastic orders affecting persons require a hearing.

Section 173(1) Cr.P.C. — unnecessary delay — outcome-neutral report - The investigator has a statutory duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay and decide, on the material collected, whether a case is made out. The Court directed the investigator to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the necessary lawful steps, permitting a closure report or charge sheet according to the evidence. The petitioners could present a grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Indore, for consideration in accordance with law.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sudheer Verma and others filed Writ Petition No. 14048 of 2024 under Article 226 before the Indore Bench. Their complaint had resulted in a police FIR alleging cheating and criminal breach of trust under Sections 420 and 406 IPC. They said the police had neither arrested the accused persons nor completed the investigation. The prayer embedded in paragraph 1 sought action on the representation and Manpur police Crime No. 303/2023; early arrests; inclusion of a specifically named proposed accused and additional IPC provisions; completion of the inquiry within a time limit and presentation of a challan; alternative action if arrest did not occur; and other appropriate relief.

The petitioners' counsel pressed the lack of arrests and delay in completing the investigation into the registered FIR. The Court heard the matter and considered both the request to direct arrest or filing of a charge sheet and the independent statutory duty to complete the investigation. It disposed of the writ on 10 September 2024 with a limited direction to conclude the investigation and liberty to approach the Superintendent of Police.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam and others v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and another, 2009:INSC:1132 : (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted at length and applied. In that case, the Supreme Court set aside a High Court order that, without reasons and without hearing the persons affected, described witness statements, arrest, seizure and filing of a charge sheet as obligatory police steps. The decision distinguishes the police duty to investigate from the courts' role: courts ordinarily may not prescribe the angle or method of investigation, and a completed investigation may support either a charge sheet or a conclusion that no case is made out. The quoted decision concerned the exercise of Section 482 jurisdiction, while the present matter was an Article 226 petition. The present Court applied the principle of police autonomy in investigation to reject the requested directions for arrest and a charge sheet.

The D. Venkatasubramaniam quotation incorporated M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, 2002:INSC:575 : (2003) 2 SCC 649, for the narrower proposition under Section 41 Cr.P.C.: police may arrest without a warrant in specified situations, but the power is discretionary, does not operate mechanically after every cognizable FIR, and must be exercised cautiously because it affects personal liberty, reputation and status. The quotation also incorporated Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, 2008:INSC:341 : (2008) 3 SCC 542, on the need for a reasonable hearing before a judicial order directs an investigation with consequences for persons whose reputation or interests may be affected. The material application in the present case was the refusal to supervise police discretion; the Court separately applied the requirement of prompt completion under Section 173(1).

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the jurisdiction for the present writ petition. Section 41 Cr.P.C. featured in the quoted passage from M.C. Abraham. Section 173(1) Cr.P.C., expressly quoted and applied by the Judge, requires every Chapter XII investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. The Court distinguished a lawful final report, whether a closure report or charge sheet, from an order predetermining its content.

4. Issues : (i) Did registration of an FIR for cheating and criminal breach of trust, together with the petitioners' dissatisfaction with police inaction, authorise an Article 226 order to arrest accused persons, include further persons or offences, file a charge sheet, or otherwise prescribe investigative steps? (ii) Could the police nevertheless leave the case pending indefinitely, or did Section 173(1) require an evidence-based final decision and report without unnecessary delay? (iii) Should the petitioners retain an administrative avenue for a later grievance?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court refused the direction to arrest at the outset. The detailed Supreme Court reasoning in D. Venkatasubramaniam made clear that even a cognizable FIR does not impose an automatic duty to arrest, seize or file a charge sheet, and a court may not substitute its instructions for the investigating officer's evidentiary judgment. The incorporated M.C. Abraham passage explained the qualification on Section 41 discretion arising from its effect on personal liberty. The incorporated Divine Retreat Centre passage illustrated why judicial directions against affected persons can have drastic effects without notice. Drawing on that reasoning, the High Court reached the narrower conclusion required in this case: directing arrest or a charge sheet in the pending investigation would amount to supervising it.

The Court then quoted Section 173(1), which imposes a positive duty to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay. The restriction on judicial directions about investigative steps therefore did not permit indefinite pendency. The investigator had to decide whether an offence was made out and submit the appropriate final report, either a closure report or charge sheet, as early as possible. The direction required prompt completion and all necessary lawful steps without prescribing the outcome. It set no calendar deadline, directed no particular arrest and compelled no prosecutorial conclusion. The petitioners were given liberty to take any later grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Indore, who would consider it in accordance with law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the writ. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law. In case of grievance, the petitioners could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Indore, who would consider the application in accordance with law.

Sudheer Verma and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, W.P. no. 14048/2024, 10/09/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (928) Prev Next

Headnote :- Regular bail — pre-trial custody — trial unable to progress - On the prosecution's own account, a charge-sheet had been filed in the CBI Prevention of Corruption Act case, but sanction to prosecute the public servants had not been received, cognizance had not been taken and the trial could not proceed for the time being. Applying the presumption of innocence, the Court released the applicant, a private person, under Section 439 Cr.P.C. rather than continue her custody while the trial was presently unable to progress.

Regular bail — charge-sheet timing — default bail distinction - The investigating officer argued that, because the bail application preceded the charge-sheet, the applicant could not rely on the subsequent lack of trial progress. The Court rejected that contention and assessed the current custody position on regular bail. It expressly stated that it was not deciding default bail.

Bail order — complainant intimation - In the light of Aparna Bhat and others v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, the Court directed that the complainant be informed of the grant of bail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suma Bhaskaran, whom the prosecution described as a private person, was arrested on 19 May 2024 in CBI AC-I, New Delhi, Crime No. RC2162024A0004/2024. The registered offences were Sections 7, 7-A, 8, 9, 10 and 12 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. She applied for regular bail under Section 439 Cr.P.C. before the charge-sheet was filed. By the hearing, the charge-sheet had been submitted, but her counsel said that no accused had been supplied a copy.

Investigating Officer Shri Som stated that sanction to prosecute the public servants had not yet been received. On the prosecution's stated position, the court could not take cognizance against those public servants and, until then, could not proceed against a private person such as the applicant. He said that copies of the charge-sheet would be supplied only after sanction and cognizance. During dictation of the order, the officer argued that the applicant could not rely on this subsequent circumstance because she had applied before the charge-sheet was filed. The Court rejected that objection, considered the present inability of the trial to progress and granted conditional regular bail on 23 July 2024.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court referred to Aparna Bhat and others v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal No. 329/2021, decided 18 March 2021, in directing that the complainant be informed of the grant of bail.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 Cr.P.C. governed the regular bail application. The registered allegations were under Sections 7, 7-A, 8, 9, 10 and 12 of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988. The investigating officer identified the absence of sanction to prosecute public servants and the absence of cognizance as obstacles to proceeding. The Court recorded that position as the reason the trial could not presently progress. It expressly distinguished regular bail from default bail. The presumption of innocence informed the custody decision.

4. Issues : (i) Was continued detention of the applicant justified on a Section 439 regular bail request when, on the prosecution's admitted position, sanction and cognizance remained pending and trial progress was presently blocked? (ii) Did the application's filing before the later charge-sheet prevent consideration of the current trial position, when no entitlement to default bail was being decided? (iii) What release and complainant-notification terms should be imposed?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered whether the applicant could remain in custody when the trial was not progressing. It proceeded on the prosecution's own account that legal hurdles presently prevented the proceedings from moving forward. In that situation, and because guilt had not been established, the applicant could not be left in jail while the trial was unable to proceed. The conclusion was tied to the prosecution's admitted present impasse and the assessment under Section 439.

The Court rejected the officer's further contention about the charge-sheet's filing date because it was not deciding default bail. On regular bail, it could assess the current absence of trial progress at the hearing even though the application preceded the charge-sheet. It granted bail on a Rs. 1 lakh personal bond with one surety of the same amount and required appearance on the dates fixed by the trial or committal court. The order would remain effective until the end of trial, but would lapse upon a bail jump, leaving the trial court free to take the applicant into custody. Citing Aparna Bhat, the Court directed intimation of the bail grant to the complainant.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC. Suma Bhaskaran v. Union of India, M.Cr.C. no. 27895/2024, 23/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (929) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal-side writ — offence classification — investigation control - A complainant could not obtain an Article 226 direction requiring the police to add Section 452 IPC to the FIR merely because it had been omitted. The investigating agency remained free to add an offence if the evidence prima facie supported it. A judicial direction prescribing the section would amount to supervision of the investigation.

Criminal-side writ — arrest — hearing of affected persons - The petitioner had not impleaded the alleged accused whose arrest she sought. A coercive judicial direction could not be issued without making them parties. The Court applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, which rejects judicial prescription of arrest and investigative outcomes. Its quoted reasoning referred to M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on discretionary arrest under Section 41 Cr.P.C., and Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on hearing persons likely to be affected by drastic orders. The Court refused the requested direction to arrest.

Investigation — Section 173(1) Cr.P.C. — prompt lawful conclusion - Although the Court refused to direct addition of an offence or arrest, it applied the duty to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. The officer was directed to conclude the investigation in Crime No. 46/2021 as early as possible and take the steps required by law, deciding on the material whether to file a closure report or charge-sheet. The petitioner could refer any further grievance to the Superintendent of Police.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suman Koli filed W.P. No. 11376/2021 under Article 226 after her report led Police Station Gwalior, District Gwalior, to register

Crime No. 46/2021. She complained that Section 452 IPC had not been added and that the alleged accused had not been arrested. The alleged accused were not joined as respondents.

No one appeared for the petitioner when the matter was called. Sanjay Kumar Sharma appeared for the State. The Court considered the writ contentions, refused to prescribe the offence or direct arrest, and quoted the Supreme Court on judicial control of investigation and hearing affected persons. It then applied Section 173(1) Cr.P.C. to require prompt completion and the steps required by law, and disposed of the petition on 14 December 2021.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively and applied. The Supreme Court had set aside a High Court order requiring statements, arrest, seizure and a charge-sheet. The order had been issued without adequate reasons or notice to the affected persons. The principle preserves the police's statutory responsibility to investigate and their discretion over method and outcome. An investigation may lead to prosecution or a conclusion that no case is made out; a court should not mechanically prescribe coercive steps. The present Court applied that principle to refuse supervision of this FIR or a direction to arrest and file a charge-sheet. It also separately noted that the persons whose arrest was sought had not been made parties.

M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, appeared in the D. Venkatasubramaniam passage. It explains that Section 41 Cr.P.C. gives the investigator discretion, rather than a mechanical duty to arrest immediately every person accused of a cognizable offence. The effect on liberty and reputation requires caution. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, also appeared in that quoted reasoning on the need for a reasonable opportunity of hearing before an order likely to affect a person's reputation or have drastic consequences. The references to Section 482 Cr.P.C. concerned the Supreme Court case; the present proceeding was an Article 226 writ.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the jurisdiction invoked for the writ directions. Section 173(1) Cr.P.C. was quoted and applied: investigation under the Chapter must be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigator must then decide whether the material supports prosecution or closure and take the reporting steps required by law. Section 41 Cr.P.C. appeared in the quoted Supreme Court reasoning on police discretion to arrest. Section 482 Cr.P.C. concerned that precedent's setting, rather than the present writ jurisdiction. Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 IPC and the cited SC/ST Act provisions described the registered case only. The petitioner sought addition of Section 452 IPC; its ingredients were not tested, and the police remained free to add it if prima facie warranted.

4. Issues : (i) Could the writ court direct the police to add Section 452 IPC to Crime No. 46/2021? (ii) Could it compel arrest of the alleged accused, particularly when they had not been joined as parties? (iii) Could it require timely completion without dictating the investigating officer's method and the final decision to file a charge-sheet or closure report?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court refused to direct inclusion of Section 452 IPC because doing so would substitute judicial supervision for the investigating agency's assessment. The police remained free to add offences supported by prima facie evidence.

On arrest, the Court first noted that the persons against whom coercive relief was sought had not been impleaded. It could not grant the request against persons who were not parties. The extensive quotation from D. Venkatasubramaniam gave a further reason: arrest, seizure and filing a charge-sheet are matters for investigative assessment, rather than necessary consequences of registering an FIR. The nested M.C. Abraham passage explained discretionary arrest, while Divine Retreat Centre addressed the hearing of persons likely to be affected by drastic judicial orders. In paragraph 9, the Court expressly refused to supervise the investigation by directing arrest or the filing of a charge-sheet.

On timing, the Court quoted Section 173(1) and required completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay. It directed the officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible, decide whether an offence was made out and take the steps required by law, including a final report that could be either closure or a charge-sheet. The duty to complete the investigation was thus enforced without predetermining its outcome, adding Section 452 or compelling arrest.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the Article 226 petition, directing the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law. It did not direct addition of Section 452 IPC or arrest of the alleged accused who had not been made parties. The petitioner could submit any further grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, for consideration in accordance with law.

Suman Koli v. State of M.P. and others, W.P. no. 11376/2021, 14/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (930) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 Cr.P.C. — alibi — disputed defence evidence - The duty certificate relied on to show that the father-in-law and husband were elsewhere on the alleged incident dates required examination of the employer and proof of the documents. The accused could not discharge the burden of proving alibi by asking the Court to resolve disputed facts while exercising jurisdiction to quash the FIR.

Section 498A IPC — dowry-related expulsion — continuing cruelty - Specific allegations of dowry demands, abuse, assault and expulsion from the matrimonial home disclosed a triable case of cruelty at this stage. Applying Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, the Court held that mental distress caused by matrimonial cruelty may continue while the wife takes shelter in her parental home, even after physical acts at the matrimonial home have ceased. The allegations remained to be proved at trial.

FIR — preliminary enquiry — family dispute - The absence of a preliminary enquiry before registration did not, by itself, invalidate the FIR. The Court relied on State of J&K v. Dr. Saleem Ur Rehman, Criminal Appeal No. 1170/2021, decided 29 October 2021, to distinguish an enquiry into whether a prima facie basis exists for registration from investigation under the Code. It also relied on CBI v. Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi for registration of a regular case where the available information adequately indicates a cognizable offence. Counsel cited Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1, but the Court did not accept that a preliminary enquiry was mandatory here.

Matrimonial FIR — relatives — face-value quashing test - Applying Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, the Court recognised the need for caution with omnibus accusations against relatives. Where the complaint discloses a triable case, however, its reliability is not tested against a competing defence before trial. The FIR alleged specific conduct by the father-in-law, mother-in-law and younger brother-in-law. The application under Section 482 to quash it was therefore dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The complainant, respondent no. 2, reported that she had married Monu Singh Gahlod on 18 April 2016. She alleged that, despite the cash, household goods and ornaments given at marriage, her husband and his relatives demanded a further Rs. 5 lakh and subjected her to verbal abuse and cruelty. The three applicants in M.Cr.C. No. 18966/2022 were her father-in-law Sundar Singh Gahlod, her mother-in-law and her younger brother-in-law. According to the FIR, the mother-in-law taunted her for insufficient dowry and instigated assaults, and the relatives participated in conduct culminating in her expulsion. The report described an assault on 7 December 2016, her father's visit the next day, removal of ornaments and her return to the parental home. It also described another visit and alleged assault on 21 March 2017, followed by refusals to let her enter the matrimonial home.

Crime No. 99/2019 was registered at Mahila Thana, Gwalior, under Sections 498A, 506, 294 and 34 IPC and Section 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The applicants sought quashing under Section 482 Cr.P.C. Counsel asserted, without supporting material, that the husband had died during the pandemic. Counsel also argued that employer records placed the father-in-law and husband on duty on two dates, that the allegations against the relatives were vague, that no independent witness had been examined and that a preliminary enquiry should have preceded registration of the FIR in a family dispute. The Court heard the applicants, considered the allegations at face value and the legal objections, and dismissed the application on 27 April 2022.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reproduced and applied Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, which explains that Section 498A cruelty includes mental and physical suffering. Mental stress caused by conduct in the matrimonial home, expulsion and fear of returning may continue at the parental home after the physical acts have ceased. The Court applied that principle to the alleged expulsion and the complainant's continued residence with her parents, treating the pleaded continuing harm as legally relevant.

In State of Jammu & Kashmir and others v. Dr. Saleem Ur Rehman, Criminal Appeal No. 1170/2021, decided 29 October 2021, the Supreme Court distinguished a preliminary enquiry into whether a prima facie basis exists for registering an FIR from investigation under the Cr.P.C. after registration. The passage reproduced by the Court explains that some enquiry into the allegations may occur before registration. It does not become investigation under the Code merely because it is detailed, and its duration and scope do not automatically invalidate subsequent proceedings or prejudice the accused. The present Court relied on that distinction to reject the challenge based on preliminary enquiry.

In CBI v. Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi alias T.H. Vijayalakshmi and another, the quoted Supreme Court passage described the CBI Manual's preliminary-enquiry procedure where information suggesting serious misconduct needs verification but is not yet sufficient for a regular case. Once the information or its verification sufficiently indicates a cognizable offence, a regular case must be registered instead of a preliminary enquiry. The Court relied on that passage to reject the claim that a preliminary enquiry was mandatory here.

The Court quoted Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, on the standard for quashing, including caution with omnibus accusations against relatives in matrimonial cases. The authority also states that, where allegations disclose a triable case, the Court does not test their credibility against a competing version at the threshold. The complaint reproduced in Taramani was the factual example in that Supreme Court case, not the present complainant's complaint. Applying the principle to the individual allegations in this FIR, the Court refused quashing.

Counsel cited Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P. and others, (2014) 2 SCC 1, to submit that a preliminary enquiry was desirable in a family dispute. The Court rejected the asserted implication that such an enquiry was mandatory by applying the later authorities discussed above.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 Cr.P.C. provided the inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR. The Court confined its assessment to the allegations and declined to decide the alibi or disputed defence evidence. Section 498A IPC concerned the cruelty allegation, with Rupali Devi explaining continuing mental cruelty after expulsion. Sections 506, 294 and 34 IPC and Section 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were also registered offences, but their independent ingredients were not analysed in this order. In considering the registration objection, the Court distinguished preliminary enquiry before an FIR from investigation under the Cr.P.C.

4. Issues : (i) Could the employer duty certificates establish the asserted alibi of the father-in-law and husband and justify quashing the FIR under Section 482 without proof at trial? (ii) Did the FIR contain specific, triable allegations against the three relatives, and could dowry-related expulsion and mental distress at the parental home form part of the cruelty allegation? (iii) Did the absence of a preliminary enquiry in a family dispute, by itself, require quashing? (iv) Under the Supreme Court's standard for quashing matrimonial proceedings, did these particular allegations warrant quashing the FIR?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that the accused bore the burden of proving alibi through cogent and reliable evidence. The asserted employer certificate and claim of being on duty required examination of the employer and proof of the documents. That defence could not be decided in proceedings under Section 482.

On cruelty, the Court found specific allegations against each applicant in the FIR and rejected the contention that the relatives had been implicated merely because of their relationship. It considered the alleged dowry-related expulsion and the complainant's stay at her parental home in light of Rupali Devi's distinction between physical acts and their continuing mental effects. The pleaded conduct was capable of attracting Section 498A; proof and each applicant's liability remained matters for trial.

On registration, the Court distinguished a preliminary enquiry, which gathers prima facie information before an FIR, from investigation under the Cr.P.C. after registration. Applying Saleem Ur Rehman and Thommandru Hannah Vijayalakshmi, it rejected a categorical requirement of a pre-FIR enquiry and the contention that absence of such an enquiry alone warranted quashing. The CBI Manual passage concerned the context of the Supreme Court case and explained why information sufficiently disclosing a cognizable offence requires registration of a regular case rather than preliminary screening. Counsel's reliance on Lalita Kumari did not alter that conclusion.

Finally, applying Taramani Parakh, the Court recognised the need for caution where relatives face only omnibus allegations, but found a triable case in the specific narrative before it. It declined to conduct a mini-trial by comparing the FIR's reliability with the asserted duty records. The finding that no ground for quashing had been made out concerned the sufficiency of the allegations at the threshold, not whether they had been proved. The application therefore failed.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 Cr.P.C. to quash Crime No. 99/2019. The FIR and ensuing criminal process were not quashed.

Sundar Singh Gahlod and others v. State of M.P. and others, M.Cr.C. no. 18966/2022, 27/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (931) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal-side writ — investigation control — police discretion - A writ seeking prompt and unbiased investigation of a registered FIR did not authorise the Court to direct arrest, seizure or the filing of a charge-sheet. The Court applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, which disapproved judicial directions requiring specified coercive steps or predetermined investigative outcomes. That decision discussed M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on the discretionary power of arrest under Section 41 Cr.P.C. and its effect on liberty. It also cited Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on notice to a person likely to be affected by drastic judicial directions. The present Court applied the principle limiting judicial control of investigation and did not direct arrest or the filing of a charge-sheet.

Investigation — Section 173(1) Cr.P.C. — no unnecessary delay - The statutory duty to complete investigation without unnecessary delay permits a direction to conclude the pending FIR investigation and take the steps required by law. The officer must decide on the material whether to file a charge-sheet or a closure report. The writ was disposed of with that limited direction and liberty to approach the Superintendent of Police with any further grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sundar Singh Yadav filed an Article 226 petition before the Madhya Pradesh High Court at Gwalior. On his complaint, Police Station Vishwavidyalaya, District Gwalior, had registered Crime No. 112/2022 under Sections 420, 406 and 34 IPC. The prayer identified the FIR as dated 26 March 2022. The petitioner asserted that the police had not yet concluded the investigation and sought directions to respondents 2 and 3 to investigate expeditiously, fairly and without bias, along with ancillary relief and costs. The Court heard the petitioner's counsel, set out the Supreme Court's limits on judicial intervention in investigation, quoted Section 173(1) Cr.P.C. and disposed of the petition on 22 November 2022.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted at length and applied. The Supreme Court had set aside a High Court direction requiring the police to record statements, arrest, seize property and file a charge-sheet. The direction had been issued without reasons and without hearing the affected persons. The police have the statutory duty to investigate, and the conduct of the investigation falls within their domain. The evidence may support prosecution or a conclusion that no case is made out. A High Court cannot mechanically prescribe particular investigative acts or conclusions under Section 482 Cr.P.C. Caution is required before issuing directions or observations with drastic consequences. In Yadav's Article 226 petition, the Court applied that authority to hold that directing arrest and the filing of a charge-sheet would amount to supervision of the investigation, which it could not undertake.

Within the reproduced Supreme Court reasoning, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explained that arrest under Section 41 Cr.P.C. in a cognizable case is discretionary; recording an FIR does not impose an immediate duty to arrest. The need for arrest must be assessed cautiously because it affects liberty and reputation. That reasoning supported the principle in Venkatasubramaniam against ordering arrest through a writ direction. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, appeared in the same quoted passage on the need for a reasonable hearing before judicial directions likely to affect a person's reputation and liberty.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution provided the writ jurisdiction invoked for directions concerning the pending FIR investigation. Section 173(1) Cr.P.C. was expressly quoted: investigation under the relevant Chapter must be completed without unnecessary delay. Applying that duty, the Court required the officer to complete the investigation and take the consequential steps required by law, leaving the material to determine whether a charge-sheet or closure report should be filed. Section 41 Cr.P.C. appeared in the Supreme Court quotation on discretion to arrest. Section 482 Cr.P.C. concerned the procedural setting of the Supreme Court case and the limits of intervention under the inherent power. Neither provision was the operative jurisdiction in the present petition. Sections 420, 406 and 34 IPC identified only the registered accusations; their ingredients were neither analysed nor decided.

4. Issues : (i) Could the writ court require specified investigative steps, including arrest and filing a charge-sheet, in response to a complainant's request for fair and expeditious investigation? (ii) Did the continuing investigation attract the Section 173(1) duty to complete it without unnecessary delay, and what direction could be issued without prejudging the outcome of the report?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied D. Venkatasubramaniam to distinguish permissible judicial oversight from police discretion in investigation. The quoted Supreme Court reasoning explained why protective directions may improperly predetermine arrest, seizure and prosecution. Those steps require the investigator's assessment of the evidence, and the completed investigation may properly result in either a charge-sheet or closure. The quoted M.C. Abraham passage stressed caution in arrest and its effect on liberty. The Divine Retreat Centre passage addressed drastic directions against persons who had not been heard. In paragraph 5, the present Court drew the narrower conclusion that it could not supervise the investigation and that directing arrest and the filing of a charge-sheet would amount to such supervision.

At the same time, Section 173(1) imposed a duty to complete the investigation promptly. The officer could not leave the registered investigation pending indefinitely. The Court required completion as early as possible and the steps required by law, including an appropriate report after the officer had decided whether an offence was made out. Paragraph 7 expressly refers to both a closure report and a charge-sheet; the direction therefore did not compel prosecution. The limited relief required expedition while leaving assessment of the investigation's outcome to the officer.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the Article 226 petition. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law. The petitioner remained free to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, concerning any grievance, to be considered in accordance with law.

Sundar Singh Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others, W.P. no. 25609/2022, 22/11/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (932) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail — successive application — framing of charge - After the earlier rejection on merits, the framing of charges was not a favourable change of circumstance merely because it occurred later. The trial court had found prima facie material to proceed. Applying Virupakshappa Gouda v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 5 SCC 406, the Court reasoned that filing a charge-sheet reflects the investigating agency's prima facie case and does not, by itself, amount to a changed circumstance warranting bail. The subsequent framing of charges was likewise insufficient.

Bail — pre-trial liberty — Section 436A Cr.P.C. - The Court applied Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, AIR 2005 SC 921, for the principle that detention authorised by law for a non-bailable offence does not, by itself, violate Article 21. Pre-trial detention is not punishment, and Section 436A prescribes statutory custody thresholds. The Court described half the maximum period as an outer limit. The provision quoted in the judgment, however, permits continued detention beyond that point after hearing the Public Prosecutor and recording reasons, while absolutely prohibiting detention beyond the maximum period. It excludes delay caused by the accused from the calculation. The applicant did not claim to have reached the half-period threshold.

Bail — claimed trial delay — record and non-disclosure - The Court rejected the submission based on delay and Dipak Shubhashchandra Mehta v. CBI, (2012) 2 SCC (Cri) 350, because the applicant had produced no order sheets showing delay or establishing that he had not sought adjournments. It also recorded his failure to disclose the dismissed Section 482 challenge to the charge-sheet. As no changed circumstance was demonstrated, the third regular bail application was dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sunil Gupta was arrested on 1 March 2021 in Crime No. 107/2021 at Police Station Maharajpura, Gwalior, in connection with allegations under Sections 354, 376 and 506 IPC and Sections 3–8 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act, 2012. His first bail application under Section 439 Cr.P.C., M.Cr.C. No. 20833/2021, had been dismissed on merits on 29 April 2021. The present M.Cr.C. was the third application for regular bail.

The applicant also sought three months' temporary bail through I.A. No. 24337/2021. Counsel submitted that, during the applicant's custody, his wife had been staying with his sister, who would no longer accommodate her, and that he needed time to arrange a residence. During argument, counsel accepted that the applicant's mother and his wife's parents and sibling were alive. The claim that her parents would not assist because the marriage had taken place without their knowledge or consent had no supporting material on record. The Court rejected temporary bail because it could not conclude that nobody was available to look after her.

For regular bail, the applicant relied on the framing of charges as a change since the earlier rejection on merits. He also invoked the presumption of innocence, the principle that pre-trial detention is not punishment and the availability of successive applications on changed circumstances, and alleged delay in trial. Charges had been framed on 31 July 2021. The Court noted that no order sheets had been produced to show the progress of the proceedings or the causes of any delay. It also noted the applicant's failure to disclose in this bail application that his application under Section 482 Cr.P.C. to quash the charge-sheet had been dismissed.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court expressly relied on Virupakshappa Gouda and another v. State of Karnataka, (2017) 5 SCC 406, for the proposition that filing a charge-sheet does not itself constitute a changed circumstance for bail. It reflects the police assessment that prima facie material is sufficient to send the accused for trial. By analogy, the Court found that the later framing of charges, reflecting the trial court's prima facie assessment, was not a favourable change.

Counsel cited Kalyan Chandra Sarkar v. Rajesh Ranjan, AIR 2005 SC 921, for the availability of successive bail applications on changed circumstances. The Court separately relied on its treatment of lawful detention: custody for a non-bailable offence, when authorised by law, does not merely by its existence violate Article 21. Reading that principle with the quoted Section 436A framework, the Court rejected the claim to immediate release because the applicant did not claim to have met the relevant custody threshold.

Counsel relied on Dipak Shubhashchandra Mehta v. Central Bureau of Investigation and another, (2012) 2 SCC (Cri) 350, to seek bail on the ground of trial delay. The Court found that reliance misconceived on the material before it: no order sheets had been filed to establish delay or show that the applicant had not sought adjournments.

Counsel cited Sanjay Chandra v. Central Bureau of Investigation, 2012 (1) SCC 40, and Azhar Sah v. State of Bihar and others, (2008) 5 SCC 82, on pre-trial liberty, the presumption of innocence and assessment of release on the individual facts.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 Cr.P.C. provided jurisdiction for the third regular bail application. Section 436A Cr.P.C. was quoted and applied to the contention concerning pre-trial custody. As reproduced, it excludes offences for which death is specified as one of the punishments. A detainee who has undergone one-half of the maximum term is to be released on personal bond, with or without sureties, subject to the first proviso. That proviso permits the court, after hearing the Public Prosecutor and recording reasons, to continue detention beyond one-half or release the person on bail. The second proviso prohibits detention beyond the maximum specified term. The explanation excludes delay attributable to the accused when calculating detention for release. The half-period is therefore subject to the express provisos. The present applicant did not allege that he had reached that period. Article 21 was considered in relation to detention authorised by law, with reliance on Kalyan Chandra Sarkar. The IPC and POCSO provisions concerned the alleged offences; their ingredients were not decided in this bail order.

4. Issues : (i) Did framing charges after the earlier rejection of bail on merits amount to a changed circumstance supporting the third Section 439 application? (ii) Did the applicant's claim to pre-trial liberty and approximately five months in custody establish an entitlement to release under Article 21 and the Section 436A thresholds? (iii) Was the alleged trial delay supported by material showing the course of proceedings and responsibility for adjournments? (iv) Did the claimed need to arrange housing for the applicant's wife justify the separate request for three months' temporary bail?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that framing charges was not a favourable change of circumstance for the successive application. At that stage, the trial court had found sufficient prima facie material to require a trial. The Court drew the comparison from Virupakshappa Gouda: filing a charge-sheet does not, by itself, amount to a change in the accused's favour, and the later framing of charges after judicial consideration was likewise insufficient.

On custody and liberty, the Court accepted that pre-trial detention is not punishment. Applying Kalyan Chandra Sarkar, it rejected the argument that detention authorised by law for a non-bailable accusation is inherently unconstitutional. It quoted Section 436A as a guiding statutory measure. Paragraph 14 describes detention beyond half the maximum sentence as unauthorised. The statutory text quoted immediately before it, however, contains a first proviso permitting detention beyond the half-period after hearing the Public Prosecutor and recording reasons, a second proviso setting an absolute maximum-term ceiling, and an exclusion for delay caused by the accused. The operative finding did not require a decision at either boundary, because the applicant did not even claim to have completed the half-period.

On trial delay, the applicant produced no order sheets substantiating the allegation or showing that he had not sought adjournments for argument on charge. Charges had been framed on 31 July 2021. The Court therefore found no factual basis for applying Dipak Shubhashchandra Mehta to this request. It also recorded that dismissal of the earlier Section 482 challenge to the charge-sheet had not been mentioned in the application or disclosed during argument, although the same counsel had appeared in that proceeding. These findings concerned the record before the Court. The separate temporary-bail request failed because the asserted absence of assistance for the wife was unsupported in light of the acknowledged availability of close relatives.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the third application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC and rejected I.A. No. 24337/2021 for three months' temporary bail.

Sunil Gupta v. State of M.P. and others, M.Cr.C. no. 40317/2021, 13/08/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (933) Prev Next

Headnote :- Inherent jurisdiction — compromise in POCSO and heinous offences - Applying Ramji Lal Bairwa v. State of Rajasthan, Cr.A. 3403/2023 (07.11.2024), and the Gian Singh and Laxmi Narayan principles reproduced there, the Court held that Section 482 cannot be used to quash proceedings on settlement for heinous offences that are not private in nature and have a serious impact on society. A prediction that conviction is unlikely after compromise does not by itself justify abruptly quashing the proceedings. The allegations of repeated rape and aggravated POCSO offences against a minor fell within that limit. The FIR and sessions case were therefore allowed to proceed.

Sexual offences — victim dignity, proposed marriage and hostile-witness prediction - The Court relied on State of M.P. v. Madanlal, (2015) 7 SCC 681, which rejects compromise or marriage as a basis for leniency in rape or attempted rape. The Court's earlier order in Arif Khan applied that principle and explained that, even if the prosecutrix turns hostile, scientific or circumstantial evidence may still support conviction. Those reasons supported dismissal of the present compromise-based quashing request.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sunil Kushwah applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 51/2024 at Police Station Girwai, Gwalior, and the consequential proceedings in Sessions Case No. 110/2024 pending before the XI Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior. The FIR alleged kidnapping and procuration, as well as repeated rape under IPC Sections 363, 366-A and 376(2)(n), along with aggravated child sexual offences under POCSO Sections 5 and 6. The request to quash the FIR and prosecution was based on compromise. The Court considered the pleadings and the State's submissions and decided only that question under Section 482.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ramji Lal Bairwa and another v. State of Rajasthan and others, Criminal Appeal No. 3403/2023, decided 7 November 2024, was quoted for its discussion of Gian Singh and State of M.P. v. Laxmi Narayan. The inherent power cannot be used to end proceedings merely on compromise where the offences are heinous, are not private in nature and have a serious impact on society. Ramji Lal Bairwa also rejected the argument that a perceived remote or bleak prospect of conviction after settlement is, by itself, sufficient to terminate an investigation or criminal proceedings. The present Court applied that limitation to the allegations of sexual offences against a minor. State of M.P. v. Madanlal, (2015) 7 SCC 681, was quoted on the victim's dignity as a reason against compromise in rape or attempted rape and against marriage as a means of exerting pressure. The present order records that the passage arose in a discussion of sentence and applies it here to refuse quashing on compromise. The Court's own decision in Arif Khan v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. 39588/2019 (20 September 2019), had applied Madanlal to reject quashing even on a claim of marriage. It also cautioned that, even if the prosecutrix turns hostile, scientific or circumstantial evidence may still support conviction.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the High Court's inherent jurisdiction. Its use to quash proceedings on compromise was limited by the grave nature of the alleged offences and their character as offences affecting society rather than a purely private dispute. IPC Sections 363, 366-A and 376(2)(n), and POCSO Sections 5 and 6, were the provisions alleged in the FIR and sessions prosecution. The application sought quashing; it did not call for a verdict at trial.

4. Issues : Could a private compromise justify quashing the FIR and pending sessions prosecution under Section 482 for alleged kidnapping, repeated rape and aggravated POCSO offences against a minor, given the impact of serious sexual offences on society? Did the possible effect of settlement on the prospects of conviction, or the general arguments about marriage or victim hostility discussed in the precedents, alter that limitation?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court treated the allegations as grave offences against a minor. Applying Ramji Lal Bairwa's discussion of Gian Singh and Laxmi Narayan, it held that compromise cannot turn a heinous offence with serious public impact into a purely private dispute whose proceedings may be quashed under the inherent power. The quoted Supreme Court reasoning expressly rejected a prediction of bleak conviction prospects after settlement as a sufficient reason to terminate the process. Madanlal's rejection of compromise in rape cases and the Court's application of that principle in Arif Khan reinforced the refusal. Arif Khan also explained that possible hostility by the victim does not necessarily exclude other evidence. The conclusion was confined to the insufficiency of compromise as a legal ground for quashing these serious allegations.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC. FIR Crime No. 51/2024 and the consequential proceedings in Sessions Case No. 110/2024 were not quashed on the asserted compromise and remained to be adjudicated in the ordinary course.

Sunil Kushwah v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors., M.Cr.C. no. 48673/2024, 25/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (934) Prev Next

Headnote :- Connected criminal appeals — separate trial record - Applying A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Cr.A. 1306/2021, the Court held that evidence from the trial of Sunil, Deepak and Mukesh could not be transposed into Bunty's later, separate trial record. His appeal, though heard analogously, required a separate judgment.

Conviction appeal — unrepresented appellants - After counsel and the appointed amici failed to appear, the Court relied on Surya Baksh Singh v. State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, examined the trial record and decided the appeals on their merits rather than dismissing them for non-prosecution. It reached separate conclusions for the three appellants.

Evidence — complete circumstantial chain - Applying Munish Mubar, (2012) 10 SCC 464, Sharad Birdhichand Sarda, (1984) 4 SCC 116, Padala Veera Reddy, 1989 Supp (2) SCC 706, Balwinder Singh, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 259, and Harishchandra Ladaku Thange, (2007) 11 SCC 436, the Court required every circumstance to be firmly proved and the cumulative chain to exclude any reasonable hypothesis consistent with innocence. Suspicion or a false defence cannot supply a missing link. The Bench found the direct evidence of Mukesh's involvement in the abduction and the last-seen circumstance sufficient, but rejected the alleged chain of calls and kinship against Sunil and Deepak.

FIR — prompt named abduction report - The Court applied Krishnan, (2003) 7 SCC 56, Harban Sahai, (1998) 6 SCC 50, and Satpal Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 714, on the corroborative value of prompt, detailed reporting and the risk of later embellishment. Sonu Ben's report at 09:30, following the abduction at 09:00, named Mukesh, the co-accused and the Bolero number. Eyewitness testimony tested in cross-examination supported the report.

Last seen — abduction-to-death proximity - Applying Ashok, (2015) 4 SCC 393, Digamber Vaishnav, (2019) 4 SCC 522, and Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan, (2020) 14 SCC 750, the Court treated last-seen evidence as insufficient by itself. It required a credible sighting and temporal proximity, with the initial burden remaining on the prosecution before an explanation under Section 106 could arise. On the facts concerning Mukesh, the Court considered the proved armed abduction on 17 November, discovery of the body on 27 November and the pathologist's six-to-twelve-day interval since death sufficiently proximate, together with the other circumstances. The finding concerning this ten-day interval was specific to those facts.

Forensic identity — decomposed body - The Court found that the parentage DNA report, Ex. P.55, the sampling evidence and the doctors' testimony confirmed that the decomposed remains were Sagar's. The incised neck and cranial wounds and the head injury established homicidal death and informed the assessment of the interval since death.

Discovery — accessible place - Applying State of H.P. v. Jeet Singh, (1999) 4 SCC 370, and Yakub Razak Memon, (2013) 13 SCC 1, the Court held that public accessibility alone did not invalidate discovery under Evidence Act Section 27. Ordinary visibility and the accused's disclosed knowledge remained material. Sunil Vishwakarma led the police to the body hidden in remote bushes. He had withdrawn his appeal; the disclosure was his, not Mukesh's.

Seizure and article identification — distinct proof questions - Applying Girja Prasad, (2007) 7 SCC 625, the Court accepted reliable police testimony proving seizure of the chain and mala recovered from Mukesh, although the civilian seizure witnesses had not identified the articles in court. It applied Malkhan Singh, (2003) 5 SCC 746, which distinguishes substantive in-court identification from the corroborative role of an investigation parade, to the articles. As Sagar's father had not identified them at trial, the prosecution had not proved that they belonged to Sagar.

Sword and calls — missing links - The Court found that the FSL detected no blood on the allegedly blood-stained sword. It was therefore not proved to be the murder weapon. No seizure memo or subscriber evidence linked Mukesh to the three alleged SIMs, so the purported calls did not prove conversations with Sunil or Deepak. Ordinary family contact was also insufficient to establish conspiracy.

Conspiracy — accused-wise proof - The Court found that Sunil and Deepak had neither been named as abductors nor last seen with Sagar, and that no incriminating article linked either of them to the crime. Unproved telephone attribution and kinship did not complete the circumstantial chain. Their conspiracy-related convictions were set aside. Mukesh's distinct involvement in the abduction and the last-seen evidence sustained his IPC convictions.

Arms Act — proven possession and sanction - The Court found that the seizure testimony concerning Mukesh's country-made pistol, the sanction evidence and the unchallenged armorer's report supported his separate conviction under Sections 25/27 Arms Act.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Criminal Appeal No. 2025/2009, filed by Sunil Tiwari and his son Deepak Tiwari, and No. 2050/2009, filed by Sunil's brother Mukesh Tiwari, challenged the judgment dated 13 October 2009 in Sessions Trial No. 42/2008, Katni. According to the prosecution, Sagar Singh was taken from near Gupta Hotel in a black Bolero MP 21 E 0855 on 17 November 2007 at about 09:00. Sonu Ben's FIR named Mukesh, driver Shrichand Kori, Bhawani Kant Dubey, Sunil Vishwakarma and Rakesh Choudhary. It described pistols, a knife and Sagar's forcible placement in the vehicle, but did not name Sunil or Deepak. Sagar's body was found on 27 November in bushes off a forest track following co-accused Sunil Vishwakarma's disclosure. Advanced decomposition prompted parentage DNA testing. The autopsy disclosed incised neck and cranial wounds and identified head injury as the cause of death. Police seized a Rudraksh mala and a silver chain with a gold locket on Mukesh's later disclosures. They also seized a sword and a country-made pistol. Officers asserted that a mobile handset and three SIMs had been found with Mukesh, but prepared no seizure memo for the phone or SIMs. The prosecution alleged that Sunil and Deepak had communicated with Mukesh as part of a conspiracy. The trial court acquitted Pappu @ Dharmendra and convicted seven others. Four convicted co-accused withdrew their appeals in 2022. Absconding Bunty was tried later on separately recorded evidence; his appeal was heard analogously but was to be decided by a separate judgment. The three present appellants received concurrent sentences under Sections 120B, 364/120B, 365/120B, 302/120B and 201/120B IPC, including life imprisonment on the murder count. Mukesh was additionally convicted under Sections 25/27 Arms Act. The appellants' counsel did not attend, and multiple appointed amici also failed to attend the final hearing. The Bench examined the record itself and heard the State. The material questions were whether the direct evidence of abduction and the subsequent death established Mukesh's liability, and whether any proved conspiracy link implicated the two relatives who had not been seen at the abduction.

2. Precedents — Considered : A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Cr.A. 1306/2021, was applied to require that Bunty's appeal from his separate trial be considered on its own evidence. Surya Baksh Singh v. State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, was invoked for review on the merits despite the absence of counsel and amici. The Court read the record and reached different outcomes for the individual appellants. On circumstantial evidence, Munish Mubar v. State of Haryana, (2012) 10 SCC 464, required proved, conclusive circumstances excluding alternative hypotheses. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116, set out five conditions and distinguished what "may" be proved from what "must" be proved. Its reproduced discussion of Hanumant emphasised the exclusion of reasonable hypotheses consistent with innocence. Padala Veera Reddy v. State of A.P., 1989 Supp (2) SCC 706, stated substantially similar tests for the cumulative evidence. Balwinder Singh v. State of Punjab, 1995 Supp (4) SCC 259, warned that emotion or suspicion cannot substitute for proof. Harishchandra Ladaku Thange v. State of Maharashtra, (2007) 11 SCC 436, explained how a principal fact may be inferred from closely connected facts, required a complete chain and stated that a false defence cannot cure gaps in the prosecution case. The Bench stated that it would apply these principles to each appellant rather than infer guilt by association.

For the FIR, Krishnan v. State, (2003) 7 SCC 56, treated almost immediate reporting as limiting the opportunity to deliberate before falsely implicating someone. State of U.P. v. Harban Sahai, (1998) 6 SCC 50, treated an early, detailed FIR as strong corroboration. Satpal Singh v. State of Haryana, (2010) 8 SCC 714, explained the risk of embellishment from unexplained delay. The Court applied these principles to Sonu Ben's prompt naming of Mukesh and the jeep, together with its assessment of the eyewitnesses. On last-seen evidence, Ashok v. State of Maharashtra, (2015) 4 SCC 393, quoted Trimukh Maroti Kirkan and Kanhaiya Lal. It emphasised that non-explanation alone cannot prove guilt, that the prosecution must first establish sufficient evidence and that Section 106 Evidence Act can operate only with sufficient surrounding evidence. Digamber Vaishnav v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2019) 4 SCC 522, required trustworthy evidence of the sighting and close temporal proximity. Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v. State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750, stressed that the gap must be short enough to exclude intervention by another person. The Bench considered the pathologist's six-to-twelve-day interval since death and the ten days between abduction and recovery sufficient to establish proximity on these facts, without fixing an exact time of death.

State of H.P. v. Jeet Singh, (1999) 4 SCC 370, explained that discovery under Section 27 includes the place and the accused's knowledge of it: a hidden object may remain undiscovered even in a place accessible to others. Yakub Razak Memon v. State of Maharashtra, (2013) 13 SCC 1, likewise rejected the proposition that recovery from a public place is automatically discredited. The Court applied both to the concealed body located in a remote forest on Sunil Vishwakarma's information; it did not attribute the disclosure to Mukesh. Girja Prasad v. State of M.P., (2007) 7 SCC 625, permitted reliance on trustworthy police witnesses without an inflexible requirement of civilian corroboration. The Bench applied that principle to the officers who identified the chain and mala seized from Mukesh. Malkhan Singh v. State of M.P., (2003) 5 SCC 746, primarily concerns identification of accused persons. It explains that sworn identification at trial is substantive evidence, while an investigation parade ordinarily corroborates it, subject to exceptions depending on the facts. The Bench applied that distinction to the property articles. As Sagar's father had not identified them in court, there was no substantive trial evidence proving that the articles, though proved to have been seized, belonged to Sagar.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 120B concerned the alleged agreement linking the charged acts. Sections 364 and 365 concerned kidnapping or abduction and confinement, Section 302 concerned murder, and Section 201 concerned disappearance of evidence; each was charged with 120B. Arms Act Sections 25 and 27 governed Mukesh's firearm count, and sanction for prosecution under those provisions was proved. Evidence Act Section 27 concerned disclosure leading to discovery. Section 9 was discussed through Malkhan Singh on identification, and Section 106 through Ashok on the limited explanation of facts within special knowledge after the prosecution had adduced sufficient evidence. CrPC Section 374(2) provided appellate jurisdiction. Section 161 concerned eyewitness statements, and Section 173(8) concerned the investigation kept pending against the then-absconding accused.

4. Issues : (i) Could the Bench decide the connected appeals of Sunil, Deepak and Mukesh after counsel and the appointed amici failed to appear, while reserving Bunty's appeal from his later, separate trial for a separate judgment? (ii) What complete and fully proved chain was required for conviction on circumstantial evidence, and how did the prompt FIR, the four abduction eyewitnesses, the last-seen interval, the medical evidence, the DNA evidence and the discovered body bear on Mukesh individually? (iii) Did recovery of the body from a forest accessible to the public lose evidentiary value under Section 27, and was the decomposed body sufficiently identified as Sagar's? (iv) Was seizure of the chain and mala proved, had the victim's father substantively identified them in court as Sagar's, and could the sword be treated as the murder weapon when the FSL found no blood on it? (v) Could conversations with Sunil and Deepak be established without seizure documentation and subscriber evidence for Mukesh's alleged phone and SIMs, and, even if a family call occurred, did it prove conspiracy? (vi) Were the evidence of Mukesh's firearm possession, the sanction and the armorer's evidence sufficient for Sections 25/27 Arms Act, and what convictions, sentences and custody consequences followed for each appellant?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench examined the record despite the absence of representation and, applying A.T. Mydeen, kept Bunty's separately recorded trial evidence distinct. It set out the requirement, drawn from Munish Mubar, Sharad, Padala Veera Reddy, Balwinder and Harishchandra, of fully proved circumstances forming a cumulative chain that excludes reasonable hypotheses consistent with innocence. It then assessed each appellant separately rather than attribute Mukesh's acts to his relatives. Sonu Ben's FIR, lodged about half an hour after the incident, specifically named the five abductors and the jeep. His cross-examination disclosed nothing material to discredit him. Gaurav, Sandeep and Abhishekh supported the abduction account despite certain omissions from police statements and Gaurav's later examination. The Bench found that Mukesh and four co-accused had forcibly taken Sagar on 17 November. The autopsy disclosed fatal incised injuries, and the pathologist placed death within six to twelve days before the examination. The body was discovered ten days after the abduction. Applying Ashok, Digamber and Shailendra to that medical interval and the proved abduction, the Bench found sufficient proximity to establish the last-seen circumstance against Mukesh. That finding rested on the stated interval, without proof of an exact hour of death. Sagar's father identified the body, parentage DNA Ex. P.55 confirmed its identity, and the fatal head wounds established homicide. Sunil Vishwakarma led the police to the remains hidden in bushes off a difficult forest route. Applying Jeet Singh and Yakub Razak Memon, the Court held that accessibility of the wider forest did not invalidate the discovery. Sunil Vishwakarma's appeal had been withdrawn; the disclosure was not a statement by Mukesh himself.

On Mukesh's own recoveries, Atin Tiwari and Sardar Singh attested seizure of the Rudraksh mala and silver chain, but neither identified the objects at trial. Officers Bundeldhar Dwivedi and Vinod Singh Baghel identified the articles they had seized. Applying Girja Prasad, the Bench accepted their reliable official evidence as proof of seizure. Guman Singh had identified the articles at the investigation parade, but was not asked to identify the seized mala and chain in court. Applying Malkhan Singh's distinction, the Court found no substantive evidence that the objects belonged to Sagar. Although the seizure and forwarding documents described the sword as blood-stained, the FSL found no blood on it. The Court therefore did not accept it as the weapon of offence. Officers asserted that a Nokia handset and three SIMs had been found with Mukesh, but there was no seizure memo, explanation for its absence or subscriber evidence. The purported numbers could therefore not be attributed to him. The Court affirmed Mukesh's convictions under Sections 120B, 364/120B, 365/120B, 302/120B and 201/120B IPC on the evidence of abduction and last seen, which it considered sufficient. The seized country-made pistol and cartridge, the proved sanction and the report of the armorer, who was not cross-examined, separately supported the conviction under Sections 25/27 Arms Act.

Neither Deepak nor Sunil was named in the abduction FIR, placed at the forcible taking or last seen with Sagar. No incriminating article was recovered from either of them. Seizure of Deepak's own phone was recorded, but the alleged recipient numbers were not linked to Mukesh's unseized SIMs. The trial court had also relied on a call before the offence. The alleged calls involving Sunil likewise depended on unproved SIM attribution. Mukesh was Deepak's uncle and Sunil's brother. Even if a call between them were established, it would not, without more, prove an agreement to abduct and murder. The prosecution had not established the circumstantial conspiracy chain against either appellant, and all their convictions based on it were set aside. As to Mukesh's sentence, the minimum life term under Section 302 required no interference. His concurrent sentences and Arms Act conviction were affirmed. The Bench noted that Mukesh remained in prison and discussed a remission circular in light of another life sentence; it did not order a new determination of remission in this appeal.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal of Sunil Tiwari and Deepak Tiwari, acquitted them of all charges and set aside their convictions and sentences. Deepak's bail and surety bonds were discharged. Sunil's bail had earlier been cancelled for non-appearance, but, following acquittal, the Court held that he was no longer required in this case. Mukesh's appeal was dismissed. His IPC and Sections 25/27 Arms Act convictions and concurrent sentences, including life imprisonment, were affirmed, and he was directed to serve the remaining sentence in jail. The 2009 trial judgment was thus affirmed for Mukesh and set aside for Sunil and Deepak. The trial records were to be returned for compliance. Bunty's appeal remained for a separate judgment; the withdrawn appeals and Pappu's acquittal were not reopened.

Sunil Tiwari and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Mukesh Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 2025/2009 & 2050/2009, 04/09/2024, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (935) Prev Next

Headnote :- NDPS Act — Section 50 / personal search - The Court held that recovery from inside the suspect's Kurti attracted Section 50. Kishan Chand v. State of Haryana, (2013) 2 SCC 502, was considered on strict observance of safeguards and the limited relevance of prejudice after total non-compliance. Prabha Shankar Dubey v. State of M.P., (2004) 2 SCC 56, emphasised the substance of communication rather than a fixed form of words. Dehal Singh v. State of H.P., (2010) 9 SCC 85, distinguished personal from vehicle searches and addressed effective communication of the option. Vijaysinh Chandubha Jadeja v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 1 SCC 609, required communication of the right and explained the consequence of non-compliance. Ashok Kumar Sharma v. State of Rajasthan, (2013) 2 SCC 67, rejected an assumption that a rustic suspect knows the law. The officer need not state the section number if she communicates the actual right. Ex. P-2 informed Sunna of the alternative of search before a Gazetted Officer or Magistrate, and Ex. P-3 recorded her choice of the female officer before the search. On those facts, the Court found strict compliance; it did not treat consent alone as a substitute for notice.

NDPS Act — Section 42 / superior-officer information - The Court found that the prior information had been recorded, a report sent to the SDO(P), and his absence noted. On the officer's return, the Town Inspector, her immediate superior, received the Dehati Nalishi, registered the FIR and took over the investigation. Informing a higher officer was not prohibited merely because the information also had to reach the immediate superior. The Court found compliance on the evidence considered together and referred to the amended period of seventy-two hours.

NDPS Act — seal, malkhana and sample continuity - The Court found that the signatures on the packets, deposit certificate and serial entry, forwarding on the next day, and the FSL's receipt of the sample in sealed condition established continuity for sample A1. Those records answered the objection that the register had not been produced. The FSL report dated 19 February identified diacetylmorphine.

Witnesses — police and Raksha Samiti member - The Court held that Gora Bai's service in the Raksha Samiti and routine contact with the police did not automatically make her a police "pocket witness". Sections 3 and 13 of the 1999 State Act set out her public duties. Applying Govindaraju, (2012) 4 SCC 722, Tahir, (1996) 3 SCC 338, and Girja Prasad, (2007) 7 SCC 625, the Court held that trustworthy official evidence may sustain a conviction without an inflexible requirement of independent corroboration.

Such evidence nevertheless requires careful scrutiny, including examination of any concrete indication of bias or overzealousness.

Evidence — minor chronological discrepancy - The Court found that the differing oral accounts of when the weighing scale was obtained concerned preparation for the raid. The contemporaneous rojnamcha recorded the sequence. The discrepancy did not affect the statutory notice or proof of seizure and was not material to guilt.

NDPS Act — Sections 52 and 57 / post-seizure duties - The Court found that prompt communication to the superior officer and his taking over the investigation answered the objection on this record. It followed Gurbax Singh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 3 SCC 28, on the directory character of Sections 52 and 57. It separately required proof of compliance with the personal-search safeguard and of sample custody.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 14 February 2016, Sub-Inspector Manju Makheniya, posted at Kotwali, Ashoknagar, received information that Sunna Ahirwar was standing under the Azad Mohalla overbridge with smack concealed on her person for sale. The information was recorded in the rojnamcha and sent to the SDO(P), whose absence was reported. A party including female officers and women witnesses, one of whom was Raksha Samiti member Gora Bai, found Sunna at the indicated place. The officer gave the personal-search notice Ex. P-2, explaining the choice of search before a Gazetted Officer or Magistrate or by the investigating officer. Sunna's written consent, Ex. P-3, recorded her choice of the female officer. After the raiding party offered itself for search, the officer searched Sunna behind a bridge pillar and allegedly recovered a polythene packet from her Kurti. The material weighed 8 g. Two samples of 2 g each and the remaining 4 g were sealed and marked A1, A2 and A. A Dehati Nalishi recorded on the spot led to registration of the FIR. The contraband was deposited in the malkhana and sample A1 was sent for analysis. The FSL reported diacetylmorphine. The trial court framed a charge under Sections 8/22(b) of the NDPS Act and, on 26 March 2021, convicted Sunna under Sections 8(c)/22(b). It imposed four years' rigorous imprisonment, a ₹10,000 fine and six months' imprisonment in default. In the appeal under Section 374 CrPC, counsel challenged the Section 50 notice, Section 42 report, conflicting accounts of procurement of the scale, proof of seizure and safe custody, Gora Bai's independence, and compliance with Sections 52/57. Counsel cited Kishan Chand, Ram Avtar and several High Court decisions.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kishan Chand v. State of Haryana, (2013) 2 SCC 502, was quoted on the protective purpose and strict observance of mandatory NDPS duties, and the limited role of prejudice where an absolute duty has not been complied with at all. The Court then found actual compliance with Section 50. Prabha Shankar Dubey v. State of M.P., (2004) 2 SCC 56, was applied on effective communication of the Section 50 right without a fixed verbal formula; the reproduced reasoning also explained fairness and the option of search before the conveniently available senior officer. Dehal Singh v. State of H.P., (2010) 9 SCC 85, distinguished vehicle searches from personal searches and treated communication of the option as notice of the right. Since the present case involved a personal search, the safeguard applied. Vijaysinh Chandubha Jadeja v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 1 SCC 609, a Constitution Bench decision reproducing State of Punjab v. Baldev Singh, required the officer to inform the suspect of the Section 50(1) right and to comply strictly with that duty; non-compliance would render the personal recovery suspect. Ashok Kumar Sharma v. State of Rajasthan, (2013) 2 SCC 67, rejected reliance on a presumption that a rustic suspect knows the law. The High Court did not dispense with communication on the basis of presumed knowledge; it held that the actual choice had been conveyed even though the section number had not been stated.

Govindaraju alias Govinda v. State by Sriramapuram Police Station, (2012) 4 SCC 722, was considered on the reliability of official evidence where there was no proof of fabrication through overzealousness. Tahir v. State (Delhi), (1996) 3 SCC 338, and Girja Prasad v. State of M.P., (2007) 7 SCC 625, were relied on for the absence of an automatic requirement of independent corroboration and the prudential need for careful scrutiny of official testimony. The Court applied those principles to Gora Bai and the evidence concerning the raid. Gurbax Singh v. State of Haryana, (2001) 3 SCC 28, was cited and followed on the directory character of Sections 52 and 57.

3. Statutes considered : Section 50(1) of the NDPS Act requires effective communication of the choice of search before the nearest Gazetted Officer or Magistrate when a person is to be searched; subsection (4) requires that a female be searched only by a female. Section 42 governed the issue of prior information and reporting. The Court noted the post-2001 substitution of “within seventy-two hours” in the provision discussed and considered the station record, report to the SDO(P) and later receipt of the information by the immediate superior. Sections 52 and 57 concerned handling and reporting after arrest or seizure; the cited precedent treated them as directory, and the Court found factual compliance. The possession prosecution and sentence for intermediate quantity were recorded under Sections 8(c)/22(b), although the charge-sheet had referred to 8/21. Section 374 CrPC governed the appeal. Sections 3 and 13 of the Madhya Pradesh Gram Tatha Nagar Raksha Samiti Adhiniyam, 1999 concerned the committee's constitution and duties and were relevant to Gora Bai's role. In her response under Section 313 CrPC, Sunna denied possession and alleged false implication because of her brother's police history, without making a specific factual challenge to the account of the search.

4. Issues : (i) Whether recovery from the accused's clothing attracted Section 50 and whether the notice and written choice communicated the substantive right to search before a Gazetted Officer or Magistrate, including the female-search requirement, rather than assuming that the suspect knew the law. (ii) Whether recording the informer's message, informing the SDO(P), and then informing the immediate superior when the police party returned and the FIR was registered satisfied the Court's analysis under Section 42. (iii) Whether the chronology of obtaining the scale and the asserted non-production of the malkhana register created material doubt about the search, sample identity, seals, deposit and transmission to the laboratory. (iv) Whether Gora Bai's Raksha Samiti service and contact with the police station made her evidence unreliable, and what scrutiny official evidence required. (v) Whether Sections 52 and 57 had been breached and whether the conviction and four-year sentence should be disturbed.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied Section 50 because the packet was allegedly concealed inside Sunna's Kurti. It rejected the proposed additional requirement that the officer expressly state that the choice arose under “Section 50”: the law requires actual awareness of the Gazetted Officer or Magistrate alternative, not prescribed words. It also rejected a general presumption that a rural accused already knows the safeguard. What mattered was that Ex. P-2 communicated the right, Ex. P-3 recorded Sunna's choice, and a female officer then searched her. The Court therefore found strict compliance on the proved facts, while accepting the Constitution Bench's rule that failure to communicate the right would imperil a conviction based solely on the contraband recovered in the personal search. As to Section 42, the contemporaneous diary recorded the message, its dispatch to the SDO(P) and his absence. On the party's return, the Town Inspector, who was the immediate superior, received the Dehati Nalishi, registered the FIR and took over the investigation. Giving information to the SDO(P), a higher officer, was not prohibited. The Court found compliance in that sequence. The weighing scale concerned preparation for the raid. The oral accounts differed as to whether it arrived before the messenger returned, but the diary established the sequence and no essential search fact depended on that difference. As to custody, the officer's and appellant's signatures on sealed packets A/A2, the three-packet malkhana entry 29/16 and certificate Ex. P-16, dispatch on the next day, sealed receipt by the FSL on 16 February, and its report dated 19 February linked the tested sample to the seizure. Those particulars answered the objection that the register had not been produced. The Court considered Gora Bai's statutory duties to assist the public and found that her station visits and honorarium alone did not establish bias. Applying careful scrutiny rather than automatic exclusion of official witnesses, it found no concrete basis for calling her a police pocket witness and considered her evidence with the raid records. Finally, the Court found that the arrest and case had been promptly communicated to the Town Inspector and that Section 52 had been complied with. Gurbax Singh's treatment of Sections 52 and 57 as directory did not reduce the separate requirement of strict compliance with Section 50. On the evidence as a whole, the Court affirmed guilt beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. It affirmed the Special Judge's conviction dated 26 March 2021 under Sections 8(c)/22(b) of the NDPS Act and the sentence of four years' rigorous imprisonment, a ₹10,000 fine and six months' imprisonment in default. The Court declined to reduce the term within the stated statutory range for intermediate quantity. Sunna, already in jail, was directed to serve the remaining sentence. A copy of the judgment was to be supplied to her free of cost, and the trial record returned with a copy for compliance.

Sunna v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 2442/2021, 12/04/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (936) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal appeals — separate trials / record integrity - Applying A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Cr.A. 1306/2021 (31.10.2021), the Court decided together the four appeals arising from the same trial, while leaving Raju and Mukesh's appeals from their separate trial for a separate judgment. Evidence from one trial cannot automatically be read against separately tried accused.

Conviction appeal — counsel's refusal to argue - The Court observed that Surya Baksh Singh v. State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, quoting K.S. Panduranga, permits an appeal to be decided on its merits from the record when counsel remains absent or refuses to assist after an appropriate opportunity, but forbids dismissal for default simpliciter and recognises appropriate arrangements, as a matter of prudence, for an appellant in jail. The Bench considered the complete record and available written submissions despite Chhuttan's counsel's silence.

Evidence — related, interested and injured witnesses - The Court observed that Mahavir Singh, (2016) 10 SCC 220, Raju, (2012) 12 SCC 701, State of U.P. v. Kishanpal, (2008) 16 SCC 73, Sudhakar, (2018) 5 SCC 435, and Sarwan Singh, (2003) 1 SCC 240 require careful scrutiny of credibility rather than categorical rejection based on kinship or interest. Enmity requires greater care. Sadhu Saran Singh, (2016) 4 SCC 357, and Mahesh, (2008) 13 SCC 271 do not treat the failure to examine unrelated bystanders as automatically fatal to the prosecution. Majju, (2001) 9 SCC 449, and State of U.P. v. Naresh, (2011) 4 SCC 324 recognise that proved injuries support a witness's presence at the occurrence, subject to material contradictions in the testimony. Vinod and Shiv Kumar had contemporaneous injuries; their accounts and those of Anita and Akash @ Akku withstood careful scrutiny and were consistent with the medical findings.

Witness contradictions — scene and delayed police statements - The Court observed that State of U.P. v. Naresh, (2011) 4 SCC 324, and Parbata, (2005) 13 SCC 398 distinguish ordinary variations from material contradictions; the adjoining houses of Maithili and Prakash explained the differing descriptions of the place. V.K. Mishra, (2015) 9 SCC 588, and Sunil Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (2005) 9 SCC 283 do not permit an automatic adverse inference from delay in recording statements under Section 161 without a link to unfair practice; the three witnesses were named in the prompt FIR, one of them, an injured witness, was medically examined that day, and the investigator was not asked to explain the delay.

Motive — enmity as a double-edged circumstance - The Court observed that Anil Rai, (2001) 7 SCC 318, requires anxious scrutiny of both the possible motive for the crime and the risk of false implication; Matibar Singh, (2015) 16 SCC 168, recognises that proved enmity may support an otherwise credible account. Pressure to compromise in the earlier case, armed confrontation and eyewitness accounts consistent with the medical evidence led the Bench to accept motive without substituting it for proof.

Unlawful assembly — Section 149 IPC / common object - The Court observed that Lalji, (1989) 1 SCC 437, and Manjit Singh, (2019) 8 SCC 529, explain the requirement of an unlawful assembly of five or more persons, the inference of common object from conduct and weapons, and constructive liability for an offence committed in pursuit of that object or which the members knew was likely to be committed in its pursuit; an overt act by every member is unnecessary, while mere onlookers must not be implicated. The armed group's threats and concerted assaults proved the appellants' participation and common object.

FIR — prompt reporting as corroboration - The Court observed that Krishnan, (2003) 7 SCC 56, Jarnail Singh, 1993 Supp (3) SCC 91, and State of U.P. v. Harban Sahai, (1998) 6 SCC 50, treat an early detailed FIR as a check against later fabrication and corroboration of the informant's testimony. Vinod's 09:30 report of a 09:00 occurrence was consistent with his later testimony and the medical findings.

Dying declaration — fitness and reliability - The Court observed that Ramesh v. State of Haryana, (2017) 1 SCC 529, permits reliance on a voluntary, reliable declaration by a maker fit to make the statement and able to identify the assailant, without an inflexible requirement of corroboration. A Naib Tahsildar recorded Ajay's account naming Sunny, with medical fitness checks before and after recording; the Bench accepted it with the surrounding evidence.

Medical proof and causation — later death after sword injuries - The Court observed that the findings of firearm injuries and sharp-force head injuries were consistent with the distinct roles described by the eyewitnesses. Ajay's later death followed skull fractures and subdural bleeding. Applying the High Court Division Bench's Bablu @ Virendra Kumar (Cr.A. 427/2009, 21.12.2017), the Court held that complications arising from the inflicted injury did not break the causal connection; the repeated blows to a vital part of the body supported the finding of murder.

Alibi — positive proof after prosecution presence evidence - The Court observed that Vijay Pal v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, reproducing Binay Kumar Singh, holds that the prosecution retains the burden of proving the accused's presence and requires strict, positive proof of an alibi once that burden is discharged, while credible defence evidence may still raise a reasonable doubt. Chappa's doctor was not posted at the hospital then and could not authenticate the admission papers, so the claimed hospital admission did not exclude his presence at the occurrence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Four appeals against the judgment dated 25 October 2017 of the Additional Sessions Judge, Datia, in ST No. 131/2014 were heard together: Cr.A. 5631/2017 by Aakash and Chappa @ Harkishan, 6250/2017 by Chhuttan, 6251/2017 by Kadori @ Chunnilal, and 6252/2017 by Sunny. The prosecution alleged that on 29 May 2014 at about 09:00, Vinod Balmik, Badal, Ajay @ Ajju and Shiv Kumar were returning near Maithili's house. An earlier assault case and pressure on the complainant side to compromise supplied the alleged motive. The group named in the FIR included Raju, Mukesh, Aakash, Chappa, Chhuttan, Sunny and Kadori. The witnesses assigned 0.315 bore weapons to Raju, Mukesh and Chhuttan, 12 bore guns to Aakash and Chappa, a sword to Sunny and a lathi to Kadori. Kadori allegedly struck Vinod, the three 0.315 bore shooters inflicted Badal's facial and abdominal wounds, Sunny repeatedly struck Ajay's head with the sword, and Aakash and Chappa fired and allegedly struck Shiv Kumar with gun handles. Badal died at the scene; Ajay was treated in Datia and Gwalior, gave a declaration recorded by Naib Tahsildar Vinit Goyal, and died on 8 June. Vinod's FIR Ex. P/1 was lodged about 09:30. Vinod and Shiv Kumar had contemporaneous injury examinations. Badal's post-mortem identified three firearm entrance wounds with corresponding exit tracks; Ajay's examination and autopsy showed incised scalp wounds, skull fractures and subdural haematoma. The police recorded statements, prepared maps, recovered earth and cartridge, later seized firearms, sword and lathi, obtained FSL reports and filed the original and supplementary charge-sheets. Vinod, Anita, Shiv Kumar and Akash @ Akku testified as eyewitnesses. Except for Vinod's same-day statement, the other three police statements were taken on 23 June. Chappa offered hospital records through Dr. Omkar Singh Rai as an alibi. The trial court acquitted Rohit @ Golu and acquitted Chappa of an Arms Act Section 30 charge, but convicted the five appellants under Section 148 IPC, two counts of Section 302/149, and two counts of Section 323/149. It imposed three years' rigorous imprisonment for Section 148, two life terms for Section 302/149 and one year for each Section 323/149 count, with the fines and default terms specified in its order. All substantive sentences were to run concurrently. Raju and Mukesh were arrested after this trial judgment and tried separately; their listed appeals were not disposed of in this judgment. Some appellate counsel declined oral argument after final-hearing notice; counsel for Aakash, Chappa and Kadori supplied written submissions, while Chhuttan's counsel supplied none. The defence raised objections concerning related witnesses and delayed statements, differing descriptions of the scene, enmity, common object and the number of participants, the absence of an injury or fired cartridge attributable to a 12 bore gun, Ajay's intervening complications and Chappa's alibi. The State relied on the four eyewitnesses, injuries and medical support.

2. Precedents — Considered : A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Cr.A. 1306/2021, decided 31 October 2021, was applied at the outset: evidence in these appellants' trial could not be used against Raju and Mukesh in their separate trial; their appeals were left for independent determination. Surya Baksh Singh v. State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, reproduced K.S. Panduranga's six propositions on deciding an appeal on its merits when an appellant or counsel is absent: no dismissal for default simpliciter, no obligatory adjournment, record-based determination and appropriate arrangements for an accused in jail or legal assistance, as a matter of prudence. The Bench adopted that course after notice and counsel's failure to assist, and examined the trial record.

For related and injured witnesses, Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, required evidence that was cogent and had a ring of truth, with special care when assessing an interested or chance witness. Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, discussed the distinction between related and interested witnesses and the limits of those broad descriptions, cited Dalip Singh and Darya Singh within its quotation, and required discerning scrutiny of a relative hostile to the accused as a rule of prudence, rather than automatic corroboration. The Bench applied that requirement of careful scrutiny without treating the categories as conclusive. State of U.P. v. Kishanpal, (2008) 16 SCC 73, reiterated that otherwise credible, natural testimony cannot be rejected merely because the witness is related, while enmity calls for caution. Sudhakar v. State, (2018) 5 SCC 435, required the careful scrutiny described in Sarwan Singh as a rule of prudence, rather than treating the evidence as legally infirm; Sarwan Singh v. State of Punjab, (2003) 1 SCC 240, focused on whether the evidence was credible even without independent support. Sadhu Saran Singh v. State of U.P., (2016) 4 SCC 357, and Mahesh v. State of Maharashtra, (2008) 13 SCC 271, explained why absence of unrelated bystanders does not by itself undermine a trustworthy injured or related eyewitness. Majju v. State of M.P., (2001) 9 SCC 449, gave evidentiary significance to the presence of witnesses whose injuries were objectively proved. The Bench applied these together to Vinod and Shiv Kumar's injuries and the accounts of all four witnesses after scrutiny. State of U.P. v. Naresh, (2011) 4 SCC 324, also gave due weight to the testimony of injured witnesses, subject to examination for major discrepancies, and distinguished ordinary variations attributable to memory or shock from material contradictions. Parbata v. State of Rajasthan, (2005) 13 SCC 398, treated minor differences in descriptions of the scene as insufficient to reject natural and consistent witnesses; the Bench applied both to the adjoining houses and nearby junction.

V.K. Mishra v. State of Uttarakhand, (2015) 9 SCC 588, and Sunil Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (2005) 9 SCC 283, were applied to the 25-day delay in three Section 161 statements: delay is not automatically disqualifying, the investigator should be asked to explain, and the concern is the unfair introduction of witnesses to give false support to the prosecution. Anil Rai v. State of Bihar, (2001) 7 SCC 318, explained enmity's dual potential as motive or false implication and the need for anxious scrutiny; Matibar Singh v. State of U.P., (2015) 16 SCC 168, supported a motive inference from proved hostility when the eyewitness account survives testing. Lalji v. State of U.P., (1989) 1 SCC 437, explained the statutory requirement of five or more members, their shared object, offences committed in its pursuit or which the members knew were likely to be committed in its pursuit, and constructive liability without requiring an overt act by each member. Manjit Singh v. State of Punjab, (2019) 8 SCC 529, incorporated Sikandar Singh, Masalti and Subal Ghorai on formation of common object, its inference from the circumstances and the prohibition on implicating passive onlookers. The Bench applied these tests to the armed group whose members threatened and participated in the assault. Krishnan v. State, (2003) 7 SCC 56, Jarnail Singh v. State of Haryana, 1993 Supp (3) SCC 91, and State of U.P. v. Harban Sahai, (1998) 6 SCC 50, were quoted on the role of a prompt, detailed FIR in checking fabrication and corroborating testimony; Vinod's report followed within half an hour. Ramesh v. State of Haryana, (2017) 1 SCC 529, discussed the basis in necessity for admitting a dying declaration, the declarant's opportunity to identify the assailant, fitness, voluntariness and independence, and its possible sufficiency without mandatory corroboration; Ajay's declaration was accepted in the circumstances in which it was made and alongside the other evidence. Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (2015) 4 SCC 749, reproduced Binay Kumar Singh on Section 11 alibi: prosecution presence proof remains necessary, the accused must then positively exclude his presence at the occurrence, and reliable defence evidence raising reasonable doubt can still matter; Chappa's witness could not prove the hospital documents. The High Court Division Bench Bablu @ Virendra Kumar v. State of M.P., Cr.A. 427/2009 (21.12.2017), was followed on complications caused by the inflicted injuries.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 141 and 149 supplied the framework of an unlawful assembly of five or more persons, common object and constructive liability; Section 148 punished armed rioting. Section 302/149 (two deaths) and Section

323/149 (two injured persons) were the affirmed convictions. Section 294, Section 307 and Arms Act Sections 25/27 appeared in registration or charge-sheet history, while the trial court's Section 30 Arms Act acquittal of Chappa was not reversed. CrPC Section 161 governed witness statements and the examination of delay or omissions; Section 164 governed some witness statements. Ajay's separate dying declaration was recorded by the Naib Tahsildar. Section 174 concerned the death intimation, and Section 299 was mentioned in the later charge-sheet history concerning absconding accused. Vijay Pal's quoted alibi discussion invoked Evidence Act Section 11.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the Bench could decide the four connected appeals on the record of their common trial despite counsel's unwillingness to argue, while keeping Raju and Mukesh's separate-trial appeals outside this judgment. (ii) Whether Badal's and Ajay's deaths were homicidal, Ajay's later complications were caused by the sword injuries, and medical findings supported the different eyewitness descriptions; whether Vinod and Shiv Kumar were injured at the occurrence. (iii) Whether four related eyewitnesses, including two injured witnesses, were credible after careful scrutiny in the face of the non-examination of unrelated neighbours, old hostility, allegedly inconsistent descriptions of the place and 25-day delay in three police statements; what corroboration the prompt FIR provided. (iv) Whether a group that had come armed to demand a compromise shared Section 149 common object, as opposed to an unplanned encounter or a group below the statutory number, and whether all appellants could be constructively liable notwithstanding distinct weapons and blows. (v) Whether Ajay's fitness-certified declaration identifying Sunny as the sword assailant was reliable. (vi) Whether the weapon recoveries materially supported the prosecution and whether the lack of 12 bore injury or fired cartridge undermined the identified group role. (vii) Whether Chappa's claimed hospital admission excluded his presence once prosecution evidence was accepted. The separately tried co-accused's appeals, Rohit's unchallenged acquittal and Chappa's Arms Act acquittal were not the subject of an adverse decision in these appeals.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench separated Raju and Mukesh's appeals in accordance with A.T. Mydeen because their trial evidence was distinct. Applying Surya Baksh Singh and the quoted K.S. Panduranga conditions, it held that engaged counsel's refusal to assist after prior notice did not compel adjournment or a default dismissal. It read the entire record and available written submissions, then decided the appeals on their merits. Badal's autopsy showed three firearm tracks and death caused by firearm injuries to vital organs; Ajay's earlier incised scalp wounds, later fractures and subdural haematoma established death from head injury and coma. The medical examinations documented Vinod's and Shiv Kumar's simple injuries close in time to the occurrence. The absence of substantial cross-examination on cause of death and the consistency between the injuries and the accounts supported both homicidal findings.

The Bench evaluated Vinod (PW1), Anita (PW2), Shiv Kumar (PW3) and Akash @ Akku (PW4) individually, without presuming credibility merely because they were relatives. Vinod and Shiv Kumar's contemporaneous injuries supported their natural presence at the occurrence; Vinod's 09:30 report identified the assailants and essential roles, and the eyewitness descriptions of three shots to Badal and a sword attack on Ajay matched medical evidence. Anita and Akash withstood material cross-examination. The lack of unrelated witnesses alone did not displace their credible accounts. Maithili's and Prakash's houses adjoined on the spot map; descriptions as near a house, at its door or near the junction did not amount to a material contradiction going to the root of the case. The omission of Vinod's "three or four" blows and other minor details was assessed in the context of the entire evidence, without treating each variation as a material alteration of the account. The three delayed statements under Section 161 were from persons already named in the prompt FIR; Shiv Kumar was medically examined on the day, and the investigating officer was not asked why he delayed their statements. The Bench found no demonstrated unfair practice or reason to reject their evidence solely because of the delay. Existing enmity could have prompted either the crime or the false implication of additional persons, so it examined the specific weapon roles against the injuries. The armed group's demand for compromise, the unarmed victims, no injury to any appellant and the concerted assault led the Court to reject the suggestion of a sudden fight.

Under Lalji and Manjit Singh, the Court inferred a shared object from the conduct and attack of five or more armed members, while the named appellants were active participants rather than incidental onlookers. Chhuttan was one of the three firearm assailants of Badal, Sunny's sword blows to Ajay were directly attributed by eyewitnesses and Ajay's declaration, Kadori's lathi blows to Vinod matched injuries, and Aakash and Chappa's use of firearms and gun handles supported their participation in the unlawful assembly. Section 149 extended responsibility for both deaths and injuries without requiring a fatal blow by each, after membership and object were established. Vinod's prompt report corroborated his account against the suggestion of a later fabrication; it did not replace the need to test the testimony. Naib Tahsildar Goyal obtained medical fitness certificates before and after recording Ex. P/16 in conditions of relative privacy, and Ajay identified Sunny; the Bench treated minor variations as nonfatal and accepted the declaration under Ramesh. As to Ajay's death ten days later, the medical evidence linked the complications to the head blows; no independent cause of death was proved, and repeated sword blows to a vital part of the body supported the intention and knowledge required for murder under the principle applied by the High Court in Bablu. Finally, Chappa's doctor was not posted at the PHC at the relevant time and could not identify the maker's signatures on the alleged admission records, so the plea of alibi was not proved by positive evidence. The prosecution's burden to prove presence did not lessen because alibi was pleaded; its credible evidence of presence was assessed before the alibi. The cumulative proof sustained each appellant's convictions beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed all four appeals. The five appellants' convictions under Section 148, two counts of Section 302 read with Section 149 and two counts of Section 323 read with Section 149 IPC, and the sentences imposed at trial, including the direction that the substantive terms run concurrently, were affirmed. No reduction of the life sentences was made. Aakash, Chappa @ Harkishan, Chhuttan and Kadori @ Chunnilal, then on bail, had their bonds cancelled and were directed to surrender to the trial court within one month; Sunny was already in jail and was to serve the remaining term. The judgment was directed to be sent to the trial court for compliance. The appeals of separately tried Raju and Mukesh remained for separate judgments; Rohit @ Golu's trial acquittal had not been appealed by the State.

Sunny v. State of Madhya Pradesh and connected appeals of Aakash and Ors., Chhuttan, and Kadori, Cr.A. no. 6252/2017 & 5631/2017 & 6250/2017 & 6251/2017, 06/07/2026, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (937) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation autonomy — no compulsory arrest or charge-sheet - Quoting and applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the Court held that Section 482 could not be used to direct the police to arrest named persons, seize property and file a charge-sheet regardless of the evidence. That authority drew on M.C. Abraham, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on the cautious exercise of the discretion to arrest under Section 41 CrPC. An FIR does not invariably require arrest or result in a charge-sheet. The quoted passage also referred to Divine Retreat Centre, (2008) 3 SCC 542, which warned that judicial orders having drastic consequences for persons who have not been heard require procedural fairness.

Investigation completion — Section 173(1) CrPC - The Bench separately applied the statutory requirement to complete investigation without unnecessary delay, referring also to Section 193 BNSS as its counterpart. The investigating officer must investigate, decide whether a charge-sheet or closure report is warranted, and submit the appropriate report promptly. The Court refused the informant's request for a predetermined result, but directed lawful completion of the investigation and gave him liberty to approach the Superintendent of Police with a grievance.

Affected-person hearing — limit of the judicial intervention considered - Divine Retreat Centre v State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, as reproduced in D. Venkatasubramaniam, required a reasonable opportunity of hearing before the judicial investigation order under consideration, which arose from anonymous allegations and had drastic consequences for reputation. D. Venkatasubramaniam also set aside coercive directions against persons who had neither been impleaded nor heard, and required reasons consistent with the statutory purposes of Section 482.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suraj, the informant in Crime No. 62/2024 registered on 21 February 2024 at Police Station Khaniyadhana, District Shivpuri, filed Misc. Criminal Case No. 42326/2024 under Section

482 CrPC. He asserted that the police had taken no further action and had not arrested respondent Nos. 3 and 4. He sought a direction for their arrest and for the filing of a charge-sheet. The assertion of inaction was the applicant's submission; the Court did not find that the officers had acted mala fide.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was extensively quoted in paragraph 4 and directly applied in paragraph 5. It disapproved an earlier High Court order directing the police to record witness statements, arrest suspects, seize property and file a charge-sheet, since those discretionary steps depend on the evidence and circumstances. The police have a statutory duty to investigate, but a court should normally neither direct how the investigation is to proceed nor prescribe its conclusion through Section 482. Investigation may result in a charge-sheet or a finding that no case is made out. Inherent power may be exercised to give effect to an order under the Code, prevent abuse of court process or secure the ends of justice; it must be used sparingly and with recorded reasons. This authority formed the basis for refusing Suraj's requested coercive directions.

The passage in D. Venkatasubramaniam quotes M.C. Abraham v State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649: Section 41 CrPC permits an officer to arrest without warrant in specified circumstances, but does not invariably require arrest; the officer may first investigate whether arrest is necessary. Arrest encroaches on personal liberty and affects reputation, so the power requires caution in light of the offence and the person concerned. The same Supreme Court extract refers to Divine Retreat Centre v State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on a fair hearing before a judicial investigation order based on an anonymous petition that threatened the affected person's reputation. It criticises casual, unreasoned directions issued without hearing those affected. That requirement concerns the judicial intervention described; it does not establish a general entitlement to prior notice before an ordinary police investigation.

The Bench's separate conclusion that investigation must be completed promptly rested on Section 173(1) CrPC and the BNSS counterpart stated in the order.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC preserved the High Court's limited inherent powers; a direction requiring arrest and a predetermined charge-sheet would not be a proper exercise of that jurisdiction. Section 41 CrPC arose in the quoted Supreme Court authority and leaves the decision to arrest to the investigating officer, subject to its conditions and safeguards. Section 173(1) CrPC expressly requires completion of investigation without unnecessary delay; the order refers alongside it to Section 193 BNSS as its counterpart. A closure report and a charge-sheet were identified as possible outcomes of investigation, rather than remedies between which the informant could choose.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the informant could invoke Section 482 to compel the police to arrest two named persons and file a charge-sheet in the registered crime. (ii) If those outcomes could not be dictated, what duty remained on the officer as to the time for completing the investigation and its lawful conclusion. (iii) What relief, if any, could address the applicant's grievance without substituting a judicial decision for the investigating officer's discretion.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Bench held that arrest and the filing of a charge-sheet could not be compelled through this application. Registration of an FIR does not automatically require arrest, and investigation need not result in arrest or prosecution if the material collected does not support it. Directing both specified steps would amount to supervising the investigation by predetermining its method and result. The quoted Supreme Court authority also warns of the consequences for liberty and reputation and of the need for a hearing when a judicial direction affects persons who are not before the court.

Section 173(1) CrPC requires completion of investigation without unnecessary delay. The officer cannot leave it pending indefinitely; he must decide whether an offence is made out and submit the appropriate final report, whether a closure report or a charge-sheet, as early as possible. This duty is consistent with investigative independence: it requires a decision according to law without dictating what the decision must be.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the application. The prayers for the arrest of respondent Nos. 3 and 4 and for a direction to file a charge-sheet were refused. The investigating officer was directed to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take the necessary steps according to law. Suraj was given liberty to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Shivpuri, with any grievance, which the Superintendent was to consider in accordance with law. The Court neither ordered arrest nor mandated a charge-sheet, and did not decide the merits of the underlying crime.

Suraj v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 42326/2024, 01/03/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (938) Prev Next

Headnote :- Criminal procedure — Sections 320 and 482 CrPC — verified compromise — independent legal assessment - Narinder Singh and Others v. State of Punjab and Another, (2014) 6 SCC 466, distinguishes statutory compounding from quashing under the inherent power. Settlement may support relief even for non-compoundable offences, but the High Court must exercise that power sparingly to secure justice or prevent abuse of process. The Court must assess the predominantly civil character of the dispute, whether it has been fully settled, whether the prospects of conviction are remote and whether continuation would be oppressive. Serious offences affecting society, and the special-statute offences or offences committed by public servants in their official capacity specified in the authority, cannot be quashed merely by agreement. Applying that framework, the High Court held that the Principal Registrar's verification of the compromise did not itself entitle the applicant to quashing.

Compromise-based quashing — alleged forged sale deed and death certificate — government agencies - The alleged execution of a sale deed in a deceased person's name and the false description of the applicant's wife in a death certificate involved misuse of government agencies to obtain property. Applying Narinder Singh, the High Court held that this aspect of the alleged documents took the matter beyond a simple private dispute. It refused to quash Crime No. 324/2014 and Sessions Trial No. 663/2014.

Section 482 CrPC — settlement timing — trial stage undisclosed - Paragraph 29.7 of Narinder Singh, (2014) 6 SCC 466, requires the Court to consider whether settlement occurs during investigation or at an initial stage of evidence, rather than when evidence is nearly complete or the matter is at arguments, when restraint is ordinarily required. Its separate example concerning a conviction under Section 307 did not arise in the present case. The High Court treated the applicant's failure to disclose the trial stage as material and dismissed the application, without presuming that evidence had been completed or a conviction recorded.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In M.Cr.C. No. 46961/2019, Suraj invoked Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 324/2014 registered at Police Station Gole Ka Mandir, Gwalior, and Sessions Trial No. 663/2014. The prosecution concerned Sections 420, 467, 468, 471, 424, 416, 419 and 120-B IPC. Complainant Jagdish Singh alleged that his uncle Maalsingh exclusively owned and possessed the identified house properties, was issueless, and had kept Jagdish with him to look after him. The complaint alleged that Suraj Singh procured a sale deed dated 28 February 2007 in favour of his elder brother Chanda Singh and a woman represented as Chanda Singh's widow, although Chanda Singh had died in a road accident on 24 February 1992. A motor-accident claim award was said to have been made in Suraj Singh's favour. According to the complainant, another person impersonated the deceased Chanda Singh and signed the deed to obtain Maalsingh's property, with accused Nos. 5 and 6 acting as witnesses.

The complaint further alleged that Suraj, described as illiterate, used his deceased brother's mark-sheet to work in Surya Factory, Malanpur, under Chanda Singh's name. Smt. Rajni, described as the wife of Suraj Singh alias Chanda Singh, died on 25 July 2011. It was alleged that a false death certificate named Chanda Singh as her husband, and that accused Nos. 2–4, her sons, represented themselves as Chanda Singh's children although they were Suraj's children. These were the complainant's allegations concerning forged identities and government documents; they were not findings of guilt.

A civil suit challenged the sale deed as forged and void. Maalsingh died on 30 January 2012, after which Jagdish said that he had been substituted as plaintiff in the plaint. Jagdish alleged that the police had taken no action on his repeated complaints, leading him to file a complaint under Section 200 CrPC. An order under Section 156(3) resulted in registration of the FIR. The police investigated and submitted a charge-sheet, and the applicant faced the stated sessions trial, instituted in 2014.

Suraj submitted that the dispute had been resolved. An application under Section 320 CrPC had not been accepted because the offences were non-compoundable. In compliance with the High Court's order dated 11 December 2019, the Principal Registrar verified the compromise and submitted a report. Suraj relied on that verification to seek quashing of the sessions trial. The State opposed relief on the grounds of the alleged forgery and the applicant's failure to disclose the stage reached by the trial. The State cited Narinder Singh, which the High Court subsequently quoted and applied in its own reasoning.

2. Precedents — Considered : Narinder Singh and Others v. State of Punjab and Another, (2014) 6 SCC 466, was cited by the State and then considered by the Court. Paragraph 7 reproduces paragraph 29 of that judgment, including subparagraphs 29.1–29.7. The authority concerns the limits on the exercise of inherent jurisdiction when settlement is relied on to terminate non-compoundable criminal proceedings. Applying that framework, the Court considered the public aspect of the alleged forgery and the applicant's failure to disclose the trial stage, and refused quashing. The authority was thus applied in the decision, rather than merely mentioned in the State's submissions.

The quoted passage distinguishes statutory compounding under Section 320 from quashing under the inherent power in Section 482. A settlement may support relief under Section 482 even for a non-compoundable offence, but the power must be exercised sparingly and cautiously, to secure the ends of justice or prevent abuse of the process of the court. The High Court must form an opinion on either of those purposes. Verification that the parties have settled does not itself establish that the legal conditions for quashing are satisfied.

The quotation distinguishes offences having a serious impact on society from predominantly private disputes. Heinous offences of mental depravity, including murder, rape and dacoity, do not become private disputes merely because the victim and offender settle. The passage also excludes quashing merely on compromise for the specified offences under special statutes, such as the Prevention of Corruption Act, or offences committed by public servants while acting in that capacity. Cases of a predominantly civil character, especially commercial, matrimonial and family disputes, require a different assessment when the parties have resolved their entire dispute. The Court must examine whether the prospect of conviction is remote and bleak and whether continuation would cause oppression, prejudice or extreme injustice. In the present order, the Court treated the allegations as extending beyond a simple private dispute because government agencies had allegedly been misused.

Subparagraph 29.6 concerns Section 307 IPC. It describes such offences as generally crimes against society, but states that the statutory description alone is insufficient. The Court may examine whether the charge is supported by evidence, including the nature of the injury, whether a vital part of the body was affected, the weapon used and the medical material, and assess the prospects of conviction on a prima facie basis. The possibility that settlement may restore harmony between the parties may also be relevant to the assessment described in that passage. Section 307 was not among the charges in the present case.

Subparagraph 29.7 emphasises the timing of settlement and the procedural stage. A settlement reached shortly after the alleged offence, while investigation is continuing, or after framing of charge when evidence has not begun or is at an initial stage, may receive more favourable consideration, subject to the necessary prima facie assessment. Where evidence is nearly complete or has concluded, or the matter is at arguments, the High Court should normally refrain from quashing because the trial court can decide the merits. The order did not identify the stage reached by Suraj's trial. The material consideration here was that the trial had been instituted in 2014 and its current stage had not been disclosed. Without that information, the Court could not treat the compromise as sufficient to terminate the prosecution.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the High Court's inherent jurisdiction and the purposes for which proceedings could be quashed on compromise. Section 320 provided the distinct statutory procedure for compounding; according to the applicant, that procedure had not resulted in compounding because the offences were non-compoundable. The Court refused relief after applying the principles governing its inherent power. It did not hold that inability to compound automatically excluded jurisdiction under Section 482.

Sections 200 and 156(3) CrPC formed the procedural background: the complainant's private complaint and the order leading to an FIR after alleged police inaction.

Sections 420, 467, 468, 471, 424, 416, 419 and 120-B IPC identified the stated prosecution for cheating, forgery, use of documents, removal or concealment of property, personation and conspiracy.

4. Issues : (i) Whether a compromise verified by the Principal Registrar, after the Section 320 application had been unsuccessful, required the High Court to quash non-compoundable criminal proceedings under Section 482, or whether the Court was still required to make an independent judicial assessment.

(ii) Whether allegations of using a deceased person's identity in a sale deed and falsifying a death certificate through government agencies could be treated as merely a private property dispute which the complainant and accused could settle for purposes of terminating prosecution.

(iii) Whether the applicant's failure to disclose the stage reached by a sessions trial instituted in 2014 was material to the safeguards concerning the timing of settlement and the procedural stage set out in Narinder Singh.

5. Ratio / Findings : Verification established the fact that the parties had compromised; it did not determine whether the proceedings should be quashed in light of the governing legal principles and public interest. By reproducing Narinder Singh's distinction between Sections 320 and 482, the Court recognised that a non-compoundable offence may still be quashed through a properly justified exercise of inherent power. Such an order nevertheless requires an assessment of the ends of justice or prevention of abuse of process, subject to the limits stated in that authority. Settlement did not confer an automatic entitlement to quashing.

The Court's assessment rested on the allegations in the FIR. A sale deed was allegedly executed in favour of a person who had died long before the transaction. Rajni's death certificate allegedly described her as Chanda Singh's widow, although she was the applicant's wife. The Court considered these allegations to involve misuse of government agencies in an attempt to obtain property. It therefore held that the case was not simply a private dispute between two parties. On that reasoning, compromise did not resolve the wider concern arising from the alleged documents. The Court did not classify the applicant as a public servant or treat the alleged use of government agencies as a charge of corruption.

The timing of settlement was a further material consideration. The State pointed out that the sessions trial had been instituted in 2014, and the Court expressly noted that the applicant had not disclosed its stage. Narinder Singh requires sufficient information to distinguish investigation or an early stage of evidence from nearly completed evidence, arguments or the specified post-conviction situation. The applicant provided no particulars of the trial stage.

After considering the allegations and the quoted Supreme Court principles, the High Court held that no case had been made out to quash either the FIR or the sessions trial. Its refusal rested on the public aspect of the alleged documents and the failure to disclose the trial stage.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application in paragraphs 8–9. Crime No. 324/2014 and Sessions Trial No. 663/2014 were not quashed, and the existing prosecution against the applicant continued.

Suraj v. Jagdish Singh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 46961/2019, 22/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (939) Prev Next

Headnote :- NDPS Act — cannabis cultivation / conscious act — The Court held that the recording of land in Ram Singh's name in the revenue records and the alleged presence of 402 plants in a field did not establish that he had consciously cultivated them. He was absent during the search. The identification of the field and the account of the seizure relied on the other accused's alleged confessional statements; neither his exclusive possession nor cultivation by him was proved. Section 20(a) requires proof that the accused consciously engaged in cultivation; land title alone did not establish that act in this case.

NDPS Act — accused-wise cultivation proof — The Court found that Suraj's later Medical Board certificate could not be rejected without considering the searching officer's admission that his sight was weak on the date of the raid. The defence doctor could not specify his precise condition on that earlier date or say whether he could undertake agricultural work. The Patwari's inspections did not corroborate the presence of a cannabis crop, the identification of the relevant plots was uncertain, and no land was recorded in Ramkali's name. Taken together with the deficiencies in the evidence of the raid, these circumstances left cultivation by Suraj or Ramkali unproved.

Evidence — official and seizure witnesses — The Court held that P.N. Pal's evidence could not be rejected merely because he was a police officer; the evidence of a sole witness may suffice if reliable. Both independent witnesses to the raid had turned hostile, and no other member of the raiding police party testified. His account therefore required close scrutiny in light of the defence evidence and the evidence concerning the land and crops. On that assessment, the Court found his evidence unreliable in this case.

NDPS Act — household ganja possession — The Court found that the separate alleged recovery of 1.25 kg of ganja from an almirah in Suraj and Ramkali's house was not proved, since the unsupported evidence of the sole searching officer had been found unreliable.

Criminal appeal — absent appellants — Relying on Surya Baksh Singh v. State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, the Court examined the trial record and heard the prosecutor after the appellants repeatedly failed to appear despite notice. It decided the appeal against conviction on the merits and ultimately acquitted all three appellants, rather than dismissing the appeal for default.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suraj Singh, his wife Ramkali and his brother Ram Singh appealed against the judgment dated 8 August 2012 passed by the Special Judge (NDPS Act), Shivpuri, in Special Sessions Trial No. 1/2010. On 16 March 2010, ASI P.N. Pal received information that Suraj and Ramkali sold ganja from their house and cultivated cannabis near it. The information was entered in the rojnamcha, and a report under Section 42 was sent to the SDO(P). His office acknowledged receipt while he was unavailable. Pal assembled a police party, accompanied by Krishna Kumar and Brikhbhan. According to the prosecution, notices for the search were given and Suraj and Ramkali's consent was recorded. An iron almirah was then searched, and 1 kg 250 g of ganja was recovered, along with a scale, cash and newspaper pieces. The prosecution further alleged the recovery of 485 plants weighing 12 kg 300 g from a field/courtyard attributed to them. After their alleged confessional statements, Exs. P-23 and P-24, a further 402 plants weighing 9 kg 100 g were allegedly recovered from a field attributed to Ram Singh. Samples of the household ganja and both lots of plants were sealed and sent for FSL testing. Revenue records showed survey Nos. 743 and 719 in Ram Singh's name and Nos. 730/A, 732/2 and 747/3 in Suraj's name. Neither record showed any land in Ramkali's name. The trial court convicted all three of the cultivation offence recorded as Section 20(a)(b)(i), and additionally convicted Suraj and Ramkali under Section 20(b)(ii)(A) for the household ganja. It imposed four years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹4,000 fine for each offence, with imprisonment in default, without directing the two sentences to run concurrently. While on bail pending appeal, the appellants subsequently failed to appear before the Registry and remained unrepresented at consecutive listings despite express notice that the appeal could be heard. The High Court examined the trial record and heard the Public Prosecutor.

2. Precedents — Considered : Surya Baksh Singh v. State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, is the sole Supreme Court judgment expressly invoked in this High Court decision. In its procedural order dated 3 May 2018, reproduced in paragraph 1, the Court relied on that judgment to examine the record and hear the prosecutor after the appellants and their counsel remained absent despite an earlier warning.

3. Statutes considered : Section 20(a) of the NDPS Act required proof of cultivation, which the Court interpreted as a conscious act to be proved against each accused. Sections 42 and 57 were referred to in the account of the reporting of information and seizure. Notices under Section 50 were described in connection with the search of the premises/field, but the appellate reasoning did not independently decide a breach of those provisions. The appeal against conviction was brought under Section 374(2) CrPC, and statements under Section 161 CrPC were recorded during the investigation.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the alleged recovery of cannabis from a field, or the recording of that field in an accused's name, established a conscious act of cultivation under Section 20(a), particularly in Ram Singh's case, when he was absent during the search and neither his exclusive possession nor an independent link to cultivation was shown. (ii) Whether the evidence proved cultivation by Suraj or Ramkali, considering Suraj's impaired vision, the Medical Board certificate, the limits of the defence doctor's evidence, the searching officer's admission, the Patwari's crop inspections and the evidence concerning the plots. (iii) Whether Pal's account alone proved the seizures when neither independent witness supported the prosecution and no other member of the raiding party testified. (iv) Whether the alleged recovery of 1.25 kg of household ganja and the separate conviction for possession could be sustained in light of the finding about Pal's credibility and the absence of evidence linking ownership of the house to the accused. (v) Whether, after the appellants repeatedly remained absent despite notice, the Court could and should decide the appeal against conviction on its merits after examining the trial record and hearing the Public Prosecutor.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court held that "cultivating" under Section 20 presupposes a conscious act by the accused. The recording of land in an accused's name cannot replace proof of cultivation by that accused. Ram Singh was not shown to have been present at the scene or in exclusive possession of the land. The asserted identification and search of his field followed the other appellants' alleged confessional statements; no notice was given to him and no consent was obtained from him. There was insufficient proof that the 402 plants were on his land or had been cultivated by him. As to Suraj, the trial court rejected a medical certificate obtained four months after the search, overlooking Pal's admission that Suraj had limited vision at the time of the search. Dr. Puranik could not specify Suraj's precise condition on the earlier date or state whether he could undertake agricultural work, but Pal's admission materially supported the certificate. The High Court considered that evidence together with the Patwari's observation of vegetable crops rather than cannabis, the absence of reliable identification of the plots and house, and the lack of evidence attributing cultivation to Ramkali, in whose name no land was recorded. Krishna Kumar and Brikhbhan did not support the prosecution, and no other member of the raiding party was examined. Pal's evidence could not be rejected merely because he was a police officer, and the number of witnesses was not decisive. Nevertheless, his evidence required close scrutiny and was found unreliable when assessed with the other evidence. The alleged recovery from the house consequently also failed: no documentary evidence of ownership of the house or of its connection with the recorded land was produced, and the only examined witness to the search was unreliable. The judgment narrated the malkhana and FSL steps, including the defence questions about unnumbered register entries. The decisive ground, however, was the lack of credible proof of seizure and cultivation; the Court did not expressly find that identification of the substance in the laboratory or continuity of the samples had failed. At the procedural stage, relying on Surya Baksh Singh, the High Court examined the record and decided the appeal on its merits despite the appellants' repeated absence. It did not presume guilt from their non-appearance.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal and set aside the judgment and all sentences dated 8 August 2012. Suraj Singh, Ramkali and Ram Singh were acquitted of every charge. This set aside both the household ganja convictions of Suraj and Ramkali and the cultivation convictions of all three appellants. As the appellants were on bail, their bail bonds were discharged and they were no longer required to attend in this case.

Suraj Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P., Cr.A. no. 638/2012, 09/05/2018, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (940) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC — mutation dispute — fiscal entries — Mutation entries serve fiscal purposes and do not establish title. A dispute over mutation does not, by itself, prevent civil or criminal proceedings concerning an allegedly fraudulent sale transaction from continuing. The High Court rejected the applicants' objection based on the mutation dispute.

Civil suit and criminal complaint — allegedly deceptive sale deed — simultaneous proceedings — Applying Kishan Singh, (2010) 8 SCC 775, Syed Askari, (2009) 5 SCC 528, and Prem Raj, Supreme Court decision dated 2 April 2024 in SLP (Criminal) No. 9778/2018, the High Court ruled that a pending civil suit did not warrant quashing cognizance where the allegations concerning the sale deed also involved criminal ingredients. The principle in P. Swaroopa Rani permits civil and criminal proceedings to continue simultaneously; whether either should be stayed depends on the circumstances of the particular case. The finding of sufficient ground for taking cognizance was affirmed.

Evidence — civil and criminal proceedings — different standards of proof — independent findings — Iqbal Singh Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370, as quoted in the authorities relied on, requires civil cases to be decided on a preponderance of probabilities and criminal cases on proof beyond reasonable doubt, each on the evidence adduced in that proceeding. The quoted decisions in K.G. Premshanker and Vishnu Dutt Sharma reject the propositions associated with Karam Chand Ganga Prasad and V.M. Shah that civil findings automatically bind criminal courts or supersede criminal findings. Satish Chander Ahuja, (2021) 1 SCC 414, permits a civil court to consider evidence led in criminal proceedings; it does not make the other forum's findings automatically final.

Evidence Act, 1872 — Sections 40–43 — relevance and effect of previous judgments — K.G. Premshanker, (2002) 8 SCC 87, quoted in Syed Askari and Prem Raj, requires the court first to determine whether an earlier judgment is relevant under the statute and then to determine its legally permissible effect. The conclusiveness specified in Section 41 and other limited uses of previous judgments qualify the general rule that the proceedings are independent. Section 43 preserves the exceptions where the existence of a judgment is a fact in issue or is otherwise relevant. The High Court relied on these qualified principles in rejecting the contention that the pending civil suit barred criminal proceedings.

Parallel proceedings — priority of criminal proceedings — exceptions — M.S. Sheriff, AIR 1954 SC 397, quoted through Iqbal Singh Marwah in Prem Raj, ordinarily favours prompt criminal proceedings to preserve evidence and secure timely justice. The rule is not inflexible. The likelihood of embarrassment and special circumstances, including another proceeding nearing completion, may justify a different course; the possibility of conflicting findings alone does not. The High Court refused to quash cognizance. It neither stayed the civil suit nor directed that the proceedings follow a mandatory sequence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suraj Singh Dhakad and Others filed M.Cr.C. No. 23628/2024 under Section 482 CrPC challenging the order dated 19 May 2022 passed by the First Additional Sessions Judge, Shivpuri, in Criminal Revision No. 71/2021. The revisional court had affirmed the order dated 9 April 2021 passed by the Judicial Magistrate First Class, Pohri, in Criminal Case No. 161/2021, taking cognizance against the applicants for offences under Sections 420 and 120-B read with Section 34 IPC. Respondent No. 1, Shriwati Dhakad, stated that she was an illiterate resident of village Rasera, Police Station Bairad, District Shivpuri, and could not even sign her name. According to her, the Assistant Secretary of the Gram Panchayat informed her that a house had been sanctioned in her name and that she needed to register to receive the payment. Suraj Singh Dhakad allegedly took her to Pohri to register the house and crop. Rajendra Prajapati, Dharmendra and Naresh Dhakad, described as applicants Nos. 3–5, accompanied her. She alleged that she was taken to an office on two occasions, told that Suraj would construct the sanctioned house, instructed to say that she had received the amount if an officer asked, and induced to affix her thumb impressions on documents.

She alleged that those documents were used to procure a sale deed in respect of her land. Suraj Singh and Reena Dhakad, applicants Nos. 1 and 2, subsequently told her that they had purchased the land and obtained mutation in their favour. She denied having executed a sale deed or alienated her land and alleged that they threatened her when she resisted their claim. Her complaint referred to Survey Nos. 780/1, 777/1, 703/1, 702/1, 687/1, 639/1, 7/1 and 781, with a total area stated to be 16–17 bighas, allegedly transferred under the pretext that a house had been sanctioned for her.

She initially succeeded in challenging the mutation in the applicants' favour, but the Commissioner, Gwalior Division, allowed their appeal. In challenging the criminal proceedings, the applicants submitted that the High Court had set aside the mutation order on 6 December 2022 in M.P. No. 2828/2021 and that the Supreme Court had directed the parties to maintain status quo on 10 November 2023 in SLP (Civil) Diary No. 42723/2023. Relying on the mutation litigation and the pending civil suit concerning the same sale deed, they contended that taking cognizance in the criminal case was unlawful. The respondents opposed the application.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kishan Singh (Dead) through LRs v. Gurpal Singh and Others, (2010) 8 SCC 775 — Paragraphs 16–18 are reproduced in paragraph 7 of the judgment. They explain the different standards of proof and the independent adjudication of civil and criminal proceedings. Quoting Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, the decision states that civil cases are decided on a preponderance of probabilities, whereas the prosecution must prove a criminal case beyond reasonable doubt. Findings in one proceeding do not automatically bind the other, although earlier judgments may be relevant under Sections 41–43 of the Evidence Act. The extract also refers to the treatment of Karam Chand Ganga Prasad in Syed Askari and Vishnu Dutt Sharma. The High Court applied these principles in rejecting the contention that the pending civil proceedings barred the criminal case.

Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam and Another v. State (Delhi Administration) and Another, (2009) 5 SCC 528 — Paragraphs 24–29 are separately reproduced. They explain that, even where criminal proceedings receive priority, the civil suit must be decided on its own merits and evidence. *Th*e extract fr*o*m K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police explains the statutory rules governing previous judgments, res judicata in civil suits, the protection under Section 300 CrPC subject to its conditions, and the distinction between relevance and conclusiveness. It rejects a general rule that findings in one forum automatically bind the other. The High Court relied on this reasoning in rejecting the applicants' contention that the civil proceedings barred the criminal case.

K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police and Another, (2002) 8 SCC 87 — The decision is referred to in both the Syed Askari and Prem Raj extracts. Paragraphs 30–31 require the court first to determine whether a previous judgment is relevant under Sections 40–43 and then to determine the effect given to it by law. A previous final judgment may be relied on as the Evidence Act permits. Res judicata in civil suits and the protection against a further criminal trial under Section 300 operate subject to their respective conditions. Where civil and criminal proceedings arise from the same cause, a relevant judgment is not necessarily conclusive. Section 41 specifies the judgments that have conclusive effect; the effect of a judgment relevant under Sections 40, 42 or another provision must be assessed in its context. The quoted illustration of trespass explains that a civil decree concerning title and possession may materially affect a later prosecution for trespass, subject to the criminal court's assessment under the law. Whether a judgment is relevant for a limited purpose, such as motive or a fact in issue, depends on the circumstances of the case.

Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, (2005) 4 SCC 370 — This Constitution Bench decision is quoted or referred to in Kishan Singh, Syed Askari and Prem Raj. It explains that civil and criminal proceedings must be adjudicated independently under their different standards of proof; avoiding conflicting findings does not make one forum's findings final in the other. Its discussion of M.S. Sheriff also explains the preference for criminal proceedings and the exceptions to that preference. The Syed Askari extract reproduces paragraph 24 of Iqbal Singh Marwah, which addresses the delay that may result from the procedure for a court complaint under Sections 340, 341 and 343(2) CrPC and the consequent risk of losing evidence. That consideration supported rejection of the broad interpretation of the restriction on court complaints proposed in Iqbal Singh Marwah.

M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, AIR 1954 SC 397 — The reasoning of this Constitution Bench decision is reproduced through Iqbal Singh Marwah in Prem Raj. Paragraphs 15–16 ordinarily favour giving criminal proceedings priority because the public interest requires prompt punishment of the guilty and prompt vindication of the innocent while events and evidence remain fresh. The possibility of conflicting results does not, by itself, determine which proceeding should take priority; the likelihood of embarrassment and the particular circumstances must be considered. There is no inflexible rule. A civil case or another criminal proceeding nearing completion may justify a different course. The direction staying civil proceedings was made on the facts of M.S. Sheriff.

P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana — Paragraph 11 is reproduced in the Syed Askari extract. It states that civil and criminal proceedings may continue simultaneously and that a stay of either depends on the facts and circumstances of the case. This principle supported the refusal to quash cognizance merely because a civil suit was pending.

Prem Raj v. Poonamma Menon and Another, Supreme Court decision dated 2 April 2024 in SLP (Criminal) No. 9778/2018 — This is the third authority directly quoted by the High Court. The extract discusses K.G. Premshanker, Vishnu Dutt Sharma, Satish Chander Ahuja and the Constitution Bench decisions. It affirms the different standards of proof and rejects a universal rule that one court's findings bind the other, subject to the statutory rules governing the relevance and effect of earlier judgments. It also reproduces the reasoning in M.S. Sheriff on the preference for criminal proceedings and the exceptions to that preference. Applying this discussion, the High Court concluded that a pending civil suit did not, by itself, warrant quashing cognizance.

Karam Chand Ganga Prasad v. Union of India, (1970) 3 SCC 694 — The proposition from this decision is reproduced as part of counsel's submissions in the Prem Raj extract and is not accepted in the quoted authorities. The extracts from Syed Askari and Kishan Singh state that Karam Chand failed to consider the Constitution Bench decision in M.S. Sheriff and describe it as per incuriam or overruled. Vishnu Dutt Sharma v. Daya Sapra, (2009) 13 SCC 729, and K.G. Premshanker explain the contrary position set out in the judgment. V.M. Shah is also referred to in the K.G. Premshanker extract. These references explain why civil findings do not automatically prevail over criminal findings; the High Court did not formulate separate holdings on each of those decisions.

Satish Chander Ahuja v. Sneha Ahuja, (2021) 1 SCC 414 — The Prem Raj extract refers to this decision for the limited proposition that a civil court is not barred from considering evidence led in criminal proceedings. Such consideration does not make the criminal result automatically binding. The High Court did not decide the admissibility or weight of any particular criminal deposition in a civil suit.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC — The applicants invoked the High Court's inherent jurisdiction to challenge the order taking cognizance and its affirmance in revision. The question was whether the mutation dispute, litigation involving the civil status-quo order and the pending suit justified quashing those orders. The High Court declined to exercise its inherent powers on those grounds.

Sections 420 and 120-B read with Section 34 IPC — Cognizance was taken for these offences on a complaint alleging that thumb impressions and sale documents affecting an illiterate landholder had been obtained by deception.

Sections 40–43 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 — The quoted authorities explain the statutory rules governing the relevance and effect of previous judgments. The court must first determine relevance and then the effect permitted by law. The conclusiveness specified in Section 41 qualifies the general rule that findings in civil and criminal proceedings are independent. Under Section 43, judgments outside Sections 40–42 are generally irrelevant unless their existence is a fact in issue or another provision makes them relevant.

Sections 340, 341 and 343(2) CrPC — The quoted discussion in Iqbal Singh Marwah addresses delay in the procedure for a court complaint, including a preliminary inquiry, an appeal against an order directing a complaint, and the court's discretion to adjourn the complaint proceeding when the decision in the underlying judicial proceeding is under appeal. Section 476 of the old Code is mentioned in the account of the proceedings in M.S. Sheriff. These provisions arise in the quoted authorities; they are distinct from the provisions applied to Shriwati's complaint.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the pending mutation litigation and the asserted civil status-quo order concerning the property prevented the criminal complaint from proceeding, although mutation entries serve fiscal purposes and do not establish title.

(ii) Whether the pending civil suit concerning the same allegedly fraudulent sale deed required quashing of criminal cognizance, or whether the transaction alleged could have both civil consequences and criminal ingredients.

(iii) Whether, despite the different standards of proof, findings of fact in one forum automatically bind the other, and how the Evidence Act provisions governing previous judgments qualify the general rule.

(iv) Whether the preference for criminal proceedings stated in the quoted authorities imposes a mandatory rule governing the sequence or stay of proceedings.

(v) Whether the order taking cognizance and its affirmance in revision warranted interference on the grounds urged. Questions of title, the authenticity of the sale deed on the evidence, the guilt of individual applicants and the eventual outcome of either proceeding remained for determination by the appropriate forum.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — mutation entries serve fiscal purposes and are not documents of title. A dispute over those entries does not, by itself, prevent a civil suit or criminal prosecution from continuing. The Court therefore rejected the applicants' objection based on mutation. Their submissions concerning the High Court's mutation order and the Supreme Court's status-quo direction did not establish a bar to taking criminal cognizance.

A transaction may give rise to both a civil suit and a criminal complaint. Applying Kishan Singh, Syed Askari and Prem Raj, the Court explained that civil findings do not automatically govern a criminal adjudication merely because both concern the same subject. Civil cases are decided on a preponderance of probabilities, whereas the prosecution must prove a criminal case beyond reasonable doubt. Each proceeding must be decided on the evidence adduced in it. The possibility of different results does not, by itself, require criminal proceedings to be terminated. The independence of the proceedings remains subject to the statutory rules governing previous judgments. The discussion in K.G. Premshanker, reproduced in the authorities relied on by the High Court, requires the court to determine relevance under Sections 40–43 and then the permissible effect of the relevant judgment. Section 41 specifies the judgments that have conclusive effect. Other provisions may permit limited relevance, depending on the matters decided and the purpose for which the judgment is relied on. Res judicata in civil suits and Section 300 CrPC operate in their respective settings. The applicants could not, therefore, treat a pending civil suit as a binding adjudication that defeated criminal cognizance.

The quoted authorities reject the proposition that civil findings automatically bind criminal courts or supersede criminal findings. Their treatment of Karam Chand and V.M. Shah rests on the Constitution Bench decisions in Iqbal Singh Marwah and M.S. Sheriff, together with the principles discussed in K.G. Premshanker and Vishnu Dutt Sharma.

As to simultaneous proceedings and their timing, P. Swaroopa Rani permits civil and criminal proceedings to continue together. M.S. Sheriff explains the usual preference for criminal proceedings: delay may impair proof and unduly prolong uncertainty for the accused and the complainant. The preference is flexible. The likelihood of embarrassment and special circumstances, including another proceeding nearing completion, may justify a different course. The High Court relied on these principles in rejecting the objection based on the pending civil suit. It did not order a stay or prescribe a mandatory sequence for the proceedings.

In considering the allegation that sale documents had been obtained by deception, the Court observed that execution of a forged sale deed would also involve criminal ingredients. It found sufficient ground for taking cognizance and affirmed the orders of the courts below. The decision rejected a pre-trial challenge under the High Court's inherent powers. It did not establish that the prosecution had proved the sale deed to be forged, that the complainant's title had been established, or that mutation proved every applicant's guilt. The civil and criminal proceedings remained subject to independent determination in the respective forums.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC. It affirmed the order dated 19 May 2022 in Criminal Revision No. 71/2021 and the Judicial Magistrate's order dated 9 April 2021 taking cognizance in Criminal Case No. 161/2021. Cognizance for offences under Sections 420 and 120-B read with Section 34 IPC remained in place.

Suraj Singh Dhakad and Others v. Shriwati Dhakad and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 23628/2024, 19/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (941) Prev Next

Headnote :- Witness protection — witness protection scheme — fresh representation — Mahender Chawla v Union of India, Supreme Court Writ Petition (Criminal) No. 156/2016, judgment dated 5 December 2018, was cited for the nationwide application of the Witness Protection Scheme. The petitioner alleged that he and other witnesses were being threatened. The High Court directed the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, to take the necessary action to protect him if he submitted a fresh representation under the Scheme.

Arrest and result of investigation — judicial restraint — Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, which was quoted at length, the High Court declined to direct the police to arrest the private respondents or file a charge-sheet. Whether investigation warrants arrest, seizure, a charge-sheet or a closure report is for the police to decide in accordance with law. The Court could not prescribe those steps through the present Article 226 prayer. M.C. Abraham, (2003) 2 SCC 649, quoted in that decision, explains that the discretionary power of arrest under Section 41 CrPC must be exercised cautiously. The quoted passage from Divine Retreat Centre, (2008) 3 SCC 542, requires a fair hearing before judicial directions having drastic consequences for a person's reputation.

Investigation — Completion without unnecessary delay — Section 173(1) CrPC — Refusal to direct arrest or predetermine the filing of a charge-sheet did not relieve the investigating officer of the duty to reach a conclusion and promptly submit the appropriate final report. Section 173(1) requires investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. The petitioner could approach the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, with any further grievance.

Opportunity of hearing — judicial order directing investigation — scope of quoted authority — Divine Retreat Centre v State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, quoted in D. Venkatasubramaniam, required an opportunity of hearing before a judicial order directing investigation on anonymous allegations with drastic consequences for the affected person's reputation. D. Venkatasubramaniam also disapproved unreasoned directions against persons who had not been joined as parties. The High Court relied on that warning in refusing the demand for compulsory arrest.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suraj filed Writ Petition No. 17320/2019 under Article 226 before the Madhya Pradesh High Court, Gwalior Bench. Alleging that he and other witnesses were being threatened, he sought protection for himself and his family, arrest of the private respondents, and quashing of any criminal proceeding that might be brought against him. The references to respondent numbers in the prayer and the discussion of arrest were inconsistent. The Court decided the petition on 26 August 2019.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mahender Chawla and Others v Union of India and Others, Supreme Court Writ Petition (Criminal) No. 156/2016, judgment dated 5 December 2018 — The High Court cited this decision as formulating the Witness Protection Scheme applicable throughout India. Applying that Scheme, it directed the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, to take the necessary protective action if Suraj submitted a fresh representation. This was a separate, conditional direction on his request for protection as a witness under the national Scheme.

D. Venkatasubramaniam v M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488 — The decision is quoted at length in paragraph 8 and applied in paragraph 9. It disapproved unreasoned High Court directions requiring the police to record statements, arrest persons, seize property and file a charge-sheet. Investigation is a statutory duty of the police and may lead to a conclusion that no case is made out. The High Court's inherent power under Section 482 CrPC is confined to the purposes specified in that provision and must be exercised with care. Judicial observations must also take account of their practical consequences. In the present Article 226 petition, the High Court applied this reasoning in refusing to order mandatory arrests or predetermine the filing of a charge-sheet. It nevertheless directed lawful completion of the investigation.

The extract from D. Venkatasubramaniam quotes M.C. Abraham v State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, on Section 41 CrPC. Arrest is discretionary, subject to the statutory conditions, and need not follow every FIR. Because arrest affects liberty and reputation, the officer should cautiously consider whether it is necessary, after such investigation as is appropriate. The extract also quotes Divine Retreat Centre v State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on the need to hear those likely to be affected before making a judicial order directing investigation on anonymous allegations with drastic reputational consequences. That safeguard concerns judicial intervention in the circumstances described; it does not establish a general right to advance notice of ordinary police investigation.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 — The petition invoked the High Court's writ jurisdiction to seek protection and compulsory police action. Section 41 CrPC — The quoted Supreme Court discussion explains the discretionary power of arrest; it does not require arrest whenever a complaint is made. Section 482 CrPC — The quoted authority addresses the limited purposes of the High Court's inherent power. The present petition was under Article 226, rather than Section 482. Section 173(1) CrPC — The High Court directly quoted and applied the requirement to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. Depending on the evidence, the final report could be a closure report or a charge-sheet.

4. Issues : (i) What action could be directed on the request for witness protection based on alleged threats? (ii) Could the Court direct the police to arrest the private respondents and file a charge-sheet? (iii) Could it require timely completion of the investigation and submission of the appropriate final report without prescribing the result? (iv) Was there a basis to quash an unspecified future criminal proceeding? The judgment did not give a developed finding on the last request or grant relief quashing any proceeding.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — the Witness Protection Scheme formulated in Mahender Chawla applied throughout the country. If Suraj submitted a fresh representation, the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, was required to take the necessary action to protect him under that Scheme. The Court did not assess a threat category or immediately prescribe a particular protective measure. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam, it refused to direct arrest or require a charge-sheet. The police must decide, in accordance with law and the material gathered, whether arrest or seizure is warranted and whether a charge-sheet or closure report should be filed. Directing the arrest of specified private persons and the filing of a charge-sheet would amount to supervising and predetermining the investigation. The quoted reasoning included M.C. Abraham's explanation of the effect of arrest on liberty and Divine Retreat Centre's warning about judicial orders made without hearing those affected.

Section 173(1) CrPC nevertheless required the investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer had to determine whether an offence was disclosed and submit the appropriate final report as early as possible. The Court directed completion of the investigation and the necessary steps under the law without prescribing the result. Suraj remained free to approach the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, with any grievance.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the writ petition. It directed the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, to take the necessary protective action under the Witness Protection Scheme if Suraj submitted a fresh representation. It refused to direct mandatory arrest or predetermine the filing of a charge-sheet. The investigating officer was directed to complete the investigation as early as possible and take the necessary steps under the law. Any further grievance submitted to the Superintendent of Police was to be considered in accordance with law. The order did not adjudicate an entitlement to a particular protective arrangement or grant quashing of a future proceeding.

Suraj v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 17320/2019, 26/08/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (942) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial proof — homicide distinct from identification — Sharad Birdhichand Sarda (1984) 4 SCC 116, adopting Hanumant and its five conditions, was applied. Poison in the viscera and an ante-mortem ligature mark on the lower part of the neck supported the finding of homicidal death, but did not identify Surajbai or Bhuribai as the offenders. The Court set aside their conviction under Section 302/34 because the alleged links, considered separately and together, did not exclude other reasonable possibilities.

Last seen, motive and witness location — Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan (2020) 14 SCC 750 and the authorities cited in it require reliable proof that the accused and deceased were last seen together, with a sufficiently short interval. The assertion that Hari had returned was an unsupported improvement in the evidence. Suresh's claimed presence at Rukmani's adjoining house and his account of hearing cries were not proved. The alleged relationship, earlier quarrel and Bhuribai's visit for her delivery did not establish the necessary proximity or participation.

Core omissions, delayed examination and inimical witnesses — Harbeer Singh (2016) 16 SCC 418 and A. Shankar (2011) 6 SCC 279 distinguish minor discrepancies from significant omissions under Section 162 that undermine credibility. Sheo Shankar Singh (2011) 3 SCC 654 requires delay in examining a witness to be assessed in context; delay is not automatically fatal. Here, unexplained delays of four to five months in recording statements compounded material improvements. Akalu Ahir (1973) 2 SCC 583 and Anil Rai (2001) 7 SCC 318 required careful scrutiny of admitted enmity without automatic rejection of the testimony.

Rekhabai's reported confession — Section 30 — Sk. Yusuf (2011) 11 SCC 754, Kusal Toppo (2019) 13 SCC 676 and Chandrapal, AIR 2022 SC 2542, required caution in assessing the alleged extra-judicial confession. Sk. Yusuf requires proof of truthful, voluntary and unambiguous words, assessed with caution. The Sahadevan (2012) 6 SCC 403 principles quoted in Kusal Toppo and Chandrapal require a confession to inspire confidence, be free from material discrepancies or inherent improbability, and be proved according to law; cogent corroboration strengthens its value. The three witnesses gave divergent accounts, and one had not heard Rekhabai directly. The principles in Pancho (2011) 10 SCC 165 and Haricharan Kurmi, quoted in Kusal Toppo, distinguish Sections 3 and 30. Even a proved confession by a co-accused can provide only assurance after substantive evidence supplies a satisfactory foundation, subject to a joint trial for the same offence. It could not form the foundation of the case against these appellants when the other links had failed.

Accused's FIR — admissibility and factual limit — Aghnoo Nagesia, AIR 1966 SC 119, distinguishes the act of reporting and a non-confessional admission from a police confession barred by law. An FIR is not, by itself, substantive evidence. Surajbai's non-inculpatory report suggested a possible line of investigation concerning a rope and sickle. The Court did not accept its account as proof of suicidal hanging or of the identity of an alternative killer.

Investigation — material gaps and adverse directions — The hospital worker was not examined, the cart owner was not identified, and the cart was not seized. The alleged discovery at the tree in the early morning was not investigated. The Court found that the prosecution had failed to identify the killer and acquitted both women. It criticised the trial court's failure to assess cross-examination and directed proceedings under Section 340 concerning five witnesses and three officers. Pritish v State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253, Amarsang Nathaji v Hardik Harshadbhai Patel, (2017) 1 SCC 113, and State of Goa v Jose Maria Albert Vales, (2018) 11 SCC 659, quoted in the Kallu recall ruling, supported dispensing with preliminary inquiry or prior notice where the court could form a prima facie opinion that further inquiry was expedient in the interests of justice. The direction did not determine those persons' guilt.

Appreciation of testimony — cross-examination and criminal appeal — The trial court must assess examination in chief in the light of cross-examination and give due weight to admissions and material contradictions. If it considers a contradiction immaterial, it must explain that conclusion rather than ignore the contradiction. The failure to do so here contributed to unsupported convictions affecting life and liberty. Suryabaksh Singh v State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, was invoked when counsel and the appointed amicus did not appear. The Bench examined the complete trial record and acquitted both appellants.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : In Sessions Trial No. 117/2009, the appellants Surajbai and Bhuribai were convicted by the trial court on 23 December 2010 under IPC Section 302 read with Section 34 for the death of Hari alias Bhaggu and sentenced to life imprisonment and a ₹500 fine each, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. On 30 July 2009, charges were framed under Sections 302/34 and 201 IPC against Bhuribai, and under Sections 302/34, 201 and 203 IPC against Surajbai. The trial court acquitted both of Section 201 and acquitted Surajbai of Section 203; Bhuribai was not charged under Section 203. On 21 September 2008 at about 7.30 a.m., Surajbai reported that she had been asleep until Sukmabai's alarm at about 3.30 a.m.; she said she cut a rope to bring down Hari alias Bhaggu from a neem tree, took him to a hospital and returned with his body after a compounder declared him dead. The police registered Merg No. 51/2008 and, after inquiry, Crime No. 185/2009 alleging poisoning, a staged suicide and false information. Twelve prosecution witnesses were examined; the appellants denied guilt and adduced no defence evidence. An earlier report by Surajbai dated 13 September 2008 concerned Hari's alleged sickle assault on her on 10 September 2008; relatives admitted that he subsequently stayed with Sewantibai while police were searching for him.

The prosecution alleged that Hari lived with Surajbai after her husband Pannalal's death, that an earlier dispute had included an attempted kerosene attack, and that he returned to her home after staying with his sister. Suresh (PW7) said he heard a plea not to administer "medicine" and the sound of strangulation. Relatives Dinesh (PW1), Phoolabai (PW2) and Sukmabai (PW6) recounted information allegedly given by Surajbai's daughter Rekhabai, a juvenile co-accused, and said Hari's body was seen in a bullock cart outside a hospital before it was brought to Surajbai's courtyard. Surajbai herself had reported that Sukmabai discovered Hari at a neem tree, that the rope was cut and that Hari was taken to hospital. Bhuribai, Surajbai's sister, was visiting for her delivery; her presence was admitted under Section 313 CrPC, but this was not an admission of guilt. The prosecution relied on a pesticide bottle, rope and sickle at the spot. Dr Anil Kumar (PW4) found a ligature mark on the lower part of the neck and evidence of asphyxia. Poison was later found in the viscera. The Bench accepted that the death was homicidal, yet concluded that the identity and acts of the killer remained unproved.

2. Precedents — Considered : Suryabaksh Singh v State of U.P., (2014) 14 SCC 222, was invoked in paragraph 8 when neither counsel nor amicus appeared, as the Bench itself examined the trial record and heard the State.

Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v State of Maharashtra, (1984) 4 SCC 116 — The decision, quoting Hanumant v State of Madhya Pradesh and Shivaji Sahabrao Bobade, is set out in paragraph 12. Its five conditions require the circumstances to be fully established and conclusive, consistent only with guilt, and sufficient to exclude other reasonable hypotheses. The chain must be complete and show that, in all human probability, the accused committed the act. The quoted discussion also refers to Anant Chintaman Lagu and other decisions on circumstantial evidence. The Bench applied the five conditions to each alleged link. Proof of homicidal death was not treated as proof that the accused women had caused it.

Shailendra Rajdev Pasvan v State of Gujarat, (2020) 14 SCC 750 — Paragraph 13 reproduces the requirement of a complete chain of circumstances stated in Trimukh Maroti Kirkan and the last-seen principle discussed in Bodhraj, Rambraksh and Anjan Kumar Sarma. The interval must be sufficiently short to exclude another person's involvement. Where the interval is long or unproved and permits another person to intervene, an inference of guilt from last-seen evidence is unsafe without further positive evidence. The Bench found no reliable proof that Hari had returned or was last seen with either appellant.

Sk. Yusuf v State of W.B., (2011) 11 SCC 754 — Quoted in paragraph 64, the decision treats an extra-judicial confession as weak evidence requiring cautious assessment. It must be voluntary, truthful, made in a fit state of mind and expressed in clear words. A confession that passes the test of credibility may nevertheless support a conviction. Kusal Toppo v State of Jharkhand, (2019) 13 SCC 676, quoted in paragraph 65, explains this caution through Sahadevan and the Section 30 authorities, including Gopal Sah, Pancho and Haricharan Kurmi. The Sahadevan principles require careful scrutiny, voluntariness and truth, the capacity to inspire confidence, absence of material discrepancies or inherent improbability, and proof according to law. Cogent circumstances and corroboration increase reliability. Pancho's quotation from Haricharan Kurmi distinguishes a co-accused's confession from substantive evidence under Section 3: Section 30 permits it to provide assurance only after independent evidence supplies a satisfactory foundation. A joint trial for the same offence remains a statutory condition. The judgment does not establish that the juvenile Rekhabai was jointly tried with these appellants. Chandrapal v State, AIR 2022 SC 2542, discussed in paragraphs 67–68, brings together Paltan Mallah, Sahadevan, Jagroop, Sk. Yusuf and Pancho on reliability, corroboration and the rule that a co-accused's statement cannot be the starting point. Applying those principles to the incompatible accounts of Rekhabai's alleged words, the Bench did not treat any reported statement as independently sufficient against Surajbai or Bhuribai.

Harbeer Singh v Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418 — Quoted in paragraph 69, the decision applies the Explanation to Section 162 CrPC to significant omissions that create serious doubt about credibility. A. Shankar v State of Karnataka, (2011) 6 SCC 279, quoted in paragraph 70, distinguishes natural variations in memory and minor embellishments from material contradictions affecting the core of the case. It requires assessment of overall credibility rather than mechanical rejection. The Bench applied these principles to the alleged kerosene incident, Hari's claimed return, transport and voices, and the improvements made by witnesses in court. Sheo Shankar Singh v State of Jharkhand, (2011) 3 SCC 654, quoting Ranbir and Satbir Singh, was considered in paragraphs 81–84. Delay in examining a witness does not automatically destroy the prosecution case. The information available to investigators, the timing and explanation, and the possibility that a witness was unfairly introduced must be considered. No satisfactory explanation was given here for the late statements of Dinesh and Suresh.

Aghnoo Nagesia v State of Bihar, AIR 1966 SC 119 — Quoted in paragraph 78, the decision states that an FIR is not substantive evidence. If its maker testifies, it may be used for corroboration or contradiction. Giving the information may constitute conduct under Section 8 of the Evidence Act; a non-confessional statement may be an admission under Section 21. A confessional FIR made to the police cannot be used against an accused because of Section 25. The Bench treated Surajbai's report as non-inculpatory and as a source of investigative leads, while expressly declining to accept the report itself as proof of its alternative account.

Akalu Ahir v Ramdeo Ram, (1973) 2 SCC 583, and Anil Rai v State of Bihar, (2001) 7 SCC 318, paragraphs 87–90, explain that enmity may provide a motive for both crime and false implication; a related or inimical witness is scrutinized but is not rejected automatically if otherwise consistent. The Bench applied careful scrutiny because several relatives acknowledged hostility and had serious omissions and inconsistencies.

On Section 340 CrPC, the Bench quoted the earlier decision in Kallu v State of M.P. dated 25 September 2017 and the recall order dated 6 March 2020. T*he* latter re*p*roduce*d Pritish v State of Maharashtra, (2002) 1 SCC 253*, Amarsang Nathaji v Hardik Harshadbhai Patel, (2017) 1 SCC 113, and State of Goa v Jose Maria Albert Vales, (2018) 11 SCC 659. Those principles permit the court to dispense with preliminary inquiry when it can form a prima facie opinion that further inquiry is expedient in the interests of justice. The proposed respondent need not participate before that opinion is formed. By order dated 20 February 2024, the Supreme Court declined to interfere with the Kallu recall direction, expressly noting that guilt had not been established and the proceedings were for further inquiry. Those proceedings concerned different persons. The Bench relied on them for the applicable procedure before directing proceedings in the present case. The special leave petitions and review referred to in paragraphs 103–104 were dismissed.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 read with Section 34 IPC governed the conviction for murder with common intention challenged in the appeal. Both women were acquitted of the charge under Section 201. The charge under Section 203 was framed against Surajbai alone and resulted in her acquittal, a relevant qualification in considering her FIR. Section 374(2) CrPC provided the appeal, and Section 313 concerned the limited admission that Bhuribai had come for her delivery. Section 161 governed police statements; the Explanation to Section 162 permitted a significant omission to amount to a contradiction according to its context. Section 154 concerned recording the FIR. Sections 8 and 21 of the Evidence Act govern conduct and non-confessional admissions, while Sections 25–26 restrict police confessions. Section 30 governs the limited consideration of a co-accused's confession. Sections 145 and 157 concern contradiction and corroboration where the maker testifies. Sections 3 and 30 distinguish substantive evidence from the limited consideration of a co-accused's confession in a joint trial for the same offence. Section 340 CrPC, read with Section 195(1)(b)(i) in the quoted authorities, governs the court's preliminary opinion and complaint process for alleged offences affecting the administration of justice. Initiation is not a final finding of criminal guilt. The quoted State of Goa decision also explains the appeal under Section 341 against making or refusing a complaint and the procedure under Section 343. The receiving Magistrate must, as far as may be, deal with the matter as a case instituted on a police report, but may adjourn it where an appeal in the underlying judicial proceeding is pending.

4. Issues : (i) Did the prosecution prove a complete circumstantial chain identifying each appellant, beyond establishing homicide? (ii) Were the alleged return and last-seen event, motive, overheard words, Rekhabai's statements, the account of the hospital visit and cart transport, and seized articles reliable links? (iii) How should material omissions, late statements and admitted family hostility affect credibility? (iv) What evidentiary use could be made of Surajbai's non-confessional FIR without accepting its narrative as substantive proof? (v) Could the trial court rely on examination in chief without weighing cross-examination, admissions and core contradictions? (vi) Could the Bench direct initiation of Section 340 proceedings against witnesses and investigators without notice or preliminary inquiry, and what did that direction decide?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — the ligature mark on the lower part of the neck and the forensic finding of poison established homicidal death. Dr Anil Kumar's qualifications concerning the mechanism and timing of death were considered, and the Court concluded that the ligature mark was inconsistent with suicidal hanging. Proof of murder nevertheless had to be distinguished from proof of the appellants' involvement. Sharad Birdhichand Sarda required a complete chain implicating the accused. Hari had left Surajbai's house after the earlier quarrel. The sole assertion that he returned was a material improvement in Suresh's later account. The alleged kerosene stains were omitted from earlier statements and were not coherently explained. The alleged illicit relationship and resulting motive were disputed. Suresh's claimed presence at Rukmani's house adjoining Surajbai's house was unverified, and Rukmani was not examined. His account of hearing pleas against administration of medicine and the sound of strangulation, and his assertion that the appellants transported Hari, did not inspire confidence. Bhuribai's admitted stay for her delivery did not prove participation. The medical evidence could not supply these missing links.

Dinesh, Phoolabai and Sukmabai gave conflicting accounts of Rekhabai's alleged statements. According to another witness, Dinesh was asleep when Rekhabai allegedly visited. Sukmabai admitted that she neither saw nor heard Rekhabai directly. Even if the words amounted to a reliable confession by the co-accused, Section 30 did not permit them to serve as the starting point or sole proof against these appellants. Significant omissions from earlier statements concerning administration of poison, kerosene, Hari's return and cart transport affected the substance of the account, rather than harmless detail. Dinesh's police statement was recorded after about four months. Suresh's statement was dated 1 February 2009, and the investigating officer described it as having been recorded after five months. Neither delay was satisfactorily explained. Sheo Shankar Singh does not make every delay fatal, but the delays here compounded material improvements. The admitted hostility was assessed as a possible motive for both the offence and false implication, without a categorical presumption either way.

No compounder was examined, neither the cart nor its owner was traced, and the alleged discovery at the neem tree by Sukmabai was not investigated. Recovery of a pesticide bottle from an agriculturist's courtyard did not, by itself, connect the women with the offence. The precise place from which the rope was seized was uncertain, and the rope and sickle also corresponded to investigative leads in Surajbai's report. Even on the witnesses' account, Hari's body had been brought back to her courtyard. Surajbai's FIR was non-confessional and was not barred by Sections 25–26 of the Evidence Act. Her conduct in lodging it and remaining available was relevant. The Bench nevertheless expressly declined to treat the FIR as substantive proof of suicide or as a proved account of who discovered or transported Hari. The identity of the murderer remained unresolved. The trial court was criticised for accepting examination in chief without assessing cross-examination and material contradictions. Paragraph 109 requires due weight to admissions and material contradictions, and an explanation where a contradiction is considered immaterial. Cross-examination enables an accused to test the prosecution case; ignoring it undermines a proper adjudication affecting life and liberty. As of 22 August 2024, Surajbai had undergone 13 years and 11 months of actual imprisonment. Bhuribai had undergone three months and four days and had initially been sent to jail with her one-year-old daughter and three-year-old son.

For proceedings under Section 340, the Bench ruled that preliminary inquiry and notice to the proposed respondents were not compulsory if the court could form a prima facie opinion that further inquiry was expedient in the interests of justice. It considered the witnesses' deliberate false testimony and the investigators' deliberate failure to pursue material leads, and directed the trial court to initiate proceedings against PW1, PW2, PW5, PW6, PW7, PW9, PW10 and PW11.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the appeal. It set aside the judgment dated 23 December 2010 and the life sentence under Sections 302/34 IPC, and acquitted both appellants of that charge. Bhuribai's bail bonds were discharged. Surajbai, who was in jail, was ordered to be released immediately. The judgment and record were to be sent to the trial court for information and compliance, including initiation of the directed proceedings against the five identified witnesses and three officers on the stated basis under Section 340.

Surajbai and Bhuribai v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 122/2011, 16/10/2024, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (944) Prev Next

Headnote :- Separate trials — evidence confined to the accused's own record — A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Criminal Appeal No. 1306/2021, and Karan Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1965 SC 1037, require separate assessment of the evidence in distinct trials, subject to lawful exceptions and a fair opportunity to contest the evidence. Bhanupratap's and Ajab's later testimony, recorded only in Dilip's trial, could not be used in Surajbhan's trial merely because it also suggested his absence. Karan Singh distinguishes an acquittal in another person's case from a binding adjudication between the same parties.

Fair trial — presence and cross-examination — appellate record — A.T. Mydeen explains that an accused's culpability ordinarily cannot be determined from evidence recorded without the accused or the accused's pleader being present and without an opportunity to cross-examine. An appeal against conviction examines the record of that trial, subject to lawful further inquiry or additional evidence. Applying these principles, the Court rejected reliance on the later evidence recorded for the co-accused. Those statements did not amount to a formal acquittal of Surajbhan.

Incomplete judgment — distinct victims and unresolved charges — The trial judgment decided the charge under Section 302/149 only in respect of Pahalwan Singh and the charge under Section 307/149 only in respect of Bhanupratap. It neither gave a finding nor recorded an acquittal concerning Darshan Singh's murder or the attempted killing of Ajab Singh. Each charge concerning a distinct victim required a decision; silence did not amount to acquittal. The Court also noted that a single charge had been framed for each offence.

Section 386 and Section 482 CrPC — limited remand without state appeal — The Court declined sentence enhancement because no sentence had been imposed on the omitted counts. It also declined retrial because no procedural lapse in recording evidence warranted that course. Despite the absence of a State appeal, it exercised inherent power under Section 482 to require a judgment on the two undecided counts alone. Paragraph 28 protected the findings concerning Pahalwan and Bhanupratap and required assignment to a different Sessions Judge. The exercise was to be completed within three months. Paragraph 30 set aside the judgment and sentence and remanded the matter for the limited purpose specified in paragraph 28. The remand did not decide the omitted counts.

Judicial administration — inquiry into incomplete judgment - The District Judge (Inspection), Gwalior, was directed to inquire within two months into whether the presiding trial judge's omission resulted from negligence or extraneous considerations and, if warranted, to place the matter before the Chief Justice on the administrative side. This was a conditional inquiry direction, not a concluded finding of misconduct.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Bhanupratap Singh Gurjar reported an armed attack in a field at about 10:15 a.m. on 16 October 2006 during an irrigation dispute. According to the prosecution, several armed persons surrounded the group. Kedar and Ramhet fired guns, Surajbhan also fired at Bhanupratap's father Pahalwan Singh, and others attacked his cousin Ajab Singh with a farsa and lathis. Pahalwan and Bhanupratap's uncle Darshan Singh died at the scene. Bhanupratap stated that he was chased and fired upon; Ajab was injured. Offences were registered under Sections 302, 307, 147, 148, 149 and 120-B IPC. After investigation, charges were framed against Surajbhan and the other accused; Dilip was initially absconding. By order dated 23 January 2008, the trial court framed a single charge under Section 302/149 and a single charge under Section 307/149 despite the two homicide victims and two attempted-murder victims. The High Court specifically noted this irregularity in framing the charges.

Bhanupratap (PW1) and Ajab (PW2) testified in Surajbhan's presence. Surajbhan later absconded and was declared absconding on 25 October 2008. He was arrested and produced before the court in April 2017. The trial resumed, other witnesses were examined, and prosecution evidence was closed in February 2020. Dilip was arrested during Surajbhan's trial, and evidence concerning him was recorded separately. In their later testimony in 2018 concerning Dilip, PW1 and PW2 supported the occurrence but turned hostile on Dilip's identity. They also stated that Surajbhan had not been present. Surajbhan sought to rely on those later statements in his defence.

On 9 July 2021, the First Additional Sessions Judge, Gohad, in Sessions Trial No. 118/2007 convicted the appellant under Sections 302/149 IPC and sentenced him to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. For the offence under Sections 307/149, he received five years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. For the offence under Section 148, he received one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹500, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The sentences were to run concurrently. The judgment expressly decided Pahalwan's murder and the attempted murder of Bhanupratap, but gave no decision on Darshan's murder or the attempted murder of Ajab. In Criminal Appeal No. 6213/2021, Surajbhan challenged the eyewitness evidence, the medical evidence concerning the timing of death and the physical exhibits. He also relied on enmity and the later testimony in Dilip's trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : A.T. Mydeen and Another v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No.

1306/2021, order dated 29 October 2021 — The decision was directly applied. The quoted paragraphs 39–42 require proof to be assessed within the particular trial. Evidence concerning an accused's culpability is ordinarily recorded in the presence of that accused or counsel, with an opportunity to cross-examine, subject to statutory exceptions. Evidence from another trial of the same incident cannot simply determine a separately tried co-accused's guilt. An appeal against conviction ordinarily examines the record of the trial concerned, subject to further inquiry or additional evidence lawfully undertaken under Sections 367 or 391 CrPC. A.T. Mydeen found error in a common appellate judgment based on only one of two separate trial records. Applying these fair-trial principles, the High Court refused to rely on PW1's and PW2's later testimony recorded only in Dilip's trial.

Karan Singh v. State of M.P., AIR 1965 SC 1037 — The decision was applied to the distinction between separate proceedings. Its quoted reason*ing* states that one person's acquittal in proceedings to which another person was not a party does not conclusively determine the facts in the latter's case. Each case must be decided on its own evidence. Karan Singh distinguished Pritam Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1956 SC 415, and Sambasivam v. Public Prosecutor, 1950 AC 458, concerning the conclusiveness of an acquittal between the parties. It also distinguished Krishna Govind Patil v. State of Maharashtra, AIR 1963 SC 1413, which concerned acquittal of all the other alleged joint actors and conviction of a sole accused for sharing common intention with those same acquitted persons in one proceeding, a legally impossible position. Karan Singh did not permit evidence from the other proceeding to be transferred into the later case. The High Court applied the requirement to decide each case on its own record. The Section 34 examples in that precedent did not themselves decide the present charges under Section 149.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 302/149 and 307/149 IPC governed the homicide and attempted-murder charges based on alleged liability for a common object. Section 148 concerned rioting with a deadly weapon. The trial court decided the charges concerning Pahalwan and Bhanupratap but left those concerning Darshan and Ajab undecided. Section 386 CrPC sets out the appellate powers in appeals against conviction, acquittal and other orders, including retrial, alteration and consequential orders. The safeguards governing enhancement were considered, but there was no sentence on the two omitted counts to enhance. Section 482 preserves the High Court's inherent power to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process or secure the ends of justice. The Bench exercised it to require a judgment on the omitted charges. The reference in A.T. Mydeen to Sections 367 and 391 concerned further inquiry or additional evidence in an appeal; neither power was exercised in this case.

4. Issues : (i) Could Surajbhan rely on the 2018 statements of PW1 and PW2 recorded in Dilip's separate proceeding, after those witnesses had already testified in Surajbhan's presence, to challenge the evidence in his own trial? (ii) Was the trial judgment complete when it decided Pahalwan's murder and the attack on Bhanupratap but gave no decision on the charged murder of Darshan and attempted killing of Ajab? (iii) In the absence of a State appeal concerning those omissions, what corrective power and limited relief were available, and could sentence enhancement or a new trial be ordered?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — each separately tried accused's culpability must be determined on the record of that accused's trial, subject to lawful exceptions and a fair opportunity to contest the evidence. The Bench upheld the trial court's refusal to use the later testimony from Dilip's separate trial. PW1 and PW2 had already testified in Surajbhan's presence; their later examination in 2018 concerned Dilip alone. Applying A.T. Mydeen and Karan Singh, the Court ruled that statements suggesting Surajbhan's absence could not be treated as evidence in his trial merely because both trials concerned the same incident.

The trial judge had convicted Surajbhan for Pahalwan's murder and the attempted murder of Bhanupratap without either convicting or acquitting him on the charges concerning Darshan's murder and the attempted murder of Ajab. That silence made the judgment incomplete; it did not amount to an implied acquittal. After considering Section 386, the High Court declined to initiate sentence enhancement because no sentence existed on the omitted counts. It also declined retrial because the defect was the absence of a decision, rather than a procedural lapse in recording evidence. Exercising Section 482 despite the absence of a State appeal, it directed a decision on those counts. The remand neither permitted reconsideration of the expressly protected findings concerning Pahalwan and Bhanupratap nor predetermined whether the remaining counts would be proved.

The case was to be assigned to a different Additional Sessions Judge, who was required to decide the omitted counts within three months of receipt of the record. The record was to be transmitted immediately, and the appellant was to remain in custody. A separate inquiry on the administrative side, to be completed within two months, was directed into possible negligence or extraneous considerations on the part of the original presiding judge. Any adverse material warranting action was to be placed before the Chief Justice. Paragraph 30 states generally that the 2021 judgment and sentence were set aside and expressly limits the remand to paragraph 28, which protects the findings concerning Pahalwan and Bhanupratap.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the appeal with a limited remand. The trial court was to pronounce judgment under Section 302/149 on Darshan Singh's murder and under Section 307/149 on the attempted killing of Ajab Singh, without disturbing its findings concerning Pahalwan Singh and Bhanupratap Singh. The Principal District and Sessions Judge, Bhind, was directed to assign the file to an Additional Sessions Judge other than the judge who had delivered the incomplete judgment. The exercise was to be completed within three months of receipt of the record. Paragraph 30 set aside the judgment and sentence dated 9 July 2021 for this limited exercise. The appellant was to remain in jail, receive a free copy immediately, and the record was to be returned promptly. Separately, the District Judge (Inspection), Gwalior, was to complete an inquiry within two months and place any substantiated negligence or extraneous consideration before the Chief Justice for possible administrative action.

Surajbhan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 6213/2021, 20/01/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (945) Prev Next

Headnote :- FIR — cognizable information — duty and remedy distinguished — Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty to register an FIR on information disclosing a cognizable offence from the remedy available when the police fail to act. The complainant ordinarily proceeds before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. Applying that distinction, the Court refused a direct mandamus under Article 226 and left Surbhi Soni free to approach the Magistrate.

Police inaction — Section 154(3), Section 156(3) and magistrate supervision — Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., (2008) 2 SCC 409, and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, explain the remedies before the Superintendent and then the Magistrate for registration of an FIR or proper investigation. The Magistrate may direct and monitor the investigation and, in an appropriate case, recommend a change of investigating officer. The Magistrate does not personally investigate. The High Court treated these statutory remedies as the ordinary course.

Article 226 — exceptional mala fide investigation - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, preserves writ intervention in the rarest of cases where mala fide exercise of investigative power and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII are established; even then, the court enforces the lawful process rather than dictating investigative steps.

Alternative remedy — Madhya Pradesh division bench — Lalita Kumari distinction — Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. 247/2016, states that mandamus to enforce Section 154 may be refused where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the recognised exceptions to the rule concerning alternative remedies. Lalita Kumari's rule requiring registration on information disclosing a cognizable offence does not itself determine entitlement to a writ where those remedies have been bypassed. The petition was dismissed with liberty to approach the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Surbhi Soni filed Writ Petition No. 291/2025 under Article 226 of the Constitution alleging that police had failed to act on her written complaint of 23 September 2024 and a further complaint to the Superintendent of Police dated 25 October 2024. She sought directions for proper, fair and impartial investigation against private respondents 5–9, an order preventing closure of the case proceedings, immediate registration of an offence and submission of a final report. The State argued that she had an efficacious remedy before the Magistrate, referring to Section 200 CrPC and Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. The High Court framed the question as whether a writ seeking a direction to register an FIR was maintainable in these circumstances.

2. Precedents — Considered : Aleque Padamsee and Others v. Union of India and Others, (2007) 6 SCC 171 — The decision was quoted at length. It recognises the police duty to register an FIR on cognizable information, while directing a complainant faced with police inaction ordinarily to proceed under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC before the Magistrate. Ramesh Kumari v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2006) 2 SCC 677, and its reiteration in Lallan Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, (2006) 12 SCC 229, were distinguished as addressing the action required of the police, rather than the procedure for obtaining a judicial remedy. Aleque Padamsee relied on All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union v. Union of India, (1996) 11 SCC 582, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, (2004) 7 SCC 768, Hari Singh v. State of U.P., (2006) 5 SCC 733, and Minu Kumari v. State of Bihar, (2006) 4 SCC 359, as supporting the complaint remedy. The High Court applied that distinction to the writ sought here without deciding the merits of Surbhi Soni's allegations. The separate direction concerning sanction in Aleque's operative order concerned that case, rather than the present complaint.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542 — The quoted passage states both the exception and its limit. Writ intervention under Article 226 is available in the rarest of cases where mala fide exercise of investigative power and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII are established. Even then, the High Court may insist on observance of the process prescribed by law, but cannot dictate how the police conduct the investigation. Relying on Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre and AIIMS Employees' Union, the passage also explains the remedies of a complaint to the Magistrate and an inquiry where police take no action on the information given.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of Uttar Pradesh, (2008) 2 SCC 409 — The decision explains recourse under Section 154(3) CrPC to the Superintendent, followed by an application under Section 156(3) to the Magistrate if registration or proper investigation is not forthcoming. The Magistrate may direct registration and proper investigation and monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, followed Sakiri Vasu. It explains that direct writ petitions would overwhelm High Courts when supervision by the Magistrate is available. In appropriate circumstances, the Magistrate may recommend a change of investigating officer, but cannot personally investigate. In that case, the Supreme Court set aside the High Court order and entrusted oversight of the investigation to the Magistrate. In the present petition, the Bench applied the rule concerning statutory remedies; that separate factual disposition concerned the proceedings in Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. and Others, W.A. No. 247/2016 (Madhya Pradesh High Court Division Bench, 20 December 2016) — The decision was treated as binding within the High Court. It permits refusal of mandamus to compel performance of the duty under Section 154 where the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the four recognised exceptions identified in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, (1998) 8 SCC 1. The Division Bench distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., (2014) 2 SCC 1: its rule concerns the police duty to register an FIR on cognizable information, rather than entitlement to direct mandamus without recourse to the statutory remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 — The petitioner invoked the High Court's writ jurisdiction for mandamus concerning criminal investigation. Section 154 CrPC imposes the duty to register an FIR on cognizable information; Section 154(3) permits a complaint to the Superintendent where the police station does not record it. Section 156(3) permits the Magistrate to direct investigation, including registration or further proper investigation in the circumstances discussed in the quoted authorities. Sections 190 and 200 provide the complaint and cognizance remedy. The Magistrate's inquiry and decision on issuing process are explained in the quoted Gangadhar passage. Chapter XII governs the statutory investigation process. The quoted exception permits writ intervention in the rarest of cases where mala fide exercise of investigative power and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with that Chapter are established. The Court expressly reserved liberty under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS in its order.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the petitioner, alleging police inaction on her September and October 2024 complaints, could obtain an Article 226 mandamus for registration of an FIR, prevention of closure and fair investigation without using the remedies before the Magistrate, after having complained to the Superintendent. (ii) How the police duty to register cognizable information differs from the judicial remedy for enforcing that duty, and whether the narrow exception permitting Article 226 intervention in a mala fide investigation applied.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — the police duty to register an FIR on cognizable information must be distinguished from the complainant's ordinary remedy when the police fail to act. Under the principle in Aleque Padamsee, an aggrieved complainant ordinarily proceeds before the Magistrate under Sections 190/200. The remedies described in Sakiri Vasu and Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe include recourse under Section 154(3), followed by an application under Section 156(3) for registration or proper investigation. The Magistrate may direct and monitor investigation within statutory limits. T*he* Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria reinforces that failure to use those remedies permits refusal of direct mandamus, subject to the established exceptions. Lalita Kumari's rule concerning the police duty does not confer an automatic writ remedy; it addresses a different question.

Divine Retreat Centre preserves exceptional writ intervention in the rarest of cases where mala fide exercise of investigative power and a clear case of abuse of power and non-compliance with Chapter XII are established. Even then, the High Court may require observance of lawful procedure but cannot dictate investigative steps. The High Court dismissed Surbhi Soni's writ petition while preserving the remedy before the Magistrate. The decision concerned the remedy and jurisdiction; it neither approved the alleged police inaction nor determined the merits of the underlying complaint.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. Surbhi Soni was granted liberty, if she wished, to approach the concerned Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS for redress of her grievance.

Surbhi Soni v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 291/2025, 16/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (946) Prev Next

Headnote :- DNA evidence — negative result — prosecutrix's credibility — A DNA report is corroborative evidence in this prosecution. A negative or non-supportive result does not, by itself, justify rejecting the prosecutrix's testimony; her credibility must be assessed on the evidence led. A result adverse to the accused may provide an additional incriminating link.

Trial management — late DNA application — judgment not stayed — A direction for DNA testing did not automatically suspend the trial or require postponement of judgment. The accused sought testing roughly five years after the alleged incident in 2016, one day before prosecution evidence closed. They offered no explanation for the delay, and the trial court had expressly directed that the trial continue. The High Court directed prompt steps to obtain the RFSL report but refused to stay delivery of judgment pending its receipt.

Additional evidence — Section 391 CrPC — possible later request — If the report was received after judgment and an appeal became necessary, the applicants could ask the appellate court to take the additional material on record under Section 391 CrPC. This preserved a possible remedy; it did not admit the report or determine whether the requirements of Section 391 were satisfied.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Surendra and the other applicants faced trial in Special Sessions Trial No. 16/2017 on charges under Sections 376-D and 34 IPC arising from an alleged rape in 2016. On 7 December 2021, approximately five years after the alleged incident and at an advanced stage of the trial, they applied for DNA testing. On 8 December, the trial court directed immediate collection of their blood samples but expressly stated that the trial would not be kept in abeyance pending the report. It described the report as corroborative and left the accused free to object to it or make representations about it. The prosecution closed its evidence that day, and the case was fixed for examination of the accused under Section 313 CrPC. A reference led to an adjournment from 14 to 20 December 2021. On 14 December, the accused sought a stay of delivery of judgment until the DNA report was received. The trial court refused that request.

In M.Cr.C. No. 62740/2021 under Section 482 CrPC, the applicants contended that, having authorised the test, the court would act unfairly by pronouncing judgment before receiving the report. The State opposed relief on the ground that the application was late and prosecution evidence had closed.

2. Statutes considered : Sections 376-D and 34 IPC identify the gang-rape and common-intention charges. The applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to challenge the refusal to stay delivery of judgment. Section 313 CrPC concerned the impending examination of the accused and showed how far the trial had advanced. Section 391 CrPC was mentioned as a possible means of asking the appellate court to receive additional material if the report arrived after judgment and an appeal became necessary. No application under Section 391, or decision admitting such material, was before the Court.

3. Issues : (i) Whether the trial court's direction to obtain a DNA test compelled it to postpone delivery of judgment until the report was available, notwithstanding its express order that the trial continue, the five-year delay in seeking the test, closure of prosecution evidence and the imminent examination of the accused under Section 313. (ii) What significance a future negative or incriminating report might have for evaluating the prosecutrix's evidence, and what procedural avenue could remain if it arrived after judgment. Neither guilt nor the actual reliability of the prosecutrix was to be decided in this Section 482 application.

4. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — a DNA report provides corroborative evidence. A negative report does not automatically displace the prosecutrix's testimony; her credibility must be assessed on the evidence led. A result adverse to the accused may provide an additional link. These observations concerned the possible effect of a future report, rather than an assessment of a report already received. The applicants sought testing about five years after the alleged incident, just before prosecution evidence closed and the case was fixed for examination of the accused. They gave no explanation for the delay. The trial court had permitted collection of blood samples while expressly declining to stop the trial. Its testing direction therefore did not, by itself, entitle the applicants to postpone pronouncement of judgment. A negative DNA result alone would not justify disbelieving the prosecutrix.

The Court directed the investigating officer to request the Regional Forensic Science Laboratory to provide the report as early as possible and directed the laboratory to make every endeavour to give it priority. It nevertheless refused the stay. If the report was received after judgment and the applicants needed to appeal, they could apply to the appellate court under Section 391 CrPC. That possible application did not determine whether the material would be admitted or how the application would be decided.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 petition and refused the prayer to stay delivery of the trial judgment pending the DNA report. The investigating officer was directed to request the RFSL to provide the report promptly, and the RFSL was directed to make every endeavour to prioritise it. The applicants retained the possibility of asking the appellate court to receive later material under Section 391 CrPC if an appeal became necessary.

Surendra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 62740/2021, 20/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

****

Case Sr. no. (947) Prev Next

Headnote :- Evidence — related and interested witnesses — distinction — Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, discussing State of Rajasthan v. Kalki and the Constitution Bench in State of Bihar v. Basawan Singh, distinguishes kinship from a witness's stake in the result and cautions that even a natural witness may be interested. The Court assessed Akram, the injured Munna's brother, by examining his account, cross-examination and the supporting medical evidence, rather than excluding his testimony automatically.

Evidence — interested testimony — corroboration and scrutiny — Jalpat Rai v. State of Haryana, (2011) 14 SCC 208, rejects a universal requirement of corroboration, but calls for scrutiny of possible exaggeration and attention to assurance from the surrounding circumstances of the particular case. Chandgi Ram, Nagappan and Harbeer Singh similarly require close scrutiny of testimony given by related witnesses. The Court found the injured witness and Akram credible after examining their material account and the fracture evidence. Rohtash

Kumar's quoted discussion of police witnesses appeared in the judgment, but no rule concerning police witnesses was independently decisive in this appeal.

Evidence — hostile independent witnesses — injured witness — The hostility of Deepak, Bachan Lal, Ballu and Narendra did not automatically discredit the accounts of Munna or Akram. The Court read Akram's statement about his arrival at the spot alongside his claim to have seen blows from a distance, and found the witnesses' material version consistent with the MLC and X-rays; it did not rely on the hostile witnesses as positive eyewitness evidence.

Evidence — suggested accidental fall — factual foundation — A probable defence may emerge from prosecution material, but the doctors' acceptance of a hypothetical fall on stones did not establish that such a fall occurred. The MLC contained no mention of a smell of alcohol. There was no evidence of stones at the location or of a fall from a height, and Munna denied the suggestion that he was intoxicated. The Court rejected that alternative on this record.

Attempt to murder — Section 307 versus Section 326 — mens rea and overt act — State of M.P. v. Harjeet Singh, drawing on R. Prakash, Jage Ram and State of M.P. v. Kanha alias Omprakash, explained that proof of grievous or inevitably fatal injury is not essential. The essential elements are the intention or knowledge required for murder and an overt act. The injury, weapon, force and part of the body targeted inform the inference of that mental element. Seven forceful blows with an iron pipe around the head and jaw, one blow to the leg, and parietal, mandibular and tibial fractures justified affirming the conviction under Section 307 rather than converting it to one under Section 326.

Sentence — assault severity and appellate result — The term of seven years' rigorous imprisonment and ₹10,000 fine were left intact although the appellant had spent about four years in custody by the date of the appeal decision; the Court relied on the repeated head blows and multiple fractures. The conviction and sentence were affirmed and the appeal dismissed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 2 August 2014, Akram Ali alias Kallu (PW1) reported that, after hearing abusive language near Yasmin's house at Village Ludhabali, he saw Surendra Puri strike his brother Munna Khan alias Abid (PW4) repeatedly with an iron pipe on the head. The FIR described the altercation as arising from Munna's visits to Yasmin; Munna later testified that ₹50,000 was owed to him by the appellant and that he had been called to collect it. Munna was unconscious. He was taken to the Shivpuri Trauma Centre and then referred to Gwalior, where he said he remained admitted for ten days. The appellant allegedly threatened them if a police report was made. Crime No. 264/2014 was registered at Police Station Dehat, Shivpuri, under IPC Sections 307, 294, 323 and 506 Part II. The police recorded witness statements, collected medical records, clothing and earth samples, and seized an iron pipe; the charge-sheet also referred to Section 325.

The trial court framed charges under Sections 294, 307 (with Section 323 as an alternative charge) and 506 Part II. Eleven prosecution witnesses were examined; the appellant denied guilt and examined no defence witness. Medical examiner Dr R.K. Rishishwar (PW6) recorded eight injuries caused by hard and blunt force, seven around the head, face or jaw and one on the left leg. X-ray evidence proved fractures of both parietal bones, the mandible and the left tibia, and radiologist Dr M.L. Agrawal (PW9) confirmed the X-ray report. Deepak Rathore, Bachan Lal, Ballu alias Rahish Khan and Narendra Bhargava turned hostile. Akram supported the core assault account but did not support every detail of the police formalities and was questioned by the prosecutor on those limited aspects. Munna described repeated head and leg blows and denied that he had fallen on stones while drunk.

The Sessions Judge, Shivpuri, in Special Sessions Trial No. 270/2014 on 18 March 2016 convicted Surendra under Section 307 IPC, sentenced him to seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹10,000 fine with imprisonment in default, and acquitted him of Sections 294, 323 and 506 Part II. In Criminal Appeal No. 426/2016 under Section 374 CrPC, the appellant argued that independent witnesses had turned hostile, the remaining witnesses were brothers and unreliable, the intention required under Section 307 was absent and, at most, an offence under Section 326 was made out, and the custodial term was excessive. The State defended the finding by relying on the weapon, repeated head blows and fractures.

2. Precedents — Considered : Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, was quoted for the distinction between a related witness and an interested witness.

It discussed State of Rajasthan v. Kalki, (1981) 2 SCC 752, which said relationship by itself does not amount to an interest in the result, and qualified an overbroad suggestion that a natural or sole possible eyewitness can never be interested. Raju invoked the Constitution Bench in State of Bihar v. Basawan Singh, AIR 1958 SC 500. A partisan or interested non-accomplice is assessed through considerations that vary with the case, which may include independent corroboration in a proper case, while an accomplice is treated under the separate accomplice rule. The present Court used the distinction between kinship and interest to assess Akram's testimony rather than reject it because he was Munna's brother. Jalpat Rai v. State of Haryana, (2011) 14 SCC 208, rejects a universal requirement that the evidence of interested or inimical eyewitnesses be corroborated, but warns of exaggeration or over-implication where enmity exists; in that case the Supreme Court sought medical, ballistic and circumstantial assurance and found material gaps in that assurance. The High Court quoted both aspects of this caution. It did not infer that this appellant was involved merely because witnesses were related: it examined their evidence alongside documented injuries. Rohtash Kumar v. State of Haryana, (2013) 14 SCC 434, was quoted on what makes a witness independent and the need to scrutinise police evidence rather than reject it categorically. Its nested citations to Pradeep Narayan Madgaonkar, Paras Ram, Balbir Singh, Kalpnath Rai, M. Prabhulal and Ravindran concern police or official witnesses and were part of the quoted exposition; no official-witness credibility issue was independently decided here.

State of Rajasthan v. Chandgi Ram, (2014) 14 SCC 596, directs attention to the actual quality of a related witness's testimony and its testing in cross-examination, not relationship alone. The quoted passages discuss Mano Dutt v. State of U.P., (2012) 4 SCC 79, which explains why family members may naturally witness or intervene and why credible, corroborated testimony need not be rejected, and Dinesh Kumar v. State of Rajasthan, (2008) 8 SCC 270, which emphasizes the importance of injured testimony and careful assessment of any interested or inimical witness. Nagappan v. State, (2013) 15 SCC 252, discussed consistency, medical corroboration and hostility of other witnesses, with a long parenthetical list of authorities concerning related witnesses. The present Court applied the common credibility principle to Munna and Akram.

Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 426, was quoted with its discussion of Darya Singh v. State of Punjab: the evidence of a relative who shares hostility towards the accused requires careful inquiry into the witness's presence, the probabilities and any infirmities. Harbeer Singh also cautioned that independent corroboration is not an indispensable rule; the quality of evidence governs, and its quotation of Raghubir Singh v. State of U.P. recognizes that the prosecution need not call every potential witness and unnecessarily multiply the evidence. The High Court applied the rule of close scrutiny without automatic rejection in paragraphs 18–20, where the medical findings and contemporaneous police and ambulance response supported the brothers' accounts. The adverse conclusion on the facts in Harbeer Singh's own case was not applied to the facts of this appeal.

State of M.P. v. Harjeet Singh and Another, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 1190/2009, order dated 19 February 2019, was applied to the Section 307 issue. It explains that Section 307 refers to "hurt" as defined in Section 319, not necessarily "grievous hurt" in Section 320; murderous intention or knowledge, coupled with an overt act in the statutory circumstances, is essential, whereas a wound capable of causing death is not. The quoted Harjeet passage invokes R. Prakash v. State of Karnataka, (2004) 9 SCC 27, for the distinction between the act and its result and the relevance of an actual wound, which is not indispensable; Jage Ram v. State of Haryana, (2015) 11 SCC 366, for the prosecution's burden to prove intent and act and the contextual factors of the weapon, words used, motive, body part injured and severity of the blows; and State of M.P. v. Kanha alias Omprakash, Criminal Appeal No. 1589/2018, decided 4 February 2019, for the principle that grievous or life-threatening hurt is not indispensable. The passage also contains a cross-reference to State of M.P. v. Mohan, (2013) 14 SCC 116, without separate analysis. The High Court expressly applied the combined test to seven forceful blows to the head and jaw and another blow to the leg, maintaining the conviction under Section 307 rather than converting it to one under Section 326; it did not create a legal requirement that all Section 307 injuries be on vital parts.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 307 punishes an act done with such intention or knowledge, and in such circumstances, that if death resulted the offender would be guilty of murder; the provision prescribes a separate consequence where hurt is actually caused. The Court reproduced its text and illustrations and used the Supreme Court's distinction between "hurt" under Section 319 and "grievous hurt" under Section 320. The fracture evidence strongly supported the nature and force of the attack, although Section 307 does not require proof of grievous or necessarily fatal injury. Section 326 was the alternative offence urged by the appellant, but the Court retained Section 307 in light of the proved mental element and assault. Sections 294, 323 and 506 Part II were among the charges of which the appellant was acquitted. Section 374 CrPC supplied the appellate route.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the material accounts of injured Munna (PW4) and his brother Akram (PW1) were credible despite hostility of four independent witnesses, Akram's variations on arrest and seizure formalities, his statement that Munna was already on the ground when he reached the spot, and the defence suggestion of an intoxicated fall. (ii) Whether seven blows about the head and jaw and another to the leg with an iron pipe, causing multiple fractures, established the intention or knowledge and act for attempted murder under Section 307, or should instead be classified as an offence under Section 326. (iii) Whether the seven-year custodial sentence and fine warranted reduction in view of time already served.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — Akram's evidence, read as a whole, indicated that he saw the assault while approaching from a distance and found Munna on the ground when he actually reached the site. It found no effective challenge to the core account given by the injured Munna and Akram. The MLC, radiology and fractures supported the repeated blows; the prompt police and ambulance response provided assurance from the surrounding circumstances. Applying Raju, Jalpat Rai, Chandgi Ram, Nagappan and Harbeer Singh, the Court held that kinship and possible interest require careful scrutiny of the testimony, rather than its categorical exclusion. An independent eyewitness is not invariably required. The four hostile independent witnesses did not displace otherwise credible and medically corroborated evidence. The prosecutor's limited cross-examination of Akram about arrest and seizure did not lead the Court to find his account of the assault false.

The defence could draw a probable explanation from prosecution evidence even without leading a defence witness, but a medical concession about hypothetical injuries from falling onto stones is not proof that a drunken fall occurred. The MLC contained no mention of a smell of alcohol, no relevant question about alcohol was put to the examining doctor, and there was no evidence of stones at the spot or a fall from a height. Munna denied the suggested explanation. The Court rejected that alternative on the actual record, while continuing to assess whether the prosecution had discharged its burden, rather than requiring the appellant to prove his innocence.

On offence classification, Section 307 requires the mental element and an overt act; an actual injury is evidence from which intention may be inferred and is relevant to the applicable statutory punishment, but neither grievous hurt nor a necessarily fatal wound is indispensable. Harjeet Singh and the authorities it discussed required a contextual assessment of the weapon, target, repeated force and other circumstances. Seven blows were delivered with an iron pipe around the head and mandible, and another to the leg. Fractures affected both parietal bones, the mandible and tibia. The Court inferred the requisite intention or knowledge of causing death and held that Section 307, not the proposed Section 326, was proved. As to punishment, the appellant had served approximately 72 days during trial and roughly three years eleven months after conviction by the date of the appeal decision; the Court nonetheless found seven years' rigorous imprisonment proportionate to the repeated head attack and multiple fractures.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. The 18 March 2016 judgment and sentence in Special Sessions Trial No. 270/2014 were affirmed: Surendra Puri remained convicted under IPC Section 307 and liable to serve seven years' rigorous imprisonment and pay a ₹10,000 fine, subject to the trial court's provision for imprisonment in default. He was in jail and was directed to serve the full remaining sentence. The trial court's acquittals on Sections 294, 323 and 506 Part II were not altered.

Surendra Puri v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 426/2016, 15/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (948) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder — Section 300 thirdly — intended injury and objective sufficiency —

Following Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, the Court distinguished the intention to inflict the particular bodily injury proved from the objective question whether that injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The clause does not additionally require an intention to kill. The fatal parietal injury, skull fracture and medical opinion, considered with the prosecution evidence, supported the affirmance of the appellant's conviction under Section 302. The finding required reliable proof that he had inflicted the injury.

Homicide gradation — Section 299 and Section 304 parts I and II — The Court drew on Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra to distinguish culpable homicide based on intention from the category based on knowledge alone. Before substituting Section 304 for Section 302, it considered whether any clause of Section 300 or an exception to it applied. Anda v. State of Rajasthan explained the requirement under clause Thirdly that the injury be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The record did not justify the appellant's requested conversion to either part of Section 304.

Intention — weapon, target and attendant circumstances — Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P., Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P. were considered on the inference of intention from the particular facts, including the weapon, vital part targeted, force, injuries and surrounding circumstances. A single blow does not automatically fall outside Section 302. Kanhaiyalal also discussed Arun Raj, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar and Leela Ram, and Bavisetti discussed State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam and Virsa Singh. The Court applied this contextual approach to the appellant's axe assault and the fatal brain injury. It did not treat the case as one involving only a single injury.

Exception 4 — sudden fight and unfair advantage — Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat and the Exception 4 analysis reproduced in Kanhaiyalal require a sudden fight in the heat of passion, absence of premeditation, and the absence of undue advantage or conduct that is cruel or unusual. Absence of premeditation alone cannot convert murder to culpable homicide not amounting to murder. On assessing the assault proved in this case, the Court rejected the request to apply Section 304.

Eyewitness credibility — enmity and relationship — Applying Kunwarpal alias Surajpal v. State of Uttarakhand, (2014) 16 SCC 560, the Court recognised that prior enmity could provide a motive either for the offence or for false implication. Jitendra's relationship with Jamuna called for careful scrutiny, not automatic rejection. Despite Makhan's denial of having witnessed the attack and other inconsistencies, the Court accepted Jitendra's account of the material events in light of the evidence as a whole and the medical corroboration.

Medical and ocular proof — fall theory — The doctor's hypothetical concession that a forceful fall on a sharp stone could cause injury did not require acceptance of the defence theory. The spot map did not show the alleged culvert, the defence witnesses had not seen a fall, and the postmortem and other prosecution evidence supported an assault. That conclusion rested on the evidence in this case; it did not establish a presumption that every medical possibility is irrelevant.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : On 25 August 2010 Jitendra Kumar (PW1) reported that his father Jamuna had been assaulted near Lallu Malli's field at Kurwai, District Vidisha. There was prior enmity arising from a land dispute: Jamuna and another person faced a case concerning the murder of Kanchhedi Lal, father of appellant Suresh Ahirwar. Jitendra alleged that Suresh and Parma, Asharam and Gulab attacked Jamuna with an axe and lathis and fled when he arrived. Jamuna was found unconscious near a roadside drain or alleged culvert and was declared dead after being taken to hospital. The matter was recorded as a merg, FIR Crime No. 282/2010 was registered under Sections 302/34 IPC, and the police prepared the inquest, spot map, seizure and arrest records, obtained the postmortem and FSL report, and filed a charge-sheet.

At trial, nine prosecution witnesses and four defence witnesses were examined. Jitendra maintained that he saw the four persons assaulting his father; Makhan (PW2), who was said to have warned him, denied seeing an ongoing attack on returning to the site; Veer Singh (PW4) did not support the prosecution; and Jamuna's wife Kunwar Bai (PW5) gave a different time and expressed suspicion of Makhan. The doctor (PW3) found a parietal laceration measuring 15 × 13 cm and extending to the bone, with a skull fracture; an incised wound over the right scapula measuring 17 × 9 cm and extending to the bone; an ankle contusion; and a puncture wound on the thigh. He attributed death to a brain injury and classified the death as homicidal, while accepting the hypothetical possibility of injury from forceful contact with a sharp stone. The investigating officer (PW9) described seizure of an axe pursuant to Suresh's memorandum and lathis attributed to the others; his spot map showed a drain rather than a culvert. The judgment discusses human blood of group B on some FSL exhibits but does not identify a definitive scientific link between a particular accused's weapon and the victim.

Suresh denied guilt under Section 313 CrPC and alleged false implication because of the previous murder case; the defence also suggested that an intoxicated Jamuna had fallen into a culvert. The Second Additional Sessions Judge, Vidisha, in Sessions Trial No. 333/2010 convicted Suresh under Section 302 IPC on 30 November 2011, sentencing him to rigorous life imprisonment and a ₹1,000 fine with the trial court's default provision, while acquitting the three co-accused. Suresh's Criminal Appeal No. 51/2012 challenged Jitendra's identification of the assailant and his reliability as a witness, the contradictions and timing, the absence of light, the acquittal of co-accused, the consistency of the medical evidence with the prosecution account, and the refusal to apply Section 304 Part I or II. The State supported the conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab, AIR 1958 SC 465, was adopted for the four distinct requirements of Section 300 Thirdly: proof of an injury, its nature, an intention to inflict that very injury, and its objective sufficiency in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. The prosecution bears the burden throughout. Neither an intention to kill nor knowledge that the injury is fatal is an additional requirement under that clause. The Court used this framework to evaluate the fatal head injury and the Section 302 versus Section 304 request; the passage quoted again in Bavisetti makes clear that the intention to inflict the injury is a factual question distinct from the seriousness of the injury. No accidental infliction of the proved injury was accepted here.

Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Criminal Appeal Nos. 1078–1079/2005, was considered for the sequence of analysis under Sections 299, 300 and 304: an intention to cause death or a bodily injury likely to cause death differs from knowledge that death is likely; a Section 300 clause yields murder unless an exception applies; where Section 300 is not attracted, the categories based on intention ordinarily fall under Section 304 Part I, while the category based on knowledge alone falls under Part II. The Court applied that framework and refused to alter the conviction. Anda v. State of Rajasthan, 1966 Cri LJ 171, explained that Section 300 Thirdly concerns an intended injury carrying a high probability of causing death in the ordinary course of nature. The weapon and the part of the body injured may inform that assessment. The Court discussed it in assessing the fatal injury.

Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P., (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejected a fixed rule that a single blow must fall outside Section 302. The injury, vital part targeted, weapon, force, manner of assault and surrounding circumstances determine the requisite mental element and the nature of the offence, as illustrated by the cited knife wound to the chest of a victim held by others. The Court applied the principle that the circumstances must be considered; it did not proceed on the factual premise that Jamuna had sustained only one wound. Pulicherla Nagaraju alias Nagaraja v. State of A.P., (2006) 11 SCC 444, set out a non-exhaustive list of circumstances relevant to intention—weapon carried or picked up, vital target, force, chance or planning, enmity, provocation, heat of passion, unfair advantage and number of blows. It cautions both against automatically treating murder as a lesser offence and against treating every fatal altercation as murder. The Bench applied it in sustaining the conviction under Section 302 on its assessment of this assault.

Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P., (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred intention from a crowbar attack on the head with force enough to cause multiple skull fractures; the judgment considered the combined effect of the weapon, part of the body targeted and resulting injuries. The weapon used against Jamuna and his injuries nevertheless required independent proof. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal, (2019) 5 SCC 639, was reproduced for the proposition that one blow does not preclude Section 302 and that a lethal strike on a vital part may reveal intention. In the passage examined by the Court, Kanhaiyalal discussed Arun Raj v. Union of India, (2010) 6 SCC 457, Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar v. State of Gujarat, (2011) 10 SCC 604, and Leela Ram: their discussion concerned a single blow, weapon and force, and, in Leela Ram, the cumulative requirements of Exception 4.

Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P., (2008) 15 SCC 725, likewise cautioned against mechanically applying Section 304 Part II merely because there was a single injury; intention must be assessed from the surrounding circumstances. It quoted State of Karnataka v. Vedanayagam, (1995) 1 SCC 326, in which medical evidence that the knife injury was sufficient to cause death in the ordinary course of nature, together with the other facts, supported restoration of the conviction under Section 302. It also referred to Vedanayagam's reliance on Virsa Singh. The quoted distinction between the intent to inflict the actual wound and the objective seriousness of that wound informed the Bench's statement of the law.

Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat, (2003) 9 SCC 322, was considered for Exception 4: a sudden mutual fight in the heat of passion and without premeditation must coincide with the absence of undue advantage and of cruel or unusual conduct. The fight must involve the deceased. The passage expressly distinguishes a mere sudden quarrel from satisfaction of all the requirements. Kanhaiyalal's quotation of Leela Ram repeated the four cumulative requirements.

Kunwarpal alias Surajpal and Others v. State of Uttarakhand and Another, (2014) 16 SCC 560, was expressly applied in paragraph 38 for the two-sided significance of prior enmity: it may support false implication or supply motive for the offence. The Bench then required close scrutiny of the related witness and accepted Jitendra's account on the evidence as a whole. The defence had cited Amar Singh v. State (NCT of Delhi), Kuna alias Sanjay Behera v. State of Odisha, State of Rajasthan v. Bhola Singh, Stalin v. State and State of M.P. v. Ratan Singh, as well as the Madhya Pradesh decisions Ramadhar alias Pappan Khamparia and Rewaram. These authorities were cited by counsel in paragraph 6.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 299 defines culpable homicide through intention to cause death, intention to cause bodily injury likely to cause death, or knowledge that the act is likely to cause death. Section 300 sets out when culpable homicide amounts to murder. The Court specifically examined clause Thirdly: the intentional infliction of the proved injury and the separate objective question whether it was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Exception 4 to Section 300, considered through Supreme Court authority, requires a sudden fight in the heat of passion, without premeditation, unfair advantage, or cruel or unusual conduct. Section 302 provides punishment for murder. Section 304 Part I addresses culpable homicide not amounting to murder based on the specified intention. Part II addresses homicide that does not amount to murder and is based on knowledge without the specified intention. The Court applied these distinctions to reject conversion of the appellant's Section 302 conviction. Section 34 IPC appeared in the FIR's allegation of common intention, but was not independently interpreted in this appeal. Section 313 CrPC governed the appellant's trial statement and denial; no distinct Section 313 procedural question was decided.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Jamuna's death was homicidal and whether the prosecution reliably proved Suresh's participation despite Jitendra's kinship and prior enmity, Makhan's and other witnesses' lack of support, varying incident times, alleged darkness, the proposed accidental fall, and the acquittal of the other three accused. (ii) Whether the medical and forensic material sufficiently supported the prosecution account to sustain the conviction or made accidental death a reasonable alternative. (iii) Whether the proved assault and mental element constituted murder under Sections 299–300, particularly Section 300 Thirdly, or warranted application of Section 304 Part I or II or the sudden-fight exception.

5. Ratio / Findings : As to identification and credibility, the Court reviewed Jitendra's assertion that he saw Suresh and the others attacking Jamuna, his evidence of the old murder case and land dispute, Makhan's denial of seeing an ongoing assault or giving the claimed warning, Veer Singh's failure to support the prosecution, Kunwar Bai's differing timing and accusation against Makhan, and the defence evidence. It found the inconsistencies insufficient to discredit the prosecution case on the evidence as a whole. As Kunwarpal cautions, enmity can motivate either a crime or a false accusation; a related witness is not disqualified but must be scrutinised carefully. The Court accepted Jitendra's testimony after that scrutiny and did not treat the acquittal of the other accused as automatically establishing Suresh's innocence. This was an assessment of the evidence in this case, rather than a rule that a sole related witness must invariably be accepted.

As to the cause of death and corroboration, the doctor attributed death to a brain injury accompanying the extensive bone-deep parietal wound and skull fracture and classified the death as homicidal, while also recording injuries to the scapular region, ankle and thigh. The Bench acknowledged his conditional concession that a forceful fall on a sharp stone could cause injury, together with the defence suggestion that an intoxicated Jamuna had fallen into a culvert. It found that the defence witnesses did not directly establish a fall, the officer's map showed a drain rather than the alleged culvert, and the medical findings, seizure evidence and overall prosecution account supported assault. The Court discounted the proposed visibility objection by stating that sufficient light remained around 7 p.m. in August; that finding formed part of the Court's assessment of the facts.

The Court observed that — culpable homicide is the genus and murder a species. It explained the mental states under Section 299 and examined Section 300 Thirdly through Virsa Singh when deciding the classification of the offence. The intention to inflict the particular bodily injury must be proved, while the sufficiency of that injury to cause death in the ordinary course of nature is an objective question. The prosecution bears the burden of proof. The cited single-blow cases, including Mahesh Balmiki, Kanhaiyalal and Bavisetti, rejected mechanical classification of the offence; Pulicherla Nagaraju directed attention to all attendant circumstances. Applying these principles to the appellant's axe assault and the severe fatal head injury, and having accepted the prosecution evidence, the Court held that neither Section 304 Part I nor Part II was attracted. It found no grave error in the trial court's conviction and sentence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. The judgment and sentence dated 30 November 2011 of the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Vidisha, in Sessions Trial No. 333/2010 were affirmed against Suresh Ahirwar: conviction under Section 302 IPC, rigorous imprisonment for life, ₹1,000 fine and the trial court's default provision. The appellant, already in jail, was directed to serve the remainder of his sentence. Copies were to be sent to the jail authorities and the trial court with the record for information and compliance. The acquittal of the other co-accused remained undisturbed.

Suresh Ahirwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 51/2012, 22/06/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (949) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder and attempt to murder / field assault — On 10 March 2010 Suresh and Devendra confronted Suresh's brother Mahesh over an alleged accusation of crop theft while Mahesh and his wife Bhagwati were cutting gram in their field. Mahesh stated that Suresh struck his head and hands with an iron rod and that Devendra struck his legs with a lathi. When Bhagwati intervened, Suresh struck her head and Devendra broke her legs. Mahesh survived with head and limb injuries; Bhagwati died on the way to the hospital to which she had been referred. The MLC and postmortem documented multiple head wounds, bilateral tibial fractures and other blunt trauma, with the cumulative head and lower-limb injuries sufficient to cause death. The Sessions Court imposed life imprisonment under Section 302 and ten years' imprisonment under Section 307, to run concurrently, with fines and default terms. The High Court affirmed.

Police statement of deceased / mental fitness — ASI Chauhan said he recorded Bhagwati's Section 161 CrPC statement Ex. P.20 at about 19:15–19:25 and considered her fit to make it. Because she died from these injuries, the statement could, in principle, fall within Section 32 Evidence Act even though it had been recorded by the police. A doctor's certificate was not invariably required, and a slight difference between the times shown by different watches did not establish that the statement could not have been recorded. However, Dr. Sharma examined her at substantially the same time, described her as semi-conscious and in a serious condition, and stated that she could not give a statement. The prosecution failed to prove that she was fit to make the statement, so Ex. P.20 was not relied upon as a dying declaration. Anand Kotwar's assertion at trial that the victims had orally named the assailants was likewise rejected because of a major omission from his earlier statement. The Court instead relied on Mahesh's direct account as an injured eyewitness.

Witness credibility, medical variation and offence classification — Chandrasekar and Abdul Sayeed accord particular weight to an injured eyewitness's testimony without dispensing with scrutiny. The alleged motive of grabbing land was unsupported (Rizan). The defence's hypothetical explanation of a fall and the alleged conflict concerning blunt penetrating injuries to the legs did not render the eyewitness account impossible. Krishnan, Dharkole, Radhakrishna Nagesh and Mahavir Singh require a material, rather than speculative, conflict with the medical evidence. The delay in recording Rakesh's statement was explained by his fear and departure to Raipur. His evidence was used only to corroborate the injured eyewitness (Mohd. Khalid, Sheo Shankar Singh). Several other witnesses turned hostile, and examination of the ambulance driver was not necessary. Lavghanbhai and Ajmal, with Dhirendra Kumar, Mohd. Rafiq, Rayavarapu Punnayya and Pulicherla Nagaraju appearing in the quoted passages, guided the inquiry under Sections 302/304. The appellants arrived armed and repeatedly struck the unarmed victims on their heads and both legs. The Court found the assault cruel and rejected the plea of a sudden fight warranting reduction to Section 304 Part I. Both convictions and the concurrent sentences were upheld. Devendra's bail bonds were cancelled and he was ordered to surrender, while Suresh, already in jail, was to serve the remaining sentence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suresh and Devendra appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 28 December 2011 of the 1st Additional Sessions Judge, Dabra, in Sessions Trial 196/2010. Both were convicted under Section 302 IPC (life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with one year's rigorous imprisonment in default) and Section 307 IPC (ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with one year's rigorous imprisonment in default). The sentences were concurrent. They were charged under Sections 302/34 and 307/34 after police had investigated additional IPC allegations; the appeal's operative convictions were recorded under Sections 302 and 307. During the appeal, Suresh was in jail and Devendra was on bail.

At approximately 5 p.m. on 10 March 2010, Mahesh and his wife Bhagwati were cutting gram in their field. Mahesh said his brother Suresh, carrying an iron rod, and nephew Devendra, carrying a lathi, confronted him about a supposed accusation of crop theft, then beat him on the head, hands and legs. Bhagwati intervened and was struck on the head and both legs. Mahesh suffered lacerations, deformity and bilateral leg injuries; Bhagwati had multiple head wounds, bilateral tibia fractures and other trauma and died en route to J.A. Hospital after initial treatment at Dabra. The postmortem attributed death to cardiorespiratory failure from the cumulative head and leg injuries and classified the death as homicidal. ASI Chauhan recorded a Dehati Nalishi in the 108 ambulance and later recorded Bhagwati's statement under Section 161.

Mahesh testified as an injured eyewitness. Kriparam and Anand Kotwar, although cited as eyewitnesses, said they arrived after the attack; other witnesses did not support the whole case. Rakesh stated that he saw the beating from a distance of 50–60 feet, but fled in fear and left for Raipur. His police statement was recorded two to two-and-a-half months later. Anand asserted at trial that both victims named the appellants, but that assertion was absent from his earlier statement. The officer stated that Bhagwati gave her statement at 19:15–19:25, while the doctor described her as semi-conscious and too unwell to make a statement when he examined her at about 19:15. The defence questioned the declaration, the consistency of the medical evidence, the witnesses' interest, the non-examination of the ambulance driver and the rejection of the sudden-fight plea.

2. Precedents — Considered : Chandrasekar v. State, (2017) 13 SCC 585, quoting Brahm Swaroop, and Abdul Sayeed v. State of M.P., (2010) 10 SCC 259, were quoted in paragraphs 38–39. Injuries sustained in the same incident strongly support an eyewitness's presence and make the false implication of another person in place of the actual assailant less likely. Nevertheless, convincing major contradictions may discredit the testimony. Abdul Sayeed quotes several earlier decisions concerning injured witnesses, including Jarnail Singh, Shivalingappa Kallayanappa, Kishan Chand and Krishan. The Court also cited its own Nathu Singh decision at paragraph 40. It independently tested Mahesh's specific account against the medical findings and the alleged motive for false implication, rather than treating his injuries as conclusive proof of every allegation.

Krishnan v. State represented by Inspector of Police, (2003) 7 SCC 56, State of M.P. v. Dharkole, (2004) 13 SCC 308, Radhakrishna Nagesh v. State of A.P., (2013) 11 SCC 688, and Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, were quoted in paragraphs 44–47. Credible eyewitness testimony is not displaced by hypothetical medical alternatives or minor variations. A serious conflict that makes the eyewitness account impossible stands on a different footing. The passage quoted from Radhakrishna Nagesh includes Dayal Singh, Kamaljit Singh and Madan Gopal Kakkad; Mahavir Singh itself refers to Abdul Sayeed. The Court considered the doctor's explanation of blunt penetrating wounds, the possibility that the rod had a pointed end, and Mahesh's own injuries in rejecting the alleged incompatibility. It did not treat the medical evidence as irrelevant.

Mohd. Khalid v. State of W.B., (2002) 7 SCC 334, and Sheo Shankar Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 3 SCC 654, were quoted at paragraphs 49–50. Delay in examination of an eyewitness under Section 161 CrPC is not per se fatal; the explanation for the delay, the police's knowledge of the witness and indications that the witness was introduced to falsely support the case are material. The passage quoted from Sheo Shankar Singh includes Ranbir and Satbir Singh. Rakesh's fear and absence were accepted as explaining the delay, and his evidence corroborated Mahesh's account. Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, quoted at paragraph 57 with references to Dalip Singh, Guli Chand, Vadivelu Thevar, Rameshwar, Masalti, Jagir Singh and Lehna within the quoted passage, rejects automatic discrediting of a relative and requires a foundation for a plea of false implication. The alleged motive of coveting the land lacked such a foundation in this case.

Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, quoted at paragraph 60, sets out, by reference to Dhirendra Kumar, the factual considerations relevant to Sections 302/304: weapon, body part, force, sudden fight, previous enmity, provocation, passion and cruelty. Ajmal v. State of Kerala, Criminal Appeal 1838/2019, judgment 12 July 2022, quoted at paragraph 61, in turn quotes Mohd. Rafiq, Rayavarapu Punnayya and Pulicherla Nagaraju on the degrees of culpable homicide and the evidence relevant to intention. In rejecting the claim that the argument about crop theft reduced the offence, the High Court applied these factors, emphasising that the appellants came armed, the victims were unarmed, and the assault caused multiple head injuries and fractures of both legs. The facts discussed in those quotations concern the cited cases, rather than this incident in the field.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Sections 302 and 307 were the affirmed convictions for Bhagwati's death and the assault on surviving Mahesh; Section 34 appeared in framed charges and the charge sheet, but the Court's operative order retained the substantive offences against both appellants. The defence sought a reduced conviction under Section 304 Part I, which was rejected in the context of Section 300. Other IPC counts in the charge sheet, including 325, 294, 323, 324 and 506, formed part of the charging history; they were not additional convictions decided on appeal. Section 374 CrPC provided the route of appeal. Bhagwati's statement was recorded under Section 161 CrPC and, because death followed from the incident, could, in principle, be relevant under Section 32 Evidence Act. The Court rejected it because mental fitness had not been proved, rather than merely because no formal medical certificate had been obtained. The Kotwar's assertion that the victims had orally named the assailants was likewise not relied upon because of a major contradiction. The FSL report and seized items formed part of the investigation.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Bhagwati's death was homicidal and whether the roles of both appellants in the assault on her and Mahesh were proved by admissible, reliable evidence. (ii) Whether the deceased's police statement was sufficiently shown to be made in a fit mental condition and could be treated as a dying declaration. (iii) Whether Mahesh's injuries and relationship, Rakesh's delayed statement, the hostile witnesses, the non-examination of the ambulance driver and possible medical alternatives undermined the prosecution case. (iv) Whether the confrontation over an alleged accusation of crop theft warranted reduction to Section 304 Part I on the ground of a sudden fight, and whether the concurrent sentences under Sections 302/307 required alteration.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — the medical records established that the cumulative blunt injuries to the head and lower limbs were fatal and that the death was homicidal. The police officer's assertion that Bhagwati was fit to give a statement under Section 161 at 19:15 could not prevail over the treating doctor's description, at substantially the same time, of her semi-consciousness, grave condition and inability to give a statement. Slight differences between the times shown by different watches did not establish mental fitness. The absence of a formal certificate alone would not have been decisive, but the affirmative medical evidence to the contrary was. Ex. P.20 was not a reliable dying declaration. Anand's new assertion that the victims had orally named the assailants was also excluded because of a substantial omission from his earlier statement. The Court expressly excluded these accounts and affirmed guilt on the remaining evidence.

Mahesh's injuries gave his direct account particular weight. His attribution of the iron rod to Suresh and the lathi to Devendra was consistent with the head wounds and injuries to both legs. The hypothetical possibility of repeated falls did not provide a persuasive alternative explanation for the injuries caused in the attack as a whole. The doctor explained that blunt penetrating wounds had irregular margins, and the metal rod could have had a pointed end. Mahesh's own serious condition meant he might not have seen every separate strike on Bhagwati; that did not make his central testimony medically impossible. Rakesh's corroborating account remained acceptable because the delay had been explained. The failure of Kriparam and other bystanders to support the prosecution as eyewitnesses did not displace the direct evidence. The ambulance driver was not a necessary witness to the occurrence. The alleged plan to seize Suresh's adjoining land was unsupported by evidence that the land had been taken after the arrests or that Suresh's family had been obstructed.

Mahesh and Bhagwati were unarmed and working in their field. The appellants arrived carrying weapons and assaulted them, breaking both victims' legs and inflicting multiple head injuries. The Court found the assault unusually cruel and outside the conditions for reduction on the ground of a sudden fight. It rejected the request to apply Section 304 Part I and affirmed the convictions for murder and attempted murder. Life imprisonment was the minimum sentence under Section 302, and the concurrent ten-year term under Section 307 and the fines were left unaltered.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal and affirmed the Dabra trial judgment dated 28 December 2011, the convictions under Sections 302 and 307, the fines, default terms and concurrent sentences. Devendra's bail bonds were cancelled and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve the remaining sentence. Suresh, already in jail, was to serve the remaining sentence. Free copies were directed for the appellants and the trial record was to be returned.

Suresh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 194/2012, 22/08/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (950) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 364A IPC / Section 13 MPDVPK act / Section 346 IPC — Five appellants, Suresh, Bhaggu, Kailash, Ramcharan and Rajesh alias Babba, appealed against the life sentences imposed for the alleged abduction of Ram Prakash Rajput for ransom and his secret confinement. His brother filed a missing report on 22 July 2005; the FIR named alleged abductors on 9 August, before Ram Prakash returned on 14 August. The alleged abductee stated that ₹10 lakh had been demanded, but did not explain how the demand was communicated to his family. His brother spoke of a demand for ₹1 lakh conveyed through a negotiator who was not examined and a letter that was not produced. The other witnesses who relied on hearsay did not identify a verifiable source. Ram Prakash's account of escape conflicted with the officer's claim of police recovery. His evidence concerning the abductors' descriptions, his knowledge of their names, visibility at night, blindfolding and the use of code names was inconsistent. The Court found that abduction, captivity and a demand for ransom all remained unproved beyond reasonable doubt, and acquitted all five appellants.

Identification and changed testimony — Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi) distinguishes dock identification, which is substantive evidence, from a test identification parade (TIP), which serves an investigative and corroborative purpose. The absence of a TIP alone does not render subsequent identification in court inadmissible. Here, however, the police had shown the previously unknown appellants to Ram Prakash at the police station, and he admitted that he learnt their names only then. Applying Krishna Kumar Malik, the Court found his subsequent dock identification unreliable as independent identification evidence. The State relied on Khujji to argue that Ram Prakash had been won over and had reversed his account in the later cross-examination. That argument failed because his first cross-examination, recorded on the same day as his examination-in-chief, had already disclosed the central defect in identification. The problem did not arise for the first time from his later explanation concerning code names.

Police collusion and Article 21 compensation — The sources said to have been relied on during the missing-person enquiry for naming the accused at an early stage were not produced. Investigating officer Raghvendra Singh allowed the witnesses to see the accused at the police station, did not conduct a TIP, and gave a recovery account inconsistent with the alleged abductee's account of escape. The High Court expressly found a fabricated case in connivance with Ram Prakash, Manohar and Omprakash. Each appellant had suffered over 11 years of actual custody; Rajesh remained jailed. Applying Ankush Maruti Shinde, Islamic Relief Committee and S. Nambi Narayanan concerning established violations of liberty and dignity, it ordered the State to pay ₹3 lakh to each appellant within one month and file receipts within 45 days. The State was permitted to recover the amount from the officer's salary/pension and from Ram Prakash and Manohar as arrears of land revenue. The right to seek further compensation through a civil suit was preserved, without adjustment of this award. The convictions and sentences were set aside. Rajesh's release was directed unless his custody was required in another case, and the other appellants' bail bonds were discharged.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Criminal Appeals 463, 466 and 482/2008 jointly challenged the judgment dated 26 April 2008 of the Special Judge, Datia, in Special Sessions Trial 58/2005. Suresh, Bhaggu Dheemer, Kailash Dheemer, Ramcharan and Rajesh alias Babba had been sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000 (with two years' rigorous imprisonment in default) under Section 364A IPC read with Section 13 of the Madhya Pradesh Dakaiti aur Vyapharan Prabhavit Kshetra Adhiniyam (MPDVPK Act), and one year's rigorous imprisonment under Section 346 IPC, to run concurrently. The charge sheets also referred to Sections 11 and 13 MPDVPK and, for Rajesh, Arms Act Sections 25 and 27, but these were not listed in the judgment as separate convictions under appeal. The appellants disputed abduction and any ransom demand.

Manohar Singh said his brother Ram Prakash went to see cattle on 22 July 2005 at about 7 p.m. and did not return, so he lodged a missing person report at 23:30. The FIR, Ex. P.4, was recorded only on 9 August and named Nandu and Rajesh, although Ram Prakash reportedly returned on 14 August. Ram Prakash described men stopping him in the dark, holding his hands at gunpoint, moving him through fields and forest, and detaining him for thirteen and then eight days before he escaped when guards slept. He spoke of a ransom demand for ₹10 lakh, while Manohar and Omprakash referred to a demand for ₹1 lakh allegedly conveyed through another person. Manohar claimed to possess a ransom letter, which he neither supplied to police nor exhibited. Karan Singh, said to have negotiated, was not examined. Omprakash's source was an unidentified outsider and he admitted enmity with Rajesh. The doctor recorded contusions and swelling after the alleged return.

The abductee stated that he was sometimes blindfolded and was kept 25–30 feet from the men, where he could not hear their conversations, yet claimed to have heard their names. In cross-examination, he said that they used code names and that he learnt their actual names only when the police showed him the accused at the station. There was no test identification parade. Investigating officer Raghvendra Singh PW5 claimed to have recovered Ram Prakash at Bhaguvapura. This contradicted Ram Prakash's account that he had escaped, gone to his brother-in-law's house and then proceeded to Police Station Tharet. PW5 produced neither the statements recorded during the missing-person enquiry nor a verifiable source for the names in the 9 August FIR. He admitted showing the accused to the witnesses at the police station. The Court assessed these contradictions together, rather than treating them as an isolated discrepancy.

2. Precedents — Considered : Khujji v. State of M.P., (1991) 3 SCC 627, was invoked by the State in paragraph 22(x) to disregard the abductee's cross-examination of 24 July 2007 as an attempt to assist the defence after an interval. In Khujji, the witness materially departed from his earlier account identifying the accused. Here, the examination-in-chief and cross-examination recorded on 15 June 2007 already disclosed that Ram Prakash learnt the appellants' names only after they had been shown to him at the police station. His evidence in the adjourned cross-examination in July reflected that existing weakness; it did not reverse an earlier firm account of identification. The High Court distinguished Khujji factually and considered the later evidence.

Mukesh v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2017) 6 SCC 1, was quoted at paragraph 22(xi). A TIP serves an investigative and corroborative purpose, while identification in court is substantive evidence. The absence of a TIP does not itself render identification in court inadmissible; the weight to be given to it depends on the circumstances. The passage quoted from it discusses Matru, Santokh Singh, Malkhansingh, Visveswaran and Manu Sharma. Those authorities include the principle that, in an appropriate case, guilt may be proved by circumstantial evidence without identification. Krishna Kumar Malik v. State of Haryana, (2011) 7 SCC 130, was then quoted and applied: where a witness had been shown a previously unknown suspect at the police station and the description was deficient, subsequent dock identification could become meaningless. Here, the prior exposure to the accused, the absence of earlier descriptions, darkness and blindfolding, contradictions concerning code names and the inability to hear conversations made the identification unreliable. The Court did not hold that dock identification is invariably inadmissible when no TIP has been conducted.

Ankush Maruti Shinde v. State of Maharashtra, (2019) 15 SCC 470, was quoted at paragraph 32 as an example of compensation awarded by the Supreme Court under Article 142 in the peculiar circumstances of false implication. The High Court did not purport to exercise Article 142 itself. State of Gujarat v. Islamic Relief Committee of Gujarat, (2018) 13 SCC 687, quoted at paragraph 33, emphasises that monetary relief in public law for infringement of a fundamental right, particularly Article 21, is limited and does not follow from every ultra vires administrative act. The passage quoted from it considers Hindustan Paper, Rabindra Nath Ghosal, Common Cause and Nilabati Behera, including the distinct remedies available in private law. S. Nambi Narayanan v. Siby Mathews, (2018) 10 SCC 804, was separately quoted on malicious prosecution, dignity, wrongful detention and Article 21 compensation, with D.K. Basu, Joginder Kumar, Kiran Bedi, Delhi Judicial Service Association, Sube Singh and Hardeep Singh appearing in the quoted passage. The High Court applied the Article 21 principles to its affirmative finding that the appellants had been falsely implicated and awarded ₹3 lakh to each. Ankush concerned an award of ₹5 lakh in that case. The present award rested on the affirmative finding of false implication, rather than acquittal alone.

3. Statutes considered : Section 364A IPC and Section 13 MPDVPK Act formed the basis of the principal conviction for abduction for ransom; Section 346 IPC covered secret wrongful confinement. The case against the accused failed because identity, abduction, captivity and a ransom demand were not proved on the evidence in this case. Police had charged Section 364A/34 IPC, Section 11 MPDVPK and, for Rajesh, Arms Act Sections 25/27, but the appeals concerned the convictions specifically listed in paragraph 2 and did not analyse the independent ingredients of Arms Act offences. CrPC provisions governing identification and police statements were considered through Mukesh, including the context of Section 162. There was no absolute statutory entitlement to a TIP. According to the judgment, the CrPC contained no direct provision for compensation to an accused falsely implicated in circumstances of this kind. Article 21 protected liberty and dignity; the High Court's public-law compensation was distinguished from the Supreme Court's own Article 142 power in Ankush. The State was permitted to recover the amount from the persons responsible, and the right to bring further civil proceedings was expressly preserved.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the alleged ransom demand, abduction, secret detention and these appellants' identity were proved beyond reasonable doubt. (ii) Whether the later courtroom identification could be relied upon after the accused had been shown at the police station without a TIP, and whether the abductee's adjourned cross-examination represented a suspect change of account under Khujji. (iii) Whether the investigator's naming of accused in the FIR at an early stage without supporting material, failure to produce the sources, showing of the accused to witnesses, and contradictory recovery account amounted to malicious false implication. (iv) If all convictions failed after prolonged imprisonment, whether Article 21 permitted monetary relief against the State, recovery from wrongdoers and a separate civil claim. The Court was not deciding any additional Arms Act conviction, whether recovery would ultimately be made, or the amount of any later civil damages award.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — the evidence was deficient in several connected respects. Ram Prakash's account of a demand for ₹10 lakh differed from the hearsay account of a ₹1 lakh demand. Communication of a demand to the family was not established, Karan Singh was not examined, and the purported ransom letter was withheld. No payment was alleged. Captivity and identity were also unsupported: darkness, blindfolding, a 25–30-foot separation and the use of code names undermined the claimed recognition. No site map of the place of captivity had been prepared, and his account of escape conflicted with PW5's claim to have recovered him. The 9 August FIR already named Rajesh and Nandu before the abductee's return, and no statement recorded during the missing-person enquiry was produced to establish the source of those names. The appellants had been shown to the witnesses at the police station, which deprived the subsequent dock identification of reliability in this case. The State's argument based on Khujji failed because the material admission that the accused had been shown at the police station preceded the adjourned cross-examination. Omprakash's account, based on hearsay from an unidentified source and accompanied by admitted enmity, provided no reliable corroboration. The Court held that not only the demand for ransom, but also the abduction and secret confinement, remained unproved beyond reasonable doubt.

The Court's conclusion extended beyond a finding of reasonable doubt. Investigating officer Raghvendra Singh could not substantiate how the names came to be included in the FIR. He failed to produce the statements recorded during the missing-person enquiry, did not conduct a TIP, allowed the witnesses to see the accused at the station and claimed a recovery inconsistent with the abductee's account of escape. On the record as a whole, the Court expressly found that a false case had been created in connivance with Ram Prakash, Manohar and Omprakash to settle scores arising from enmity. That specific affirmative finding, rather than acquittal alone, formed the basis of constitutional redress. The appellants had suffered more than eleven years of custody; Rajesh was still jailed. The guarantee of liberty and dignity under Article 21 justified an award of ₹3 lakh to each appellant against the State. Ankush illustrated the remedy in exceptional cases of false implication. The Court considered the limits stated in Islamic Relief Committee and the analysis of malicious prosecution in Nambi Narayanan before granting relief in public law for the established abuse. The State's right to recover the amount from the officer and witnesses did not displace its immediate duty to pay the appellants.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed all three appeals; the Special Judge's 26 April 2008 judgment and sentences under Section 364A IPC read with Section 13 MPDVPK and Section 346 IPC were set aside for all five appellants. Rajesh alias Babba was to be released immediately unless required in another case; the remaining appellants' bail bonds were discharged. The State was directed to pay ₹3 lakh to each appellant within one month and file receipts with the Principal Registrar within 45 days. It was permitted to recover the amount from PW5's salary/pension and from PW1 and PW2 as arrears of land revenue. The appellants could separately sue PW1, PW2 and PW5 for further compensation, with no adjustment of this award against any such civil award.

Suresh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 463/2008 & 466/2008 & 482/2008, 17/08/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (951) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder appeal / differentiated accused roles — A quarrel arose during the civil-court demarcation on 16 April 2011 between brothers Ramesh Chandra and Suresh Chandra Pathak. Court Commissioner Anand Kumar Yadav's report and testimony placed the suspension of the commission proceedings at about 1:10 p.m., after attempts to pacify the parties; he did not witness any firing. Ramesh died from a gunshot injury to the chest. The FIR lodged at 14:15 attributed the fatal shot and a second shot that struck the wall and damaged a pipe to Pawan. It alleged that Khemraj fired at Mukesh and that Banti had fetched the brothers. Suresh's appeal had already abated upon his death. The High Court examined the convictions of Banti, Khemraj and Pawan separately, rather than accepting or rejecting the family witnesses' account in its entirety.

Related and inimical testimony, material omissions and common intention — The deceased's two sons and grandson were natural witnesses who shared his hostility towards the accused; their evidence required close scrutiny. The Court rejected Shailesh Sharma's claim to have been present as a chance witness, having regard also to his conduct during the trial. A related witness is not automatically unreliable and independent corroboration is not invariably required (Mahavir Singh, Harbeer Singh, Vijendra Singh, Raju, Jodhan, Yogesh Singh, Mohd. Rojali Ali and related cases). Rishabh's absence from the FIR did not by itself discredit him (Mansingh, Pramod Mahto, Nirpal Singh). However, the earliest statements attributed to Banti only the task of calling his brothers before any fight had begun. The allegations introduced at trial—that he had been instructed to fetch guns, had pushed the victim and had instigated the murder—were material, unexplained improvements (S. Govindaraju, Yogesh Singh). Banti's common intention under Section 34 was not proved. The allegation that Khemraj fired at Mukesh was undermined by changes in the chronology, the absence of the expected impact marks in the spot map, and the commissioner's independent evidence. His presence as an assailant and his intention under Section 307 were not established beyond reasonable doubt.

Separable core, FIR dispatch and legal character of Pawan's act — Falsus in uno is not a rule of Indian evidence: the reliable part of testimony may be accepted despite separable, unreliable additions (Achhar Singh, Kameshwar Singh, Swaran Singh, Bhagwan Jagannath Markad). The account that Pawan fired at the chest remained consistent from the FIR through the trial and was supported by medical evidence and the recoveries. The Magistrate's receipt of the FIR copy on Monday, 18 April did not establish fabrication. Preparation of the map, seizures, inquest and postmortem on the day of the incident showed that action had been taken promptly (Pala Singh, Mahmood, Jafel Biswas, Anjan Dasgupta, Balvir Singh). The failure to send merg papers to SDO(P) and the absence of any further independent eyewitness did not invalidate evidence otherwise found reliable (Prithvi, Jagdeo, Ambika Prasad). The commissioner had left and the crowd had dispersed. No one on the victim's side was armed, and there was no provocation from that side. Pawan deliberately fired at the chest. The plea of a sudden fight, seeking reduction to Section 304 Part I, was rejected by applying Lavghanbhai and Ajmal. His convictions and sentences under Section 302, Section 201 (concerning the tampered firing pin) and Section 30 Arms Act were upheld. Banti and Khemraj were acquitted of all counts, and their bail bonds were discharged. Pawan remained in jail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : These consolidated appeals challenged the judgment dated 3 May 2012 of the 2nd Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, in Sessions Trial 340/2011. Suresh Chandra Pathak, Banti alias Nogendra and Khemraj alias Khemu had been convicted under Section 302/34 IPC and sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Khemraj was also sentenced to four years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹5,000 (with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default) under Section 307 IPC, and six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,000 (with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default) under Section 30 Arms Act. Pawan Pathak was convicted under Section 302 IPC (life imprisonment and a fine of ₹10,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default), Section 201 IPC (two years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹3,000, with four months' rigorous imprisonment in default) and Section 30 Arms Act (six months' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,000, with one month's rigorous imprisonment in default). The sentences were concurrent. Suresh Chandra died pending appeal, and his appeal was dismissed as abated by the 20 July 2022 order. Only the appeals of the surviving appellants remained for decision on merits.

The families were in dispute over property, and a civil court appointed Advocate Anand Kumar Yadav to inspect and measure it. On 16 April 2011 an argument followed the inspection. According to the FIR, Ex. P.3, lodged by Ramesh's son Mukesh at 14:15, Suresh called Pawan and Khemraj through Banti; Pawan arrived with Suresh's licensed mouzer, fired at Ramesh's chest and then fired a second shot that struck the wall and damaged a pipe. Khemraj allegedly had a 12-bore firearm and fired twice at Mukesh, who escaped. The family took Ramesh to hospital, where he was declared dead. The doctor found an entry wound with a track through the ribs and left lung and an exit wound near the scapula. Death resulted from shock and hemorrhage caused by a firearm shot fired from a distance. He classified the death as homicidal but did not identify the particular gun or the angle of the injury. The commissioner's report, Ex. P.16, records that the parties argued after the inspection, as he began measuring the road/open plot. He and the advocates tried to calm them, and he suspended the proceedings at about 1:10 p.m. He also testified that he remained there briefly and did not witness any firing. The commissioner's report is dated 19 April 2011 and has an appended demarcation plan. The police spot map, Ex. P.4, was a separate document.

Mukesh (PW1), Shailesh (PW2), Rakesh (PW3) and Rishabh (PW4) testified as eyewitnesses. They were connected to Ramesh and to each other; Rishabh was Mukesh's son and was not named in the FIR. Their testimony at trial materially expanded the roles attributed to Banti and Khemraj in the FIR and their earlier police statements. The fatal shot to the chest was consistently attributed to Pawan. The contemporaneous police records documented preparation of the map, collection of blood and earth samples, recovery of two spent cartridges and three broken bullet fragments, and the inquest and postmortem on 16 April. The FIR copy reached the Magistrate on 18 April, following Saturday and Sunday. The defence questioned the relatives' testimony, the delayed transmission of the FIR, the absence of independent witnesses, the chronology emerging from the commissioner's evidence, and the lack of forensic corroboration. Alternatively, it sought Pawan's conviction under Section 304 Part I.

2. Precedents — Considered : On related and interested testimony, Mahavir Singh v. State of M.P., (2016) 10 SCC 220, requires careful scrutiny and a plausible explanation for a chance witness's presence; Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal, (2016) 16 SCC 418, quoting Darya Singh and Raghubir Singh, requires careful scrutiny where a witness is hostile towards the accused and treats independent corroboration as a matter of prudence, rather than an indispensable requirement. Vijendra Singh v. State of U.P., (2017) 11 SCC 129, quoting Hari Obula Reddy and Kartik Malhar, stresses intrinsic reliability and a distinction between relation and actual interest. Raju v. State of T.N., (2012) 12 SCC 701, explains the distinction further: it questions a categorical Kalki statement that a natural relative can never be interested, cites the Constitution Bench decision in Basawan Singh, and requires closer and more discerning scrutiny where enmity exists, rather than outright rejection of the testimony. The passage quoted from it includes Dalip Singh, Darya Singh, Waman and a series of decisions concerning related witnesses. Jodhan v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 52, Yogesh Singh v. Mahabeer Singh, (2017) 11 SCC 195, Rupinder Singh Sandhu v. State of Punjab, (2018) 16 SCC 475, Shamim v. State (NCT of Delhi), (2018) 10 SCC 509, Rizan v. State of Chhattisgarh, (2003) 2 SCC 661, and Mohd. Rojali Ali v. State of Assam, (2019) 19 SCC 567, were further quoted. Applying these principles, the Court cautiously assessed the evidence of the relatives who were hostile towards the accused. It distinguished Shailesh's account as a chance witness from the consistent attribution of the shooting to Pawan. Not all the decisions mentioned within the quotations were separately analysed in this judgment.

State of M.P. v. Mansingh, (2003) 10 SCC 414, Pramod Mahto v. State of Bihar, (2003) 9 SCC 215, and Nirpal Singh v. State of Haryana, (1977) 2 SCC 131, were quoted at paragraphs 44–47 to reject the contention that Rishabh's testimony was automatically disqualified because he was not named in the FIR. His omission from the FIR was a matter for scrutiny; there was no statutory requirement to name every eyewitness in it. S. Govindaraju v. State of Karnataka, (2013) 15 SCC 315, and Yogesh Singh were quoted at paragraphs 52–53: rejection is warranted where omissions and improvements affect the core of the case and create serious doubt, rather than where discrepancies are trivial. The new allegations seeking to establish Banti's common intention met that test. The separate, consistent account attributing the shooting to Pawan did not.

Achhar Singh v. State of H.P., (2021) 5 SCC 543, Kameshwar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2018) 6 SCC 433, Swaran Singh v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 668, and Bhagwan Jagannath Markad v. State of Maharashtra, (2016) 10 SCC 537, were quoted in paragraphs 71–74. They reject mechanical application of falsus in uno and require the reliable part of the evidence to be separated from exaggerations that can be distinguished from it. The passage quoted from Achhar Singh refers to Gangadhar Behera and Hari Chand. The Court applied this principle in accepting the evidence against Pawan despite acquitting the other appellants; it did not accept every detail of the witnesses' accounts.

Pala Singh v. State of Punjab, (1972) 2 SCC 640, Mahmood v. State of U.P., (2007) 14 SCC 16, Jafel Biswas v. State of W.B., (2019) 12 SCC 560, Anjan Dasgupta v. State of W.B., (2017) 11 SCC 222, and Balvir Singh v. State of M.P., (2019) 15 SCC 599, were quoted at paragraphs 84–88 on Section 157 CrPC. The timing of dispatch remains an external check on the FIR's authenticity. Extraordinary, unexplained delay linked to prejudice or manipulation may be material, but delay alone does not invalidate an FIR lodged promptly and followed by immediate investigation. The passage quoted from Mahmood includes quotations from Anil Rai and Alla China Apparao, while that from Jafel Biswas includes Daud Khan, Sheo Shankar Singh and Sandeep. Prithvi (Minor) v. Mam Raj, (2004) 13 SCC 279, and State of U.P. v. Jagdeo, (2003) 1 SCC 456, were cited at paragraphs 95–96 on defective investigation; Ambika Prasad v. State (Delhi Admn.), (2000) 2 SCC 646, at paragraph 100 on the non-examination of more independent witnesses, with State of U.P. v. Anil Singh appearing in the quoted passage. The Court applied these principles only after assessing the reliability of the evidence in the case.

Lavghanbhai Devjibhai Vasava v. State of Gujarat, (2018) 4 SCC 329, quoted at paragraph 106, sets out, by reference to Dhirendra Kumar, the contextual factors relevant to distinguishing murder from an offence under Section 304. Ajmal v. State of Kerala, Criminal Appeal 1838/2019, quoted at paragraph 107, reproduces Mohd. Rafiq, State of A.P. v. Rayavarapu Punnayya and Pulicherla Nagaraju on the degrees of culpable homicide and the factors relevant to intention. In rejecting the request to apply Section 304 Part I, the High Court considered the commissioner's departure, the absence of a sudden fight when the fatal shot was fired, the firearm aimed at the chest and the fact that the victim was unarmed. These decisions do not establish that every single firearm injury invariably attracts Section 302.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 302 governed Pawan's intentional murder conviction and the trial court's convictions of Banti and Khemraj under Section 302/34 on the basis of common intention. Section 34 required proof of shared criminal intention, which was not established by the original evidence concerning Banti's initial task of calling his brothers or Khemraj's disputed conduct. Section 307 concerned Khemraj's alleged attempt to kill Mukesh; the failure to prove that he fired the shots resulted in his acquittal. Pawan sought a reduced conviction under Section 304 Part I. That request was rejected on the facts, applying the framework of Section 300 discussed in the cited precedents. Pawan's conviction under Section 201 was affirmed because the firing pin of the mouzer used by him and seized from Suresh was found to have been tampered with. The conviction under Section 30 Arms Act was affirmed for Pawan's use of Suresh's licensed gun and set aside for Khemraj because the allegation that he fired was not proved. CrPC Section 157 concerned prompt dispatch of the FIR to the Magistrate, while Section 159 was discussed in Pala Singh in relation to the Magistrate's control over the investigation. Section 231(2) explained the deferral of a witness's cross-examination. Police Regulation 174 was raised for failure to send merg papers to SDO(P). Neither the omission of a witness's name from the FIR nor the failure to examine every independent person was treated as a statutory bar.

4. Issues : (i) Whether death was homicidal and which surviving appellant's participation in the shooting was proved beyond reasonable doubt. (ii) Whether close relationship, prior enmity, Shailesh's chance presence and Rishabh's omission from the FIR rendered the witnesses' accounts unreliable in their entirety. (iii) Whether unexplained trial improvements established Banti's Section 34 intention or Khemraj's alleged Section 307 shots. (iv) Whether rejection of the testimony concerning some accused also required rejection of the separate, consistent account concerning Pawan. (v) Whether a two-day interval before the FIR copy reached the Magistrate and the failure to send the merg papers indicated an antedated case, or whether the contemporaneous investigation and reliable evidence answered those challenges. (vi) Whether Pawan's shooting constituted murder or an offence under Section 304 Part I as he sought, and whether his convictions under Section 201 and the Arms Act should stand. Suresh's personal appeal had abated and was not adjudicated afresh.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that —

Dr. Manjhi described the entry and exit wounds from the shot to the chest, which damaged the ribs and lung and caused fatal hemorrhage. The death was homicidal. The Court then separately assessed the witnesses' accounts and the role of each accused. The hostile relationship required close scrutiny, but did not by itself render the testimony of the deceased's sons and grandson false. The omission of Rishabh's name from the FIR did not disqualify his testimony. Shailesh, a lawyer friend, had no clear reason for attending the demarcation. Having regard also to his conduct near the witness box, the Court found his claimed presence as an eyewitness to be fabricated. The Court assessed the remaining family witnesses' accounts individually, rather than accepting them mechanically.

As to Banti, the FIR and all the police statements referred to showed only that Suresh had sent him to call his brothers before any violence had begun. They neither placed him at the subsequent firing nor attributed to him knowledge that firearms would be brought. The versions introduced at trial alleged that he had pushed the victim, had been instructed to bring guns and had instigated the killing. Each witness was confronted with these omissions and failed to explain them. These additions fundamentally altered the role attributed to him under Section 34. In the absence of reliable proof that Banti shared a common intention to kill, his conviction based on common intention could not stand. As to Khemraj, the later suggestion that he had already attended the roof inspection conflicted with early accounts of his arrival after being called. Witnesses put Mukesh near his father when Khemraj allegedly fired, but no expected impact marks were found on the wall behind the target along the alleged line of fire. The spot map did not reliably identify Khemraj's position. Commissioner Yadav described a dispute during measurement of the road, his departure after unsuccessful attempts to pacify the parties, and the absence of firing while he was present. This undermined the account that the firing occurred immediately. Mukesh was present but the Court found he sheltered from Pawan's shots and approached his father after the assailants fled. Neither the shots allegedly fired by Khemraj nor his participation in the murder was proved beyond reasonable doubt. The commissioner's report supports the timing and the attempts to pacify the parties, but does not itself establish what happened after he left.

The first shot fired by Pawan at the chest and the second shot that struck the wall and damaged a pipe were consistently described from the FIR onwards. The medical findings, broken bullet pieces and evidence from the scene supported this consistent account. Indian evidence law did not require its rejection merely because the witnesses had embellished the role of another accused. The use of an available motorcycle to take the victim to hospital, rather than Mukesh's car, did not disprove Mukesh's presence. The FIR lodged at 14:15 on 16 April was followed by preparation of the map at 14:30, seizure at 15:00, dispatch of the body at 15:30 and postmortem at 16:30. Receipt of the FIR copy on Monday, 18 April did not establish that it had been antedated. The failure to send the merg papers and the absence of additional independent witnesses did not discredit this corroborated account. These findings did not alter the conclusion that the prosecution had separately failed to prove its case against Banti and Khemraj.

Pawan's request to apply Section 304 Part I was rejected. The commissioner had suspended work and departed, and the crowd had dispersed. No one on the victim's side was armed, and that side had not instigated the fatal assault. Pawan brought a firearm and fired from a distance at the chest, a vital part of the body. In these circumstances, the act constituted murder, rather than culpable homicide not amounting to murder arising from a sudden fight. The Court also affirmed the conviction under Section 201 because the firing pin was found to have been tampered with, and the conviction under Section 30 Arms Act for the use of Suresh's licensed mouzer. As life imprisonment was the minimum sentence under Section 302, the sentence required no alteration.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the criminal appeal filed by Banti and Khemraj. All their convictions and sentences were set aside; they were acquitted, and, being on bail, their bonds were discharged. The criminal appeal by Pawan was dismissed. His convictions under Sections 302 and 201 IPC and Section 30 Arms Act and his concurrent sentences, including life imprisonment, were upheld. He was in jail and was directed to serve the remaining sentence. Suresh Chandra's appeal had abated on death under the earlier order. The Registry was to supply Pawan a free copy and return the trial record with the judgment.

Suresh Chandra Pathak and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Pawan Pathak v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 379/2012 & 401/2012, 05/08/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (952) Prev Next

Headnote :- Anticipatory bail / initial legality of grant / Section 439(2) CrPC — The deceased married Nitendra Kushwah on 6 December 2020 and died by hanging on 7 March 2022. Her father challenged the anticipatory bail granted by the Sessions Court to her father-in-law, Rajendra Kushwah, on 29 April 2022. His account specifically attributed to Rajendra a demand for ₹3 lakh in November 2021 and dowry-related taunts and harassment. The Sessions Court treated the father-in-law's case as identical to that of Varsha Singh, the deceased's Jethani. Varsha had received anticipatory bail on 18 April 2022 because the allegations against her were vague and omnibus. The Sessions Court did not analyse the father-in-law's different role or the specific allegation against him. Kamla Devi, Brijmani Devi, Jaibunisha, Manoj Kumar Khokhar, Ramesh Bhavan Rathod and the Mahipal line require consideration of relevant factors and intelligible reasons, brief as they may be, so that the exercise of bail discretion can be reviewed. The impugned parity formula was unreasoned and ignored material already on record.

Role-specific parity — A co-accused's bail does not establish parity merely because both persons are co-accused. As explained in Shri Mahadev Meena and Ramesh Bhavan Rathod and adopted through the High Court's Sikandar Singh Narvariya discussion, the accused's attributed conduct, relationship to the occurrence and position relative to the victim determine comparability. Vague allegations against the co-accused daughter-in-law were not comparable to the specific allegation of a direct monetary demand against the father-in-law; Taramani Parakh supplied additional context on particularised in-law allegations. The Court found no basis to apply the reason for granting Varsha bail to Rajendra.

Original invalidity versus later cancellation — The respondent invoked Dolat Ram and Abdul Basit and submitted that he had not misused the liberty granted by bail. The High Court distinguished a higher forum's review of whether the grant itself was perverse, illegal or unjustified from cancellation following supervening misconduct or new circumstances. Brijmani Devi, Bhoopendra Singh, Mahipal, Jaibunisha, Manoj Kumar Khokhar, Neeru Yadav and Padmakar Tukaram Bhavnagare were considered in explaining this distinction. Section 362 bars the same court from altering a final order, except to correct a clerical or arithmetical error. It does not bar a challenge before the higher court to the legality of the original grant. The father's Section 439(2) application succeeded: the Sessions order was set aside, Rajendra was ordered to surrender to the trial court within 15 days, and warrants could issue if he failed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suresh Kumar Kushwah, father of the deceased, invoked Section 439(2) CrPC against the anticipatory bail granted by the Sessions Court to respondent No. 1, her father-in-law Rajendra Kushwah, in Bail Application No. 1129/2022 on 29 April 2022. The daughter married Nitendra Kushwah on 6 December 2020 and died by hanging on 7 March 2022, within one year and four months of the marriage. According to the father, she was initially treated properly, then reported dowry taunts, harassment and abuse by her husband and in-laws. He said that, in November 2021, he visited with his wife and son Ramprakash to ask that the daughter not be harassed; the father-in-law responded that she would be kept properly only upon payment of ₹3 lakh.

The High Court had granted anticipatory bail to co-accused Varsha Singh, described as the deceased's Jethani, in MCRC No. 17854/2022 on 18 April 2022. That order found vague and omnibus allegations against her, taking account of her separate position as a daughter-in-law; it expressly referred to the specific allegation against the father-in-law. The Sessions Court nevertheless granted Rajendra anticipatory bail by saying his case was identical to Varsha's. The father attacked that unexplained parity and failure to consider the direct allegation. Rajendra opposed the application on the ground that cancellation required subsequent misuse of bail, which had not been alleged.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kamla Devi v. State of Rajasthan, (2022) 6 SCC 725, was quoted in paragraph 5. It identifies the seriousness of the offence, flight risk, influence over witnesses and tampering with evidence among the non-exhaustive factors relevant to bail. It treats a grant made mechanically and without reasons as non-application of mind. The quoted passage names Gudikanti Narasimhulu, Prahlad Singh Bhati, Anil Kumar Yadav, Ram Govind Upadhyay, Kalyan Chandra Sarkar, Prasanta Kumar Sarkar, Ramesh Bhavan Rathod, Brijmani Devi, Manoj Kumar Khokhar and Jaibunisha as its authorities. These authorities appear within the passage quoted from Kamla Devi; several are also discussed separately later in the judgment. The Court applied the reasoning requirement to the Sessions order, without requiring a full trial at the bail stage.

Brijmani Devi v. Pappu Kumar, (2022) 4 SCC 497, was quoted in paragraphs 6 and 13. Its discussion of Kranti Associates (P) Ltd. v. Masood Ahmed Khan, (2010) 9 SCC 496, stresses that genuine, clear reasons constrain arbitrariness and demonstrate consideration of relevant factors. Its quotation of Bhoopendra Singh v. State of Rajasthan, (2021) 17 SCC 220, and Mahipal v. Rajesh Kumar, (2020) 2 SCC 118, separates appellate scrutiny of an original bail order for perversity, illegality or lack of justification from subsequent cancellation grounded in later circumstances or breaches. The High Court applied both strands to the omissions in the original grant in this case.

Jaibunisha v. Meharban, (2022) 5 SCC 465, quoted in paragraph 7, requires attention to allegations, potential sentence, witnesses, tampering, antecedents and prima facie support while permitting brief reasons at an early stage. It says a casual, reasonless grant may be assailed by prosecution or informant in a higher forum; its reference to Gurcharan Singh v. State (Delhi Admn.), (1978) 1 SCC 118, differentiates new post-grant circumstances for cancellation from a challenge to an original order that was perverse when made. The Court applied that distinction between the appropriate forum and grounds of challenge.

Manoj Kumar Khokhar v. State of Rajasthan, (2022) 3 SCC 501, quoted in paragraph 8, reinforces brief but meaningful reasons through Ramesh Bhavan Rathod and repeats the distinction drawn in Mahipal and Bhoopendra Singh. It discusses Myakala Dharmarajam v. State of Telangana, (2020) 2 SCC 743, on the proposition that lengthy reasons are unnecessary where the grant shows examination of the case record; this did not permit an unexplained statement of parity. Ramesh Bhavan Rathod v. Vishanbhai Hirabhai Makwana, (2021) 6 SCC 230, reappears in paragraph 10 through Sikandar Singh Narvariya and requires comparison of the actual role and relationship to the incident and victim rather than a surface similarity. Shri Mahadev Meena v. Praveen Rathore, Criminal Appeal No. 1089/2021, quoted within Sikandar, rejects parity based on another accused's different personal ground and emphasizes role, gravity and prima facie material; the quoted passage refers to Ram Govind Upadhyay and Prasanta Kumar Sarkar. The High Court recorded that its earlier order in Sikandar Singh Narvariya, Criminal Appeal No. 5870/2021, had been affirmed by the Supreme Court in SLP (Cri) No. 9149/2021, Axay Kumar Dwivedi, on 26 November 2021.

Ramadhar Baghel v. State of M.P., MCRC 58792/2021, and Mahesh Pahade v. State of M.P., prior High Court decisions quoted at length in paragraph 9, bring together Supreme Court bail principles and the ability of an aggrieved victim to challenge an illegal grant. The passage quoted from Ramadhar discusses Harjit Singh v. Inderpreet Singh, Gudikanti Narasimhulu, Ash Mohammad, Sitaram Popat Vetal, Ram Govind Upadhyay, Prasanta Kumar Sarkar, Chaman Lal, Sonu and Neeru Yadav on relevant factors and judicial discretion. Mahesh Pahade discusses Amanullah, Puran, P.S.R. Sadhanantham, Lachhman Dass, Amarmani Tripathi and Prakash Kadam on victim standing and the initial-illegality distinction.

Neeru Yadav v. State of U.P., (2016) 15 SCC 422, and Padmakar Tukaram Bhavnagare v. State of Maharashtra, (2012) 13 SCC 720, were discussed in paragraphs 14–16 for correction of a legally infirm grant and for distinct parameters governing cancellation. Abdul Basit alias Raju v. Mohd. Abdul Kadir Chaudhary, (2015) 1 SCC (Cri) 257, was invoked by the respondent and quoted in paragraph 17: Section 362 bars a court that has finally disposed of a matter from substantively reviewing its own order in the absence of a statutory exception. It permits correction of clerical or arithmetical errors. Dolat Ram v. State of Haryana, 1995 SCC (Cri) 237, was relied on by the respondent as a later-misuse cancellation principle; the High Court found it did not bar higher-court review of the original materials. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., (2015) 11 SCC 260, was cited at paragraph 21 as supporting the relevance of specific allegations against in-laws, without deciding their guilt. The operative distinction was initial invalidity, not a finding of later abuse.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439(2) CrPC was the procedural provision expressly invoked in the father's application to challenge the grant of anticipatory bail. The High Court examined the legal validity of the Sessions grant on the record then available. Section 362 CrPC was addressed to distinguish prohibited substantive review by the same court after disposal from a challenge in the higher court; clerical or arithmetical correction is the quoted limited exception.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the Sessions Court gave legally adequate reasons by merely treating Rajendra, the father-in-law, as comparable to co-accused Varsha, who had been granted bail, despite the materially different and specific allegation of a dowry demand against him. (ii) Whether Section 439(2) relief could set aside the original anticipatory-bail order on its existing record in a higher court without proof that Rajendra later misused liberty, and how Section 362 affects same-court reconsideration. (iii) What consequential direction followed. The merits of the dowry and cruelty allegations, ultimate guilt, and the continuance of Varsha's separate bail were not before the Court for final adjudication.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court observed that — the Supreme Court decisions considered at the outset require a reasoned exercise of bail discretion. The bail court must consider pertinent factors, including the actual accusation and prima facie case, gravity, criminal history where material, flight and interference risks, while avoiding final evidentiary conclusions. Reasons need not be elaborate at an initial stage, but an unexplained formula prevents meaningful scrutiny and indicates non-application of mind. The Sessions order did little more than describe Rajendra's case as identical to Varsha's and failed to consider the father's specific statement that Rajendra had demanded ₹3 lakh. That omission made the initial anticipatory-bail grant legally unsustainable.

Parity failed for an independent factual reason. Varsha was a different relative, herself a daughter-in-law, against whom the prior order described vague allegations. The allegation against Rajendra specified his role, the monetary demand, its amount and the encounter in November 2021, alongside dowry-related taunts and harassment. The role-based approach in Ramesh Bhavan Rathod and Shri Mahadev Meena required examination of that difference. Merely describing the two cases as identical did not establish parity. The Court cited Taramani Parakh in its application and treated the accusation as relevant to bail, without treating it as a finding of guilt.

The absence of any allegation of subsequent misuse did not answer the challenge to the original grant. A higher court may examine whether the original grant was perverse, arbitrary, illegal or unjustified on facts and material existing at grant. A cancellation application based on later breach or new facts uses a distinct test; a same-court substantive review after disposal is restricted by Section 362. The Court accepted the father's challenge before the higher court within the Section 439(2) proceeding on the initial record and held the Sessions order legally unsustainable. It did not purport to reverse a valid grant merely because another judge preferred a different discretionary balance, nor did it find supervening misconduct.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application for cancellation of anticipatory bail and set aside the Sessions Court's order dated 29 April 2022 in Bail Application No. 1129/2022. Respondent No. 1 was directed to surrender before the trial court within 15 days from the date of the order, failing which the trial court was permitted to issue warrants of arrest to secure his appearance.

Suresh Kumar v. Rajendra Kushwah and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 26249/2022, 23/08/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (953) Prev Next

Headnote :- IPC Section 498-A / Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3–4 / specificity at Section 482 stage - The applicants described the allegations of dowry-related cruelty as false, vague and omnibus, pointing out that the wife's mother had lodged the FIR and that the husband had earlier sought divorce. The FIR specified a demand for ₹10 lakh or a four-wheeler, alleged continuing physical and mental harassment, described an attempt to expel the wife on 24 March 2018 and stated that the demand was repeated at a Panchayat on 30 November 2019. The chargesheet named the wife as a witness and included statements under Section 161 CrPC from her mother, father, brother and a relative. The filed MLC copy was partly obscured and could not be read clearly enough to support a definitive medical finding. The Court applied Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., 2015:INSC:221, (2015) 11 SCC 260: allegations that harassment by a husband and his relatives caused the wife to leave the matrimonial home cannot be held to disclose no offence on their face merely because the accused dispute them. Whether cruelty occurred is a matter for trial. The High Court rejected the objection that the allegations were vague, without deciding whether the charges were proved or treating the fact that the mother alone had reported the matter as a separate bar to registration.

Divorce proceedings / asserted counterblast - The Court quoted and applied Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, 2007:INSC:929, (2007) 12 SCC 369. That decision disapproved quashing on the basis of extraneous inferences from the timing of proceedings. It held that a spouse's divorce petition and related civil proceedings do not, by themselves, bring criminal proceedings to an end where the FIR discloses a prima facie offence. It also recognised that attempts at reconciliation may explain the timing of a report. The Supreme Court's reference to Bhajan Lal's illustrative categories formed part of that analysis. In the present case, the applicants' earlier divorce petition did not, by itself, establish that the mother's FIR alleging cruelty and dowry demands was a retaliatory complaint liable to be quashed. The Court dismissed the quashing petition. It expressly directed that its observations at this preliminary stage, other than statements of law, should not prejudice the trial court's independent assessment of the evidence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suresh Patel and the other applicants petitioned under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime No. 15/2020 at Police Station Chhatarpur for IPC Section 498-A read with Section 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4. The wife of applicant No. 1 did not herself lodge the FIR; her mother, respondent No. 3, did. The applicants said the husband's divorce petition had preceded the FIR, described it as a counterblast and asserted that the accusation was false and omnibus. The State opposed quashing, pointing to specific dowry and harassment allegations.

According to the mother's FIR, the marriage took place on 24 February 2014. The FIR alleged physical and mental harassment, a demand for ₹10 lakh or a four-wheeler, an attempt to force the wife out of the matrimonial home on 24 March 2018, continuing treatment at several places, a dispute over jewellery and repetition of the dowry demand at a Panchayat on 30 November 2019. It also stated that the daughter's mental condition prevented her from giving a statement. These matters remained allegations. The Court noted that the chargesheet nevertheless listed the wife as a witness. It also identified statements under Section 161 CrPC by the mother, her husband Jugal Kishore, her son Ankit and their relative Ramesh alleging harassment. The Court noted that an MLC had apparently been conducted and a doctor had given an opinion, but the filed photocopy was partly covered by another document and could not be read reliably.

2. Precedents — Considered : Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P., 2015:INSC:221, (2015) 11 SCC 260, was quoted in paragraphs 7–8. The allegations in that case included demands for gold and cash, harassment by the husband and parents-in-law, beating and departure from the matrimonial home. The Supreme Court held that, taking those allegations at face value, it could not be said that no offence was made out. Whether cruelty had actually occurred was a matter for trial. The High Court applied that principle to the specified, repeated demand and conduct alleged in the present case.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, 2007:INSC:929, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted in paragraphs 9–10. The Supreme Court disapproved the High Court's reliance on delay, a divorce petition and extraneous investigative findings to quash a cruelty FIR when the complainant's family had pursued reconciliation and the allegations disclosed a prima facie offence. Civil divorce proceedings and criminal proceedings were independent; the filing of a divorce petition was not, by itself, a ground for quashing. The High Court applied Pratibha to reject the applicants' contention, based on the earlier divorce petition, that the FIR was a counterblast. The truth of the allegations remained for trial.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to seek quashing of the FIR and associated record at this preliminary stage. Section 498-A read with Section 34 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were the offences alleged. The witness statements in the chargesheet were recorded under Section 161 CrPC. The partly obscured MLC copy could not be read reliably and therefore provided no reliable basis for a definitive medical conclusion, favourable or adverse.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the FIR lodged by the wife's mother and the witness statements alleging particular dowry demands and continuing physical and mental harassment were so vague or omnibus that prosecution under Section 498-A and the Dowry Prohibition Act could not continue. (ii) Whether the husband's earlier divorce petition established that the later FIR was a retaliatory counterblast requiring quashing. (iii) Whether the observations made at this preliminary stage would bind the trial court. The Court did not finally determine the truth of the accusations or the full evidentiary value of the partly obscured MLC in these proceedings under Section 482.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court did not treat the fact that the mother had lodged the FIR as an automatic defect. It examined the substance of the allegations: a specific demand for a large sum of money or a vehicle, continuing harassment, an attempted expulsion from the matrimonial home and repetition of the demand at a Panchayat on a specified date. The chargesheet included statements from several relatives and listed the wife as a witness. Applying Taramani Parakh, the Court held that allegations describing particular acts of cruelty could not be quashed merely because their truth was disputed; their truth was for trial. It rejected the objection that the available allegations were vague, without treating them as findings of guilt.

On the contention concerning timing, the Court applied the separate principle in Pratibha. A pending civil divorce petition does not, by itself, defeat criminal allegations. Describing the FIR as a counterblast cannot replace examination of whether the complaint discloses a case. The applicants' reference to the earlier divorce petition did not provide a legal ground for quashing the proceedings despite the recorded allegations of dowry demands and cruelty. The Court therefore found no reason to interfere. It expressly confined its factual observations to the preliminary stage and directed the trial court to decide on the evidence without being influenced or prejudiced by the order. The accused's defences on the merits remained open.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the application. The FIR was not quashed. The trial court was directed to assess the evidence independently, without treating the High Court's observations, other than statements of law, as conclusive.

Suresh Patel and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 56767/2021, 23/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (954) Prev Next

Headnote :- Negotiable Instruments Act, Section 138 / mixed dishonour memo - A cheque for ₹1,35,000 was returned on first presentation for insufficient funds and a difference in the drawer's signature. On re-presentation, it was returned for insufficient funds and an alteration requiring a full signature. The trial court found that the cheque had been issued to discharge a legal liability and that payment had not been made after statutory notice, but acquitted the drawer because of the second mixed bank endorsement. The High Court held that the additional alteration endorsement did not displace the insufficient-funds ground. If the account lacked sufficient funds, that ground remained operative. Laxmi Dyechem v. State of Gujarat, 2012:INSC:546, (2012) 13 SCC 375, gives Section 138 a purposive interpretation: signature mismatch, a changed mandate, account closure and stop-payment instructions may fall within it, subject to statutory notice, an opportunity to pay, a legally enforceable liability and any genuine rebuttal. Santosh Kumar Gupta v. State (Delhi High Court), quoting Devan v. Krishna Menon (Kerala High Court), explained that a bank's notation is not conclusive. The court must ascertain the real reason for dishonour; a signature actually proved not to be genuine stands on a different footing. The trial court's affirmative findings and the failure to pay after notice defeated its sole basis for acquittal. The High Court set aside the acquittal as perverse.

Re-presentation / later default - Msr Leathers v. S. Palaniappan, 2012:INSC:424, permits successive presentations and prosecution on a later default, subject to the applicable statutory conditions. Re-presentation at the drawer's instruction did not invalidate the present complaint: the second return again recorded insufficient funds, and the cheque amount remained unpaid after statutory notice. R. Vijayan v. Baby, 2011:INSC:745, (2012) 1 SCC 260, was considered for the punitive, compensatory and restitutive purposes of Section 138. The Court imposed one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,70,000, with a two-month default sentence. It partly set aside the acquittal, affirmed the other trial findings, convicted the respondent and directed him to surrender by 7 January 2025.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suresh Singh Sikarwar appealed under Section 378 CrPC against the judgment dated 28 January 2011 by which the JMFC, Gwalior, acquitted Radheshyam Sharma on a complaint under Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Cheque No. 90299 was for ₹1,35,000. On first presentation, the bank recorded insufficient funds and a difference in the drawer's signature. The drawer asked for re-presentation; the second return recorded insufficient funds and an alteration requiring a full signature. The complainant issued statutory notice on 15 May 2009, but the cheque amount remained unpaid. The trial court found that the cheque had been issued to discharge a legal liability and that payment had not followed notice. It nevertheless acquitted the respondent because it treated the alteration endorsement as outside Section 138. The appellant submitted that insufficient funds was an independent reason on both returns and that the second endorsement could not displace it. The respondent defended the acquittal.

2. Precedents — Considered : Bir Singh v. Mukesh Kumar, 2019:INSC:149, (2019) 4 SCC 197, was relied on by the complainant's counsel in paragraph 3. The Court quoted the Delhi High Court's decision in Santosh Kumar Gupta v. State, CRMC No. 2271/10, decided on 16 September 2017. That decision quoted Devan v. Krishna Menon of the Kerala High Court: an instrument whose signature is proved not to be genuine cannot attract Section 138, but a bank's signature-mismatch notation is not conclusive. The court must ascertain whether insufficient funds was the actual cause of dishonour. Santosh Kumar Gupta also quoted Dinesh Harakchand Sankla v. Kurlon Ltd. of the Karnataka High Court on intentional alteration of signatures or dates and the rebuttable presumptions under Section 139. Dinesh quoted NEPC Micon Ltd. v. Magma Leasing Ltd., 1999:INSC:211, (1999) 4 SCC 253, on purposive interpretation of Section 138 and the inclusion of account closure within insufficiency of funds, so that a drawer cannot indirectly defeat the provision's purpose. The quoted observations about possible charges under Section 420 IPC concerned those other proceedings. They were neither a conviction for cheating nor a direction to frame such a charge in the present case.

R. Vijayan v. Baby and Another, 2011:INSC:745, (2012) 1 SCC 260, was cited for the punitive, compensatory and restitutive character of Chapter XVII of the Act and the practical importance of providing compensation through a single criminal forum. M/s Laxmi Dyechem v. State of Gujarat, 2012:INSC:546, (2012) 13 SCC 375, was quoted at length. It interprets insufficiency of funds under Section 138 as a genus that may include dishonour for account closure, stopped payment, reference to the drawer, signature mismatch or a missing signature image, having regard to whether changes were made to prevent payment. That principle is qualified: an innocent change of authorised signatory need not, by itself, constitute an offence. Statutory notice, an opportunity to pay, the debt or liability and the evidence and any rebuttal remain material. The High Court applied this authority to reject acquittal based categorically on one bank notation when insufficient funds was also expressly recorded. Msr Leathers v. S. Palaniappan and Another, 2012:INSC:424, was cited for permissible repeated presentation and prosecution on a later default. It supported treating the second dishonour as actionable if the statutory requirements were met.

3. Statutes considered : Section 378 CrPC provided for the complainant's appeal against acquittal. Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act governed dishonour of a cheque issued for a legally enforceable liability, statutory notice and failure to pay. The trial court had already found the liability and non-payment after notice. The judgment treated the insufficient-funds return and the second mixed endorsement as falling within Section 138 when the other statutory conditions were satisfied. The quoted Delhi and Karnataka decisions discussed Section 420 IPC in the context of other proceedings, rather than a charge decided here. R. Vijayan explained the broader compensatory purpose of Chapter XVII. The actual order imposed a fine without expressly directing its disbursement as compensation. The judgment recorded notice dated 15 May 2009 and subsequent non-payment; it decided no contested question of the service date or computation of limitation.

4. Issues : (i) Could a trial court acquit on the sole ground that the second bank memo added "alteration requires full signature" when that same memo also recorded insufficient funds and the first return likewise included insufficiency? (ii) Could the cheque's re-presentation and second return sustain a Section 138 complaint after notice and non-payment? (iii) What appellate relief followed from the trial court's already affirmative findings on debt/liability and notice?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that the insufficient-funds notation remained an operative reason for dishonour despite the additional alteration endorsement. As explained in Laxmi Dyechem and the authorities quoted through Santosh Kumar Gupta, the purpose of Section 138 would be defeated if a concurrent endorsement automatically protected a drawer from prosecution despite insufficient funds and failure to pay after notice. The distinction stated in Devan remained relevant: proof that the signature was not genuine may mean that the instrument was not the drawer's cheque. A bank's notation cannot mechanically determine that question. In the present case, the trial court had affirmatively found that the cheque was issued to discharge a legal liability and that payment had not been made. The appellate court did not find that the signature had been proved to be forged. It reasoned that, if the failure to put a full signature after alteration had been innocent, the drawer could have paid after notice. Insufficient funds remained a recorded reason for dishonour. The High Court held the acquittal to be perverse and reversed it.

Msr Leathers separately answered the question of re-presentation. A cheque may be presented again, and a later default may give rise to prosecution if the conditions of Section 138 are met. The drawer's instruction to re-deposit the cheque and the second return for insufficient funds fell within that rule. R. Vijayan's compensatory and restitutive purposes were cited. In imposing rigorous imprisonment and a fine, the sentencing paragraph referred to the allegations against the respondent.

6. Relief : The High Court allowed the appeal. It partly set aside the JMFC's acquittal dated 28 January 2011 as to Issue No. 2 and affirmed the findings on Issues Nos. 1 and 3. Radheshyam Sharma was convicted under Section 138. After hearing on sentence, the Court ordered one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,70,000, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default. He was directed to surrender by 7 January 2025. If he failed to surrender, the trial court was free to issue an arrest warrant to enforce the sentence.

Suresh Singh Sikarwar v. Radheshyam Sharma, Cr.A. no. 1008/2013, 28/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (955) Prev Next

Headnote :- Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971 / minor alleging rape - In a petition under Article 226 brought by the father of a girl aged about 15, the Court considered Sections 3 and 5(1) in the form then in force. Section 3(2), subject to subsection (4), prescribed the conditions concerning gestation and the opinions of registered medical practitioners. Explanation 1 presumed the anguish caused by a pregnancy alleged by the pregnant woman to result from rape to constitute grave injury to her mental health. Section 3(4)(a) required written guardian consent for a person below 18. The Court also quoted Section 5(1), which provided a life-saving exception to certain limits. The Medical Board assessed gestation at approximately eight to ten weeks, found the girl fit for the procedure if investigations were normal, and recommended early action. The Court applied Murugan Nayakkar v. Union of India, WP(C) 749/2017, order dated 6 September 2017, on the relevance of a minor's age, trauma and expert medical-board opinion. The distinct medical assessment concerning the 13-year-old petitioner in that case was not treated as a finding about this girl. On the present record, the High Court allowed the father and daughter's prayer and directed prompt termination, subject to medical complications.

Clinical directions / limited judicial-order immunity - The CMHO, Gwalior, was directed to admit the minor by 11 September 2020. The heads of gynecology and anesthesia and other specialists were to attend the procedure; experienced senior doctors were to act if the department heads were unavailable. The State was to ensure postoperative care. The Court quoted Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon v. Union of India (Bombay High Court), which concerned a materially different case of fetal anomalies at a late stage of pregnancy and discussed reproductive choice, statutory interpretation and medical risk. In paragraph 13, the present Court expressly relied on that decision to protect doctors participating in this procedure from litigation arising out of its order. The quoted Bombay analysis includes the Supreme Court authorities Nalinakhya Bysack, Sri Ram Narain Medhi, M. Pentiah, Balasinor Nagrik Co-operative Bank and Dadi Jagannadham on statutory interpretation.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suresh Singh, the father of a girl then aged about 15, filed WP No. 12677/2020 under Article 226 seeking State action to terminate her pregnancy. He alleged that she had been sexually assaulted, leading to registration of FIR Crime No. 378/2020 at Police Station Thatipur, Gwalior, under Sections 376(2)(n), 323 and 506 IPC and Sections 3 and 4 POCSO. The school headmaster's certificate and the case diary recorded her date of birth as 17 June 2005. The FIR particulars, age record and father's account formed the factual basis of the requested protective relief.

On 31 August 2020, the Court directed the CMHO to constitute a team including a gynecologist and an anesthetist. The medical report recorded about two months' amenorrhoea and gestation of approximately eight to ten weeks. It advised routine investigations, stated that the girl was fit for the procedure if the investigations were normal, and recommended early action. The Court considered the medical report and case diary. It treated the pregnancy as arising from alleged rape, considered the child's age and anguish, and granted the requested relief on 8 September 2020.

2. Precedents — Considered : Murugan Nayakkar v. Union of India and Others, Supreme Court WP(C) No. 749/2017, order dated 6 September 2017, was quoted and directly applied. In that case, a 13-year-old petitioner alleged rape and sexual abuse. A court-appointed board recommended termination, assessed the risks of both termination and delivery, and noted neonatal complications. The Supreme Court allowed termination in view of the petitioner's age, trauma, continuing agony and the medical board's advice. The High Court applied that approach, based on the individual circumstances and board opinion, to the girl aged approximately 15 with an early pregnancy in the present case.

Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon v. Union of India and Others of the Bombay High Court was quoted extensively. That case concerned a pregnancy beyond 27 weeks with significant fetal anomalies, whereas the present case concerned an early pregnancy alleged to result from rape. The quoted reasoning addresses reproductive choice and possible grave injury to mental health within the MTP Act's conditions, reads Section 5 as a whole, distinguishes interpretation of remedial provisions from that of penal provisions, and protects doctors implementing the order. In paragraph 13, the present High Court stated that, although it had already permitted termination, doctors participating in the procedure would have immunity from litigation arising out of its order. It also provided for experienced substitutes if department heads were unavailable. The Bombay quotation reproduces another Bombay decision, High Court on its own motion v. State of Maharashtra, on mental health and the woman's foreseeable environment. It also cites Nalinakhya Bysack v. Shyam Sunder Haldar, Sri Ram Narain Medhi v. State of Bombay, M. Pentiah v. Muddala Veeramallappa, Balasinor Nagrik Co-operative Bank v. Babubhai Shankerlal Pandya and Dadi Jagannadham v. Jammulu Ramulu against adding words to a statute; New India Assurance Co. v. Nusli Neville Wadia on purposive construction; and RBI v. Peerless General Finance on reading text with context. Those Supreme Court authorities are nested within the quoted Bombay judgment; the Madhya Pradesh High Court did not separately analyse them or make their propositions independent holdings. The reference to a proposed amendment in 2014 was historical discussion within that quotation, rather than operative statutory law applied in the present case.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 provided the writ jurisdiction for protective medical directions. The Court quoted the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971 as it stood in September 2020. Section 3(1) protected a registered medical practitioner from criminal liability for a termination performed in accordance with the Act. Section 3(2) prescribed the gestational and opinion requirements then in force: one practitioner where pregnancy did not exceed 12 weeks, and not fewer than two where it exceeded 12 but not 20 weeks. The quoted provision required an opinion formed in good faith on the specified risk to life or of grave injury to physical or mental health, or the specified risk of serious fetal abnormality. Explanation 1 presumed the anguish caused by a pregnancy alleged by the pregnant woman to result from rape to constitute grave injury to mental health. Section 3(3) permitted consideration of her actual or reasonably foreseeable environment. Section 3(4)(a) required written guardian consent for a girl under 18. The IPC and POCSO provisions identified the underlying FIR; the writ did not determine criminal liability.

4. Issues : (i) Whether a minor's pregnancy alleged to follow rape could be terminated under the then-applicable MTP framework, in light of her age, the statutory mental-health presumption and individual medical-board advice. (ii) What hospital attendance, specialist and postoperative safeguards should accompany prompt implementation, and what was the scope of the protection afforded to participating doctors?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court verified the minor's age from the school certificate and case diary, directed and considered an expert examination, and set out Sections 3 and 5(1) as the statutory framework applicable in 2020. Applying the approach in Murugan Nayakkar, it considered the rape allegation, the girl's mental trauma and age, and the medical board's advice. It held that the termination sought by the father and daughter should be allowed. The board assessed gestation at approximately eight to ten weeks and found the procedure possible if investigations were normal. The Court directed immediate action expressly subject to medical complications; it did not treat safety as unconditional. Its observations about the danger of continuing the pregnancy concerned this child's circumstances, rather than a medical finding that every minor's pregnancy necessarily threatens life.

The implementation directions specified the latest admission date, attendance by experienced specialists and postoperative care to be ensured by the State. In paragraph 13, the Court relied specifically on Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon to protect doctors participating in the procedure from litigation arising out of the order. The protection was confined to those doctors and that judicial order; it did not extend to unrelated wrongful conduct.

6. Relief : The High Court allowed the writ petition and directed the respondents to carry out termination promptly, subject to medical complications. The CMHO, Gwalior, was to admit the child by 11 September 2020. The heads of gynecology and anesthesia and other specialists were to be present, with experienced senior doctors acting if the department heads were unavailable. The State was to provide postoperative care. Participating doctors received the protection from litigation arising out of the order stated in paragraph 13.

Suresh Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, W.P. no. 12677/2020, 08/09/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (956) Prev Next

Headnote :- Quashing / disputed facts and defence - Section 482 CrPC permits intervention when uncontroverted allegations, taken at face value, do not disclose an offence, or a clear legal bar or an abuse of process warranting quashing is established. It does not permit a roving inquiry into the truth of disputed allegations. XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. 709/2021 (30 June 2021), were relied on for the principle that allegations must be assessed at face value without trying disputed facts at the quashing stage. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognises a limited exception permitting consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or a defence document whose veracity is not disputed by the complainant. The applicants disputed the alleged construction, the occurrence and the complainant's account; those were matters for evidence after charges had been framed.

Mala fides / rival complaint - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, (2008) 12 SCC 346, quoted the illustrative categories in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, and the principles in R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866. It stressed that inherent power is exceptional and cannot be used to stifle a legitimate prosecution. Where the FIR discloses a cognizable offence, the informant's alleged hostility is, by itself, secondary. The truth of the applicants' complaint accusing the mason of misconduct required evidence. As to their defence that a neighbour had instigated the FIR, the Court stated that the applicants had to prove it beyond reasonable doubt by leading evidence before the trial court. Filing a counter-complaint did not extinguish the FIR. The High Court did not find that no incident had occurred and refused to quash on the alleged mala fides, without deciding the counter-case.

FIR delay - Skoda Auto Volkswagen (India) Private Limited v. State of U.P., (2021) 5 SCC 795, Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, (2001) 7 SCC 690, and Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., AIR 2023 SC 3784, were applied. The law fixes no universal period for lodging an FIR, and delay alone neither makes an FIR illegal nor justifies quashing. Explanations for delay and the reliability of the allegations require examination. Ravinder Kumar also explains why prompt reporting is useful without treating promptness as a guarantee of genuineness. The asserted delay of 17 days was insufficient by itself; the Court noted the mason's payment dispute, no prior enmity and the distinction between delay in lodging an FIR and a statutory time bar to prosecution, leaving trial questions open. The application was dismissed; the trial record was to be returned and the trial court was directed to dispose of the stayed trial preferably within one year after receiving a certified copy of the order.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suresh Tripathi and the other applicants sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of FIR Crime No. 258/2020 at Police Station Govindgarh, Rewa, and the resulting chargesheet. The FIR named IPC Sections 294, 374, 506 and 34, and SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s), 3(2)(va) and 3(1)(h). After the trial record was called, the Court observed that on 26 April 2022 charges had actually been framed under IPC Sections 294 and 506-B and SC/ST Act Sections 3(1)(r) and 3(1)(s). The sections listed in the FIR and those under which charges were framed are distinct procedural details; the order does not state that every FIR section survived charge framing.

The complainant, a mason, alleged a verbal agreement for house construction and partial payment. He said that, on 28 July 2020, he went to applicant No. 2's house, where he met applicants Nos. 2 and 3 and demanded the outstanding amount. The FIR alleged caste-linked abuse, refusal of payment and threats, and referred to neighbours witnessing or hearing the incident. The applicants denied the occurrence and construction, disputed that the incident took place in public view, and alleged that the mason had entered the house and behaved improperly towards applicant No. 3. They said that her counter-complaint remained pending and that her statement under Section 200 CrPC had not been recorded. They alleged that a neighbour with whom they had legal disputes had maliciously instigated the FIR, and relied on a reporting delay of 17 days. The Court recorded that the trial had remained stayed because its record had been called.

2. Precedents — Considered : On disputed facts and the limits of Section 482, XYZ v. State of Gujarat, 2019:INSC:1199, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted to explain why it was wrong to stop an investigation on the basis of findings reached through a roving inquiry into contested allegations and a disputed purported settlement. The facts discussed in XYZ belonged to that case, rather than the present mason's dispute. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, 2018:INSC:284, (2018) 5 SCC 718, criticised premature factual assessment before the investigation had ended. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, 2011:INSC:655, (2011) 12 SCC 319, quoted Bhajan Lal's warning that Section 482 is sparingly used and is not a credibility inquiry into the FIR. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, stated the ordinary rule against evaluating the accused's defence documents, with a narrow exception permitting consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or a document whose veracity is not disputed by the complainant; the judgment did not apply that exception to a specific established document here. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, 2010:INSC:405, (2010) 11 SCC 226, stressed the need to prevent harassment without prematurely ending a legitimate prosecution, identified failure to disclose an offence on the face of the allegations and a legal bar as possible grounds for quashing, and left assessment of reliability to the trial court. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, 2019:INSC:1172, (2019) 10 SCC 373, restated that quashing is justified where the allegations in the FIR, taken at face value, do not disclose an offence, or where the uncontroverted allegations and the material collected in their support do not disclose an offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, 2019:INSC:1152, (2019) 10 SCC 686, disapproved minute review of disputed defence at the cognizance stage. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Cr.A. 709/2021, order of 30 June 2021, was quoted against meticulous scrutiny of the kind undertaken at trial and for the point that an FIR is not an encyclopedia. The Court added the similar line of Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P.; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav. These latter eight decisions were cited in support of the same restraint; the order did not separately develop a holding from each.

For mala fides, Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar, 2008:INSC:278, (2008) 12 SCC 346, was extensively quoted after the applicants invoked State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal, 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335. Renu Kumari reproduced the three purposes for which inherent jurisdiction may be exercised, the principles in R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab, AIR 1960 SC 866, concerning a legal bar, failure of the allegations taken at face value to disclose an offence, and manifest absence of legal evidence, and Bhajan Lal's seven illustrative categories, including manifest malice. The quoted discussion also cautions that extraordinary power cannot be used to weigh contested evidence or short-circuit a legitimate prosecution. The quoted passage explains that the informant's alleged mala fides are secondary where cognizable allegations exist, and that the evidence determines the prosecution's outcome. Nested citations to Janata Dal, Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma, Rupan Deol Bajaj, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Satvinder Kaur, Rajesh Bajaj, and State of Karnataka v. M. Devendrappa, (2002) 3 SCC 89, also appear in the quoted discussion.

On reporting delay, Skoda Auto Volkswagen (India) Private Limited v. State of U.P., 2020:INSC:661, (2021) 5 SCC 795, held that mere delay in making a complaint does not by itself justify quashing and that the Court cannot decide disputed facts at that stage. Ravinder Kumar v. State of Punjab, 2001:INSC:414, (2001) 7 SCC 690, explained that law fixes no universal FIR reporting period; promptness can preserve memory and reduce possible concoction but is not a guarantee of accuracy, and genuine causes for delay vary. Mohammad Wajid v. State of U.P., 2023:INSC:683, AIR 2023 SC 3784, reiterated that delay alone cannot quash an FIR. The High Court applied those rules to the asserted 17 days, without a final credibility adjudication.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the High Court's inherent jurisdiction. The requirement to assess allegations at face value, the purpose of preventing abuse of process and the prohibition on a trial of disputed facts at the quashing stage governed all three objections. The FIR initially named IPC Sections 294, 374, 506 and 34 and SC/ST Act Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s), 3(2)(va) and 3(1)(h); the existing charge order named only IPC Sections 294, 506-B and SC/ST Act Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s). The Court distinguished mere delay in giving information from a statutory bar to prosecution.

4. Issues : (i) Could the FIR and chargesheet be quashed because the applicants denied the occurrence, construction and public-view facts and advanced a conflicting account? (ii) Did asserted mala fide instigation or the applicants' pending complaint extinguish this prosecution? (iii) Did a 17-day interval between the incident and report, without an identified statutory bar, justify quashing? (iv) What should happen to the stayed trial and called-up record after disposal?

5. Ratio / Findings : First, the Court held that proceedings could be quashed under Section 482 if the uncontroverted allegations failed to disclose an offence. It could not determine the reliability of disputed allegations or try contested defence facts at that stage. The Supreme Court authorities in paragraphs 11–19 required restraint while preserving the power to intervene against clear abuse. An FIR need not contain an exhaustive account of the prosecution case. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui permits consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or a defence document whose veracity is not disputed by the complainant. Here, however, the applicants' allegations that there had been no construction or incident, and the allegations in their pending counter-complaint, remained disputed; they were not shown to fall within that limited exception. The Court left credibility and truth to the trial court.

Second, Renu Kumari's discussion of Bhajan Lal and R.P. Kapur recognises that proceedings may be quashed for mala fides in an exceptional case where the grounds are properly established, but an allegation of hostility is not itself proof that the FIR is fabricated. The competing accounts of the incident between the mason and the applicants remained disputed. The Court noted that the applicants' own counter-complaint indicated that some incident had occurred, without deciding which account was true. In relation to the particular defence of the neighbour's alleged instigation, the Court stated that the applicants had to prove that defence beyond reasonable doubt by leading evidence before the trial court. Where prima facie cognizable allegations remained, such motives were secondary and the mere filing of the applicants' complaint could not justify quashing the FIR.

Third, applying Skoda, Ravinder Kumar and Mohammad Wajid, the Court held that delay alone did not make the FIR illegal or justify quashing. The asserted delay of 17 days could be explained at trial. The Court referred to the mason's alleged demand for outstanding payment and the absence of earlier enmity. It preserved the qualification concerning a statutory bar to prosecution; it did not determine a particular limitation period. The competing factual accounts and the delay therefore supplied no ground for intervention under the inherent power.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the application and refused to quash the FIR or the proceedings. It directed the office to return the trial record immediately. Since the trial had remained stayed because its record had been called, the Court directed the trial court to dispose of it preferably within one year of receiving a certified copy of the order.

Suresh Tripathi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 9413/2023, 13/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (957) Prev Next

Headnote :- Forest confiscation / criminal trial - The Court quoted and applied State of Madhya Pradesh and Others v. Kallo Bai, (2017) 14 SCC 502. Confiscation under Section 15 of the Adhiniyam considered in that case is a quasi-judicial process independent of the criminal trial. It depends on the authorised officer's satisfaction that a forest offence was committed using the seized article; complete proof of an accused's guilt at trial is not a precondition. The quoted statutory scheme requires a reasoned confiscation order. It permits the specified owner or person concerned to establish that the article was used without their knowledge or connivance or, where applicable, that of their servant or agent, and that all reasonable and necessary precautions were taken. Sections 15-A and 15-B provide remedies of appeal and revision. The applicants sought to set aside confiscation of a pickup allegedly used to transport wood unlawfully on the ground that the accused were still on trial. Applying Kallo Bai, the Court rejected that sole ground and dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Suryavati Gautam and the other applicants filed Misc. Criminal Case No. 60309/2022 under Section 482 CrPC to seek quashing of the impugned confiscation order; their prayer referred to Annexures A/1 and A/2. Their pickup van, registration MP53 GA 3263, had been confiscated on the allegation that it had been used to transport wood illegally. The applicants submitted that the accused persons were still being tried for the associated forest offence and that their guilt had not been proved. They argued that confiscation must await a finding of guilt in that trial.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Madhya Pradesh and Others v. Kallo Bai, (2017) 14 SCC 502, was the sole Supreme Court decision cited and applied. The High Court quoted paragraphs 14, 15 and 22 and treated the rule in Kallo Bai as decisive of the applicants' contention. That decision explained the Section 15 scheme of the Adhiniyam before the Supreme Court. Forest officers may seize specified vehicles and articles if they have reason to believe that these were used in a forest offence. Confiscation is a quasi-judicial decision based on the authorised officer's statutory satisfaction that an offence was committed using the articles; it does not depend on a criminal conviction. The quoted Section 15 provisions require a reasoned written order and prescribed procedural safeguards. They permit release on security under subsection (3-A) and transfer under subsection (5-A) where the authorised officer was involved in the seizure. They also protect an owner or other specified person who establishes use without their knowledge or connivance or, where applicable, that of their servant or agent, together with all reasonable and necessary precautions. Section 15-A provides an appeal, and Section 15-B provides revision before the Sessions Court. The quoted Supreme Court conclusion permits confiscation before guilt is completely established. The High Court applied that independence from the timing of the criminal trial to the present pickup.

3. Statutes considered : The applicants invoked Section 482 CrPC to seek High Court intervention against confiscation. The Court found no ground to exercise that power on the contention advanced. The quoted Kallo Bai analysis concerns Section 15 of the Adhiniyam: seizure on reason to believe, quasi-judicial confiscation on the authorised officer's satisfaction, written reasons and protection for the specified owner or person concerned. Sections 15-A and 15-B provide remedies of appeal and revision. The passage compares the release provision with Section 53 of the Forest Act as amended in Madhya Pradesh.

4. Issues : The sole issue argued and decided was whether the pickup could not be confiscated, and the impugned order should therefore be set aside, merely because the trial for alleged illegal transportation of wood remained pending and the accused had not yet been found guilty.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying Kallo Bai, the Court rejected the premise that confiscation must await a criminal conviction. Statutory forest confiscation is independent of the outcome of the criminal trial and may precede complete proof of guilt. The authorised officer conducts a quasi-judicial inquiry under the confiscation law. The quoted Supreme Court principle remains subject to statutory satisfaction and procedural safeguards, including reasons and an opportunity for the protected owner or person concerned to establish lack of knowledge or connivance and all reasonable and necessary precautions. Mere pendency of the forest-offence trial therefore did not invalidate confiscation of the pickup. On that sole contention and the totality of the circumstances stated, the Court found no case for interference.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the Section 482 application and declined to interfere with the impugned confiscation. No costs were specified.

Suryavati Gautam and Others v. Forest Circle Officer, Curhat Forest Division, Sidhi and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 60309/2022, 25/04/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (958) Prev Next

Headnote :- Parallel proceedings / civil will suit and criminal complaint - The Court applied M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, 1954:INSC:32, AIR 1954 SC 397. Criminal matters should ordinarily take precedence so that they are resolved promptly, but the rule is not inflexible. The likelihood of embarrassment and the stage of the proceedings may justify a different course; the possibility of conflicting civil and criminal decisions is not a relevant consideration. M. Krishnan v. Vijay Singh, 2001:INSC:499, AIR 2001 SC 3014, holds that criminal proceedings for alleged document forgery cannot be quashed merely because a suit concerning those documents is pending. Criminal allegations require independent proof, and filing a suit cannot automatically frustrate prosecution. Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of West Bengal, 2001:INSC:517, AIR 2001 SC 3846, and P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, 2008:INSC:299, (2008) 5 SCC 765, likewise permit simultaneous proceedings, with any stay dependent on the circumstances. The High Court therefore rejected the applicants' request to restore the dismissal under Section 203 CrPC solely because civil litigation concerning a will was pending.

Civil and criminal findings / Evidence Act relevance - Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), 2009:INSC:290, (2009) 5 SCC 528, and Kishan Singh v. Gurpal Singh, 2010:INSC:509, (2010) 8 SCC 775, were applied. Civil and criminal courts decide independently on the evidence before them, applying preponderance of probabilities and proof beyond reasonable doubt, respectively. K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, 2002:INSC:381, (2002) 8 SCC 87, as discussed in those judgments, recognises that a previous judgment may be relevant under Evidence Act Sections 40–43 and a judgment falling within the class specified in Section 41 may be conclusive; neither proceeding's findings become universally binding merely because they concern the same document. Kishan Singh examined the contrary language in Karam Chand and V.M. Shah in the light of the Constitution Bench decision in M.S. Sheriff and later decisions, and quoted Iqbal Singh Marwah on distinct standards.

Court complaint / pre-production forgery - Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, 2005:INSC:129, (2005) 4 SCC 370, holds that Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC applies to the enumerated offences committed with respect to a document after its production or receipt in evidence, while it is in judicial custody. The will in question was alleged to have been forged before production in court; no manipulation in custodia legis was alleged. Respondent No. 1's complaint under Section 200 did not have to be instituted by the court under Section 195 merely because a related civil suit was pending. The Section 482 petition was dismissed and the interim order dated 15 March 2019 vacated. The Sessions revision order directing registration of the complaint remained effective.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Respondent No. 1, Vijay, filed a complaint under Section 200 CrPC alleging that the late Kusum Bai was illiterate and that Girish and Ravi Jaiswal exploited that circumstance to obtain execution of a will dated 12 July 2011. The complaint alleged that when she learned of it, she cancelled that will through a registered document dated 21 June 2012. The order separately records the applicants' submission that Vijay had brought a civil declaration suit alleging forgery of a will dated 11 May 2013. The applicants said their written statement denied the civil averments and pointed to signatures on documents in Kusum Bai's Civil Suit No. 29-A/2013 against Sanjay Kumar Jaiswal as possible comparison material. Neither signature comparison nor the merits of the civil suits were decided in the criminal order.

The complaint invoked IPC Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 109 read with Section 34. After examining witnesses under Section 202 CrPC and considering documents, the JMFC, Khandwa dismissed the unregistered complaint under Section 203 on 15 March 2018 for want of a prima facie case. Vijay's Criminal Revision No. 29/2018 succeeded before the Sessions Judge, Khandwa on 7 February 2019: that court set aside the dismissal and directed registration of the complaint case. Sushama Jaiswal and other applicants then petitioned under Section 482 CrPC, seeking to set aside the revisional order and restore the Magistrate's dismissal. Their argument was that the pending civil suit about a disputed will should prevent a criminal case. An interim High Court order dated 15 March 2019 remained in force until this final decision.

2. Precedents — Considered : M.S. Sheriff v. State of Madras, 1954:INSC:32, AIR 1954 SC 397, was quoted for the general desirability of giving criminal matters precedence when civil and criminal proceedings coexist: criminal justice should be swift while memories remain fresh. The Constitution Bench did not regard the possibility of conflicting civil and criminal decisions as a relevant consideration. In that context, it identified the likelihood of embarrassment as the only relevant consideration and expressly disclaimed a hard-and-fast rule, since special circumstances or an advanced stage could make another course expedient and just. The High Court used that qualified framework against an automatic bar based on the pending civil suit; it did not actually order a stay of a civil suit in this case.

M. Krishnan v. Vijay Singh, 2001:INSC:499, AIR 2001 SC 3014, was quoted and applied to forgery allegations that also involved a civil dispute. A criminal case alleging forgery of documents and gains obtained through them cannot be quashed merely because a party has filed a suit concerning those documents. Otherwise, filing a suit could obstruct an anticipated prosecution. The prosecution must independently prove the allegations in its complaint and the accused may obtain discharge or acquittal if it fails. Civil adjudication and criminal adjudication use different standards, with proof beyond reasonable doubt required in criminal proceedings and proof on a balance of probabilities in civil proceedings. The High Court applied that principle without deciding that these applicants had forged a will. Kamaladevi Agarwal v. State of West Bengal and Others, 2001:INSC:517, AIR 2001 SC 3846, was cited for the related point that a pending civil action, even before a court of higher status and authority, does not itself justify quashing a criminal proceeding governed by the CrPC.

P. Swaroopa Rani v. M. Hari Narayana, 2008:INSC:299, (2008) 5 SCC 765, was quoted for concurrent civil and criminal proceedings and a fact-dependent decision whether either should be stayed. Its quoted passage refers to M.S. Sheriff, Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, 2005:INSC:129, (2005) 4 SCC 370, and Institute of Chartered Accountants of India v. Association of Chartered Certified Accountants, (2005) 12 SCC 226. The present Court applied the principle permitting concurrent proceedings, while retaining the qualification that any stay depends on the circumstances of the case.

Syed Askari Hadi Ali Augustine Imam v. State (Delhi Administration), 2009:INSC:290, (2009) 5 SCC 528, was quoted on the separate question of the effect of findings in another proceeding. A criminal court may take cognizance on a prima facie case even where civil litigation is pending, with any stay dependent on the nature and stage of the proceedings. Its discussion of K.G. Premshanker v. Inspector of Police, 2002:INSC:381, (2002) 8 SCC 87, qualifies the independence of courts: a final earlier judgment can be relevant as Sections 40–43 of the Evidence Act permit, with Section 41 specifying judgments that may be conclusive. Their relevance and effect must be assessed rather than assumed. Res judicata in civil suits and Section 300 CrPC's bar to a second criminal trial are different rules. The High Court used this material to reject the premise that civil findings automatically bind the criminal court, without identifying a final civil decree whose admissibility it had to decide.

Kishan Singh (Dead) Through Legal Representatives v. Gurpal Singh and Others, 2010:INSC:509, (2010) 8 SCC 775, was quoted at length. It examined Karam Chand Ganga Prasad's broad statement that civil decisions bind criminal courts and noted that it had not addressed the Constitution Bench's qualified account in M.S. Sheriff; it likewise discussed V.M. Shah's civil-precedence language and K.G. Premshanker's rejection of that approach. It reproduced the view that criminal courts must form their own assessment and the distinct proof standards stated in Iqbal Singh Marwah. P. Swaroopa Rani, Syed Askari and Vishnu Dutt Sharma also appear in the quoted discussion. Kishan Singh's resulting rule is that findings in civil and criminal cases about the same subject do not automatically bind one another; each uses its own evidence and standard, with the limited Sections 40–43 relevance of previous judgments remaining possible. The High Court adopted that qualified rule. The quotation also reproduces a Privy Council passage from King Emperor v. Khwaja Nazir Ahmad. That passage and the nested references formed part of the quoted reasoning; they were not treated as separate holdings by this High Court.

Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah, 2005:INSC:129, (2005) 4 SCC 370, was separately quoted on Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC. It approved the principle attributed to Sachida Nand Singh: a court complaint is required for the enumerated forgery offences committed with respect to a document after its production or receipt in evidence in court, while it is in custodia legis. The High Court applied that distinction concerning timing and custody to the allegation that the will had been forged before production in court, and rejected the Section 195 bar.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent jurisdiction invoked to set aside the Sessions revision order and restore dismissal of the complaint. Sections 200 and 202 CrPC governed the respondent's private complaint and the Magistrate's preliminary witness examination; Section 203 provided for the dismissal that was challenged in revision. The judgment addressed whether the complaint could proceed, not whether the ingredients of IPC Sections 420, 467, 468, 471 and 109/34 were ultimately proved. Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC was considered as a statutory restriction on cognizance for certain offences concerning documents in court; under Iqbal Singh Marwah, it attaches only to offences committed with respect to a document after production or reception in evidence while it is in judicial custody. An allegation of forgery before production falls outside that requirement for a court complaint, so the complainant's Section 200 route remained open. Sections 40–43 of the Evidence Act specify circumstances in which prior judgments may be relevant in later litigation, and Section 41 may make a specified judgment conclusive; this does not create a general rule that a pending civil case controls a criminal one. The quoted Supreme Court discussion also distinguished civil res judicata and Section 300 CrPC's prior-conviction-or-acquittal rule, neither of which was applied to bar this complaint. Criminal allegations remain subject to proof beyond reasonable doubt, unlike civil preponderance.

4. Issues : (i) Whether a pending civil suit disputing a will's genuineness required the criminal complaint about alleged cheating and forgery to be dismissed or quashed, and whether concurrent proceedings or their relative timing required a different course. (ii) Whether findings in a civil action would bind criminal adjudication, given distinct proof standards and the qualified relevance of earlier judgments under Evidence Act Sections 40–43. (iii) Whether Section 195(1)(b)(ii) CrPC required a court-filed complaint rather than Vijay's Section 200 complaint where the alleged forgery preceded production of the document in a judicial proceeding.

5. Ratio / Findings : On the first issue, the Court held that civil litigation and criminal prosecution could proceed together. M.S. Sheriff favours prompt criminal adjudication but makes precedence and any stay dependent on the circumstances; the possibility of conflicting civil and criminal decisions is not a relevant consideration. M. Krishnan and Kamaladevi Agarwal reject dismissal of a criminal forgery accusation solely because related civil litigation exists, since an accused could otherwise frustrate prosecution by bringing suit. P. Swaroopa Rani confirms that the proceedings may continue simultaneously, while making any stay dependent on the facts and circumstances. The applicants' reliance on a pending civil declaration suit and proposed signature comparison therefore did not, by itself, justify interfering with respondent No. 1's complaint or the Sessions Judge's direction to register it.

On the second issue, Syed Askari and Kishan Singh established a qualified principle of independent adjudication. The criminal court must assess allegations on its own evidence and require proof beyond reasonable doubt; a civil court applies probabilities. A decision in one forum is not automatically binding in the other merely because the parties or disputed property overlap. The Court's quoted account of Karam Chand, V.M. Shah and K.G. Premshanker explains why an unqualified rule that civil findings bind criminal courts is incorrect. Yet the Evidence Act's Sections 40–43 can make a particular final judgment relevant, and Section 41 may make the statutorily identified kind conclusive. The Court therefore rejected the contention that the civil suit automatically controlled the criminal proceedings, without ruling on the admissibility or weight of a final civil judgment in this record.

On the third issue, the Court applied the distinction in Iqbal Singh Marwah concerning when the alleged forgery occurred. Section 195(1)(b)(ii) requires a court complaint for the relevant offence concerning a document after it is produced in court and while it is in custodia legis. Here, the alleged forgery preceded production of the disputed document; the judgment says it was not manipulated while in the court's custody. The bar did not prevent the private Section 200 complaint. With no further argument advanced, the applicants had shown no ground for interfering with the Sessions revision order. This was a threshold determination; the allegations of cheating and forgery remain subject to the ordinary criminal process.

6. Relief : The High Court dismissed the application. It refused to set aside the order dated 7 February 2019 passed by the Sessions Judge, Khandwa, in Criminal Revision No. 29/2018. That order setting aside the JMFC's dismissal under Section 203 dated 15 March 2018 and directing registration of the complaint therefore remained effective. The High Court also vacated its interim order dated 15 March 2019. No costs or additional conditions were specified.

Sushama Jaiswal and Others v. Vijay and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 10617/2019, 20/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (959) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation / no compelled charge-sheet - The Court applied D. Venkatasubramaniam v.

M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, 2009:INSC:1132, (2009) 10 SCC 488. Investigation is the responsibility of the police; a High Court cannot casually prescribe examination of witnesses, arrest, seizure or filing of a charge-sheet. A lawful investigation may result in a charge-sheet or a conclusion that no prosecutable case is made out. The quoted Supreme Court discussion relied on M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, 2002:INSC:575, (2003) 2 SCC 649, to explain that arrest under Section 41 CrPC is discretionary and must be considered cautiously rather than mechanically. It also relied on Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, 2008:INSC:341, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on hearing persons whose reputation and liberty would be affected by coercive judicial directions. The High Court held that a direction compelling a charge-sheet against the accused in Crime No. 324/2015 would amount to supervising the investigation, and refused that relief.

Investigation / prompt completion and lawful report - Section 173(1) CrPC, identified alongside Section 193 BNSS in the order, requires completion without unnecessary delay. The Court distinguished an impermissible direction to file a charge-sheet from a permissible direction to complete the long-pending investigation and submit the report required by law after the investigator assesses whether an offence is disclosed. It directed expeditious completion and the steps required by law, with liberty to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, if a grievance persists.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sushma Dubey filed a petition under Article 226 of the Constitution asking the High Court to direct the respondents to file a charge-sheet within a stipulated time in Crime No. 324/2015 at Police Station Gole Ka Mandir (also rendered Gola Ka Mandir in the narrative), Gwalior. She said the crime had been registered on her complaint under IPC Sections 120-B, 420, 467, 468 and 471, concerning allegations of conspiracy, cheating and document offences, but alleged that the police had taken no further action and had not filed a charge-sheet by the time of the petition. Counsel for the State appeared. The petition raised the question whether a writ could require investigation to result in a charge-sheet, and what relief was available for delay in investigating a long-pending FIR. The petition was decided on 12 December 2024.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam and Others v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and Another, 2009:INSC:1132, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was extensively quoted and applied. In the case considered in that authority, the High Court had directed the police to take specified investigative steps, including recording statements, arrest and seizure, and to file a charge-sheet. The Supreme Court explained that investigating a crime is the police's statutory duty and normally within their domain. A court should not direct how the investigation must proceed or assume that it must end in arrest, seizure and a charge-sheet. The police may decide on the evidence that a case warrants a charge-sheet or that no such case is made out. The inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 is limited and cannot sustain casual, unexplained orders with far-reaching effects. The present High Court applied that principle to refuse a direction compelling a charge-sheet in the petitioner's FIR, while separately requiring prompt completion in accordance with the statute.

Within the Supreme Court's quoted reasoning, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, 2002:INSC:575, (2003) 2 SCC 649, explains that Section 41 CrPC confers discretion to arrest on specified grounds. The officer need not arrest immediately or automatically after a cognizable complaint; the officer must assess the nature of the offence and the person involved cautiously, having regard to liberty and reputation, in the course of investigation. D. Venkatasubramaniam used that principle to show why a court cannot predetermine arrest as an obligatory step.

The quoted Supreme Court judgment also relied on Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and Others, 2008:INSC:341, (2008) 3 SCC 542, on notice and a reasonable opportunity to be heard before a judicial order directs investigation or other drastic action affecting a person's reputation. In D. Venkatasubramaniam, the persons accused in the underlying petition had not been impleaded or heard. That was a separate ground for setting aside the High Court's order in that case. The quoted discussion states the grounds for exercising Section 482 power: giving effect to an order under the Code, preventing abuse of process and securing the ends of justice. The present petition, however, invoked Article 226 and concerned the requested investigative direction. The High Court relied on the quoted authority in refusing to compel a charge-sheet; it did not quash the FIR or prescribe an alternative outcome.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was the jurisdiction invoked for the requested writ. IPC

Sections 120-B, 420, 467, 468 and 471 were the offences listed in the registered FIR; the High Court neither interpreted their elements nor determined that evidence supported a charge. Section 173(1) CrPC, which the order identified together with Section 193 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, was quoted for the requirement that every investigation under the relevant chapter be completed without unnecessary delay. The Court applied that duty to require prompt completion and a final report in accordance with law, leaving the choice between a charge-sheet and closure report to the investigative process. The Supreme Court passage quoted Section 41 CrPC on discretionary arrest and discussed Section 482 CrPC as the inherent jurisdiction used in its own underlying case; no arrest direction or relief under Section 482 was granted in this writ.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the High Court could direct police to file a charge-sheet against the accused in Crime No. 324/2015 merely because the petitioner asserted that investigation had stalled. This required distinguishing a lawful investigation and its possible final report from a prosecution outcome selected by the Court. (ii) Whether the duty under Section 173(1) CrPC/Section 193 BNSS provided a narrower remedy requiring timely completion without prescribing arrest, seizure or a charge-sheet. (iii) Whether the petitioner retained a channel for any continuing grievance before the Superintendent of Police.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first refused the specific relief sought. D. Venkatasubramaniam had set aside an order directing specified investigative steps and a charge-sheet. It explained that a lawful investigation may or may not justify arrest, seizure or prosecution. The quoted M.C. Abraham passage treats arrest as a discretion affecting liberty and reputation, rather than an automatic consequence of an FIR. The Divine Retreat Centre passage within the quotation concerns the consequences of drastic judicial orders for persons who have not been heard. Relying on the quoted authority, the High Court held that compelling a charge-sheet would amount to supervising the investigation.

The Court then explained that leaving the investigative decision to the police did not permit the investigation to remain unresolved. Section 173(1) CrPC/Section 193 BNSS requires completion without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer must conclude the pending investigation, assess from the material collected whether an offence is made out, and take the corresponding steps required by law for a final report, whether a charge-sheet or closure report. The Court directed completion as early as possible. It fixed no calendar deadline, decided no outcome in advance and did not supervise individual investigative steps. If the petitioner still had a grievance, she could apply to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, who was required to consider it in accordance with law.

6. Relief : The High Court finally disposed of the writ petition. It refused the prayer for a charge-sheet within a stipulated period, but directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation expeditiously and take the steps required by law, including the appropriate final report after assessment. The petitioner remained free to approach the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, whose consideration of any grievance was to be in accordance with law. The order did not direct a charge-sheet, arrest or seizure, record a conviction, fix a precise deadline, award costs or make a substantive finding on the underlying IPC offences.

Sushma Dubey v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 39513/2024, 12/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (960) Prev Next

Headnote :- Joinder of accused / same transaction under Section 223(d) CrPC - State of Andhra Pradesh v. Cheemalapati Ganeswara Rao, (1964) 3 SCR 297, was considered on the relationship between the ordinary rule of separate trials and joint trial of connected offences. Where offences by several accused form part of the same transaction, only difficulty or embarrassment caused to the accused in defending themselves can justify separate trials. The threshold question is whether the offences form part of that transaction. The High Court found no allegation that Ajay Sharma's wife and son assisted, facilitated, abetted or conspired in his alleged repeated rape. Their alleged assault on the prosecutrix on 20 November 2020 was attributed to opposition to the relationship, rather than participation in the alleged rape. Although factually connected, the acts were independent for the purposes of Section 223(d). The Court set aside the charge order dated 9 September 2021 insofar as it rejected the applicants' objection to joint trial.

Non-cognizable offence / deemed complaint - Under the Explanation to Section 2(d) CrPC, a police officer's report disclosing a non-cognizable offence after investigation is deemed to be a complaint, and the officer is deemed to be the complainant. Since the police had filed a charge-sheet alleging Section 323 IPC against the applicants, that report was to be treated as a complaint even though their joint trial with the person accused of rape was disallowed.

Separate simultaneous trials / same court and distinct records - Although the alleged assault did not form part of the same transaction as the alleged rape, the Court found a direct nexus between the accusations. It retained both matters before the existing Sessions Court rather than sending the applicants' case to the JMFC. It ordered separate but simultaneous trials, separate recording of evidence and two judgments. The common court did not combine the trials; each accusation remained subject to independent adjudication. The criminal revision was allowed to that limited procedural extent.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicants, Sushma Sharma and another, were described as the wife and son of co-accused Ajay Sharma. In recounting the prosecution allegations, counsel for the applicants submitted that Ajay, a civil engineer, had begun living alone in a rented residence in Triveni Apartment, Patel Nagar, Gwalior, for work in 2020, while his wife and son remained in Ghaziabad. A woman who performed household work for him alleged a physical relationship with Ajay from 1 October to 7 December 2020, eventually giving rise to an allegation of repeated rape under Section 376(2)(n) IPC. The prosecution further alleged that the wife and son travelled to Gwalior on 20 November 2020 and assaulted the woman. Neighbours reportedly responded to her screams. The wife and son reportedly left on 22 November, and Ajay remained. The woman alleged that the relationship continued and that Ajay refused to marry her on 7 December. She lodged a typed report on 10 December 2020 at Police Station University, Gwalior; the police registered IPC Sections 376(2)(n) and 323 and later submitted a charge-sheet.

The Sixth Additional Sessions Judge, Gwalior, in Sessions Trial No. 252/2021 framed charges under Sections 323/34 IPC against the wife and son by an order dated 9 September 2021. They challenged that order under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC in Criminal Revision No. 2269/2021. Their counsel confined the argument to Section 223(d) CrPC. They submitted that the alleged assault arose from disapproval of Ajay's relationship and formed no part of the same transaction as the alleged rape. They also submitted that they had not assisted in the alleged rape. The trial court had rejected their joinder objection by relying on the Supreme Court's Cheemalapati decision. The State and complainant opposed the revision. The High Court therefore examined the arrangement of the trials, not whether the accused had committed rape or assault.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Andhra Pradesh v. Cheemalapati Ganeswara Rao and Another, (1964) 3 SCR 297, was the sole materially discussed precedent. The trial court had used it to reject the applicants' objection to a joint trial. The High Court stated the principle drawn from that decision. Where several persons are accused of several offences, separate trials may be the more reasonable normal course. If the offences form part of the same transaction, only embarrassment or difficulty caused to the accused in defending themselves can justify separate trials. Whether the offences form part of one transaction is therefore an essential threshold. A common complainant or factual link does not, by itself, establish that requirement. The High Court applied that threshold to the present allegations: no accusation was made that the wife and son facilitated, abetted or conspired with Ajay to commit the alleged rape; their alleged assault expressed opposition to his relationship with the woman. It therefore refused to treat the assault and alleged rape as the same transaction under Section 223(d). The Court did not reject the authority itself.

3. Statutes considered : Sections 397 and 401 CrPC provided the criminal revision route against the Sessions Judge's charge order. Section 223(d) CrPC, which was central to the dispute, concerns joint charging and trial of persons accused of different offences committed in the course of the same transaction. The Court distinguished a direct factual connection from the statutory requirement that the offences form part of the same transaction. IPC Section 376(2)(n) concerned the allegation of repeated rape against Ajay Sharma. The charge framed against the applicants was under Section 323 read with Section 34 IPC, concerning assault with common intention; the Court treated Section 323 as a non-cognizable offence for the procedural question. Section 2(d) CrPC defines complaint and its Explanation deems a police officer's report made after investigation disclosing a non-cognizable offence to be a complaint, with the officer deemed complainant. That statutory rule required the charge-sheet against the applicants to be treated as a complaint after joint trial was disallowed.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the wife's and son's alleged 20 November 2020 assault was committed in the same transaction as Ajay's alleged repeated rape, so that Section 223(d) permitted their joint trial, notwithstanding the asserted oppositional motive and absence of assistance, abetment or conspiracy. (ii) How the filed police report alleging a non-cognizable Section 323 offence against the applicants should be treated once their joint-trial objection succeeded. (iii) Whether the connected allegations should then be sent to the JMFC or kept in the same Sessions Court with distinct trials and evidentiary records.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied the same-transaction inquiry in Cheemalapati to the alleged conduct of each accused. Ajay's alleged physical relationship with the woman between October and December 2020 was distinct from the wife's and son's alleged assault during their brief visit in November. There was no prosecution allegation that they assisted, facilitated, abetted or conspired in the alleged rape. Their alleged reason for assaulting the woman was opposition to the relationship. On those allegations, the assault did not form part of the same transaction as the alleged rape; a factual connection between the incidents did not satisfy Section 223(d). The trial court's reliance on Cheemalapati did not establish the necessary connection. The High Court set aside the order dated 9 September 2021 only insofar as it rejected the applicants' objection to joint trial. This did not discharge them from the Section 323/34 charge.

The Court then addressed the procedural consequence. Section 323 IPC was non-cognizable in the Court's analysis, but the police had already filed a report after investigation. The Explanation to Section 2(d) CrPC therefore deemed the report to be a complaint and the investigating officer to be the complainant. The Court did not use this deeming provision to decide whether the assault took place or to merge it with the rape prosecution.

Finally, the Court found a direct connection between the subject matters despite holding that they did not form one transaction for joint trial. It considered it inappropriate to send the applicants' case to the JMFC. It directed the same Sessions Court to conduct separate but simultaneous trials, record evidence separately in each, and deliver two different judgments. The common court and concurrent timing coordinated the proceedings without joining their adjudication. Each accusation remained for determination on its own record; a finding on one charge could not be assumed for the other merely because the court was the same. The decision concerned the allegations at the pretrial revision stage and left factual guilt open.

6. Relief : The High Court allowed the criminal revision. It set aside the Sixth Additional Sessions Judge's order dated 9 September 2021 in ST No. 252/2021 insofar as it rejected Sushma Sharma's and the other applicant's objection to joint trial. The assault case was not sent to the JMFC. The Sessions Court was directed to hear the related matters separately but simultaneously, record evidence separately and deliver two separate judgments.

Sushma Sharma and Others v. State of M.P. and Others, Cr.R. no. 2269/2021, 14/02/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (961) Prev Next

Headnote :- Judicial monitoring / investigative supervision - Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, 2013:INSC:839, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was quoted and applied. Monitoring maintains surveillance over the progress and fairness of an investigation and ensures its freedom from outside interference. It may be warranted in rare and compelling circumstances. Supervision involves directing the investigation's execution. If a court directs the investigating officer's opinion or report under Section 173(2) CrPC, it risks binding or influencing the trial court and reducing the trial to a formality. The High Court therefore refused the petitioner's request to supervise the police Merg inquiry.

Complainant's remedies / magistrate's control - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India, 2007:INSC:760, (2007) 6 SCC 171, explained that the police must register information disclosing a cognizable offence. If they fail to do so, the remedy is a complaint under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC, rather than an ordinary writ directing registration. It distinguished Ramesh Kumari's ruling on the police duty from the remedy discussed in All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari. Lallan Chaudhary was noted as reiterating that duty. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, 2008:INSC:341, (2008) 3 SCC 542, quoted Gangadhar on the Magistrate's inquiry under Chapter XV, dismissal under Section 203, cognizance and issue of process, or a direction for investigation where appropriate. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P., 2007:INSC:1243, (2008) 2 SCC 409, described the remedy of approaching the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by the Magistrate under Section 156(3), if an FIR has not been registered or the investigation is deficient. The Magistrate can direct and monitor a proper investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage, (2016) 6 SCC 277, followed Sakiri Vasu and explained that a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied may recommend a change of investigating officer, but cannot conduct the investigation personally. The High Court applied these principles and expressly referred to Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS and Section 156(3) CrPC/Section 175 BNSS. Any application to the Magistrate must be assessed without being influenced by dismissal of the writ petition.

Article 226 / alternative remedy - The quoted Division Bench ruling in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016 (20 December 2016), permits refusal of a writ compelling compliance with Section 154 CrPC when the remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been pursued, subject to the Whirlpool exceptions. Its reference to Lalita Kumari distinguishes the police's duty to register an FIR from an entitlement to bypass those remedies by seeking mandamus. Following that ruling and the Supreme Court authorities considered, the High Court dismissed this petition as not maintainable and granted liberty to approach the Magistrate.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Sushobhan Zanane petitioned under Article 226 of the Constitution concerning the death of his father, Late Subash Chandra Zanane. He submitted that his father had died in suspicious circumstances, maintained that his father had not committed suicide, and complained that the police were not conducting the Merg inquiry properly. He sought a fair, impartial investigation and legal action against respondents Nos. 4 and 5 for alleged abetment of suicide or possible murder. He also asked for disciplinary action against officers of Police Station Lasudia said to have ignored his father's complaints, immediate protection for him and his family from respondents Nos. 4 and 5, and other appropriate relief.

At a hearing on 10 September 2024, the High Court framed two legal questions: the distinction between judicial monitoring and supervision of an investigation, and whether an aggrieved complainant has an efficacious remedy before the Magistrate when dissatisfied with the progress of a police inquiry. The final order of 12 September 2024 resolved those questions by applying Supreme Court authority and a Division Bench precedent. The court refused the requested supervision and FIR registration direction in this writ. It did not decide the nature of the death or whether the proposed offences had been committed.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted paragraphs 38–39 of Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary and Others, 2013:INSC:839, (2014) 2 SCC 532. In those paragraphs, the Supreme Court explained that monitoring in a court-directed investigation preserves confidence in an impartial inquiry, checks delay, protects the investigation from external influence and ensures that allegations are investigated to a lawful conclusion. It involves maintaining surveillance over progress without directing the means and manner of investigation. Supervision, by contrast, involves directing the execution of the investigation. If a superior court directs the investigator's opinion in the report under Section 173(2) CrPC, the trial court's independent determination may be compromised and the trial rendered a formality. Rare and compelling circumstances may justify monitoring, but the Code does not envisage a court supervising police investigation.

Aleque Padamsee and Others v. Union of India and Others, 2007:INSC:760, (2007) 6 SCC 171, was quoted on the difference between the police's duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence and the remedy if they fail to do so. The quoted passage explained that the remedy is to follow the complaint procedure before the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC, rather than seek an ordinary writ directing the police to register an FIR. It differentiated Ramesh Kumari, 2006:INSC:98, (2006) 2 SCC 677, which concerned the police duty on receiving information disclosing a cognizable offence, from the remedy considered in All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union v. Union of India, 1996:INSC:1247, (1996) 11 SCC 582; Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre v. State of Maharashtra, 2004:INSC:556, (2004) 7 SCC 768; Hari Singh, 2006:INSC:375, (2006) 5 SCC 733; and Minu Kumari, 2006:INSC:223, (2006) 4 SCC 359. Lallan Chaudhary v. State of Bihar, 2006:INSC:696, (2006) 12 SCC 229, was mentioned within the passage as reaffirming the duty to register.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala and Others, 2008:INSC:341, (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted for the same statutory remedy and the limits on seeking an ordinary writ when the police take no action. Its quotation from Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre explains the Chapter XV complaint route: a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied may take cognizance and issue process. Where appropriate, the Magistrate may direct the police to investigate and submit a report, or dismiss the complaint under Section 203 CrPC if it discloses no offence. The Supreme Court passage also attributes this method to All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union.

Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P. and Others, 2007:INSC:1243, (2008) 2 SCC 409, was quoted on the remedy of a representation to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3). If the FIR is still not registered or the investigation is deficient, the aggrieved person may apply to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). A Magistrate may direct registration or proper police investigation and monitor that investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage and Others, (2016) 6 SCC 277, was quoted as following Sakiri Vasu: a Magistrate who is prima facie satisfied may require a proper investigation and recommend a change of investigating officer if necessary. The Magistrate may monitor the investigation but cannot conduct it personally, as investigation is police work. High Courts ordinarily should not entertain such grievances under Article 226. The quoted Sudhir Tambe judgment set aside a different High Court order and directed a Magistrate to act there. The present High Court applied its legal principles; it did not grant that other case's operative relief.

Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P. and Others, Writ Appeal No. 247/2016 (Gwalior Bench, 20 December 2016), a Division Bench decision of the same High Court, was quoted on the refusal of mandamus to compel registration under Section 154 CrPC when the statutory remedies in Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the four exceptions identified in Whirlpool Corporation v. Registrar of Trade Marks, 1998:INSC:400, (1998) 8 SCC 1. The same quotation distinguishes Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P., 2013:INSC:748, (2014) 2 SCC 1: its rule requiring registration of an FIR does not decide whether a person can seek mandamus without using the alternative remedies.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was invoked to seek a writ directing investigation, action against the suspects, disciplinary action against police officers and protection. The court declined supervisory control of the police inquiry and the requested FIR direction in view of the cited precedents and the available statutory remedy. Section 154 CrPC concerns the police's duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence. Subsection (3) provides for a representation to the Superintendent of Police if the police fail to register an FIR. Section 156(3) CrPC empowers a Magistrate, on being prima facie satisfied as described above, to direct registration or proper investigation and monitor police compliance, without conducting the investigation personally. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC provide for a complaint before the Magistrate and cognizance of the offence. The quoted Divine Retreat Centre/Gangadhar discussion also mentions an inquiry under Chapter XV, dismissal under Section 203 where no offence is disclosed, and a direction for police investigation and a report where appropriate. Section 173(2) CrPC appears in Manohar Lal Sharma's explanation of why a superior court should not direct the investigator's opinion. The High Court expressly identified Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023 alongside Section 200 CrPC, and Section 175 BNSS alongside Section 156(3) CrPC, as provisions under which the petitioner could approach the Magistrate.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the petitioner's dissatisfaction with a police Merg inquiry into his father's death entitled him to judicial supervision, and how that differs from exceptional court monitoring that does not direct the investigative method. (ii) What statutory remedies are available to a complainant when police allegedly fail to register cognizable information or to investigate properly, including the Magistrate's powers and limits. (iii) Whether this Article 226 petition for investigative control and an FIR direction was maintainable without pursuing those remedies.

5. Ratio / Findings : On the first question, the High Court adopted Manohar Lal Sharma's distinction. Monitoring involves maintaining surveillance over the progress and fairness of an investigation without selecting the investigative steps or directing the officer's conclusion. In rare and compelling cases, it may preserve impartiality and prevent delay or interference. Supervision involves directing how the investigation is carried out. A superior court that directs the opinion expressed in the report under Section 173(2) would interfere with the trial court's independent adjudication and risk reducing the trial to a formality. The petitioner asked the High Court to supervise an inquiry said to be inadequate; the Court declined that form of control.

On the second question, the Court treated Aleque Padamsee and Divine Retreat Centre as separating the police's duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from the informant's judicial remedy for inaction. Sections 190 and 200 CrPC permit a complaint to the competent Magistrate. Sakiri Vasu describes the sequence of a representation to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3), followed by an application under Section 156(3) if the FIR remains unregistered or the investigation is deficient. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe explains that the Magistrate may direct registration of an FIR or a proper investigation, as appropriate, monitor its progress and recommend changing the investigating officer when warranted, while leaving the investigation to police. These are conditional powers exercised on the Magistrate's independent assessment, rather than directions that follow automatically merely because a complainant is dissatisfied.

In relation to Article 226, the quoted Shweta Bhadauria decision treated available remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 as grounds for refusing ordinary mandamus to compel registration. It acknowledged Whirlpool's exceptions and explained that Lalita Kumari's ruling on the police duty does not itself determine entitlement to a writ. The High Court concluded that it could neither supervise the inquiry nor issue the requested FIR registration direction in this petition. It identified the Section 200 CrPC/Section 223 BNSS complaint with a Section 156(3) CrPC/Section 175 BNSS application as an available course if the petitioner remains dissatisfied. The Magistrate, if approached, must decide in accordance with law without being influenced by this dismissal.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition as not maintainable, with liberty to approach the concerned Magistrate by filing the complaint and investigation application described above. It directed that any such application be decided strictly in accordance with law, without being influenced or prejudiced by dismissal of the writ petition. It granted no separate relief against respondents Nos. 4 and 5 and issued no direction for immediate protection. It made no determination that the father's death was murder, suicide or abetment, and imposed no costs or separate condition in the operative order.

Sushobhan Zanane v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 20757/2024, 12/09/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (963) Prev Next

Headnote :- Accused's writ / no right to prescribe investigative angle - Romila Thapar v. Union of India; (2018) 10 SCC 753, citing Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt and E. Sivakumar, states that an accused ordinarily cannot choose the investigator or dictate the method of investigation. Its discussion of Divine Retreat Centre preserves the power to issue appropriate directions under Article 226 where mala fide exercise of investigative power is convincingly shown. The High Court applied that distinction to a person named in an FIR under Sections 363, 344 and 376 IPC who sought a 'fair and impartial' investigation. It refused to direct investigation from his preferred angle and left him free to raise his factual defence at trial.

Monitoring / no disguised judicial supervision - Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary; (2014) 2 SCC 532, distinguishes rare judicial monitoring of fair and timely progress from directions prescribing the investigating officer's steps or conclusions. Intrusive supervision can undermine the trial court's later independent role. Exceptional intervention remains available for statutory abuse, threats to liberty or property, or an investigation not conducted bona fide. The High Court applied that distinction directly and through its earlier Prabal Dogra decision: describing a direction as "monitoring" does not permit a judge to prescribe how evidence must be collected. The petition was dismissed without any order for monitoring or transfer.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Uday Pal Singh filed Writ Petition 3607/2020 seeking a direction from the Madhya Pradesh High Court for a fair and impartial investigation in Crime 412/2019 at Hazira police station, Gwalior. Respondent 5 had lodged an FIR against him under IPC Sections 363, 344 and 376. Counsel for the petitioner was Vibhor Kumar Sahu; the State appeared through a Government Advocate. The Court framed the question as whether it could direct the investigating agency to investigate in a particular manner. It dismissed the writ after considering Supreme Court law on an accused's control over investigation and on judicial monitoring.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India; (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted on whether accused persons, or persons acting for them, may choose or change the investigating agency and demand court monitoring. In that discussion, Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat rejects an accused's right to choose the agency; Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India rejects a right to dictate the manner of investigation or mode of prosecution. E. Sivakumar v. Union of India concerns the absence of a routine right to be heard when a High Court exceptionally entrusted investigation to the CBI. That passage cites Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki and Narender G. Goel on a hearing at the investigative stage, and lists W.N. Chadha, Mayawati, CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, CCI v. SAIL and Janata Dal as authorities for the same general position. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, also quoted through Romila, distinguishes an impermissible change of investigator midstream merely by exercising inherent jurisdiction from appropriate directions under Article 226 where mala fide investigation is convincingly shown. The High Court applied the rule against an accused dictating the investigation while preserving that exceptional public-law power.

Prabal Dogra v. Superintendent of Police, Gwalior and State of M.P., MCRC 10446/2017, order of 30 November 2017, was quoted on the requirements of a fair trial. It explains that judicial supervision which compels the investigating officer to form a particular opinion can impair the trial court's later independent role. Its quotation of Manohar Lal Sharma, and its application of that reasoning to an accused claiming false implication, supported the present Court's limited role. Prabal Dogra also reproduced Lalita Kumari v. State of U.P.; (2014) 2 SCC 1, on mandatory registration of information disclosing a cognizable offence, the limited purpose of preliminary inquiry, promptness and General Diary recording. On its own facts, Prabal Dogra noted the absence of allegations against the investigator. The MLC and witness allegations discussed there concerned that earlier case, not Uday Pal Singh's FIR.

Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary; (2014) 2 SCC 532, was also quoted independently at paragraphs 24, 26 and 39. Police investigation ordinarily falls within the investigating agency's domain, subject to statute and legitimate purpose. A superior court may intervene in exceptional cases of abuse, statutory breach affecting rights or investigation not conducted bona fide. Monitoring maintains oversight of fair and timely progress. Supervision, by contrast, prescribes methods and risks shaping the final police opinion before trial, undermining the trial court's independence. The High Court applied that distinction to refuse a direction prescribing an investigative angle under the guise of monitoring.

3. Statutes considered : CrPC Section 173(2) appears in Manohar Lal Sharma's explanation that police form an investigative opinion for the trial court's later independent assessment. Section 482 CrPC appears in the quoted Prabal Dogra discussion but was not Uday Pal Singh's procedural route.

4. Issues : Whether an accused's request for a fair and impartial investigation of an existing FIR could justify a writ directing police to pursue his chosen line of investigation without a demonstrated exceptional statutory defect or mala fide conduct. Whether describing such a direction as “monitoring” could avoid the restriction on judicial supervision of the investigator's methods and opinion.

5. Ratio / Findings : The rule stated in Romila Thapar denies an accused an ordinary right to choose the investigating agency or the manner of investigation. Divine Retreat Centre qualifies that rule by preserving Article 226 intervention where mala fide investigation is convincingly shown. The quoted law also recognises exceptional intervention for abuse of investigative power. The High Court held that the accused could not obtain a direction requiring the police to investigate from his preferred angle. He remained free to put forward his defence at trial. That procedural decision did not determine guilt.

Manohar Lal Sharma supplied the further reason for keeping investigation and trial distinct. The police collect material and form an opinion; the trial court independently decides whether an offence has been made out. In rare and compelling circumstances, a superior court may monitor whether the investigation proceeds fairly and without delay.

Directing particular investigative acts or conclusions, however, would undermine that division of roles. The High Court followed its earlier reasoning in Prabal Dogra and rejected an attempt to prescribe an investigative angle under the label of "monitoring." It gave no direction for monitoring, transfer or a particular police method.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition.

Uday Pal Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 3607/2020, 06/03/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (964) Prev Next

Headnote :- Compromise quashing / third-party property and societal interest - Gian Singh v. State of Punjab; (2012) 10 SCC 303, and Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab; (2014) 6 SCC 466, distinguish predominantly private disputes in which Section 482 CrPC relief may be appropriate from offences with a serious societal dimension. State of M.P. v. Laxmi Narayan, Criminal Appeal 349/2019, 5 March 2019, clarifies that complete settlement may justify quashing non-compoundable cases of a predominantly civil or commercial character. The Court must, however, consider the offence, the accused's antecedents and conduct, the circumstances of compromise and the procedural stage. Its examples involving special statutes and serious violence illustrate the limits of that power; they were not charges in this case. The land-sale agreement represented that the applicants exclusively owned all the listed land, including surveys 29/2 and 30/2, and thereby allegedly induced payment of a Rs 25 lakh advance. The Court described those plots as a third person's property. Earlier orders had found prima facie material under IPC Sections 420, 467 and 468, and an earlier request for quashing on merits had failed. The unexplained later settlement, unknown trial stage and third-party ownership dimension led the High Court to refuse quashing. A civil component does not by itself require either quashing or prosecution.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Ummed Singh and the other applicants sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime 439/2013 at Huzrat Kotwali, Gwalior, and Sessions Trial 292/2015, solely on the basis of a compromise with the complainant. The complainant alleged that, under an agreement dated 15 June 2010, he was to purchase half of the land spread across 36 survey numbers and described as approximately 20.247 or 20.274 hectares. A Rs 25 lakh advance was paid, with the balance payable at conveyance. The agreement represented that all the listed property belonged exclusively to the applicants and was free of encumbrances. Surveys 29/2 (2.09 hectares) and 30/2 (0.836 hectares) were said to be frontage land important to the bargain. According to the accusation and the High Court's description at this preliminary stage, however, they belonged to Sajju, a third person. The complainant said he would neither have entered into the agreement nor advanced the money had he been told that those plots did not belong to the sellers. The order uses both 20.247 and 20.274 for the overall land area.

Earlier proceedings had already affected the charges. The trial court had not initially framed charges under IPC Sections 467 and 468, but the complainant's Criminal Revision 834/2016 resulted in a direction to add those charges. The applicants' separate challenge under Section 482 in MCRC 337/2014 had been dismissed on merits, with prima facie material found under Sections 420, 467 and 468. The parties subsequently reported a settlement. The High Court noted that counsel had not explained why the complainant, who had previously contested the matter vigorously, had agreed to settle. Counsel also could not identify the current stage of the trial. The Court refused quashing on compromise without retrying the land-title dispute or determining criminal guilt.

2. Precedents — Considered : Gian Singh v. State of Punjab; (2012) 10 SCC 303, and Narinder Singh v. State of Punjab; (2014) 6 SCC 466, were invoked by the High Court to distinguish disputes of an overwhelmingly private character from crimes affecting society. In the latter category, the victim's settlement does not by itself justify terminating prosecution. The High Court applied that distinction because the agreement allegedly sought both to dispose of an uninvolved owner's land and to deceive the purchaser who paid the advance.

State of M.P. v. Laxmi Narayan and Others, Criminal Appeal 349/2019, judgment of 5 March 2019, was quoted in greater detail. The first quoted limb permits inherent quashing of non-compoundable offences of an overwhelmingly civil character, including those arising from commercial transactions or family or matrimonial relationships, when the parties have resolved their entire private dispute. The other reproduced limbs restrict quashing of corruption and public-servant offences merely on compromise. They also address serious Section 307/Arms allegations and permit scrutiny of whether such a charge is merely nominal only at the appropriate stage after investigation. Even for private offences, they require consideration of the accused's antecedents and conduct, including absconding and how the compromise was procured. The quotation omits a numbered limb. No corruption, Section 307 or Arms count was charged here: those references were limits stated in the Supreme Court quotation. The High Court applied the distinction between private disputes and offences affecting society, together with the circumstances of settlement, to the third-party-property allegation, prior adverse orders and unexplained compromise. The trial stage was unknown; the order did not establish any particular stage.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked as the inherent power to quash a non-compoundable prosecution on settlement. Section 320 CrPC appears in Laxmi Narayan's distinction between inherent quashing and statutory compounding. IPC Section 420 concerned the allegation of cheating through false claims of ownership and the resulting payment of an advance. Sections 467 and 468 IPC concerned the additional forgery charges directed in the earlier revision. The High Court treated them as prima facie supported, without finally adjudicating them here. The civil agreement's enforceability, third-party ownership and specific-performance terms formed the background to the criminal quashing request and were not finally decided. The references to special statutes, Section 307 IPC and the Arms Act in the Laxmi Narayan quotation illustrated limits on compromise quashing; they were not offences in Crime 439/2013.

4. Issues : Whether the reported settlement with the purchaser required or justified inherent quashing of a pending cheating and forgery prosecution alleging misrepresentation of title to identified plots belonging to an uninvolved third party. What bearing the earlier merits dismissal of the applicants' quashing challenge, the successful revision for additional charges, the unexplained move from contested litigation to settlement and the unknown trial stage had on discretionary relief.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court read the agreement in the case diary as representing that all the included plots belonged exclusively to the applicants and were free of encumbrances. It read the complaint as alleging that the inclusion of frontage surveys 29/2 and 30/2 had materially induced the complainant to pay Rs 25 lakh. The Court described those plots as belonging to Sajju, a third person. The Court considered that the attempt to sell those plots without authority took the prosecution beyond a payment dispute between two parties. The earlier quashing order and the complainant's successful charge revision had left prima facie material for cheating and forgery; the Court did not treat those preliminary orders as final proof of guilt. Nor did it decide the civil bargain by treating the settlement as conclusive of the criminal proceedings.

Gian Singh and Narinder Singh permit the High Court to distinguish private wrongs from offences affecting society. Laxmi Narayan permits relief on compromise in non-compoundable matters of a predominantly civil or commercial character after full settlement, but requires consideration of the offence's gravity and context, the accused's antecedents and how settlement came about. The complainant had earlier sought stronger charges, yet counsel did not explain what had prompted the later compromise. Counsel also could not identify the trial stage. Those gaps, together with the third-party ownership allegation and the earlier prima facie finding, led the Court to hold that the case was unsuitable for quashing. The Court said that civil liabilities should be decided in civil suits. Its refusal to quash left the criminal prosecution to continue.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 petition. Crime 439/2013 and Sessions Trial 292/2015 continued notwithstanding the reported settlement. The refusal was confined to quashing on compromise in the stated procedural and factual circumstances.

Ummed Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 19094/2018, 06/03/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (965) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 304-A traffic death / lapse of time and deterrent sentence - State of Punjab v. Saurabh Bakshi; (2015) 5 SCC 182, applies proportionality and gives substantial weight to deterrence in sentencing for rash-driving deaths. It confines an earlier compensation-based reduction to the facts of that case and rejects a general rule permitting custody to be exchanged for money. Its discussion of Balwinder Singh and Dalbir Singh cautions against routinely reducing imprisonment for careless driving to the period already served. Guru Basavaraj and Gopal Singh recognise individual mitigating factors and caution against either mechanically harsh punishment or sentencing based on fancy. Applying that framework, the High Court refused to reduce Unnisa's two-year rigorous-imprisonment term merely because 32 years had passed since the 1992 tractor-trolley accident and he offered a higher fine. He had carried passengers in an agricultural trolley and turned back while driving to collect fares, causing the vehicle to overturn, two deaths and injuries to seven persons. Those facts justified the trial court's sentence.

Compensation, fine and jail / distinct functions - Saurabh Bakshi's quoted treatment of Guru Basavaraj distinguishes civil compensation under the Motor Vehicles Act and criminal compensation under Section 357(3) CrPC from adequate punishment, while allowing the sentence to be adjusted to the circumstances. It also quotes Dalbir Singh on road-safety deterrence and B. Nagabhushanam on refusing an unwarranted reduction in custody. Siriya, Alister Anthony Pareira, Gopal Singh and Shyam Narain appear in its discussion of danger, proportionality, reform and social impact. Applying those principles, the High Court held that an increased fine did not justify dispensing with the remaining jail term in this serious accident.

Revision / unchallenged factual conviction - The applicant did not challenge the convictions under IPC Sections 279, 304-A, 337 and 338 or identify perversity in the concurrent factual findings. The High Court explained the limited grounds for interfering with factual findings in revision under Sections 397/401 CrPC and affirmed the convictions. The dispute before it was therefore confined to sentence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Unnisa sought criminal revision under Sections 397 and 401 CrPC against the 7 July 2005 judgment of the JMFC, Dabra, and the 20 July 2006 appellate judgment of the Third Additional Sessions Judge (Fast Track), Dabra. He had been convicted under IPC Sections 279, 304-A, 337 and 338 for a tractor-trolley rollover on 2 June 1992. The sentence imposed under Section 304-A was two years' rigorous imprisonment and a Rs 2,500 fine. The prosecution's account was that Unnisa drove tractor MBW 885 with passengers in its trolley. After crossing the Adampur culvert, he looked or turned back to collect their fares while driving, lost control and overturned the vehicle. Gonabai died at the scene; Ajeet Singh subsequently died. According to the court's sentencing findings, seven passengers suffered injuries. The FIR was registered as Crime 81/1992, and the investigation led to charges under Sections 279, 337, 338 and 304-A IPC. The trial and first appellate courts found culpable rashness/negligence. In the High Court, counsel did not challenge the findings supporting conviction or identify factual perversity. Counsel instead sought a reduction of custody to the period already served because 32 years had elapsed, and offered an increased fine. The State emphasised that the applicant had carried passengers in a trolley meant for agricultural produce and had tried to collect fares while driving.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of Punjab v. Saurabh Bakshi; 2015:INSC:276; (2015) 5 SCC 182, was the central Supreme Court sentencing authority quoted and applied. It rejects a general rule that an offer of acceptable compensation for a victim's rehabilitation always warrants reduced custody under Section 304-A, regardless of the gravity of the crime. It calls for proportionate sentencing and deterrence in rash-driving deaths while recognising mitigation and reform according to the facts of each case. The High Court applied that framework to the serious tractor-trolley accident and rejected the request for a reduction to time served in return for a higher fine.

Within the quoted Saurabh Bakshi analysis, Balwinder Singh is discussed as a case in which the High Court had reduced imprisonment to 15 days. Dalbir Singh v. State of Haryana is discussed for its emphasis on professional-driver vigilance and road-accident deterrence, and its caution against invoking Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act in the kind of Section 304-A rash-driving death it addressed. In B. Nagabhushanam v. State of Karnataka, the Court declined to interfere with a six-month custodial term and quoted Rattan Singh v. State of Punjab on training and corrective measures accompanying punishment. Guru Basavaraj considered serious road accidents involving multiple victims, the need for an adequate and proportionate sentence, and the distinction between compensation under the Motor Vehicles Act or Section 357(3)

CrPC and custodial punishment. The cases cited in Guru Basavaraj—State of Karnataka v. Krishna, Sevaka Perumal, Jashubha Bharatsinh Gohil, State of Karnataka v. Sharanappa Basanagouda Aregoudar and State of M.P. v. Saleem—were not individually analysed by this High Court.

Siriya v. State of M.P. was quoted within Saurabh Bakshi on adjusting deterrence and mercy to the facts. Alister Anthony Pareira v. State of Maharashtra explained that IPC Sections 279, 304-A, 336, 337 and 338 punish acts because of their inherent danger, regardless of an intention to kill. Gopal Singh, quoting Shailesh Jasvantbhai, explained that just punishment must be proportionate and reasoned, taking account of culpability, antecedents, age, reformation, lapse of time and social impact rather than following a rigid formula. Shyam Narain addressed the social goal of punishment and the interests of victims and the public. These discussions formed part of the Saurabh Bakshi passage considered by the High Court.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 304-A governed causing death by a rash or negligent act and the two-year custodial sentence. The convictions under Sections 279, 337 and 338, concerning dangerous driving and hurt/grievous hurt, were also affirmed. Sections 397 and 401 CrPC governed the criminal revision and the court's limited power to interfere with concurrent factual findings where no perversity was shown. The quoted Supreme Court passage mentions Section 4 of the Probation of Offenders Act in the context of leniency discussed in Dalbir Singh, compensation under Section 357(3) CrPC, and Motor Vehicles Act compensation as a separate sphere. The State referred to violations of vehicle carriage norms, but no specific Motor Vehicles Act provision was adjudicated. In recounting the trial court's sentencing decision, the order refers to “Section 71 of Cr.P.C.”.

4. Issues : Whether, when conviction was not challenged and no perversity was identified, revision permitted interference with the lower courts' factual findings. Whether the two-year rigorous-imprisonment sentence for a rash-driving accident causing deaths and multiple injuries should be reduced to the period already served, whose length was not stated, because 32 years had elapsed, with an increased fine replacing the unserved jail term. How Saurabh Bakshi's deterrence and proportionality principles, including the distinction between compensation and punishment, applied to these driving facts.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court treated the trial and first appellate findings of rash and negligent driving as concurrent factual conclusions. Unnisa's counsel did not challenge conviction or point to perversity. The court said its revision power did not permit routine interference with such facts and affirmed the IPC Sections 279, 304-A, 337 and 338 convictions. It then considered the actual sentence request independently.

The case-law analysis quoted from Saurabh Bakshi requires proportionality and places particular emphasis on deterrence in fatal road offences, while recognising mitigation according to the facts of each case. Compensation for victims' rehabilitation, civil motor claims and directions under Section 357(3) do not automatically replace adequate punishment. Dalbir Singh's deterrent reasoning and Guru Basavaraj's distinction between compensation and punishment were relevant to the request to replace custody with a larger fine. The High Court considered the lapse of 32 years against Unnisa's conduct: carrying fare-paying passengers in an agricultural trolley, turning back to collect money while driving across or just after a culvert, losing control, and causing two deaths and seven injuries. On those facts, it held that reduction to time served was unwarranted despite the proposed fine increase. The court considered the two-year term proportionate. Its decision did not lay down a general rule excluding judicial discretion in less serious circumstances.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the revision. It affirmed the trial and first appellate convictions, the two-year rigorous-imprisonment term under Section 304-A and the Rs 2,500 fine. It ordered neither an increased fine nor a reduction in custody. Unnisa's bail bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender before the trial court by 29 December 2024 to serve the remaining term. The court directed that its judgment and the lower-court record be sent for compliance.

Unnisa v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.R. no. 611/2006, 04/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (966) Prev Next

Headnote :- PCPNDT cognizance / monitoring nomination versus authorized complainant -

Section 28(1) of the Pre-Conception and Pre-Natal Diagnostic Techniques (Prohibition of Sex Selection) Act, 1994 restricts cognizance to specified complaints. These may be made by the concerned Appropriate Authority, an officer authorised for that purpose by the Central Government, State Government or Appropriate Authority, or a person who has given the Authority at least 15 days' prescribed notice of the offence and intention to complain. Following Dr. Manvinder Singh Gill v. State of M.P., MCRC 4393/2013, 4 July 2013, the High Court distinguished appointment from nomination to assist monitoring. The State's designation of district magistrates as Appropriate Authorities on 4 April 2007 did not make an executive magistrate nominated by a district magistrate an Authority or an authorised complainant. The SDO (Revenue), Bhind, lacked competence to file the sonography-centre complaint, despite the later order making him officer in charge for that purpose. Mere nomination to monitor implementation did not constitute the required statutory authorisation.

Defective complainant / curability and statutory purpose - Voluntary Health Assn. of Punjab v. Union of India; (2016) 10 SCC 265, explains the PCPNDT Act's constitutional purpose, detailed statutory scheme and restricted cognizance route under Section 28. The scheme calls for effective implementation in accordance with its safeguards. M.M.T.C. Ltd. v. Medchl Chemicals; (2002) 1 SCC 234, held under Section 142 of the Negotiable Instruments Act that an initially unauthorised human representative of a corporate payee could be replaced without quashing a complaint filed in the payee's name. The High Court applied that analogy while recognising that the SDO was not an Appropriate Authority and that Section 28 prescribed eligibility to complain. It treated the filing as a curable irregularity, permitted the District Magistrate, as the Appropriate Authority, to join the complaint or be substituted as complainant, and allowed the SDO to testify. It declined to quash a prosecution instituted in 2014 but challenged only in 2018, with charges reportedly framed in 2017. The cure granted was joinder or substitution in the pending complaint. The statutory notice requirement concerned the separate private-complainant route.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Usha Mishra operated the sonography centre at Purna Multi-specialty Nursing Home, Bhind. Following an inspection on 14 March 2014, a complaint alleged violations of the Pre-Conception and Pre-Natal Diagnostic Techniques (Prohibition of Sex Selection) Act, 1994 and its 1996 Rules. A State order dated 4 April 2007 designated district magistrates as Appropriate Authorities and permitted them to nominate executive magistrates to assist in monitoring. On 15 May 2014, the District Magistrate, Bhind, made the Sub-Divisional Officer (Revenue) officer in charge for filing the complaint. The SDO filed it, and Criminal Case 710/2014 was pending before the Chief Judicial Magistrate, Bhind. Mishra applied under Section 482 CrPC on 23 August 2018 to quash the prosecution. She argued that the SDO's monitoring nomination and designation as officer in charge made him neither the statutory Appropriate Authority nor a duly authorised officer entitled to file the special complaint. She relied on the coordinate bench decision in Dr. Manvinder Singh Gill construing the same State notification. The State accepted that the competence issue had been decided and asked that the Appropriate Authority be permitted to file a fresh complaint. Mishra maintained that Section 28's express restriction on cognizance made the proceedings void and that the later cure of corporate representation in M.M.T.C. was inapplicable. The Court noted her delayed challenge and failure to disclose the stage of the case in her application. Website information indicated that charges had been framed in 2017 and that prosecution evidence was listed next. An intervening stay had been granted. The order describes that stay as dated 1 February 2019, but later vacates an interim order dated 13 February 2019.

2. Precedents — Considered : Dr. Manvinder Singh Gill v. State of Madhya Pradesh, MCRC 4393/2013, order dated 4 July 2013 (coordinate bench), considered the notification dated 4 April 2007 and the nomination of additional collectors for PCPNDT monitoring. It held that nomination to assist implementation did not appoint an Appropriate Authority or authorise an officer to file the statutory complaint under Sections 17 and 28. The High Court followed that ruling on materially identical facts and held that the Bhind SDO was not a competent statutory complainant. It then considered a separate question: whether the defect required quashing or could be cured. The quoted passage from Gill did not resolve that question here.

Voluntary Health Assn. of Punjab v. Union of India; (2016) 10 SCC 265, was quoted at considerable length. It discusses the equal dignity of the girl child, prevention of sex selection and female foeticide, the detailed scheme of the PCPNDT Act and Rules, and the duties of Appropriate Authorities. The passage specifically identifies Section 28's complaint-eligibility requirements, alongside the Authority's functions under Section 17, its powers under Section 17-A, and the provisions governing registration, records, offences and enforcement. It calls for functioning authorities, prompt prosecutions and institutional reporting. The High Court relied on this context in interpreting the Act to promote effective enforcement.

M.M.T.C. Ltd. v. Medchl Chemicals and Pharma (P) Ltd.; (2002) 1 SCC 234, was quoted on a complaint under Section 142 of the Negotiable Instruments Act filed in the name of a company payee through an initially unauthorised human representative. Referring to Vishwa Mitter v. O.P. Poddar, it recognises that any person may ordinarily set the criminal law in motion, subject to a special statute's eligibility requirements. Its discussion of Associated Cement Co. Ltd. v. Keshvanand distinguishes the corporate de jure complainant from its human representative and permits later substitution of the representative. The High Court considered Mishra's objection that Section 28 PCPNDT restricts cognizance, compared the wording of Section 142 and extended the analogy of curable representation to the SDO's complaint. This was an analogy between different statutes; the Supreme Court had not decided the PCPNDT issue in M.M.T.C. The separate private-complainant route under PCPNDT Section 28(1)(b) still requires at least 15 days' prescribed notice.

3. Statutes considered : Section 23 of the PCPNDT Act supplied the alleged penal offence. Section 28(1)(a) restricts cognizance to a complaint by the concerned Appropriate Authority or an officer authorised by the Central Government, State Government or Authority. Section 28(1)(b) permits a complaint by a person who has given the Authority not less than 15 days' notice, in the prescribed manner, of the alleged offence and intention to complain. Section 28(2) provides that only a Metropolitan Magistrate or Judicial Magistrate First Class may try an offence under the Act. Under Section 28(3), the Court may, on the demand of a clause (b) complainant, direct the Authority to provide copies of relevant records. Section 17(3)(b) and the State notification explain the designation of a district Appropriate Authority; mere nomination for monitoring does not authorise a Section 28 complaint. Section 482 CrPC provided the quashing jurisdiction. Section 142 of the Negotiable Instruments Act was the comparative cognizance provision discussed in M.M.T.C., not the provision governing the charge in this case.

4. Issues : Did the district magistrate's nomination of an SDO (Revenue) to monitor PCPNDT implementation, together with the order making him officer in charge, authorise him under Section 28(1)(a) to file the complaint? Once his lack of authority was accepted, were the 2014 complaint and cognizance incurably void, or could the District Magistrate, as the properly designated Appropriate Authority, later join the complaint or be substituted as complainant, considering the corporate-complainant analogy and Section 28(1)(b)'s alternative route? Did the delayed invocation of inherent jurisdiction, after the trial appeared to have advanced, warrant quashing?

5. Ratio / Findings : Following Dr. Manvinder Singh Gill, the High Court distinguished appointment by the State under the special Act from a district magistrate's nomination to assist monitoring. The 2007 notification made district magistrates Appropriate Authorities. It did not itself confer their power to complain on an executive magistrate nominated to assist them, and the later Bhind order appointing an officer in charge did not supply that authority. The SDO's complaint was therefore not a complaint by an Appropriate Authority under Section 28(1)(a).

Section 28 nevertheless permits more than one route for filing a complaint, including a private person's complaint after the prescribed 15-day notice. Citing Voluntary Health Association, the Court emphasised the Act's protective purpose and detailed enforcement scheme in considering the consequence of filing by the wrong official. M.M.T.C. had permitted replacement of an initially unauthorised company representative under a differently worded restriction on cognizance. Mishra argued that the PCPNDT defect concerned jurisdiction, rather than representation. The High Court considered that distinction but held the filing based on nomination to be a correctable irregularity. The properly designated District Magistrate could join the complaint or be substituted as complainant, and the SDO could appear as a witness. The conclusion rested on the analogy and procedural cure adopted in this case.

The complaint was filed in 2014, and the quashing application followed four years later. The Court relied on website information that charges had been framed in 2017 and prosecution evidence was listed; Mishra had not disclosed the procedural stage in her application. The unexplained delay and apparently advanced stage reinforced the Court's refusal to terminate the proceedings for the identified defect.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the Section 482 application without quashing Criminal Case 710/2014. It granted the District Magistrate, Bhind, leave to join as complainant and directed him to apply for joinder or substitution within one month of the date of the order. The SDO could appear as a witness. The prosecutor was directed to inform the District Magistrate, and copies were to be sent for compliance. The interim stay was vacated. The trial court was directed to conclude the trial within six months of receiving the order. The judgment refers to the two differing February 2019 stay dates noted above; it did not determine the charge or the ultimate trial result.

Usha Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 34370/2018, 03/09/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (967) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / specific allegations against parents-in-law - Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P.; (2012) 10 SCC 741, and Kahkashan Kausar v. State of Bihar; (2022) 6 SCC 599, guard against prosecuting relatives under Section 498-A merely because they are named or face omnibus allegations. Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P.; (2015) 11 SCC 260, leaves triable allegations of dowry demands and parental taunts for trial, rather than testing their truth in quashing proceedings. Its quotation of Kailash Chandra Agrawal and Kans Raj stresses the need for an attributed role, particularly for distant relatives. The High Court distinguished the nonspecific allegation of pregnancy-related harassment in Kahkashan. Here, the wife attributed repeated demands for Rs 25 lakh, confinement, threats of remarriage, rebukes concerning her husband's conduct and an assault to her father- and mother-in-law at identified matrimonial locations. Taking the FIR allegations at face value, the Court declined to quash the proceedings against them. It did not find those allegations proved.

Sister-in-law / joint family allegations without individual act - Kans Raj v. State of Punjab; (2000) 5 SCC 207, cautions against automatically implicating a spouse's relatives in dowry offences. Monju Roy v. State of W.B.; (2015) 13 SCC 693, distinguishes omnibus allegations against siblings and other relatives from allegations concerning the husband and parents. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan illustrates quashing where vague allegations and the surrounding circumstances disclose abuse of process. The applicants also cited Preeti Gupta, without a separate application of its facts. Reading the same FIR separately for the unmarried sister, Nivedika, the High Court found only collective assertions and no specific individual act supporting prosecution for the registered cruelty, hurt, intimidation, abuse or Dowry Prohibition Act offences. It quashed Crime 12/2022 and RCT 1719/2022 only as to her. Her unmarried status did not itself provide an exemption, and the allegations specific to the parents did not automatically extend to every named family member.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vaibhav Tiwari, his father Sushil, his mother Shashiprabha (spelt 'Shasihprabha' in the order) and his unmarried sister Nivedika applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime 12/2022 at Khandwa and the ensuing proceedings, RCT 1719/2022 before the Fourth JMFC. The registered offences were IPC Sections 498-A, 294, 323, 506 and 34 and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. At the outset, the husband withdrew his application, which was dismissed as withdrawn. The contested decision therefore concerned the parents and sister. The published order identifies the complainant wife as respondent 2 and recounts FIR allegations, not judicial findings of abuse.

The wife said that she married Vaibhav on 19 June 2019 and initially lived with his family in Sagar. She alleged that he said the marriage was for social recognition and dowry, and complained that her family had given Rs 2.51 lakh instead of Rs 25 lakh. When she told his parents and sister, they allegedly repeated the demand and said that the marriage was for dowry. She described confinement and restrictions on meeting visitors. At Ratnagiri, where her husband was posted and the relatives were also allegedly present, she attributed a renewed demand and a threat of remarriage to family members. She also described her mother-in-law's rebuke when she reported her husband's refusal of marital intimacy.

After questioning women's clothing found in her husband's house, she alleged abusive speech, blows with fists and threats when she raised the matter with relatives at Sagar. The husband allegedly threatened, separately, to push her in front of a train. She returned to her parental home in March 2021 and made a complaint that September while hoping to preserve the marriage. She returned after a family assurance in December, but finally left for Khandwa on 19 December 2021. She lodged the FIR on 8 August 2022. Parts of the narrative refer collectively to the sister and a brother-in-law; the Court had to assess the role attributed to each applicant.

The applicants invoked the Supreme Court's warnings against sweeping matrimonial allegations. The wife relied on Taramani Parakh and the State supported registration. The High Court separated the parent-specific demands and conduct from the sister's broad inclusion, without testing disputed veracity at the FIR stage. It did not decide whether any dowry demand, confinement, assault, threat or extramarital relationship actually occurred.

2. Precedents — Considered : Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P.; 2012:INSC:478; (2012) 10 SCC 741, was invoked and applied for the principle that merely naming a relative in a matrimonial dispute, without a specific role, does not justify mechanically requiring that person to stand trial. A specific allegation of physical or mental torture may justify proceeding. The Court found the repeated demands and conduct attributed to the father- and mother-in-law materially different from mere naming. It applied the caution to the sister's general inclusion in the allegations.

Kahkashan Kausar v. State of Bihar; 2022:INSC:163; (2022) 6 SCC 599, was invoked for quashing general and omnibus allegations against in-laws. The High Court expressly distinguished its example, where all accused were said generally to harass and threaten termination of pregnancy, from this FIR's particularised demands, confinement and responses attributed to the parents. It did not reject Kahkashan's rule; it applied its specificity inquiry with a different outcome for the parents and sister.

Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P.; 2015:INSC:221; (2015) 11 SCC 260, was cited by the wife and quoted by the High Court. The allegations in that case of dowry demands, parental taunts and forced separation raised a triable issue of cruelty. Their truth could not be decided through pretrial quashing. Its quotation of Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P.; (2014) 16 SCC 551, calls for care where distant relatives are named without specific material. It distinguishes abuse apparent on the face of the complaint from matters requiring assessment of competing evidence at trial. The nested passage refers to Kans Raj v. State of Punjab; (2000) 5 SCC 207, on implicating relatives too widely. It also lists K. Ramakrishna, Pepsi Foods, Bhajan Lal and Asmathunnisa for the general parameters of quashing, without separately applying their facts here. The High Court relied on Taramani's approach of taking allegations at face value and leaving triable issues for trial in refusing to quash the proceedings against the parents.

For Nivedika, Kans Raj was independently quoted on the principle that mere relationship and conjecture do not establish involvement in a dowry offence; overt acts must be proved beyond reasonable doubt at trial. At the FIR stage, the High Court used that principle to examine whether an individual accusation was discernible, rather than requiring proof to the trial standard before prosecution. Monju Roy v. State of W.B.; (2015) 13 SCC 693, was quoted on the risk of exaggeration in naming family members and the need to distinguish sisters and other relatives from the husband and parents. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan; 2013 (1) UC 155, was quoted for quashing vague allegations against relatives in its particular circumstances, including uncertainty about residence and extraordinary delay. The Court applied those principles when assessing the allegations against Nivedika separately.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC supplied the inherent quashing power. The FIR registered IPC Section 498-A (matrimonial cruelty), Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 (the related abuse, hurt, intimidation and common-intention allegations), and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4. The Court examined whether the FIR made sufficiently particular individual allegations against each relative for prosecution to continue. Sections 3 and 4 were quashed along with the remaining proceedings only for Nivedika. No statutory exception for an unmarried sister was articulated. The husband withdrew his petition, so the judgment neither absolved nor convicted him.

4. Issues : Were the allegations of repeated dowry demands, confinement, family pressure and other identified conduct attributed to Sushil and Shashiprabha sufficiently specific to defeat their request for pretrial quashing, despite the cited decisions on omnibus allegations? Did the joint references to Nivedika in the same FIR attribute an identifiable individual role sufficient to require her prosecution for the listed offences? What relief should follow for each applicant after the husband withdrew his challenge?

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court assessed the FIR separately for each applicant. As to Sushil and Shashiprabha, it identified allegations that they repeated the Rs 25 lakh demand after the wife reported her husband's statement, imposed or participated in restrictions at Sagar, and renewed the demand at Ratnagiri with a threat that he would remarry. It also identified allegations of abuse and assault when she reported marital mistreatment. The mother was specifically alleged to have rebuked her about intimacy and children. These allegations remained to be tested, but were more particular than the undifferentiated allegation in Kahkashan. Geeta Mehrotra and Kahkashan protect relatives named without an adequate role. Taramani Parakh shows that allegations of parental dowry taunts and harassment, taken at face value, may raise triable issues under Section 498-A. The Court declined to assess credibility at the Section 482 stage and dismissed the parents' quashing applications.

For Nivedika, the Court found collective allegations alongside other family members, without a distinct act attributed to her individually. She was an unmarried sister-in-law, but the decision rested on the absence of a specific individual role, not an immunity based on that status. Kans Raj, Monju Roy and Chandralekha call for caution against sweeping inclusion of relatives and permit intervention where the complaint on its face does not justify requiring a relative to stand trial. Applying those principles, the Court found no sufficient individual allegation to support Nivedika's prosecution for the listed IPC and dowry offences and quashed the proceedings only as to her. This was an assessment of the allegations at the FIR stage, not an acquittal of one relative on the evidence or a conviction of the others.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed Vaibhav's Section 482 application as withdrawn. It dismissed Sushil and Shashiprabha's applications, leaving Crime 12/2022 and RCT 1719/2022 to proceed against them. Nivedika's application was allowed. The FIR and subsequent proceedings were quashed only so far as they concerned her.

Vaibhav Tiwari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 1731/2023, 15/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (968) Prev Next

Headnote :- Insurance cover-note fraud / office custom no answer to proved dishonest conduct - An alleged office practice of issuing cover-note books to a probationary development officer, contrary to the accepted limits of his authority, did not itself excuse criminal liability. In his Section 313 CrPC answers, branch manager Satish Chandra Sareen admitted that he orally directed the issue of the books. He knew that the officer could not independently sign cover notes, had received complaints from insured persons and knew that premiums had not reached the company. The High Court based its finding of joint involvement on these admissions and Sareen's inaction, together with Mohan Singh Noriya's unauthorised cover notes, collections, non-deposit of premiums and altered records. Its finding did not rest on the administrative departure alone. The claimed good-faith business purpose and prevailing practice did not explain the later complaints and transactions. On this record, the judgment affirmed the convictions under Sections 420/120-B and 468/471/120-B IPC and the then-applicable Sections 13(1)(d)/13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act.

False insurance records / comparison with contemporaneous copy and premium evidence - The original cover note, Ex.P/13, was torn at the insured's identifying details and the premium particulars. Its photocopy, Ex.P/15, preserved the truck details and premium of Rs 1,350, while a duplicate purported to record a Luna and Rs 30. Another original cover note bore a later endorsement of cancellation that was absent from an earlier photocopy. Insured witnesses described paying premiums. Company records and the accused's explanations showed that the amounts had not been deposited. Nilesh Jain's Rs 6,212 was returned only after a long interval, which did not negate the original collection. The High Court inferred deliberate alteration, rejected Noriya's general cancellation and refund defence, and sustained the convictions for cheating, forgery/use and corruption. These findings rested on the identified record comparisons and witness evidence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Two connected criminal appeals challenged the convictions recorded on 2 September 1998 by the Special Judge (CBI), Jabalpur, in Special Case 1/1997. Satish Chandra Sareen, branch manager of New India Insurance Company, filed Criminal Appeal 2016/1998. He died on 13 April 2021. After the CBI verified his death, his widow, Veena Sareen, was permitted under Section 394(2) CrPC to continue the appeal. Mohan Singh Noriya, a probationary development officer, filed Criminal Appeal 2113/1998. The trial court imposed concurrent terms. Sareen received two and a half years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 3,000, with six months in default, under Section 420 read with Section 120-B IPC. Under Sections 468/471 read with Section 120-B, he received two years and a fine of Rs 2,000, with three months in default. Under Section 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, he received two and a half years and a fine of Rs 5,000, with six months in default. Noriya received the corresponding terms of two and a half years, two years and two and a half years, and the corresponding fines. His forgery/use conviction is described in the table as under Sections 468/471, without expressly adding Section 120-B; the concluding affirmation uses Section 120-B collectively.

The office arrangement was substantially undisputed. A cover-note book was issued to Noriya on Sareen's oral instructions, and the issue was entered in the stationery register. A probationary officer was not authorised to issue cover notes under his own signature. Insurance proposals ordinarily went to the manager for approval, and copies of cover notes had to be returned to the branch. The CBI alleged that Noriya accepted premiums for trucks and other vehicles, issued or purported to cancel cover notes, failed to deposit the collections and altered records to conceal the insured persons, vehicles and amounts. It alleged total misappropriation of Rs 10,738 and exposure/loss of Rs 14,95,023 arising from two accident compensation claims. The specified claim figures concerned claims filed; the judgment did not identify separate proof of payment by the insurer.

The Court examined the cover notes and witness evidence in detail. The original Ex.P/13 was torn at the insured's name, premium, dates and vehicle particulars. Its photocopy, Ex.P/15, showed the truck and a premium of Rs 1,350. A branch copy instead described a Luna and Rs 30. In another instance, an original cover note was marked 'cancelled', but an earlier photocopy had no such entry. Krishna Kumar Gupta described paying Rs 1,365 for truck insurance. P.J. Singh and Ashok Kumar Sanyal testified that small premiums were collected without cover notes being issued, and that they made complaints acknowledged by Sareen. Shyam Kumar Gupta described the truck cover note for Rs 1,350. Nilesh Kumar Jain said that he paid Rs 6,212 for insurance already obtained, later received a refund after a long delay and discovered that the premium had not been deposited. Noriya denied collecting certain sums, asserted cancellations and refunds, and denied misappropriation. Sareen admitted orally directing the issue of cover-note books, but relied on a prevailing office practice and a good-faith intention to expand business. Their Section 313 CrPC answers also confirmed relevant procedures, signatures, complaints and non-deposit of premiums. A preliminary enquiry led to the FIR, investigation, prosecution sanction and trial. 16 prosecution witnesses and one defence witness were examined.

2. Statutes considered : IPC Section 420 read with Section 120-B, and Sections 468/471 read with Section 120-B in the judgment's concluding formulation, governed the affirmed convictions for cheating/conspiracy and forgery/use of forged documents. Section 13(1)(d) read with Section 13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act, 1988, governed both corruption convictions under the law applied to the conduct in the 1990s. The accused were examined under Section 313 CrPC; their answers were considered with the other evidence, rather than as a substitute for the prosecution's case. Section 394(2) CrPC enabled Sareen's widow to continue his pending appeal after his death. The narrative records that prosecution sanction was obtained, but its validity or the identity of the competent authority was not an issue decided.

3. Issues : Did Sareen's admitted direction to issue cover-note books to a probationary officer, together with the complaints and known non-deposit of premiums, support the joint criminal findings, or was it excused by an established office practice or innocent business development? Could Noriya's denials of collecting premiums, claims of cancellation and later return of Rs 6,212 withstand the insured witnesses' evidence and the comparison of original, photocopied and duplicate records? Should each accused's convictions under the IPC and Prevention of Corruption Act counts stand, and should Noriya's concurrent sentences be reduced? Sareen's death also raised the procedural question of his widow's continuation of the appeal, which had already been allowed.

4. Ratio / Findings : The Court did not base its decision on Sareen's managerial status alone. His Section 313 answers acknowledged authorising the issue of cover-note books to Noriya, the officer's lack of authority to sign, his own signatures on relevant cover notes, complaints from insured persons and non-deposit of the Rs 6,212 premium. His claimed intention to improve business and reliance on office practice provided no legal basis to excuse the proved transactions; counsel identified no provision providing such an excuse. The Court also found that he took no action on the complaints, Ex.P/4 and P/5, which he had received. It considered his conduct together with Noriya's diversion of premiums and manipulation of cover notes and inferred joint involvement. It did not treat the case as an isolated negligent departure from stationery practice. Its conclusions rested on the admitted procedures, witness evidence and comparison of the cover-note records.

The Court compared the documents instead of accepting the claims of cancellation. Ex.P/13 was otherwise intact but lacked the identifying, vehicle and premium particulars. Ex.P/15 preserved the truck details and Rs 1,350 entry, while the duplicate showed a Luna and Rs 30. The concentrated pattern of missing particulars led the Court to infer deliberate tearing, rather than ordinary wear. In Krishna Kumar Gupta's transaction, an earlier copy without 'cancelled' contrasted with the original bearing that endorsement. The Court inferred that the endorsement had been added after the accident. The insureds' accounts of payment and the two complaints acknowledged by Sareen supported the finding that premiums had not reached the company. Jain's eventual refund confirmed that Rs 6,212 had previously been collected and did not establish timely deposit. The Court rejected Noriya's general denials and cancellation account. It found unauthorised issue, missing premiums and manipulated cover notes proved. In its concluding formulation, it affirmed both appellants' convictions under IPC Sections 420/120-B and 468/471/120-B and Sections 13(1)(d)/13(2) of the Prevention of Corruption Act.

In considering sentence, the Court emphasised the trust created when a policyholder pays for motor insurance. Employees' diversion of premiums and false cover records undermined confidence in the promised indemnity. The Court regarded the concurrent terms of two and a half years' and two years' rigorous imprisonment as already lenient and found no reason to reduce Noriya's punishment. Sareen's appeal continued through his widow under Section 394(2), but no further surrender order was made in his case because he had died.

5. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed both appeals and affirmed the trial convictions and concurrent sentences. It cancelled Noriya's bail bonds and directed him to surrender before the trial court by 13 November 2024 to serve the remaining sentence. If he failed to surrender, the trial court could issue a warrant. No further custody step was ordered for the deceased Sareen, whose widow, Veena Sareen, had already been permitted to continue his appeal. The judgment and trial record were to be sent to the trial court for compliance.

Veena Sareen v. Central Bureau of Investigation; Mohan Singh Noriya v. Central Bureau of Investigation, Cr.A. no. 2016/1998 & 2113/1998, 17/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (969) Prev Next

Headnote :- Injured eyewitness / failed recovery of alleged weapon - Failure to prove seizure of the weapon from the accused does not necessarily defeat proof of the assault. Bhuralal (PW1) identified Veer Singh Kushwah as the person who struck his head with a wheel spanner. Nainji (PW2) witnessed the assault, and Hansraj (PW4) saw the accused flee. Nainji said that the spanner was at the scene, whereas the investigating officer claimed that it was seized from the appellant about ten days later. No forensic report established blood on it. The High Court held that recovery from the appellant was not proved, but accepted the injured witness's account and the other direct evidence, supported by the skull fracture and medical treatment. It rejected as unreliable Birbal's claim that the unconscious victim had identified the assailant to him. The witnesses denied the alternative theory of injury from flying stones, which lacked supporting evidence from the scene.

Attempt to murder / intention or knowledge from manner of attack - Section 307 IPC requires an act done with the intention or knowledge, and in circumstances, such that death caused by the act would amount to murder. Grievous or life-threatening injury is not an indispensable ingredient. State of M.P. v. Kanha; (2019) 3 SCC 605, permits intention to be inferred from any actual injury and the surrounding circumstances, including the weapon and severity of the blows. The High Court applied that test to repeated, unprovoked blows with a metal wheel spanner on the forehead, a vital part of the body. The blows caused lacerations, a comminuted frontal-parietal fracture, unconsciousness, operations and prolonged hospitalisation. The spanner's ordinary use as a mechanical tool did not prevent it from being a deadly weapon as used in the assault. The Court inferred both an intention to cause death and knowledge of that risk. It maintained the Section 307 conviction despite the failure to prove recovery from the accused.

Attempt to murder and grievous hurt / same injured person - The trial court convicted the appellant under Section 307 IPC for the assault on Bhuralal, the sole victim. The High Court held that the additional conviction under Section 326 for the same assault was unwarranted and expressly set it aside. No separate sentence under Section 326 had been imposed at trial. The seven-year term of rigorous imprisonment and the trial fine of Rs 1,500, with its default term, remained undisturbed. The concluding paragraphs describe the appeal as dismissed and the trial judgment as affirmed, although the judgment expressly sets aside the Section 326 conviction.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Veer Singh Kushwah appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 21 August 2019 of the Fifth Additional Sessions Judge, Guna, in Sessions Trial 115/2018. The trial court convicted him under Section 307, described as its second part because hurt was caused, and Section 326 IPC for injuries to Bhuralal. It imposed seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of Rs 1,500, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, but no separate sentence under Section 326. It acquitted him under Sections 294 and 506 Part II. The appeal was listed for consideration of an application for suspension of sentence. Counsel requested a final hearing because Kushwah had served more than three years, and the parties were heard finally.

According to the prosecution, Kushwah and Bhuralal drove dumpers for Birbal Singh. Bhuralal reportedly complained to the owner that Kushwah had stolen diesel. At about 5–5:30 a.m. on 12 March 2018, Kushwah allegedly struck Bhuralal repeatedly on the head and face with a wheel spanner after a verbal dispute. Bhuralal lost consciousness. The owner and others arranged initial treatment at Guna and further treatment at Kota. The prosecution account attributed the report of the incident on 17 March to Hansraj. Crime 40/2018 was initially registered under Sections 323, 294, 506 and 307 IPC. The investigation included witness statements, medical records, material from the scene and a disputed seizure of the spanner. The charge sheet also included Section 326. At trial, Kushwah denied guilt and suggested that Bhuralal had been struck by stones flying from mine blasting. He also alleged that a loan dispute over Rs 5,000 had led to his false implication.

Bhuralal (PW1) said that Kushwah struck his head with the spanner. He could not count the blows because he lost consciousness. Nainji (PW2), who had been sleeping nearby, said that he saw the blow and briefly caught the appellant. Hansraj (PW4) described seeing Kushwah flee immediately after the assault, but disowned the rural complaint attributed to him. Birbal (PW3) saw Bhuralal injured later and claimed that Bhuralal had identified the assailant to him, although Bhuralal said that he was unconscious after the attack. The first doctor found two forehead lacerations, and an x-ray showed a comminuted frontal-parietal skull fracture. A treating surgeon described unconsciousness, operations to the head and face, and hospitalisation in Kota from 13 to 25 March. The Court noted that the emailed photocopies of treatment records identified by the doctor apparently had not been formally exhibited. It relied on his testimony and the other admitted medical evidence.

Kushwah challenged his convictions under both Section 307 and Section 326. He relied on the blasting theory and, alternatively, sought reduction of the seven-year sentence to the period already served. The State supported the trial court's decision. The High Court had to assess identification, the medical evidence of injury, the disputed seizure, the mental element for attempt to murder, the additional grievous-hurt conviction and the sentence.

2. Precedents — Considered : State of M.P. v. Kanha; (2019) 3 SCC 605, was the Supreme Court decision materially applied to the test for the offence. The quoted rule is that proof of grievous or life-threatening injury is not indispensable for Section

307 IPC. Intention may be inferred from any actual injury and the surrounding circumstances, including the weapon and severity of the blows. The High Court considered Section 307 alongside Kanha and applied the rule to repeated blows with a metal spanner on a vital part of the head, the extensive fracture and the operations. It did not infer attempt to murder solely from the medical classification of the injury as grievous.

3. Statutes considered : Section 307 IPC was reproduced in the judgment. It punishes an act done with the intention or knowledge, and in circumstances, such that death caused by that act would amount to murder. Where hurt is caused, it permits life imprisonment or the specified lesser punishment. The Court inferred intention and knowledge from the manner of attack, the weapon, the location of the injuries and the force of the blows. It rejected the gravity of injury as the sole or indispensable legal test. Section 326 IPC was the additional grievous-hurt conviction for the same attack on the sole injured person. The Court held it unnecessary once the Section 307 conviction was maintained and set it aside, without independently examining all its elements. Sections 294 and 506 Part II were the subjects of acquittals at trial, while Sections 323, 294, 506 and 307 were the original FIR charges. Section 374 CrPC provided the appellate route. The judgment records the absence of an FSL report, rather than a report finding no blood.

4. Issues : Did the injured witness's and eyewitnesses' accounts, read with the medical findings, establish Kushwah's assault despite the materially inconsistent claim of recovery of the wheel spanner and the unsupported flying-stones theory? Did repeated blows with a metal spanner on the forehead establish the intention or knowledge required by Section 307, rather than only grievous hurt under Section 326? Was grievous or life-threatening injury a necessary legal prerequisite? Could a separate Section 326 conviction stand for the same attack on the sole injured person after conviction under Section 307? Should the seven-year sentence be reduced to the period already served? The request for suspension of sentence was overtaken by the final hearing.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first assessed identification, rather than treating the disputed seizure as decisive of the whole case. Bhuralal identified Kushwah as the person who assaulted him with the spanner. Nainji's eyewitness account supported him, and Hansraj saw the appellant flee after the attack. Birbal was not an eyewitness. His claim that Bhuralal named the appellant was unreliable because Bhuralal said that he had lost consciousness after the assault. Hansraj's denial of the Dehati Nalishi did not displace the direct testimony that the Court accepted. The first medical examination recorded two forehead lacerations; the x-ray showed a comminuted skull fracture, and the treating surgeon described unconsciousness and operations. These findings supported the central account, subject to the Court's express qualification that some emailed medical photocopies apparently had not been exhibited.

Nainji said that the spanner was lying at the scene and was taken by the police. The investigating officer, however, claimed that it was seized from Kushwah's possession about ten days later. No FSL report was produced to establish blood on the spanner. The High Court therefore held that seizure from Kushwah was not proved. It nevertheless held that failure to recover the weapon from the accused did not undermine the credible oral and medical evidence. The witnesses denied the suggested injury from flying stones. No stone was recovered, and the investigating officer was not asked about the presence of any at the scene. Bhuralal denied the loan-based suggestion of false implication. The Court accepted the evidence that Kushwah had repeatedly struck him.

Section 307 requires the intention or knowledge that would make death resulting from the act murder, assessed in its context. Under Kanha, a particular degree of actual injury is not necessary, although the injury may be evidence of mental state. A wheel spanner is a metal vehicle tool. Used repeatedly to strike the forehead, it was capable of being a deadly weapon in the manner in which it was used. The vital location, severe force, comminuted frontal-parietal fracture, unconsciousness and surgeries enabled the Court to infer both knowledge of possible death and an intention to kill. It affirmed the Section 307 conviction despite finding that the alleged seizure from the accused had not been proved.

The trial court had also convicted Kushwah under Section 326 for injuries to the same sole victim. The High Court held that this additional conviction was unnecessary once guilt under Section 307 for the attack was established, and expressly set it aside. It neither imposed nor removed a separate Section 326 sentence, since none had been imposed at trial. The seven-year term fell within the higher punishment range under Section 307 where hurt is caused. Given the unprovoked attack on the head in the early morning, the sentence was not excessive merely because more than three years had already been served. The sentencing decision rested on those circumstances.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court maintained the Section 307 conviction and seven years' rigorous imprisonment, with the trial court's fine and default stipulation. It declined to reduce the sentence to the period already served and directed Kushwah, who was already in jail, to serve the remaining term. Paragraph 41 expressly set aside the Section 326 conviction concerning the same sole victim. Paragraphs 43–45 state that the trial judgment was affirmed and the appeal dismissed. No separate sentence under Section 326 had been imposed.

Veer Singh Kushwah v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 8401/2019, 19/03/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (970) Prev Next

Headnote :- Alibi / prosecution burden and defence proof - Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi); (2015) 4 SCC 749, quoting Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, explains that alibi is an evidentiary plea under Section 11 of the Evidence Act. The prosecution must first establish the accused's presence and participation; the plea does not lessen that burden. Once the prosecution discharges it, the accused must prove absence at the critical time by positive, strict evidence sufficient to exclude presence. Defence evidence of sufficient quality may nevertheless raise a reasonable doubt. S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra; (2010) 8 SCC 430, adds that failure to prove alibi does not itself establish the prosecution's case. The High Court applied these principles to the procedural question before it. The applicants claimed that they were in their office, but their presence at the scene was disputed and required evidence at trial.

Quashing / disputed office-location plea - An assertion of absence from the alleged scene cannot ordinarily be established as fact in a Section 528 BNSS application to quash an FIR by asking the High Court to assess contested evidence. The applicants' claim that they were in their office, and their complaint that the police had ignored it, depended on proof to be assessed at trial. The Court dismissed the application.

Investigation / accused cannot prescribe method - Romila Thapar v. Union of India; (2018) 10 SCC 753, considered Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar, Divine Retreat Centre and the Constitution Bench decision in Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights. The accused cannot select the investigating agency or dictate the method of investigation. Exceptional constitutional intervention upon a demonstrated basis of mala fides or unfairness remains available. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat; (2014) 4 SCC 626, discussed W.N. Chadha, CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi, Sri Bhagwan Samardha and Narender G. Goel on accused participation and hearing before submission of the police report, further investigation and the opportunity to challenge evidence at trial. There is no general right to participation or a hearing before the report, subject to exceptions under the Code. The applicants' request that the police investigate from their viewpoint did not entitle them to an investigation on their own terms.

Court monitoring / no supervision of investigative choices - Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary; (2014) 2 SCC 532, distinguishes judicial monitoring of timely and fair progress from directions controlling the manner of investigation or the investigator's substantive conclusions. Intrusive supervision risks prejudging the trial. Applying that distinction under Section 528 BNSS, the High Court declined to direct the police to pursue the applicants' chosen line of investigation. At most, it could monitor completion in accordance with Section 193(1) BNSS, corresponding in the order to Section 173(1) CrPC, without dictating investigative steps. The judgment made no affirmative monitoring order.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Veerendra Singh Rajpoot and other applicants applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, to quash the FIR in Crime 37/2025 at Madhavganj police station, Gwalior. The FIR invoked Sections 296 and 351(2) of the Bharatiya Nyaya Sanhita, 2023, and Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) of the Scheduled Castes and Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. Their sole stated ground for quashing was that they were in their office, not at the scene. They said that they had complained to the police authorities about their absence, but that the police had not investigated from their point of view. After considering their submission and quoting authorities on alibi and control of investigation, the High Court dismissed the application. It did not determine their physical location.

2. Precedents — Considered : Vijay Pal v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi); 2015:INSC:194; (2015) 4 SCC 749, was quoted on alibi after the trial court in that case had rejected the plea. It incorporated Binay Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, which explains that alibi is not an exception under the Penal Code. It is an evidentiary fact relevant under Section 11 of the Evidence Act because presence elsewhere is inconsistent with presence at the scene of the offence. The prosecution retains the primary burden of establishing presence and participation. Once reliable prosecution evidence satisfactorily establishes presence, an accused who relies on alibi must produce positive, strict evidence of absence with sufficient certainty to exclude presence. Defence evidence strong enough to raise a reasonable doubt may still entitle the accused to that benefit. The High Court relied on this framework to leave the office-location dispute for trial. It did not itself undertake the preceding assessment of whether the prosecution had proved presence.

S.K. Sattar v. State of Maharashtra; 2010:INSC:546; (2010) 8 SCC 430, was quoted on the need to prove alibi by positive evidence sufficient to exclude presence. It also states the distinct proposition that failure to establish alibi cannot replace proof of the prosecution's case beyond reasonable doubt. Its reference to Gurpreet Singh v. State of Haryana concerned deference, in an appeal by special leave, to concurrent findings rejecting an alibi. It was not a finding of fact in the present FIR proceedings. The High Court relied on S.K. Sattar in treating the defence as a matter requiring trial evidence; it did not shift the ultimate prosecution burden.

Romila Thapar v. Union of India; 2018:INSC:912; (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted extensively. It cited Narmada Bai v. State of Gujarat and Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt v. Union of India for the principle that an accused cannot choose the investigating agency or dictate its method. E. Sivakumar v. Union of India and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki addressed the question of hearing the accused when CBI investigation was directed. Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala distinguished the limits on replacing an investigating officer through inherent jurisdiction from constitutional directions upon proof of a mala fide exercise of power. Romila Thapar also quoted the Constitution Bench decision in State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights; (2010) 3 SCC 571, on the sparing and exceptional exercise of the power to transfer investigation to CBI, with due institutional caution. Romila Thapar itself rejected vague assertions of mala fides and declined an assessment of proof reserved for trial, while recognising the available judicial remedies. The High Court applied the principle against dictating investigation to the applicants' demand for their preferred line of inquiry. It was not deciding a developed claim for transfer or constitutional intervention on grounds of mala fides. Other cases, including W.N. Chadha, were also cited within Romila Thapar.

Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat; 2014:INSC:139; (2014) 4 SCC 626, was independently quoted. It discussed Union of India v. W.N. Chadha; 1993 Supp (4) SCC 260, on the usual absence of an accused's right to participate or be heard before investigative action, subject to statutory exceptions and later safeguards at trial. CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi; (1996) 11 SCC 253, rejected an accused's right to decide who investigates and recognised the power of lawful further investigation. Sri Bhagwan Samardha Sreepada Vallabha Venkata Vishwanandha Maharaj v. State of A.P.; (1999) 5 SCC 740, explained further investigation after a report and the absence of a routine requirement to hear the accused beforehand. Narender G. Goel v. State of Maharashtra; (2009) 6 SCC 65, preserved the accused's opportunity to challenge the material gathered when it is tested at trial.

Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary; 2013:INSC:839; (2014) 2 SCC 532, was quoted on the distinction between judicial monitoring and supervision. Monitoring seeks fair and timely progress without directing the collection of evidence or the investigator's opinion. Supervision directs the execution of the investigation and may compromise the subsequent trial. Exceptional monitoring by superior courts under their constitutional powers remains possible. The High Court adopted the distinction in declining to direct the police under Section 528 to investigate the applicants' chosen version.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS was invoked as the High Court's inherent jurisdiction to quash the FIR. It did not authorise the Court to resolve the contested alibi through an evidentiary inquiry of the kind conducted at trial or to dictate the police's method of investigation. Section 193(1) BNSS, paired in the order with Section 173(1) CrPC, was mentioned only in relation to completion of investigation. The quoted pre-BNSS precedents refer to Section 11 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872, as the rule governing the relevance of alibi. CrPC Sections 173(2), 173(8), 202 and 204 appear in their explanations of police reporting, further investigation and the stage at which the accused may participate.

4. Issues : Could the applicants obtain quashing of the FIR by asserting that they were in their office rather than at the alleged scene, or did that disputed alibi require proof and assessment against the prosecution evidence at trial? Did their representations entitle them to require the police to investigate from their chosen viewpoint? Could the High Court under Section 528 BNSS direct particular investigative steps, as distinct from exercising the limited power to monitor progress without supervising the substance of the investigation?

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court treated the applicants' assertion that they were in their office as a disputed question of fact. Vijay Pal, quoting Binay Kumar Singh, places the initial burden of proving presence and participation on the prosecution. Once presence is established through reliable evidence, the accused who asserts alibi bears a demanding burden of producing positive evidence, while sufficiently credible defence evidence may raise a reasonable doubt. S.K. Sattar emphasises both the strict standard for proving alibi and the independent requirement that the prosecution prove guilt beyond reasonable doubt. These assessments require evidence at trial. The disputed defence version could not itself compel quashing at this stage.

On the complaint about investigation, Romila Thapar and Dinubhai establish that an accused generally cannot dictate the agency, method or sequence of investigation and has no routine right to participate or be heard before the police report. The authorities quoted within those decisions also recognise exceptions under the Code, later opportunities to rebut prosecution evidence, and exceptional intervention by superior courts upon an adequate showing of unfairness or mala fides. The applicants alleged only that the police had not adopted their perspective. The Court held that their representation did not entitle them to compel a particular plan of investigation. It did not pronounce them guilty.

Manohar Lal Sharma imposed a related but distinct restraint on the Court. Monitoring permits oversight of lawful, fair and timely progress. Supervision would direct or channel investigative acts and risk influencing the eventual trial court through a police opinion shaped by the superior court. The High Court therefore declined to direct the police under Section 528 BNSS to investigate in the precise manner requested. It said that monitoring could, at most, concern completion under Section 193(1) BNSS/Section 173(1) CrPC. On those limited grounds, it found no basis to exercise its inherent jurisdiction.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 528 BNSS petition. The FIR in Crime 37/2025 remained operative. The applicants obtained neither quashing nor a direction requiring the police to follow their proposed line of investigation. Their factual alibi remained for assessment on evidence at the proper stage.

Veerendra Singh Rajpoot and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 14318/2025, 01/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (971) Prev Next

Headnote :- Related eyewitnesses / careful appraisal - State of U.P. v. Naresh; (2011) 4 SCC 324, holds that kinship alone is no ground to discard otherwise credible testimony and requires careful assessment where false implication is alleged. Salim Sahab v. State of M.P.; (2007) 1 SCC 699, drawing on Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab and Rameshwar v. State of Rajasthan, likewise rejects an automatic presumption that a relative is partisan. Applying those principles, the High Court scrutinised the evidence of Raju's parents, Dilli (PW1) and Shivrani (PW9), who described Veeru's knife assault. Dilli said that he reached the scene after being summoned. The Court found their central account supported by the prompt FIR and medical evidence of the injuries. The judgment reproduced Naresh's rule on injured witnesses, but neither parent was treated as an injured witness in this case. The non-examination of Mahendra and Lallu did not render the parents' consistent evidence inadmissible or inherently unreliable. The investigating officer attributed their nonappearance to fear while two accused were absconding.

Contradictions and omissions / core of prosecution account - Mritunjoy Biswas v. Pranab; (2013) 12 SCC 796, distinguishes ordinary discrepancies from omissions that go to the root of the case and seriously impair a witness's credibility. Naresh also recognises errors arising from observation, memory and shock, while requiring rejection of material improvements that affect the prosecution's case at its core. Applying these tests to the parents' accounts, the High Court found that, despite the alleged variations, their account of Veeru stabbing Raju with a knife remained consistent and was corroborated by the medical evidence.

Medical and ocular evidence / homicidal injury - The medical examination and post-mortem recorded penetrating chest and abdominal wounds, an arm wound, protruding abdominal tissue, internal bleeding and shock following injury to vital organs. The Court found these observations consistent with the parents' account of a knife attack and held that the death was homicidal. It rejected the submission that better initial treatment might have prevented the death, noting the prompt treatment and referral and Raju's death on the way to the referral hospital. Its conclusion rested on the particular medical record.

Seized knife / absence of detectable blood - The recovered iron knife was Article C in the forensic report, Ex.P/22, which recorded no blood stain. The Court held that this negative result did not displace the accepted direct account of Veeru's stabbing, supported by the injuries. PW7 and PW8 denied witnessing the recovery but acknowledged their signatures on Ex.P/12. The Court accepted the seizure on this record. The judgment recorded no positive blood match and made no finding explaining the absence of stains.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Veeru alias Virendra and Komal Patwa were convicted by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Damoh, in Sessions Trial 93/2003 by judgment dated 15 January 2009. Veeru was sentenced under Section 302 IPC to life imprisonment and a fine of Rs 500, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default of payment. Komal received the same sentence under Section 302 read with Section 34. The prosecution proceeded in two trials because Komal and Parvati had initially absconded. The trials were heard together and disposed of by a common judgment. Suman and Parvati were acquitted of their murder/common-intention and associated charges. Veeru was acquitted under Section 341 IPC and Sections 25(1)(ka) and 27 of the Arms Act. The judgment reported no State appeal against those acquittals. Komal died while the appeal was pending, and his appeal abated on 5 September 2024. Veeru's conviction alone therefore remained in issue.

The prosecution alleged an attack on Raju Vishwakarma at Hinoti bus stand at about 4 p.m., following earlier enmity. The narrative initially describes Dilli, Raju's father, as present. In his testimony, however, Dilli said that Rubi summoned him and that, on reaching the scene, he saw Komal wielding scissors and Veeru a knife. Shivrani, Raju's mother, also described their attack and said that Suman and Parvati held Raju's hands. Dilli lodged the FIR at 5 p.m. under Sections 341, 307 and 324 IPC. Raju was unconscious. He was medically examined and referred to Jabalpur Medical College, but died on the journey, after which Section 302 was added. The text's paragraphs 5 and 12 date the incident 14 August 2008, whereas the investigating officer gives 14 August 2002, the post-mortem is dated 15 August 2002, and the crime and trial numbers are from 2002/2003.

The prosecution examined 13 witnesses. Dilli (PW1) and Shivrani (PW9) described knife injuries to the chest, abdomen and arms, with abdominal contents protruding. The medical witnesses recorded serious incised or stab wounds, internal bleeding and death from shock due to injury to vital organs. The investigating officer (PW13) said that he seized Veeru's knife under Ex.P/12. PW7 and PW8 denied witnessing the recovery but acknowledged their signatures on the seizure memo. The forensic examination found no blood stain on the knife, Article C. PW3 turned hostile, while PW4 and PW5 were not established to be eyewitnesses. Mahendra and Lallu, who were named as eyewitnesses, did not testify. The officer attributed their absence to fear arising from the absconding accused. He also referred to an account recorded on loose paper, which was not part of the prosecution file or case diary.

Veeru sought to have his conviction set aside. He challenged the parents' credibility as interested witnesses and relied on alleged inconsistencies, the non-examination of independent eyewitnesses, the negative knife test and doubts about seizure. He also questioned proof of motive and causation in view of the treatment given, and sought parity with the acquitted co-accused. The State relied on the direct attribution of the assault to him, the prompt FIR, recovery of the weapon and medical corroboration. The High Court was deciding the appeal against the murder conviction, not an appeal against the acquittals.

2. Precedents — Considered : Mritunjoy Biswas v. Pranab; 2013:INSC:525; (2013) 12 SCC 796, was quoted on the test of trustworthiness. Ordinary discrepancies and insignificant embellishments do not undermine the core of the prosecution's case. An omission that goes to the root of the case and creates serious doubt about a witness's truthfulness or credibility may do so. The Court applied Mritunjoy Biswas to the consistent account that Veeru used a knife, finding the alleged peripheral contradictions insufficient to discredit it.

State of U.P. v. Naresh; 2011:INSC:189; (2011) 4 SCC 324, was quoted on three points: injured witnesses, related witnesses and discrepancies. The related-witness passage states that a familial link alone does not undermine credibility. Where false implication is alleged, however, the evidence of related witnesses must be carefully scrutinised for cogency and credibility. The passage on discrepancies distinguishes ordinary lapses of memory or observation from material contradictions and improvements that impair the core of the prosecution's case. The High Court relied on the related-witness and discrepancy principles in accepting the parents' account.

Salim Sahab v. State of M.P.; (2007) 1 SCC 699, was quoted to reject the inference that a close relative must be a partisan witness. It reproduced the reasoning in Dalip Singh v. State of Punjab; (1953) 2 SCC 36, which rejected a supposed rule requiring corroboration merely because eyewitnesses were women or related to the deceased. It also referred to Rameshwar v. State of Rajasthan; 1951 SCC 1213, which had earlier rejected that fallacy. The High Court adopted the related-witness principle, scrutinised the evidence closely and relied on the medical support for PW1 and PW9. It did not impose a legal requirement of corroboration in every case involving related witnesses.

3. Statutes considered : Section 302 IPC governed Veeru's murder conviction and life sentence. Section 302 read with Section 34 governed Komal's conviction, but his appeal had abated. Common intention was not separately reconsidered for Veeru. Section 341 IPC and Sections 25(1)(ka) and 27 of the Arms Act were among the charges on which acquittals were recorded at trial. The trial court regarded the knife as not prohibited and found that no firearm or explosive had been used for the purposes of Section 27. The State did not challenge those findings. Sections 307 and 324 IPC were among the original FIR offences before Raju's death led to the addition of Section 302. The accused were examined under Section 313 CrPC at trial.

4. Issues : Could the parents' direct testimony sustain Veeru's conviction despite their relationship with Raju, the alleged contradictions, the lack of support from PW3–PW5 and the non-examination of Mahendra and Lallu? Did the medical record establish homicidal injury consistent with the account of knife blows, or did the allegedly deficient initial treatment undermine causation? Did the absence of blood on the seized knife and the seizure witnesses' denials create reasonable doubt? Did the acquittal of Suman and Parvati require Veeru's acquittal despite the different roles attributed to them?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found that the FIR was prompt: the attack was said to have occurred at about 4 p.m., and the report was registered at 5 p.m. Dilli and Shivrani were related to Raju. Naresh and Salim Sahab, with Dalip Singh and Rameshwar, nevertheless preclude automatic rejection of their evidence on that ground. The authorities require scrutiny of credibility, which the Court undertook when assessing the parents' descriptions of Veeru striking Raju with a knife. Both identified him as an assailant, identified his weapon and described injuries subsequently recorded in the clinical and post-mortem findings.

Mritunjoy Biswas and Naresh require the Court to consider whether an omission or contradiction affects the prosecution's case at its core. The fact that PW3 turned hostile and that PW4 and PW5 were not established to be eyewitnesses did not refute the account personally given by PW1 and PW9. The investigating officer explained that Mahendra and Lallu had not testified because they were afraid while two accused remained at large. The High Court found the parents' available evidence sufficient despite the non-examination of those witnesses.

The examining doctors described an unconscious patient with an abdominal wound and protruding tissue, a chest wound and an arm wound. The post-mortem recorded penetrating chest and abdominal injuries, abdominal bleeding and damage to vital tissue. Death was attributed to shock from injury to vital organs. The Court found that the death was homicidal and that the injuries were consistent with the direct account of blows with a sharp weapon. It rejected the submission that Raju might have survived with better initial treatment: prompt primary care and referral were recorded, he died on the way to the referral hospital, and the record disclosed no significant treatment delay. The Court also considered the earlier enmity mentioned in the account and did not regard the challenge to motive as displacing the direct evidence.

The police seized an iron knife attributed to Veeru under Ex.P/12. Although PW7 and PW8 denied that the recovery took place in their presence, they acknowledged their signatures on the seizure memo. The Court concluded that the recovery was proved. Ex.P/22 recorded no blood on Article C. On these facts, the Court held that the negative result did not exculpate Veeru because it accepted the direct evidence of his knife assault, corroborated by the medical evidence.

Suman and Parvati were described as holding Raju's hands, but neither was alleged to have inflicted an injury. The trial court acquitted them. Veeru, by contrast, was specifically identified as inflicting knife wounds, so their acquittal did not entitle him to the same result. Komal's appeal had abated on his death. The Court affirmed Veeru's individual liability under Section 302 on the evidence it accepted, without reopening the acquittals or the Arms Act findings, which the State had not challenged.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. Veeru's conviction under Section 302 IPC and life sentence, including the trial court's fine and default term, stood affirmed. The High Court noted the jail report dated 26 August 2024, which stated that he had completed 15 years, eight months and 13 days in custody and had been granted bail by order dated 9 August 2018. It cancelled his bail bonds and directed him to surrender forthwith to serve the remainder of the life sentence. If he failed to surrender, the concerned court was to issue a non-bailable warrant. The judgment and trial record were to be sent to the trial court for compliance, and a copy of the judgment was also to be sent to the jail authorities. Komal's appeal had already abated on 5 September 2024.

Veeru and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 208/2009, 25/10/2024, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (972) Prev Next

Headnote :- Alibi / proof of absence at relevant time - Shaikh Sattar v. State of Maharashtra; (2010) 8 SCC 430, requires an accused who raises an alibi to prove absence by positive evidence with sufficient certainty to exclude presence at the crime scene. In the quoted decision, the accused had failed even to make absence probable. It also cited Gurpreet Singh on concurrent findings rejecting an alibi. The High Court described the plea as requiring cogent proof, rather than proof merely on a preponderance of probabilities. Vetal Singh Gurjar asserted that footage from his home CCTV showed that he was elsewhere when the alleged assault and demand for money occurred at the plot.

CCTV / source time and evidentiary integrity - The time displayed on a household DVR can be set manually. An incorrect setting could make footage appear to have been recorded at a different time. The High Court held that the applicant's CCTV footage was not conclusive by itself and had to be proved in accordance with law before it could establish his alibi. The footage therefore did not provide a conclusive basis for quashing the FIR.

Quashing / pending civil suit and alleged retaliation - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar; (2008) 12 SCC 346, applies the principles in R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal. It treats alleged malice on the informant's part as secondary where a cognizable offence is disclosed. It also precludes adjudication of the reliability of evidence at the Section 482 stage, while preserving the power to quash where the allegations disclose no offence on their face or the proceedings clearly constitute an abuse of process. XYZ, S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh address the corresponding limits on a roving inquiry. These authorities include the limited exception allowing consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public defence document or one whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha were cited to similar effect. The FIR specifically alleged a demand of Rs

2 lakh for a liquor party, blows, abuse and death threats while the complainant was working on a plot. The pending property suit and claimed CCTV alibi did not displace the allegations under IPC Sections 327, 323, 294 and 506, which disclosed a cognizable offence on their face. The Court dismissed the quashing application without determining the truth of the assault, money demand or video footage.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vetal Singh Gurjar applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR in Crime 20/2024 at Sirol, Gwalior, registered under IPC Sections 323, 294, 506 and 327. The informant alleged that he was working on a plot opposite Narayan School at about 11 a.m. on 25 January 2024 when Gurjar ordered him to stop work, abused him and demanded Rs 2 lakh for a liquor party. When the informant refused, Gurjar allegedly kicked and punched him. The informant's father, Sanjeev Goyal, and Rahul Goyal allegedly intervened. While leaving, the accused reportedly threatened to kill them if work resumed. These were allegations in the FIR, not judicially established events.

Gurjar alleged that the accusation was false. He said that a civil suit concerning the plot was pending between the parties and that the FIR had been lodged maliciously. He also asserted that he was at home at the time of the incident and relied on footage from a CCTV camera installed there. The High Court had to decide whether the video relied on by the accused and the property dispute justified quashing the FIR, despite allegations disclosing a cognizable offence, without trying the disputed facts.

2. Precedents — Considered : Shaikh Sattar v. State of Maharashtra; (2010) 8 SCC 430, was quoted on the accused's burden of proving an alibi by positive evidence with sufficient certainty to exclude presence at the relevant place and time. In that case, the accused had not even made his absence probable. The quotation refers to Gurpreet Singh v. State of Haryana on a separate appellate point: a concurrent finding of fact rejecting an alibi normally cannot be reopened in an appeal by special leave as though no factual determination had been made. The High Court applied the burden governing the alibi plea but did not determine the applicant's presence or the authenticity of his video as a trial court would. The prosecution still bears the burden of proving the charged offences; the alibi standard concerns the accused's affirmative plea.

Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar; (2008) 12 SCC 346, was quoted at length. It explains that the power under Section 482 must be exercised sparingly to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process or secure the ends of justice. It recounts the categories in R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab: a legal bar, allegations that disclose no offence on their face, and absence of legal evidence. It also invokes the illustrative categories in Bhajan Lal, including a manifestly malicious proceeding. It distinguishes an absence of legal evidence from an assessment of whether admissible evidence is sufficient for conviction. Where a cognizable offence is alleged, malice on the informant's part ordinarily becomes secondary. The authorities cited within Renu Kumari, including Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma, Rupan Deol Bajaj, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Satvinder Kaur, Rajesh Bajaj, M. Devendrappa, Awadh Kishore Gupta and Saroj Kumar Sahoo, were not individually applied to the facts concerning the plot. The High Court considered the allegations at face value and rejected alleged malice arising from civil litigation as an independent basis for quashing.

XYZ v. State of Gujarat; (2019) 10 SCC 337, disapproved a roving inquiry before the investigation was complete and reliance on a disputed document to infer consent. State of T.N. v. S. Martin; (2018) 5 SCC 718, rejected a premature assessment of the merits. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand; (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterates Bhajan Lal's caution against testing the reliability of FIR allegations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar; (2019) 13 SCC 350, states a narrow exception: in an appropriate case, a defence document may be considered if it is a public document or its veracity is not disputed by the complainant. It draws on Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. In the present case, the High Court held that the household CCTV footage was not conclusive without proof in accordance with law. Gourishetty Mahesh; (2010) 11 SCC 226, balances protection against abuse of process with the need to avoid bringing a prosecution to an end without a full inquiry. M. Srikanth; (2019) 10 SCC 373, reiterates the test of whether the allegations, taken at face value, disclose an offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna; (2019) 10 SCC 686, prohibits findings on disputed defence material. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, CRA 709/2021, 30 June 2021, rejects detailed scrutiny of evidence as at trial and the requirement that an FIR contain an encyclopedic account. Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S.

Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha were cited to similar effect. The High Court applied the prohibition against a mini-trial after finding that the allegations disclosed cognizable offences on their face.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to quash the FIR. The Court considered whether the uncontroverted allegations prima facie disclosed an offence and whether the accused's defences could be decided without taking evidence. IPC Sections 323 (hurt), 294 (abuse/obscenity), 506 (criminal intimidation) and 327 (hurt connected with the alleged demand for money) were the provisions under which the case was registered. The pending civil suit formed part of the background; it did not constitute an express statutory bar to prosecution.

4. Issues : Did the accused's home CCTV conclusively establish an alibi at the precise time of the alleged incident, justifying quashing under Section 482 without awaiting proof of the device's time setting, the footage's authenticity and identity? Were the pending civil property suit and alleged malice sufficient to characterise the FIR as a false, retaliatory use of process, despite specific allegations of a demand for money, assault, abuse and threats? Did the uncontroverted FIR allegations disclose a cognizable offence under the registered IPC provisions?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court first considered the affirmative plea of alibi. Shaikh Sattar requires the accused to produce positive evidence capable of excluding presence at the alleged scene at the relevant time. A DVR's displayed date and time can be set manually. Footage bearing the date and time of the incident is therefore not automatically conclusive; the recording and its timing must be proved. The Court accordingly declined to determine the alibi or the video's reliability in the quashing proceedings. The stricter standard governing proof of an alibi does not relieve the prosecution of its own burden at a full criminal trial.

The pending property suit could be a source of conflict between the parties. Under Renu Kumari, however, allegations of malice on the informant's part do not by themselves justify quashing where a cognizable offence is disclosed. The FIR specified the acts, place, demand for money, blows, intervention and threat. The Supreme Court authorities permit exceptional quashing where there is a legal bar, the accepted allegations disclose no offence or the proceedings manifestly abuse the process. They do not permit a premature trial of competing evidence. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui recognises the limited exception for public defence documents or documents whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. The High Court treated the home video as non-conclusive unless proved in accordance with law. It held that the allegations, accepted for this limited inquiry, disclosed a cognizable offence and that their truth could not be tested through a mini-trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The FIR in Crime 20/2024 under IPC Sections 323, 294, 506 and 327 remained in place. No costs or further conditions were stated.

Vetal Singh Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 8475/2024, 19/11/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (973) Prev Next

Headnote :- Post-charge discharge / subordinate court review - Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal held that a subordinate criminal court, which has neither review nor inherent power, cannot recall its order taking cognizance. It overruled K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala on that point and identified relief under Section 482 before the High Court as a possible remedy in an appropriate case. Here, charges under IPC Sections 471 and 120-B had already been framed. The trial court refused the applicant's fresh request, described as discharge or acquittal under CrPC Section 232, based on a later handwriting report. The High Court found no error in refusing to reopen that stage. It then separately considered, but rejected, quashing in exercise of its inherent power.

Handwriting expert / cautious evaluation, not conclusive exoneration - Padum Kumar v. State of U.P.; (2020) 3 SCC 35, discussed the caution expressed in S. Gopal Reddy and Magan Bihari Lal against conviction based solely on handwriting opinion without independent support. It also quoted Murari Lal; (1980) 1 SCC 704, on the relevance of expert opinion under Section 45 of the Evidence Act, the fallibility of expertise, and the need to examine the expert's reasons and the other evidence. That decision rejects an inflexible requirement of corroboration or initial suspicion in every case. The High Court treated the report stating that the questioned gift-deed signature and handwriting were not the applicant's as non-conclusive; it did not treat the report as requiring automatic acquittal. The applicant had neither supplied the charge sheet to show the remaining prosecution material nor challenged the order framing charges. The Court therefore could not determine that the entire case lacked evidence. It recognised that the defence could rely on a favourable prosecution document even if it had not been exhibited; the applicant said that the prosecution had filed the expert report. The report's existence did not, by itself, require termination of the prosecution.

Quashing / incomplete record - The original FIR named Chander Patidar and Rakeeb Khan in connection with an alleged forged property transfer. Chander allegedly said that the applicant had executed the gift deed. The applicant denied doing so, and the handwriting report was received after charges had been framed. Even assuming that the opinion favourable to the defence formed part of the prosecution material, its weight in relation to the other evidence required assessment at trial. The Section 482 application was dismissed. The Court did not declare that the applicant had signed the document or that expert evidence could never be decisive on a complete evidentiary record.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vijay Kant Shrivastav sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of the charge sheet and the ensuing proceedings in Crime 414/2020 at Ratibad, Bhopal. The FIR arose from Yogendra Maheshwari's allegations against Chander Patidar and Rakeeb Khan of cheating, forgery, use of forged material, conspiracy and abetment under IPC Sections 420, 467, 468, 471, 120-B and 109. Chander allegedly stated that the property had been transferred to him under a gift deed executed by Shrivastav. Shrivastav denied executing the deed and asserted that he had been falsely arrested. The police sent the disputed handwriting and signatures, together with admitted samples, to an expert. They filed the charge sheet before the report was received. In September 2021, he unsuccessfully sought an adjournment until receipt of the expert report. In January 2022, he applied for discharge under CrPC Section 227, but that application was rejected. On 9 November 2022, the trial court framed charges against him only under IPC Sections 471 and 120-B. The High Court emphasised that he had not challenged that charge-framing order in the present proceedings.

The handwriting expert later opined that the disputed writing and signature were not Shrivastav's. He then sought discharge or acquittal on the basis of that report. On 17 February 2023, the trial court rejected his application, holding that there was no provision to discharge or acquit him under Section 232 in the manner sought after charges had been framed. It continued the examination of witnesses. Before the High Court, he argued that there was no reason for him to undergo trial once the expert had exonerated him. The State responded that the stage of framing charges had already passed. The reported record contained neither the charge sheet nor a description of the other incriminating evidence collected.

2. Precedents — Considered : Adalat Prasad v. Rooplal Jindal; AIR 2004 SC 4674, held that after taking cognizance, a subordinate criminal court has neither review nor inherent power to recall that order. It overruled K.M. Mathew v. State of Kerala; AIR 1992 SC 2206, and identified recourse to the High Court under Section 482 as the potential remedy. The High Court applied that rule against recall to the present request made after charges had been framed and upheld the trial court's refusal. It independently examined the asserted ground for quashing under Section 482.

Padum Kumar v. State of U.P.; (2020) 3 SCC 35, was quoted in detail on handwriting expert evidence. Its discussion of S. Gopal Reddy v. State of A.P.; (1996) 4 SCC 596, and Magan Bihari Lal v. State of Punjab; (1977) 2 SCC 210, warns of the danger of convicting an accused solely on handwriting opinion without reliable supporting evidence. The authorities quoted within that discussion include Ram Chandra, Ishwari Prasad Misra, Shashi Kumar Banerjee and Fakhruddin. They address the limited conclusiveness of expert opinion and the desirability of direct or circumstantial support. Padum Kumar also reproduces Murari Lal v. State of M.P.; (1980) 1 SCC 704. That decision explains that Section 45 of the Evidence Act makes the opinion of a person skilled in handwriting identification relevant, that experts supply criteria to enable an independent judicial judgment, and that the court should test the expert's reasons against the full record. Murari Lal rejects treating experts as invariably suspect or insisting on corroboration as an unbending rule; the degree of corroboration depends on the facts. The High Court applied caution in the converse situation: a negative signature opinion favourable to the defence was neither conclusive proof of innocence nor sufficient, by itself, to terminate the prosecution. The High Court described such opinion as a weak type of evidence. The Murari Lal passage it quoted expressly qualifies the approach according to the facts of the case, rather than imposing an invariable corroboration rule.

The Court recognised the principle that an accused may rely on a favourable prosecution document even if it has not been exhibited. It nevertheless found the record insufficient to determine that the expert opinion displaced all other evidence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked before the High Court to quash the charge sheet and proceedings despite the trial court's refusal. Section 227 CrPC governed the earlier discharge application, rejected before charges were framed; the High Court did not reopen that order. Section 232 CrPC was invoked in the later application described as one for discharge or acquittal. The trial court rejected that premature course while witnesses were still being examined. The reported judgment uses the rule in Adalat Prasad concerning recall of cognizance to emphasise the limits on review by subordinate criminal courts. IPC Sections 471 and 120-B were the charges actually framed against Shrivastav. Sections 420, 467, 468 and 109 appeared in the FIR allegations against other persons and in the investigation's background. The High Court did not state that those provisions remained charges against him. Section 45 of the Evidence Act, discussed through Murari Lal, concerns the relevance of handwriting opinion, rather than its conclusiveness.

4. Issues : Whether, after framing charges and beginning witness examination, the trial court had to grant a fresh application described as one for discharge or acquittal because a handwriting report favourable to the accused had been received; and whether its refusal warranted intervention under Section 482. Separately, whether the negative signature and handwriting opinion was conclusive enough to quash the charge sheet and prosecution under IPC Sections 471 and 120-B, without the charge sheet or a record showing the absence of other evidence. The permissible use of the unexhibited expert material said to have been filed by the prosecution was raised, but its precise ultimate weight was left for assessment on the evidence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court held that the trial court had not erred in refusing, on the later application, to revisit the stage of framing charges that had already been completed. Adalat Prasad rejected the power of a subordinate court simply to recall cognizance, leaving recourse to the High Court under Section 482 where justified. The High Court accordingly considered that separate question of inherent-power relief. It neither declared the expert report inadmissible nor rewrote the charges. It noted that Shrivastav had not challenged the November 2022 charge-framing order itself.

A handwriting comparison is opinion evidence relevant under Section 45, rather than a judicial verdict. Padum Kumar, S. Gopal Reddy and Magan Bihari Lal caution against conviction based on unsupported handwriting opinion. The quoted Murari Lal passage requires examination of the expert's reasons and all other direct and circumstantial evidence, and rejects an invariable presumption of suspicion or requirement of corroboration. A report stating that the questioned marks were not Shrivastav's therefore favoured the defence but did not, by itself, finally exonerate him. The High Court could not assess it against the whole prosecution case because the applicant had not supplied the charge sheet or shown that there was no other evidence. It recognised the principle that the defence may rely on a favourable prosecution document even if it has not been exhibited. The applicant asserted that the prosecution itself had filed the expert report. Lack of exhibition alone did not bar reliance on a favourable prosecution document. The Court nevertheless declined to infer from this report alone that no material remained for trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The order of 17 February 2023 refusing discharge or acquittal after charges had been framed, and the ongoing trial under IPC Sections 471 and 120-B, remained undisturbed. The expert report could be relied on and evaluated in accordance with lawful trial procedure. Neither guilt nor acquittal was declared, and no costs or remand were ordered.

Vijay Kant Shrivastav v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 40620/2023, 05/10/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (974) Prev Next

Headnote :- Arrest / non-mandatory custody in offence punishable below seven years - Arnesh Kumar v. State of Bihar; (2014) 8 SCC 273, requires police officers to assess the necessity of arrest under Section 41 CrPC instead of arresting automatically. When making an arrest, they must complete the statutory checklist and record their reasons. They must inform the Magistrate of a decision not to arrest and serve a Section 41-A notice within the prescribed period, subject to an extension supported by recorded reasons. Before authorising detention, the Magistrate must scrutinise the material and record reasons. Noncompliance may expose police officers to departmental action and contempt proceedings. A Magistrate who authorises detention without recording reasons may also face action. Md. Asfak Alam v. State of Jharkhand, CRA 2207/2023, 31 July 2023, required DGPs and High Courts to issue instructions for strict implementation. In a pending Section 138 NI Act case, the complainant sought to compel the accused's arrest after proceedings under Section 174-A IPC concerning his nonappearance. His counsel conceded that arrest for an offence punishable with less than seven years' imprisonment was not mandatory. The High Court held that the CJM had not erred in refusing to direct arrest and dismissed the Article 226 petition.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vijay Kumar Badal was the complainant in a prosecution under Section 138 of the NI Act, SC NIA 86/2021, against respondent 5. He said that the accused was not attending the Magistrate's court despite a permanent non-bailable warrant. He applied under CrPC Sections 82 and 83 for proclamation and attachment, and sought registration of an offence under IPC Section 174-A for nonappearance. According to the reported order, the trial court directed Omti police station to register the Section 174-A offence and initiate the proclamation and attachment proceedings. Badal then sought a direction to arrest respondent 5. The Chief Judicial Magistrate rejected that application on 30 January 2024, holding that arrest was not mandatory for an offence under Section 174-A punishable with less than seven years' imprisonment. Badal invoked Article 226 to challenge the order. He also sought directions to State officials to produce respondent 5 in the NI Act trial and secure his presence under the warrant.

Counsel for Badal fairly conceded that Arnesh Kumar requires an assessment of the necessity for arrest under Section 41 in an offence punishable with less than seven years' imprisonment, and does not require automatic police arrest. The reported order then quoted the Supreme Court's operational directions and a later decision requiring implementing instructions, and declined to compel arrest.

2. Precedents — Considered : Arnesh Kumar v. State of Bihar; (2014) 8 SCC 273, was the controlling Supreme Court authority, expressly accepted by the petitioner and applied by the Court. Paragraph 11, quoted in the order, seeks to prevent unnecessary arrests and mechanical authorisation of detention by Magistrates. It directs the police to assess necessity under Section 41(1)(b)(ii) CrPC, complete a checklist, and submit the reasons and materials supporting an arrest. A decision not to arrest must be sent to the Magistrate within two weeks, subject to an extension granted by the District SP for recorded reasons. A notice to appear under Section 41-A must be served within two weeks, again subject to an extension supported by written reasons. The Magistrate must examine the material and record satisfaction before authorising detention. Police noncompliance may attract departmental action and contempt proceedings; a Magistrate's authorisation without reasons may attract departmental action. Although Arnesh Kumar arose in the context of Section 498-A, the High Court applied its necessity rule to the Section 174-A offence punishable with less than seven years' imprisonment.

Md. Asfak Alam v. State of Jharkhand and Another, Criminal Appeal 2207/2023, decided on 31 July 2023, was quoted for its directions to State DGPs and High Courts to issue instructions, circulars and guidance for strict implementation of the above arrest safeguards by the lower courts and police. The instructions and circulars were to be issued within eight weeks of the Supreme Court's order.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was invoked to challenge the CJM's refusal and seek directions to produce the accused. Section 138 of the Negotiable Instruments Act identified the pending cheque complaint; its ingredients or merits were not discussed. IPC Section 174-A concerned the nonappearance offence for which the trial court had directed registration. The request for arrest was rejected because an offence punishable with less than seven years' imprisonment does not make arrest mandatory. Section 41 CrPC, together with Section 41-A in the Arnesh Kumar directions, governs the police's assessment of the necessity for arrest and the notice to appear.

4. Issues : Whether the complainant in a pending NI Act case could obtain a direction under Article 226 compelling the police to arrest or produce the absent accused merely because Section 174-A proceedings had been ordered and a non-bailable warrant was said to remain outstanding. More specifically, whether the Magistrate erred in treating arrest in the Section 174-A case, punishable with less than seven years' imprisonment, as discretionary and subject to the necessity requirements of Section 41, rather than mandatory.

5. Ratio / Findings : The decisive premise was conceded: an offence punishable with less than seven years' imprisonment does not, by itself, require automatic arrest. The police must apply Section 41 as construed in Arnesh Kumar. The Supreme Court's requirements concerning a checklist, reasons, notice and judicial scrutiny seek to prevent needless custody while preserving lawful arrest when the statutory test is met. Md. Asfak Alam required instructions for strict implementation by the institutions concerned. Applying these principles to Badal's request for arrest, the High Court held that the CJM had committed no legal error in refusing it.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. The CJM's order of 30 January 2024 rejecting the application for a direction to arrest respondent 5 remained undisturbed. No mandamus was issued to the police or trial court to produce him. The NI Act complaint and the reported proclamation and Section 174-A proceedings were neither quashed nor concluded, and were not finally evaluated. No costs or further directions were made.

Vijay Kumar Badal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 19550/2024, 24/08/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (975) Prev Next

Headnote :- Closure report / police duty to submit and magistrate's control - The police cannot retain a prepared final or closure report at the station because notice has not yet been served on the complainant. Jakia Nasim Ahesan v. State of Gujarat; (2011) 12 SCC 302, relying on Bhagwant Singh v. Commissioner of Police, explains the sequence: after a report under Section 173(2)(i) reaches the Magistrate, the court must notify and hear the informant before declining cognizance or dropping all or part of the case. That requirement of judicial notice did not justify the Kailaras police withholding their prepared report. The Magistrate had a photocopy, the status report and the earlier High Court directions. He should have required the report to be produced and considered it together with the private complaint. The dismissal of the complaint, without addressing the reported dying declaration or the report's actual filing status, was set aside.

Revision hearing / suspect's procedural protection - Manharibhai Muljibhai Kakadia v. Shaileshbhai Mohanbhai Patel; (2012) 10 SCC 517, distinguishes two stages. A suspect has no right to be heard before process is issued in a complaint inquiry under Section 200/202. Section 401(2), however, gives a right of hearing when the complainant seeks revision of a Section 203 dismissal and reversal may revive the proceedings. The High Court expressly recognised that rule. It nevertheless proceeded without notice to proposed accused respondents 2–6, stating that the present correction under Section 482 concerned only the Magistrate's disregard of earlier directions and procedure, while leaving the merits open on remand. That stated reason for dispensing with notice is confined to this procedural setting; it does not abrogate the Supreme Court's safeguard in revision.

Private complaint / protest petition and police obstruction - Earlier orders had permitted Vijay Singh to object to what was represented to be a filed closure report or to file a private complaint. A later order directed consideration of the report and complaint together, with the complaint capable of being treated as a protest petition. Contrary to the representations that the report had been filed, the police had merely prepared it. Their retention of the report, while the complainant was already before the Magistrate, frustrated the procedure directed by the Court. The High Court required filing within three days, a fresh decision within two months and an ADGP inquiry within one month into the responsible police officers. The Magistrate was not to be influenced by the observations in his earlier dismissal. The complaint was restored for consideration according to law, without being allowed on the merits.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vijay Singh applied under Section 482 CrPC to challenge the order dated 22 October 2019 by which the Judicial Magistrate First Class, Sabalgarh, dismissed his private complaint. He alleged that, on 7 October 2015, a car intercepted him and his father, Ramroop Tyagi, as they returned from court. Respondents 2–6 got out, and Dwarika fired at his father. FIR Crime 340/2015 at Kailaras initially invoked IPC Sections 147 and 307 and Arms Act Sections 25/27. After Ramroop died on 8 October, Section 302 was added. Singh alleged that political pressure had distorted the investigation.

In WP 365/2016, the State represented that a closure report had been filed. On that basis, the High Court directed Singh on 4 November 2016 to object to the final report or pursue a private complaint. The Court recorded that the police had prepared a closure report dated 24 July 2016 but had never filed it in court. Singh filed a private complaint on 26 November 2016 under IPC Sections 302, 347 and 149 and Arms Act Sections 25/27, attaching a photocopy of the prepared report and the earlier order. His statement and that of a witness were recorded in January 2017. The Magistrate repeatedly adjourned the matter for a police report and further action during 2017–19. A police status report was received on 11 April 2019. Its text, reproduced in the order, expressly stated that a closure report had been prepared, referring to cross-cases, earlier hostility and an alleged lack of support for the murder accusation.

On 9 September 2019, in MCRC 36918/2019, the High Court again proceeded on the mistaken impression that the closure report was already pending. It directed the Magistrate, on an application, to consider the final report and complaint together, treating the latter as a possible protest petition to avoid inconsistent decisions, preferably within two months. That order was filed before the Magistrate. Nevertheless, on 22 October 2019, he dismissed the complaint, referring to another case against the complainant's side, prior enmity and the prepared closure report. He neither required the report to be filed nor reconciled his course with the High Court's orders. Respondents 2–6 had withdrawn their own Section 482 challenge to the FIR on 8 November 2016; that withdrawal did not decide the merits. In the present application, the High Court called for the lower court record and police diary. The JMFC's letter of 22 November, reproduced in the order, was read as explaining that the police had not filed the closure report because the complainant had not appeared or been served in connection with its consideration. He was, however, pursuing a complaint before that same court.

2. Precedents — Considered : Manharibhai Muljibhai Kakadia v. Shaileshbhai Mohanbhai Patel; (2012) 10 SCC 517, was quoted at length on a suspect's right of hearing. Before process is issued in a complaint inquiry under Sections 200–204 CrPC, a suspect cannot demand participation in the Magistrate's decision whether to proceed. Section 401(2), however, expressly protects an accused or 'other person', including an identified suspect before process, when the complainant challenges a Section 203 dismissal in revision. Reversal may prejudice the suspect by reviving terminated proceedings, so an opportunity to defend the dismissal must be given. The High Court acknowledged this binding distinction. It then stated that notice was not being issued to respondents 2–6 in the present case because it was correcting the Magistrate's failure to comply with earlier directions and statutory procedure, without deciding whether their alleged conduct constituted an offence.

Jakia Nasim Ahesan v. State of Gujarat; (2011) 12 SCC 302, was quoted on the sequence for a final report and its reliance on Bhagwant Singh v. Commissioner of Police. A report under Section 173(2)(i) proposing that there is no sufficient ground to proceed must first be placed before the Magistrate. Before deciding against cognizance or against proceeding with named persons, the Magistrate must give the informant notice and an opportunity to be heard on the report, with the materials supplied as required by law. The High Court applied that sequence in rejecting the police's explanation for retaining the report. A requirement of judicial notice at a later stage could not justify the investigating police withholding the report, particularly when the complainant was already before the court.

The order also reproduced the Court's earlier directions in WP 365/2016 and MCRC 36918/2019. They form part of the binding procedural history of this dispute, rather than independent Supreme Court holdings. It referred to Virendra Singh v. State of M.P., MCRC 37389/2019, in which the Director General's affidavit addressed a wider backlog of final and enquiry reports that had not been filed.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to correct the Magistrate's dismissal and secure consideration of the report and complaint according to law. Section 173(2)(i) CrPC concerns forwarding the police final report to the Magistrate. The Court treated retention of a prepared closure report by the police as contrary to that procedure. Sections 200, 202, 203 and 204 govern examination on a private complaint, inquiry, dismissal and issue of process. Manharibhai explains the suspect's participation and the termination of proceedings when a complaint is dismissed. Section 401(2) requires an accused or other person to be heard before a prejudicial revisional order; the Court acknowledged that distinct revision setting. The alleged IPC homicide, unlawful assembly and related offences, and Arms Act Sections 25/27, formed the background to the complaint and FIR. Their ingredients were not finally determined. The order did not convict anyone, decide that cognizance must be taken or make a binding assessment of the dying declaration.

4. Issues : (i) Could Kailaras police retain a prepared closure report at the station because notice had not been served on the complainant, when two earlier High Court orders and the pending private complaint assumed or required judicial consideration of the report? (ii) Did the Magistrate err in dismissing the complaint despite the prepared report, status statement, earlier directions and alleged dying declaration, without obtaining the report and following the procedure directed by the High Court? (iii) Was notice to the named proposed accused required before this limited procedural remand under Section 482, in light of the Supreme Court's rule for a complainant's revision against a Section 203 dismissal? The question whether the alleged homicide and accusations against the named respondents were proved remained entirely open.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court first verified a basic matter that had been overlooked in the earlier proceedings. Despite counsel's earlier representation and the Magistrate's use of a copy, the original closure report had never been presented to the court. The police had prepared it, as the status report confirmed, but retained it at the station. The explanation that notice had not been served on the complainant was untenable. Jakia Nasim Ahesan and Bhagwant Singh place the notice requirement at the Magistrate's consideration of the submitted final report, before dropping all or part of the proceeding. The complainant was already pursuing a complaint before that very court, which also undermined any claimed practical impediment. The Court found that the police had deliberately acted to benefit the proposed accused and directed an inquiry by the superior police authority, leaving the identification of the responsible officers to that inquiry.

The Magistrate had the photocopy, police status report and earlier High Court orders. He nevertheless neither required the police to file the final report nor considered the complaint in accordance with the directed protest-petition procedure. His reference to enmity was insufficient: hostility could operate either way, and he had not addressed the alleged dying declaration. The High Court treated the dismissal as a breach of procedure. It did not find the proposed accused guilty or hold that the closure recommendation was false on the merits. It set aside the dismissal and required a fresh decision according to law, taking account of the actual report, the earlier orders and the order permitting withdrawal of the accused's petition, without being influenced by the former dismissal's observations.

The Court acknowledged Manharibhai's express rule under Section 401(2) requiring a hearing in a complainant's revision against a Section 203 dismissal, since revival could prejudice a suspect. It nevertheless dispensed with notice to proposed accused respondents 2–6 here. It stated that it was correcting blatant noncompliance without deciding the merits and that further notice would delay the proceedings. The original allegation, the police grounds for closure and the status of the dying declaration remained for the Magistrate to assess according to law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application. It set aside the JMFC's order dated 22 October 2019 dismissing the complaint and remanded the matter for fresh consideration in light of WP 365/2016, MCRC 36918/2019 and MCRC 5544/2016, without being influenced by the earlier dismissal's observations. Kailaras police were directed to file the final report within three days, and the JMFC was to complete the exercise within two months. Singh was to appear before the court below on 6 December 2019. The Additional Director General of Police, Chambal Range, was directed to identify within one month the officers responsible for unauthorised retention and report the proposed action to the Principal Registrar. Copies were to be sent promptly, and the prosecutor was to inform the ADGP. The order did not direct issue of process against respondents 2–6, taking of cognizance, a finding on homicide or final acceptance or rejection of the closure report.

Vijay Singh v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 46932/2019, 30/11/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (976) Prev Next

Headnote :- Retaliatory FIR / alleged mala fides and cross-litigation - Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar; (2008) 12 SCC 346, explained the categories in R.P. Kapur concerning a legal bar, absence of an offence and absence of legal evidence, as well as Bhajan Lal's illustrative categories of abuse. It held, however, that once a cognizable offence is disclosed, the informant's alleged motive is generally secondary to the material collected during investigation and the evidence at trial. A court must distinguish a case in which there is no legal evidence from one in which it is asked to assess whether the available evidence will support the accusation. Here, the prior prosecutions and admitted hostility between the families could support either a theory of false implication or a motive for the alleged act. The High Court therefore declined to decide the claimed 'counterblast' at the Section 482 stage. The complainant's allegations under IPC Sections 354, 323, 294 and 506 were treated as prima facie disclosing a cognizable offence; their truth remained a matter for trial.

Quashing / early investigation and defence limits - Munshiram, Teeja Devi and Ujjal Kumar Burdhan (quoting Swapan Kumar Guha and Jeffrey J. Diermeier) protect the investigation of disclosed offences from premature interruption, subject to exceptional cases of abuse. XYZ and S. Martin caution against a roving inquiry before investigation is complete. S. Khushboo preserves intervention where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence or where there is manifest abuse, citing Medchl Chemicals, Zandu Pharmaceutical and Shakson Belthissor. Amit Kapoor requires an assessment of the prima facie allegations and the prosecution record without conducting a mini-trial. It confines Madhavrao's rationale to its special circumstances involving a predominantly civil dispute, rather than treating bleak prospects of conviction as a universal ground for quashing. Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, Gourishetty Mahesh, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy, M. Srikanth, M.N. Ojha, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh were discussed in relation to the sparing and reasoned exercise of power, the narrow exception for defence documents that are public or undisputed, and the refusal to test disputed defences at this stage. Sangeeta Agrawal requires reasons specific to the case, rather than a bare citation of authorities. The Court applied this common principle of restraint and declined the invitation to assess the merits for the purpose of quashing.

FIR delay / trial evaluation - The alleged occurrence was between 7 and 7:15 p.m. on 4 March 2020, and the FIR was registered at 6 p.m. on 5 March. The High Court held that a delay of a few hours or overnight is not, by itself, fatal. Whether the prosecution plausibly explains the delay and what effect it has on credibility are questions for trial.

Alibi / time of alleged offence - A plea of alibi concerns where the accused was when the offence allegedly occurred, not where he was when an FIR was lodged. The applicant said that he came to Gwalior High Court on 5 March 2020, whereas the FIR placed the incident on the evening of 4 March. He did not claim that he was absent at the time of the alleged offence. A compromise application under Section 320 was not relied on because neither side appeared for verification on four dates, and consent remained unestablished.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vijay Singh Jatav, a retired Army employee, petitioned under Section 482 CrPC to quash the FIR in Crime 24/2020 registered at Ater, Bhind, against him under IPC Sections 354, 323, 294 and 506 on respondent 2's complaint. He described longstanding hostility between the two households. His wife had earlier complained that respondent 2's husband, Prahlad Jatav, had harassed her. Prahlad was convicted under IPC Section 354-A in February 2016. On appeal in July 2017, his six-month custodial sentence was replaced by a fine of Rs 4,000. Vijay's wife lodged another case in 2019 against Prahlad and two others for house trespass, hurt, threat, abuse and common intention. Vijay also asserted that Prahlad later raped his wife, but that the police registered lesser offences. This prompted a separate Section 482 application filed at Gwalior on 5 March 2020.

Vijay described the FIR against him as a retaliatory counterblast. He said that the alleged occurrence was between 7 and 7:15 p.m. on 4 March 2020, whereas the FIR was registered at 6 p.m. on 5 March, leaving time for deliberation. He also claimed that he was away in Gwalior to file the other petition on 5 March. State counsel opposed quashing. Vijay's counsel conceded that there had been further litigation in 2021 and cited Bhajan Lal on malice. The High Court considered whether the allegations disclosed a cognizable offence and the proper stage for deciding questions of motive, reporting delay and alibi. Separately, a compromise application under Section 320 had been filed. The parties did not appear before the Principal Registrar for verification on 26 March, 11 August, 18 August or 9 September 2021, leaving it uncertain whether the complainant had consented.

2. Precedents — Considered : Counsel invoked State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal; 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, in support of the plea that the proceedings were malicious. The Court addressed that contention through Renu Kumari v. Sanjay Kumar; (2008) 12 SCC 346. The analysis quoted from that decision identifies the three purposes of Section 482 and the exceptional nature of its exercise. It sets out the categories in R.P. Kapur v. State of Punjab concerning a legal bar, allegations that disclose no offence on their face, and absence of legal evidence. It also distinguishes between absence of legal evidence and an invitation to weigh the available evidence. It recounts Bhajan Lal's illustrative categories, including allegations that disclose no offence on their face or proceedings attended by manifest malice. It stresses, however, that where a cognizable offence is alleged, the informant's mala fides alone are of secondary importance and cannot take the place of investigation or trial. Renu Kumari cites Dhanalakshmi, P.P. Sharma, Rupan Deol Bajaj, O.C. Kuttan, O.P. Sharma, Rashmi Kumar, Satvinder Kaur, Rajesh Bajaj and M. Devendrappa. The High Court applied Renu Kumari to the hostility between the households. It regarded enmity as capable of motivating both a crime and a false charge; the counterblast theory therefore required evidence.

Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan; (2018) 5 SCC 678, cautions against quashing before a proper investigation unless there is an abuse of process. Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan; (2014) 15 SCC 221, protects the statutory investigation of a prima facie cognizable offence, except in exceptional cases of malicious and vexatious prosecution. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan; (2012) 4 SCC 547, quoted State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha on the role of investigation in gathering evidence once an offence is disclosed. It also quoted Jeffrey J. Diermeier on the breadth of inherent power, its non-arbitrary character and the need to exercise it sparingly. XYZ v. State of Gujarat; (2019) 10 SCC 337, disapproved premature quashing based on a disputed settlement concerning consent and a roving inquiry. S. Martin likewise rejected an assessment of the merits before investigation was complete.

S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal; (2010) 5 SCC 600, quoted Bhajan Lal's examples of allegations disclosing no offence and malicious proceedings. It discussed Medchl Chemicals, Zandu Pharmaceutical and Shakson Belthissor in preserving exceptional intervention against harassment through wholly untenable complaints while protecting genuine complaints. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P.; (2019) 2 SCC 336, requires the court to identify the material facts and give reasons for interfering or declining to interfere. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460, was quoted extensively on the fine jurisdictional distinction between revision and inherent powers. It requires uncontroverted allegations and prosecution materials to be read as a whole, with attention to the basic ingredients of the offence, manifest improbability and legal bars. It calls for caution and prohibits a full inquiry into the evidence or a prediction of conviction. Civil remedies can coexist with criminal proceedings; special circumstances involving a predominantly civil dispute do not establish a general test based on low prospects of conviction. Its reconsideration of Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia through P.P. Sharma and M.N. Damani explains that limitation.

Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand; (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterated Bhajan Lal's requirement that the power be exercised rarely and with circumspection, without an inquiry into the reliability of the FIR allegations. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar; (2019) 13 SCC 350, allows an accused's document to be considered in an appropriate case if it is a public document or its veracity is not disputed by the complainant, citing Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. The applicant did not claim that he was absent at the time of the alleged offence. Gourishetty Mahesh; (2010) 11 SCC 226, balances protection against abuse with the need to avoid prematurely terminating a plausible prosecution. Padal Venkata Rama Reddy; (2012) 12 SCC 437, discusses the exceptional and discretionary exercise of Section 482 power, the availability of an effective specific remedy, and the limits of Madhavrao's special civil circumstances, quoting Bhajan Lal, Indian Oil and Saroj Kumar Sahoo. M. Srikanth; (2019) 10 SCC 373, restates the power to quash where the allegations, taken at face value, disclose no offence. M.N. Ojha; (2009) 9 SCC 682, preserves intervention against harassment through absurd allegations while condemning arbitrary obstruction of proceedings. CBI v. Arvind Khanna; (2019) 10 SCC 686, prohibits findings on disputed defences of the accused after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, CRA 709/2021, 30 June 2021, rejects detailed pretrial scrutiny and any requirement that the FIR be encyclopedic. The Court considered these decisions together as the framework requiring restraint, applied it to the disclosed offence, and left contested factual defences for trial.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked as the source of inherent jurisdiction, whose recognised purposes are to give effect to orders under the Code, prevent abuse of process and secure justice. Its exercise at the FIR stage concerns allegations that are legally insufficient on their face, a legal bar or exceptional abuse; it does not involve deciding credibility, the explanation for delay or a disputed alibi on the basis of the accused's assertions. IPC Sections 354, 323, 294 and 506 concern the alleged offences against modesty, hurt, obscenity and intimidation in the complaint. The Court treated the allegations as disclosing a cognizable offence without adjudicating each element or a final charge. Section 320 CrPC was invoked for compromise, but verification failed. The Court neither found a lawful concluded compromise nor approved compounding. It did not analyse any statutory provision specifically governing alibi.

4. Issues : (i) Whether prior cross-litigation and admitted animosity established, at the FIR-quashing stage, that respondent 2 had lodged a false counterblast despite allegations constituting a cognizable offence. (ii) Whether the overnight interval between the alleged act on 4 March and the report on 5 March, by itself, justified quashing, or whether its explanation and effect should be tested at trial. (iii) Whether proof that Vijay came to Gwalior court on the date of the FIR furnished an alibi for the alleged act on the previous evening. (iv) Whether a proposed compromise under Section 320 supported disposal when the parties did not appear for verification and respondent 2's consent was not established.

5. Ratio / Findings : The High Court held that the acts alleged in the FIR disclosed a cognizable offence. It declined to treat the hostility between the families and the earlier convictions or complaints as conclusive proof of fabrication. Under Renu Kumari and Bhajan Lal, proceedings that are manifestly malicious may be quashed in an appropriate case. A prior grudge, however, can point in either direction: it may motivate a false accusation or conduct giving rise to an accusation. Which occurred is a question requiring evidence. The extensive precedents on Section 482 reinforced that investigation into facts disclosing an offence should proceed. Courts may intervene where there is a legal bar, allegations that disclose no offence on their face, a wholly untenable case or clear abuse, but must not assess the likelihood of conviction or weigh the accused's disputed factual defence. The Court treated the counterblast allegation as a disputed question of fact. It did not find that the allegations made by both sides were true.

The FIR placed the occurrence between 19:00 and 19:15 on 4 March 2020; it was registered at 18:00 on 5 March. The Court did not make a factual finding that the interval was trivial or satisfactorily explained. It held that delay is not inevitably fatal, and that the existence of a plausible explanation and the effect of the interval on reliability must be assessed at trial. Delay alone therefore did not justify quashing an FIR that disclosed a cognizable offence on its face. The alibi argument failed because of the chronology on which it rested. A plea of alibi requires presence elsewhere at the time of the alleged offence. Vijay relied on his attendance at Gwalior High Court on 5 March, the day of FIR registration, but did not assert that he was absent between 7 and 7:15 p.m. on 4 March. His later visit to the High Court did not establish that he was elsewhere when the alleged incident occurred. This did not amount to a finding that he was present at the incident.

The Section 320 application did not alter the outcome. The parties had failed to attend four appointments before the Registrar, and it was unknown whether the complainant had consented. In the absence of a verified compromise, the Court considered the grounds urged for quashing and declined relief.

6. Relief : The Hon’ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. The FIR in Crime 24/2020 under IPC Sections 354, 323, 294 and 506 was not quashed.

Vijay Singh Jatav v. State of M.P. and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 18651/2020, 11/01/2022, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (977) Prev Next

Headnote :- Matrimonial cruelty / specific allegations against relatives at quashing - Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P.; (2015) 11 SCC 260, cautions against omnibus allegations against relatives, but excludes a pretrial inquiry into reliability where a triable case is alleged. It distinguished Neelu Chopra, Manoj Mahavir Prasad Khaitan and Geeta Mehrotra on their particular facts and treated them as laying down no inflexible rule protecting relatives. Here, the wife alleged a Rs 5 lakh dowry demand and threats by her husband Vikas Anand David, cash demands by both applicants, and a separate visit and death threat by his elder brother, applicant 2. The High Court found specific allegations against the brother. It noted that the living mother-in-law was not being prosecuted and regarded the complainant's focus on the husband and elder brother-in-law as indicating that the allegations were not exaggerated. The IPC Section 498-A FIR and pending trial proceedings were allowed to continue on the allegations accepted at face value.

Section 482 / no roving factual inquiry - XYZ v. State of Gujarat; (2019) 10 SCC 337, condemned premature quashing on a disputed settlement and a finding of consensual relations before investigation was complete. State of T.N. v. S. Martin; (2018) 5 SCC 718, likewise rejected premature assessment during investigation. Ajay Kumar Das applied Bhajan Lal's caution against examining FIR reliability. Gourishetty Mahesh; (2010) 11 SCC 226, and M. Srikanth; (2019) 10 SCC 373, preserve intervention where allegations accepted at face value disclose no offence, while protecting legitimate prosecution. CBI v. Arvind Khanna and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal 709/2021, rejected minute evaluation of the defence; Kunwar Singh also reiterated that an FIR need not be an encyclopedia. Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha were cited for similar restraint. The applicants' rival account of the wife's alleged relationship, counselling and refusal to return required proof and could not displace specific allegations at this stage.

Defence documents / scope of the exception - Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar; (2019) 13 SCC 350, states that quashing courts ordinarily do not assess defence documents. In an appropriate case, a public document or a document whose veracity the complainant does not dispute may be considered. The passage cites Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. The High Court quoted that exception, took the FIR allegations at face value and held that the applicants' disputed account of family and counselling events required proof at trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vikas Anand David and his elder brother Vishal applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime 25/2019 at Mahila Thana, Jabalpur, and RCT 2369/2019 pending before the Judicial Magistrate First Class. Respondent 2, an advocate, alleged that she married applicant 1 on 24 January 2019 under Christian rites. She said that the brothers had concealed that the family followed Christian rites, although a Hindu-style entry ritual was performed when she reached the matrimonial home. According to her, the husband immediately said that family pressure had led him to marry her and that he loved someone else. She alleged that he said she 'should not have brought any articles in dowry' and had married her only for money, and demanded Rs 5 lakh. Both applicants allegedly insisted that she should have brought cash and misbehaved with her. She described five days of threats and ill-treatment in the matrimonial home, including denial of warm clothing in winter and medical care when ill. Her husband allegedly took her jewellery, abused her when she objected and threatened that she would be buried and nobody would find her. At her sister-in-law's birthday celebration, she was allegedly compelled to dance before others; her objection led to a quarrel and a threat of exclusion from the home. When she first went to her parental home, the husband allegedly took her wedding jewellery and money and insisted that she return with the demanded cash. She alleged renewed dowry demands and quarrels when she returned. The mother-in-law then called the elder brother, who scolded her and, when she objected, allegedly threatened that she would be killed and buried in the house and nobody would find her. She also alleged subsequent exclusion from the house, character attacks in the Christian community and the husband's failure to answer her calls or messages.

The applicants asserted that the wife had a relationship with Ashish Patel and that relatives and pastor Lalit Solomen discussed reconciliation at her parental home, but she refused to return. The husband approached Parivar Paramarsh Kendra on 28 March 2019. According to the applicants, the counsellor tried to reconcile them, but on 15 April she refused to return and threatened to lodge an FIR. They described the dowry and cruelty allegations as false and referred to misuse of IPC Section 498-A. The High Court examined the FIR allegations at face value under the Section 482 threshold.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat; (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted for disapproving a roving inquiry and reliance on a disputed settlement to find a sexual relationship consensual while allegations of blackmail and coercion still required investigation. The present Court applied its procedural restraint to the applicants' account of another relationship and reconciliation, which could not be accepted on their assertion. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin; (2018) 5 SCC 718, was quoted against premature evaluation during investigation. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand; (2011) 12 SCC 319, invoked State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal to emphasise sparing exercise of Section 482 power and avoidance of an inquiry into reliability or genuineness.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar; (2019) 13 SCC 350, states that a court ordinarily avoids assessing defence documents but may, in an appropriate case, consider a public document or one whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. The passage cites Yin Cheng Hsiung, Bhajan Lal and Harshendra Kumar D. v. Rebatilata Koley for that exception. The High Court quoted this qualification and held that the applicants' disputed claims concerning counselling and the wife's alleged relationship required proof at trial.

State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh; (2010) 11 SCC 226, permits intervention where allegations accepted at face value disclose no offence, a legal bar applies or the prosecution is demonstrably malicious. It also protects legitimate prosecution from being stopped through an assessment of evidence. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana; (2019) 10 SCC 373, permits quashing where uncontroverted FIR allegations and the material collected in support disclose no offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna; (2019) 10 SCC 686, condemned minute findings on disputed defence facts after cognizance. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal 709/2021, decided on 30 June 2021, cautioned against scrutiny of evidence as at trial in Section 482 proceedings and reiterated that an FIR need not narrate everything. The High Court applied this restraint because the wife alleged a concrete dowry demand and specific acts by each applicant. It also cited Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan; Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan; State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan; S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal; Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P.; Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy; and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav, (2009) 9 SCC 682, for a similar view on Section 482.

Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P.; (2015) 11 SCC 260, supplied the qualification concerning matrimonial cases. Absurd allegations, failure to disclose an offence or abuse of process may justify quashing. Courts must be cautious with omnibus allegations against relatives, but must not determine reliability before trial where a triable harassment case is alleged. Taramani reproduced Amit Kapoor's principles concerning allegations taken at face value, legal bars, coexistence of civil and criminal claims and exclusion of external defence material. It distinguished Neelu Chopra v. Bharti, where the husband's parents were old, the husband had died and the main allegations concerned him, with no cogent material against the others. In Manoj Mahavir Prasad Khaitan v. Ram Gopal Poddar, a jewellery-theft case lodged during an earlier matrimonial-cruelty prosecution was found absurd. Geeta Mehrotra v. State of U.P. concerned the husband's brother and sister after divorce. Taramani treated those decisions as dependent on their facts and as laying down no inflexible rule beyond the settled quashing principles. Here, the Court relied on specific allegations that applicant 2 had insisted on cash, scolded the wife after being called and threatened her when she objected.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to quash the FIR and pending JMFC proceeding. The Court considered whether the uncontroverted allegations broadly disclosed an offence and declined to assess credibility or the applicants' disputed defence. IPC Section 498-A arose in the matrimonial-cruelty prosecution and the parties' submissions. The alleged Rs 5 lakh demand and harassment supplied the prima facie factual basis. The Christian and Hindu rites formed part of the complaint's factual narrative.

4. Issues : Whether the wife's allegations of a Rs 5 lakh demand and mistreatment by the husband, together with the specified conduct and threat of his elder brother, accepted as true at the Section 482 stage, disclosed a triable cognizable offence and justified continuation of FIR Crime 25/2019 and RCT 2369/2019. Whether the allegations against the elder brother were merely omnibus references to kinship or concerned specific conduct. Whether the applicants' account of an earlier relationship, failed counselling and refusal to return could be accepted to quash the FIR before trial, having regard to the ordinary limits on defence material and the quoted exception for a public document or one whose veracity was not disputed.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court took the FIR allegations at face value for the threshold inquiry. The husband was specifically alleged to have demanded Rs 5 lakh, taken wedding jewellery and money, threatened the wife and behaved cruelly during and after the brief cohabitation. Both applicants were alleged to have insisted on cash. The elder brother was also said to have been called after a quarrel, scolded her and, when she objected, threatened that she would be killed and buried in the house and nobody would find her. These allegations identified each applicant's conduct.

The Section 482 authorities permit intervention where allegations accepted as true disclose no offence, a legal bar applies or exceptional abuse is apparent. They exclude a mini-trial of credibility or the rival account. The applicants' claims about Ashish Patel, counselling and refusal to return were disputed defence facts requiring evidence. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui's quoted exception permits consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or one whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. The Court held that the applicants' defences required proof during trial. Taramani's caution concerning relatives was met by the specific allegations against applicant 2, in contrast with the fact-specific authorities distinguished in that decision. The Court also noted that the living mother-in-law was not being prosecuted and regarded the complainant's focus on the husband and elder brother-in-law as indicating that her allegations were not exaggerated. It held that the uncontroverted allegations disclosed a cognizable and triable offence, while their correctness, credibility and reliability were matters for trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Section 482 application. Crime 25/2019 at Mahila Thana, Jabalpur, and RCT 2369/2019 before the JMFC continued against both applicants. The disputed defences, credibility and ultimate guilt remained matters for the trial court.

Vikas Anand David and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 38444/2019, 23/02/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (978) Prev Next

Headnote :- Cognizance / accused's defence material - State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi; (2005) 1 SCC 568, holds that an accused has no right to produce defence material at the stage of framing charges or taking cognizance. Under Section 91 CrPC, necessity and desirability depend on the stage and purpose of the request. The provision does not permit a fishing inquiry into innocence at that stage. Padhi disapproved Satish Mehra's contrary interpretation of Section 227 and held the broader observations in Om Parkash Sharma to be obiter. Applying these principles, the High Court declined to assess Vikas Tiwari's factual defence that his complaint to the Chhattisgarh Chief Secretary about a public officer remained pending and therefore prevented the officer's wife from maintaining a defamation complaint. It treated that assertion as a disputed matter requiring evidence before the trial court.

Quashing / inquiry on allegations taken at face value - Pramod Suryabhan Pawar v. State of Maharashtra; (2019) 9 SCC 608, explains the three purposes of Section 482 and the caution required before foreclosing investigation or trial. Drawing on Inder Mohan Goswami and Bhajan Lal's illustrative categories, it requires sparing exercise of inherent power and excludes adjudication of competing evidence at this stage. Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar reserves appreciation of evidence for trial, while permitting quashing where the complaint's allegations do not constitute an offence. Chilakamarthi Venkateswarlu v. State of A.P.; (2020) 17 SCC 595, permits a prima facie examination of the record, but not a trial of its reliability. It reiterates Bhajan Lal and Dhanalakshmi on complaint cases and permits intervention for wholly absent offence ingredients or manifest error in issuing process, while protecting legitimate prosecution. Its discussion also invokes Zandu Pharmaceutical, S.W. Palanitkar, M.A.A. Annamalai, Sharda Prasad Sinha, Nagawwa and L. Muniswamy. The High Court applied this distinction: Tiwari sought acceptance of a factual defence and did not argue that the complaint's allegations, accepted in their entirety, failed to disclose an offence under IPC Section 500.

Writ challenge / defamation cognizance - Article 226 was invoked against the Bhopal Magistrate's order taking cognizance under IPC Section 500 on Yasmin Singh's complaint about a letter concerning her husband. The Court treated the asserted pendency of the petitioner's administrative complaint, and its claimed justification for the letter, as a disputed defence requiring proof at trial. It acknowledged the power to quash under Articles 226/227 or Section 482, but dismissed the writ while leaving that defence for the trial court. Counsel's reliance on Kapil Agrawal and Shafiya Khan concerning harassment did not answer the Court's question about considering the accused's defence material.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vikas Tiwari filed a writ petition under Article 226 against the Judicial Magistrate First Class, Bhopal's order dated 10 March 2022 in complaint case RCT/2912/2022. The Magistrate had taken cognizance under IPC Section 500. Tiwari had sent a letter to the Chief Secretary of Chhattisgarh complaining about Aman Kumar Singh, Principal Secretary to that State's Chief Minister. Aman Kumar Singh's wife Yasmin Singh then filed a criminal defamation complaint. Tiwari contended that no defamation offence could be made out until his pending complaint about her husband was decided. He specifically requested consideration of ground 6(h) of his petition, which invoked Supreme Court decisions on quashing criminal proceedings used for harassment or pressure.

The High Court acknowledged its power to quash proceedings. Its question to counsel concerned the basis on which it could consider the accused's disputed defence while reviewing the cognizance order. The Court examined State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi and the Supreme Court passages in Pramod Suryabhan Pawar and Chilakamarthi Venkateswarlu. It held that Tiwari's defence required proof before the trial court. His argument sought determination of disputed facts, rather than a finding that the complainant's allegations, accepted as true, were legally insufficient.

2. Precedents — Considered : The petitioner relied on Kapil Agrawal v. Sanjay Sharma, (2021) 5 SCC 542, and Shafiya Khan v. State of U.P.; (2022) 4 SCC 549, for the power to quash criminal proceedings used for harassment or pressure. The High Court explained that its power to quash had never been questioned. Those authorities did not answer its query about considering the accused's contested defence at this stage.

State of Orissa v. Debendra Nath Padhi; (2005) 1 SCC 568, supplied the procedural rule. In the quoted paragraphs 23–28, the Supreme Court held that an accused has no right to introduce material at the stage of framing charges or taking cognizance. Section 227 ordinarily concerns the prosecution record produced under Section 173. Under Section 91, necessity or desirability must be assessed with reference to the stage, proceeding and party making the request. The provision compels production of documents; it does not give the accused an early right to produce defence material or seek a roving inquiry. Padhi held that Satish Mehra v. Delhi Administration was incorrectly decided insofar as it allowed such material at that stage. The broader observations in Om Parkash Sharma v. CBI concerning reliable material produced by the accused were obiter and did not override the statutory framework for framing charges. The High Court applied Padhi in declining to evaluate the asserted validity or pendency of Tiwari's separate complaint as a defence to the officer's wife's criminal complaint.

Pramod Suryabhan Pawar v. State of Maharashtra; (2019) 9 SCC 608, was quoted for the three purposes of Section 482: giving effect to orders under the Code, preventing abuse of process and securing the ends of justice. It requires caution because quashing denies the prosecution an opportunity to establish its case through investigation and evidence. The reproduced discussion invoked Inder Mohan Goswami v. State of Uttaranchal; (2007) 12 SCC 1, for sparing and careful exercise of the wide inherent power. State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal; 1992 Supp (1) SCC 335, supplied illustrative categories, including allegations disclosing no offence when accepted at face value and malicious proceedings. These examples were not exhaustive. Pawar's discussion of Dhruvaram Murlidhar Sonar v. State of Maharashtra; (2019) 18 SCC 191, distinguishes examining whether allegations legally constitute an offence from deciding their truth or weighing evidence. The High Court applied that distinction to Tiwari's request for consideration of his factual defence.

Chilakamarthi Venkateswarlu v. State of A.P.; (2020) 17 SCC 595, was extensively quoted. Its paragraphs 15–23 permit limited examination of the record for a prima facie case and intervention for manifest error in issuing process or absence of basic offence ingredients. They prohibit deciding evidentiary reliability or forecasting conviction as a trial or appellate court would. The extract invokes Zandu Pharmaceutical Works v. Mohd. Sharaful Haque against testing evidentiary reliability, and S.W.

Palanitkar concerning process issued for acts that do not constitute offences. M.A.A. Annamalai, Sharda Prasad Sinha and Nagawwa concern complaint cognizance where the allegations disclose no offence. Dharampal states that inherent power cannot be exercised to do what the Code expressly prohibits. The extract repeats Bhajan Lal's seven illustrative categories. It also quotes Dhanalakshmi v. R. Prasanna Kumar; 1990 Supp SCC 686, on reading the complaint as a whole and avoiding a forecast of the trial outcome. Dhanalakshmi permits intervention where a complaint discloses no offence or is frivolous, vexatious or oppressive. Where the allegations, read with the complainant's statement on oath, disclose the ingredients and there is no material showing a mala fide, frivolous or vexatious complaint, interference is unjustified. State of Karnataka v. L. Muniswamy; (1977) 2 SCC 699, concerns preventing proceedings from becoming an instrument of persecution. The High Court followed the permitted prima facie inquiry and declined to determine the merits of Tiwari's disputed defence.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was the stated jurisdiction for challenging the Magistrate's cognizance order. The Court also referred to Article 227 supervisory power and Section 482 CrPC inherent power when explaining the analogous restraint in quashing proceedings; this petition was brought under Article 226. IPC Section 500 was the offence for which cognizance was taken. Section 91 CrPC, considered through Padhi, authorises production of documents necessary or desirable for an investigation, inquiry, trial or other proceeding. It does not give an accused a general right to compel defence material at the charge or cognizance stage. Sections 227–228, 239–240 and 173 CrPC appeared in the quoted discussion of the framework for framing charges and the prosecution record relevant at that stage.

4. Issues : Whether the pendency of Tiwari's complaint about a public officer automatically defeated the officer's wife's IPC Section 500 complaint and warranted quashing of the cognizance order. Whether, at this preliminary stage, the High Court could determine the truth, propriety or legal justification of Tiwari's letter on disputed defence material, or examine only whether the complaint's allegations, accepted as true, disclosed an offence or a recognised abuse of process. The power to quash in an appropriate case was not disputed.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court distinguished its power to quash from the permissible grounds for exercising it. Ground 6(h), concerning harassment and pressure, addressed a power the Court had not questioned. The operative issue was whether the accused could secure termination of the complaint by having his factual explanation accepted. Under Padhi, an accused cannot insist on consideration of defence documents at the charge or cognizance stage. Section 91 requires assessment of necessity with reference to the stage and purpose; it does not permit a fishing inquiry into innocence. Tiwari relied on the asserted pendency of his complaint to the Chief Secretary and the justification it allegedly supplied for his statement. Assessing that claim and its effect required determination of contested facts, rather than application of a legal bar apparent on the face of the complaint.

Pawar and Chilakamarthi permit an extraordinary writ or Section 482 court to examine allegations and the record at face value, intervene where uncontroverted allegations disclose no offence or the process is manifestly abusive, and prevent criminal proceedings from becoming a means of harassment. They exclude a premature trial of whether Tiwari's letter was correct or his defence valid. The Court expressly noted that Tiwari had not argued that no offence was disclosed even if the wife's complaint allegations were accepted in their entirety. It treated his claim that the criminal case must await resolution of the administrative complaint as a disputed defence requiring evidence. That defence was left for proof before the trial court.

The High Court therefore found no basis to interfere with the Magistrate's order.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. The 10 March 2022 order taking cognizance under IPC Section 500 remained in force. Tiwari could raise his factual or legal defamation defence before the trial court through evidence in the appropriate proceeding.

Vikas Tiwari v. Yasmin Singh, W.P. no. 13302/2023, 01/07/2023, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (979) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence / last seen and explanation - The father said that Ramkali left with her husband Vikram to make offerings and was later found dead. The High Court treated this unrebutted last-seen evidence as a significant link, together with the medical opinion of homicidal head and facial injuries caused by a hard, blunt object. Having held that the prosecution definitely proved that she was last alive in Vikram's company, the Court placed the onus on him to prove that he had neither injured nor murdered her. It found that the defence remained silent and held the circumstantial evidence sufficient to sustain the murder conviction.

Hostile or partly supportive witnesses - Several prosecution witnesses denied parts of the police account. The father disavowed the FIR narrative that he had seen the killing and said that he learned of his daughter's death later. His evidence that the couple left together to offer prayer remained unrebutted in cross-examination. Although most witnesses did not support the prosecution case, the Court relied on this part of his testimony and the combined circumstances to affirm guilt. The father's trial account supplied evidence of last company, rather than an eyewitness account of the killing.

Medical proof of homicidal death - The post-mortem described destructive head and facial injuries, fractures and death from shock due to haemorrhage and injury to vital organs. In cross-examination, the doctor accepted that a fall from a height following dizziness and headache was likely to cause the injury. The recorded evidence also contains his denial that a fall from a height due to dizziness, followed by collision with the floor, was likely to cause such injury. The Court accepted the medical opinion of homicidal death caused by a hard, blunt object as part of the circumstantial case. The seized stone and laboratory report were mentioned; the investigating officer stated that a blood-stained vest had not been tested for blood group. The Section 302 conviction, life imprisonment and Rs 1,000 fine were affirmed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vikram Ahirwar appealed under Section 374(2) CrPC against the Sessions Judge, Vidisha's judgment dated 21 September 2011 in Sessions Trial 86/2011. He was convicted under IPC Section 302 of murdering his wife Ramkali and sentenced to life imprisonment and a Rs 1,000 fine with a default stipulation. They had been married for about eight years and lived at her father Gubre Ahirwar's home. The police account alleged that Vikram suspected her character and harassed her. On 19 November 2010, the couple left to offer prayer at Jhapret Ghat or a temple. The father's reported FIR account was that he later saw Vikram killing Ramkali near riverside bushes and fleeing. At trial, he denied witnessing the killing and said that he learned of her death afterwards. He maintained that Vikram had taken her from home that day to make offerings. In cross-examination, he also spoke of harassment and beating, despite saying in examination-in-chief that the couple lived happily. The High Court relied on their last company as proved by his trial evidence.

A merg intimation and FIR Crime 389/2010 were recorded and the body was examined. A blood-marked triangular stone, other stones, broken bangles, slippers, a shirt and other items were seized. The post-mortem described severe head and facial damage and attributed death to shock from haemorrhage and injury to vital organs. Police recorded witnesses' statements, arrested Vikram and filed the charge sheet. He denied guilt in his Section 313 examination and called no defence evidence. Seven prosecution witnesses testified. Julfa and Udhet Singh denied several incriminating details and were treated as hostile, although parts of their evidence described the couple's relationship or journey. The father said that no killing occurred in his presence. The defence relied on the absence of an eyewitness, material omissions and contradictions, incomplete medical evidence and the absence of an overt act in the father's courtroom account. The State supported the conviction.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court treated last-seen evidence as an important link in the chain of circumstances. It held that the prosecution had definitely proved that Ramkali was last seen alive with Vikram, considered the medical finding of homicidal injury and called for a reasonable explanation of her death. On those facts, it placed the onus on Vikram to prove that he had neither injured nor murdered her, and found that the defence remained silent.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 302 provided the murder conviction and life sentence under appeal. Section 374(2) CrPC provided the appellate jurisdiction, and Vikram denied the accusation in his trial-stage Section 313 examination. The Court applied its circumstantial-evidence and last-seen analysis after finding the relevant prosecution facts proved, and placed the onus on Vikram to explain the death and prove that he had neither injured nor murdered Ramkali. The fine and default stipulation were maintained.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Ramkali's death was homicidal or the head and facial injury could be explained by a fall. (ii) Whether, despite hostile testimony and the father's denial of seeing the killing, proof that Ramkali left alive with Vikram and was later found dead near the river established his guilt and placed an onus on him to explain the death. (iii) Whether the claimed contradictions and omissions required acquittal or the Section 302 conviction and sentence should stand. The High Court identified last-seen theory as a distinct question and decided the appeal on that basis.

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr P.K. Jain's post-mortem evidence described severe destructive injuries to the head and face, fractures and death from shock due to haemorrhage and injury to vital organs. In cross-examination, he accepted that a person suffering dizziness and headache was likely to sustain the injury by falling from a height. The recorded evidence also contains his denial that a person falling from a height due to dizziness and colliding with the floor was likely to sustain such injury. The Court accepted the medical opinion that death was homicidal and the injuries were caused by a hard, blunt object. The body and a blood-marked stone were found near the river. FSL Exhibit P18 was mentioned; the investigating officer said that the blood-stained vest had not been tested for blood group.

The Court acknowledged that most prosecution witnesses had not fully supported the prosecution account. Julfa and Udhet Singh denied some alleged threats or beating, and the father did not maintain that he had seen the fatal assault. His statement that the couple left together to make offerings remained unrebutted in cross-examination. In the evidence quoted by the Court, he said that Vikram and Ramkali went to the shrine together and that he learned of her death later. The Court found their last company proved and considered it with her subsequent discovery dead near the river and the medical finding of homicidal injury. It treated last seen as a significant link calling for a reasonable explanation. On those facts, it placed the onus on Vikram to prove that he had neither injured nor murdered his wife, and found that the defence remained silent. It held the evidence sufficient to establish guilt despite the absence of accepted eyewitness testimony.

The defence submissions of false implication and absence of previous criminal antecedents did not persuade the Court to disturb the trial findings. The father's trial testimony disavowed the eyewitness allegation in the initial account but retained the last-seen evidence on which the High Court relied.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the 21 September 2011 conviction under Section 302 and the sentence of life imprisonment and Rs 1,000 fine with the trial court's default stipulation. Vikram was in custody and was directed to serve the remaining sentence. Copies of the judgment were directed to be sent to the jail authorities and, with the record, to the trial court.

Vikram Ahirwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 111/2012, 07/07/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (980) Prev Next

Headnote :- POCSO / child prosecutrix and corroboration - A child complainant's reliable testimony does not require further corroboration as a legal prerequisite. The prosecutrix identified Vimal and described his taking her near a graveyard, assaulting her and threatening to kill her if she told anyone. Her account was supported by prompt disclosure and by her mother's and Kallu's immediate observations of her bleeding and the appellant leaving. The MLC recorded a ruptured hymen and a bleeding vaginal-wall laceration, and the FSL report detected human sperm on the vaginal specimens. The High Court held that guilt was proved beyond reasonable doubt. This evidence reinforced the child's reliable testimony; corroboration was not a mandatory condition for accepting it. The doctor acknowledged that a corn stalk could cause the injury and gave no specific opinion of rape. Considering the evidence as a whole, the Court rejected the suggested corn-stalk explanation. The FSL reported human sperm in the specimens; the DNA report was apparently not received.

POCSO / child status - The prosecutrix was about eight when the 2014 incident occurred. A school headmaster proved a school record showing her date of birth as 12 July 2006, but acknowledged that it did not mention the underlying Anganwadi certificate. The age challenge did not succeed on the record before the Court, which affirmed the Section 4 POCSO conviction.

Charge / aggravated rape specification - The police charge sheet included IPC Section 376(2)(i), but the trial court framed a charge under Section 376 only. The High Court held that a specific charge should be framed and that an unqualified Section 376 charge could not be treated as one under Section 376(2)(i). It affirmed the conviction under Section 376 and Section 4 POCSO, with no separate IPC sentence. The ten years' rigorous imprisonment and fine under POCSO, with default imprisonment, were maintained. The acquittal under Section 363 formed part of the trial result.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vimal appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment dated 27 April 2015 of the 2nd Additional Sessions Judge, Sironj, Camp Kurwai, in Special Sessions Trial 179/2014. The trial court acquitted him of kidnapping under IPC Section 363 and convicted him under IPC Section 376 and POCSO Section 4. For the POCSO offence, it imposed ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a Rs 2,000 fine with default imprisonment; no separate sentence was imposed under Section 376. The appeal challenged the child's age, the reliability of the testimony and the finding of guilt, alleging contradictions and false implication. The High Court recorded that the FIR was lodged within three hours.

The prosecution case was that the child and her siblings had gone towards a pond and Vimal lured her towards a graveyard. The report alleged that he inserted his finger in her private part and sexually assaulted her. The child testified that, before fleeing, he threatened to kill her if she told anyone. She was found bleeding and reported the assault. Her mother Shayra Bi and Kallu heard her screams, saw her blood-stained condition, received a prompt account and saw Vimal leaving; neither witnessed the assault itself. Her father Sabir Shah heard the account after returning from work and lodged the report. Her brother Majid described Vimal taking her aside, but said that she later spoke of an injury caused by a blade and did not tell him of rape. The child denied the defence suggestions that a quarrel over Rs 20 for corn led to a false accusation or that a fall and a corn stalk caused her injury.

Dr Mamta Pardesi recorded that the secondary sexual characters were not developed. She found a ruptured hymen and a bleeding 3 x 1/2 x 1/4 cm vaginal-wall laceration caused by a hard, blunt object, and noted a possibility of sexual intercourse. In cross-examination, she accepted that a corn stalk could cause the injury and that the hymen could rupture during play. She had given no specific opinion of rape. FSL Exhibit P17 detected human sperm on the vaginal slide and swab. The judgment noted that the DNA report was apparently not received despite samples having been forwarded. Hospital-admission and repair documents were unexhibited and unproved, while the mother spoke of seven days' hospitalisation. School headmaster Vishwanath Singh Rajput proved the school date of birth of 12 July 2006, acknowledging that the record did not mention the underlying Anganwadi certificate. The judgment described the investigation and the seizure witnesses' evidence. The accused called no defence witness. The police charge sheet invoked IPC Sections 363 and 376(2)(i) and POCSO Section 4; the trial court framed charges under Sections 363 and 376 IPC and Sections 3/4 POCSO.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court stated the established rule that reliable testimony of a prosecutrix does not require further corroboration. It assessed the child's account with her prompt disclosure, the surrounding witnesses' evidence and the medical and laboratory findings.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided the appellate route for challenging the special-trial conviction and sentence. IPC Section 376 was the rape charge actually framed and the conviction affirmed. Although the police charge sheet referred to Section 376(2)(i), the Court held that a general Section 376 charge could not be treated as a specifically framed Section 376(2)(i) charge. The trial acquittal under IPC Section 363 formed part of the judgment affirmed on appeal. POCSO Sections 3 and 4 provided the charge of penetrative sexual assault on a child and its punishment. The ten-year rigorous term and fine, with default imprisonment, were imposed under POCSO. No separate IPC prison term was imposed.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the prosecution proved the child's age and Vimal's commission of sexual assault beyond reasonable doubt despite the challenge to the school record, variations in the witnesses' accounts and the suggested corn-stalk cause of injury. (ii) Whether the trial court's unqualified Section 376 charge could be treated as a specific aggravated Section 376(2)(i) charge because the police charge sheet named that clause. (iii) Whether the POCSO punishment warranted leniency on appeal.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that a reliable prosecutrix's testimony can sustain conviction without further corroboration. The child described the appellant taking her to the graveyard, assaulting her and threatening to kill her if she told anyone. The Court recorded that the FIR was lodged within three hours and that she promptly told her mother and Kallu. Their evidence concerned their immediate observations, her disclosure and their sighting of the appellant leaving; neither claimed to have witnessed the act. The brother's account of an injury by a blade was recorded, but the Court accepted the child and the supporting circumstances despite the asserted contradictions.

The MLC recorded a bleeding vaginal-wall laceration and hymenal rupture, and the FSL detected human sperm in the vaginal specimens. Considering the evidence together, the Court rejected the corn-stalk explanation, particularly because of the human sperm. The laboratory finding supported the occurrence of sexual assault. The DNA report was apparently not received; the evidence identifying Vimal came from the child and the immediate surrounding circumstances. The Court also noted that the hospital documents were unexhibited and unproved.

On age, the headmaster proved the school record showing birth on 12 July 2006. He said that the entry was based on information from the father and an Anganwadi certificate, although the record did not mention that certificate. The Court recorded this cross-examination, accepted that the child was about eight and upheld the POCSO conviction. On the procedural issue, it required a specific charge: the reference to Section 376(2)(i) in the police report did not make the trial court's Section 376 charge an aggravated charge. It affirmed the conviction under Section 376 and Section 4 POCSO. Refusing leniency in the ten-year POCSO sentence, the Court stressed that the rape of a girl of about eight raised an alarming concern about the security of young girls in society.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal and affirmed the 27 April 2015 conviction under IPC Section 376 and POCSO Section 4. The ten years' rigorous imprisonment and Rs 2,000 fine under POCSO, with default imprisonment and no separate IPC sentence, were maintained. The Section 363 acquittal formed part of the affirmed trial judgment. Vimal was in custody and was directed to serve the remaining sentence.

Vimal v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 120/2016, 14/08/2019, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (981) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 / inheritance dispute / no allegation of a forged will - Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460, requires the court to consider whether the uncontroverted allegations satisfy the ingredients of a criminal offence, without conducting a mini-trial. A civil claim may coexist with a crime, but proceedings for a purely civil wrong without criminality may be quashed. Its discussion confines Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia's civil-dispute reasoning to its context; weak prospects of conviction are not a universal test for quashing. Naresh Kumar v. State of Karnataka, SLP (Cr.) No. 1570/2021, decided on 12 March 2024, quoted Paramjeet Batra v. State of Uttarakhand; (2013) 11 SCC 673, on the cautious exercise of power to prevent a civil dispute from being given a criminal character where the essential criminal ingredients are absent. It also cited Randheer Singh; (2021) 14 SCC 626, and Usha Chakraborty, on preventing criminal process from becoming a weapon of harassment. The son claimed a one-fifth ancestral share under a 2009 Lok Adalat award. He alleged that his mother and brother relied on his late father's will to obtain mutation even of his share. His counsel expressly conceded that the FIR contained no allegation of a forged will. The High Court held that his objection to the testator's ability to bequeath that share was a matter for civil declaration. On that account, no criminality could be attached to the testator, and the dispute did not warrant IPC Sections 420/120-B proceedings against the mother and brother. The parties' rights were outside the scope of the FIR. The Court quashed Crime No. 87/2018 and reserved the son's civil remedy.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vimla Bansal and another applicant sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of Crime No. 87/2018 at Police Station Harda for offences under IPC Sections 420 and 120-B. Respondent 2 alleged that a 2009 Lok Adalat compromise recognised one-fifth interests for him, his father, mother and brother Sonu in their ancestral properties: an Axis Bank building at Harda, a commercial complex, 4.77 acres with a warehouse and petrol pump, and two acres on Hadiya Road. He lived and worked in Bhopal. After his father's death, he learned that the Axis Bank building had been mutated in his mother's name and its rent was being credited to her account. He also learned that other property had been transferred in the names of his mother and brother on the basis of his father's will. He alleged collusion and prejudice to his one-fifth share.

The applicants submitted that the FIR gave a criminal character to a predominantly civil inheritance dispute. The State and complainant opposed the application, initially submitting that a forged will had been used. The High Court asked counsel to identify an allegation of fabrication in the FIR. The complainant's counsel conceded that no forged will was alleged. He maintained that the will had been prepared in connivance with the late father and wrongfully included the complainant's share.

2. Precedents — Considered : Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460, was quoted in detail. At the stage of quashing or framing charges, the court considers whether the uncontroverted allegations and accompanying record broadly establish an offence. Patent improbability, an express legal bar or abuse may justify intervention, but the court does not meticulously examine the evidence or predict conviction. The same facts may give rise to both a civil claim and a criminal offence; the availability of a civil remedy alone does not prevent prosecution. Conversely, proceedings for a predominantly civil wrong lacking criminal ingredients may be quashed to prevent misuse. Its explanation of Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia through later decisions confines that precedent to its particular, predominantly civil setting. Weak prospects of conviction do not supply a universal test. The High Court applied the distinction between allegations disclosing criminal ingredients and a civil dispute.

Naresh Kumar and Another v. State of Karnataka and Another, SLP (Cr.) No. 1570/2021, decided on 12 March 2024, was quoted for its discussion of Paramjeet Batra v. State of Uttarakhand; (2013) 11 SCC 673. Paramjeet Batra requires cautious exercise of Section 482 power, but permits quashing where an essentially civil transaction is given a criminal character, particularly where essential criminal ingredients are absent and a civil remedy is available or has been pursued. Naresh Kumar also cited Randheer Singh v. State of U.P.; (2021) 14 SCC 626, on preventing prosecution from becoming a weapon of harassment, and Usha Chakraborty v. State of West Bengal, on quashing an essentially civil dispute presented as a crime. The High Court applied these principles after counsel expressly conceded that no forged will was alleged. The dispute concerned the father's legal ability to bequeath the son's claimed share.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent power invoked to prevent an alleged abuse of criminal process. The FIR alleged cheating and conspiracy under IPC Sections 420 and 120-B. The Court found no allegation that the will was fabricated and treated the pleaded title and mutation dispute as civil, without the criminal ingredients necessary to continue the FIR. Section 397 CrPC and charge framing arose in the quoted Amit Kapoor discussion; the present application invoked the inherent jurisdiction.

4. Issues : Whether the son's allegations that his mother and brother obtained mutation on the basis of his father's will, despite the prior one-fifth Lok Adalat allocation, disclosed a criminal wrong under Sections 420/120-B or an essentially civil dispute about inheritance and the extent of testamentary power. In particular, whether forgery of the will was alleged, or whether the objection was that the father's will included property he could not bequeath. If the objection concerned only that testamentary power, whether Section 482 permitted quashing of the FIR while preserving the son's right to challenge the will's effect on his share in civil court.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered whether the allegations disclosed a predominantly civil dispute or also involved criminal ingredients. The complainant's counsel admitted that the FIR contained no allegation of a forged will. The allegation was that, despite the Lok Adalat allocation, the father's will was relied on to obtain mutation even of the son's claimed one-fifth share. Whether the will could operate against that share, and the consequent entitlement to mutation and rent, were matters for civil adjudication. On the contention that the testator had bequeathed the complainant's share, the Court held that no criminality could be attached to the testator.

Amit Kapoor preserves prosecution where the same facts also constitute a crime, while excluding a mini-trial or a speculative assessment of conviction. Naresh Kumar and Paramjeet Batra permit relief where an essentially civil dispute is given a criminal character; Randheer Singh and Usha Chakraborty caution against using that process for harassment. In view of the absence of alleged fabrication and the dispute about entitlement, the High Court held that this was a civil inheritance dispute presented as a criminal offence. It quashed the FIR under Section 482 on those facts and counsel's concession.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Section 482 application and quashed FIR Crime No. 87/2018 under IPC Sections 420 and 120-B. The complainant was given liberty, if so advised, to seek a civil declaration that the will was null and void to the extent of his share. No order as to costs was made.

Vimla Bansal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 18061/2018, 20/07/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (982) Prev Next

Headnote :- Rape allegation / misconception of fact / subsisting marriage - The petitioner sought quashing of the charge sheet and Sessions proceeding on allegations of an initial forced act and repeated intercourse on a promise of marriage, followed by refusal. The prosecutrix said that she later learned he was already married. The Court noted that he was admittedly married with two children and that his marriage subsisted. At the pretrial quashing stage, it inferred a prima facie false promise from his knowledge that he could not marry her while that marriage continued, and applied Section 90 IPC to consent obtained under misconception. Her adult status did not by itself establish freely given consent. The Court also recorded her allegation of repeated forcible acts during the intervening period and treated each alleged non-consensual act as independently material. Its assessment of consent was prima facie and based on the allegations accepted at that stage.

Sexual-offence FIR / reporting interval / continuing allegations - Satyapal v. State of Haryana; (2009) 6 SCC 635, and State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh; (1996) 2 SCC 384, were applied for their principle that reluctance, stigma and the circumstances must be considered before discrediting a sexual-offence complaint because of delayed reporting. Asha v. State, Karnataka High Court CRLP 673/2021, was cited for the principle that delay alone does not justify quashing. The petitioner calculated the interval from the first alleged act on 1 June to the FIR on 14 October 2022. The Court also recorded allegations of repeated forcible acts during that period. Describing the interval as approximately four months, it found no delay warranting quashing.

Pretrial quashing / allegations taken at face value / limits on factual inquiry - Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan; (2018) 5 SCC 678, Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan; (2014) 15 SCC 221, State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan; (2012) 4 SCC 547, XYZ v. State of Gujarat; (2019) 10 SCC 337, and State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin; (2018) 5 SCC 718, were quoted on restraint against prematurely ending a prima facie cognizable case or conducting a roving inquiry into contested consent and defence before proper investigation. S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal; (2010) 5 SCC 600, and Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy; (2012) 12 SCC 437, reproduced Bhajan Lal grounds concerning absence of a prima facie offence, legal bar, inherent improbability and abuse. Genuine complaints should proceed, while appropriate exceptional cases permit intervention. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460, rejects a mini-trial and ordinary reliance on external defence evidence, while permitting quashing where basic ingredients fail. Its treatment of predominantly civil disputes does not make weak prospects of conviction a universal test. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar; (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognises a narrow exception for a public defence document or one whose veracity the complainant does not dispute. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh; (2010) 11 SCC 226, M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav; (2009) 9 SCC 682, and M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana; (2019) 10 SCC 373, preserve intervention for plainly deficient or malicious accusations while protecting legitimate prosecutions. CBI v. Arvind Khanna; (2019) 10 SCC 686, and State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal 709/2021, prohibit resolving disputed facts or conducting trial-level scrutiny of evidence at the threshold. Taking the allegations at face value in this charge-sheet and Sessions matter, the High Court declined to determine the factual defence or quash the case; guilt and consent remained for trial.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vinay Mishra filed Writ Petition No. 30152/2023 under Article 226 seeking certiorari against the charge sheet described in the prayer as No. 1/2023 dated 6 May 2023. He also sought termination of Sessions Case No. 462/2023 pending before the 10th Additional Sessions Judge, Bhopal. The proceedings arose from an FIR dated 14 October 2022. The prosecutrix, stated to be 34, met Mishra in May 2022 when she visited HDFC Bank's Arera Colony branch with biodata for recruitment. According to the complaint recited by the Court, he promised marriage and forcibly had intercourse with her on 1 June 2022, followed by sexual relations on that asserted pretext at different places and on several occasions. In discussing the intervening period, the Court also recorded her allegation of repeated forcible relations. She said that he later refused marriage, stopped answering calls or messages, and that she discovered he was already married.

Mishra argued that the interval of four months between the first alleged act and the FIR was unexplained. As the complainant was an adult, he contended that her consent could not have been obtained by misrepresentation within Section 90 IPC. The Court heard his counsel, quoted Section 90 IPC, considered the authorities on sexual-offence reporting delay and quashing, and dismissed the writ. The relief sought was certiorari and termination of the Sessions case.

2. Precedents — Considered : Satyapal v. State of Haryana; (2009) 6 SCC 635, treated the social context and reluctance to report a sexual offence as relevant to FIR delay, considered with testimony, medical evidence and surrounding circumstances. State of Punjab v. Gurmit Singh; (1996) 2 SCC 384, explained the possible reluctance to expose the prosecutrix and her family to stigma and the deliberation that may precede reporting. The High Court applied their caution against mechanically discrediting a complaint because of elapsed time. Asha v. State, Karnataka High Court CRLP 673/2021, decided on 10 November 2021, was cited for delay alone not warranting quashing. Here, the alleged forcible acts continued after the first June incident and before the October FIR, and the Court found no delay warranting quashing.

Munshiram v. State of Rajasthan; (2018) 5 SCC 678, warned against quashing an FIR prematurely, before proper investigation, unless continuation would abuse the process. Teeja Devi v. State of Rajasthan; (2014) 15 SCC 221, protected the statutory investigation of a prima facie cognizable offence, subject to exceptional intervention for malicious and vexatious prosecution. State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan; (2012) 4 SCC 547, quoted Swapan Kumar Guha on the need for proper investigation once an offence is disclosed. It also quoted Jeffrey J. Diermeier on the wide but cautious exercise of Section 482 powers to secure justice and prevent abuse. XYZ v. State of Gujarat; (2019) 10 SCC 337, concerned premature quashing of a sexual complaint after conclusions about disputed consent and coercion were drawn from an asserted settlement. The present Court used it against a roving factual inquiry into the complainant's account. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin; (2018) 5 SCC 718, likewise criticised a merits assessment before investigation was complete. These authorities supported restraint against displacing the ordinary process of proof.

S. Khushboo v. Kanniammal; (2010) 5 SCC 600, quoted selected Bhajan Lal categories permitting quashing where the allegations disclose no prima facie offence or the prosecution is demonstrably malicious, while protecting genuine complaints. Sangeeta Agrawal v. State of U.P.; (2019) 2 SCC 336, required an intelligible account of the facts, application of governing law and reasons for interference. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460, set out safeguards for Sections 397/482. Failure to disclose the basic ingredients, patent improbability, an express legal bar or abuse may justify relief. The court should not forecast conviction, critically weigh the evidence or ordinarily consider external defence material. A civil aspect alone does not remove criminality. Its treatment of Madhavrao Jiwajirao Scindia confined that precedent's rationale to its special setting of a predominantly civil dispute. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand; (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterated the circumspect exercise of the Bhajan Lal jurisdiction and the prohibition on examining the allegations' reliability.

Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar; (2019) 13 SCC 350, recognised an exception where the defence document is public or its veracity is not disputed by the complainant. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh; (2010) 11 SCC 226, balanced protection from baseless prosecution with the trial court's role in deciding disputed credibility. Padal Venkata Rama Reddy v. Kovuri Satyanarayana Reddy; (2012) 12 SCC 437, discussed exceptional Section 482 intervention, clean hands, alternative remedies, all seven Bhajan Lal examples and the limited application of the predominantly civil Madhavrao rationale. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana; (2019) 10 SCC 373, preserved quashing where even accepted allegations and uncontroverted supporting material disclose no offence. M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav; (2009) 9 SCC 682, warned against both unnecessary obstruction of proceedings and refusal of relief where inherently improbable allegations are used to harass. CBI v. Arvind Khanna; (2019) 10 SCC 686, disapproved resolution of disputed defence facts under Section 482. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal No. 709/2021, order of 30 June 2021, rejected meticulous scrutiny of evidence as at trial and recalled that an FIR need not be an encyclopaedia. The Bench quoted these authorities and declined to try Mishra's factual arguments about adult consent and credibility in the writ.

3. Statutes considered : Section 90 IPC, quoted in paragraph 5, provides that consent given under fear of injury or misconception of fact is not consent for IPC purposes if the person doing the act knows, or has reason to believe, that it resulted from that fear or misconception. The Court provisionally applied the misconception limb to the promise of marriage, given Mishra's knowledge of his subsisting marriage and two children. Article 226 provided the formal writ jurisdiction. Section 482 CrPC and Article 227 arose in the analogous limits on pretrial quashing, while Section 397 and the charge-framing provisions appeared in the quoted Amit Kapoor decision.

4. Issues : Whether the October FIR and charge-sheet proceeding should be terminated because the first alleged act was in June and the complainant was an adult, or whether the continuing allegations and context of sexual-offence reporting required further adjudication. Whether a marriage promise allegedly made with knowledge that the existing marriage prevented its fulfilment could prima facie bring consent within misconception under Section 90 IPC, with final facts reserved for trial. Whether Article 226 / analogous Section 482 jurisdiction permitted acceptance of Mishra's account of consent and credibility through detailed scrutiny of disputed evidence, and whether this was a case of no offence on the face of the allegations or abuse, rather than an unresolved factual defence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court held that adulthood alone did not establish consent. For the threshold assessment, it accepted the allegations of the initial forced act and repeated relations on a promise of marriage, including the allegation of repeated forcible acts recorded in its discussion of delay. Mishra was admittedly married with two children and his marriage subsisted. The Court reasoned that he knew he could not lawfully fulfil the promise to marry the prosecutrix while that marriage continued. It inferred a prima facie false promise and consent under misconception within Section 90 IPC.

Satyapal and Gurmit Singh required attention to stigma and reluctance before discrediting a sexual complaint for reporting delay. The Court described the interval from the first June act to the FIR as about four months, during which the prosecutrix alleged repeated forcible acts. It held that delay alone could be explained and that this account disclosed no delay warranting quashing. It also observed that each individual act without the prosecutrix's consent would amount to rape.

The Section 482 authorities identified the limits of threshold review. Genuine prima facie cognizable allegations ordinarily proceed to investigation or trial; failure to disclose the ingredients, patent improbability, a legal bar or established abuse may justify exceptional quashing. Amit Kapoor, XYZ, CBI v. Arvind Khanna and Kunwar Singh precluded a roving examination of Mishra's factual defence or a forecast of the trial result. The quoted Mohd. Akram exception permitted consideration of a public defence document or one whose veracity the complainant did not dispute. Taking the allegations at face value, the possible misconception affecting consent and the continuing alleged acts warranted refusal of immediate termination. The Court dismissed the petition.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. It refused the requested quashing of the charge sheet and Sessions Case No. 462/2023; the criminal proceeding was to continue according to law.

Vinay Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 30152/2023, 04/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (983) Prev Next

Headnote :- Additional accused / cognizance under Section 190 / distinction from Section 319 - Nahar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh; (2022) 5 SCC 295, was followed. After taking cognizance and issuing process against some accused, a Magistrate may, at the cognizance stage, summon another person whose involvement is indicated by the material, even if the police omitted that person from the charge sheet. That power does not depend on waiting for a later Section 319 CrPC application or evidence during trial. Nahar Singh's discussion of Dharam Pal, Raghubans Dubey and Kishun Singh explains that cognizance is of the offence and that the Magistrate may disagree with the police and consider material beyond the report, including a complaint and Section 164 material. Here, the offences were Magistrate-triable and the FIR named Vinay Sachdeva as the person who struck the complainant's head with a lathi. Even assuming that no witness had testified, Section 190 remained available despite the lower court having described its order as one under Section 319. Vinay had supplied no trial order sheets to establish the stage. The police decision to omit him after considering an alibi did not bind the Magistrate.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vinay Sachdeva invoked Section 482 CrPC / Section 528 BNSS to challenge the JMFC, Gwalior's order of 22 July 2024 in RCT No. 1822/2019 and the dismissal of his revision on 6 September 2024 in Criminal Revision No. 279/2024. Dharmendra Agarwal's FIR alleged that, on 6 August 2018, Vinay and Sunny Sachdeva came on a motorcycle near Maternity Hospital, Murar, and abused him. Vinay allegedly struck his head with a lathi, causing bleeding. Sunny allegedly threatened to kill him if he tried to have the shop vacated. Deepak Agarwal and others were said to have witnessed the incident. After investigation, the police concluded that Vinay had not been present and filed a charge sheet only against Sunny.

In the Magistrate proceedings, Sunny applied under Section 216 CrPC to delete a charge described in the judgment as Section 373 IPC. The complainant applied under Section 319 CrPC to summon Vinay. The Magistrate dismissed Sunny's application, allowed the complainant's application and summoned Vinay as an additional accused. Vinay's revision was dismissed. In the present application, he argued that Section 319 had been invoked prematurely because trial evidence had not begun. He also relied on a communication to the CSP asserting that he had been at a friend's home and Sunny at his own home. The State supported the orders.

2. Precedents — Considered : Nahar Singh v. State of Uttar Pradesh and Another; (2022) 5 SCC 295, was quoted and applied. The Supreme Court held that earlier issuance of process against some accused does not exhaust the Magistrate's power, at the cognizance stage, to summon another person whose involvement is indicated by the material on record despite omission from the charge sheet. The Magistrate need not wait for the Section 319 stage. In Nahar Singh, the material included the victim's Section 164 statement; the present case involved an express FIR allegation against Vinay.

In the quoted passage, Dharam Pal v. State of Haryana; (2014) 3 SCC 306, explained that a Magistrate may disagree with the police report and act on a protest petition, including in a case to be committed to the Sessions Court. Raghubans Dubey v. State of Bihar; AIR 1967 SC 1167, and Kishun Singh v. State of Bihar; (1993) 2 SCC 16, supported the principle that cognizance is of the offence, rather than the offender, and permits proceedings against other implicated persons. These authorities were considered through Nahar Singh. The present Court noted that the offences were triable by the Magistrate and relied on the FIR allegation that Vinay delivered the lathi blow.

3. Statutes considered : Section 190 CrPC empowered the Magistrate to take cognizance of an offence and, on sufficient material, proceed against a person not sent up by the police. Section 319 CrPC was invoked to summon Vinay as an additional accused; he objected that trial evidence had not begun. The Court held that Section 190 action remained possible even on that assumption and noted the absence of trial order sheets. Section 216 CrPC concerned Sunny's unsuccessful separate application to delete the charge described as Section 373 IPC.

4. Issues : Whether the Magistrate could proceed against Vinay, whom the police omitted from the charge sheet, when the complainant applied under Section 319 but Vinay asserted that no trial witness had testified. Whether earlier process against Sunny exhausted the Section 190 power, whether the FIR material indicating Vinay's role supported additional process at that stage, and whether the police's acceptance of his alibi prevented it. Whether these objections justified interference under the inherent powers.

5. Ratio / Findings : Vinay had not supplied the trial court order sheets to establish the procedural stage. Even assuming that no witness had testified, the Magistrate could act under Section 190 at the cognizance stage: cognizance is of the offence, rather than only the persons included in the police report. Nahar Singh permits process against another implicated person on the material before the Magistrate, despite earlier process against a co-accused, without waiting for Section 319 trial evidence. The revisional court had considered the FIR, which expressly alleged that Vinay struck Dharmendra's head with a lathi. The offences were triable by the Magistrate, and the police's exclusion of Vinay after considering an alibi did not remove the Magistrate's independent power. The High Court found no ground for interference under the inherent provision.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC / Section 528 BNSS. The JMFC's summons and the revisional order remained in force, and Vinay remained an additional accused in the trial.

Vinay Sachdeva v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 54349/2024, 20/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (984) Prev Next

Headnote :- Public interest writ / service matters / stranger's request - Gurpal Singh v. State of Punjab; (2005) 5 SCC 136, was quoted on scrutiny of a PIL applicant's credentials, the precision and seriousness of the information, and possible oblique motives. Its discussion of Duryodhan Sahu states that PILs in service matters generally should not be entertained. Bunkar alleged financial irregularities of ₹25 lakh or more in a Chief Medical and Health Officer's office and sought changes to officials' postings, recovery and disciplinary action under clauses 11.6 and 16.5 of the Samvida Manav Sansadhan Manual 2021. The State objected that a stranger could not seek intervention in an employee's service conditions. The Court quoted the PIL safeguards and dismissed the petition.

Nonregistration of FIR / statutory police and magistrate remedies - Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India; (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence from the remedy for failure to do so: a complaint to the Magistrate under CrPC Sections 190 and 200. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P.; (2008) 2 SCC 409, provides for recourse to the Superintendent of Police under Section 154(3) and then to the Magistrate under Section 156(3). If prima facie satisfied, the Magistrate may direct registration and proper investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage; (2016) 6 SCC 277, reiterates that such grievances should ordinarily follow the statutory remedy. The local Division Bench in Shweta Bhadauria, W.A. 247/2016, recognised exceptions to the alternative-remedy rule and distinguished Lalita Kumari's police-duty ruling from entitlement to immediate writ mandamus. The State submitted that Bunkar had not approached the investigating agency. The Court dismissed the writ with liberty to approach the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS 2023, as stated in its order.

Exceptional Article 226 intervention / mala fides / statutory process - Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala; (2008) 3 SCC 542, recognises exceptional Article 226 intervention where the High Court is convinced that investigative power has been exercised mala fide and a clear case of abuse of power and noncompliance with Chapter XII is made out. The power is reserved for the rarest cases. Even then, the Court cannot dictate how the police investigate, but may insist on observance of the Code's process. The Bench quoted that qualification alongside the ordinary Magistrate remedy and dismissed the petition with liberty to pursue that remedy.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vinod Bunkar filed Writ Petition No. 26741/2024 under Article 226, alleging financial irregularities of ₹25 lakh or more in the office of the Chief Medical and Health Officer, Chhindwara, respondent 3. He said that he had complained and made a representation to the Collector, but neither criminal nor service-law action had followed. He sought an inquiry, recovery and changes to officials' postings under clause 11.6 of the Samvida Manav Sansadhan Manual 2021. He also sought recovery under clause 16.5 and suitable penal action under the IPC.

The State opposed the petition, submitting that Bunkar had not approached the investigating agency and that statutory remedies were available for seeking FIR registration. It also objected that a stranger was seeking service action against an officer who had not been impleaded in his personal capacity. The judge considered Supreme Court authorities on scrutiny of service-matter PILs, police inaction and Magistrate remedies, together with a Madhya Pradesh Division Bench decision. He dismissed the writ with liberty to approach the Magistrate, expressly referring to the BNSS provision in the operative order.

2. Precedents — Considered : Gurpal Singh v. State of Punjab and Others; (2005) 5 SCC 136, was relied on by the State and quoted by the Bench. It requires scrutiny of the applicant's credentials, the prima facie correctness and nature of the information, and whether it is precise and sufficiently serious.

Genuine public grievances must be balanced against reckless allegations and concealed personal motives. Its discussion of Duryodhan Sahu v. Jitendra Kumar Mishra states that PILs in service matters generally should not be entertained. Ashok Kumar Pandey and the other nested authorities warn against misuse of judicial time by impostor claims. The State invoked these principles in objecting to the requested posting and recovery directions and submitted that the officer had not been personally impleaded.

Aleque Padamsee v. Union of India; (2007) 6 SCC 171, distinguishes the police duty from the remedy for its breach. The police must register an FIR when information discloses a cognizable offence. If they fail to perform that Section 154 duty, the informant may complain to the Magistrate under Sections 190 and 200 CrPC. The decision distinguished Ramesh Kumari's police-duty question from the procedure to follow when the police do not act. It referred to All India Institute of Medical Sciences Employees' Union, Gangadhar Janardan Mhatre, Hari Singh and Minu Kumari.

Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala; (2008) 3 SCC 542, was quoted on exceptional Article 226 intervention where the High Court is convinced of mala fide exercise of investigative power and a clear case of abuse and noncompliance with Chapter XII is established. Even in those rare cases, the Court may insist on the Code's process but cannot prescribe the method of investigation. Its nested Gangadhar discussion explains the Section 190/200 complaint route and the Magistrate's options after preliminary inquiry, depending on whether a prima facie offence is disclosed. Sakiri Vasu v. State of U.P.; (2008) 2 SCC 409, provides for a written approach to the SP under Section 154(3), followed, if necessary, by an application under Section 156(3). The Magistrate may direct registration or proper investigation and monitor the investigation. Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe v. Hemant Yashwant Dhage; (2016) 6 SCC 277, followed Sakiri Vasu, including the Magistrate's discretion to recommend a change of investigating officer, and discouraged routine Article 226 petitions seeking FIR registration.

The local Division Bench decision in Shweta Bhadauria v. State of M.P., W.A. No. 247/2016, decided on 20 December 2016, was quoted on refusal of FIR mandamus when the alternative CrPC remedies under Sections 154(3), 156(3), 190 and 200 have not been used, subject to the four Whirlpool exceptions. It distinguished Lalita Kumari v. Government of U.P.; (2014) 2 SCC 1, which concerns the police's duty to register an FIR, from entitlement to bypass the alternative remedies and obtain a writ.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 was the jurisdiction invoked. CrPC Section 154 concerned registration of cognizable information, with recourse to the SP under subsection (3). Section 156(3) enabled Magistrate-directed registration or proper investigation where warranted; Sections 190 and 200 provided the private-complaint route. The quoted Divine Retreat Centre exception concerned compliance with Chapter XII of the CrPC. The operative order permitted an approach to the Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC or Section 223 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023. Penal action under the IPC was requested. Clauses 11.6 and 16.5 of the Samvida Manav Sansadhan Manual 2021 were cited in the requests for posting changes and recovery.

4. Issues : Whether the petitioner could use an Article 226 proceeding presented in public interest to obtain inquiry, posting changes, recovery and disciplinary action concerning service personnel on the financial-irregularity allegations, particularly without personally impleading the affected officer. Separately, whether the alleged inaction concerning possible criminality entitled him to immediate FIR-related mandamus without using the statutory police or Magistrate remedies.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court quoted Gurpal Singh's requirement of close scrutiny of PIL credentials and information, particularly in matters concerning an employee's service. The State had objected that Bunkar was a stranger seeking intervention in service conditions and that the officer had not been impleaded in his personal capacity. The Court set out the service-PIL principles before considering the authorities on criminal-law remedies.

Aleque Padamsee affirmed the duty to register information disclosing a cognizable offence and identified a Magistrate complaint as the remedy for police inaction. Sakiri Vasu explained the Section 154(3) and 156(3) remedies and the Magistrate's power to ensure proper investigation; Sudhir Bhaskarrao Tambe discouraged routine writ petitions bypassing that remedy. Shweta Bhadauria distinguished Lalita Kumari's police-duty ruling from entitlement to writ mandamus and recognised exceptions to the alternative-remedy rule. Divine

Retreat Centre preserved exceptional Article 226 intervention for mala fide exercise of investigative power where clear abuse and Chapter XII noncompliance are established. The State submitted that Bunkar had not approached the investigating agency. After setting out these authorities, the Court dismissed the petition and left him free to pursue the Magistrate remedy.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the writ petition. It granted Bunkar liberty, if he wished, to approach the competent Magistrate under Section 200 CrPC / Section 223 BNSS 2023 for redress.

Vinod Bunkar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 26741/2024, 16/10/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (985) Prev Next

Headnote :- Article 226 / directions concerning arrest and investigation - D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari; (2009) 10 SCC 488, was followed on the police's statutory responsibility for investigation. A court ordinarily cannot direct arrest, seizure, investigation from a particular angle or the filing of a charge sheet merely because an FIR has been registered. The quoted decision in M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra; (2003) 2 SCC 649, explains that arrest under Section 41 CrPC is discretionary. The power must be exercised cautiously because it affects liberty, rather than mechanically upon an accusation. Here, the petitioner sought arrest, monitored investigation, investigation by another agency and action against officers in a cheating FIR. The High Court declined to prescribe the method of investigation or direct arrest and the filing of a charge sheet.

Section 173(1) CrPC / completion without unnecessary delay - Police discretion over investigative steps and the outcome does not displace the duty to complete investigation without unnecessary delay. The officer must submit the appropriate final report, whether a closure report or a charge sheet. In Crime No. 246/2023, the Court applied Section 173(1) and directed completion as early as possible, with the steps required by law. The petitioner remained free to approach the Superintendent of Police with a grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vinod Sachdev filed Writ Petition No. 31696/2023 under Article 226 of the Constitution. Police Station Waraseoni, Balaghat, had registered Crime No. 246/2023 under IPC Sections 406, 417, 418 and 420. Sachdev alleged that the police had taken no substantial action, had not arrested the suspect and had made little progress. He sought the investigation record and a fair, transparent investigation considering all the material, completed within a time limit under the supervision of respondent 6. Alternatively, he sought investigation by another State or Central agency. He also sought an inquiry into the conduct of respondent officers 3 to 5 and other relief. The State opposed the petition.

The High Court distinguished the request to compel arrest and control investigative choices from the statutory duty to complete investigation promptly. It considered D. Venkatasubramaniam and Section 173(1) CrPC, declined to prescribe the police's method and outcome, and directed expeditious completion according to law. It also left Sachdev free to apply to the Superintendent of Police with a grievance.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam and Others v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and Another; (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted extensively. The High Court relied on it in refusing to order arrest and in explaining that directions to arrest and file a charge sheet would supervise the investigation. The Supreme Court had disapproved the earlier High Court's mechanical direction to record particular statements, arrest, seize property and file a charge sheet within six months without explaining why those steps were necessary. Investigation ordinarily falls within the police's statutory domain. Depending on the evidence, it may result in a charge sheet or a closure report; every investigation need not lead to arrest or seizure. The present judge applied that principle in declining to supervise the manner of investigation. The quoted case concerned Section 482 CrPC; Sachdev's petition was under Article 226.

Within that Supreme Court passage, M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra; (2003) 2 SCC 649, explained that Section 41 CrPC permits arrest on a cognizable accusation but does not invariably require immediate arrest. Arrest affects liberty and reputation, so the discretion must be exercised cautiously in the circumstances of the case. The High Court applied that qualification in refusing to direct arrest of the suspect. D. Venkatasubramaniam also quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala; (2008) 3 SCC 542, concerning a judicial order directing investigation on an anonymous petition filed in the High Court. The quoted passage required a reasonable opportunity of hearing for persons likely to be affected, particularly where the order had drastic consequences for reputation. D. Venkatasubramaniam further stressed reasoned restraint in exercising Section 482 jurisdiction.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 provided the jurisdiction for the present criminal-side writ petition. Section 173(1) CrPC required completion of investigation without unnecessary delay. The Court applied it to require prompt, lawful completion and an appropriate final report, leaving the outcome as a closure report or a charge sheet. Section 41 CrPC arose in the quoted M.C. Abraham discussion of discretionary arrest. Section 482 CrPC concerned the inherent powers discussed in the quoted Supreme Court decision.

4. Issues : Whether, after registration of the cheating and breach-of-trust FIR, the petitioner could obtain directions under Article 226 for immediate arrest, specified investigative steps, supervision or another investigating agency on the allegation of lack of progress, and whether a judicial direction requiring arrest and a charge sheet would dictate the investigation's course and outcome. Independently, whether Section 173(1) justified a direction to complete the pending investigation without unnecessary delay while leaving the method and the final report's conclusion to the investigator.

5. Ratio / Findings : Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam and its quoted M.C. Abraham passage, the judge held that registration of an FIR and dissatisfaction with progress did not make arrest obligatory. In conducting the statutory investigation, the police decide whether and when arrest or seizure is necessary and whether the evidence warrants a charge sheet or closure. A judicial direction to arrest and file a charge sheet would supervise the investigation and predetermine its outcome. The quoted Supreme Court decision criticised directions issued casually, without reasons or a hearing for the affected persons. In the present petition, the Court declined to supervise the manner of investigation or direct arrest and a charge sheet. It granted no transfer, monitoring or inquiry into officers' conduct.

Judicial restraint did not permit the investigation to remain pending indefinitely. The Court applied Section 173(1), which requires every investigation under the relevant CrPC chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer had to reach a lawful conclusion and submit the appropriate final report. The Court directed the officer to finish as early as possible and take the steps required by law. Sachdev remained free to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Balaghat, with a grievance, which would be considered according to law. The directions retained the officer's discretion over investigative steps and the outcome while requiring compliance with the duty of prompt completion.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court disposed of the Article 226 petition by directing the investigating officer to conclude investigation as early as possible and take the steps required by law. Sachdev was free to approach the Superintendent of Police, who would consider any grievance according to law. The Court refused to direct arrest or the filing of a charge sheet. It made no order transferring the investigation, monitoring it or directing a disciplinary inquiry.

Vinod Sachdev v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 31696/2023, 12/01/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (986) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence / murder / discovery / last seen / medical evidence - There was no eyewitness to Rahul's killing in Mor Pahadi forest. Witnesses saw Vinod Sharma take the twelve-year-old from the family home, buy treats and walk toward the forest with him. Rahul's body, a knife, danda, cap and slippers were later found at Vinod's instance. The post-mortem recorded eleven ante-mortem injuries, including a punctured trachea. The doctor considered the sharp injuries possible with the knife shown to him. The Bench assessed these circumstances together and affirmed the conviction under Section 302 IPC despite the absence of an eyewitness.

Section 27 discovery / recovery / medical opinion - Jagroop Singh v. State of Punjab; (2012) 11 SCC 768, was quoted for its acceptance of credible disclosure and weapon recovery supported by an unrebutted medical opinion that the recovered weapon could cause the fatal injuries. The High Court accepted the investigating officer's and accompanying witnesses' accounts that Vinod led them to Rahul's body and the articles. It also noted the doctor's opinion that the injuries were possible with the knife shown to him.

Section 313 explanation / incriminating circumstances / circumstantial chain - Jagroop Singh, referring to State of Maharashtra v. Suresh;

(2000) 1 SCC 471, states that failure to give an appropriate explanation, or a false answer, when incriminating circumstances are put under Section 313 CrPC may provide a missing link in completing the circumstantial chain. Jagroop Singh expressly added that it cited Suresh only to highlight the absence of any explanation of the circumstances put to the accused. Here, Vinod gave no explanation of the evidence that he took Rahul away and bought a knife, and did not account for his knowledge of the body's location. The Bench considered that failure alongside the proved discovery soon after death, the last sighting and the medical evidence.

Reasonable doubt / doubt arising from the evidence - Jagroop Singh quoted Sucha Singh v. State of Punjab; (2003) 7 SCC 643, for the distinction between a fair doubt arising from the evidence, reason and common sense, and an imaginary, trivial or merely possible doubt. The prosecution need not answer every conjectural hypothesis. The Bench found the combined last-seen, discovery and medical circumstances proved beyond reasonable doubt despite the absence of an eyewitness.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vinod Sharma appealed under Section 374 CrPC against the judgment of the Additional Sessions Judge, Sironj, Vidisha, dated 22 July 2010 in Sessions Trial No. 207/2008. He had been convicted under Section 302 IPC of murdering Rahul, the twelve-year-old son of his brother-in-law Mahesh, and sentenced to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹5,000 with a default stipulation. On 3 June 2008, Vinod's wife Shivkumari refused to return with him from her parental village, Chitawar. The prosecution alleged that he suspected an improper relationship between her and Mahesh, took Rahul toward Mor Pahadi forest, struck him with a danda and repeatedly cut him with a knife. The prosecution case began with the report Vinod himself made at Sironj police station on 5 June.

The police registered Crime No. 204/2008. Investigating officer Bharat Bhushan Sharma said that, during interrogation, Vinod disclosed where Rahul's body, a knife and danda lay in the forest and led the police there. A cap, slippers and other articles were recovered and documented in the presence of witnesses. The body was sent for post-mortem and the seized items for chemical examination. Mahesh and Mukesh described hearing Vinod disclose the location at the police station and accompanying the police to the recovery spot. Villagers Narmada Prasad and Raju Sharma also described that sequence. Shopkeeper Lalliram said that Vinod came with Rahul at about 7:30 a.m., bought biscuits, chocolate and other treats, and left toward the forest without collecting his change. Santosh Sharma separately saw the pair walking in that direction that morning. Shivkumari said that Vinod took Rahul from her house. A shopkeeper said that Vinod had bought an inexpensive household knife, although he could not recall the date. The medical officer found two blunt head contusions and multiple deep wounds caused by a sharp object on the neck, trunk, back and wrist, together with a punctured trachea and fractured ulna. Death resulted from haemorrhage and shock. The doctor considered injuries of this type possible with the knife later shown to him by the police, but had not recorded whether it bore blood.

Vinod challenged the conviction on the ground that there was no eyewitness and that the finding based on circumstantial evidence was perverse. The State supported the trial court's judgment. The Division Bench examined the investigating officer's evidence, the recovery and shopkeepers' accounts, the last-seen evidence, the post-mortem and Vinod's response under Section 313 CrPC. It dismissed the appeal.

2. Precedents — Considered : Jagroop Singh v. State of Punjab; (2012) 11 SCC 768, was quoted at length. It accepted credible disclosure and weapon recovery supported by medical opinion that the recovered blade could cause the injuries, and assessed the circumstantial chain as a whole. The High Court relied on that reasoning after accepting the accounts of several witnesses to the recoveries at Vinod's instance and the doctor's opinion that the injuries were possible with the knife. Jagroop Singh quoted State of Maharashtra v. Suresh; (2000) 1 SCC 471, for the proposition that failure to give an appropriate explanation, or a false answer, to incriminating circumstances put under Section 313 CrPC may provide a missing link in completing the chain. It expressly added that it referred to Suresh only to highlight the accused's failure to give any explanation of the circumstances put to him. In the present case, the Bench considered Vinod's failure to explain taking Rahul away, the knife-purchase evidence and his knowledge of the body's location together with the prosecution's last-seen, recovery and medical evidence.

Jagroop Singh also reproduced Sucha Singh v. State of Punjab; (2003) 7 SCC 643, which distinguishes a reasonable doubt arising from the evidence from an imaginary, trivial or merely possible doubt. The present Bench considered the circumstances together and rejected the contention that absence of an eyewitness required reversal of the conviction.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 302 was the sole conviction under appeal. Section 374 CrPC provided for the appeal. Section 27 of the Indian Evidence Act arose in the officer's account of Vinod's disclosure of the body and articles. Section 313 CrPC governed the opportunity to explain incriminating circumstances; the Court considered the failure to explain them alongside the prosecution evidence. The FIR and Merg formed part of the investigation narrative.

4. Issues : Whether the evidence that Vinod took Rahul toward the forest, knew and disclosed the body's hidden location, led the recovery of associated articles, together with the corroborative post-mortem findings, formed a reliable circumstantial chain sufficient to sustain Section 302 despite the absence of an eyewitness. Whether his failure to explain the circumstances put under Section 313 CrPC added weight to that chain, and whether the absence of an eyewitness gave rise to a reasonable doubt founded on the evidence.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Bench found that the investigating officer gave satisfactory answers in cross-examination and that his evidence was supported by the FIR, disclosure, panchnama, recovery and forensic-dispatch documents. Mahesh and Mukesh supported the essential sequence: at the police station, Vinod disclosed that the body and implements were in Mor Pahadi forest, and he accompanied the group to the spot where they were found. Narmada and Raju corroborated the journey and recovery. The Court rejected the suggested fabrication and found no material discrepancy undermining these accounts.

Lalliram placed Vinod with Rahul early that morning, buying treats and walking toward Mor Pahadi. Santosh also saw them heading there, and Shivkumari confirmed that they left together. The knife seller described a purchase by Vinod but could not specify its date; the knife was an ordinary household implement. The doctor recorded eleven blunt and sharp injuries, including a punctured trachea, and attributed death to haemorrhage and shock. He considered the sharp injuries possible with the knife shown to him, but had not recorded whether it bore blood. The medical evidence supported the account of the assault and homicidal death.

Vinod gave no explanation under Section 313 of the incriminating circumstances put to him and did not account for his knowledge of the body's location in the forest. The Bench considered this failure with the last-seen and recovery evidence and the medical findings. Jagroop Singh reproduced the missing-link proposition from Suresh, while expressly limiting its reference to highlighting the absence of any explanation. Sucha Singh's distinction between reasonable and speculative doubt, reproduced in Jagroop Singh, informed the rejection of the objection based on absence of an eyewitness. On the combined evidence, the Court held the murder proved beyond reasonable doubt and found no ground to interfere with the trial conviction.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the criminal appeal. It upheld the trial court's conviction under Section 302 IPC and sentence of life imprisonment and a fine of ₹5,000 with the default stipulation. Vinod was in jail and was directed to undergo the remainder of his sentence.

Vinod Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 655/2010, 01/02/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (987) Prev Next

Headnote :- Murder / Section 300 thirdly and the intended injury - Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab; AIR 1958 SC 465, sets out four inquiries: whether a bodily injury exists, its nature, whether the accused intended to inflict the particular injury found, and whether that injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A separate intention to kill is unnecessary under clause Thirdly. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Appeal (Cri.) 1078–1079 of 2005, distinguished culpable homicide under Section 299, murder under Section 300 and the intention and knowledge requirements of Section 304 Parts I and II. Anda v. State of Rajasthan; 1966 Cri LJ 171, emphasised that the intended injury must be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. Fatal skull fractures and brain rupture caused by the group assault with sharp and blunt weapons supported the Section 302 finding. Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P.; (2000) 1 SCC 319, Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P.; (2006) 11 SCC 444, Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P.; (2010) 9 SCC 799, State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal; (2019) 5 SCC 639, and Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P.; (2008) 15 SCC

725, were considered for the relevance of the weapon, body part, force and surrounding circumstances. A single blow does not automatically require reduction of a murder conviction; this case involved several accused and injuries. The Court quoted the cumulative requirements of sudden-fight Exception 4 from Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat; (2003) 9 SCC 322. It accepted the evidence of the group's departure after the liquor refusal, armed return and assault, and affirmed the murder conviction.

Attempt to murder / intention and act / effect of injury - Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh; (1988) 4 SCC 551, was considered for Section 307 IPC. The act must be done with such intention or knowledge and in such circumstances that, if it caused death, it would amount to murder. Intention is inferred from the weapons, manner of use, motive, force, site of injury and surrounding circumstances. Neither an injury capable of causing death nor an actual injury is essential, although actual hurt affects the statutory punishment. The Bench found that the armed group also inflicted medically proved injuries on Kalyan, Jyotiram and Sonpal when they intervened, and affirmed the Section 307/149 conviction.

Unlawful assembly / common object / individual overt acts - Section 149 IPC requires membership of an unlawful assembly of at least five persons with a common object under Section 141. Liability arises for an offence committed in prosecution of that object or one the members knew was likely to be committed in its prosecution. Dani Singh v. State of Bihar; (2004) 13 SCC 203, distinguishes a shared unlawful object from mere presence and explains that an overt act need not invariably be proved against every member. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar; (2011) 5 SCC 324, requires a clear finding that the common object was unlawful. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar; (1966) 1 SCR 18, explains the implied rioting ingredients and why separate charges for every lesser offence are not always necessary. More than five persons returned after the liquor refusal carrying farsa, ballam, axe and lathi, and attacked Shivprasad and the rescuers. The Bench inferred their common object from their collective conduct. It rejected the objection that an individual overt act had to be established against every appellant and also noted the acts attributed to them. Its conclusion described their shared purpose as "common intention"; the convictions were under Section 149.

Related and injured witnesses / careful scrutiny - Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal; (2016) 16 SCC 418, through its discussion of Darya Singh, requires careful examination of related or interested witnesses' presence and of infirmities in their evidence. Independent corroboration is not an inflexible requirement, and evidentiary quality matters more than the number of villagers examined. The Bench accepted Sukhram's account as corroborated by injured witnesses Kalyan, Jyotiram and Sonpal and by the medical findings. It found that the identified omissions did not undermine the prosecution case. It rejected the submissions that darkness prevented identification and that a fall caused the injuries, finding sufficient post-sunset light and injuries consistent with the attack.

Investigation omissions / delayed statements / eyewitness and medical evidence - The defence relied on delayed Section 161 CrPC statements of some injured witnesses, absence of blood on the seized weapons and failure to send the weapons to a ballistic expert. The Bench found no prejudice from the delay. On the evidence in this case, investigative shortcomings did not undermine the reliable direct testimony of the injured witnesses, which was corroborated by the post-mortem and injury reports.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : This common judgment decided Criminal Appeal Nos. 629/2009, brought by Vinoda, and 674/2009, brought by Gangadeen and others, against the same conviction of 17 August 2009 in Sessions Trial No. 137/2006 at Ambah, Morena. Barelal, appellant 5 in CRA 674/2009, died during the appeal; his appeal had already abated by the order of 20 October 2021. The surviving appellants were Vinoda, Gangadeen, Ramsundar, Ramnaresh and Mahaveer. Under IPC Section 148, the trial court imposed one year's rigorous imprisonment. Under Section 302/149, it imposed life imprisonment and a fine of ₹1,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Under Section 307/149, it imposed seven years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹500, with three months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Under Section 324/149, it imposed one year's rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹200, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The High Court affirmed all these convictions and sentences.

The prosecution alleged that, at about 7 p.m. on 13 March 2006, Mahaveer and Vinoda told complainant Sukhram's son Shivprasad, also called Sheoprasad, to bring liquor. When he refused, they abused him and left. They allegedly returned with a larger group carrying farsa, ballam, axe and lathis and attacked the unarmed Shivprasad. Sukhram and witnesses Kalyan, Jyotiram and Sonpal described the blows to Shivprasad and the injuries inflicted on the three witnesses when they came to his rescue. The parties knew one another. The police registered the FIR, arranged medical examinations and a post-mortem, prepared a map, seized clothes, soil and weapons, and recorded witness statements, some after hospitalisation. The medical officer found incised and blunt injuries to Shivprasad's head, skull fractures, rupture of the brain and haemorrhage. Death resulted from coma and was homicidal. Kalyan had several incised wounds on the head, chest and arm; Sonpal had incised head wounds; and Jyotiram had an incised chest wound. The complainant and injured witnesses gave eyewitness accounts that the Bench compared with the medical findings.

The accused pleaded not guilty. Gangadeen said that he had been in Udaypura, Ramsundar said that he had been working in Gwalior, and Vinoda said that he had been in Delhi. None examined a defence witness. In appeal, counsel disputed the place of occurrence, the available light, the medical consistency of the accounts and proof of a five-person unlawful assembly with a shared object. Counsel also relied on the witnesses' relationship with the deceased, contradictions, delayed police statements, absence of independent village witnesses and lack of blood on the recovered weapons. The High Court examined the nature and authorship of the homicide and injuries, the requirements of Sections 307 and 149, and witness reliability before deciding the surviving appeals.

2. Precedents — Considered : Virsa Singh v. State of Punjab; AIR 1958 SC 465, was quoted for the four requirements of Section 300 Thirdly. The prosecution must objectively establish a bodily injury and its nature, prove intention to inflict the particular injury found, and objectively establish that the injury was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death. A separate intention to cause death, or knowledge of the likely fatal consequence, is not a further requirement of that clause. The Bench applied this framework in rejecting the contention that absence of intention to kill excluded murder despite the fatal head injuries. Arun Nivalaji More v. State of Maharashtra, Appeal (Cri.) 1078–1079 of 2005, was reproduced for the sequence of inquiries under Section 299, Section 300 and its exceptions. It also distinguished the intention required by Section 304 Part I from the knowledge required by Part II. Anda v. State of Rajasthan; 1966 Cri LJ 171, emphasised that the intentionally inflicted injury must be sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death.

Mahesh Balmiki v. State of M.P.; (2000) 1 SCC 319, rejected a universal rule that a single blow excludes murder: the weapon, body part, force and manner of infliction are material. Pulicherla Nagaraju v. State of A.P.; (2006) 11 SCC 444, gave a non-exhaustive list of circumstances relevant to intention when distinguishing Section 302 from Section 304 Parts I and II. These included whether the weapon was carried or picked up, the body part targeted, force, sudden fight, preparation and undue advantage. Sangapagu Anjaiah v. State of A.P.; (2010) 9 SCC 799, inferred intention from a forceful crowbar blow to the skull on the facts of that case. State of Rajasthan v. Kanhaiyalal; (2019) 5 SCC 639, discussed why a single blow does not automatically exclude murder through Arun Raj and Ashokkumar Magabhai Vankar, and restated the Exception 4 requirements through Leela Ram. Bavisetti Kameswara Rao v. State of A.P.; (2008) 15 SCC 725, rejected a test based mechanically on the number of injuries and quoted Virsa Singh through Vedanayagam. These authorities formed the Court's survey of injury and mens rea principles. In the present group assault with several weapons and injuries, the Court found the head injuries fatal and affirmed murder. Dhirajbhai Gorakhbhai Nayak v. State of Gujarat; (2003) 9 SCC 322, set out the cumulative requirements of Section 300 Exception 4: absence of premeditation, a sudden mutual fight in the heat of passion, and absence of undue advantage or cruel or unusual conduct.

Hari Singh v. Sukhbir Singh; (1988) 4 SCC 551, explained that Section 307 requires the intention or knowledge necessary for murder, assessed from the act and surrounding circumstances irrespective of its eventual result. The Court stated this principle before examining the injuries inflicted on the three rescuers during the assault and sustaining the Section 307/149 conviction.

Dani Singh v. State of Bihar; (2004) 13 SCC 203, explained the requirements of Section 149: an unlawful assembly of at least five persons, a shared unlawful object under Section 141, conscious participation, and an offence committed in prosecution of that object or known by its members to be likely in its prosecution. Mere membership without the requisite common object is insufficient; an individual overt act need not invariably be established. Kuldip Yadav v. State of Bihar; (2011) 5 SCC 324, requires a clear, evidence-based finding that the common object was unlawful. Mahadev Sharma v. State of Bihar; (1966) 1 SCR 18, explained the relationship between Sections 143, 147, 148 and 149 and why separate charges for lesser rioting offences are not always necessary.

Harbeer Singh v. Sheeshpal; (2016) 16 SCC 418, quoted Darya Singh on careful scrutiny of related witnesses who shared the victim's hostility to the accused, including their actual presence and infirmities in their accounts. It rejected an inflexible requirement of independent corroboration and emphasised quality rather than quantity of evidence. The Bench applied that approach to Sukhram and the injured family witnesses, finding medical corroboration and no fatal contradiction. The State relied on Surjit Singh to support its submission that, without previous enmity, there was no reason for false implication, and on Meharban for its submission that minor discrepancies did not undermine the prosecution case. The defence invoked Ankush Maruti Shinde; (2019) 15 SCC 470, on fair investigation and trial. It relied on Prabhat, Noushad, Balakrushna Swain, Salveraj, Balaka Singh, Amar Singh, Vijaybhai Bhanabhai Patel and Vipin Jog in challenging omissions, credibility and delay. The Court rejected the factual objections on the evidence in this case, finding no prejudice from the delay.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 299 defined culpable homicide by reference to intention to cause death or bodily injury likely to cause death, or knowledge that death was likely. Section 300, particularly clause Thirdly, distinguished murder where the particular bodily injury intended was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, subject to the statutory exceptions. Section 302 prescribed punishment for murder. Section 304 Parts I and II were discussed as lesser homicide categories, but the murder convictions were affirmed. The cumulative conditions of Exception 4 were quoted. Section 307 required an act done with such intention or knowledge and in such circumstances that, if death resulted, it would be murder; the Court considered the attacks on the rescuers. Sections 141 and 149 concerned the unlawful common object, minimum membership and liability for offences committed in prosecution of that object or known to be likely in its prosecution. Section 148 concerned rioting with deadly weapons. The Section 324/149 conviction for hurt by dangerous weapons was also affirmed.

4. Issues : (i) Whether Shivprasad's death was homicidal and the proved assault and injuries established murder under IPC Sections 299–300 Thirdly and 302, rather than an offence under Section 304 or one falling within Exception 4. (ii) Whether the acts and mental element directed at the rescuers, considered with their proved injuries, sustained Section 307/149 and the accompanying Section 324/149 conviction. (iii) Whether an unlawful assembly of at least five persons with a shared unlawful object existed for liability under Sections 149 and 148, despite the objection concerning proof of each member's overt act. (iv) Whether the related and injured witnesses' accounts, medical findings, available light, delayed statements, discrepancies, absence of independent witnesses and omissions in weapon examination and investigation left a reasonable doubt about the identity of the assailants or the place and manner of attack.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor found incised and blunt head injuries, fractures of the frontal and parietal skull bones, and rupture of the brain, with death resulting from coma. This established homicidal death and dangerous fatal injuries. Under Virsa Singh's Section 300 Thirdly test, proof that the accused intended to inflict the particular bodily injury found, and that it was sufficient in the ordinary course of nature to cause death, makes separate proof of an intention to kill unnecessary. The Court examined intention and knowledge in light of the weapons, the body parts targeted and the force used, as discussed in the Supreme Court authorities. The group left after the refusal to bring liquor and returned with lathi, farsa, ballam and axe. Witnesses described blows to the head, and the medical findings corroborated the severe injuries. The Bench affirmed murder and did not convert the conviction to Section 304. Its survey quoted Dhirajbhai and the authorities discussing Exception 4 for the cumulative requirements of a sudden mutual fight, absence of premeditation, heat of passion, and absence of undue advantage or cruel or unusual conduct.

The medical examinations recorded incised wounds on Kalyan's head and other parts of his body, Sonpal's head and Jyotiram's chest. As explained in Hari Singh, Section 307 requires an act done with the intention or knowledge necessary for murder and in the requisite circumstances; an injury capable of causing death is not essential. The Court accepted the evidence that the same group attacked the rescuers with sharp weapons, considered their medical reports and affirmed the Section 307/149 conviction. The conviction and punishment under Section 324/149 also remained intact.

For Section 149, the Bench required at least five members and a common object within Section 141. Dani Singh excludes liability based on mere presence without the requisite shared object, but does not invariably require an individual overt act; Kuldip Yadav requires a clear finding that the common object was unlawful. The Court inferred the shared purpose from the liquor demand and refusal, the group's temporary departure and collective armed return, the attack on unarmed Shivprasad, and the assaults on those who came to his rescue. Sukhram and the injured witnesses also attributed particular acts to several participants. On this evidence of collective conduct and the attributed acts, the Court sustained Sections 148, 302/149, 307/149 and 324/149.

Relationship alone did not discredit Sukhram or injured witnesses Kalyan, Jyotiram and Sonpal. Following Harbeer Singh, the Court scrutinised their accounts, accepted their presence and found their account of the assault corroborated by the post-mortem and injury reports. It treated the identified police-statement omissions as nonmaterial and rejected the submission that a fall caused the skull and sharp injuries. It found identification possible in the post-sunset light at about 7 p.m. on 13 March. The judgment referred both to moonlight evidence and to residual light after sunset at approximately 6:25 p.m. The Court emphasised the quality rather than the number of witnesses and did not require independent village witnesses as an inflexible rule. Delays of roughly twenty days in recording some injured witnesses' Section 161 statements were challenged. Given the direct testimony corroborated by medical evidence, the Bench found no prejudice from the delay. The absence of blood on recovered weapons and the investigation lapses, including failure to send weapons for ballistic examination, did not outweigh that evidence on its assessment. The accused had asserted three alibis and examined no defence witness; the Court affirmed the convictions on the accepted eyewitness and medical evidence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed Vinoda's criminal appeal and the appeal of surviving appellants Gangadeen, Ramsundar, Ramnaresh and Mahaveer. It affirmed the convictions and sentences of 17 August 2009 in Sessions Trial No. 137/2006. Vinoda, Gangadeen and Ramnaresh were on bail; their bail bonds were cancelled, and they were directed to surrender before the trial court to serve the remainder of their sentences. Ramsundar and Mahaveer, already in jail, were to be informed of the result through the Jail Superintendent. Barelal's appeal had already abated on his death during its pendency. The trial record was to be returned immediately with a copy of the judgment.

Vinoda and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Gangadeen and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 629/2009 & 674/2009, 28/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (988) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence / complete chain / reasonable doubt - Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra; (1984) 4 SCC 116, and Pattu Rajan v. State of T.N.; (2019) 4 SCC 77, require every circumstance to be fully established, conclusive and consistent only with guilt. The circumstances must exclude reasonable hypotheses of innocence and form a complete chain. Satish Nirankari v. State of Rajasthan; (2017) 8 SCC 497, emphasises the quality and reliability of the links, rather than their number. Mohd. Faizan Ahmad v. State of Bihar; (2013) 2 SCC 131, explains that suspicion cannot replace proof, however grave the offence. Medical evidence established homicidal death. The prosecution did not prove the alleged motive, confessions or sighting, and the forensic material did not identify the perpetrators. All five appellants were given the benefit of reasonable doubt.

Extra-judicial confession / voluntariness / credibility / surrounding circumstances - Applying Sahib Hussain v. State of Rajasthan; (2013) 9 SCC 778, Sk. Yusuf v. State of W.B.; (2011) 11 SCC 754, and R. Kuppusamy v. State; (2013) 3 SCC 322, the Court accepted that a clear, true, voluntary and trustworthy extra-judicial confession may alone sustain conviction. The circumstances in which the confession was made and the witness's credibility require careful scrutiny. Corroboration strengthens credibility but is not an inflexible requirement in every case. Kusal Toppo v. State of Jharkhand; (2019) 13 SCC 676, reproduces the Sahadevan safeguards concerning material discrepancies and inherent improbabilities. Kulwinder Singh v. State of Punjab; (2006) 12 SCC 538, makes the timing, circumstances and recipient's credibility relevant; State of Rajasthan v. Kashiram; (2006) 12 SCC 254, illustrates the unreliability of an unnatural confession to persons in whom the accused had no reason to confide. Here, the unexplained visit to an isolated Kothi, conflicting accounts of the confessors and inconsistent timings undermined credibility. In its assessment, the Court treated the allegation that Bali had confessed as an improvement unsupported by the earliest record or the other two witnesses. It also rejected the alleged confession by Bihari.

Co-accused's confession / limited use under Section 30 - The discussion of Pancho and the Constitution Bench decision in Haricharan Kurmi v. State of Bihar, reproduced in Kusal Toppo, explains that a co-accused's confession is not substantive evidence against another accused under Section 3 of the Evidence Act. Under Section 30, the court must first assess whether the independent evidence satisfactorily supports the charge against the other accused. Only then may it consult the confession for assurance; the confession cannot be the starting point. The High Court quoted these limits when considering the alleged confessions implicating several persons. Neither a reliable confession nor an independently complete chain was established against the appellants.

Witness improvements / visibility / route / prompt disclosure - The Court did not reject the relatives merely because of their relationship with the deceased. Their material departures from the Dehati Nalishi and police statements nevertheless required close scrutiny. The time of the search shifted from after 8 p.m. to earlier hours when daylight might remain. The witnesses bypassed village houses and went to an isolated room. Their accounts differed on whether they returned to the village before proceeding to the culvert, and they claimed to follow blood drops despite admitted darkness and no reliable source of light. The spot map recorded neither drops along path E nor the points from which they claimed to see the accused. The first police information at 4 a.m. concerned a missing person. The failure promptly to name the assailants to relatives or police, together with the physical difficulty of identifying faces and a body from a distance, made the alleged sighting of disposal unreliable. The contradictions were material.

Last seen together / suspicion insufficient - The Court considered partly hostile Imrati Bai's claim that she had seen Hargovind with Bihari at about 7–7:30 p.m. It did not discard her evidence in its entirety. That timing conflicted with the alleged confession to an already completed killing at about 6 p.m. Her claimed disclosure to villagers was also absent from her police statement. Applying Mohd. Faizan Ahmad, Pattu Rajan and Satish Nirankari, the Court found at most suspicion against Bihari, without a proved chain linking him or the other appellants to the murder.

Human blood / inconclusive grouping - Applying Kansa Behera v. State of Orissa; (1987) 3 SCC 480, the Court held that human blood on an accused's clothing or weapon, without a group connecting it to the deceased, did not positively establish its source. The possibility that it was the accused's own blood remained. The deceased's articles indicated group A, while the blood on certain recovered lathis and clothing could not be grouped. The human origin of the blood in earth near the Kothi was not established. The Court also noted an unexplained delay in transit to the forensic laboratory, described as twelve days. With the other circumstances unproved, the recoveries did not establish guilt.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Hargovind was found dead under a culvert near the Datia–Gwalior road after disappearing from village Jakhoria on 7 December 2008. The prosecution alleged that Vir Singh, Bali alias Balkishan, Biharilal, Siyasharan, Ravindra and others took him from his home at about 11 a.m. to discuss compromise of a pending assault complaint. Vir Singh's wife Pista had made that complaint against Hargovind, his wife Jayanti Bai and his mother Manku. Hargovind's brother Phool Singh said that he, Jayanti Bai and Rati Bai went in search of him to Biharilal's room, or Kothi, in a field, where Biharilal confessed to killing him. In court, Phool Singh also attributed a confession to Bali. The witnesses claimed to have followed blood drops to the culvert and seen the accused carrying or depositing the body. The complaint also attributed later confessions to Pista, Lallan and Meera.

The Dehati Nalishi was recorded on 8 December at about 7 a.m. An earlier telephone report to the police at 4 a.m. had described Hargovind as missing. The police prepared the spot map, seized earth and articles, examined witnesses and obtained forensic and post-mortem reports. The medical evidence described ante-mortem head injuries caused by heavy blunt force, resulting in coma and homicidal death. The police charge-sheeted the five appellants under IPC Sections 302, 201 and 34, but found insufficient evidence to charge-sheet the other named persons. The Sessions Judge framed charges under Sections 302 and 201. On 29 December 2009, the Fast Track Court, Datia, convicted all five. Each received life imprisonment and a fine of ₹5,000, with two years' rigorous imprisonment in default, under Section 302, and three years' rigorous imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, under Section 201. They appealed under Section 374 CrPC, disputing the alleged motive, confessions and last-seen evidence, the changing witness accounts of time, the blood trail and the origin of the blood. The State supported the trial judgment. After finding homicidal death established, the Division Bench examined whether the appellants had inflicted the injuries or disposed of the body.

2. Precedents — Considered : Sahib Hussain v. State of Rajasthan; (2013) 9 SCC 778, and Sk. Yusuf v. State of W.B.; (2011) 11 SCC 754, require caution in assessing an extra-judicial confession. Although ordinarily weak evidence, it can sustain conviction when its clear words are proved and it is voluntary, truthful, made in a fit state of mind and credible. The High Court applied those qualifications. R. Kuppusamy v. State; (2013) 3 SCC 322, explains that corroboration is a prudential safeguard rather than an absolute requirement when the recipient is trustworthy and the confession is truly voluntary and reliable. Its discussion of Gura Singh and Sahadevan distinguishes a proved, reliable confession from a mere allegation that one was made. The Court expressly concluded that a trustworthy voluntary confession could be the sole basis of conviction, but found the alleged admissions unreliable on the evidence.

Kusal Toppo v. State of Jharkhand; (2019) 13 SCC 676, was quoted extensively. Its discussion of Gopal Sah and Pancho emphasises the danger of relying on a weak confession without cogent surrounding evidence. The Sahadevan safeguards require care, voluntariness, truth, confidence, absence of material discrepancies and inherent improbabilities, and proof in accordance with law; corroborative circumstances add credibility. The Constitution Bench principle in Haricharan Kurmi v. State of Bihar, reproduced through Pancho, distinguishes the maker's confession from its use against a co-accused. Under Evidence Act Sections 3 and 30, the latter is not substantive evidence. The court begins with independent evidence and may then consult the confession only for assurance of a conclusion supported by that evidence. The High Court included these principles in its framework for assessing the alleged confessions. Kulwinder Singh v. State of Punjab; (2006) 12 SCC 538, makes the circumstances, timing and recipient's credibility relevant. State of Rajasthan v. Kashiram; (2006) 12 SCC 254, rejected an unnatural claim of confession to persons in whom the accused had no reason to confide. The Court applied those considerations to the unexplained visit to Biharilal's isolated room and the inconsistent accounts of who had confessed.

Mohd. Faizan Ahmad v. State of Bihar; (2013) 2 SCC 131, explains that neither the gravity of the offence nor suspicion can replace legal proof. That principle was relevant to Imrati Bai's limited sighting. Pattu Rajan v. State of T.N.; (2019) 4 SCC 77, requires a conclusive, exclusive and complete chain of circumstances. It reproduces the five requirements in Sharad Birdhichand Sarda v. State of Maharashtra; (1984) 4 SCC 116: the circumstances must be fully established, consistent only with guilt and conclusive; they must exclude other hypotheses and form a complete chain leaving no reasonable conclusion of innocence. Satish Nirankari v. State of Rajasthan; (2017) 8 SCC 497, emphasises the quality and reliability of the links and excludes an inference based only on suspicion. The Bench considered the circumstances together and again applied Sharad Birdhichand Sarda when assessing the bloodstains after the other links had failed.

Kansa Behera v. State of Orissa; (1987) 3 SCC 480, explains that human blood on recovered clothing, without serological grouping, cannot positively connect the stains to the deceased; they could conceivably be the wearer's own blood. The High Court applied that limitation to the recovered weapons and clothes whose blood group was inconclusive, particularly because the deceased's group A was known.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 302 concerned murder, and Section 201 concerned disappearance of evidence or disposal of the body. Section 34 appeared in the charge-sheet, while the trial charges and operative acquittal were under Sections 302 and 201. Section 374 CrPC provided for the appeal against conviction. Evidence Act Sections 3 and 30 arose in the quoted Constitution Bench discussion of the limited use of a confession against a co-accused. The Court assessed the police statements, first report, spot map, forensic material and medical evidence.

4. Issues : (i) Whether the medically established homicidal death could be attributed beyond reasonable doubt to each appellant through a complete circumstantial chain, including the alleged compromise motive. (ii) Whether a confession by Biharilal, Bali or others was reliably proved despite changes in the recipient witnesses' accounts and the surrounding circumstances, and how a maker's confession differed from its possible use against a co-accused. (iii) Whether the family witnesses reliably saw the accused move or leave the body near the culvert, given the disputed search times, darkness, route and lack of prompt disclosure, and whether Imrati Bai's claimed sighting supplied a dependable last-seen link. (iv) Whether the earth, recovered lathis and clothing, medical evidence and serology independently connected the five appellants with homicide or disposal. Whether the combined circumstances established authorship of the offences, as distinct from merely proving homicidal death or creating isolated suspicion.

5. Ratio / Findings : The doctor established fatal ante-mortem blunt head injury and homicidal death, but that evidence did not identify the assailants. The alleged motive of demanding money for compromise was not proved. Pista was the complainant in the assault case, whereas Hargovind, Jayanti Bai and Manku faced prosecution. The Court considered that they would have had reason to seek compromise and found no reason for Vir Singh to press Hargovind for it. The witnesses' accounts of the alleged talks differed and material details were absent from their earlier statements. The allegation of an illicit relationship between Pista and Hargovind was also absent from the police statements. The Court found no proof that the accused had taken Hargovind away for compromise at 11 a.m.

Phool Singh, Jayanti Bai and Rati Bai were not disqualified merely because they were related to the deceased, but their evidence required meticulous scrutiny. Their original account placed the search after Hargovind failed to return by 8 p.m.; their court accounts shifted departure to 6–7 p.m. or 5:30 p.m. The Court regarded this as an attempt to suggest that enough daylight remained to follow blood drops. They bypassed the accused persons' village homes and went directly to Biharilal's isolated field room, about half an hour away. Their assertion that Hargovind had told them to go there was made only at trial. In their police statements, they said that they returned to the village after the alleged confession and later searched with villagers and a torch. Their court accounts made the culvert sighting immediate. This changed the possible time of the sighting by hours. They admitted darkness and lack of visibility. The spot map showed neither blood drops along the irregular field boundary marked E, nor the claimed viewing points or blood at the place where the body lay. Failure to collect earth from that route could, by itself, have resulted from faulty investigation, but it did not overcome the combined credibility problems. The movement of the cloth Kathri remained unexplained, and its alleged use to carry the body was disowned at trial. The witnesses claimed to have seen the body from a distance, behind persons carrying it horizontally by its limbs, without approaching it. They did not promptly disclose the assailants' names to villagers or relatives. Although Phool Singh had a phone, he gave no immediate police account of a confession or the body. The first police information at 4 a.m. concerned only a missing person. The Court rejected the alleged sighting of disposal and the witnesses' account because of these material contradictions and physical improbabilities.

The Court separately examined the alleged confessions. The earliest report attributed a confession only to Biharilal. In its assessment, the Court also treated Jayanti Bai and Rati Bai as attributing a confession only to him. Phool Singh's later inclusion of Bali was absent from his police account, as the investigator confirmed. The Court held that a confession by Bali had not been proved. The unexplained visit to the isolated room, disputed timing, lack of a natural reason for Biharilal to confide in the family members and conflicting accounts of subsequent events also undermined the alleged admission by Biharilal. The original complaint attributed statements to Pista, Lallan and Meera, but the police found insufficient evidence to charge-sheet them. Applying Sahib Hussain, Sk. Yusuf, R. Kuppusamy, Kusal Toppo, Kulwinder Singh and Kashiram, the Bench accepted that a reliable voluntary confession could sustain conviction, but declined to accept the disputed accounts in this case.

The quoted discussion in Pancho and Haricharan Kurmi also required independent evidence against a co-accused before a confession could be consulted for assurance under Sections 3 and 30.

The Court considered the evidence actually given by Imrati Bai despite her partly hostile testimony. Her claim that she had seen Hargovind alive with Biharilal at about 7–7:30 p.m. conflicted with Phool Singh's revised account of a confession to a completed killing at about 6 p.m. Her police statement did not record the supposed disclosure to villagers, and prompt communication of that sighting was not proved. At most, the account created suspicion against Biharilal. Mohd. Faizan Ahmad, Pattu Rajan and Satish Nirankari required reliable and conclusive links, rather than an inference drawn from the gravity of the crime, conjecture or doubtful circumstances.

The blood in the earth outside the Kothi had disintegrated, so its origin could not be established as human. Certain recovered lathis and clothing bore human blood, but its group could not be determined; the deceased's articles indicated group A. The Court also noted an unexplained interval in transit to the Gwalior forensic laboratory, described as twelve days over a distance of about 75 km. Applying Kansa Behera, it found no positive connection between those stains and Hargovind. In this circumstantial case, the failure to establish the other links made blood grouping crucial. The ungrouped human blood and recoveries could not complete the chain. Applying Sharad Birdhichand Sarda to the evidence as a whole, the Court held that the guilt of any appellant under Sections 302 or 201 had not been proved beyond reasonable doubt.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the Criminal Appeal. It set aside the convictions and sentences of 29 December 2009 in Sessions Trial No. 64/2009 and acquitted Vir Singh, Bali alias Balkishan, Biharilal, Siyasharan and Ravindra of offences under IPC Sections 302 and 201. As the appellants were in jail, it directed their immediate release unless required in another case. It also directed return of fines if deposited, provision of a free copy of the judgment to the appellants and immediate dispatch of the judgment and record to the trial court for information and compliance.

Vir Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 23/2010, 21/10/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (989) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail cancellation / forged medical record / M. Murugeson distinguished - The applicant doctor contended that the High Court exceeded its jurisdiction under State v. M. Murugeson when, after cancelling another accused's anticipatory bail, it expressed the expectation that departmental and criminal action would follow. The Court distinguished disposal of an ordinary bail application under Section 439 from cancellation sought on the ground that a forged certificate had been used to obtain bail. The certificate's authenticity was central to cancellation. After finding it forged on the State's enquiry report, the cancellation court could consider the prosecutor's undertaking. The earlier order expressed hope and belief that the undertaking would be honoured. The doctor's subsequent promotion to In-charge Specialist, despite a request for a departmental enquiry, showed that the observation had not influenced the administrative authorities.

Forged material before court / Section 340 CrPC - Referring to State Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Pankaj Chaudhary; (2019) 11 SCC 575, the High Court held that a separate preliminary enquiry and a hearing for the suspect are not invariably required where the material on record permits a prima facie opinion for action under Section 340. Here, the police had heard the doctor, examined the hospital records and reported that the certificate was forged. The earlier cancellation court had considered that report. The High Court stated that it could have directed prosecution of the doctor and Ragini Pandey under Section 340 concerning the document used to obtain anticipatory bail. It had instead recorded the prosecutor's undertaking that departmental and criminal action would be taken.

Regular bail / fraud affecting judicial proceedings - The doctor's first application under Section 439 in a case under IPC Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B was refused. The medical certificate purported to show that Ragini Pandey was in hospital, supporting an alibi disputed by the prosecution. The State enquiry found that hospital documents had been fabricated. The Court rejected the doctor's explanation concerning identification of patients on OPD slips because the record also showed purported inpatient admission and examination. It treated the alleged use of the forged certificate to obtain anticipatory bail as a serious interference with the administration of justice and held that the case was not fit for bail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dr Virendra Singh Gaur, arrested on 4 February 2021 in Crime No. 101/2018 at Police Station Dabra, sought his first regular bail under Section 439 CrPC. The alleged offences were IPC Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B. According to the prosecution, while working as a doctor at Government Hospital, Dabra, he prepared a false medical certificate or prescription for Ragini Pandey. She used it to obtain anticipatory bail in MCRC No. 7358/2017 on 10 July 2017. The document showed her admitted and treated from 4 to 5 June 2017. The complainant maintained that she was present at the incident and at the police station, where CCTV had recorded her presence. Mukesh Parashar sought cancellation of her anticipatory bail in MCRC No. 9375/2017. On 27 March 2018, the High Court found the certificate forged and cancelled the bail. The Supreme Court dismissed her challenge in SLP (Criminal) No. 4986/2018 on 12 June 2018 and allowed seven days for surrender. The present judgment records that she had not surrendered.

During the cancellation proceedings, the police investigated the hospital records. The State submitted an enquiry report stating that the OPD register, other hospital documents and the certificate were forged and that Pandey had never been admitted or treated at Dabra District Hospital. The police heard Gaur and recorded his statement. He admitted that he was not on duty on 3 or 4 June 2017, but explained that he had covered emergency duty because the doctor assigned to it was late. In the cancellation order, the Court considered the report and recorded the Public Prosecutor's undertaking that departmental and criminal action would be taken. It expressed the hope that the undertaking would be honoured. An FIR was subsequently registered, and Gaur was arrested.

Gaur submitted that hospital employees prepared OPD slips and entered patients' names, while doctors examined the patients brought to them and wrote prescriptions. He relied on the grant of bail to employee Jaswant by the trial court on 21 January 2021. The State opposed release, submitting that a false certificate prepared to obtain anticipatory bail or support an alibi amounted to fraud on the Court. The judge referred to the separate application seeking withdrawal of the observation in paragraph 36 of the cancellation order. In that application, a document showed that Gaur had been promoted to In-charge Specialist on 4 October 2018, although the CMHO had requested a departmental enquiry on 3 July 2018. The Court considered that this showed that the observation had not influenced the authorities. The present application sought regular bail.

2. Precedents — Considered : State Represented by Inspector of Police v. M. Murugeson and Another was relied on by Gaur for the proposition that, after deciding an ordinary bail application under Section 439, the High Court's jurisdiction in that matter ends and it should not issue further directions. The Court distinguished the earlier Pandey proceeding because it concerned cancellation of bail obtained through a forged medical record. Determining the record's authenticity was necessary to decide cancellation. The Court therefore rejected the contention that Murugeson precluded consideration of the prosecutor's undertaking or the expression of hope and belief in the earlier order.

State Govt. of NCT of Delhi v. Pankaj Chaudhary; (2019) 11 SCC 575, was relied on in the discussion of Section 340 CrPC. The High Court understood it as permitting action on a prima facie opinion formed from the record without invariably conducting a further preliminary enquiry and hearing the suspect. The police had already heard Gaur during their enquiry, and the cancellation court had considered the report finding the certificate false. The High Court reasoned that it could have directed prosecution of Gaur and Ragini Pandey under Section 340 without further notice in these circumstances. Instead, it had recorded the Public Prosecutor's undertaking concerning departmental and criminal action.

The High Court's cancellation order of 27 March 2018 formed the background to the present case and contained the contested observation.

3. Statutes considered : Section 439 CrPC governed Gaur's first regular-bail application. IPC Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B were the alleged offences concerning the forged medical record. Section 340 CrPC was discussed as a possible means of initiating prosecution concerning a forged document filed in judicial proceedings and affecting the administration of justice. Referring to Pankaj Chaudhary, the Court considered that the existing record and prior police hearing permitted that course, while the earlier order had instead recorded the prosecutor's undertaking.

4. Issues : Whether the seriousness of the alleged preparation and use of a forged hospital certificate to obtain another person's anticipatory bail, and the material supporting that allegation, justified refusing the doctor's first regular bail despite his explanation concerning OPD duties and the separate grant of bail to an employee. Whether the rule in M. Murugeson concerning further directions after disposal of an ordinary bail application invalidated the earlier cancellation court's observation on the prosecutor's undertaking. This required consideration of the authenticity question before the cancellation court and whether Section 340 permitted a response to the document allegedly used to defraud it.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court relied on the police enquiry, in which Gaur had been given an opportunity to explain the certificate, and on the hospital register and other records reported to be fabricated. It rejected his general explanation that doctors do not verify the name on an OPD slip because the allegation was not confined to treatment as an outdoor patient. The documents also purported to show Pandey admitted and examined by him as an indoor patient. The cancellation court had considered the report and found the certificate forged. The Court regarded issuing such a certificate for use in criminal proceedings as direct interference with the administration of justice by playing fraud on the Court.

The Court distinguished M. Murugeson. Although disposal of an ordinary application under Section 439 ends the court's jurisdiction in that bail matter, the earlier cancellation proceeding concerned the very use of a forged record to obtain anticipatory bail. The cancellation court had to examine the document. Its consideration of the prosecutor's undertaking after finding the certificate forged remained connected to that question. Paragraph 36 expressed hope and belief that the undertaking would be honoured. The doctor's promotion to In-charge Specialist after the CMHO's request for an enquiry showed that the observation had not influenced the administrative authorities.

Referring to Pankaj Chaudhary, the High Court considered that the record and the doctor's earlier police hearing could have supported Section 340 action without further notice in these circumstances. It emphasised its responsibility to respond to fraud affecting its proceedings. Considering the alleged use of the forged certificate to obtain anticipatory bail and the enquiry material, it held that the case was not fit for regular bail.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the first application for regular bail under Section 439 CrPC.

Virendra Singh Gaur v. State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 11166/2021, 01/04/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (990) Prev Next

Headnote :- Bail cancellation / forged medical certificate / M. Murugeson distinguished - The doctor sought recall of paragraph 36 of the earlier order cancelling Ragini Pandey's anticipatory bail. That paragraph recorded the prosecutor's undertaking to take departmental and criminal action concerning the forged hospital certificate used to obtain bail and expressed the Court's hope that the undertaking would be honoured. State v. M. Murugeson concerned further directions after disposal of an ordinary bail application under Section 439. The Court distinguished it because the sole ground for cancellation was that a forged document had been used to obtain anticipatory bail. The cancellation court had to examine the certificate and had found, on the State's report, that it was forged. It could not ignore fraud affecting its proceedings. The paragraph expressed hope rather than issuing a binding direction. The subsequent grant of charge of the post of Specialist to the doctor, despite the CMHO's request for an enquiry, showed that the observation had not prejudiced the departmental authorities.

Section 340 CrPC / prima facie case and expediency - State (NCT of Delhi) v. Pankaj Chaudhary; (2019) 11 SCC 575, was quoted for two preconditions: the material before the court must prima facie support a complaint concerning an offence within Section 195(1)(b)(i), and an inquiry must be expedient in the interests of justice. The quoted reasoning in Amarsang Nathaji and Iqbal Singh Marwah explains that a preliminary inquiry is optional. Intentional false evidence or fabrication and the effect on the administration of justice require consideration. A complaint does not follow automatically from every inconsistent statement or even every prima facie offence. The police had recorded the doctor's statement, and the cancellation court had considered the State's report finding the certificate forged. The High Court stated that it could have exercised power under Section 340 but had left further action to the State by recording the prosecutor's undertaking.

Successive Section 482 petition / suppression of material facts / Section 362 - The doctor had withdrawn an application filed in 2018 to quash the FIR and another filed in 2019 to recall the same observation. Nevertheless, he declared in the present petition that no petition on the same subject had been filed. The Court found that the relief sought in the 2019 application was identical in substance and that the declaration suppressed the earlier proceedings. It held that repeating the withdrawn recall request would amount to review prohibited by Section 362 CrPC. It dismissed the petition with costs of ₹10,000, payable to the Registry within thirty days, and directed the trial court to decide the criminal case strictly on the evidence before it.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Dr Virendra Kumar Gaur filed MCRC No. 16495/2021 under Section 482 CrPC to recall the part of paragraph 36 of the High Court's order of 27 March 2018 in MCRC No. 9375/2017 concerning departmental and criminal action against him. A prosecution under Section 307 IPC was pending against Ragini Pandey and her husband. In seeking anticipatory bail, Pandey relied on a certificate issued by Gaur to show that she was admitted to Government Hospital, Dabra, rather than present at the alleged occurrence. She obtained anticipatory bail on 10 July 2017. On the complainant's application for cancellation, the State enquired into the certificate and reported that it was forged and that Pandey had neither been admitted nor treated at the hospital. The High Court cancelled her anticipatory bail on 27 March 2018. The Supreme Court dismissed her SLP (Criminal) 4986/2018 on 12 June 2018 and allowed seven days for surrender. The present order records that she had not surrendered. The police registered Crime No. 101/2018 against Gaur under IPC Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B. He had been arrested, and his regular-bail application, MCRC 11166/2021, was dismissed by a separate detailed order on the same day as the present petition. The bail application and the recall petition were decided separately.

In paragraph 36 of the cancellation order, the Public Prosecutor stated that departmental and criminal action would be taken against Gaur and the others in view of the police findings. The Court expressed its hope and belief that the undertaking would be honoured. Gaur contended that this was an unauthorised direction made after deciding bail and without hearing him. Relying on State v. M. Murugeson, he claimed prejudice in departmental proceedings and at his forthcoming trial. The State and the complainant opposed recall. The police had recorded Gaur's statement before reporting that the certificate was forged. The complainant produced the order of 4 October 2018 giving Gaur charge of the post of Specialist, although the CMHO had requested a suitable departmental enquiry from the Health Commissioner on 3 July 2018. The Court noted that Gaur had not shown that he faced such an enquiry. It considered whether paragraph 36 had imposed a binding direction or caused prejudice.

The complainant also referred to Gaur's earlier applications. MCRC 48280/2018 sought quashing of the FIR and was withdrawn on 28 June 2019 after argument. MCRC 21485/2019 sought recall of the observations in the cancellation order of 2018 and was also withdrawn after arguments. Yet the present petition declared that it was the first on the subject and that no such petition had been filed or was pending. The High Court compared the prayers, particularly the recall prayer in the 2019 application, when considering Section 362 and costs.

2. Precedents — Considered : State Represented by Inspector of Police v. M. Murugeson and Another was relied on by Gaur. It was described as holding that, once an ordinary bail application under Section 439 had been decided, the court's jurisdiction in that matter ended and further directions were unwarranted. The High Court distinguished that situation. The earlier proceeding in 2018 concerned cancellation of Pandey's anticipatory bail because she had obtained it by relying on a forged medical certificate. The certificate's authenticity was central to that decision, and the cancellation court had found it forged on the State's report. Recording the prosecutor's undertaking and expressing hope that it would be honoured was therefore not an extraneous direction after disposal of an ordinary bail application.

State (NCT of Delhi) v. Pankaj Chaudhary; (2019) 11 SCC 575, was quoted at length and applied. It stated two preconditions for Section 340 action: the material must prima facie support a complaint concerning an offence under Section 195(1)(b)(i)

CrPC, and an inquiry must be expedient in the interests of justice. Its quotation from Amarsang Nathaji v. Hardik Harshadbhai Patel explains that a contradictory statement alone does not always justify prosecution. The court must consider intentional false evidence or fabrication, the overall circumstances and the probable consequences of prosecution when assessing the interests of justice. A preliminary inquiry is permitted but is not mandatory if the record already enables the court to form the requisite opinion. Even then, a complaint need not follow as a matter of course. The nested Constitution Bench passage in Iqbal Singh Marwah v. Meenakshi Marwah makes the effect on the administration of justice, rather than the magnitude of private injury alone, central to expediency. K.T.M.S. Mohd. v. Union of India was referred to within the quoted discussion on intentional false evidence and the interests of justice; Pritish v. State of Maharashtra supported the explanation that a complaint is not mandatory as a matter of course. The passage also records that Chintamani Malviya v. High Court of M.P. reiterated the same principle. Here, the police had heard Gaur and reported on the certificate. The Court reasoned that it could have exercised Section 340 power but had instead left further action to the State.

The Supreme Court had dismissed Pandey's SLP against cancellation of anticipatory bail. Gaur's regular-bail application was dismissed in a separate order on the same day as the present recall petition.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to recall an observation in an earlier criminal order. The Court applied Section 362 to the successive request for the same recall relief after withdrawal of the earlier application, holding that it would amount to prohibited review. It also found suppression of the earlier proceedings. Section 340 CrPC, read with Section 195(1)(b)(i), was discussed as a possible response to forged material filed in judicial proceedings, subject to a prima facie foundation and expediency in the interests of justice. A preliminary inquiry is not invariably necessary, and a complaint does not follow automatically. Section 439 CrPC arose in the ordinary-bail authority distinguished by the Court and in Gaur's separate regular-bail proceeding. IPC Sections 420, 465, 466, 468 and 120-B were the offences registered against Gaur concerning the certificate. Section 307 IPC concerned the background prosecution against Pandey and her husband.

4. Issues : Whether paragraph 36 of the anticipatory-bail cancellation order of 2018 imposed a binding direction prejudicing Gaur without a required hearing, or permissibly addressed the forged certificate on which cancellation depended. Whether the rule in Murugeson concerning further directions after disposal of an ordinary bail application applied, and whether the qualified procedure under Section 340 permitted the court to respond to the suspected fraud. Independently, whether the present Section 482 recall petition was maintainable after withdrawal of a materially identical recall application, particularly when it declared that no petition on the same subject had been filed, or whether it sought review prohibited by Section 362.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the terms of paragraph 36. The prosecutor had undertaken that departmental and criminal action would be taken, and the Court had expressed its hope and belief that the undertaking would be honoured. The observation was not a binding command. The police had heard Gaur before submitting their report on the certificate. Despite the CMHO's request for an enquiry, the department later gave him charge of the post of Specialist, and he had not shown that any departmental enquiry was pending against him. The Court concluded that the observation had neither influenced nor prejudiced the departmental authorities. It considered the claimed effect on the forthcoming trial separately.

The forged certificate had been filed to obtain anticipatory bail. The cancellation court was therefore required to examine its authenticity and had concluded, on the State's report, that it was forged. The rule in M. Murugeson concerning directions after disposal of an ordinary Section 439 bail application was distinguishable. The Court explained that it could not ignore the use of a forged document in judicial proceedings. Pankaj Chaudhary recognised power under Section 340 where the record prima facie supports the requisite complaint and an inquiry is expedient in the interests of justice, without requiring a separate preliminary inquiry in every case. In the earlier order, the Court had recorded the prosecutor's undertaking and left further action to the State.

The Court then compared the earlier proceedings with the declaration in the present petition. The application filed in 2018 sought quashing of the FIR and had been withdrawn after argument. The application under Section 482 in 2019 sought recall of the observation in the cancellation order of 2018 and had also been withdrawn. The present petition sought the same recall while declaring that no earlier petition on the same subject had been filed. Counsel's lack of involvement in the earlier cases did not excuse the applicant's failure to disclose them. The Court held that the applicant had not approached it with clean hands. It found suppression of material facts and held that repeating the withdrawn recall request would amount to review prohibited by Section 362. It dismissed the petition with costs of ₹10,000. Addressing the concern that the cancellation observations might affect the pending prosecution, it directed the trial court to decide strictly on the evidence coming before it.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application to recall paragraph 36 of the order of 27 March 2018. Gaur was directed to deposit costs of ₹10,000 in the High Court Registry within thirty days from the date of the order. The trial court was directed to decide the pending case strictly on the evidence before it.

Virendra Kumar Gaur v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 16495/2021, 01/04/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (991) Prev Next

Headnote :- Earlier complaint / request for action at another police station / quashing - The applicants contended that the wife had withdrawn her complaint of 19 October 2024 to Panipat police and that her later FIR at Karera was therefore false. The Court examined the communication and police diary filed with the petition. In the communication, she reiterated allegations of abuse and dowry demands. She also alleged that her husband and his parents had threatened her through calls from different numbers. Fearing for her life if she returned to Panipat, she asked that action be taken by Karera police in Shivpuri, where her parental home was situated. The Panipat diary recorded that no further legal action was sought there because she wanted investigation at her parental-home police station. The Court held that the communication did not amount to a withdrawal of the allegations. It therefore rejected the applicants' contention that the later FIR should be quashed under Section 482 on that basis.

Divorce petition / subsequent matrimonial FIR / Pratibha - The husband filed a divorce petition under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act on 24 September 2024. The wife complained to Panipat police on 19 October and lodged the FIR at Karera on 7 January 2025. Applying Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi; (2007) 12 SCC 369, the Court held that the earlier divorce petition and the time spent attempting reconciliation did not, by themselves, establish that the subsequent criminal complaint was false or retaliatory. As explained in Pratibha, the inquiry at the FIR stage concerns whether the complaint's allegations prima facie disclose a cognizable offence. Extraneous inferences from divorce litigation or delay cannot replace that inquiry. Civil and criminal proceedings may coexist. The applicants also relied on Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand. The FIR alleged dowry demands, repeated beatings by the husband and his parents, an assault by all four applicants on 21 August 2024 and the wife's continued residence with her parents. The Court dismissed the petition.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Virendra Parihar, his mother, father and elder brother sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of FIR Crime No. 13/2025, lodged by his wife, respondent No. 2, at Karera Police Station, Shivpuri, on 7 January 2025. She alleged that she married applicant No. 1 on 10 May 2023 and that her parents spent about ₹15 lakh on dowry. About a month after the marriage, her in-laws allegedly began demanding a four-wheeler and complaining that too little dowry had been given. She alleged that her husband and his parents taunted her, said that she was not to their liking and that he could have married a woman of his choice. She alleged frequent beatings by the husband and his parents and an assault by all four applicants on 21 August 2024. She informed her brother Sonu Tomar and called him to the matrimonial home. She then returned to her parental home and continued to live there. According to her, her parents repeatedly tried to persuade the in-laws to take her back, but they refused.

The husband filed a divorce petition under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act on 24 September 2024. The wife made an earlier complaint to the police at Tahsil Camp, Panipat, on 19 October 2024. The applicants contended that she subsequently withdrew that complaint and that the Karera FIR was a false counterblast to the divorce petition. They relied on the earlier complaint, filed as Annexure B, and her subsequent communication and the Panipat police diary, filed as Annexure F. They also pointed to differences between the complaints: the earlier complaint mentioned ₹10 lakh, whereas the FIR referred to marriage expenditure of ₹15 lakh, and the earlier complaint did not specify the date on which she was allegedly ousted. Counsel relied on Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand. The State opposed quashing.

In the communication reproduced in the order, the wife reiterated her complaint of assault, abuse and dowry demands. She stated that she had been excluded from the matrimonial home and that, after she returned to her parental home, her husband and his parents threatened through calls from different numbers to kill her if she came to Panipat. Fearing for her life, she asked that action be taken by Karera police at her parental home rather than by Panipat police. The reproduced Panipat diary recorded that she did not seek legal action there and wanted action at her parental-home police station; it accordingly sought closure of the local file. After reading these documents, the Court treated the communication as a request for action at another police station, rather than a withdrawal of the allegations.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicants relied on Preeti Gupta v. State of Jharkhand.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi and Others; (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted and applied. In that case, the Supreme Court rejected the quashing of a matrimonial FIR on extraneous considerations and an adverse inference from the interval between the wife's departure from the matrimonial home and her complaint, during which efforts at reconciliation had continued. A divorce petition under Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act did not bring an otherwise maintainable criminal proceeding to an end. Civil and criminal proceedings remain separate and independent even when they arise from the same facts. To determine whether a cognizable offence is prima facie disclosed, the Court must examine the allegations in the complaint or FIR. It cannot replace that inquiry with findings in an investigation report or extraneous adverse inferences. The High Court applied Pratibha to reject the argument based on the divorce petition preceding the FIR and to explain the wife's efforts to return to the matrimonial home before complaining.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to quash FIR Crime No. 13/2025. The Court applied the limits on that power explained in Pratibha, requiring an examination of whether the complaint or FIR allegations prima facie disclose a cognizable offence, without relying on extraneous considerations to terminate the proceedings. Section 13 of the Hindu Marriage Act concerned the husband's divorce petition and its chronological relationship to the complaint. The matrimonial proceeding did not itself bring the criminal proceeding to an end.

4. Issues : Whether the wife's complaint of 19 October 2024, her subsequent communication and the Panipat police diary established that she had withdrawn her allegations and thereby discredited the Karera FIR. Whether the husband's divorce petition of 24 September, the interval between the complaints and the differences alleged by the applicants justified treating the FIR of January 2025 as a counterblast and quashing it under Section 482, despite its allegations of dowry demands, physical abuse, threats and departure to the parental home.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined Annexure F rather than accepting counsel's repeated assertion that the complaint had been withdrawn. The communication reiterated the allegations and added that the wife had been threatened if she returned to Panipat. She explained that she feared for her safety and wanted action by Karera police at her parental home, rather than further investigation by Panipat police. The diary similarly recorded that she did not seek legal action at Panipat and wanted investigation at her parental-home police station. The Court held that these documents did not establish withdrawal of the complaint and rejected the applicants' contention as misconceived. It also criticised counsel's attempt to mislead the Court by presenting the communication as a withdrawal.

On the contention that the FIR was retaliatory, the Court applied Pratibha. Divorce litigation and a criminal complaint may proceed independently. The filing of a divorce petition before a complaint does not, by itself, establish that the complaint is malicious or justify disregarding its allegations. The Court considered that the wife appeared to have tried to preserve the marriage and decided to disclose the alleged cruelty only after reconciliation or reunion no longer seemed possible. Her earlier patience and the efforts at reunion described in the FIR could not, on that basis, justify treating her allegations as false and baseless. The Court also stated that findings recorded by a civil court are not binding on a criminal court and vice versa. It rejected the grounds based on the supposed withdrawal and the timing of the divorce petition and, considering the circumstances as a whole, found no basis to quash the FIR.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the petition under Section 482 to quash FIR Crime No. 13/2025 at Karera. The FIR against the four applicants remained unquashed.

Virendra Parihar and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 14779/2025, 09/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (992) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 306 IPC / financial fraud and suicide / threshold inference - The Court rejected the proposition that a debt created by fraud could never support a prosecution for abetment of suicide. It applied Chitresh Kumar Chopra and Praveen Pradhan on intentional instigation which may be inferred from conduct and circumstances without express words. Sanju, Gangula Mohan Reddy, M. Mohan, Kishori Lal and Amalendu Pal require the mental element, positive participation and causal connection under Section 107; Orilal Jaiswal cautions against finding abetment from ordinary discord and an unusually sensitive reaction alone. Here, the applicant and his partner allegedly obtained the brothers' signatures on loan papers and vouchers, fraudulently created a KCC facility, withdrew ₹5.75 lakh and transferred money to the applicant's firm. A liability of about ₹7 lakh including interest remained, and the applicant allegedly refused repayment and threatened Dilip Bhartiya before his death by hanging. The Court considered the possible consequences for mortgaged property and the brothers' finances sufficient to support an inference of abetment for prosecution on these allegations. It distinguished V.P. Singh and Netai Dutta, relied on by the applicant, as cases concerning disciplinary or employment grievances rather than the alleged deception and debt burden here.

Cheating / fraudulent KCC withdrawal - The applicant allegedly took Pradeep and Dilip to the bank, obtained their signatures on loan papers and vouchers, procured a Kisan Credit Card facility despite the father's subsequent objection to borrowing, and diverted ₹5.75 lakh from the relevant accounts. The Court held that those allegations prima facie disclosed cheating under IPC Section 420. It assessed that offence separately from the allegation of abetment of suicide under Section 306.

Charge and quashing threshold / P. Vijayan - Applying Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander, the Court formed a tentative view of the circumstances from which instigation could be inferred, without assessing the record to determine guilt. P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala permits discharge where the material gives rise only to suspicion rather than grave suspicion. The judge must sift the police record and apply a judicial mind to whether there is sufficient ground to proceed, without weighing the evidence and probabilities as at trial. The alleged loan burden and fraudulent withdrawals supplied sufficient material for prosecution. The Court refused to quash the FIR and proceedings under Sections 306 and 420 in exercise of Section 482.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Virendra Patel sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of FIR Crime No. 437/2022 at Police Station Bichiya, Rewa, under IPC Sections 306 and 420, and the criminal proceedings pending before the Additional Sessions Judge. Dilip Bhartiya was brought dead to Sanjay Gandhi Memorial Hospital on the morning of 7 November 2022, having died by hanging the preceding night. The police registered proceedings under Section 174 CrPC, conducted an inquest enquiry, recorded witness statements and registered the criminal case after a preliminary enquiry. The prosecution account included the statement of Dilip's brother, Pradeep Kumar Patel.

Pradeep stated that he and Dilip lived jointly with their parents and that their father had given each of them five acres of land. The brothers also had a joint bank account. About three years before Dilip's death, he asked Virendra Patel about obtaining a loan to establish a polyhouse. The applicant began visiting their home and, with his partner Manish Patel, allegedly took the brothers and their documents to Union Bank of India, Transport Nagar, Dhekaha. They obtained the brothers' signatures on loan papers and vouchers. When told of the proposed polyhouse loan, the father opposed borrowing. Nevertheless, the applicant and his partner allegedly procured a Kisan Credit Card facility in the brothers' names. They withdrew ₹2.5 lakh from the joint account on 24 November 2020, and ₹2.25 lakh on 15 December 2020 and ₹1 lakh on 22 March 2021 from Pradeep's account. The total withdrawal of ₹5.75 lakh resulted in a liability of about ₹7 lakh with interest. According to the prosecution, the money was transferred to the applicant's Rudra Grah Udyog account. The family learnt of the allegedly fraudulent loan about six months before Dilip's death. Pradeep said that Dilip became distressed and was threatened when repayment was repeatedly requested. Dilip hanged himself on 6 November 2022 at about 10:30 p.m. Other witnesses gave similar statements.

The applicant submitted that, even if the allegations were accepted, neither Section 306 nor Section 420 was attracted. He argued that Dilip could have reported the alleged cheating to the police instead of taking his life, and that instigation or aid within Sections 107/109 IPC could not therefore be inferred. He relied on V.P. Singh, Sanju alias Sanjay Singh Sengar and Netai Dutta. The respondents opposed quashing. They relied on the allegedly fraudulent KCC facility, withdrawal and diversion of funds, resulting debt and threats as disclosing cheating and circumstances which could amount to abetment of suicide.

2. Precedents — Considered : Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi); (2009) 16 SCC 605, was quoted on instigation as intentional goading, incitement or encouragement. Express words directing suicide are not essential. Acts, omissions or continued conduct may create circumstances in which the deceased sees no other option, but the accused's intention and a reasonable certainty of inciting the consequence must be discernible. Words spoken in anger without intending the consequence do not suffice. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal; (2012) 9 SCC 734, likewise requires consideration of intention and the circumstances of the particular case. Section 107 recognises instigation, conspiracy and intentional aid; direct evidence is not always necessary, and the view formed when considering quashing is tentative. The Court applied those principles in rejecting the proposition that fraudulent financial conduct could never support an inference of abetment under Section 306.

Sanju alias Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P.; (2002) 5 SCC 371, was cited by counsel and quoted by the Court on the three modes of abetment under Section 107 and the mens rea required for instigation. Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P.; (2010) 1 SCC 750, and M. Mohan v. State were considered on the mental process, active or direct act and intention to push the deceased into circumstances where no alternative appears available. State of West Bengal v. Orilal Jaiswal; (1994) 1 SCC 73, cautions that ordinary discord and an unusually sensitive response do not automatically establish abetment. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P.; (2007) 10 SCC 797, explained instigation, conspiracy and intentional aid under Section 107. It also explained that Section 109 applies where the act abetted is committed in consequence of the abetment and no separate provision prescribes its punishment, in which case the punishment is that provided for the original offence. Amalendu Pal alias Jhantu v. State of West Bengal; (2010) 1 SCC 707, requires careful assessment of positive conduct sufficiently proximate to the suicide, rather than harassment alone, and explains intentional facilitation under Section 107 Explanation 2. The Court considered those requirements and found the alleged financial conduct and its consequences sufficient for prosecution at this stage.

Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460, was quoted on the tentative assessment at the charge or quashing stage, without exhaustive evaluation of the record. Drawing on Ramesh Kumar, its passage recognises that instigation may be inferred from continued conduct creating circumstances in which the deceased perceives no option. The Court considered that principle in relation to the alleged debt and possible loss of property given as security. It then quoted P. Vijayan v. State of Kerala on discharge under Section 227. Where two views are possible and one gives rise only to suspicion, as distinct from grave suspicion, the judge may discharge the accused. The judge must apply a judicial mind and sift the police evidence and documents to determine whether there is sufficient ground to proceed. That assessment does not involve predicting conviction or weighing evidence and probabilities as at trial. Applying the standard, the Court found sufficient material for prosecution.

V.P. Singh and Others v. State of Punjab and Others, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 2103/2010, decided 24 November 2022, was relied on by the applicant. It concerned a student who died after being reprimanded for misconduct at college and the prospect of disciplinary action and communication with his father. The Court distinguished those circumstances from the alleged fraudulent loan burden here. Netai Dutta v. State of West Bengal; (2005) 2 SCC 659, concerned an employee who did not join after transfer and, two years later, submitted a resignation letter complaining of stagnation in salary and his circumstances. The resignation was accepted with immediate effect, and he was later found dead on a railway track. The Court distinguished that employment grievance from the alleged KCC diversion and debt. It stated that the principle in Sanju had already been considered, but the authorities relied on did not assist the applicant because the present allegations were materially different.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to quash the FIR and further proceedings. Section 174 CrPC governed the initial inquest enquiry after the hanging death. IPC Section 306 concerns abetment of a completed suicide. Section 107 defines abetment through instigation, conspiracy accompanied by the requisite act or illegal omission, or intentional aid by act or illegal omission. Under its first explanation, a person instigates an act by voluntarily causing or procuring it, or attempting to do so, through wilful misrepresentation or wilful concealment of a material fact which that person is bound to disclose. Its second explanation requires conduct before or at the act which is intended to facilitate it and actually does so. Section 109 was referred to in counsel's submission and the quoted discussion of abetment. IPC Section 420 concerned the allegedly dishonest bank/KCC transaction and withdrawal. Section 227 CrPC appeared in the discharge standard quoted from P. Vijayan, and Section 228 in the tentative charge-stage discussion quoted from Praveen Pradhan. The Court considered grave suspicion sufficient for framing charges.

4. Issues : Whether the alleged fraudulent use of loan signatures, creation of a KCC facility, withdrawal of ₹5.75 lakh, resulting debt of about ₹7 lakh with interest and threats following requests for repayment could prima facie disclose abetment of Dilip's suicide under Section 306, or whether his ability to approach the police necessarily excluded the required intention and causal connection. Separately, whether the loan-document and withdrawal allegations prima facie disclosed cheating under IPC Section 420. Finally, whether the FIR and pending proceedings should be quashed under Section 482 when the allegations raised disputed questions about the transactions and intention, having regard to the distinction between mere and grave suspicion in P. Vijayan.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered Sections 306 and 107 and the Supreme Court authorities requiring intentional instigation, conspiracy or aid and a sufficient causal connection. Chitresh and Praveen recognise that instigation may be inferred from conduct without express words. Gangula, M. Mohan and Amalendu Pal require more than distress or harassment alone to establish guilt. The argument that Dilip could have complained to the police did not warrant quashing on the present allegations. The alleged conduct comprised obtaining the brothers' signatures, fraudulently creating and drawing upon the KCC, transferring money to the applicant's concern, imposing a substantial debt on the farming brothers and threatening Dilip instead of repaying it. The Court noted that ₹7 lakh could have very different significance for different households. Failure to repay could expose mortgaged property to attachment, and the prospect of losing that property and uncertainty about the future could create circumstances in which the deceased perceived no alternative. The Court therefore declined to hold that fraudulent withdrawal followed by suicide could never disclose abetment. It found sufficient material in this case for a charge and prosecution under Section 306.

On cheating, the Court separately considered the alleged visit to the bank, signatures on loan papers and vouchers, the father's objection to borrowing, and the subsequent fraudulent creation of the KCC and withdrawal of money. The alleged withdrawal of ₹5.75 lakh from the relevant accounts, with a resulting debt of ₹7 lakh including interest, prima facie disclosed Section 420.

The Court applied the threshold appropriate to quashing under Section 482 and the framing of charges. P. Vijayan requires judicial scrutiny of whether the material raises more than mere suspicion, without a trial-like inquiry into competing probabilities. Amit Kapoor requires a tentative assessment in context. The alleged fraud, debt and threats provided sufficient material for the proceedings to continue. V.P. Singh concerned a college reprimand and Netai Dutta an employment grievance; those circumstances differed from the present allegations. The requirement of mens rea in Sanju remained part of the test. The Court refused to terminate either accusation at that stage, leaving proof and the precise causal connection for trial.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. FIR Crime No. 437/2022 and the further criminal proceedings at Rewa under IPC Sections 306 and 420 continued against Virendra Patel.

Virendra Patel v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 14788/2023, 14/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (993) Prev Next

Headnote :- Separate trials / accused-specific record - After Devendra Sharma's arrest, witnesses in Virendra Sharma's trial were recalled for cross-examination on Devendra's behalf. Kishan Sharma was arrested later and tried separately, with witnesses examined afresh. Applying A.T. Mydeen v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 1306/2021, order of 29 October 2021, the Bench assessed the evidence against each appellant from the depositions in his own trial. Chandu had been disbelieved in the Virendra/Devendra trial. In Kishan's trial, Chandu and Deendayal did not support the prosecution against him. The Bench separately considered the direct testimony of Krishna Sharma and Devendra Upadhyaya against Kishan on that trial record.

FIR omission / eyewitness names - The FIR was lodged promptly while Rakesh was seriously injured, but did not name his wife Krishna (PW 3) or her brother Devendra Upadhyaya (PW 4). Following V.K. Mishra v. State of Uttarakhand; (2015) 9 SCC 588, and Kunwarpal v. State of Uttarakhand; (2014) 16 SCC 560, the Bench held that an FIR need only state the broad facts and need not name every eyewitness. It considered the witnesses' account of passing the village bus stand, the informant's urgency in seeking care for Rakesh, and the explanation for recording their police statements about four days later. Their evidence was not rejected merely because the informant had omitted their names.

Related witnesses / enmity / independent evidence - The Bench examined the evidence in light of Krishna's relationship as the deceased's wife, PW 4's relationship as her brother, the absence of independent witnesses from the nearby bus stand, and the admitted election enmity. Kunwarpal and Ruli Ram v. State of Haryana; (2002) 7 SCC 691, recognise that enmity may motivate either false implication or the offence. Evidence found acceptable after careful scrutiny is not discarded merely because of that enmity. The Bench accepted their account that Virendra and Devendra struck Rakesh with lathis while Kishan stood with a country-made pistol. It considered the medical evidence of numerous injuries from hard and blunt objects and lathis, the village bus timings, the appellants' recorded criminal antecedents and the witnesses' relationships in assessing their evidence.

Oral statements before death / differentiated liability - Krishna and PW 4, and Deendayal in the first trial, recounted Rakesh's identification of the lathi assailants and Kishan's role with the pistol while he was conscious. The defence contended that Rakesh could not speak. The Bench accepted the witnesses' account that he was conscious and speaking, together with their direct observations and the evidence establishing homicidal injuries. It considered Deendayal's later failure to support the prosecution against Kishan on the separate trial record. The Bench affirmed Virendra's and Devendra's convictions under Section 302 and Kishan's conviction under Section 302/34. Kishan was not attributed a fatal lathi blow or a gunshot causing Rakesh's death. Devendra's separate acquittal under Section 323 and Kishan's acquittal under Section 307 were left undisturbed.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : A Division Bench at Gwalior decided three appeals. Virendra Sharma (Criminal Appeal 311/2010) and Devendra Sharma (312/2010) challenged the judgment dated 5 March 2010 in Shivpuri Sessions Trial 14/2009, sentencing each under IPC Section 302 to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹5,000, with six months' rigorous imprisonment in default. Kishan Sharma (Appeal 3050/2018) challenged the separate judgment dated 15 February 2018 in the proceeding described in the judgment as Sessions Trial 400014/2019. He had been sentenced under Section 302/34 to life imprisonment and a fine of ₹2,000, with two months' rigorous imprisonment in default. The trial court had acquitted Devendra under Section 323 and Kishan under Section 307.

The incident was alleged to have occurred on 28 September 2008. Deendayal (PW 7) took the seriously injured Rakesh to the police station and lodged the FIR at 10:40 a.m. He stated that at about 10 a.m., while he was tying a calf at a well, the three appellants arrived on a motorcycle. He alleged that Devendra assaulted him, Virendra urged Kishan to shoot him, and Kishan fired but missed. After his mother intervened, the three left. Deendayal then found Rakesh injured near a culvert. Rakesh allegedly told him that, while returning after a shave, he had been stopped near the bus stand; Virendra and Devendra beat him with lathis while Kishan pointed a country-made pistol at him. Rakesh was referred from PHC Bairad to Gwalior but died on the way. The police seized a lathi from Virendra. The postmortem recorded thirty-one fresh ante-mortem injuries, including numerous contusions with a rail pattern, fractures and fatal injuries to the liver, lungs and brain. Death was attributed to cardiorespiratory failure from multiple injuries and internal haemorrhage. The medical witness rejected the suggested explanation of a motorcycle fall and described the death as homicidal.

Virendra was arrested in October 2008. Devendra was arrested in April 2009 during the first trial, and the witnesses were recalled for cross-examination on his behalf. Kishan was arrested in January 2014 and tried separately, with fresh depositions. Krishna Sharma (PW 3), Rakesh's wife, and her brother Devendra Upadhyaya (PW 4) said that they were travelling to a family ritual at Shivpuri when they saw Virendra and Devendra beating Rakesh with lathis and Kishan standing with a pistol near the culvert. They said that Rakesh was conscious and identified his assailants to them. Deendayal also recounted an oral statement by Rakesh in the first trial, while Chandu (PW 6) was disbelieved. In Kishan's trial, Chandu and Deendayal turned hostile and did not support the prosecution against him; Sharda Bai (PW 2) also did not support that accusation. Krishna and PW 4 maintained their account of Kishan's armed presence. The defence alleged that they were related and planted witnesses and that Rakesh could not speak. It relied on their omission from the FIR, the failure to produce the ritual invitation, the absence of independent witnesses at the bus stand and the recording of their police statements roughly four to five days later. The State supported the convictions.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Bench applied A.T. Mydeen and Another v. Assistant Commissioner, Customs Department, Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 1306/2021, decided 29 October 2021, in assessing evidence from separate trials. The evidence against each appellant had to be considered from the depositions in his own trial. Witnesses in Virendra's trial were recalled after Devendra's arrest, whereas those in Kishan's later trial were examined afresh. Deendayal's support for the prosecution in the first trial was therefore kept distinct from his failure to support it against Kishan in the separate trial.

V.K. Mishra v. State of Uttarakhand; (2015) 9 SCC 588, was quoted for the principle that an FIR need not set out every detail of the prosecution case; a statement of the broad facts may suffice. Kunwarpal v. State of Uttarakhand; (2014) 16 SCC 560, was quoted both on the absence of a legal requirement to name every witness in the FIR and, later, on the significance of enmity. Applying the FIR principle, the Bench considered the urgency of reporting while Rakesh needed medical care. It assessed the omitted witnesses' evidence on its merits rather than treating the omission of their names as decisive.

Ruli Ram v. State of Haryana; (2002) 7 SCC 691, was quoted on the careful assessment of evidence where there is factional enmity. Hostility may provide a motive for either the offence or false implication. The foundation for a plea of false implication must be examined against the evidence, and enmity alone does not require rejection of testimony found reliable. Paragraph 16 of Kunwarpal states the same principle. The Bench considered the election dispute, the witnesses' relationships, their presence and the challenges to their accounts, but found no sufficient basis to reject Krishna and PW 4. It also considered the difficulty of obtaining independent witnesses in a faction-ridden village described in Ruli Ram, alongside the actual village bus-stand setting and the appellants' recorded criminal antecedents.

3. Statutes considered : Section 374 CrPC provided the appellate remedy against the convictions. IPC Section 302 governed the murder convictions of Virendra and Devendra; Section 302 read with Section 34 governed Kishan's conviction for his participation with the two lathi assailants while armed with a pistol. Devendra's acquittal under Section 323 and Kishan's acquittal under Section 307 were not disturbed. The investigation and supplementary charge-sheet also referred to IPC Sections 307, 341 and 294/34, while the appeals concerned the three murder convictions. The Bench assessed Rakesh's oral statements identifying his assailants together with the direct eyewitness and medical evidence. It found homicidal death from the injuries; the pistol was not identified as the weapon causing Rakesh's death.

4. Issues : First, whether the medical evidence established homicidal death despite the challenges concerning rigor mortis, different weapons and a suggested motorcycle accident. Second, whether the wife's and her brother's identification of the lathi assailants and Kishan's armed role, together with Rakesh's oral statements, was reliable despite their relationship, admitted enmity, omission from the FIR, non-production of the ritual invitation, absence of independent passengers from the bus stand and the delay of about four days in recording their police statements. Third, how the evidence of those witnesses, Deendayal and Chandu should be assessed separately for the two trials, particularly where the latter witnesses did not support the prosecution against Kishan. Finally, whether the evidence sustained the two convictions under Section 302 and Kishan's conviction under Section 302/34, leaving the separate acquittals undisturbed.

5. Ratio / Findings : Dr V.S. Tomar (PW 10) described thirty-one fresh injuries, including repeated contusions with a rail pattern, fractures and injuries to the internal organs and brain. He attributed death to cardiorespiratory failure from multiple injuries and internal haemorrhage and estimated that death had occurred approximately three to twenty-four hours before the postmortem. Cross-examination about rigor mortis and the failure to show him the seized weapons did not displace that account. He rejected the suggestion that a motorcycle fall could have caused the observed injuries. The Bench held that Rakesh's death was homicidal.

Applying A.T. Mydeen, the Bench examined the evidence in the Virendra/Devendra trial. Krishna (PW 3) and her brother PW 4 described Virendra and Devendra beating Rakesh with lathis while Kishan stood with a country-made pistol. They approached the culvert as the assailants fled and said that Rakesh could speak and identify them. In cross-examination, Krishna said that she had seen the assault from about fifty metres but could not identify the assailants from that distance; she nevertheless denied the suggestion that she had not seen their faces. The cross-examination also addressed kinship, election enmity, the later police statements and the proposed Shivpuri ritual. In that trial, PW 4 said that he and his sister accompanied Rakesh towards Gwalior. The Bench accepted their presence and testimony. Deendayal (PW 7), who took Rakesh to the police, recounted his identification of the lathi assailants and Kishan's pistol role. Chandu was not relied on because the trial court had disbelieved him. Devendra's acquittal under Section 323 for the separate alleged assault on Deendayal remained undisturbed.

Kishan's trial was assessed on its own evidence. Deendayal, Chandu and Sharda Bai did not support the prosecution against him. Krishna and PW 4 repeated their account that Kishan stood with a pistol while Virendra and Devendra beat Rakesh. Krishna's police statement did not mention the pistol, and that omission was raised in cross-examination. Krishna could not say whether the police had seized her husband's motorcycle, which she said had been sold three to four months after the incident. PW 4 clarified Kishan's role as standing with a country-made pistol. In that trial, he stated that his police statement had been recorded after five to six days and that he had stayed at his sister's house rather than accompanied Rakesh to Gwalior. The Bench accepted the two witnesses' evidence against Kishan, together with Rakesh's oral account to them. His conviction was under Section 302/34 for murder with common intention, rather than for inflicting a fatal lathi injury or firing a shot which killed Rakesh. His acquittal under Section 307 remained intact.

Following V.K. Mishra and Kunwarpal, the Bench held that the FIR need not name every eyewitness. Deendayal lodged it promptly while Rakesh was seriously injured and needed referral for treatment; Rakesh died on the way to Gwalior. The omission of Krishna and PW 4 therefore did not justify rejecting their evidence. The Bench accepted their account of encountering the assault while travelling to the ritual. The failure to produce the invitation or examine the relative hosting it did not create serious doubt in those circumstances. It also declined to assume that passengers must have been waiting at a village bus stand served by a few buses at known times. No witness had been asked whether a bus arrived during the assault. The Bench referred to the recorded criminal antecedents: eleven cases against Devendra and three each against Virendra and Kishan. It also recorded four further offences after Virendra's release on bail and five after Devendra's release, with their bail cancelled on 12 March 2020. It considered that background when explaining why independent villagers might not come forward.

Under Kunwarpal and Ruli Ram, the Bench considered both possible effects of the election enmity: a motive for the assault and a motive for false implication. It scrutinised the testimony and regarded the wife's and her brother's identification of the actual assailants as more plausible than falsely implicating the appellants while sparing the real offenders and risking further hostility. PW 4 explained that he and his sister had gone to submerge Rakesh's ashes and gave their statements on returning. In light of that explanation and the wife's bereavement, the Bench did not regard recording the statements about four days later as an unexplained delay. It found Krishna and PW 4 reliable and their account of Rakesh's oral statements consistent with their direct observations and the medical evidence of homicide. The different positions of the other witnesses in the respective trials remained distinct.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed all three appeals. Virendra's and Devendra's convictions under IPC Section 302 by the judgment dated 5 March 2010, and their life sentences with fines of ₹5,000 each and six months' rigorous imprisonment in default, were affirmed. Kishan's separate conviction under Section 302/34 by the judgment dated 15 February 2018, and his life sentence with a fine of ₹2,000 and two months' rigorous imprisonment in default, were also affirmed. Virendra and Devendra, who were in jail, were directed to serve the remaining sentence. Kishan's bail bonds were cancelled, and he was directed to surrender immediately before the trial court to serve the remaining sentence. A copy of the judgment was to be provided to the appellants immediately, free of cost. The trial record was to be returned with a copy of the judgment for necessary information. The acquittals under Sections 323 and 307 were left undisturbed.

Virendra Sharma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 311/2010 & 312/2010 & 3050/2018, 10/12/2021, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (994) Prev Next

Headnote :- Abetment of suicide / Sections 306 and 107 IPC / intention and direct act - The Supreme Court decisions considered by the Court distinguish a person's subjective distress from an accused's instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid leading to suicide. S.S. Chheena v. Vijay Kumar Mahajan, Gurcharan Singh v. State of Punjab, Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P., and M. Mohan v. State require clear mens rea and a positive, active or direct act intended to push the deceased towards suicide. Orilal Jaiswal cautions against treating ordinary domestic discord, to which the deceased was unusually sensitive, as sufficient for liability. Chitresh Kumar Chopra and Praveen Pradhan explain that instigation may be inferred from conduct creating circumstances in which the deceased sees no alternative; no fixed form of words is essential. Words spoken casually or in anger, without the requisite intention, may not constitute instigation. Kishori Lal sets out the alternative modes of abetment under Section 107. Amalendu Pal requires an active and sufficiently proximate role, rather than harassment alone. The Court applied the requirements of intention, a positive act and a causal connection, rather than inferring abetment merely from the death.

Suicide note / family financial expectations / quashing - The handwritten note dated 12 August 2018 blamed the deceased's brothers for not helping with his children's education and marriage expenses and for using and selling a family tractor without paying its instalments, leaving him liable for the loan. His body was found on 17 August. The initial postmortem opinion stated cardiorespiratory failure, with a final opinion reserved until the viscera report; that report recorded ethyl alcohol. Taking the note's allegations at face value, the Court held that the unmet family expectations and tractor-loan dispute did not disclose instigation or abetment intended to drive Rajaram to suicide under Sections 306/107, even if the applicants' conduct might be morally wrong. Madan Mohan Singh v. State of Gujarat and Swamy Prahladdas v. State of M.P. support the requirement of intentional instigation with a proximate connection, rather than blame in a note or a casual utterance alone. Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander explains that the view formed at the charge or quashing stage is tentative and that instigation may be inferred where the accused's conduct creates the circumstances leading to suicide. The Court found no such allegations here and quashed the FIR, charge-sheet and ensuing proceedings under IPC Sections 306/34.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Virendra Singh and the other applicants sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of FIR Crime No. 243/2018 at Police Station Station Road, Morena, the charge-sheet and all ensuing proceedings under IPC Sections 306 and 34. Rajaram, aged approximately fifty years, was found dead in a field on 17 August 2018. According to the applicants' counsel, the first informant reported that his grandfather had found an unidentified person lying dead with liquor and glasses beside him. The deceased was subsequently identified as Rajaram. Counsel stated that the postmortem revealed no external injury and gave cardiorespiratory failure as the cause of death, reserving a final opinion until receipt of the viscera report. The subsequent viscera report recorded ethyl alcohol.

The police recovered a handwritten note from Rajaram's clothing, reproduced in paragraph 2 of the judgment. Dated 12 August 2018, it named Virendra Singh and Devendra Singh, referred to in the note as the elder son, as persons whom Rajaram blamed for his decision to take his life. He complained that they had educated their own children and obtained employment for them but had not helped with his children's education or marriage expenses. He also alleged that they had used the tractor for about twelve years without paying its instalments and then sold it, leaving him liable for the loan. Witness statements also referred to a family dispute. After investigation, the police filed a charge-sheet under Section 306.

The applicants questioned whether the note and the other material described in the judgment disclosed prima facie abetment. The Court identified that as the central question, set out Sections 306 and 107, considered the Supreme Court authorities and assessed the family-finance allegations in deciding whether the proceedings should be quashed.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court quoted S.S. Chheena v. Vijay Kumar Mahajan on the mental process of instigation or intentional aid. Liability under Section 306 requires a positive act, clear mens rea and an active or direct act intended to push the deceased into a position where suicide appears to be the only option. That passage reproduced State of West Bengal v. Orilal Jaiswal; (1994) 1 SCC 73, on the caution required where the deceased was unusually sensitive to ordinary domestic discord. It also referred to Chitresh Kumar Chopra v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi); (2009) 16 SCC 605, on intentional goading and the need to consider each case's circumstances rather than apply a rigid formula. The Court also quoted Orilal and Chitresh directly.

Gurcharan Singh v. State of Punjab; (2017) 1 SCC 433, reiterated the requirement in Chheena of clear mens rea and an active or direct act leading the deceased to suicide. Gangula Mohan Reddy v. State of A.P.; (2010) 1 SCC 750, and M. Mohan v. State represented by the Deputy Superintendent of Police also required a positive, intentional act which leaves the victim seeing no alternative. Gangula further applied the caution in Orilal concerning unusual sensitivity to ordinary discord.

Satvir Singh and Others v. State of Punjab and Another was quoted on the structure of Section 306: suicide must have been committed, and the accused must have abetted it. The quoted decision held that a conviction under Section 116 read with Section 306 would amount to the impermissible concept of abetting an abetment. The present proceedings concerned an alleged completed suicide under Section 306. Kishori Lal v. State of M.P.; (2007) 10 SCC 797, explained the alternatives in Section 107: instigation, conspiracy followed by the requisite act or illegal omission, or intentional aid. It also explained that under Section 109, where the act abetted is committed in consequence of the abetment and no separate provision prescribes punishment for that abetment, the punishment is that provided for the original offence. The Court considered that discussion in applying the elements of Section 107 to the present allegations.

Madan Mohan Singh v. State of Gujarat concerned a suicide note and FIR which, even taken as stated, expressed anguish against a superior without disclosing purposeful instigation, conspiracy or aid with a proximate connection to the suicide. Its caution against requiring a person to face trial on irrelevant or speculative allegations informed the assessment of the family grievances in the present note. Swamy Prahladdas v. State of M.P. concerned a casual utterance during a quarrel which did not disclose the required mens rea or a direct connection to the suicide at the charge stage. The Court considered that principle in the present setting of financial expectations: blame or distress alone does not establish intentional incitement.

Chitresh Kumar Chopra was directly quoted on instigation as goading, urging, provoking or encouraging an act. It may be inferred from acts, omissions or continued conduct which leave the deceased with no other option, even without particular spoken words, but a reasonable certainty of incitement must be discernible. Praveen Pradhan v. State of Uttaranchal; (2012) 9 SCC 734, likewise emphasised intention and the circumstances of the particular case. Instigation may be inferred without direct verbal evidence, and a court considering quashing forms a tentative view. The High Court therefore examined whether the alleged conduct disclosed the required intentional and causal connection, rather than treating the absence of express words as decisive.

Sanju alias Sanjay Singh Sengar v. State of M.P.; (2002) 5 SCC 371, restated the modes of abetment under Section 107 and the need for mens rea in instigation. Amalendu Pal alias Jhantu v. State of West Bengal; (2010) 1 SCC 707, explained that harassment alone cannot sustain a conviction under Section 306 without direct or indirect incitement or positive action sufficiently proximate to the suicide which led or compelled the person to take that step. Its quoted discussion also explained intentional aid under Section 107 Explanation 2. The High Court considered those principles when assessing the alleged non-payment of instalments and refusal of financial support at the quashing stage.

Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460, was quoted on the tentative assessment required at the charge or quashing stage. The court forms a view from the record and accompanying documents without evaluating them to determine final guilt. The passage referred to Ramesh Kumar for the principle that instigation may be inferred from a course of conduct which creates circumstances of total frustration, leaving the deceased with no other option. Applying that approach, the Court found that the present note and record did not allege such criminal conduct.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 306 punishes abetment of a completed suicide. Section 107 defines abetment by instigation, conspiracy accompanied by the requisite act or illegal omission, or intentional aid by act or illegal omission. Under its first explanation, a person instigates an act by voluntarily causing or procuring it, or attempting to do so, through wilful misrepresentation or wilful concealment of a material fact which that person is bound to disclose. Its second explanation concerns conduct before or at the time of the act which is intended to facilitate it and actually does so. The Court applied the requirements of intention, causal connection and active conduct when considering the note. IPC Section 34 formed part of the accusation, and the Court quashed the proceedings under that provision together with Section 306. Section 482 CrPC supplied the inherent jurisdiction invoked against the FIR, charge-sheet and proceedings. Sections 109 and 116 IPC and Section 228 CrPC appeared in the quoted Supreme Court discussions concerning abetment and the tentative assessment at the charge stage.

4. Issues : Whether the suicide note blaming the deceased's brothers for withholding financial assistance for his children and failing to pay the tractor instalments, together with witness accounts of a family dispute, disclosed prima facie instigation, conspiracy or intentional aid under Sections 306/107 IPC. The question required distinguishing a moral or civil grievance and the deceased's response from purposeful conduct by the applicants sufficiently connected to the suicide. The related question under Section 482 was whether the allegations, taken as stated at that stage, could sustain the charge-sheet and proceedings under Sections 306/34.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court assessed the note against the statutory definition and the Supreme Court's requirement of criminal intention and active instigation or aid. Chitresh and Praveen recognise that instigation may be inferred from intentional acts or continued conduct creating the relevant circumstances; particular words directing suicide are not essential. A note assigning blame must nevertheless disclose facts constituting statutory abetment and a causal connection. Naming relatives and expressing disappointment did not meet those requirements here.

The note expressed Rajaram's expectation that his brothers would support him financially, pay for his children's education and marriages, and discharge the instalments on a tractor used by the family for years and later sold. The Court said that the failure to help might be morally wrong but did not amount to instigation or abetment. As the children's father, Rajaram was responsible for their expenses. If he believed that the applicants should have paid the loan instalments, he could have taken legal steps. On the allegations before it, the Court characterised his response to the unfulfilled family expectations as unusually sensitive.

The note's accusation did not disclose a purposeful act by the applicants leading Rajaram to suicide or an intentional course of conduct leaving him with no alternative. The Court therefore found no prima facie offence under Section 306 warranting their prosecution. It quashed the FIR under Sections 306 and 34, the charge-sheet and the proceedings arising from it.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application under Section 482. FIR Crime No. 243/2018 at Station Road Morena under IPC

Sections 306 and 34, the charge-sheet and all criminal proceedings pending on its basis were quashed against the applicants.

Virendra Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 8367/2019, 12/02/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (995) Prev Next

Headnote :- Hostile witness / actual testimony - The complainant had forgotten some details in her examination-in-chief and was declared hostile so that the prosecutor could cross-examine her. In that cross-examination, she narrated the allegations against all three applicants. The Court therefore rejected their assertion that she had withdrawn from the prosecution case.

Section 498-A IPC / specific in-law allegations / parental home - The FIR alleged dowry demands and a quarrel over insufficient cash at the marriage in May 2023, followed by an assault and threats on 14 November and the complainant's departure to her parental home the next day. In reconciliation proceedings, she specifically alleged that her mother-in-law and father-in-law had taunted her about inferior articles and incomplete payment of cash. Applying Taramani Parakh v. State of M.P.; (2015) 11 SCC 260, the Court held that the allegations against the husband and his parents raised triable questions of cruelty and were not merely general or omnibus assertions. Taramani reproduced the caution in Kailash Chandra Agrawal against implicating distant relatives without a specific role; it did not require quashing the present FIR containing specific allegations against the husband and his parents. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P.; (2019) 5 SCC 384, explained how mental distress caused by matrimonial abuse may continue at the parental home. The Court relied on that principle and its decision in Amar Singh when considering the allegation that the complainant had been forced to leave the matrimonial home.

FIR quashing / Neeharika Infrastructure - In considering quashing under Sections 482 CrPC/528 BNSS, the Court followed Neeharika Infrastructure v. State of Maharashtra; (2021) 19 SCC 401. The police ordinarily have the right and duty to investigate cognizable allegations. Quashing must be exercised sparingly; the reliability of allegations is not tested at that stage, and the FIR need not state every detail. Inherent jurisdiction nevertheless remains available where no offence is disclosed or exceptional intervention is warranted. The Court also cited a group of Supreme Court authorities for the proposition that proceedings may be quashed if the uncontroverted allegations do not make out an offence. The specific allegations of dowry harassment, assault and forced departure disclosed an offence here. The Court refused to quash the FIR under IPC Sections 498A, 294, 323, 506, 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Virendra Singh Sumali, his mother and his father sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC/Section 528 BNSS of FIR Crime No. 06/2024 registered at Vidisha Mahila Police Thana. The FIR alleged IPC Sections 498A, 294, 323, 506 and 34 and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The complainant, respondent No. 2, married applicant No. 1 on 30 May 2023. She alleged that the applicants demanded dowry. A two-wheeler, ornaments, household goods and ₹1,80,000 cash had been given, but the applicants quarrelled during the wedding over the allegedly insufficient cash. She stated that she had previously been driven out because her husband was employed and the dowry was said to be inadequate for his status. She further alleged that on 14 November 2023 the applicants beat and abused her over insufficient dowry and threatened to burn her alive. She called her brother, went to her parental home on 15 November and narrated the incident to her family. The judgment also recorded that her husband had refused to take her back during reconciliation.

The applicants contended that the allegations were vague, general and omnibus. They also asserted that the complainant had turned hostile during cross-examination and supplied a copy of her examination-in-chief. On examining it, the Court found that she had forgotten some details. It explained that the Public Prosecutor could not put leading questions to her and that she was therefore declared hostile; during the prosecutor's cross-examination, she narrated the allegations against the applicants. The Court described the applicants' contrary submission as misconceived and false even to their knowledge. In reconciliation proceedings, she had alleged that her husband beat and physically harassed her and forced her out. She had also specifically alleged that her mother-in-law and father-in-law taunted her because the articles supplied were inferior and the full cash amount had not been given.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court extensively quoted Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; (2015) 11 SCC 260. That decision reproduced Kailash Chandra Agrawal v. State of U.P.; (2014) 16 SCC 551, which drew on Kans Raj v. State of Punjab; (2000) 5 SCC 207. It cautioned against indiscriminately implicating distant relatives in dowry cases without a specific role or supporting material; merely naming them is insufficient. Taramani also held that where allegations against the husband and his parents disclose harassment which forced the complainant to leave the matrimonial home, their truth is a matter for trial and the proceedings cannot be quashed at the outset. Kailash Chandra Agrawal recognised quashing where the proceedings are, on their face, an abuse of process, while cautioning against testing rival versions where triable issues remain. The present Court applied Taramani to the specific allegations against the husband and his parents, rather than treating the caution concerning distant relatives as immunity from prosecution.

Rupali Devi v. State of U.P.; (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted on cruelty under Section 498-A. Cruelty may be physical or mental. Mental trauma caused by abuse and being forced to leave the matrimonial home may continue while the wife stays with her parents, even if no further physical violence occurs there. The Court relied on that principle when considering the continuing effect of the alleged forced departure. It also cited Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla, Criminal Revision No. 2376/2020, decided 22 June 2021, for the holding that compelling a married woman to live at her parental home amounts to cruelty.

The Court also quoted Neeharika Infrastructure Private Limited v. State of Maharashtra and Others; (2021) 19 SCC 401, at length. Paragraph 13 explains the police's right and duty to investigate cognizable offences and the restraint required in quashing proceedings. An FIR need not contain every detail. During investigation, the court ordinarily must not test the truth or reliability of the allegations or stop the prosecution at its inception. Inherent jurisdiction remains available where no cognizable offence is disclosed, the process is abused or exceptional intervention is required to prevent a miscarriage of justice, subject to the principles in R.P. Kapur and Bhajan Lal. The quoted expression "rarest of rare" in relation to quashing is distinct from the standard governing the death penalty. The question at this stage is whether an offence is disclosed, rather than whether the allegation is true on the merits. The High Court applied that distinction and declined to examine the disputed truth of the allegations.

In paragraph 14, the Court cited XYZ v. State of Gujarat, State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, Ajay Kumar Das, Mohd. Akram Siddiqui, State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, M. Srikanth, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Munshiram, Teeja Devi, State of Orissa v. Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha together for the proposition that proceedings may be quashed if the uncontroverted allegations do not make out an offence.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC and Section 528 BNSS were invoked to quash the FIR. IPC Section 498A raised the principal question of cruelty, including the alleged dowry harassment and the continuing mental effect of being forced out of the matrimonial home. The Court considered the FIR and the specific allegations against the three applicants as a whole. The other offences alleged in the FIR were under IPC Sections 294, 323, 506 and 34 and Sections 3 and 4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act.

4. Issues : First, whether the supplied testimony supported the applicants' assertion that the complainant had turned hostile and withdrawn her allegations. Second, whether the FIR and reconciliation statements attributed sufficiently specific conduct to the husband, mother-in-law and father-in-law to raise triable allegations of cruelty and dowry harassment, rather than merely implicating the family through omnibus assertions. This included the effect of the alleged compulsion to stay at her parental home. Third, whether the High Court could examine the truth of those allegations when considering quashing under its inherent jurisdiction.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected the premise that the complainant had withdrawn her allegations. The supplied testimony showed that she had forgotten some details and was declared hostile to enable cross-examination by the prosecutor, during which she narrated the allegations against the applicants. The Court called the applicants' submission misconceived and false even to their knowledge. Her actual testimony did not support their assertion that she had resiled from the prosecution case.

The Court relied on the alleged quarrel over cash at the wedding and the specific allegations of assault and threats on 14 November 2023. It also considered the complainant's departure to her parental home, the husband's refusal during reconciliation to take her back, and the particular taunts attributed to his parents about inferior articles and incomplete payment of cash. The caution in Taramani Parakh about merely naming distant relatives did not justify disregarding those specific allegations against the husband and his parents. Whether the alleged acts occurred was a matter for trial. Relying on Rupali Devi and Amar Singh, the Court considered the continuing mental cruelty associated with the alleged compulsion to live at her parental home.

Applying Neeharika and the other authorities cited on assessment of allegations at face value, the Court held that their truth could not be examined under the inherent jurisdiction at this stage. The applicants' denial and contention that the accusations were vague did not justify quashing when the specific allegations disclosed an offence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application to quash FIR Crime No. 06/2024. The proceedings under IPC Sections 498A, 294, 323, 506 and 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3 and 4 continued.

Virendra Singh Sumali and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 22705/2024, 19/02/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (996) Prev Next

Headnote :- Civil and criminal ingredients / commercial pledge / Section 482 CrPC - The commercial nature of a gold pledge securing a ₹40 lakh business loan did not make the entire complaint predominantly civil. The complainant alleged that, after he repaid the loan and the gold was not returned, the applicants joined their brother, the lender, in supplying about 87.8 kilograms of purported silver of equivalent value as temporary security for the kilogram of gold. Testing indicated that the material was copper coated with silver, and the police seized it. The Court found that the applicants' alleged knowing supply of fake silver to gain the complainant's confidence disclosed prima facie criminal conduct. It refused to quash the FIR under IPC Sections 420 and 406, with Section 409 subsequently added.

Supreme Court quashing standard / Amit Kapoor - The Court cited Harmanpreet Singh Ahluwalia, Mohammed Ibrahim, Mahmood Ali and Usha Chakraborty together with Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander; (2012) 9 SCC 460, on the coexistence of civil and criminal remedies. It distinguished a predominantly civil wrong lacking criminal ingredients from allegations involving criminal conduct. The Court reproduced paragraph 27 of Amit Kapoor, which requires cautious and sparing exercise of Section 482. The allegations and prosecution documents must be taken at face value to determine whether they disclose a prima facie offence, without a mini-trial, an assessment of likely conviction or reliance on external defence material. An available civil claim does not extinguish a criminal prosecution. Applying that distinction to the alleged supply of fake silver in place of the unreturned gold, the Court dismissed the application.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vishal Goyal and the other applicants sought quashing under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure of FIR Crime No. 661/2022, Police Station Kotwali, Morena, alleging IPC Sections 420 and 406, with Section 409 subsequently added. The complainant stated that he had borrowed ₹40 lakh for his business from co-accused Ankush Goyal, who ran a jewellery shop, and had pledged one kilogram of gold as security. He alleged that he repaid the entire amount in February 2022 in the presence of Ankush, Ankush's wife Manju and Sonu Goyal. When he asked for the gold, Ankush said that it was in Agra and promised to return it within seven or eight days. The complainant's later requests were unsuccessful. According to the FIR, Ankush and his brothers, the applicants, said that they could not immediately retrieve the gold and offered eighty-eight kilograms of silver, said to be of equivalent value. The silver was to be returned when the gold was restored. Relying on that assurance, the complainant accepted about 87 kilograms 800 grams.

The complainant further alleged that, despite repeated requests in May 2022 to return the gold and take back the silver, the applicants and Ankush continued to avoid doing so. At about noon on 15 June 2022, he went to Ankush's house but could not find him, and Ankush's phone was switched off. The applicants also gave no satisfactory answer. Becoming suspicious, the complainant had the purported silver tested by Ravi Soni, who said that it was copper coated with silver. The complainant alleged that he then found Ankush's house locked and his phone still switched off. The applicants said that they would call Ankush and delayed on that pretext for eight to ten days before refusing to return the gold. The Court also noted that the police had seized the alleged fake silver.

The applicants submitted that the gold had been pledged only with Ankush and that they had been falsely implicated to put pressure on him. They contended that the entire transaction was a business dispute which should not be converted into a criminal case. They relied on Rikhab Birani and Another v. State of U.P. and Another, SLP (Criminal) No. 8592/2024, order dated 16 April 2024. The complainant accepted that the original pledge was with Ankush but maintained that the applicants had joined him in supplying the alleged fake silver and were equally responsible. According to the complainant, that joint act involved criminal conduct, so the allegations could not be treated as predominantly civil. The High Court heard both sides and considered whether the FIR should be quashed on that ground.

2. Precedents — Considered : The applicants relied on Rikhab Birani to support their contention that the business transaction should not be converted into a criminal case.

The Court cited Harmanpreet Singh Ahluwalia and Others v. State of Punjab and Others; (2009) 7 SCC 712; Mohammed Ibrahim and Others v. State of Bihar and Another; (2009) 8 SCC 751; Mahmood Ali and Others v. State of U.P. and Others; and Usha Chakraborty and Another v. State of West Bengal and Another, together with Amit Kapoor v. Ramesh Chander and Another; (2012) 9 SCC 460. It relied on those authorities for the principle that civil and criminal proceedings can continue simultaneously. A predominantly civil dispute may justify quashing where the basic criminal ingredients are absent; the presence of criminal conduct prevents quashing merely because the transaction also has a civil aspect.

The Court reproduced paragraph 27 of Amit Kapoor on the exercise of jurisdiction under Sections 397 and 482 CrPC. The test is whether the uncontroverted allegations and accompanying prosecution documents prima facie establish an offence. Quashing is exceptional and requires care. Patent absurdity, the absence of basic criminal ingredients or abuse of process may justify intervention. The court must not conduct a meticulous evaluation or mini-trial, predict conviction, or rely on external material supplied by the accused to conclude that no offence is disclosed or acquittal is possible. A civil claim may coexist with a criminal offence. The quoted principles also recognise an express statutory bar and require a balance between the accused's liberty and the complainant's or prosecution's right to investigate and prosecute. The power serves real and substantial justice. Where the factual foundation of an offence is laid and its requirements are substantially satisfied, the court should not hasten to quash merely because one or two ingredients are not expressly stated or do not appear to be satisfied. The passage includes principles concerning quashing at the charge stage; the present application sought quashing of an FIR on its alleged facts. Applying Amit Kapoor, the Court held that the allegations of knowingly supplying fake silver disclosed criminal conduct and refused to terminate the proceedings.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to quash the FIR. The Court considered the restraint required in exercising that power and the assessment of allegations at face value through Amit Kapoor. Section 397 CrPC appeared in the quoted discussion of revisional and inherent jurisdiction; the present application was under Section 482. The FIR alleged IPC Section 420 for cheating and Section 406 for criminal breach of trust, with Section 409 subsequently added.

4. Issues : Whether the original business loan and gold pledge made the entire accusation a civil or commercial dispute warranting quashing under Section 482, or whether the applicants' alleged subsequent participation in supplying fake silver as security for the unreturned gold disclosed sufficient criminal conduct for the FIR to proceed. The question required consideration of the two stages in the context of the entire alleged transaction. The applicants denied involvement in the original pledge, while the complainant alleged their joint participation in the later supply of fake silver.

5. Ratio / Findings : Relying on the Supreme Court authorities, the Court held that civil and criminal proceedings may coexist. The existence of a business transaction or civil claim does not by itself justify quashing. The question is whether the allegations describe a predominantly civil wrong without criminal ingredients or disclose prima facie criminal conduct. Under Amit Kapoor, the FIR and prosecution material must be assessed cautiously at face value, without meticulous weighing of evidence or a premature assessment of likely conviction.

The Court considered two connected stages of the alleged transaction. First, the complainant pledged a kilogram of gold to secure a ₹40 lakh loan, repaid the loan, and was told by Ankush that the gold was in Agra and would be returned later. Second, the applicants allegedly joined Ankush in offering eighty-eight kilograms of silver of equivalent value to gain the complainant's confidence until the gold was returned. The complainant received approximately 87.8 kilograms. Testing later indicated that the material was copper coated with silver, and the Court also referred to its seizure by the police. The Court held that knowingly supplying fake silver as genuine security to gain the complainant's confidence involved cheating, although the original gold pledge arose from a business transaction. The applicants' alleged participation in that later act supplied the criminal conduct attributed to them; their contention that the original pledge was only with Ankush did not justify quashing.

In refusing to quash, the Court held that the applicants knew that the material supplied as genuine silver was copper coated with silver and acted with an intention to cheat. That conclusion was reached on the allegations and the police seizure at the stage of considering quashing. Applying Amit Kapoor, the Court held that the civil aspect of the transaction did not warrant ending the FIR when the allegations also disclosed criminal conduct.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 to quash FIR Crime No. 661/2022. The proceedings under IPC Sections 420 and 406, with Section 409 subsequently added, therefore continued.

Vishal Goyal and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 16788/2024, 22/04/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (997) Prev Next

Headnote :- POCSO Act Sections 7/8 / minor complainant / settlement quashing - The Court refused to quash the FIR and criminal case alleging IPC Section 354 and POCSO Sections 7/8 against the complainant's maternal uncle on the basis of a verified family compromise. The Registrar verified the settlement but reported that the offences were non-compoundable under Section 320 CrPC. The father claimed to have compromised on behalf of the minor girl. The applicant argued that registration of an offence under a special statute did not prevent quashing under Section 482, relying on Ramgopal v. State of M.P., Criminal Appeal 1489/2012, order of 29 September 2021. The Court rejected the request. It relied on its earlier analysis in Arif Khan v. State of M.P., MCRC 39588/2019, and on Independent Thought v. Union of India; (2017) 10 SCC 800, which held that intercourse with a wife under eighteen is not excluded from rape merely because of marriage. Applying the protective principle to the compromise, the Court held that a minor's consent, immaterial at the time of the alleged sexual offence, could not become material for quashing through a later settlement. Accepting the compromise would indirectly defeat the protective purpose of POCSO. The Section 482 application was dismissed. The present allegations concerned breast touching and threats.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vishal Kukreja applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime No. 282/2018 at Police Station Madhoganj, Gwalior, and Criminal Case No. 135/2018. The registered offences were IPC Section 354 and Sections 7/8 of the Protection of Children from Sexual Offences Act. According to the prosecution, on 1 July 2018 a minor girl was walking towards her tuition teacher's house when Kukreja stopped her at about 4:30 p.m. He urged her to accompany him, saying that her mother was staying at his house. When she refused, he allegedly pressed her breast and threatened to spoil her father's career and have her kidnapped. She narrated the incident to her father and grandmother, and the FIR was lodged.

Kukreja stated that he was the complainant's maternal uncle. He submitted that a dispute between his sister, the girl's mother, and the girl's father had led to a false complaint intended to put pressure on him. He asserted that the family disputes had been settled and that the parties wished to end the litigation. On 26 August 2019, the High Court directed them to appear before the Principal Registrar for verification of the compromise. After recording statements, the Registrar verified the settlement and reported that IPC Section 354 and POCSO Sections 7/8 were not compoundable under Section 320 CrPC. On 14 November 2019, the State objected that the compromise could not be accepted because POCSO was a special statute. Kukreja relied on a Supreme Court decision concerning quashing on compromise. The child's father appeared before the Registrar and claimed to have compromised on her behalf. The Court considered whether that verified settlement justified quashing in view of the complainant's minority and the offences alleged under the protective statute.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kukreja relied on Ramgopal and Another v. State of M.P., Supreme Court Criminal Appeal No. 1489/2012, order dated 29 September 2021, to seek quashing on compromise despite the registration of an offence under a special statute. The Court recorded that submission but refused to quash the proceedings for the reasons concerning the minor's consent and the protective statute.

The Court relied on its earlier decision in Arif Khan v. State of M.P. and Others, MP High Court MCRC No. 39588/2019, order dated 20 September 2019, which had examined compromise in a sexual-offence case involving a minor. In that discussion, the Court referred to Section 375 Sixthly IPC, under which intercourse with a girl under eighteen constitutes rape irrespective of consent, and to the Supreme Court's decision concerning a child wife. It applied the reasoning that a minor's consent, legally immaterial when the offence was allegedly committed, could not become material for quashing the prosecution on compromise. The present application concerned IPC Section 354 and POCSO Sections 7/8; Section 375 supplied the age-and-consent reasoning rather than the offence charged.

Independent Thought v. Union of India and Another; (2017) 10 SCC 800, was considered in the Court's discussion of Arif Khan. It read down Exception 2 to IPC Section 375 so that intercourse with a wife under eighteen is not excluded from rape solely because of marriage. That decision concerned a child wife and the marital exception to rape. The Court drew on its protective age-and-consent principle when refusing to quash the present prosecution for the alleged POCSO sexual assault on compromise.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was invoked to quash the FIR and criminal proceedings on compromise. The Court refused relief because treating the minor's consent as material to compromise would defeat POCSO's protective purpose. Section 320 CrPC governed statutory compounding; the Registrar reported that IPC Section 354 and POCSO Sections 7/8 were non-compoundable. IPC Section 354 concerned the alleged assault outraging modesty, while Sections 7/8 of POCSO were the provisions invoked for the alleged sexual assault. IPC Section 375 Sixthly and the reading down of Exception 2 were discussed through Arif Khan and Independent Thought to explain the significance of minority and consent. Section 375 was not a charged offence in the present case.

4. Issues : Whether the verified family compromise claimed by a minor complainant's father on her behalf justified quashing under Section 482 of a prosecution under IPC Section 354 and POCSO Sections 7/8, in view of the offences' non-compoundability and the legal immateriality of a minor's consent.

5. Ratio / Findings : The compromise had been verified, but the Registrar reported that the offences were non-compoundable, and the State opposed ending the POCSO prosecution on settlement. The Court considered whether a minor girl could enter into a compromise for quashing proceedings concerning the alleged sexual assault. Her father had claimed before the Registrar to have compromised on her behalf. Relying on Arif Khan and the principle in Independent Thought concerning a wife under eighteen, the Court held that consent which was immaterial when the alleged sexual offence was committed could not become material merely because it was later expressed through a compromise. Permitting that result would indirectly defeat the protective purpose of POCSO. The Court illustrated the point by considering a minor who reports sexual violation despite having consented: the police would have to register the FIR because her consent was immaterial. Quashing that FIR on her application for compromise the very next day would permit indirectly what could not be done directly and would defeat the purpose of Section 375 IPC and the POCSO provisions.

The Court discussed the age-and-consent principle in rape law, while the present FIR alleged IPC Section 354 and POCSO Sections 7/8. The child-wife decision supplied the protective principle applied to the compromise; the present ruling refused quashing of the non-compoundable sexual-assault prosecution. The alleged family dispute and false implication were submissions made by the applicant in support of quashing.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application to quash FIR Crime No. 282/2018 and Criminal Case No. 135/2018 on compromise. The verified settlement did not terminate the proceedings under IPC Section 354 and POCSO Sections 7/8.

Vishal Kukreja v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 34817/2019, 11/11/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (998) Prev Next

Headnote :- Insecticides Act Section 24 / service of analyst report / recipient of protest - The Analyst reported that the fungicide sample was misbranded. The complaint did not state that the Insecticide Inspector had delivered the report by a notice under Section 24(2). Instead, the Deputy Director of Agriculture sent the report with an order restraining sales on 20 July 2018. On 6 August, within twenty-eight days, the applicants informed that officer that they intended to controvert the report and sought analysis by the Central Insecticides Laboratory. The State did not allege that the letter was forged; it objected that the Deputy Director was not the prescribed recipient. Reading subsections (2) and (3) together in those circumstances, the Court held that the applicants could respond to the official who had delivered the report. If he considered himself incompetent to act, he should have forwarded the protest. The trial court's rejection of the later application, made 161 days after a separate August reply, overlooked the timely notice of 6 August.

Insecticides Act Section 24 / analyst conclusiveness / valuable retesting right - The Court applied Northern Mineral Ltd. v. Union of India, (2010) 7 SCC 726. Timely written notice of an intention to adduce evidence in controversion removes the State Analyst report's conclusive character and enables Central Laboratory testing. The accused need not use a particular form of demand or disclose the grounds of the defence. Gupta Chemicals (P) Ltd. v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 7 SCC 735, and State of Punjab v. National Organic Chemical Industries Ltd., (1996) 11 SCC 613, explain the value of that defence and the prejudice caused when official delay or failure to preserve or produce a sample defeats it. Here, the failure to act on the timely challenge deprived the applicants of retesting. The Court therefore quashed five complaints and the consequential proceedings.

Other accused / Section 24(4) / existing central laboratory report - Northern Minerals Ltd. v. Rajasthan Govt., (2016) 12 SCC 298, distinguishes the twenty-eight-day written-protest requirement for the person from whom the sample was taken from the route available to another accused under subsection (4). Indofil Industries Ltd. v. State of Punjab, (2017) 8 SCC 656, explains that a request to the court for testing concerns a prosecution based on a State Analyst report where no Central Laboratory report is already available. An existing conclusive Central report cannot simply be subjected to another test under that provision. The Court considered those qualifications. The present cases concerned an initial State Analyst report and a timely protest on which no action was taken, rather than an existing Central report.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : By a common order, the Court decided MCRC Nos. 52793/2020, 99/2021, 103/2021, 106/2021 and 109/2021. It used the facts of the first case because counsel stated that the legal issues were common and that the differences concerned the dates of the reports and protests. The applicants included the managing director and quality controller of Vizien Organics, the manufacturer of Savera Fafundi fungicide, labelled as containing 12% Carbendazim and 36% Mancozeb. Complaints received in June-July 2018 alleged crop damage. The Deputy Director of Agriculture, Harda, took a sample from a seller on 3 July and sent it for analysis on 4 July. The State Analyst reported on 12 July that it contained 1.06% Carbendazim and no detectable Mancozeb. The seller's licence was cancelled after the replies were found unsatisfactory. The complaint alleged misbranding under Insecticides Act Section 3(k)(l), punishable under Section 29(1)(A). The applicants sought quashing of the private complaints and consequential proceedings under Section 482 CrPC. The allegation rested on the State report; there was no final judicial finding about composition following Central retesting.

The applicants contended that the Insecticide Inspector had not delivered the report by a notice under Section 24(2). Instead, the Deputy Director sent it with the order restraining sales dated 20 July 2018. On 6 August they wrote expressing their intention to contradict the report and requested Central Insecticides Laboratory testing. They contended that their statutory defence had been ignored. Their later application to the court in January 2019 was rejected on 16 January as having been made 161 days after the earlier reply of 2 August. On 16 June 2021, the High Court directed an affidavit on whether the letter of 6 August had been received, because the seal on the copy was indistinct. In its subsequent return, the State said that no request had been made to the prescribed Inspector or the court where proceedings were pending. It also referred to the alleged submission of the letter of 6 August to the Deputy Director and objected that he was not the statutory recipient. The applicants further submitted that the Deputy Director was also known as the Insecticide Inspector and had collected and sent the sample for analysis. The Court distinguished the timely protest of 6 August from the later court application and considered whether the recipient objection and official inaction had defeated retesting in all five connected matters.

2. Precedents — Considered : Northern Mineral Ltd. v. Union of India, 2010:INSC:365; (2010) 7 SCC 726, was extensively quoted and applied. It construed Sections 24(3)-(4) as providing that timely written notification of an intention to adduce evidence in controversion of the Analyst report removes its otherwise conclusive evidentiary status. The accused need not disclose defence grounds or expressly demand Central testing in prescribed words. The stated intention implies that demand and empowers the Magistrate to send the sample for analysis. Where no court proceedings are pending, notice must be given to the Inspector, who should act promptly and produce the sample so that the right remains effective. Northern Mineral treated National Organic Chemical Industries, Unique Farmaid and Gupta Chemicals as consistent with that principle; the result did not depend on a separately worded demand for retesting. The High Court applied the principle to the letter of 6 August and held that official inaction had violated the defence right.

Gupta Chemicals (P) Ltd. v. State of Rajasthan, (2010) 7 SCC 735 as printed in the order, was quoted on the Analyst report's ordinary conclusiveness, the twenty-eight-day protest requirement and the serious prejudice caused when Inspector inaction and expiry of shelf life prevent Central retesting. Continuation of the prosecution in that case was held futile. The High Court relied on its reasoning concerning the statutory defence.

State of Punjab v. National Organic Chemical Industries Ltd., (1996) 11 SCC 613, explained the Section 22 requirements for dividing, sealing, returning and preserving samples, together with the opportunity under Section 24 to controvert the report. The third sample had not been supplied in that case, and delay deprived the accused of a meaningful Central test. The Supreme Court upheld quashing on that basis. It also noted that an accused who does not use an available statutory remedy cannot automatically claim deprivation of the defence. The High Court relied on the need to keep that defence effective.

Northern Minerals Ltd. v. Rajasthan Govt., (2016) 12 SCC 298, was quoted for a harmonious reading of Sections 24(3) and (4). The person from whom a sample is taken must object within twenty-eight days. Another accused may seek Central testing through the court under subsection (4), without that same express time condition. That accused's valuable defence cannot be frustrated through no fault of their own, and they must bear the testing cost. The Court considered this qualification in the context of manufacturer personnel and a sample taken from a dealer.

Indofil Industries Ltd. v. State of Punjab, (2017) 8 SCC 656, was quoted on the evidentiary effect of Sections 24(3)-(4), the need for prompt Inspector action and the limit where a Central Insecticides Laboratory report already forms part of the prosecution. In that situation, another accused cannot require a second test of the sample already used under subsection (4); the Supreme Court upheld continuation of the prosecution in that case. It referred to Unique Farmaid and Gupta Chemicals in explaining that the Inspector should promptly send the third sample for Central testing or institute proceedings in time to enable testing through the court. The present High Court considered that authority alongside the timely protest on which no action had been taken and the initial State Analyst report, rather than an existing Central report.

The interim order of June 2021 recorded counsel's reliance on Northern Mineral and National Organic and the State's submissions on timing, sampling and the earlier reply of 2 August. The final judgment resolved the recipient and retesting questions after considering the State's subsequent return.

3. Statutes considered : Under Section 24(1) of the Insecticides Act, 1968, the Analyst must, within thirty days, deliver a signed report in duplicate, in the prescribed form, to the Inspector who submitted the sample. Subsection (2) requires the Inspector to deliver one copy to the person from whom the sample was taken and retain the other for prosecution. Under subsection (3), the signed State

Analyst report is evidence and is ordinarily conclusive unless that person notifies the Inspector, or the court where proceedings concerning the sample are pending, in writing within twenty-eight days of receipt that they intend to adduce controverting evidence. Unless the sample has already been tested by the Central Laboratory, subsection (4) permits the court, on a qualifying notification, to send it for Central testing on its own motion or, in its discretion, at the request of the complainant or accused. The provision requires the Central Laboratory to test or analyse within thirty days and report in writing signed by, or under the authority of, its Director; that report is conclusive. Subsection (5) allocates the testing cost as the court directs. The Court read the delivery and protest provisions together because the Deputy Director had transmitted the report without a separate Inspector's notice. Section 3(k)(l) and Section 29(1)(A) identified the alleged misbranding offence and penalty. Section 200 CrPC governed the complaints, and Section 482 supplied the inherent power used to quash them after the statutory defence had been lost.

4. Issues : (i) Had the State complied with Section 24(2) when the Deputy Director enclosed the Analyst report with an order restraining sales and no separate Inspector's notice was pleaded? (ii) Was the written protest of 6 August to that officer effective and timely under Section 24(3), despite the State's objection that it should have been addressed to the Inspector? (iii) What consequences for evidence and retesting followed from a qualifying protest, including the rights of manufacturer personnel or other accused and the limit on another test where a Central report already existed? (iv) Did the failure to act on the protest deprive these applicants of a valuable statutory defence so that the five complaints could not continue?

5. Ratio / Findings : The complaint did not state that an Inspector had delivered the report by a notice under Section 24(2). The Deputy Director's prohibitory order of 20 July enclosed the report but did not purport to be such a notice. The State accepted that the report had been delivered in that way and did not allege that the letter of 6 August was fabricated. Its objection concerned the Deputy Director's competence to receive it. The Court held that the applicants had validly expressed their intention to controvert the report by responding within twenty-eight days to the official who had sent it. If that official considered himself incompetent to act, he should have forwarded the application to the Inspector. Rejection of the later court application as 161 days late did not displace the earlier timely protest.

The timely notice of intention removed the Analyst report's conclusive character. Northern Mineral established that no particular form of retesting demand was necessary. Gupta Chemicals and National Organic illustrated the loss of a defence when official conduct defeats access to a viable sample and Central analysis. Northern Minerals and Indofil explained the position of other accused and the restriction on another test where a Central report already exists. No Central test was shown to have been undertaken in these complaints. The Court held that the complainant should have arranged Central analysis after the protest and that the failure to do so violated a valuable, mandatory safeguard. The loss of the statutory opportunity justified quashing all five prosecutions; the recipient objection could not defeat a timely response to the official whom the State had itself used to send the report.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the common applications under Section 482. It quashed the complaints under Section 200 CrPC and all consequential proceedings in RCT Case Nos. 739/2019, 741/2019, 743/2019, 740/2019 and 738/2019.

Vishesh Bansal and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh, M.Cr.C. no. 52793/2020 & 99/2021 & 103/2021 & 106/2021 & 109/2021, 07/05/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (999) Prev Next

Headnote :- Power-of-attorney holder / witness box / own acts - The Court applied Janki Vashdeo Bhojwani v. IndusInd Bank Ltd., (2005) 2 SCC 217, to a criminal case in which the complainant's wife had been permitted to testify in his place. An attorney-holder may testify on oath about her own acts and facts within her personal knowledge. A power of attorney does not enable her to give evidence of the principal's personal experience as though she were the principal. The Supreme Court approved the Rajasthan High Court's approach in Shambhu Dutt Shastri and Ram Prasad, and disapproved the contrary view in Floriano Armando Luis. The High Court set aside the trial and revisional orders. It confined the wife's evidence to acts she had performed as attorney-holder and did not permit her to testify for or on behalf of her husband.

Evidence Act Section 120 / civil and criminal limbs / complainant's spouse - The Court read Section 120 as making the spouse of a party to a civil suit a competent witness, while its criminal limb refers to the spouse of the person against whom proceedings are brought. Marriage to the complainant did not entitle this wife to replace him in the witness box under that criminal limb. The Court connected the restriction with the prosecution's burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt and its concern about accounts given without direct knowledge. The decision concerned representative testimony in the husband's place, rather than a general exclusion of a spouse's direct evidence of facts personally witnessed. The underlying criminal charge was not decided.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vishnu Sharma applied under Section 528 of the Bharatiya Nagarik Suraksha Sanhita, 2023, identified in the order alongside the former Section 482 CrPC. He challenged the order dated 11 December 2023 passed by the JMFC, Gwalior, in Criminal Case No. 1817/2017 and its affirmance by the Sessions Judge, Gwalior, on 13 March 2024 in Criminal Revision No. 35/2024. Those orders permitted the complainant's wife to testify for and on behalf of her husband. The trial court had stated that she could speak only to facts within her personal knowledge.

Relying on Janki Vashdeo Bhojwani, Vishnu argued that a power-of-attorney holder may give evidence of acts performed by the holder but cannot enter the witness box in the principal's place. Respondent 2 contended that the wife was a competent witness under Section 120 of the Indian Evidence Act. The High Court examined the Supreme Court's rule concerning attorney-holders and Section 120's distinct civil and criminal limbs. It set aside both lower orders and specified the limited scope in which she could give evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : Janki Vashdeo Bhojwani and Another v. IndusInd Bank Ltd. and Others, 2004:INSC:695; (2005) 2 SCC 217, was cited by counsel, quoted and applied by the Judge. The Supreme Court distinguished the authority to appear, plead and act under Order III Rule 2 CPC from the personal act of entering the witness box. An attorney-holder cannot testify in the principal's place or give evidence as though the principal's firsthand knowledge were her own. The holder may testify about acts she performed and facts within her personal knowledge. The quoted passages approved Shambhu Dutt Shastri v. State of Rajasthan, (1986) 2 WLN 713, and Ram Prasad v. Hari Narain, AIR 1998 Raj 185, which drew that distinction. The Supreme Court disapproved and overruled the contrary view in Floriano Armando Luis, (2002) 2 Bom CR 754, to the extent discussed. The High Court applied the attorney-holder principle in this criminal proceeding and examined whether Section 120 separately entitled the complainant's wife to testify in his place. It held that the provision did not do so.

3. Statutes considered : Section 528 BNSS, 2023 was the inherent-jurisdiction provision invoked; the order identified Section 482 CrPC in parentheses as its earlier counterpart. The Court quoted Section 120 of the Indian Evidence Act, 1872 and distinguished its two limbs. In civil proceedings, spouses of parties to a civil suit are competent witnesses. In criminal proceedings, the provision refers to the spouse of the person proceeded against. The Court held that the latter wording did not refer to a complainant's spouse as such. It emphasised proof beyond reasonable doubt in criminal proceedings, in contrast to the civil standard of preponderance of probabilities. In explaining why an attorney-holder could not give evidence in the principal's place, the Court treated hearsay without direct evidence as having no independent evidentiary value and described hearsay as only corroborative.

4. Issues : (i) Could the holder of the complainant's power of attorney testify for and on his behalf beyond acts she personally performed as attorney-holder? (ii) Did Section 120 of the Evidence Act give the wife of a criminal complainant a wider competence to give evidence in his place, despite the provision's different civil and criminal limbs? (iii) Should the trial and revisional permissions stand or be confined? The Court was not deciding the merits of the underlying criminal case or any particular disputed fact to be proved in it.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court applied Janki Vashdeo Bhojwani's distinction between acts performed by an authorised person and evidence based on personal knowledge. A power of attorney does not allow its holder to enter the witness box as though she were the principal. Section 120's civil limb makes spouses of parties to civil suits competent witnesses; its criminal limb concerns the spouse of the person against whom proceedings are brought. The husband here was the complainant. Marriage to him did not bring the wife within that criminal limb so as to prove his firsthand account in his place. The Court emphasised the prosecution's burden of proof beyond reasonable doubt. It treated hearsay without direct evidence as having no independent evidentiary value and described it as only corroborative. Despite the trial court's personal-knowledge restriction, the High Court found material irregularity in permitting testimony beyond the wife's own acts as attorney-holder. It expressly confined her evidence to acts performed in that capacity.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application under Section 528 BNSS. It set aside the Sessions Judge's order dated 13 March 2024 and the JMFC's order dated 11 December 2023. The wife could give evidence of acts she performed as attorney-holder, but could not testify for or on behalf of her husband as principal. The criminal case was not dismissed or decided on its merits.

Vishnu Sharma v. Rakesh Sharma and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 28267/2024, 13/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1000) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / complainant seeking arrest and charge escalation - In Crime No. 174/2023, registered under IPC Sections 323, 294, 506 and 34, the applicant sought a fair investigation, protection for his family, addition of penal sections on the basis of a medical report, and arrest of the allegedly absconding accused. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the Court refused to direct arrest or require a charge sheet. Investigation is the police's statutory duty, and a court exercising Section 482 powers ordinarily cannot prescribe each investigative step or dictate the report's outcome. M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, quoted within that authority, explains that Section 41 CrPC confers a discretionary arrest power to be exercised cautiously; arrest does not follow automatically from an FIR. The Supreme Court passage also relied on Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542. That case concerned a judicial direction to investigate allegations in an anonymous petition without hearing the affected person, with drastic consequences for that person's reputation.

Section 173(1) CrPC / Section 193 BNSS reference / timely final report - The Court stated that an investigation must be completed without unnecessary delay. It reproduced Section 173(1) CrPC and also referred to Section 193 BNSS. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation into the 2023 FIR as early as possible, decide according to law whether an offence was made out, and submit the appropriate closure report or charge sheet. The Court left the necessary lawful investigative steps and the final report's outcome to the police. It expressly refused to compel arrest or a charge sheet. The applicant remained free to approach the Superintendent of Police, Morena, with a grievance for consideration according to law.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vivek Tyagi applied under Section 482 CrPC concerning Crime No. 174/2023 at Police Station Kailaras, District Morena. His complaint had led to registration of the case under IPC Sections 323, 294, 506 and 34. He alleged that the police had taken no further action and had not arrested the persons he accused.

The written prayer sought four forms of relief: a fair and impartial investigation; protection for Tyagi and his family from the accused; addition of sections in the FIR on the basis of his medical report; and arrest of the allegedly absconding accused. Counsel emphasised police inaction and the failure to arrest. The Court considered whether it could direct arrest and the filing of a charge sheet, examined the Supreme Court's limits on judicial supervision of investigation, and then addressed the duty to complete the investigation. It disposed of the application by directing prompt completion and leaving Tyagi free to submit a grievance to the Superintendent of Police.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam and Others v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari and Another, 2009:INSC:1132; (2009) 10 SCC 488, was extensively quoted and applied. The Supreme Court set aside an unreasoned High Court order directing particular investigative steps, including recording statements, arrest, seizure and filing a charge sheet. The persons seriously affected by those directions had not been heard; the Supreme Court held that the order was a nullity and liable to be set aside on that ground alone. Investigation is the police's duty, but the evidence must inform their lawful decision whether arrest, seizure or a charge sheet is warranted, or whether no case is made out. Section 482 has limited purposes and must be exercised cautiously and with reasons. The present High Court applied that principle in refusing to direct the arrest of the persons accused by Tyagi or to require a charge sheet. It nevertheless required the investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, 2002:INSC:575; (2003) 2 SCC 649, appeared within the D. Venkatasubramaniam quotation. Its discussion of Section 41 CrPC explains the police officer's discretion to arrest in the specified cognizable-offence situations after appropriate inquiry; registration of a complaint does not automatically require arrest. Because arrest interferes with liberty and reputation, the power must be exercised cautiously, taking account of the offence and the persons involved. The Supreme Court passage also quoted Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, 2008:INSC:341; (2008) 3 SCC 542. That case concerned a judicial direction to investigate allegations in an anonymous petition without hearing the person affected. The quoted principle required a reasonable opportunity to be heard before a judicial order with drastic consequences, particularly for reputation. D. Venkatasubramaniam criticised the absence of notice to the affected persons and of reasons for directing particular police action. These three authorities formed part of the present Judge's reasoning.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC was the jurisdictional basis of Tyagi's application. The quoted precedent states its purposes: giving effect to orders under the Code, preventing abuse of process and securing the ends of justice. It requires cautious exercise of the power rather than routine interference with police discretion. Section 41 CrPC, discussed in the M.C. Abraham passage, confers a conditional and discretionary power of arrest without a warrant; it does not compel arrest upon registration of a case. The Court reproduced Section 173(1) CrPC, requiring every investigation under the chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay, and referred alongside it to Section 193 BNSS. IPC Sections 323, 294, 506 and 34 were the registered offences. The order did not construe their elements or select additional provisions on the basis of the applicant's reference to a medical report.

4. Issues : (i) Could a complainant alleging police inaction obtain directions under Section 482 compelling arrest, particular investigative steps, addition of FIR sections and a charge sheet in the registered case? (ii) Was the investigating officer nevertheless bound to complete the investigation without unnecessary delay and submit the lawful final report? The Court was not assessing guilt or the legal effect of the medical report referred to by the applicant.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court refused to direct arrest or the filing of a charge sheet. D. Venkatasubramaniam treats investigation as the police's statutory responsibility and cautions against a court prescribing steps in place of the investigating officer's assessment. The M.C. Abraham discussion within it explains that arrest under Section 41 requires the exercise of judgment and does not follow merely from registration of an FIR disclosing a cognizable offence. The general direction to take necessary lawful steps did not grant the specific prayers for compelled arrest and a charge sheet. The Court also applied the duty under Section 173(1) CrPC to complete investigation without unnecessary delay, referring alongside it to Section 193 BNSS. An officer cannot keep the investigation pending indefinitely: the officer must decide whether an offence is made out and submit the appropriate closure report or charge sheet as early as possible. The final direction required completion and necessary steps according to law, leaving the decision on arrest, any added sections and the report's outcome to the statutory process. The Court fixed no calendar deadline. Tyagi remained free to approach the Superintendent of Police, Morena, with a grievance for consideration according to law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the application by directing the investigating officer to conclude the investigation in Crime No. 174/2023 as early as possible and take the steps required by law. It expressly refused to compel arrest or the filing of a charge sheet. The operative relief was confined to completion of the investigation and liberty for Tyagi to submit a grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Morena, for consideration according to law. The order did not grant a separate protection direction or select enhanced penal sections. The alleged offences and the accused persons' culpability remained for the statutory process.

Vivek Tyagi v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 22681/2023, 16/12/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1001) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / charge sheet and framed charges / face-value threshold - The Court heard the challenge to the revisable order framing charges because the applicant also challenged the entire charge sheet, but dismissed the application on merits. It applied XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, State of T.N. v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, and Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319. It also relied on State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal 709/2021, and the associated authorities. Those decisions establish that Section 482 does not permit a roving inquiry into disputed defence facts, credibility or the likely result of a trial. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, recognises quashing where the allegations, accepted at face value, or the uncontroverted allegations and supporting evidence disclose no offence. Gourishetty also recognises an express legal bar as a ground for intervention. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, permits consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or a defence document whose truth the complainant does not dispute. The Court held that the detailed allegations of dowry demands, assault, threats and taking of property were sufficient to proceed under IPC Sections 498-A, 406 and 506 Part-II. It did not decide whether those allegations were true.

Earlier complaint / second FIR / double jeopardy - The application made to the family counselling committee on 17 March 2021 had not resulted in an FIR or a prosecution and trial. The FIR registered following the complainant's further application on 2 October 2021 was therefore neither a prohibited second FIR for the same occurrence nor a second prosecution.

Matrimonial cruelty / parental home / delay and continuing harm - The Court applied Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, concerning mental trauma that continues after a woman leaves the matrimonial home because of physical or verbal cruelty. It also referred to Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla, Criminal Revision 2376/2020, MP High Court, 22 June 2021, on being compelled to live at the parental home. The applicant relied on the time elapsed, the complainant's employment and his contrary account. The Court assessed her separate residence in light of her allegations of sustained demands, harassment and assault, and declined to quash the proceedings under Section 482.

Civil remedy / alleged second marriage / criminal ingredients - The Court applied Indian Oil Corpn. v. NEPC India Ltd., (2006) 6 SCC 736. The same facts may constitute both a civil wrong and a criminal offence, and an available civil remedy does not by itself justify quashing where the allegations disclose a criminal offence. The availability of a forum to challenge the alleged second marriage as void therefore did not preclude prosecution for alleged conduct that disclosed criminal ingredients. The Court also observed that bigamy is an offence.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vivek Walter applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash the charge sheet and the order dated 15 June 2023 passed by the JMFC, Jabalpur, framing charges under IPC Sections 498-A, 406 and 506 Part-II in Criminal Case No. 2017/2021. His counsel acknowledged that the charge order was revisable, but pressed the challenge to the entire charge sheet. The High Court heard the application on merits. His wife, respondent 2, had first approached the Parivar Paramarsh Committee. She alleged that he appeared with difficulty on 18 September 2021 and signed the reconciliation record, but did not return for the session on 2 October. Her further application that day led to an FIR. The police completed the investigation and filed a charge sheet. According to the wife, they married under Christian rites on 12 February 2007. She alleged demands before and at the marriage for a car, household items and jewellery, the taking of cash gifts and other property, and repeated demands thereafter. She alleged that he took ₹1 lakh from her aunt for a honeymoon and made demands connected with his surgery. Her account also described assault and twisting of her wrist, destruction of her phone, confinement in a bathroom, threats to ruin her life, and further assaults in 2007 and 2008, one of which resulted in hospital admission. She alleged that he disposed of four gold bangles, used a credit card in her name without paying, pressed her family for money and property, sent her to her parental home with their ill child and threatened her mother. She said that she endured the treatment for years in the hope of preserving the marriage, but complained after learning of the alleged second marriage. These are her accusations, not judicial findings.

Walter asserted that the earlier complaint dated 17 March 2021 contained the same allegations and that the later FIR therefore amounted to a prohibited second prosecution. He said that the allegations and purported remarriage were false, that his wife had left without cause, and that she worked as a professor earning about ₹75,000 a month. He also contended that the FIR was time-barred and that the dispute about the alleged second marriage belonged before a civil or matrimonial forum. The Court considered the challenge to the charge sheet and charge order without trying the disputed evidence.

2. Precedents — Considered : XYZ v. State of Gujarat, (2019) 10 SCC 337, was quoted on the limits of Section 482. It disapproved a High Court's roving inquiry into coercion and disputed relationship facts while investigation was pending; the alleged settlement did not conclusively answer the serious allegations. State of Tamil Nadu v. S. Martin, (2018) 5 SCC 718, was briefly quoted against assessing the case prematurely before investigation had ended. Ajay Kumar Das v. State of Jharkhand, (2011) 12 SCC 319, reiterated the caution in State of Haryana v. Bhajan Lal that inherent quashing powers must be exercised sparingly and cannot be used to decide the reliability or genuineness of FIR allegations. The High Court applied that caution to Walter's request that it disbelieve his wife. Mohd. Akram Siddiqui v. State of Bihar, (2019) 13 SCC 350, was quoted for the general rule against assessing the accused's defence or the truth of defence documents at the quashing stage. It permits consideration, in an appropriate case, of a public document or a document whose truth the complainant does not dispute. State of A.P. v. Gourishetty Mahesh, (2010) 11 SCC 226, was quoted at length. Section 482 does not permit a trial of credibility or the likelihood of conviction; intervention may nevertheless be justified where face-value allegations disclose no offence, an express legal bar applies, or sufficient material shows malicious institution of proceedings. M. Srikanth v. State of Telangana, (2019) 10 SCC 373, restated the grounds for quashing where allegations taken at face value, or uncontroverted allegations with the supporting evidence, disclose no offence. CBI v. Arvind Khanna, (2019) 10 SCC 686, disapproved detailed findings on disputed defence facts after cognizance had been taken. State of M.P. v. Kunwar Singh, Criminal Appeal 709/2021, Supreme Court order dated 30 June 2021, was cited against scrutiny resembling a trial and for the proposition that an FIR is not an encyclopedia. Those authorities supported the High Court's refusal to decide the truth of Walter's denial or assess his wife's credibility. Paragraph 17 also lists Munshiram, Teeja Devi, Ujjal Kumar Burdhan, S. Khushboo, Sangeeta Agrawal, Amit Kapoor, Padal Venkata Rama Reddy and M.N. Ojha v. Alok Kumar Srivastav as taking a similar view. Satvinder Kaur v. State (Govt. of NCT of Delhi), (1999) 8 SCC 728, was separately quoted for allowing police investigation where an FIR prima facie discloses an offence and for assessing quashing on the allegations rather than deciding their disputed truth. Its passage referred to State of W.B. v. Swapan Kumar Guha and Pratibha Rani v. Suraj Kumar for those propositions. In its own factual setting, it also discussed territorial investigation under Sections 178(c) and 156(2) CrPC. It further quoted State of Kerala v. O.C. Kuttan, which referred to State of U.P. v. O.P. Sharma and Rashmi Kumar v. Mahesh Kumar Bhada, on the exceptional and cautious exercise of quashing powers without weighing FIR materials. Vinod Raghuvanshi v. Ajay Arora, (2013) 10 SCC 581, was quoted against stifling a prosecution having substance at the initial stage or predicting what would be proved at trial. It also noted the possibility of altering charges under Section 216 CrPC. CBI v. A. Ravishankar Prasad, (2009) 6 SCC 351, identified the purposes of Section 482: giving effect to an order under the Code, preventing abuse of process and securing justice, with sparing exercise of the power. The High Court relied on those authorities in refusing to terminate the prosecution by assessing disputed facts. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, was applied for the continuing mental cruelty suffered after a woman takes shelter with her parents following alleged physical or verbal abuse. Amar Singh v. Smt. Vimla, Criminal Revision 2376/2020, MP High Court order dated 22 June 2021, was cited for the proposition that compelling a woman to live at her parental home amounts to cruelty. Those decisions supported the rejection of the contention that her residence apart from Walter itself disproved cruelty. Indian Oil Corpn. v. NEPC India Ltd., (2006) 6 SCC 736, was quoted on the availability of civil and criminal remedies where the facts disclose both civil and criminal ingredients. The Court applied it to reject the argument that the alleged remarriage could be challenged only through a civil declaration.

3. Statutes considered : The application invoked the High Court's inherent power under Section 482 CrPC and was heard despite the revisability of the charge order. The quoted authorities identify the exceptional grounds for intervention where the allegations disclose no offence or a legal bar applies; they do not permit a trial of the defence. Sections 498-A, 406 and 506 Part-II IPC were the framed charges. The Court considered whether the allegations of cruelty, taking of property and threats sufficed at that stage, without deciding whether the offences would be proved at trial. Section 216 CrPC appeared in the passage quoted from Vinod Raghuvanshi as a power to alter charges later in the trial; the High Court did not exercise it. The objection based on two FIRs for the same offence failed because the earlier complaint had not resulted in an FIR, prosecution or trial.

4. Issues : (i) Could the challenge under Section 482 to the charge sheet and framed charges succeed by assessing disputed allegations, defence assertions and the complainant's credibility rather than accepting the prosecution allegations at face value? (ii) Did the March 2021 complaint, followed by the October application and FIR, amount to an impermissible second FIR or second prosecution? (iii) Did the years of separate residence, her income, the delay and the husband's contrary account defeat the allegation of cruelty? (iv) Did an available civil or matrimonial remedy concerning the alleged second marriage bar a criminal prosecution where the allegations independently disclosed criminal offences?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court heard the application on merits at counsel's insistence because the entire charge sheet was challenged, while acknowledging that the charge order was revisable. The Supreme Court authorities permit quashing under Section 482 where uncontroverted allegations do not prima facie disclose an offence or an express legal bar precludes the proceedings. They do not permit the Court to decide disputed truth, assess credibility, predict the trial result or consider defence documents outside the applicable limited exception. The allegations described specific demands, assaults, retention or use of property and threats over time. Although their truth was disputed, the Court held that, taken at face value, they disclosed grounds to proceed under the framed IPC provisions. The earlier complaint dated 17 March had not been registered as an FIR or led to a prosecution and trial. The committee proceedings and further application on 2 October therefore did not amount to two FIRs or successive prosecutions. The Court rejected the assertion that the wife had no reason to live with her parents: she alleged that she had been driven to do so by physical and mental harassment. Rupali Devi's principle of continuing mental trauma and the cited local decision supported the assessment that the consequences could persist after she left the matrimonial home. Her income and Walter's denials were matters relied on by the applicant. The Court held that the specific allegations, accepted at face value, disclosed the charged offences. It also rejected the argument that the availability of a forum to challenge the purported second marriage made the criminal allegations non-maintainable. Under Indian Oil, civil and criminal proceedings may coexist where the allegations disclose criminal offences. The Court also observed that bigamy is an offence.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482. It declined to quash the charge sheet and the order dated 15 June 2023 passed by the JMFC, Jabalpur, framing charges under IPC Sections 498-A, 406 and 506 Part-II in Criminal Case No. 2017/2021.

Vivek Walter v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 35562/2023, 05/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1002) Prev Next

Headnote :- Circumstantial evidence / last seen / narrow time gap - The Court considered Ramreddy Rajeshkhanna Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 172, Hatti Singh v. State of Haryana, and State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114. The rule quoted from those decisions applies where the interval between the accused and the deceased being last seen together alive and the discovery of death is so short that no person other than the accused could have committed the crime. Even then, courts should look for corroboration. Where the interval is long and others could have intervened, a conclusion of guilt on last-seen evidence without other positive evidence is hazardous. In this case, villagers testified that the accused had taken the girl, who was aged about seven, away and returned alone. The Court considered that evidence together with the recovery of her body from a drain, the medical evidence of injuries and testimony about admissions made to villagers.

Complete chain / murder, rape and concealment / appellate proof - The appellant challenged the grandmother's and sister's testimony, alleged that the sister had been tutored and relied on the absence of motive. The Court nevertheless held that the last-seen testimony, other circumstances and medical evidence proved his guilt beyond reasonable doubt under IPC Sections 302, 376(1)(f) and 201. It held that hiding the body in a drain caused the disappearance of evidence. The concurrent sentences were affirmed: life imprisonment, ten years' rigorous imprisonment and three years' rigorous imprisonment, respectively, together with the trial court's fines and default terms.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Vrindawan appealed from jail against the judgment dated 8 September 2011 passed by the Second Additional Sessions Judge, Vidisha, in Sessions Trial No. 334/2010. The trial court convicted him under IPC Section 302 and imposed life imprisonment and a ₹1,000 fine; under Section 376(1)(f), ten years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹1,000 fine; and under Section 201, three years' rigorous imprisonment and a ₹500 fine. The default terms were five, five and three months' imprisonment, respectively. The substantive sentences were to run concurrently. The prosecution alleged that a girl, described by the appellate court as aged around seven, disappeared in March 2010. Nand Lal, the village chowkidar, reported the discovery of her body. A merg was registered, the scene was documented, and drain water, a shawl and clothing were seized. Dr. P.K. Jain conducted the postmortem on 26 March; samples, the tibia and clothing were preserved, and FSL reports were obtained. The police examined Vrindawan, registered an FIR and arrested him. They investigated the case and charged him with murder, rape and causing the disappearance of evidence. In his statement under Section 313 CrPC, he denied the accusation, stated that he had worked as a labourer in Bhopal for three years and claimed false implication. He examined no defence witness. The prosecution examined twelve witnesses. On appeal, he argued that the testimony of the grandmother, Boonda Bai (PW2), and elder sister, Pooja (PW3), contained material contradictions and omissions, that Pooja had been tutored, and that motive was absent. He sought to have the conviction set aside. The State supported the trial court's findings.

2. Precedents — Considered : Ramreddy Rajeshkhanna Reddy v. State of A.P., (2006) 10 SCC 172, was relied on for the last-seen principle. The judgment records that it relied on Anil Kumar Singh v. State of Bihar, (2003) 9 SCC 67, and Reddy Sampath Kumar v. State of A.P., (2005) 7 SCC 603. The reproduced passage requires the interval between the accused and the deceased being last seen together alive and the discovery of death to be so short that no person other than the accused could have committed the crime. Even then, courts should look for corroboration. The quotation attributes that proposition to State of U.P. v. Satish.

Hatti Singh v. State of Haryana was separately quoted as following Ramreddy on the same requirement of a short interval and corroboration. State of U.P. v. Satish, (2005) 3 SCC 114, was also quoted directly. It cautions that a conclusion of guilt is hazardous where the interval is long and others could have intervened, in the absence of other positive evidence that the accused and deceased were last seen together. The High Court applied those principles to the witnesses' accounts of seeing Vrindawan with the child and to the other circumstances.

3. Statutes considered : IPC Section 302 governed the murder conviction; Section 376(1)(f) governed the rape conviction as charged and sentenced under the law then applied; and Section 201 governed the conviction for causing the disappearance of evidence of the offence. The appeal examined whether the circumstantial evidence proved all three charges beyond reasonable doubt. In his statement under Section 313 CrPC, Vrindawan denied the accusation and asserted that he had been working in Bhopal. Section 174 CrPC appeared in the account of the police merg proceedings.

4. Issues : (i) Did the last-seen evidence and supporting circumstances form a complete chain proving that Vrindawan murdered and raped the minor and concealed evidence, despite the alleged witness contradictions, tutoring and absence of motive? (ii) Should the trial convictions and concurrent sentences be affirmed?

5. Ratio / Findings : Nand Lal (PW1) described the recovery of the body and the initial police proceedings. He did not know how the child had died and repeated what villagers had said about the accused. Boonda Bai (PW2) described her search and missing-person report. Pooja (PW3), the deceased's elder sister, identified Vrindawan as a relative and testified that he had taken the child away. Kunwar Singh (PW6), Kamal (PW7) and Gajju (PW8) gave the principal last-seen accounts. The accused had been seen with the child; Kamal said that he returned alone at around 7 p.m. The Court also relied on Kunwar Singh's testimony that the accused admitted the murder before him and Khilua. The postmortem recorded a laceration on the anterior vaginal side and decomposition, but Dr. Jain could not give a definite cause of death. He estimated that death had occurred three to four days before the examination. He also testified that the accused had admitted rape when the doctor examined him and that the child's injury was not caused by a fall or contact with a penetrating object. He acknowledged that he had not stated the size of the injuries in his report. The Division Bench nevertheless held that the witness testimony, medical evidence and recovery of the body from a drain together completed the circumstantial chain, excluded another perpetrator and proved guilt beyond reasonable doubt. It held that hiding the body in the drain caused the disappearance of evidence under Section 201. In view of the child's rape and murder, it found the trial sentences adequate.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the appeal. It affirmed the convictions and sentences under IPC Sections 302, 376(1)(f) and 201 imposed by the trial judgment dated 8 September 2011, including the fines, default terms and concurrent running of the substantive sentences. Vrindawan, who was already in jail, was to serve the remaining sentence. The outcome was to be communicated to the jail authorities, and a copy of the judgment and the record were to be sent to the trial court.

Vrindawan v. State of Madhya Pradesh, Cr.A. no. 289/2012, 07/07/2022, D.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1003) Prev Next

Headnote :- Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act / minor rape complainant / Medical Board - The Court considered an Article 226 petition by a girl described as about seventeen who alleged rape and whose pregnancy measured sixteen weeks and six days. It applied Sections 3 and 5(1) of the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971 as they stood before amendment, together with Murugan Nayakkar v. Union of India, W.P. (Civil) 749/2017, order of 6 September 2017. In that case, the Supreme Court permitted termination for a thirteen-year-old alleged sexual-abuse survivor after considering her age, trauma and the Medical Board's assessment. In X's case, the Board found termination medically feasible after correction of anemia; its report recorded the haemoglobin condition as ">10 gm". The Court permitted termination subject to those safeguards, directed admission by 20 March 2020 and required the procedure to be carried out promptly with gynecology, anesthesia and other specialists, followed by State postoperative care.

Statutory framework / pregnancy within twenty weeks / mental-health injury - Under the version of Section 3(2) quoted in the 2020 order, a pregnancy exceeding twelve but not twenty weeks required the good-faith opinion of two registered medical practitioners on the specified health or fetal-risk grounds, subject to Section 3(4). Explanation 1 presumed grave injury to mental health where the woman alleged that the pregnancy resulted from rape. Section 5(1) separately disapplied the specified duration and two-practitioner conditions, as well as Section 4, where immediate termination was necessary to save the woman's life. The Court considered the girl's age, alleged sexual trauma, the Board's assessment of gestation at sixteen weeks and six days, and its finding of fitness subject to correction of anemia.

Court-ordered procedure / medical safeguards / clinician protection - Following the approach in Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon v. Union of India, a Bombay High Court decision, the Court granted participating doctors immunity from litigation arising from its termination order. It required the heads of gynecology and anesthesia and the other specialists to be present during the procedure. If the heads were unavailable, experienced senior doctors were to carry it out. The Court also directed postoperative care.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The petitioner, anonymized as X in the judgment, approached the Madhya Pradesh High Court under Article 226 for permission and an immediate direction to terminate her pregnancy. In an FIR dated 16 February 2020, she stated that she was about seventeen. She alleged that Rahul Pal had developed physical relations with her on a promise of marriage and refused to marry her after she became pregnant. She also alleged that his parents, Sunita and Dhruv, supported him and scolded her, and that his brother Manoj tried to outrage her modesty. FIR No. 105/2020 at Police Station Dwarikapuri, Indore, listed IPC Sections 363, 366-A, 376(2)(n), 376-D, 323, 294 and 354(A), POCSO Sections 5, 6, 11 and 12, and specified SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act provisions. X's pregnancy was initially described as three months. On 13 March 2020, the Court ordered her examination by the Medical Board at M.Y. Hospital, Indore. Sonography dated 16 March assessed gestation at sixteen weeks and six days. Two gynecologists considered termination possible after correction of anemia. The psychiatric assessment found no current psychiatric illness and described her mental capacity as appropriate for her age. The medicine and anesthesia opinions made fitness conditional on correction of anemia, recording haemoglobin as ">10 gm". The Board's overall opinion was that termination was feasible after correction of anemia. The Court had to decide whether to grant prompt permission and what safeguards were needed for a pregnant minor who alleged sexual assault.

2. Precedents — Considered : Murugan Nayakkar v. Union of India and Others, W.P. (Civil) No. 749/2017, Supreme Court order dated 6 September 2017, was quoted and applied. In that case, a thirteen-year-old alleged rape and sexual-abuse survivor sought termination of her pregnancy. The Medical Board advised termination and considered the maternal risk comparable to delivery at term. It also noted the possibility of prematurity and complications requiring neonatal intensive care. The Supreme Court considered the child's age, the trauma of sexual abuse, her present agony and the Board's report, and permitted termination with arrangements at the designated hospital. The present High Court applied that approach to X's age, alleged trauma and the conditional fitness reported by its own Board.

Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon v. Union of India and Others, a Bombay High Court decision, was quoted for its directions concerning procedural risk and protection for the doctors. The petitioner there had been informed of the risks and could undergo termination at her own risk and consequences. The doctors who had placed their opinions on record were granted immunity from litigation arising from that petition. In X's case, the High Court granted doctors participating in the termination process immunity from litigation arising from its order.

3. Statutes considered : The Court exercised writ jurisdiction under Article 226 to grant relief concerning medical termination. It quoted the Medical Termination of Pregnancy Act, 1971 as applicable to this 19 March 2020 order. Section 3(1) protected a registered medical practitioner from penal liability where termination complied with the Act. Under the quoted Section 3(2), a pregnancy exceeding twelve but not twenty weeks required at least two registered medical practitioners to form a good-faith opinion on either of two grounds. One was that continuation would involve a risk to the woman's life or of grave injury to her physical or mental health. The other was a substantial risk of such physical or mental abnormalities in the child, if born, as to render it seriously handicapped. Explanation 1 presumed grave injury to mental health where the woman alleged that the pregnancy resulted from rape. Section 3(3) permitted consideration of her actual or reasonably foreseeable environment. Section 3(4)(a) required written consent from the guardian of a woman under eighteen. Section 5(1) disapplied the specified duration and two-practitioner conditions, as well as Section 4, where a registered medical practitioner formed a good-faith opinion that immediate termination was necessary to save the woman's life. The IPC, POCSO and SC/ST Act provisions identified the FIR allegations; the Court did not determine criminal guilt.

4. Issues : (i) Should X, described as seventeen and alleging a rape-related pregnancy of sixteen weeks and six days, receive prompt permission for termination under the MTP framework then in force and the Medical Board's assessment? (ii) What clinical conditions, specialist presence and postoperative care were required for the authorised procedure? (iii) Should doctors acting under the Court's termination order receive the protection from litigation arising from that order drawn from the Bombay precedent?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the Board's report and did not authorise an unconditional immediate procedure. It considered the gestation, the girl's stated age, the alleged rape and trauma, and the clinical requirement to correct anemia. Applying Murugan Nayakkar, which emphasised the minor survivor's age, suffering and medical assessment, it allowed the petition. The Court stated that delivery would threaten the minor's life, while making permission subject to correction of anemia and specialist medical management. It directed admission by the next day and termination as early as feasible after correction of anemia. The heads of gynecology and anesthesia and the other specialists were to be present; experienced senior doctors were to carry out the procedure if the heads were absent.

The State was to provide postoperative care. Following Shaikh Ayesha Khatoon, the Court granted participating doctors immunity from litigation arising from its order.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the writ petition. Respondents were directed to carry out termination; the Chief Medical and Health Officer, Indore, was to admit X by 20 March 2020, with the procedure as early as possible subject to medical complications and specifically after correction of anemia. The specified heads, specialists or experienced substitutes were to attend, and the State of Madhya Pradesh was to ensure postoperative care. The Court granted order-related immunity to participating doctors.

X v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 5521/2020, 19/03/2020, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1004) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / investigation control / compelled arrest - Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, the Court refused the complainant's request for a direction to arrest persons named in an already registered FIR. The Supreme Court explained that investigation falls within the police's statutory domain; courts ordinarily should not require arrest, seizure or a charge sheet as predetermined investigative steps or outcomes. In its discussion of M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, it explained that arrest under Section 41 CrPC is discretionary and must be exercised cautiously because it affects liberty and reputation. Registration of a cognizable FIR does not automatically require arrest. The High Court accordingly declined to supervise the investigating officer or order arrest.

Inherent power / affected persons / reasons - The passage from D. Venkatasubramaniam also considered Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542. In the context of a judicial direction to investigate allegations in an anonymous petition, that authority required a reasonable opportunity of hearing for a person whose reputation would be drastically affected by the order. The passage also warned against casual orders under Section 482 made without reasons.

Section 173(1) CrPC / timely investigation / lawful final report - Although the Court could not compel arrest or a charge sheet, Section 173(1) required the investigation to be completed without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer had to determine, in accordance with law, whether an offence was made out and submit the appropriate final report, either a closure report or a charge sheet, as early as possible. The Court directed prompt completion and the steps required by law, leaving the decision on arrest and the outcome of the investigation to the police. It also permitted the applicant to approach the Superintendent of Police with a grievance.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The applicant, identified in the judgment as X, had reported Crime No. 467/2021 at Police Station Jhansi Road, Gwalior. The registered offences were IPC Sections 376, 376(2)(n), 323, 506 and 34. X applied under Section 482 CrPC, alleging that the police had taken no further action after registration and had not arrested the accused persons. X sought directions to respondents 1 and 2 to take the necessary steps to arrest them. The Court heard counsel for the applicant and the State. It considered the limits on judicial control of police investigation and the statutory duty to complete an investigation without unnecessary delay.

2. Precedents — Considered : D. Venkatasubramaniam v. M.K. Mohan Krishnamachari, (2009) 10 SCC 488, was quoted at length and applied. In that case, the High Court had directed the police to record statements, arrest the accused, seize property and file a charge sheet within a fixed period, without adequate reasons or a hearing for the affected persons. The Supreme Court held that the police must investigate according to law, but courts ordinarily should not direct how particular investigative steps are to be taken or require a particular outcome. An investigation may lead to a charge sheet or to a conclusion that no case is made out. The inherent power under Section 482 is confined to its statutory purposes and must be exercised with care and reasons. The present High Court applied that principle to refuse the requested arrest direction and supervision of the investigation. In D. Venkatasubramaniam, the Supreme Court relied on M.C. Abraham v. State of Maharashtra, (2003) 2 SCC 649, to explain Section 41 CrPC. In the situations specified by that provision, a police officer must exercise judgment, after appropriate inquiry, on whether arrest is necessary; a cognizable report does not make arrest automatic. The officer must exercise the power cautiously, having regard to liberty, reputation, the nature of the offence and the persons involved. The quoted decision also relied on Divine Retreat Centre v. State of Kerala, (2008) 3 SCC 542, for the requirement of a reasonable opportunity of hearing before a judicial direction to investigate that seriously affects a person's reputation. That discussion concerned a judicial direction to set criminal law in motion on an anonymous petition. D. Venkatasubramaniam criticised casual, unreasoned observations made without hearing the affected parties. It treated the order made without hearing the affected appellants as a nullity and set the impugned order aside. The present High Court reproduced that reasoning in support of its refusal to issue coercive directions.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant invoked the High Court's inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 CrPC. The quoted Supreme Court reasoning identified its purposes as giving effect to an order under the Code, preventing abuse of court process and securing the ends of justice. It required cautious exercise of that power and did not authorise routine judicial supervision of each police decision in an investigation. Section 41 CrPC, discussed through M.C. Abraham, permits arrest without a warrant in specified situations but requires the officer to exercise judgment; registration of a cognizable case alone does not require arrest. Section 173(1) CrPC, expressly quoted and applied by the High Court, requires every investigation under the chapter to be completed without unnecessary delay. Depending on the result, the appropriate final report may be a closure report or a charge sheet.

4. Issues : (i) On X's application under Section 482 after registration of Crime No. 467/2021, could the High Court direct arrest of the accused, dictate investigative steps or require a charge sheet merely because no arrest had occurred? (ii) Could the Court require timely completion of the investigation without predetermining the police conclusion?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court rejected the request for an arrest direction. Applying D. Venkatasubramaniam and its discussion of M.C. Abraham, it held that directing arrest and the filing of a charge sheet would amount to supervising an investigation within the police's statutory domain. Arrest under Section 41 is discretionary and depends on the circumstances and evidence, with due regard to its effect on liberty and reputation. The allegation of investigative inaction did not justify a direction for immediate arrest or a presumption that the investigation must result in prosecution. The Court distinguished those limits from the police's statutory duty to act. Section 173(1) requires completion of the investigation without unnecessary delay. The investigating officer cannot keep it pending indefinitely, but must determine whether the material discloses an offence and promptly submit the appropriate final report, either a closure report or a charge sheet. The Court directed completion as early as possible and the other steps required by law, preserving police judgment on arrest and the substance of the report. The applicant could submit a grievance to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, for consideration according to law.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court finally disposed of the Section 482 application. The Court refused to direct arrest or dictate a charge sheet. It directed the investigating officer to conclude the investigation as early as possible and take necessary lawful steps under Section 173(1) CrPC. X remained free to apply to the Superintendent of Police, Gwalior, if aggrieved; any such application was to be considered according to law.

X v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 62945/2021, 21/12/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1005) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / relatives / omnibus allegations - The Court considered Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, (2000) 5 SCC 207, Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, and Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, which caution against mechanically implicating every relative in matrimonial prosecutions. Neither the FIR nor the statement under Section 161 CrPC identified a specific incident or role attributable to the younger brother-in-law. He could not bring the complainant back from her parental home without the consent of the husband and parents-in-law, so their failure to bring her back could not be attributed to him as continuing cruelty. The FIR, charge sheet and consequent proceedings were quashed only against him.

Section 498-A IPC / parents-in-law / dowry taunts - The Court found sufficient material to prosecute the father-in-law and mother-in-law on the specific allegations that they taunted the complainant for bringing insufficient dowry and did not permit her return. Although no particular instances of cruelty were mentioned, the Court applied Taramani Parakh

v. State of Madhya Pradesh, (2015) 11 SCC 260, for the proposition that such dowry taunts can themselves constitute cruelty. Quashing was refused despite their reliance on an earlier representation anticipating false implication and on the hospital care they had arranged for the complainant.

Restitution proceeding / later FIR / counterblast - Applying Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, (2007) 12 SCC 369, which discussed the Bhajan Lal illustrations for quashing, the Court held that a matrimonial civil proceeding does not bring an independent criminal case to an end, even when both arise from the same facts. A wife may delay reporting while hoping for reconciliation; that delay alone does not make her later complaint a retaliatory counterblast. The fact that the husband instituted restitution proceedings before the FIR therefore did not warrant quashing the prosecution against him.

Continuing mental cruelty / residence apart / delay - The Court applied Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., (2019) 5 SCC 384, to the continuing psychological impact of alleged cruelty after a wife takes shelter at her parental home. In its assessment of this case, the Court considered the husband's and parents-in-law's failure to bring the complainant back, presumably because the dowry demand remained unmet, together with the specific allegations of harassment and assault. The Court also noted that the period of limitation for taking cognizance is three years where the offence carries a maximum sentence of three years.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : The four applicants sought quashing under Section 482 CrPC of FIR No. 40/2022 registered at Mahila Thana Shivpuri, District Shivpuri, the charge sheet and the resulting proceedings for IPC Sections 498-A and 323 read with Section 34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4. Applicant 1, Yakub Khan, was the complainant's father-in-law; applicant 2, Kamrunnisha, was her mother-in-law; applicant 3, Nishant Chaudhary, was her husband; and applicant 4, Prashant Chaudhary, was her younger brother-in-law. According to the FIR, she married Nishant under Muslim rites on 5 February 2020. Her father had died, and her mother and brother arranged the marriage; the FIR described substantial expenditure, cash payments, household articles and jewellery given at the marriage. The complainant alleged that, after two or three months, all the applicants demanded another ₹10 lakh and harassed her for bringing inadequate dowry. She further alleged that they expressed displeasure when she gave birth to a daughter on 27 September 2021. She alleged assaults, depression and treatment in Morena and Gwalior. On 26 January 2022, after her condition worsened, her mother took her and her daughter to Shivpuri; the applicants did not bring her back. The applicants contended that the statement under Section 161 CrPC repeated only general accusations against Prashant. The parents-in-law relied on an earlier police representation anticipating false accusation and on the five or six days of hospital treatment they had arranged, which they said showed their concern for her. Counsel for the complainant and the State submitted that the FIR supported prosecution. The complainant also argued that the failure to bring her home after 26 January 2022 amounted to desertion linked to the dowry demand. For Nishant, counsel further argued that the FIR was delayed and had been lodged after he instituted proceedings for restitution of conjugal rights. The police had filed a charge sheet before the High Court's decision. The Court assessed each applicant separately.

2. Precedents — Considered : Kans Raj v. State of Punjab, 2000:INSC:251, (2000) 5 SCC 207, was quoted for the need to establish overt acts rather than infer every in-law's complicity in a dowry-death case merely from kinship. In the reproduced passage, the Supreme Court required overt acts attributed to persons other than the husband to be proved beyond reasonable doubt. Monju Roy v. State of W.B., (2015) 13 SCC 693, quoted Kans Raj and explained that allegations against distant relations require tangible material identifying their specific roles. It distinguished their position from that of the husband and close family, while requiring a pragmatic assessment rather than weighing every allegation in golden scales. Its discussion of Raja Lal Singh v. State of Jharkhand, (2007) 15 SCC 415, illustrated the setting aside of convictions where relatives' names appeared to have been added merely to implicate more family members. The High Court applied Monju Roy to the absence of any particular act attributed to Prashant. Chandralekha v. State of Rajasthan, 2013 (1) UC 155, was quoted for quashing the FIR against relatives in that case because the allegations were exceptionally vague, common residence was uncertain and there had been extraordinary delay. Taramani Parakh v. State of Madhya Pradesh, 2015:INSC:221, (2015) 11 SCC 260, was applied for the proposition that taunts about bringing insufficient dowry can constitute cruelty.

Pratibha v. Rameshwari Devi, 2007:INSC:929, (2007) 12 SCC 369, was quoted to show why extraneous civil proceedings do not justify quashing and why delay while reconciliation is pursued does not automatically warrant an adverse inference. Applying Pratibha, the Court rejected Nishant's argument that the FIR was a counterblast to his earlier restitution application. The High Court also stated that civil-court findings do not bind the criminal court, which must decide the criminal case on the allegations in those proceedings. Rupali Devi v. State of U.P., 2019:INSC:479, (2019) 5 SCC 384, was quoted for the continuing mental trauma caused by earlier physical or verbal cruelty after a wife takes shelter with her parents, even if no new physical act occurs there. The High Court applied that principle to the continuing effect of the alleged conduct of the husband and parents-in-law and to the objection based on delay. It expressly declined to attribute to Prashant a duty to bring her back without the others' consent.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC governed the High Court's jurisdiction to quash the proceedings. The Court examined the statement recorded under Section 161 CrPC alongside the FIR to determine whether a particular role was attributed to Prashant. IPC Section 498-A concerned the alleged matrimonial cruelty, Section 323 the alleged assault or hurt, and Section 34 the alleged common intention. Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act were invoked for the alleged dowry-related conduct. The Court assessed whether there was sufficient material to prosecute each applicant; it did not determine their final culpability.

4. Issues : (i) Did general allegations against the family, without an act attributable to the younger brother-in-law, justify continuing the FIR, charge sheet and prosecution against him, including on the ground that he failed to bring the wife back to her matrimonial home? (ii) Did the dowry taunts and refusal to take her back provide sufficient material to continue proceedings against the parents-in-law? (iii) Could the proceedings against the husband be quashed merely because he instituted restitution proceedings before the FIR was lodged, and could alleged mental cruelty continue after the wife moved to her parental home?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court examined the FIR and the statement under Section 161 CrPC to identify the allegations against Prashant. Both contained collective allegations that the in-laws demanded ₹10 lakh, were displeased by the birth of a daughter and harassed the complainant, but neither identified a particular incident, manner of harassment or direct role attributable to him. Applying Kans Raj, Monju Roy and Chandralekha within their respective contexts, the Court found those general allegations insufficient to require him to face trial. The complainant's mother had taken her to her parental home after hospitalisation; the applicants had not taken her there. It was for the husband and parents-in-law to bring her back, and Prashant could not do so without their consent. Their failure to bring her back could not be attributed to him as continuing cruelty merely because he was her younger brother-in-law. The Court therefore quashed the FIR, charge sheet and subsequent proceedings against him for all the charged offences. Yakub and Kamrunnisha stood on a different footing. The FIR specifically alleged that they taunted the complainant for bringing inadequate dowry and did not permit her return. Although the FIR and the statement under Section 161 CrPC did not identify particular instances of cruelty, the Court applied Taramani Parakh to hold that such dowry taunts could themselves constitute cruelty. It refused to quash the proceedings on those allegations despite the parents-in-law's reliance on their earlier police representation and the medical care they had arranged. As regards Nishant, the FIR alleged specific mental and physical harassment, assault and a dowry demand. Applying Pratibha, the Court held that the independence of civil and criminal proceedings defeated the argument that the FIR was a retaliatory counterblast merely because his restitution application came first. The High Court also stated that civil-court findings do not bind the criminal court, which must decide the criminal case on the allegations in those proceedings. A wife may delay reporting while hoping that matters will improve; the sequence of proceedings alone did not establish that her complaint was false. The Court noted that the limitation period for taking cognizance is three years where the maximum sentence is three years. Applying Rupali Devi, it also considered the continuing psychological harm after the complainant moved to her mother's home. In that assessment, it took account of Nishant's and his parents' failure to bring her back, presumably because the dowry demand remained unmet. The allegations of the husband's maltreatment and dowry demand warranted his prosecution.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court allowed the application only for applicant 4 Prashant Chaudhary. FIR No. 40/2022, the charge sheet and criminal proceedings arising from that FIR for IPC Sections 498-A, 323/34 and Dowry Prohibition Act Sections 3/4 were quashed as to him. The application was dismissed for applicants 1 Yakub Khan, 2 Kamrunnisha and 3 Nishant Chaudhary, whose prosecution could continue.

Yakub Khan and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 3953/2023, 23/01/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1006) Prev Next

Headnote :- Section 482 CrPC / matrimonial cruelty FIR / restitution decree - An ex parte decree for restitution of conjugal rights did not, by itself, justify quashing an FIR alleging dowry demands, harassment and assault under IPC Sections 498-A, 323 and 34 and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The husband had neither sought execution under Order XXI Rule 32 CPC nor pursued divorce under Section 13(1A)(ii) of the Hindu Marriage Act. The applicants did not show that the wife knew of the decree or that they had attempted to resume cohabitation after it. As the FIR disclosed cognizable offences, the Court dismissed the Section 482 application.

Desertion / Supreme Court precedent / sufficient reason to live apart - The Court quoted and applied Savitri Pandey v. Prem Chandra Pandey; (2002) 2 SCC 73, including its discussion of Bipinchandra Jaisinghbhai Shah v. Prabhavati; AIR 1957 SC 176. Desertion requires separation and an intention permanently to end cohabitation. It also requires the other spouse's lack of consent and the absence of reasonable cause for leaving. The inference depends on the parties' conduct, the circumstances and their bona fide willingness to resume married life. A wife living separately for valid reasons could not be treated as a deserter merely because an ex parte restitution decree had been obtained and left unexecuted.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Yashwant Singh and three relatives applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash FIR Crime No. 0562/2020 registered at Police Station Bhind Dehat, District Bhind. The FIR alleged offences under IPC Sections 498-A, 323 and 34 and Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act. The applicants were the complainant's father-in-law, mother-in-law, husband's younger brother and husband. According to the complainant, she married the fourth applicant on 24 June 2011. Her father gave a motorcycle, ornaments and household goods within his means. She alleged that the family nevertheless demanded a house and ₹50,000, subjected her to mental and physical harassment, and beat her on 5 September 2020 until she lost consciousness. Her daughter told the complainant's mother about the incident, and the complainant's parents took her to the district hospital at Bhind. The applicants relied on an ex parte decree for restitution of conjugal rights dated 28 March 2018 in Family Court Case No. 221/2017 (HMA). They argued that the complainant had not returned and that the FIR had been lodged nine years after the marriage. The father-in-law had asked the Collector to ensure a fair investigation and the filing of a closure report. Counsel said that similar representations had been made to police authorities, but no acknowledgments were filed. A panchanama dated 28 November 2013 recorded a claim of earlier reconciliation efforts. A representation dated 30 May 2015 alleged that the complainant was unwilling to perform household work and had threatened false implication. The State submitted that the FIR disclosed cognizable offences and that the Collector could not enforce an ex parte matrimonial decree.

2. Precedents — Considered : The High Court quoted Savitri Pandey v. Prem Chandra Pandey; (2002) 2 SCC 73, on matrimonial desertion: intentional and permanent abandonment of marital obligations without the other spouse's consent and without reasonable cause. Desertion was to be assessed as a continuing course of conduct, rather than a mere change of residence. The quoted passage discussed Bipinchandra Jaisinghbhai Shah v. Prabhavati; AIR 1957 SC 176. It identified actual separation and animus deserendi on the part of the deserting spouse, together with the deserted spouse's lack of consent and the absence of conduct by that spouse giving reasonable cause for the separation. Temporary anger did not, by itself, establish desertion. The inference depended on the circumstances. The quoted passage explained that a bona fide offer to resume married life could bring desertion to an end before divorce proceedings had begun, whether made before or after the statutory period had elapsed. Throughout the period relied on, the deserted spouse had to affirm the marriage and remain ready and willing to resume married life on reasonable conditions. The reproduced passage placed the burden of proving the relevant elements on the petitioner seeking divorce and stated that desertion had to be proved beyond reasonable doubt. Although corroboration was not an absolute legal requirement, the quoted passage stated that courts ordinarily insisted on it unless its absence was satisfactorily explained. The High Court applied this framework in rejecting the contention that separate residence and an unexecuted ex parte decree conclusively established desertion for the purpose of quashing the FIR under Section 482, particularly when the FIR alleged cruelty.

3. Statutes considered : Section 482 CrPC provided the inherent jurisdiction invoked to quash the FIR. IPC Sections 498-A (cruelty), 323 (hurt) and 34 (common intention), along with Sections 3/4 of the Dowry Prohibition Act, were the provisions invoked in the FIR. The Court held that the FIR disclosed cognizable offences. The restitution decree relied on by the applicants had been passed under Section 9 of the Hindu Marriage Act. The Court identified two possible steps after that decree: execution under Order XXI Rule 32 CPC, or a divorce petition under Section 13(1A)(ii) of the Hindu Marriage Act on the ground that there had been no restitution of conjugal rights for one year or upwards after the decree in proceedings to which the spouses were parties. The Court reproduced the separate judicial-separation and restitution grounds in Section 13(1A); the restitution ground was relevant here. Neither course had been pursued.

4. Issues : (i) Did the ex parte restitution decree, the complainant's failure to return and the applicants' earlier representations justify quashing the later FIR alleging matrimonial cruelty, hurt and dowry offences? (ii) Did separate residence establish desertion without considering reasonable cause and the parties' conduct after the decree?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court found that the husband had made no attempt after the decree to bring the complainant home, had not sought execution under Order XXI Rule 32 CPC, and had not petitioned for divorce under Section 13(1A)(ii). The applicants did not even claim that they had informed her of the ex parte decree. The Court regarded reliance on a decree that had not been acted upon as insufficient to defeat the FIR. The earlier panchanama and representation did not establish any subsequent enforcement of the decree or displace the FIR allegations at the quashing stage. The State had submitted that the Collector had no power to enforce the decree. Applying Savitri Pandey and the discussion of Bipinchandra within it, the Court held that a wife living apart for valid reasons was not necessarily a deserter and that the husband could not take advantage of his own wrong. The FIR alleged that cruelty had caused the separation and disclosed cognizable allegations of dowry demands, harassment and assault. The decree and the contested defence therefore did not warrant quashing under Section 482.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application under Section 482 CrPC and declined to quash FIR Crime No. 0562/2020.

Yashwant Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 44258/2020, 15/03/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1007) Prev Next

Headnote :- POCSO — victim age — Section 94 JJ Act evidence hierarchy - In deciding an accused's request for an ossification test in an anticipatory-bail proceeding, the Court applied Joginder Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 11 SCC 335, and Section 94 of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015. Medical age estimation may be used only if the prescribed school or matriculation record is unavailable and, failing that, no specified municipal or panchayat birth certificate is available. Here the school register was in the police case diary, and an ossification report was already available; the accused could not dictate an additional investigative step. The application for an ossification test was rejected.

Victim age — Samagra ID and unauthenticated application — reliability and statutory priority - The family Samagra ID was not a specified record of age under Section 94 and its statement of age in 2014 conflicted with the applicant's own claim that the prosecutrix turned 18 in June 2021. An unattested application for a caste certificate, suggesting a different birth date, was neither authenticated nor among the specified age records.

Minor wife — marital exception to rape — anticipatory bail - The Court applied Independent Thought v. Union of India, (2017) 10 SCC 800, which read down Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC so that sexual intercourse with a wife below 18 remains an offence. On the prosecution account, the alleged rapes also preceded the purported marriage papers. The certificate relied on was issued by a society that remained subject to an operative restraint in Shalu Sharma v. State of M.P., WP 762/2020. The Court therefore treated that marriage as invalid; a stay of the guideline direction concerning another body did not lift this restraint. For these reasons, the Court rejected the asserted marriage as a ground for anticipatory bail.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Yogesh Gahlot sought anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC in Crime No. 597/2021 of Police Station Thatipur, Gwalior, registered for IPC Sections 366-A, 343, 376(2), 376(3), 506 and 34 and POCSO provisions recorded as Sections 5(l)/6 and 3/4. He also sought an ossification test of the prosecutrix by I.A. 31859/2021 and permission to place additional age-related documents on record by I.A. 31838/2021 and 31839/2021. The prosecution account, not a final judicial finding, stated that the prosecutrix was born on 20 November 2006, went missing on 22 June 2021 and returned on 2 July 2021. She alleged that Gahlot and co-accused Rohit took her to a room; Gahlot said he would marry her, confined her for seven to eight days and raped her repeatedly while Rohit supplied food on visits. She further alleged that Gahlot took her to his home and that he and his parents later compelled her to sign unread marriage papers before she returned home and reported the incident. Gahlot contested her minority. His counsel said school records obtained through the Right to Information Act contradicted earlier material and that corrected documents had already reached police on 8 November 2021. He relied also on a family Samagra ID, an application used for a caste certificate showing 5 June 2003, and a marriage certificate from Mool Shankar Arya Samaj Vaidik Sanstha. The Court examined the case diary, which contained the school documents supplied to police and an ossification report.

2. Precedents — Considered : Joginder Singh v. State of Haryana, (2014) 11 SCC 335, was cited by the Court for assessing a victim's age according to the Juvenile Justice framework. The order states the principle while reproducing Section 94 of the 2015 Act. The hierarchy places available school date-of-birth or matriculation material ahead of municipal or panchayat certificates and medical estimation. Because the school register was in the case diary and an ossification report existed, the High Court rejected the applicant's demand for another test. Shalu Sharma v. State of M.P., WP 762/2020, order of 9 December 2020, was an earlier High Court order restraining the specific Mool Shankar Arya Samaj Vaidik Sanstha from solemnizing marriages. The Court distinguished an interim stay in RP 1202/2020 of 13 January 2021 affecting a direction to Madhya Bharat Arya Pratinidhi Sabha to amend guidelines concerning Special Marriage Act Sections 5–8. According to the information provided by State counsel and recorded in the order, the restraint against the certificate-issuing Sanstha itself had not been stayed in WA 95/2021. The Court consequently treated the alleged marriage solemnized despite that restraint as invalid. Independent Thought v. Union of India, (2017) 10 SCC 800, was applied for its reading down of Exception 2 to Section 375 IPC. Under that ruling, physical relations with a wife younger than 18 are not protected by the marital exception. The High Court used it as a separate answer to the claimed marriage defense, in addition to the allegation that rape preceded the purported signing of papers.

3. Statutes considered : Section 438 CrPC governed the request for anticipatory bail. Section 94 of the Juvenile Justice (Care and Protection of Children) Act, 2015 was set out and applied to the age inquiry. It gives priority to the prescribed school or matriculation evidence. If that evidence is unavailable, a birth certificate issued by a corporation, municipality or panchayat is to be sought. Only in the absence of both categories may age be determined by an ossification or other modern medical test ordered under that provision. IPC Section 375 Exception 2, as read down in Independent Thought, was material to the claimed marital protection.

4. Issues : (i) Was the accused entitled to an ossification test to contest the prosecutrix's alleged minority when school material and a medical report were already in the case diary? (ii) Could the Samagra family entry or unattested caste-certificate application displace the hierarchy of age evidence prescribed by the statute, and was a separate filing of school papers necessary when police already possessed them? (iii) Did an asserted marriage certificate undermine the allegations sufficiently to warrant anticipatory bail, given the timing of the alleged assaults, the operative restraint on its issuing society, and Independent Thought's rule concerning a wife under eighteen?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court considered the request for an age test under the hierarchy of evidence prescribed by Section 94, noting that the case diary contained the school register and an existing ossification report. It rejected the request for an additional ossification test, also observing that an accused may not instruct the investigating officer in the method of investigation. The documents the applicant said the school corrected and sent on 8 November 2021 were themselves in the case diary, so there was no need to take his copy separately on record under I.A. 31838/2021. The Samagra ID, showing the prosecutrix as eighteen in 2014, was not a statutory age record and would imply an age around twenty-five in 2021, inconsistent with the applicant's own assertion that she had only just turned eighteen. The caste-certificate application was unattested by a competent authority and not one of the sources of age evidence specified in Section 94. The Court therefore declined to accept those documents in place of the school evidence at the bail stage. The Court next considered the asserted marriage without treating it as a complete defence to the allegations. The prosecution account placed repeated assaults before the alleged forced signing of marriage papers and maintained that the prosecutrix was a minor. The certificate was issued by the named Arya Samaj Sanstha against which the earlier restraint remained operative; the review stay concerning a different representative body did not remove it. On that basis the Court regarded the purported marriage as invalid. As a separate ground, Independent Thought precluded reliance on the Section 375 marital exception where a wife is under eighteen. In light of the allegations and those age and marriage considerations, no case for pre-arrest protection was made out.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application for anticipatory bail under Section 438 CrPC and rejected I.A. 31859/2021 for an ossification test. I.A. 31838/2021 seeking to place the school documents on record was rejected as unnecessary because they were in the case diary; the Court also explained why the material relied on in I.A. 31839/2021 could not establish the claimed age. Yogesh Gahlot v. State of M.P., M.Cr.C. no. 54837/2021, 17/11/2021, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1008) Prev Next

Headnote :- Investigation — accused's choice of agency or method — no right - In dismissing an accused's Article 226 petition seeking a fair and impartial investigation of an FIR against him, the High Court applied Romila Thapar v. Union of India, (2018) 10 SCC 753, and Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, (2014) 4 SCC 626. The accused cannot select the investigating agency, dictate the manner of investigation, demand court monitoring of it, or claim participation or prior hearing as a matter of course while it is underway. The cited authorities preserve remedies available at later stages and the constitutional court's exceptional power to address a demonstrably mala fide investigation.

Constitutional writ — court monitoring and supervision of investigation — distinction - Applying Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, (2014) 2 SCC 532, the Court held that a direction prescribing how the police should investigate would amount to impermissible judicial supervision. Exceptional monitoring may ensure progress, fairness and freedom from external interference without selecting investigative steps or determining the investigating officer's opinion. Such supervision risks influencing the trial court's independent assessment of a police report; the accused's request was therefore refused.

Transfer or independent investigation — exceptional Constitutional intervention - Romila Thapar, as quoted and applied by the High Court, reiterated that an accused cannot choose an agency. Divine Retreat Centre and the Constitution Bench in Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights preserve Article 226 intervention where mala fides are established or exceptional circumstances require intervention to ensure credibility, protect fundamental rights or do complete justice. A mere allegation against the local police is insufficient.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Yogesh Singh Bhadoriya was named as an accused in Crime No. 526/2024 at Police Station Dehat, District Bhind. According to the relief sought in the writ petition, the FIR invoked BNS provisions stated as Sections 115(2), 296, 51(3), 126(2) and 3(5), along with Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) of the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. Under Article 226, the petitioner asked the High Court to direct the respondents to conduct a fair and impartial investigation. The Court framed the question as whether the accused could maintain a request to have investigation conducted in a particular manner and ultimately declined intervention.

2. Precedents — Considered : Romila Thapar v. Union of India, 2018:INSC:912, (2018) 10 SCC 753, was quoted extensively and treated as the governing statement. In its paragraphs 24–27, drawing on Narmada Bai, Sanjiv Rajendra Bhatt, E. Sivakumar and Divine Retreat Centre, the Supreme Court stated that an accused has no right to appoint or select an investigative agency, prescribe the method of investigation or prosecution, or insist on hearing as a matter of course when an impartial investigation is directed. Divine Retreat Centre, as reproduced there, distinguishes the inability of an interested person to choose the officer from the High Court's Article 226 power to give appropriate directions when satisfied that the power of investigation is being exercised mala fide. Romila Thapar also quotes the Constitution Bench in State of West Bengal v. Committee for Protection of Democratic Rights, (2010) 3 SCC 571. That authority states that a CBI transfer is an extraordinary constitutional measure to be exercised sparingly and cautiously, not on routine accusations, but where credibility, fundamental rights, complete justice or exceptional ramifications demand it. In the particular Romila Thapar case, vague assertions of mala fides and disputed evidence did not warrant an agency selected by the accused or court monitoring; ordinary bail, discharge and quashing remedies remained available at appropriate stages. Dinubhai Boghabhai Solanki v. State of Gujarat, 2014:INSC:139, (2014) 4 SCC 626, was quoted at length to explain why an accused has no ordinary right to participate at the investigation stage. Its extracts from Union of India v. W.N. Chadha explain why collecting investigative material does not ordinarily require giving the accused prior notice and an opportunity to be heard under the audi alteram partem rule, absent a statutory requirement or relevant exception; an accused ordinarily has no say over the manner of investigation until the appropriate procedural stage. The passage from CBI v. Rajesh Gandhi rejects an accused's choice of agency and notes the legal availability of further investigation after an earlier police report. Sri Bhagwan Samardha Sreepada Vallabha Venkata Vishwanandha Maharaj v. State of A.P. explains that Section 173(8) CrPC permits further investigation and that the court need not first hear every possible accused before directing it. The reproduced passage also states that, when the police undertake further investigation, it is desirable that they inform the court and seek formal permission. Narender G. Goel v. State of Maharashtra similarly reserves challenge to the authenticity, admissibility or weight of evidence for trial while rejecting an accused's hearing claim during investigation. Manohar Lal Sharma v. Principal Secretary, 2013:INSC:839, (2014) 2 SCC 532, was quoted separately, with extracts from its paragraphs 38–39. The Supreme Court distinguishes exceptional monitoring, which watches progress and safeguards independence and fairness, from supervision, which directs execution and risks making the trial court's assessment of the investigator's Section 173(2) report a formality. The High Court expressly applied that distinction: requiring police to investigate in a particular manner would be supervision, which the Court said it could not undertake.

3. Statutes considered : Article 226 of the Constitution was the source of the writ jurisdiction invoked for fair investigation. CrPC Sections 173(2) and 173(8) appeared in quoted Supreme Court discussions of a police report and further investigation; CrPC Sections 202 and 204 appeared in the quotation on accused participation.

4. Issues : (i) Could a person already accused in the Bhind FIR obtain an Article 226 direction that the police investigate his case in the manner he sought on the basis of a general request for fairness and impartiality? (ii) Could the High Court prescribe the course of the police investigation, or would that cross the line from exceptional judicial monitoring into supervision? The reproduced Supreme Court material also discusses the accused's choice of agency, participation or hearing during investigation, extraordinary CBI transfer and later procedural remedies.

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court began with the accused's status and the nature of the direction sought. Romila Thapar and Dinubhai established that an accused does not control the selection of agency or the mode and manner of police investigation. An accused has no ordinary right to a prior hearing or participation at that stage. The qualifications in those authorities preserve constitutional intervention where mala fides or an exceptional failure of investigative fairness is properly established. They also preserve legally available remedies at later stages. The Court then applied the distinction in Manohar Lal Sharma. In rare and compelling circumstances, monitoring is concerned with progress, fairness and freedom from interference. Directing investigative steps would amount to supervision and could compromise the independent statutory roles of the police and the trial court. The requested direction to investigate in a particular manner amounted to such supervision. The Court consequently held that an accused's general request for such direction, together with the impossibility of judicially supervising police methods, did not justify interference.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the Article 226 writ petition. No agency transfer, court-monitored inquiry, investigation-specific direction, quashing of the FIR or other relief was granted.

Yogesh Singh Bhadoriya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, W.P. no. 12471/2025, 15/05/2025, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

Case Sr. no. (1009) Prev

Headnote :- SC/ST Act — caste insult — public view through playback of recorded conversation - In the challenge under Section 482 CrPC, the Court rejected the contention that the alleged caste insult could not have occurred within public view under Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) of the 1989 Act. On the transcript before it, the Court relied on the applicant's awareness that his caste-abusive telephone conversation was being recorded and on its later playback before another person. The conclusion was expressly prima facie, and the Court distinguished public view from a public place.

Recorded conversation — objection to collection — evidentiary effect - The applicant's assertion that he had not permitted the recording did not establish its illegality. On the Court's reading of the transcript, he knew that the conversation was being recorded and expressed no concern. In any event, the Court applied Radha Kishan v. State of U.P., which requires careful examination of evidence obtained by an illegal search rather than its automatic rejection. The Court thus rejected the argument for automatic exclusion.

Investigation defect — cognizance and trial — prejudice - Applying H.N. Rishbud v. State (Delhi Admn.), cited in the order as (1954) 2 SCC 934, the Court rejected the proposition that an asserted illegality in collecting evidence necessarily invalidates the prosecution. That authority distinguishes a defect in investigation from a jurisdictional defect affecting cognizance or trial. Once cognizance has been taken and the proceedings have concluded, an earlier illegality in investigation does not vitiate the result unless it has caused a miscarriage of justice. The present quashing petition was dismissed on a prima facie reading of the transcript.

Case-note :- 1. Facts : Zuber Khan applied under Section 482 CrPC to quash Crime No. 91/2022 of Police Station Moti Nagar, Sagar. The opening paragraph of the judgment lists Sections 290, 506 and 507 IPC and Sections 3(1)(r), 3(1)(s) and 3(2)(va) of the Scheduled Castes and the Scheduled Tribes (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989. The complainant alleged that, on 5 February 2022, Neeraj Tiwari played a mobile-phone recording of Khan's conversation. In the recording, Khan allegedly abused MLA Pradeep Laria, referred to him by caste, insulted and intimidated him, and threatened to kill Laria and K.S. Pitre, persons connected with the Sagar Division Cricket Association. The complainant said that he belonged to the same Scheduled Caste and felt humiliated on hearing it. The police investigated, filed a charge-sheet, and placed a transcript on record. Khan argued that the original call was private, the complainant was neither the person addressed nor the person threatened, Laria had not complained, and Tiwari recorded and played the conversation without Khan's consent. The Court did not reproduce the offensive language.

2. Precedents — Considered : The Court reproduced the Supreme Court's analysis of the relationship between investigation, cognizance and trial in H.N. Rishbud v. State (Delhi Admn.), cited in the order as (1954) 2 SCC 934. Even a serious breach of a mandatory rule governing investigation is different from a bar regulating the competence of a court to take cognizance or try a matter. Section 190 CrPC does not make every invalid police report a jurisdictional nullity. Where cognizance has been taken and the case has run its course, a defect in the preceding investigation does not by itself vitiate the result; a miscarriage of justice attributable to the defect must be shown. The quoted passage contrasts Sections 193 and 195–199 CrPC and refers to Section 537 of the earlier Code on failure of justice. As stated by the High Court in its account of Radha Kishan v. State of U.P., evidence collected in an illegal search is not rejected automatically but must be carefully examined.

3. Statutes considered : The applicant invoked the High Court's inherent jurisdiction under Section 482 of the Code of Criminal Procedure, 1973 to seek quashing. The Court considered Sections 3(1)(r) and 3(1)(s) of the SC/ST (Prevention of Atrocities) Act, 1989 in relation to the alleged caste-directed insult or abuse within public view; Section 3(2)(va) was also invoked by the FIR and included in the Court's prima facie conclusion. The order treated public view as distinct from a public place. IPC Sections 506 and 507 concern the alleged threats; the first paragraph records Section 290, while paragraph 15 refers to Section 294 along with Sections 506 and 507. The Rishbud quotation discusses CrPC Sections 190, 193 and 195–199 and an earlier Code's Section 537 to explain the limits of an investigation-defect objection.

4. Issues : (i) On the allegations and transcript, could an insult in the original telephone conversation that was later played before the complainant support the public-view component of the SC/ST Act offences at the Section 482 stage? (ii) Was the recording shown to be without the applicant's knowledge or consent, and would an alleged illegality in recording or collection automatically make it unusable and require quashing? (iii) Did the absence of a complaint from Laria and the complainant's position as a person who heard the recording require termination of the proceedings?

5. Ratio / Findings : The Court read the transcript as showing that Khan was aware of the recording and had not objected; he had, indeed, indicated that Tiwari could record it. On that reading of the transcript, the Court rejected the factual premise that the conversation had been recorded without Khan's knowledge and permission. It further reasoned that a speaker who knew the exchange was being recorded and could be played to others could not, on the facts alleged, obtain quashing merely by pointing to the privacy of the original call. Because the recording was later played before another person, the Court found the allegation of caste insult and intimidation capable, prima facie, of satisfying the requirement of public view. The Court also cited Radha Kishan for careful scrutiny rather than automatic rejection of evidence gathered by an illegal search, and quoted H.N. Rishbud to distinguish an investigation defect from a jurisdictional defect and to require miscarriage of justice before an already concluded proceeding is vitiated. The Court relied on these authorities to reject the arguments for automatic exclusion of the evidence and automatic quashing of the proceedings at this preliminary stage. From the transcript the Court found a prima facie case under the specified SC/ST provisions and, in its concluding paragraph, IPC Sections 294, 506 and 507.

6. Relief : The Hon'ble High Court dismissed the application for quashing under Section 482 CrPC. The Court found no case for interference after its prima facie assessment and left the ensuing criminal process undisturbed.

Zuber Khan v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others, M.Cr.C. no. 3780/2024, 12/03/2024, S.B., Hon'ble Justice Shri Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, Honorable High Court of Madhya Pradesh.

***

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
1	Aaditya Pratap Singh Jadon and Ors. v. Poonam Jadon	Cr.R. no. 5692/2024	26/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1
2	Aarif Rahin Khan and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 36457/2024	19/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	2
3	Aarti Morya and Ors. v. The State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 24751/2021	14/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	3
4	Abhishek Pandey v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 14638/2024	08/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	4
5	Abhishek Sarvariya and Ors. v. The S.H.O. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 19377/2025	16/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	5
6	Abhishek Sharma and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 12490/2024	05/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	6
7	Abhishek Tiwari v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 61635/2022	20/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	7
8	Abid Mohammad Siddiki v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1014/2011	12/05/2022	D.B. - Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	8
9	Aftab Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 653/2006	28/03/2018	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vivek Agarwal	9
10	Aftar Khan v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 18486/2021	08/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	10
11	Ahmed Almakki v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 1818/2023	10/12/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Roopesh Chandra Varshney	11
12	Ahmed Sayeed and Others v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 410/2010	04/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	12
13	Ajay v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 948/2015	02/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	13
14	Ajay Batham and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 9047/2017	27/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	14
15	Ajay Jatav v. State of M.P. and Others	W.P. no. 9659/2021	14/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	15
16	Ajay Katiyar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 14101/2020	25/09/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	16
17	Ajay Pandvia and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 429/2013	03/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	17
18	Ajit Lalchand Thadhani and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 36197/2021	07/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	18
19	Ajju and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 568/2011	07/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	19
20	A.K. Hade v. Shailendra Singh Yadav and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 2629/2012	07/05/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	20
21	Akbar Shah and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 8732/2024	23/06/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	21
22	Akhilesh Pandey v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 31360/2023	18/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	22
23	Albel and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 225/2009	13/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	23
24	Alka Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 30092/2022	14/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	24
25	Amaan Singh Lodhi v. Kanisth Yantri	Cr.A. no. 09/2008	08/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	25
26	Aman Arora Jain v. Investigation Officer and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 42996/2021	25/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	26
27	Aman Parmar v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 22585/2021	18/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	27
28	Aman Parmar v. State of Madhya	M.Cr.C. no.	26/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	28

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Pradesh	40793/2022
29	Aman Shrivastava v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 6512/2024	26/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	29
30	Ameen Hussain v. Akash Kumar Dwivedi	M.Cr.C. no. 51510/2018	15/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	30
31	Amit Khampariya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 39276/2022	30/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	31
32	Amit Kumar and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh; Munna v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1753/2010	25/10/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	32
33	Amit Kumar Khodake v. Madhuri	Cr.R. no. 4006/2024	17/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	33
34	Ammu and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 1646/2021	09/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	34
35	Amol Singh Yadav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 2555/2023	13/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	35
36	Amresh Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1043/2011	13/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	36
37	Anand Singh Parihar v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 9246/2018	28/06/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	37
38	Anandi and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 1198/2015	09/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	38
39	Anant Devraj Singh Chauhan and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 30825/2024	04/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	39
40	Anil Gaur and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 14323/2022	22/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	40
41	Anil Kumar Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 2/2026	07/01/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Ashish Shroti	41
42	Anju Mishra and Others v. Arun Mishra	M.Cr.C. no. 2570/2015	31/07/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	42
43	Ankit Jain and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 12163/2020	04/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	43
44	Ankush Pandey and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 7175/2024	27/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	44
45	Annudatt v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 404/2010	28/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	45
46	Ansar Ali v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 4164/2019	04/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	46
47	Anshul Gupta v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 24626/2024	30/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	47
48	Anshul Patel v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 9271/2024	14/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	48
49	Antim Dubey v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 10820/2018	05/04/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	49
50	Anubhav Ajmani v. Garima Ajmani	Cr.R. no. 2151/2018	14/05/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	50
51	Anuj Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 45939/2024	26/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	51
52	Anuradha Agrawal v. Mahehdra Gupta	M.Cr.C. no. 8166/2016	13/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	52
53	Anurag Saxena and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 16212/2025	22/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	53
54	Anurodh Mittal v. Rehat Trading Company and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 17782/2024	21/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	54
55	Anusha Deepak Tyagi v. State of	M.Cr.C. no.	06/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	55

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	M.P.	63392/2021
56	Aradhana and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 13586/2024	19/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	56
57	Archana Chaurasiya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 11524/2024	06/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	57
58	Arif Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 39588/2019	20/09/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	58
59	Arjun Thapa v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 10265/2024	13/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	59
60	Arun Nayak v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 48402/2022	18/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	60
61	Arun Sharma v. State of M.P. and Ors.	W.P. no. 13057/2020	02/11/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	61
62	Arun Tiwari v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 37542/2023	29/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	62
63	Arun Tiwari v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 3977/2022	10/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	63
64	Arunendra Tiwari v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 60947/2022	23/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	64
65	Arvind v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 4189/2017	05/08/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	65
66	Arvind Gupta v. Komal Pandey	M.Cr.C. no. 11593/2014	14/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	66
67	Asfaq Khan v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 37969/2020	04/11/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	67
68	Ashish Khare v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 1736/2018	07/02/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	68
69	Ashish Kumr Kotangale and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 3/2021	03/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	69
70	Ashish Pathak v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 159/2011	16/10/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	70
71	Ashish Sanghi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 7682/2024	21/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	71
72	Ashish Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 45704/2024	18/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	72
73	Ashok Ahirwar v. State of M.P. and Others	Cr.R. no. 932/2021	08/04/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	73
74	Ashok Kumar Tripathi v. Chhotelal and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 40369/2022	15/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	74
75	Ashok Mandhwani and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 220/2019	12/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	75
76	Ashok Sharma and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 62886/2021	21/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	76
77	Ashok Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 504/2010	10/12/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	77
78	Ashutosh Pandey v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 10230/2018	28/06/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	78
79	Ashwani Kumar v. State of MP	Cr.R. no. 2291/2020	13/01/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	79
80	Asish Mishra and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.; Jyoti Nayak v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 43114/2023	10/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	80
81	Atul Mandlekar v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 5058/2024	20/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	81
82	Avanish K. Arjaria and Ors. v.	W.P. no.	14/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	82

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	29556/2024
83	Avijit Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 28981/2024	28/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	83
84	Avijit Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 9662/2022	14/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	84
85	Avijit Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 28981/2024	28/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	85
86	Awadesh Narayan Tiwari v. Shishir Khare; Pushyamitra Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 6453/2017	20/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	86
87	Awadh Narayan Saxena and Ors. v. Shalini Saxena and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 10414/2024	14/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	87
88	Ayushi Shrivastava v. Superintendent of Police and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 51341/2019	07/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	88
89	Babalu v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 243/2015	09/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	89
90	Babburaja Singh Gurjar v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 6341/2021	07/01/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anil Verma	90
91	Bablesh v. The State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 1163/2014	13/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	91
92	Babli Bais v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 456/2025	20/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	92
93	Bablu v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 16/2010	05/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	93
94	Bablu v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 30855/2021	27/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	94
95	Babu and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1273/2008	19/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	95
96	Babulal and Others v. Premwati	M.Cr.C. no. 2528/2013	06/12/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	96
97	Baburam and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 119/2017	19/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	97
98	Baiju v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 477/2009	04/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	98
99	Baiju v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 704/2010	07/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	99
100	Bajrang Lal Sharma v. Central Narcotics Bureau	M.Cr.C. no. 41761/2022	06/09/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	100
101	Balkrishna Devda and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 2045/2021	11/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	101
102	Ballan v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 118/2008	05/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	102
103	Ballu v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 426/2007	08/02/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	103
104	Ballu Khan v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 15756/2019	16/04/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	104
105	Ballu Savita v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 531/2013	13/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	105
106	Balram and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 5079/2019	06/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	106
107	Balram v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.A. no. 5491/2021	06/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	107
108	Balveer v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 45923/2021	16/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	108
109	Balveer Singh Tomar and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 795/2022	23/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	109

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
110	Balwant Singh Chauhan v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 32668/2024	22/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	110
111	Bandhana Sharma and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 24150/2022	01/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	111
112	Banti v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 5999/2020	18/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	112
113	Banti Jatav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 32576/2024	09/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	113
114	Beenu Lodhi and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 14371/2024	28/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	114
115	Bhaggo Bai v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1116/2014	13/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	115
116	Bhagunta v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 426/2014	16/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	116
117	Bhagwandas Sahu v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 31891/2021	30/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	117
118	Bhajju v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 279/2004	12/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	118
119	Bharat Bhushan Singhal and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 24551/2023	24/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	119
120	Bharat Doneriya and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 15280/2024	19/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	120
121	Bharat Madan and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 26536/2024	03/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	121
122	Bharat Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh & Bali Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 317/2011	18/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	122
123	Bharat Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh & Murad Ali and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 9706/2018	19/08/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	123
124	Bharti Jatav v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 1004/2014	14/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	124
125	Bharti Jha v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 2835/2024	10/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	125
126	Bhaskar Publication and Allied Industries Private Limited v. Jai Hanuman Publicity	M.Cr.C. no. 60573/2021	11/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	126
127	Bheekham Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 853/2009	05/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	127
128	Bherolal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 15443/2022	24/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	128
129	Bhersiya v. The State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 187/2001	13/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	129
130	Bhola Sakhwar v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 53063/2021	28/10/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	130
131	Bholu v. Reshma Parmar	Cr.R. no. 1095/2021	15/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	131
132	Bhoop Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 405/2012	22/08/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	132
133	Bhoopendra Singh Gurjar v. Bharti and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 1638/2018	13/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	133
134	Bhupendra Ghoshi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 21795/2024	17/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	134
135	Bhupendra Singh Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 54959/2024	20/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	135
136	Bhura v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no.	23/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	136

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	and Ors.	8712/2024
137	Bhuru v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 3759/2017	01/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	137
138	Bihari Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 513/2012	11/11/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	138
139	Bijendra Singh Jadon v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 5898/2025	04/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	139
140	Bijendra Singh Rajput v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 18815/2022	23/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	140
141	Birbal v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 1042/2016	22/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	141
142	Bisan Patel and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 54287/2021	23/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	142
143	Bitthal Ahirwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 14677/2022	05/09/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	143
144	B.L. Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 745/2013	28/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	144
145	Boby and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 1054/2013	15/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	145
146	B.P. v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 18487/2022	18/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	146
147	Brajesh Chandra Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 10000/2025	01/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	147
148	Brajesh Jhariya (Mehra) and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 24583/2023	05/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	148
149	Brajesh Singh v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 47582/2021	09/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	149
150	Brajesh Yadav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 18225/2026	05/05/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav	150
151	Brijesh Singh v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 276/2015	21/09/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	151
152	Brijmohan Sharma v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 18225/2022	19/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	152
153	Brijnandan Deewan and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 42642/2019	27/01/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	153
154	Buddhu Lal Patel v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 20779/2024	24/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	154
155	Bundel Singh Lodhi v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 15168/2021	30/04/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	156
156	Bunty v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 778/2014	04/09/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	157
157	Champalal Dhakad v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 12274/2025	15/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	158
158	Chandra Kumar Kourav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 20442/2024	23/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	159
159	Chandrabhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Ravi and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Ashish and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1049/2011 & 102/2012 & 160/2012	13/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	160
160	Chandrabhan Singh Bhadoriya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 12930/2025	25/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	161
161	Chandrakant Mourya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 5126/2024	05/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	162
162	Chandrakant Shrivastava and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no.	13/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	163

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	21528/2022
163	Chandramohan Dubey v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 6066/2024	02/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	164
164	Chandu and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 172/2007	25/11/2016	D.B. - N.K. Gupta & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	165
165	Chaviram and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Hemant and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 873/2011 & 977/2011	13/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	166
166	Chhuna and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 474/2003	25/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	167
167	Child in Conflict with Law v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 1463/2022	27/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	168
168	Confederation of All India Traders v. State of Madhya Pradesh	W.P. no. 27516/2021	20/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	169
169	Dalveer Singh Kanshana v. Balaji Developer and Others; Mukesh Kumar Agrawal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 8856/2025 & 9360/2025	15/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	170
170	Dalveer Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 8230/2017	09/05/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	171
171	Damodar Das Singhal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 21886/2024	19/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	172
172	Dashrath v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 970/2010	10/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Satish Kumar Sharma	173
173	Dashrath Singh Lodhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 32273/2024	07/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	174
174	Deepak v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 55512/2021	11/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	175
175	Deepak Advertisers v. Naresh Jethwani	Cr.A. no. 5504/2020	07/12/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	176
176	Deepak Gupta v. Vimlesh Goyal	M.Cr.C. no. 38461/2019	11/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	177
177	Deepak Pandey v. Aneeta Tiwari	M.Cr.C. no. 3753/2024	19/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	178
178	Deepak Prajapati v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 12/2015	16/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	179
179	Deepak Rajawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 28390/2022	17/06/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	180
180	Deepak Shukla v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 38791/2018	19/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	181
181	Deepak Tomar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 49075/2021	04/10/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	182
182	Deependra @ Deepu, Ramvilas, Ramabai and Kamal Kishore v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 742/2014 & 767/2014	24/06/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	183
183	Deepu Kaurav v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 51550/2022	04/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	184
184	Deewan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 24288/2021	27/07/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	185
185	Deewanpuri v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 268/2003	16/05/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	186
186	Deshraj Singh Tomar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 62422/2021	06/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	187
187	Deva and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 201/2012	07/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	188

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
188	Devendra Dhakad v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 6976/2024	14/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	189
189	Devendra Kumar Sadh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 47776/2020	10/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	190
190	Devendra Kumar Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 52360/2018	16/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	191
191	Devendra Sharma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 34507/2020	24/09/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	192
192	Devendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 20136/2024	29/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	193
193	Devendra Valmiki v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 2512/2021	12/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	194
194	Devidas v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 6917/2024	20/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	196
195	Devmani Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 3348/2021	30/11/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	197
196	Dharam Das Bhalekar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 12327/2023	18/07/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	198
197	Dharmendra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1013/2010	07/02/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	199
198	Dipti Kushwah v. Vijay Shankar Tiwari and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 14091/2016	11/04/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	200
199	Divicharan Lodhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 10619/2025	19/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	201
200	Durgesh Singh Bhadauria v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 427/2007	12/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	202
201	Faiza Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 20162/2024	08/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	203
202	Farah Khan and Others v. Central Bureau of Investigation and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 14084/2024	16/01/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anil Verma	204
203	Farjana and Others v. Rashid	Cr.R. no. 1414/2019	26/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	205
204	Gabbar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1113/2005	18/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	206
205	Gabbar Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.A. no. 323/2003; Cr.R. no. 284/2003	27/10/2016	D.B. - N.K. Gupta & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	207
206	Gagan Ojha v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.A. no. 3006/2021	10/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	208
207	Gajendra Singh Sakhwar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 32958/2020	01/10/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	209
208	Garunadwaj Ojha and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 29113/2023	26/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	210
209	Geeta Bai and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 6626/2023	16/02/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	211
210	Geeta Bai and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 9702/2023	20/03/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	212
211	Geeta Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 18720/2019	13/09/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	213
212	Ghanshyam v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 160/2006	15/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	214
213	Ghanshyam Yadav and Others v.	Cr.A. no.	11/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	215

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	State of Madhya Pradesh	324/2011		& Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava
214	Ghasiram v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 2553/2005	17/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	216
215	Girand Prasad Sharma and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 19417/2022	23/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	217
216	Girja and Others v. Raju	Cr.R. no. 3002/2021	28/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	218
217	Girraj v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 525/2010	14/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	219
218	Girraj Ghuraiya v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 269/2009	04/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	220
219	Girraj Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 46863/2022	18/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	221
220	Girraj Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 11859/2024	29/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	222
221	Gopal v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 831/2010	20/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	223
222	Gopal Shivhare v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 5460/2018	31/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	224
223	Gorelal Malviya v. Vimlesh Shukla	M.Cr.C. no. 36824/2021	10/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	225
224	Govind and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Munna v. State; Purushottam Sharma v. Govind and Others	Cr.A. no. 5153/2023 & 3759/2023	08/05/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav	226
225	Govind Das and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 227/2010	06/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	227
226	Govind Saini v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 537/2015	14/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	228
227	Govind Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 485/2011	28/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	229
228	Dharmendra Jadon and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 50236/2024	25/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	230
229	Dharmendra Lodhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 59472/2021	10/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	231
230	Dharmendra Lodhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 25312/2026	03/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	232
231	Dharmendra Singh Thakur and Others v. Supriya Saxena	M.P. no. 1492/2024	20/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	233
232	Dharmendra v. State of M.P. and Ramjilal v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 4688/2018	05/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	234
233	Dhirendra Vishwakarma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 9592/2022	12/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	235
234	Dicky Ram Tiwari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 8370/2023	03/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	236
235	Digambar Jain Khandelwal Panchayat Mandir v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 38039/2020	19/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	237
236	Dileep Sharma v. State of M.P. and Others; Rakesh Kumar Kacher and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	W.P. no. 10626/2023	02/09/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	238
237	Dilip v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 49220/2022	11/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	239
238	Dilmeet Singh Bal v. State of	W.P. no.	21/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	240

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Madhya Pradesh and Others	40972/2024
239	Dinesh Singh Baish v. Chhotelal	M.Cr.C. no. 11064/2020	18/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	241
240	Dinesh v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 9466/2022	24/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	242
241	Dinesh Yadav v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 3609/2022	31/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	243
242	Dipendra Shah v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 21586/2023	16/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	244
243	Jagdish Singh Kaurav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.R. no. 3364/2022	19/09/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	245
244	Jagdish v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 31/2016	09/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	246
245	Jagdish v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 2926/2017	01/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	247
246	Jagram and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 790/2009	29/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	248
247	Jaideep Raghuwanshi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 26385/2021	03/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	249
248	Jaipal Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 42352/2021	14/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	250
249	Jaipal Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 10547/2020	25/06/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	251
250	Jaishanker Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1241/1999	06/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	252
251	Jandel Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 497/2012	01/11/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Milind Ramesh Phadke	253
252	Jaswant v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 256/2017	16/12/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	254
253	Jaswinder Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 1724/2025	20/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	255
254	Javed Naseem v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 8056/2024	20/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	256
255	Jawar Pardi v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 5777/2024	18/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	257
256	Jayant Raghuvanshi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 48530/2024	21/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	258
257	Jhabbu and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 263/2010	24/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	259
258	Jitendra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 41475/2024	05/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	260
259	Jitendra Batham v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Ramu Chidar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 1222/2022	13/07/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	261
260	Jitendra Dhare Ghatle v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 14429/2023	12/04/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	262
261	Jitendra Kushwah v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 32002/2022	14/07/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	263
262	Jitendra Makhija v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 31336/2023	04/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	264
263	Jitendra Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 50459/2020	06/01/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	265
264	Jitendra Singh Narwariya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 54772/2024	20/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	266
265	Jitendra v. State of Madhya	Cr.R. no.	06/12/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	267

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Pradesh	982/2019
266	Jogendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 479/2015	13/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	268
267	Junaid Siddiqui and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 32013/2024	23/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	269
268	Kadam Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 25331/2021	14/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	270
269	Kailash Narayan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 1306/2019	02/04/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	271
270	Kalla and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 478/2010	26/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	272
271	Kallo and Others v. Vimla Devi and Others	Cr.A. no. 5064/2018	20/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	273
272	Kallu and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Anil v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1026/2016 & 111/2017	05/08/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	274
273	Kallu Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 109/2011	28/03/2018	D.B. - Vivek Agarwal & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	275
274	Kalla and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 44885/2022	12/10/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	276
275	Kalpana Daniel v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 47928/2023	10/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	277
276	Kalu v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 532/2011	18/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	278
277	Kalyan and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 828/2011	09/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	279
278	Kamal Singh Rawat and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 715/2013	14/12/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	280
279	Kamla Bai and others v. Kailash Singh Raghuvanshi and others	M.Cr.C. no. 13070/2024	07/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	281
280	Kamla Sharma and others v. Sukhdevlal and others	M.Cr.C. no. 8770/2016	18/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	282
281	Kamlesh Diwakar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 11021/2016	08/11/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	283
282	Kamlesh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 894/2006	07/03/2018	D.B. - S.A. Dharmadhikari & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	284
283	Kampoo and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 630/2010	07/02/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	285
284	Kapil Gupta and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 12990/2024	03/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	286
285	Karan Kumar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 158/2013	13/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	287
286	Kashiram Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh; State of Madhya Pradesh v. Kalyansingh and Others	Cr.A. no. 910/2010 & 453/2014	09/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	288
287	Kasturi Devi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 26941/2020	29/09/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	289
288	Kavindra Kiyawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 27734/2019	21/09/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	290
289	Kedar Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 687/2010	20/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	291
290	Kedar v. Seema and Others	Cr.R. no. 644/2018	03/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	292
291	Keshav Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 24227/2023	22/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	293
292	Khemchand Kushwah v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 511/2011	29/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	294

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
293	Khoob Singh v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 50/2003	09/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	295
294	Kishanlal Choudhary v. N.R. Pachouri; N.R. Pachouri v. Kishanlal Choudhary	M.Cr.C. no. 50852/2018	22/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	296
295	Kishanlal v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 252/2010	04/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	297
296	Kishna Banjara v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 360/2012	20/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	298
297	Kishor Samrite v. Union of India and others	W.P. no. 20196/2022	29/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	299
298	Komal Singh Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 5994/2024	12/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	300
299	Komal Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 132/2011	13/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	301
300	Krishna Gopal v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 663/2003	26/04/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	302
301	Krishna Kumar Gupta v. Ashok Kumar Dwivedi	M.Cr.C. no. 14683/2024	17/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	303
302	Krishna Kumar Naroliya and Others v. State of M.P. and Others; Mrigendra Naroliya v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 37497/2021 & 37509/2021	21/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	304
303	Krishna Kumar Sharma v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 8407/2019	25/03/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	305
304	Krishnapal Yadav and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 35/2022	01/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	306
305	Kuldeep Singh Rajawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 502/2011	13/12/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	307
306	Kuldeep Singh Tomar v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 5816/2018	08/03/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	308
307	Kunj Bihari v. Jhinguri and Ors.	M.P. no. 4375/2022	15/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	309
308	Kusum Raja v. Station House Officer, Ishanagar	W.P. no. 17997/2020	05/02/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	310
309	Lakhan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 1713/2025	24/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	311
310	Lakhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 5348/2024	18/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	312
311	Lakhanlal and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 779/2009	04/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	313
312	Lakhiram Ramchandani and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 31459/2023	31/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	314
313	Lakhmichand v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 670/2010	19/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	315
314	Lala v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 535/2010	03/05/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	316
315	Lalit Jhariya and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 22960/2024	22/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	317
316	Lalji Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 3372/2024	24/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	318
317	Lalla and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 467/2012	21/11/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	319
318	Laxman Rao v. Court of Third Additional Sessions Judge, Guna and others	Cr.R. no. 3958/2019	02/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	320
319	Laxman Yadav v. State of Madhya	W.P. no.	05/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	321

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Pradesh and others	18055/2022
320	Laxmi Narayan Vishwakarma v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 2536/2021	29/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	322
321	Laxmi Pandey v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 56817/2023	17/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	323
322	Laxmikant Chaturvedi v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 33104/2024	24/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	324
323	Laxminarayan Rawat and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 47295/2024	12/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	325
324	Leelakrishna Mishra v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 47574/2018	25/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	326
325	Lisyu v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1263/2006	19/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	327
326	Liyakatuddin v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 705/1999	21/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	328
327	Nabal Singh Morya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 25054/2022	21/06/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	329
328	Nageshwar Prasad Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Rakesh Kumar Chauhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.R. no. 852/2017 & 574/2017	08/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	330
329	Nandu alias Narendra Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Criminal Appeal No. 2301/2005	Not stated	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia and Vishal Mishra	331
330	Narayan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. No. 469/2013	Not stated	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	332
331	Narendra Gangrade v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	W.P. No. 9307/2019	Not stated	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	333
332	Narendra Kumar Pandey v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. No. 47379/2024	Not stated	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	334
333	Nandu v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 499/2006	01/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	335
334	Narendra Pal Singh Tomar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	Cr.R. no. 3103/2021	28/06/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	336
335	Narendra Rasak v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	W.P. no. 14545/2025	02/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	337
336	Naresh Dhanuk v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 46692/2024	13/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	338
337	Naresh Kumar Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	Cr.R. no. 3152/2021	21/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	339
338	Naresh Rajoriya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 26587/2022	12/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	340
339	Naresh Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 496/2011	02/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	341
340	Naresh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 215/2010	12/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	342
341	Narottam Pathak and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 3701/2016	08/12/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	343
342	Navendra Singh Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 29152/2021	30/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	344
343	Nazim Ahmad v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 27031/2018	06/03/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	345
344	Neelkamal Sharma and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and	M.Cr.C. no. 46662/2022	08/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	346

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	others
345	Neha Shakya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 55128/2024	21/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	347
346	Neha Singh Rathore v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 47655/2023	15/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	348
347	Nicky Chaurasia v. Vimal Kumar	M.Cr.C. no. 12242/2016	18/11/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	349
348	Nirman Sagar v. Monika Sagar Chaudhari and Others	Cr.R. no. 3060/2021	01/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	350
349	Nirmal Singh Mertia and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 20621/2024	03/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	351
350	Nisha Saket v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.R. no. 3161/2022	20/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	352
351	Nishant Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 17991/2022	17/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	353
352	Nitesh Raghuvanshi v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 34068/2019	28/11/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	354
353	Nitish Umariya and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 46355/2019	04/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	355
354	Nitin Ahire and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 10692/2021	04/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	356
355	Nitin Pahariya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 21788/2023	05/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	357
356	Nitin Vithal Rao Kale v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 133/2025	20/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	358
357	Omprakash Dhakad v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 5973/2025	07/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	359
358	Nathu Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 397/2005	30/04/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	360
359	Neetesh Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 36916/2024	29/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	361
360	Harsh Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 63657/2021	14/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	362
361	Tanweer Seraj and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 14464/2023	19/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	363
362	Harsh Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 5428/2019	15/03/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	364
363	Tarun Kushwah v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 55955/2022	29/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	365
364	Harshit Namdev v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 35340/2019	20/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	366
365	State of Madhya Pradesh v. Gajendra Singh	M.Cr.C. no. 50723/2021	05/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	367
366	Hazrat Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 38313/2022	05/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	368
367	State of Madhya Pradesh v. Babulal	M.Cr.C. no. 10196/2017	09/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	369
368	Heera Singh v. Ram Singh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 44227/2023	04/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	370
369	State of Madhya Pradesh v. Mohit Tiwari	W.A. no. 692/2023	28/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	371
370	Hem Pal v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 527/2016	05/12/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	372
371	State of Madhya Pradesh v. Nasir Shekh	M.Cr.C. no. 56158/2022	20/12/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	373

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
372	Heman Singh Dhakad v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.R. no. 2691/2021	10/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	374
373	The State of Madhya Pradesh v. Pawan and Others; Manish Jaat v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.A. no. 10539/2025 & 7086/2025	06/05/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav	375
374	Hemant Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 15637/2021	26/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	376
375	Tikam Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1054/2011	12/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	377
376	Tillu v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 2768/2021	22/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	378
377	Horam and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 125/2008 & 145/2008 & 158/2008 & 314/2008	31/10/2018	D.B. - Sheel Nagu & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	379
378	Todal v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	W.P. no. 3086/2024	16/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	380
379	Hotam Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Rajbahadur Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 620/2010 & 666/2010	24/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	381
380	Tourez Khan v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 6308/2017	10/08/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	382
381	Hukum Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 47/2012	07/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	383
382	Tufan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 704/2017	20/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	384
383	Ichhashankar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 575/2022	25/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	385
384	Tulsi Ram Lodhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 43730/2024	18/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	386
385	I.M. Siddiqui and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 11930/2013	05/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	387
386	Tulsiram and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 2459/2010	16/10/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	388
387	In Reference and Others v. Ravi and Others	Cr.Rf.C. no. 3/2020; Cr.A. no. 3007/2020	09/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	389
388	Udai Singh v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 871/2005	06/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	390
389	In Reference (Suo Moto) and Others v. Manoj and Others	Cr.Rf.C. no. 8/2019; Cr.A. no. 4554/2019	28/07/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	391
390	Victim "X" v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 17987/2020	02/12/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	392
391	In Reference (Suo Moto) and Others v. Yogesh Nath and Others	Cr.Rf.C. no. 5/2020; Cr.A. no. 4965/2020	08/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	393
392	Vijay Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 6271/2014	02/12/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	394
393	In the Reference of the State of Madhya Pradesh v. Deepak Pachori	Cr.Rf.C. no. 5/2025; Cr.A. no.	24/06/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	395

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
		11168/2025
394	Vikas Ramprakash Mishra v. Abha and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 32166/2020	04/09/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	396
395	In the Reference of State of Madhya Pradesh v. Sheru Jatav	Cr.Rf.C. no. 3/2026; Cr.A. no. 5134/2026	24/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	397
396	Tishi Sharma v. Mohit Sharma	Cr.R. no. 5545/2023	11/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	398
397	Indal Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 651/2010	02/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	399
398	Vijay Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.R. no. 1874/2026	06/05/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav	400
399	Tamish Saluja and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 16003/2024	16/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	401
400	Amit Nimodiya v. Bharti Nimodiya and Another	Cr.R. no. 283/2017 & 545/2017	17/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	402
401	Ajay Khemariya and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 693/2016	08/12/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	403
402	Indu Parashar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 55217/2023	27/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	404
403	Insaf and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 842/2014 & 913/2014 & 1025/2014	05/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	405
404	Insaf v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 12477/2025	29/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	406
405	Irfan Khan and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 52076/2023	03/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	407
406	Jabar Singh Lodhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 7802/2025	22/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	408
407	Jagdish and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 464/2008 & 461/2008 & 462/2008 & 471/2008 & 526/2008	03/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	409
408	Jagdish and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 233/2010 & 239/2010 & 281/2010	09/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	410
409	Jagdish Parashar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 40633/2021	15/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	411
410	Jagdish Prasad and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 2360/2005 & 2405/2005 & 30/2006	16/10/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	412
411	Jagdish Prasad Dixit v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 37350/2024	17/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	413
412	Jagdish Singh and Another v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 898/2017	13/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	414
413	Madhusunan Pandey and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 17374/2024	01/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	415

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
414	Mahavir Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 50855/2021	09/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	416
415	Mahendra Kumar Dubey v. Economic Offences Wing, Unit Gwalior	M.Cr.C. no. 14254/2021	31/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	417
416	Mahendra Kumar Sharma and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 48206/2022	20/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	418
417	Mahendra Kumar Vaidya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 23876/2022	03/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	419
418	Mahendra Nagpure and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 18576/2022	13/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	420
419	Mahendra v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 101/2016	09/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	421
420	Mahendra v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 11304/2022	13/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	422
421	Mahesh Jatav v. The State of M.P.	W.P. no. 16905/2019	03/09/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	423
422	Mahesh Kaurav and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 5828/2025	07/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	424
423	Mahesh Kumar and Ors. v. Pramila Ahirwar	M.Cr.C. no. 11836/2024	08/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	425
424	Mahesh Sahu and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 2070/2018	05/12/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	426
425	Makhan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 13859/2020	25/09/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	427
426	Mala Chatterjee and Ors. v. Rajkumar Sonkar and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 18452/2018	19/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	428
427	Malkhan Singh v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 8892/2021	25/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	429
428	Mamta Chourasiya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 30112/2024	24/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	430
429	X (mother of the minor) v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 12520/2022	21/06/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	431
430	Mamta Tiwari v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 2020/2021	02/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	432
431	Man Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 312/2011	27/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	433
432	Manish Gupta v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 11462/2021	01/04/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	434
433	Manish Kumar Dubey and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 56088/2023	26/12/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	435
434	Manish Kumar Kartroliya v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 39483/2021	05/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	436
435	Manish Sahu v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 8388/2023	01/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	437
436	Manish Shivhare and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 52314/2024	19/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	438
437	Manish v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1309/2006	10/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	439
438	Mankunwar Bai Jatav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 19888/2024	14/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	440
439	Manmohan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 2713/2021	22/07/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	441
440	Manoj Gupta v. Mukesh Chandra	M.Cr.C. no.	31/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	442

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Virmani	12084/2021
441	Manoj Kumar Goyal v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 15521/2019	09/07/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	443
442	Manoj Kumar Sharma and Others v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 1210/2021 & 1128/2021	01/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	444
443	Manoj Sen v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 20/2012	07/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	445
444	Manoj Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 45827/2024	15/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	446
445	Manoj Shrivastava v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 31088/2018	20/09/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	447
446	Manoj Shrivatava v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 18636/2021	16/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	448
447	Manoj Shukla v. Pratibha Mishra and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 17913/2024	08/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	449
448	Manoj Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 37/2010 & 99/2010	10/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	450
449	Manoj v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 992/2015	21/02/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	451
450	Manvendra Singh v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 2609/2021	28/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	452
451	Mayank Sharma and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 3107/2018	06/12/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	453
452	Mayank Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 12150/2022	12/07/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	454
453	Meena v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 777/2011	04/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	455
454	Meera Chauhan v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 10981/2021	19/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	456
455	Meera Gupta v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 42215/2024	13/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	457
456	Meera Soni and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 22116/2021	07/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	458
457	Meera Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 9743/2022	26/09/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	459
458	Meera v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 10353/2015	05/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	460
459	Meghna Agarwal v. Manju Bagadiya and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 4200/2022	19/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	461
460	Mevaram Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 12195/2022	06/06/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	462
461	Misbhah-Ul Aijaz Nizami and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 453/2023	02/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	463
462	Mithibai Ahirwar and Ors. v. Kamthua Pal	M.Cr.C. no. 61591/2022	20/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	464
463	Mohammad Khan v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 26366/2024	06/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	465
464	Mohan Prasad Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 23327/2022	09/05/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	466
465	Mohar Bai and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 692/2008	28/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	467
466	Mohd. Amir Khan and Ors. v. The State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 2843/2021	10/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	468

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
467	Mohd. Iliyas and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 30505/2019	20/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	469
468	Mohd. Iqbal Hafiz Khan and Ors. v. Mohd. Amir Haseeb	M.Cr.C. no. 35081/2019	20/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	470
469	Mohd. Sohil v. The State of MP and Ors.	W.P. no. 25140/2024	17/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	471
470	Moh. Shahid Ansari and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 44348/2020	15/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	472
471	Moni v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 53700/2022	16/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	473
472	Monu Sharma and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 938/2010 & 940/2010 & 1031/2010	31/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	474
473	Monu Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 44128/2024	22/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	475
474	Mool Kawar Mehta and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 2964/2024	26/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	476
475	Moolchand v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 443/2010	06/12/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	477
476	Morari v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 153/2010	22/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	478
477	Moti Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 898/2002	18/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	479
478	Motilal v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 689/1999	20/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	480
479	Motiram Bisen v. The State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 1214/2008	17/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	481
480	Mukesh Jatav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 906/2017	01/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	482
481	Mukesh Khamparia v. Anjali Agrawal and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 45626/2022	01/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	483
482	Mukesh Kumar Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 11791/2024	29/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	484
483	Mukesh Kumar v. The State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 1041/2022	06/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	485
484	Mukesh Swaroop Johri and Others v. Central Bureau of Investigation	M.Cr.C. no. 18259/2025	11/11/2025	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav	486
485	Mukesh v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 1360/2022	22/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	487
486	Mukesh v. State of MP and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 28229/2020	21/08/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	488
487	Mullu Prajapati v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 3174/2021	18/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	489
488	Mukesh Singh Rawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	Cr.R. no. 2319/2022	03/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	490
489	Munna and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	Cr.A. no. 1822/2015	19/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	491
490	Munnalal Wadiwa v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 3867/2024	22/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	492
491	Munni Bai v. State of MP	M.Cr.C. no. 30338/2020	28/08/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	493
492	Munni Bai v. State of M.P. and Ors.	W.P. no. 18117/2021	01/10/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	494
493	Munni Lal Singh Bhadoriya and	M.Cr.C. no.	12/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	495

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	6925/2024
494	Munshilal Dhakad v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 23671/2024	04/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	496
495	Murarilal and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 196/2003	30/04/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	497
496	Nathu Singh v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 515/2010	13/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	499
497	Neeraj Kumar Saraf and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.; Seema Saraf v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 12469/2024 & 48243/2023	07/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	500
498	Neetu Goyal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 24023/2022	12/05/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	501
499	Rajendra Kumar Mangal and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 12431/2021 & 12403/2021	01/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	502
500	Rajendra Kumar Shah and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 20135/2022	22/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	503
501	Rajendra Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 21172/2021	16/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	504
502	Rajendra Singh Meena and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	Cr.A. no. 5412/2021	16/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	505
503	Rajendra Upadhyay v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 19106/2022	06/05/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	506
504	Rajendra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	Cr.R. no. 693/2020	16/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	507
505	Rajesh and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 678/2011 & 882/2011 & 701/2018	19/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	508
506	Rajesh Batra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 8190/2020	12/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	509
507	Rajesh Depuriya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 4311/2021	17/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	510
508	Rajesh Dubey v. Rachna Tiwari and others	Cr.R. no. 1257/2018	21/03/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	511
509	Rajesh Nagpure v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	W.P. no. 22524/2024	14/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	512
510	Rajesh Shakya and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 14082/2021	24/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	513
511	Rajesh Upadhya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 55597/2024	15/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	514
512	Rajjan Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	W.P. no. 18600/2020	31/05/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	515
513	Rajkishore Shrivastava v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 38456/2021	02/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	516
514	Rajkumar Singh Thakur v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	W.P. no. 4612/2023	19/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	517
515	Rajkumar Vasudev Prasad Sharma and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 5872/2024	05/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	518
516	Raju Jaat v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 311/2008	17/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	519

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
517	Raju Parihar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	M.Cr.C. no. 1868/2022	12/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	520
518	P. Laxman v. Union of India	M.Cr.C. no. 10079/2021	27/04/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	521
519	Phoolabai and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 744/2000	25/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	522
520	Pradeep Singh v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 25682/2020	13/08/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	523
521	Prahalad v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 72/2011	03/02/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	524
522	Prahlad Gothiya and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 5558/2024	16/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	525
523	Prahlad Singh Parmar v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 3085/2021	24/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	526
524	Prakash and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 707/2003	16/12/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	527
525	Prakash Pawaiya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 50860/2018	22/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	528
526	Pramod Mahor v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 875/2008	16/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	529
527	Pramod Singh Tomar v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 10674/2022	04/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	530
528	Pramod Vishvaiya v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 22856/2018	20/01/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	531
529	Pran Singh Lodhi v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 5067/2022	03/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	532
530	Pranav Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 11935/2024	09/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	533
531	Pratigya and Ors. v. Neelesh Kumar	Cr.R. no. 983/2016	02/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	534
532	Pratap Ahirwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 51064/2024	16/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	535
533	Pratap and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 31741/2018	12/12/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	536
534	Prateek Shukla and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 30937/2023	05/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	537
535	Praveen Gangil v. Parag Traders	M.Cr.C. no. 53597/2021	02/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	538
536	Pravendra Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 9460/2025	03/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	539
537	Preeti Garg v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 5413/2025	14/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	540
538	Prem Kumar and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 37680/2020	24/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	541
539	Premwati v. State of M.P. and Ors.	W.P. no. 22979/2019	07/11/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	543
540	Priyanka Rajawat and Ors. v. Rahul Singh Rajawat	Cr.R. no. 4107/2019 & 5206/2019	21/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	544
541	Prosecutrix v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 58368/2021	10/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	545
542	Prosecutrix v. State of M.P. and Ors.	W.P. no. 5321/2021	23/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	546
543	Prosecutrix v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 10230/2021	26/02/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	547
544	Purushottam and Ors. v. State of	Cr.A. no.	01/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	548

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	M.P.	552/2015 & 607/2015 & 1297/2017
545	Purushottam Lal Sharma and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 20822/2022	28/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	549
546	Purushottam Pal v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 433/2012	25/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	550
547	Rajendra Upadhyay v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 53177/2021	08/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	551
548	Pushpendra Singh v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 611/2012	29/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	552
549	Puttu v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 8991/2024	25/06/2025	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Hirdesh	553
550	Radha Kushwah v. Bharat Sarkar and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 47365/2024	19/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	554
551	Shivram Singh Rajawat and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 381/2010 & 390/2010	08/12/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	555
552	Shivshankar Mandil v. G.S. Lamba	M.Cr.C. no. 9606/2016	18/11/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	556
553	Shivsingh Tomar v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 45174/2021	25/10/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	557
554	Shreemati The Big Saree Mall and Others v. Rai Homes Universal Pvt. Ltd.	M.Cr.C. no. 19560/2024	24/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	558
555	Snehlata v. Vireshwar Singh and Others	Cr.R. no. 3494/2021	02/05/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	559
556	Sukhua v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 87/2016	09/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	560
557	Sultan Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 971/2011	04/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	561
558	Sukhendra Chatuvedi v. Sneha and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 54170/2023	04/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	562
559	Sai Lal Patel and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Omkar Prasad Patel v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 2874/2020 & 3171/2020	04/10/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	563
560	Sapna Prajapati v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 13285/2021	10/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	564
561	Shailesh Bopche v. Anita Bopche	M.Cr.C. no. 30262/2023	02/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	565
562	Shreepat Shakya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 54768/2024	20/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	566
563	Shyam Agrawal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 33063/2019	20/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	567
564	Shivam Sharma v. State of M.P. and Others	Cr.R. no. 448/2022	02/05/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	568
565	Sushil Kumar Majoka v. Central Bureau of Investigation	M.Cr.C. no. 45219/2024	25/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	569
566	Gudda alias Lal Sahab and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 202/2012	24/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	570
567	Gudda v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 347/2012	20/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	571
568	Gulabnath v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1354/2008	14/12/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	572
569	Gulsingh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Gorelal and	Cr.A. no. 411/2009 &	05/09/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	573

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	704/2010
570	Gurujlal Panika v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Lala alias Rajkumar Kewat v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 548/2015 & 783/2015	21/12/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	574
571	Gyanichandra alias Gyani and Another v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 481/2010	25/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	575
572	Hakamsingh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 594/1999	21/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	576
573	Halkai and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 76/2012	07/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	577
574	Hani Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 58525/2021	14/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	578
575	Hansraja v. MP Vidyut Bitaran Co. Ltd.	M.Cr.C. no. 1495/2025	24/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	579
576	Hari Narayan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 2446/2005	17/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	580
577	Hari Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 35883/2022	13/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	581
578	Harimohan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 195/2011	18/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	582
579	Hariom Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Another; State of Madhya Pradesh v. Dinesh Singh Yadav	Cr.A. no. 912/2011 & 181/2012	31/10/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	583
580	Hariram and Another v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 408/2012	27/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	584
581	Hariram v. Harnarayan	M.Cr.C. no. 38325/2022	28/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	585
582	Kailash v. Arjun Singh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 57102/2021	21/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	586
583	Kajju v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 130/2000	18/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	587
584	Kanti Lahariya and Ors. v. Dinesh Kumar Sharma and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 14792/2025	05/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	588
585	Kaushal Sharma and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 37490/2024	20/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	589
586	Meghna Agarwal v. Anurag Bagadiya and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 4173/2022	19/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	590
587	Monika v. Praveen	Cr.R. no. 205/2024	09/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	591
588	Neha Jain v. Rahul Jain and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 19092/2023	13/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	592
589	Omkar and Ors. v. State of MP	Cr.A. no. 646/2011	05/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	593
590	Omprakash Jatav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 54263/2024	18/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	595
591	Omprakash Rawat v. Deepak Sengar and Ors.	W.A. no. 267/2025	13/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	596
592	Omprakash Uikey and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 13457/2024	04/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	597
593	Ompraksh Patel v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 21846/2018	06/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	598
594	Pahalwan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 73/2004	01/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	599
595	Pankaj Karoriya v. The State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 40229/2021	12/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	600

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
596	Pankaj Kumar Mishra v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 12294/2022	21/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	601
597	Pankaj Yadav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 27121/2023	02/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	602
598	Pappan v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 52364/2021	07/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	603
599	Pappu and Others v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 1219/2017	07/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	604
600	Pappu v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 401/2010	07/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	605
601	Parimal Singh Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 31252/2024	09/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	606
602	Parimal Singh Gurjar v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 402/2022	06/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	607
603	Parmal Singh Rawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 11480/2025	07/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	608
604	Parmanand v. Sushil Munat	Cr.R. no. 2771/2024	11/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	609
605	Parmeshwar Das v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 360/2011	26/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	610
606	Patiram Yadav and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	Cr.R. no. 801/2017	30/01/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	611
607	Pavan Kumar and Others v. Manikchand Petroleum Deori and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 3905/2024	20/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	612
608	Pawan Kumar Ahluwalia and Others v. Gurjeet Singh and Others	W.P. no. 15273/2024	08/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	613
609	Pawan Kumar Kurmi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 6380/2009	14/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	614
610	Pawan Rawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 692/2018	09/01/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	615
611	Pawan Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 7611/2018	31/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	616
612	P.D. Agrawal v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 445/2007	23/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	617
613	Petu v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 296/2013	14/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	618
614	Phitorilal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.R. no. 3716/2017	11/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	619
615	Phool Bai v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 16013/2024	02/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	620
616	Phool Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 36488/2020	01/10/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	621
617	Phulle v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 2567/2018	07/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	622
618	Pinki v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 764/2016	28/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	623
619	Pinky Mahor v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 49904/2021	18/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	624
620	Pitta and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 53221/2021	23/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	625
621	Pooja Jadon v. State of M.P. and Others	W.P. no. 2589/2020	24/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	626
622	Poojabai v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.P. no. 2919/2024	28/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	627
623	Poonam Bhadoriya and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 64007/2021	17/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	628

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
624	Poonam Malviya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 13104/2024	17/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	629
625	Poonam Sharma v. State of M.P. and Others	W.P. no. 9800/2021	03/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	630
626	Pooran Singh Jatav v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 4309/2016	08/12/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	631
627	Pradeep Chouhan v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 52832/2021	07/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	632
628	Pradeep Jain v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1251/2008	17/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	633
629	Pradeep Kumar v. Baby Shivhare	Cr.R. no. 6279/2024	06/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	634
630	Pradeep Kushwah v. State of M.P. and Others	Cr.R. no. 1113/2021	27/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	635
631	Pradeep Sakhawar v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 35848/2021	25/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	636
632	Pradeep Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 5719/2024	18/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	637
633	Pradeep Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 465/2012	22/08/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	638
634	Pradeep Singh and Others v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 41715/2021	01/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	639
635	Pragati Rashinkar (Dixit) v. Rohan Dixit	Cr.R. no. 4888/2024 & 6325/2024	24/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	640
636	Prateek Agrawal and Others v. Pagaria Marbles and Ceramic Firm	M.Cr.C. no. 2230/2024	13/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	641
637	Radha Prajapati v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 31612/2026	18/08/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	642
638	Radhe and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 467/2022	22/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	643
639	Radhe v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 259/2012	13/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	644
640	Radheshyam Kushwah v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 3816/2019	06/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	645
641	Raghuraj Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 17494/2022	27/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	646
642	Raghuraj Singh Raghuvanshi and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 2979/2022	23/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	647
643	Raghuveer Savita and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	Cr.A. no. 625/2009 & 713/2009 & 1046/2014	05/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	648
644	Raghuvir v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 667/2010	11/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	649
645	Raghvendra Singh Rawat v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 1464/2022	12/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	650
646	Raghvendra Singh v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 12765/2021	22/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	651
647	Ragini Gupta v. Piyush Dutt Sharma	Cr.R. no. 5263/2018	07/03/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	652
648	Rahul and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	W.P. no. 13785/2022	22/06/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	653
649	Rahul Jain v. Neha Jain and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 22950/2024	31/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	654
650	Rahul Jain v. The State of Madhya	M.Cr.C. no.	27/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	655

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Pradesh	7719/2024
651	Rahul Jatav v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 12804/2016	24/11/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	656
652	Rahul Kumar v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 38747/2021	09/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	657
653	Rahul Pandey v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 1020/2021	06/04/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	658
654	Rahul Saket v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 13203/2024	21/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	659
655	Rahul Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Bhan Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1025/2010 & 1030/2010	25/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	660
656	Rahul Singh Sikarwar and Ors. v. Dileep Singh	M.Cr.C. no. 5587/2025	11/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	661
657	Raj Mathur v. State of M.P. and Ors.	W.P. no. 27427/2021	15/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	662
658	Raja Pandey and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 44847/2020	20/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	663
659	Rajabeti Sakhwar and Ors. v. Darshanlal Sakhwar and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 18242/2021	07/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	664
660	Rajani Awasthy v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 27025/2021	16/06/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	665
661	Rajaram Namdeo and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 22656/2024	04/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	666
662	Rajat Kumar Singh v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 12341/2023	06/04/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	667
663	Rajeev Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 15521/2022	14/07/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	668
664	Rajendra Aporiya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 33661/2024	10/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	669
665	Rajendra Gurjar v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 46296/2020	07/12/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	670
666	Rajendra Kumar Gupta and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 3205/2025	29/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	671
667	Rajendri Parihar (Mirdha) v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 40869/2021	16/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	672
668	Rajveer Singh Jatav v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 18696/2022	25/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	674
669	Rakesh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1059/2013	16/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	675
670	Rakesh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1128/2016	21/09/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	676
671	Rakesh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 449/2008	13/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	677
672	Rakesh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 450/2004	10/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	678
673	Rakesh Dard Vanshi v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 30505/2024	14/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	679
674	Rakesh Jatav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 1729/2025	29/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	680
675	Rakesh Kumar Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 237/2007	17/02/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	682
676	Rakesh Kumar Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 240/2007	17/02/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	683
677	Rakesh Rathore and Others v. State	M.Cr.C. no.	27/11/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	684

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	of Madhya Pradesh and Others	2887/2017
678	Rakesh Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 21469/2024	07/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	685
679	Rakesh Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 21473/2024	07/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	686
680	Rakesh Singh Jadon and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 325/2023	06/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	687
681	Rakesh Singh v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 38324/2021	11/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	688
682	Ram Bahadur Thapa v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 881/2011	28/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	691
683	Ram Khiladi v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 867/2010	15/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	693
684	Ram Kishan v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 658/2007	01/12/2016	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	694
685	Ram Lal and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 522/2010	13/12/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	695
686	Ram Milan Tiwari v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 10868/2024	15/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	697
687	Ram Sewak and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 235/2010 & 373/2010	23/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	698
688	Ram Sewak and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 235/2010 & 373/2010	23/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	699
689	Ram Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 589/2007 & 681/2007	24/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	700
690	Ram Singh and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Atar Singh and another v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 589/2007 & 681/2007	24/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	701
691	Ram Singh Vanshkar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 48043/2024	26/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	702
692	Ram Singh Yadav v. Brij Nandan Yadav and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 51066/2021	22/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	703
693	Ram Swaroop Parmar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 32294/2024	04/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	704
694	Rama Shankar Agrawal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 5887/2025	07/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	705
695	Ramadhar Baghel v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 58792/2021	14/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	707
696	Ramanugrah Singh Gurjar v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 31986/2021	22/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	709
697	Ramashankar Rajoriya v. Rajshankar Rajoriya and Ors.	W.P. no. 39390/2024	16/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	710
698	Ramasre v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 282/2010	11/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	711
699	Rambabu Ahirwar and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 707/2010	24/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	712
700	Rambabu and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 724/2010 & 764/2010 & 770/2010	22/02/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	713
701	Rambabu Singh Tomar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.A. no. 186/2026	09/04/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav	714
702	Rambai and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no.	31/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	715

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	and Ors.	1467/2020
703	Ramcharan and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 192/2010 & 353/2014	21/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	716
704	Ramcharan and Ors. v. Babulal and Ors.	Cr.A. no. 653/2012	11/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	717
705	Ramdas v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 148/2009	03/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	718
706	Ramdayal Singrore v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 20284/2020	04/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	719
707	Ramdayal Yadav and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 635/2010	11/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	720
708	Ramdev Sharma and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 1791/2024	11/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	721
709	Rameshchandra Sharma v. Ramkhiladi Sharma	Cr.R. no. 3547/2021	20/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	723
710	Rameshwar Dayal Sharma and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 1616/2021	25/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	724
711	Ramgovind Kushwaha v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 30630/2018	28/11/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	726
712	Ramhet v. State of MP	M.Cr.C. no. 3577/2022	11/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	727
713	Ramhet v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 39388/2021	10/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	728
714	Ramhet and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 7193/2023	18/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	730
715	Ramji Gurjar v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 234/2010	12/11/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	731
716	Ramji and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 223/2011	31/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	733
717	Ramji Sharan Dangi v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 28479/2019	01/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	734
718	Ramjilal and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1014/2015	14/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	735
719	Ramkhilawan Dwivedi and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 25836/2023	08/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	736
720	Ramkishan v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 24/2006	26/07/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	738
721	Ramkrishan Sharma v. State of M.P. and Ors.	W.P. no. 1751/2019	28/01/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	740
722	Ramkrishna Bohare v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 19587/2021	26/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	741
723	Ramkumari Gupta and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 36885/2022	27/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	742
724	Ramlakhan @ Mohar Singh v. State of M.P.; Punjab Singh v. State of M.P.; Avtar Singh v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 405/2005 & 454/2010 & 510/2008	24/03/2022	D.B. - G.S. Ahluwalia & Satish Kumar Sharma	743
725	Ramlal and Others v. The State of M.P. and Others	Cr.A. no. 741/2005	10/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	744
726	Ramlali v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 29550/2023	09/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	745
727	Ramlesh Bai v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 45937/2022	17/10/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	746
728	Ramnarayan v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 171/2010	04/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	747
729	Ramniwas v. The State of Madhya	M.Cr.C. no.	09/09/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	749

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Pradesh	37083/2019
730	Ramniwas Niranjan v. State of MP	M.Cr.C. no. 51818/2021	26/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	750
731	Rampal v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no. 186/2021	18/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	752
732	Ramprakash and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 212/2010 & 219/2010 & 268/2010 & 285/2010 & 346/2016	12/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	753
733	Ramprakash and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 212/2010 & 219/2010 & 268/2010 & 285/2010 & 346/2016	12/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	754
734	Ramprakash Singh Gurjar v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 15039/2022	30/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	755
735	Ramprasad Jatav and Ors. v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 9138/2021	17/02/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	757
736	Ramprasad Jatav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 600/2022	25/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	758
737	Ramratan and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 17/2012	22/06/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	761
738	Ramsingh Prajapati v. Rahul Dixit	M.Cr.C. no. 28445/2024	17/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	762
739	Ramsingh Thakur v. The State of M.P. and Ors.	W.P. no. 18731/2024	24/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	763
740	Ramsingh Yadav v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 11138/2017	22/03/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	764
741	Ramsubhag Prajapati v. The State of M.P. and Ors.	W.P. no. 17148/2024	01/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	765
742	Ramswaroop and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 862/2011	09/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	766
743	Ramswaroop Patidar and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 24094/2024	01/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	767
744	Ramu v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 138/2022	19/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	768
745	Ramu v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 4578/2025	16/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	769
746	Ramveer Baghel v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 21040/2023	25/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	770
747	Ramveer and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 82/2006	01/09/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	772
748	Ramvilas Dhakad v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 9150/2019	15/06/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav	774
749	Ranjeet Singh Johal v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 29009/2024	24/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	775
750	Ranu Kushwaha v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 358/2009	04/10/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	776
751	Rashid Kha v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 1537/2018	17/01/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	777
752	Ratan Singh Chouhan and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 46674/2023	05/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	778
753	Ravi Rajak v. State of M.P.	Cr.R. no.	11/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	780

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
		1937/2020
754	Ravi Sharma v. State of M.P. and Others	W.P. no. 14168/2020	25/09/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	781
755	Ravi Shivhare v. The State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 209/2012	12/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	782
756	Ravi Shrivas and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 12726/2024	20/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	783
757	Ravindra Pratap and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 14908/2024	16/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	784
758	Ravindra Sakhwar v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 51224/2024	06/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	785
759	Ravindra Singh Gurjar v. Shriman Police Adhikshak and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 35612/2024	22/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	786
760	Ravindra Singh and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 5402/2025	02/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	787
761	Ravindra Thakur v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 24357/2022	14/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	788
762	R.D. Mishra v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 19711/2024	28/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	790
763	Reenadevi v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 18806/2018	29/11/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	791
764	Rekha Ahirwar and Others v. Nirmal Chandra	Cr.R. no. 3457/2024	02/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	792
765	Revti Devi and Others v. State of M.P. and Others; K.K. Naroliya and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 35599/2021 & 37501/2021	21/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	793
766	Rikhiram v. Bina	W.P. no. 19364/2012	05/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	794
767	Rinku Choudhari and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 8134/2025	01/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	795
768	Rinku Kushwah v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 3866/2020	03/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	796
769	Rinku Mourya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 43501/2024	22/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	797
770	Rinku and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 38076/2021	01/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	798
771	Rishabh Khare v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 15353/2022	20/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	799
772	Rishi Agarwal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 38585/2024	17/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	800
773	Rishi Bajaj and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 9965/2024	15/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	801
774	Rishita v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 35421/2020	11/01/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	802
775	Ritesh Ajmera and others v. Dainik Bhaskar and others	M.Cr.C. no. 10582/2016	14/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	803
776	Riya Bajaj v. Rajni Kori	M.Cr.C. no. 40510/2022	03/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	804
777	Rohani Ahirwar v. Mukesh Ladiyai	M.Cr.C. no. 8052/2024	10/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	805
778	Rohit Jain v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 14294/2021	23/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	806
779	Rohit Koli v. State of Madhya	M.Cr.C. no.	11/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	807

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Pradesh and Ors.	11150/2025
780	Rohit Panchal v. State of M.P. and Ors.	Cr.R. no. 311/2021	19/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	808
781	Rohit Rajput v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 4509/2022	09/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	809
782	Rohit Sahu v. State of M.P. and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 10982/2021	29/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	810
783	Roop Singh Kushwah and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 4492/2022	08/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	811
784	Royal Automobiles Private Ltd. v. Arun Yadav and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 39637/2019	03/12/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	812
785	Ruchi Agarwal and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 5466/2017	03/09/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	813
786	Rudra Pratap Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 48237/2020	03/12/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	814
787	Sabir Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 788/2011	10/05/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	815
788	Sagar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 16026/2024	20/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	816
789	Sahab Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 704/2019	14/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	817
790	Sakesh Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 8973/2017	17/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	818
791	Salman and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 3473/2018	11/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	819
792	Sameer Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 5092/2024	02/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	820
793	Samrat Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 38199/2024	06/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	821
794	Sanat Kumar Soni v. Om Prakash Agrawal and Others	M.P. no. 2445/2024	14/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	822
795	Sandeep Chouhan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 7471/2020	19/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	823
796	Sandeep Shakya v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 35841/2021 & 40764/2021	07/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	824
797	Sandeep Shrivastava v. Chando Bai and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 37369/2019	23/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	825
798	Sandeep Singh Rajawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 4266/2025	17/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	826
799	Sangram v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 647/2010	25/03/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	827
800	Sanjay Bhadoriya v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 22796/2018	04/07/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	828
801	Sanjay Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 696/2011	22/06/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	829
802	Sanjeev Ahirwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.R. no. 2104/2022	20/06/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	830
803	Sanjeev Srivastava and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 30937/2019	19/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	831
804	Sant Kumar Namdev v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 52736/2023	06/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	832
805	Sant Kumar Patel and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 5790/2024	30/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	833

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
806	Santosh v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 1791/2015	19/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	834
807	Santosh v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.A. no. 7257/2019	10/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	835
808	Santosh Kumar Dohare and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 460/2004	24/05/2018	D.B. - Vivek Agarwal & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	836
809	Santosh Kumar Mishra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 4794/2024	16/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	837
810	Santosh Kumar Mishra and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	W.P. no. 18039/2024	25/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	838
811	Santosh Sen v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.A. no. 8061/2023	29/12/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	839
812	Santosh Singh Rajawat v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 12572/2022	11/07/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	840
813	Sarika Shrivastava and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 12179/2022	22/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	841
814	Saroj Devi v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 1145/2022	11/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	842
815	Saroj Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 10246/2025	11/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	843
816	Sarvendra Kumar and Others v. Nattho Bai and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 48591/2024	20/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	844
817	Sarvendra Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 3851/2020	24/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	845
818	Satendra Kumar and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 40838/2023	13/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	846
819	Satendra Rathore v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 45389/2021	28/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	847
820	Satendra Singh Rajawat v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 18520/2025	28/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	848
821	Satish alias Vikram Singh Jatav and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.A. no. 174/2011 & 799/2011; M.Cr.C. no. 7709/2014	29/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	849
822	Satish Kumar Dubey (Jatav) v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 240/2010	22/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	850
823	Satish Verma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 10219/2017	20/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	851
824	Saurabh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 2874/2021	24/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	852
825	Saurabh Dohare v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 12754/2025	08/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	853
826	Saurabh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 3998/2022	28/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	854
827	Saurabh Tyagi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 13714/2024	10/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	855
828	Saurabh Yadav and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 9436/2024	07/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	856
829	Sayra Bano and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 54489/2024	18/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	857
830	Seema Bhojne and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 7782/2024	15/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	858

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
831	Senjeet Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 25681/2018	11/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	859
832	Shadab Ansari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 47659/2022	12/12/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	860
833	Shahnawaz Ansari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 43223/2023	08/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	861
834	Shahnaz Ahmed and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 49017/2021	11/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	862
835	Shailendra Rajput v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 19988/2022	03/09/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	863
836	Shailendra Shukla v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 10066/2018	28/06/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	864
837	Shakeel Khan v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	Cr.A. no. 5115/2021	09/09/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	865
838	Shakti Singh Thakur v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 15955/2024	26/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	866
839	Shakuntala v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 20840/2017	06/02/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	867
840	Shambhu v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 45036/2022	28/09/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	868
841	Shambhu Singh Chauhan and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; S.S. Sikarwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 35271/2019 & 42189/2019	06/03/2020	D.B. - Sheel Nagu & Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	869
842	Shanti Devi v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 27606/2017	25/01/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	870
843	Sharad Agarwal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Alpana Awasthi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Manisha Mishra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Ramswaroop Choubey v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 7431/2020 & 9859/2020 & 12289/2020 & 17457/2020	06/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	871
844	Sharad Sharma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 6385/2017	15/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	872
845	Shaukat Ulla and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 210/2011	11/04/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	873
846	Sher Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 60190/2021	15/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	874
847	Shirish Yadav v. Union of India and Others	W.P. no. 14723/2022	08/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	875
848	Shishupal v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 596/2015	01/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	876
849	Shiv Kumar Tiwari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 11760/2020	16/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	877
850	Shiv Narayan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 37526/2021	18/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	878
851	Shiva Bhadoriya and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 6664/2021 & 6678/2021	12/09/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	879
852	Shiva Singh v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 46413/2024	25/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	880

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
853	Shiva Soni and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 55076/2023	17/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	881
854	Shivam Gupta v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 32728/2021	30/06/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	882
855	Shivam Yadav v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 27233/2024	05/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	883
856	Shivani Nishad and Ors. v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 27101/2023	07/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	884
857	Shivcharan and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 445/2009	17/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	885
858	Shivkumar v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 550/2015	05/12/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	886
859	Shivraj Singh Dhakad v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 15850/2025	22/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	887
860	Shubham Gaur and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 22848/2024	20/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	889
861	Shubham Sharma v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.P. no. 2554/2025	19/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	890
862	Shyam Goyal v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 11130/2021	12/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	892
863	Shyam Kushwah v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 31640/2021	15/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	893
864	Shyam Sunder Manjhi v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 14437/2020	23/11/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	894
865	Siddharath Upadhayay and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 14509/2025	25/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	896
866	Sikandar Singh Narvariya v. State of M.P. and Others	Cr.A. no. 5870/2021	04/10/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	897
867	Sitaram v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 209/2010	29/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	898
868	Sitaram Gadariya v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 55116/2021	16/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	899
869	Sitaram Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others; Ajay Pratap Yadav and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 21097/2023 & 22734/2023	15/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	900
870	Siyaram Giri Goswami v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 1462/2025	29/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	901
871	Siyaram Rathore and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	Cr.R. no. 796/2022	05/05/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	902
872	S.K. Shukla v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 12658/2015	22/03/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	903
873	Soami Saran Bhatnagar v. State of M.P. and Others	W.P. no. 20738/2023	01/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	904
874	Somnath Mukherjee v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 4429/2024	28/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	905
875	Sonu Bhadoriya v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 51038/2022	06/12/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	906
876	Sonu Chitodiya (Jatav) v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 47537/2021	03/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	907
877	Sonu Kushwah v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 442/2015	02/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	908
878	Sourabh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 9722/2025	05/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	909
879	Sourav Gurjar and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 14536/2025	04/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	910

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
880	State of M.P. v. Anil Sharma and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 9801/2021	02/07/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	911
881	State of M.P. v. Bhuribai	M.Cr.C. no. 46653/2021	25/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	912
882	State of M.P. v. Chhatrapal Rawat; Chhatrapal Rawat v. State of M.P.	Cr.Rf.C. no. 10/2022; Cr.A. no. 12641/2022	19/06/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Pushpendra Yadav	913
883	State of M.P. v. Hari Singh Khairwar and Others	Cr.A. no. 959/2013	03/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	914
884	State of M.P. v. Kallu Rathore; Kallu Rathore v. State of M.P.	Cr.Rf.C. no. 8/2023; Cr.A. no. 369/2024	17/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	915
885	State of M.P. v. Mahendra Singh and Ors.	Cr.A. no. 790/2005	30/04/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	916
886	State of M.P. v. Nandu (Nandkishore)	Cr.Rf.C. no. 9/2018; Cr.A. no. 6946/2018	26/07/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	917
887	State of Madhya Pradesh v. Ram Outar and Others	Cr.A. no. 542/2003	30/04/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	918
888	State of M.P. v. Ramant Singh	Cr.A. no. 584/2008	30/04/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	919
889	State of M.P. v. R.N. Karaiya	Cr.A. no. 338/2014	03/03/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	920
890	Subhadra Jaiswal and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 25390/2024	05/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	921
891	Subhash Chandra Nagayach v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	W.P. no. 23881/2022	03/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	922
892	Subhash and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 213/2004	01/05/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	923
893	Subhodh Mishra v. Vaheed Ali	M.Cr.C. no. 24507/2018	01/08/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	924
894	Suchit Chourasiya and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 45072/2018	19/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	925
895	Sudesh Gupta and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 46173/2022	18/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	926
896	Sudheer Verma and others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	W.P. no. 14048/2024	10/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	927
897	Suma Bhaskaran v. Union of India	M.Cr.C. no. 27895/2024	23/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	928
898	Suman Koli v. State of M.P. and others	W.P. no. 11376/2021	14/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	929
899	Sundar Singh Gahlod and others v. State of M.P. and others	M.Cr.C. no. 18966/2022	27/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	930
900	Sundar Singh Yadav v. State of Madhya Pradesh and others	W.P. no. 25609/2022	22/11/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	931
901	Sunil Gupta v. State of M.P. and others	M.Cr.C. no. 40317/2021	13/08/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	932
902	Sunil Kushwah v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Ors.	M.Cr.C. no. 48673/2024	25/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	933
903	Sunil Tiwari and Ors. v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Mukesh Tiwari v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 2025/2009 & 2050/2009	04/09/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	934
904	Sunna v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no.	12/04/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	935

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
905	Sunny v. State of Madhya Pradesh and connected appeals of Aakash and Ors., Chhuttan, and Kadori	2442/2021 Cr.A. no. 6252/2017 & 5631/2017 & 6250/2017 & 6251/2017	06/07/2026	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Anuradha Shukla	936
906	Suraj v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 42326/2024	01/03/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	937
907	Suraj v. Jagdish Singh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 46961/2019	22/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	938
908	Suraj Singh and Ors. v. State of M.P.	Cr.A. no. 638/2012	09/05/2018	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	939
909	Suraj Singh Dhakad and Others v. Shriwati Dhakad and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 23628/2024	19/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	940
910	Suraj v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 17320/2019	26/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	941
911	Surajbai and Bhuribai v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 122/2011	16/10/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	942
912	Surajbhan Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 6213/2021	20/01/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	944
913	Surbhi Soni v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 291/2025	16/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	945
914	Surendra and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 62740/2021	20/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	946
915	Surendra Puri v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 426/2016	15/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	947
916	Suresh Ahirwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 51/2012	22/06/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	948
917	Suresh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 194/2012	22/08/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	949
918	Suresh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 463/2008 & 466/2008 & 482/2008	17/08/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	950
919	Suresh Chandra Pathak and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh; Pawan Pathak v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 379/2012 & 401/2012	05/08/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	951
920	Suresh Kumar v. Rajendra Kushwah and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 26249/2022	23/08/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	952
921	Suresh Patel and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 56767/2021	23/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	953
922	Suresh Singh Sikarwar v. Radheshyam Sharma	Cr.A. no. 1008/2013	28/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	954
923	Suresh Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh	W.P. no. 12677/2020	08/09/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	955
924	Suresh Tripathi and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 9413/2023	13/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	956
925	Suryavati Gautam and Others v. Forest Circle Officer, Curhat Forest Division, Sidhi and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 60309/2022	25/04/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	957
926	Sushama Jaiswal and Others v. Vijay and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 10617/2019	20/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	958
927	Sushma Dubey v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 39513/2024	12/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	959

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
928	Sushma Sharma and Others v. State of M.P. and Others	Cr.R. no. 2269/2021	14/02/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	960
929	Sushobhan Zanane v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 20757/2024	12/09/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	961
930	Uday Pal Singh v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 3607/2020	06/03/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	963
931	Ummed Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 19094/2018	06/03/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	964
932	Unnisa v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.R. no. 611/2006	04/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	965
933	Usha Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 34370/2018	03/09/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	966
934	Vaibhav Tiwari and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 1731/2023	15/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	967
935	Veena Sareen v. Central Bureau of Investigation; Mohan Singh Noriya v. Central Bureau of Investigation	Cr.A. no. 2016/1998 & 2113/1998	17/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	968
936	Veer Singh Kushwah v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 8401/2019	19/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	969
937	Veerendra Singh Rajpoot and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 14318/2025	01/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	970
938	Veeru and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 208/2009	25/10/2024	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Vishal Mishra	971
939	Vetal Singh Gurjar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 8475/2024	19/11/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	972
940	Vijay Kant Shrivastav v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 40620/2023	05/10/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	973
941	Vijay Kumar Badal v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 19550/2024	24/08/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	974
942	Vijay Singh v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 46932/2019	30/11/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	975
943	Vijay Singh Jatav v. State of M.P. and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 18651/2020	11/01/2022	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	976
944	Vikas Anand David and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 38444/2019	23/02/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	977
945	Vikas Tiwari v. Yasmin Singh	W.P. no. 13302/2023	01/07/2023	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	978
946	Vikram Ahirwar v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 111/2012	07/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	979
947	Vimal v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 120/2016	14/08/2019	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	980
948	Vimla Bansal and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 18061/2018	20/07/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	981
949	Vinay Mishra v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 30152/2023	04/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	982
950	Vinay Sachdeva v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 54349/2024	20/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	983
951	Vinod Bunkar v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 26741/2024	16/10/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	984
952	Vinod Sachdev v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 31696/2023	12/01/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	985
953	Vinod Sharma v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 655/2010	01/02/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Deepak Kumar Agarwal	986
954	Vinoda and Others v. State of	Cr.A. no.	28/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	987

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Madhya Pradesh; Gangadeen and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	629/2009 & 674/2009		& Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava
955	Vir Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 23/2010	21/10/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	988
956	Virendra Singh Gaur v. State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 11166/2021	01/04/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	989
957	Virendra Kumar Gaur v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 16495/2021	01/04/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	990
958	Virendra Parihar and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 14779/2025	09/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	991
959	Virendra Patel v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 14788/2023	14/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	992
960	Virendra Sharma and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 311/2010 & 312/2010 & 3050/2018	10/12/2021	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	993
961	Virendra Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 8367/2019	12/02/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	994
962	Virendra Singh Sumali and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 22705/2024	19/02/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	995
963	Vishal Goyal and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 16788/2024	22/04/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	996
964	Vishal Kukreja v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 34817/2019	11/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	997
965	Vishesh Bansal and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh	M.Cr.C. no. 52793/2020 & 99/2021 & 103/2021 & 106/2021 & 109/2021	07/05/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	998
966	Vishnu Sharma v. Rakesh Sharma and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 28267/2024	13/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	999
967	Vivek Tyagi v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 22681/2023	16/12/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1000
968	Vivek Walter v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 35562/2023	05/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1001
969	Vrindawan v. State of Madhya Pradesh	Cr.A. no. 289/2012	07/07/2022	D.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia & Rajeev Kumar Shrivastava	1002
970	X v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 5521/2020	19/03/2020	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1003
971	X v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 62945/2021	21/12/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1004
972	Yakub Khan and Others v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 3953/2023	23/01/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1005
973	Yashwant Singh and Others v. State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	M.Cr.C. no. 44258/2020	15/03/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1006
974	Yogesh Gahlot v. State of M.P.	M.Cr.C. no. 54837/2021	17/11/2021	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1007
975	Yogesh Singh Bhadoriya v. The State of Madhya Pradesh and Others	W.P. no. 12471/2025	15/05/2025	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1008
976	Zuber Khan v. The State of	M.Cr.C. no.	12/03/2024	S.B. - Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia	1009

TABLE OF CASES

Sr.	Cause title	Case no.	Judgment Date	Hon'ble Justice	Case Sr. no.
	Madhya Pradesh and Others	3780/2024

Criminal Law: Judicial Interpretation and Application

Principles Interpreted and Applied in Criminal Decisions
Decisions delivered by Hon'ble Shri Justice Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia | High Court of Madhya Pradesh | 2016–2026

About the Author

Vibhor Kumar Sahu is an Advocate practicing before the High Court of Madhya Pradesh, Bench at Gwalior. His professional practice encompasses Criminal, Constitutional, Civil, Writ and Service matters. His interest in legal writing lies in presenting judicial reasoning with clarity and fidelity through close reading, original case-notes and systematic subject classification.

He is the author of Judicial Exposition of Service Law by Justice Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia, a subject-wise study of service-law decisions delivered by Hon'ble Shri Justice Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia. That work laid the foundation for his continuing engagement with the study and organisation of His Lordship's judgments.

Criminal Law: Judicial Interpretation and Application -Principles Interpreted and Applied in Criminal Decisions - Decisions delivered by Hon'ble Shri Justice Gurpal Singh Ahluwalia is his second digest. It extends this work to criminal jurisprudence and brings a practising advocate's perspective to the identification of legal issues, the treatment of precedents and the presentation of judicial reasoning. The volume also draws upon the experience gained in preparing the earlier digest, particularly in developing headnotes, case-notes and a structured system of reference.

Through these publications, Mr. Sahu seeks to contribute to practical legal scholarship and to assist the Bench, the Bar, students and researchers in locating and studying the judgments themselves. His continuing endeavor is to combine the demands of professional legal research with a clear, disciplined and context-sensitive presentation of legal principles.